The USPS, the NPMHU and the APWU each were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument at the hearing of this matter. Following receipt of the transcribed stenographic record, the Parties deferred filing post-hearing briefs, pending the possibility of a resolution of the controversy in connection with ongoing national-level collective bargaining negotiations. The Parties subsequently advised me that their discussions had not resolved the matter and eventually filed and exchanged their respective post-hearing briefs in late March 2008. At my request, the Parties graciously allowed me an extension of the contractual time limits for the rendition of this Opinion and Award.

PERTINENT CONTRACT PROVISIONS

USPS/NPMHU 2002-2004 NATIONAL AGREEMENT
ARTICLE 15 GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 15.1 Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Section 15.2 Grievance Procedure-Steps

Step 2: (a) The standard grievance form appealing to Step 2 shall be filed with the installation head or designee. In any associate post office of twenty (20) or less employees, the Employer shall designate an official outside of the installation as the Step 2 official, and shall so notify the Union Step I representative.

(b) Any grievance initiated at Step 2, pursuant to Article 2 of this Agreement, must be filed within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the Union or the employee first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause.

(c) The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date. In all grievances appealed from Step 1 or filed at Step 2, the grievant shall be represented in Step 2 for all purposes by a steward or a Union representative who shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance as a result of discussions or compromise in this Step. The installation head or designee in Step 2 also shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part.

(d) At the meeting the Union representative shall make a full and detailed statement of facts relied upon, contractual provisions involved, and remedy sought. The Union representative may also furnish written statements from witnesses or other individuals. The Employer representative shall also make a full and detailed statement of facts and contractual provisions relied upon. The parties' representatives shall cooperate fully in the effort to develop all necessary facts, including the exchange of copies of all relevant papers or documents in accordance with Article 31. The parties' representatives may mutually agree to jointly interview witnesses where desirable to assure full development of all facts and contentions. In addition, in cases involving discharge either party shall have the right to present no more than two witnesses, Such right shall not preclude the parties from jointly agreeing to interview additional witnesses as provided above.

(e) Where grievances appealed to Step 2 involve the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, one such grievance to be selected by the Union representative shall be designated the "representative" grievance. If not resolved at Step 2, the "representative" grievance may be appealed to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. All other grievances which have been mutually agreed to as involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts as those involved in the "representative" grievance shall be held at Step 2 pending resolution of the "representative" grievance, provided they were timely filed at Step I and properly appealed to Step 2 in accordance with the grievance procedure.

(f) Following resolution of the "representative" grievance, the parties involved in that grievance shall meet at Step 2 within seven (7) days of their receipt of that resolution, unless the parties agree upon a later date, to identify the other pending grievances involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, and to apply the resolution to those grievances. Disputes over the applicability of the resolution of the "representative" grievance shall be resolved through the grievance arbitration procedures contained in this Article; in the event it is decided that the resolution of the "representative" grievance is not applicable to a particular grievance, the merits of that grievance shall also be considered.

(g) Any settlement or withdrawal of a grievance in Step 2 shall be in writing or shall be noted on the standard grievance form and shall be furnished to the Union representative within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. Any such settlement or withdrawal shall not be a precedent for any purpose, unless the parties specifically so agree or develop an agreement to dispose of future similar or related problems.

(h) Where agreement is not reached, the Employer's decision shall be furnished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. The decision shall include a full statement of the Employer's understanding of (1) all relevant facts, (2) the contractual provisions involved, and (3) the detailed reasons for denial of the grievance.

(i) If the Union representative believes that the facts or contentions set forth in the decision are incomplete or inaccurate, such representative should, within ten (10) days of receipt of the Step 2 decision, transmit to the Employer's representative a written statement setting forth corrections or additions deemed necessary by the Union. Any such statement must be included in the file as part of the grievance record in the case. The filing of such corrections or additions shall not affect the time limits for appeal to Step 3.

(j) The Union may appeal an adverse Step 2 decision to Step 3. Any such appeal must be made within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Employer's decision unless the parties' representatives agree to extend the time for appeal. Any appeal must include copies of (1) the standard grievance form, (2) the Employer's written Step 2 decision, and, if filed (3) the Union corrections or additions to the Step 2 decision.

Step 3: (a) Any appeal from an adverse decision in Step 2 shall be in writing to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center with a copy to the Employer's Step 2 representative, and shall specify the reasons for the appeal.

(b) The grievant shall be represented at Step 3 level by the Union's Regional representative, or designee. The Step 3 meeting of the parties' representatives to discuss the grievance shall be held at the respective Postal Service office (former regional headquarters) within fifteen (15) days after it has been appealed to Step 3. Each party's representative shall be responsible for making certain that all relevant facts and contentions have been developed and considered. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative likewise shall have authority to grant the grievance in whole or in part. In any case where the parties' representatives mutually conclude that relevant facts or contentions were not developed adequately in Step 2, they shall have authority to jointly return the grievance to the Step 2 level for full development of all facts and further consideration at that level. In such event, the parties' representatives at Step 2 shall meet within seven (7) days after the grievance is returned to Step 2. Thereafter, the time limits and procedures applicable to Step 2 grievances shall apply.

(c) The Employer's written Step 3 decision on the grievance shall be provided to the Union's Step 3 representative within fifteen (15) days after the parties have met in Step 3, unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. Such decision shall state the reasons for the decision in detail and shall include a statement of any additional facts and contentions not previously set forth in the record of the grievance as appealed from Step 2. Such decision also shall state whether the Employer's Step 3 representative believes that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(d) The Union, at the Regional level, may appeal an adverse decision directly to arbitration at the Regional level within twenty-one (21) days after the receipt of the Employer's Step 3 decision in accordance with the procedure hereinafter set forth; provided the Employer's Step 3 decision states that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue under this Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (2 1) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Steps 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center.

The party whose representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue shall provide the other party a written notice specifying in detail the precise interpretive issues(s) to be decided. The Employer's notice shall be included in the Step 3 decision. The Union's written notice shall be automatically included as part of the grievance record in the case but the filing of such notice shall not affect the time limits for appeal.

Step 4: (a) In any case properly appealed or referred to this Step the parties shall meet at the National level promptly, but in no event later than thirty (30) days after filing such appeal or referral in an attempt to resolve the grievance. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part. The parties' Step 4 representatives may, by mutual agreement, return any grievance to Step 3 where (a) the parties agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented or (b) it appears that all relevant facts have not been developed adequately. In such event, the parties shall meet at Step 3 within fifteen (15) days after the grievance is returned to Step 3. Thereafter the procedures and time limits applicable to Step 3 grievances shall apply. Following their meeting in any case not returned to Step 3, a written decision by the Employer will be rendered within fifteen (15) days after the Step 4 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. The decision shall include an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor. In any instance where the parties have been unable to dispose of a grievance by settlement or withdrawal, the Union shall be entitled to appeal it to arbitration at the National level within thirty (30) days after receipt of the Employer's Step 4 decision.

Article 15.3

A. The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement or withdrawal of substantially all grievances initiated hereunder at the lowest possible step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end. Every effort shall be made to ensure timely compliance and payment of monetary grievance settlements and arbitration awards. The Employer agrees that upon receipt of necessary paperwork, from the grievant and/or union, concerning a grievance settlement of arbitration award, monetary remuneration will be made. The necessary paperwork is the documents and statements specified in Subchapter 436.4 of the ELM. The Employer will provide the union copies of appropriate pay adjustment forms, including confirmation that such forms were submitted to the appropriate postal officials for compliance and that action has been taken to ensure that the affected employee(s) receives payment and/or other benefits. In the event that an employee is not paid within sixty (60) days after submission of all the necessary paperwork, such employee, upon request, will be granted authorization from management to receive a pay advance equal to seventy (70) percent of the payment owed the employee. In the event of a dispute between the parties concerning the correct amount to be paid, the advance required by this section will be the amount that is not in dispute.

B The failure of the employee or the Union in Step 1, or the Union thereafter to meet the prescribed time limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance. However, if the Employer fails to raise the issue of timeliness at Step 2, or at the step at which the employee or Union failed to meet the prescribed time limits, whichever is later, such objection to the processing of the grievance is waived.

C Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D It is agreed that in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the Union. Such a grievance shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to he decided and the contention of the Union. Thereafter the parties shall meet in Step 4 within thirty (30) days in an effort to define the precise issues involved, develop all necessary facts, and reach agreement. Should they fail to agree, then, within fifteen (15) days of such meeting, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues. In the event the parties have failed to reach agreement within sixty (60) days of the initiation of the grievance in Step 4, the Union then may appeal it to arbitration, within thirty (30) days thereafter,

E The parties have agreed to jointly develop and implement a Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM) within six (6) months after the effective date of the 1998 National Agreement. The CIM will set forth the parties' mutual understanding regarding the proper interpretation and/or application of the provisions of this Agreement. It is not intended to add to, modify, or replace, in any respect, the language in the current Agreement; nor is it intended to modify in any way the rights, responsibilities, or benefits of the parties under the Agreement. However, production of the CIM demonstrates the mutual intent of the parties at the National level to encourage their representatives at all levels to reach resolution regarding issues about which the parties are in agreement and to encourage consistency in the application of the terms of the Agreement. For these reasons, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM shall be binding on the representatives of both parties in the resolution of disputes at the Local and Regional levels, and in the processing of grievances through Steps 1, 2 and 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure. In addition, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM are binding on the arbitrator, in accordance with the provisions of Article 15AA6, in any Regional level arbitration case in which the CIM is introduced. The CIM will be updated periodically to reflect any modifications to the parties' positions which may result from National level arbitration awards, Step 4 decisions, or other sources. The parties' representatives are encouraged to utilize the most recent version of the CIM at all times.

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days , the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after fourteen (14) calendar days during which ten day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance arbitration procedure. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

BACKGROUND

The decade-old facts giving rise to this National-level grievance are fairly straightforward and not much in material dispute. On December 30, 1997, Lewis J. Rothman, III was notified by Management of a proposed 14-day disciplinary suspension, for alleged attendance irregularity and excessive absenteeism from his job in the Des Moines, Iowa BMC. The timely filed Step 1 grievance challenge by NPMHU, claiming lack of just cause for that discipline, (Grievance No. 22-333-00698) was denied by Management on January 16, 1998 and appealed to Step 2 by the Union on January 23, 1998. When the Employer thereafter failed to schedule any Step 2 meeting within the time limits set forth in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c), the NPMHU, on February 4, 1998, simultaneously invoked the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3.C and also filed a formal appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698 to Step 3.[1] After the Union declined a request by Management to "remand" the case back to a Step 2 meeting, Management responded with the following document, dated February 19, 1998, labeled "Step 2 Denial":

> The subject Step 2 grievance was not discussed with your representative, Tony Irvin in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement. The Union appealed with out the benefit of a meeting; respectfully request the grievance be remanded to step 2.
> The union contends the grievant was issued a 14 day suspension and allege violation of article 16 of the National Agreement and ELM 5 15. The union requests the discipline be expunged from all files and records.
> The facts in this case are the grievant received a 14 day suspension for failing to meet the attendance requirements, after receiving a 5 day suspension and a letter of warning for failing to meet the attendance requirements of his position. There was a settlement on the five day suspension. One date cited on the notice of suspension, was outside of the review period, however there were a sufficient number of absences to establish just cause. Information provided by the union in their written appeal did not establish a violation of article 16 or ELM 15.
> Inasmuch as the union has failed to establish a contractual violation, a contractual basis for the requested remedy, or that just cause did not exist, this grievance is denied.

The Union thereafter perfected its appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698, which eventually resulted in a regional arbitration award, on October 26, 1998, by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, infra. In the meantime, after Management had directed Mr. Rathman to begin serving the 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, the NPMHU also filed Grievance No. 98072898; invoking Article 15.3.C and claiming violations of Articles 3,5,and 16.4 of the National Agreement. The string of successive Management denials of that grievance leading to this arbitration read as follows:

[1] As noted in my discussion of the Issue, infra, no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

Step 2 Denial of March 30, 1998

The subject Step 2 grievance was discussed . . . on March 16, 1998, in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement.

The union contends the grievant was placed on suspension and allege a violation of articles 3, 5, and 16, of the National Agreement. The union did not explain the relevance of articles 3 and or how they were violated. The union requests the grievant be made whole and the subject discipline be expunged from all files and records.

As claimed by the union, this grievance was appealed to step 3 without the benefit of a step 2 meeting. Management attempted to meet with the union at step 2 after their appeal, but the union refused.

In accordance with Article 16.4 of the National Agreement, the grievant did not begin his suspension until a step 2 decision had been issued prior.

Step 3 Denial of June 2, 1998

Pursuant to the terms and obligations as set forth in Article 15 of the 1994 National Agreement, management and union designees met at Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The result of that meeting on the above referenced case is as follows:

The issue is whether management violated Articles 3, 5 and 16 of the National Agreement when the grievant was allegedly placed on suspension prior to management rendering its step two decision.

The record establishes that the grievant initiated a grievance concerning a notice of suspension received on January 6, 1998. The parties did not discuss that grievance at step two within the prescribed time limits. On February 4,1998 the union appealed that grievance to step three without holding a step two meeting. On February 19 management provided the local union with its written step two decision for the grievance at issue. On February 21 the grievant began serving the suspension period.

The local union's claim that management was prohibited from (ever) requiring the grievant to serve his suspension is totally baseless. The union has failed to present any evidence to support their allegation that management is barred from ever requiring an employee to serve a suspension when the grievance (protesting the suspension) is appealed to step three due to the failure to meet at step two in a timely manner. Indeed, the union's assertion would change the clear intent of the requirement to "delay" a suspension outlined In Article 16.4 of the Agreement. In any event, the step two decision n this case was "rendered" and provided to the union prior to the grievant beginning his suspension.

The union's attempt to disavow the step two decision is groundless as is their entire "position" in this matter. The union has failed to demonstrate a violation or the relevance of the cited Articles of the Agreement. Absent the union meeting their burden in this contractual matter and absent the union providing a foundation for their requested remedy, this grievance is denied.

Step 4 Denial of November 9, 1998

On November 2. 1998, 1 met with your representative Dallas Jones to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement when management issued a Step 2 Decision without meeting with the Union at the Step 2 level of the grievance process.

The Union contends that this is an issue of due process in that management had to meet with the union before it could issue a Step 2 decision. The Union contends that if management failed to meet at Step 2, then it could not rightfully issue a Step 2 decision. The union further contends that if there is no Stop 2 decision, then management would be in violation of Article 16.4 of the National Agreement by forcing the Grievant to serve the fourteen (14) day suspension.

It is the position of the Postal Service that no interpretive issue involving the terms and conditions of the National Agreement is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Article 16, Section 2 of the National Agreement to the particular circumstances. However, inasmuch as the Union did not agree, the following represents the decision of the Postal Service.

Article 15.2 Step 2: (c) of the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) National Agreement states in part; ' The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date...

Article 15.3. C. off the National Agreement further states, in part; "Failure by the Employer to scheduled a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance arbitration procedure.

Management contends that the terms and conditions of Article 15 compel management to meet with the union as soon as possible after receipt of a timely Step 2 Appeal; likewise, Article 15 provides for the union to proceed to the next stop in the grievance process if management fails to meet within the required time period.

The evidence of record indicates that management did not to meet within the seven (7) day period after a grievance was initiated by the union. Although the seven (7) day time period had elapsed, the record indicates that management made good faith attempts to meet with the union to discuss the grievance. However, the terms of Article 15 state that the both parties have agree to any extension to meet beyond the seven (7) day period. The union's Step 2 Representative in this case did not agree to an extension; therefore, the union exercised its contractual rights and appealed the grievance to the Stop 3 level of the grievance process.

It is management's position that the grievance procedures outlined in Article 15 include provisions for the parties to take if the steps of the grievance process are not > properly adhered to. Management argues that the union did in fact exercise its contractual rights by forwarding the grievance to Step 3 which was the appropriate resolve if the parties did not meet at Step 2.

> Furthermore, Article 15.2 Step 2: (h) of the National Agreement states in part: "Where agreement is not reached, the Employees decision shall be fumished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period..."
> In accordance with Article 16 of the National Agreement regarding suspensions of 14 Days or less, Section 16.4 states in part: "...the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered." This provision outlined in the discipline procedure requires management to render a decision prior to a grievant serving the suspension. This provision does not dictate that managements decision hinges on whether or not a Step 2 meeting took place.
> It is the Service's position that this is not a dispute for national interpretation. The terms and conditions of Article 15 dearly identify and plainly articulate the steps to process a grievance. There are no provisions at any level of the grievance process that prohibits management from issuing a Step 2 decision letter.
> After careful review of the facts surrounding this grievance, it is managements position that this dispute does not rise to application for interpretive determination. In view of the above considerations, this grievance is denied.

When that matter remained unresolved, NPMHU made a timely appeal for final and binding determination of the confronting procedural issue in Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 to National-level arbitration, under Article 15.4.D of the Mail Handlers National Agreement between NPMHU and USPS. While the appeals of that case were progressing to this National Arbitration, however, the underlying grievance protesting the merits of the 14 day suspension (No. 22-333-00698) was decided long ago, in expedited arbitration by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, whose Award of October 26, 1998 reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

> FACTS: Grievant, Lewis J. Rothman III, was issued a Notice of Fourteen Day Suspension for being irregular in attendance. Grievant had previously received a Letter of Warning, dated December 31, 1996, and a five day suspension, dated May 27, 1997, both for failure To Maintain Regular Attendance.
> UNION'S POSITION: Union contends that the Suspension was punitive, rather than corrective action and therefore lacked just cause; that it was procedurally defective; and that it should be rescinded and Grievant made whole.
>
> MANAGEMENT'S POSITION: Management contends that there was just cause to issue the.,Notice of Suspension to Grievant; that the procedure was not defective; and therefore the grievance should be denied.
>

A. Jurisdiction of the Arbitrator

There is a serious question whether the Arbitrator has jurisdiction of the case since Union referred the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure on August 12, 1998, Management Exhibit 5. Pursuant to Article 15, Sec. 15.4(b)51 either party may remove a case from regional arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. In that event, the referring party pays the entire cost of the regional arbitrator, unless another scheduled case is heard on that date. No other case was heard. Although the August 12, 1998 referral by Union to Step 4 did state the case was withdrawn from regional arbitration, neither party renewed the request that the case be withdrawn from regional arbitration on October 20, 1998, the date of the arbitration. Management sought a decision on the merits while Union sought a decision on both the procedural issue and the merits.

No provision in the Agreement was cited to Arbitrator that directly addressed the question: Can an Arbitrator proceed to decide an issue (in this case, the merits) while another issue is pending at Step 4 (in this case, the procedural issue)?

Since both parties were willing to have the arbitrator proceed on the merits and since the Arbitrator did hear evidence on the merits, it would seem inconsistent with the purposes of arbitration to be expeditious and inexpensive for the Arbitrator to dismiss the entire grievance on jurisdictional grounds. Accordingly, the Arbitrator will render a decision on the merits but will stay implementation of the decision until completion of the Step 4 proceeding and its possible appeal to National Arbitration.

B. Issues to be Decided

The parties differ on the jurisdiction of the Arbitrator to render a decision-on the procedural matter which is now pending at Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

The procedural matter arises from the failure of the parties to meet within 7 days of the receipt of the Step 2 appeal. Union claims that such a failure to meet prohibits a Step 2 decision from being validly rendered, and without a Step 2 decision, there can be no discipline. (Management contends that there was a valid Step 2 decision rendered, and that a Step 2 meeting is not necessary to make the Step 2 decision valid).

The Arbitrator agrees with Management that he cannot decide this procedural issue which is now pending at Step 4 as an interpretative issue under the National Agreement. Article 15, Section 15.4(b)5, does not contemplate a regional arbitrator resolving the very same issue, in the same case, that is pending at Step 4.

Therefore, the Arbitrator will not address the procedural issue but will only decide the merits.

AWARD: Grievance denied but the 14 day suspension is not to take effect until after the Step IV decision and appeal to Arbitration, if any, in the case involving this same Grievant, Regional # 194M-II-C-98072898, dated August 12, 1998 (sic). If the ruling in that case sustains the Grievance concerning the lack of a Step 2 meeting, the suspension upheld in this case is not to take effect and shall be expunged from all records. If the ruling in that case denies the Grievance, the 14 day suspension in the case before this Arbitrator shall take effect and may be cited in later discipline.[2]

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

NPMHU

Once a grievance properly has been "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance arbitration process pursuant to Article 15.3C, Step 2 of that process has, by definition, ended. By agreement of the parties, "jurisdiction" (as it were) has passed from Step 2 of the grievance-arbitration process to Step 3, and from that point forward the grievance is to be handled and ultimately resolved exclusively in accordance with the various provisions of Article 15 governing those steps of the grievance-arbitration process beyond Step 2. This being so, there is no basis whatsoever in the National Agreement or in common sense for the Postal Service's assertion of a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances for any purpose—whether for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article 15.3B of the National Agreement, see infra pp. 21-24, or for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement. Recognition of such a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances would in effect excuse the Postal Service's "[f]ailure . . . to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," and there is no warrant in Article 15.3C or in any other provision of the National Agreement for excusing such a failure on the Postal Service's part.

The premise of that Postal Service response is that where a collective bargaining agreement does not set out the parties' agreement on a particular issue in express language, it is never appropriate for an arbitrator to imply an agreement between the parties on that issue. But that premise is a false one, as every experienced labor arbitrator knows. Given the realities of collective bargaining, labor arbitrators regularly are called upon—and properly so—to resolve interpretative disputes over the consequences that flow from an agreed-upon contractual provision that does not state those consequences in express language. And, a labor arbitrator who answers that call by reasonably concluding that the wording of contractual provision "X" necessarily implies consequence "Y" does not thereby commit the cardinal sin of "re-writing" the parties' agreement for them.

For the foregoing reasons, the NPMHU respectfully requests that the Arbitrator to find that when a grievance properly is "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," the Postal Service may not thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance for any purpose, including specifically (i) for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article15.3B of the National Agreement; and(ii) for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement.

U.S.P.S.

The NPMHU has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the Postal Service violated the contract by issuing a Step 2 decision after the NPMHU had appealed the grievance to Step 3. The clear and unambiguous language of the parties' agreement does not prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting. Rather, the agreement specifies the single consequence resulting from a failure to schedule a step 2 meeting or issue a timely step 2 decision–the only consequence of not scheduling or having a meeting is that the Union may, after the relevant time periods have expired, move

There was no prejudice to the grievant or Union as a result of the issuance of the Step 2 decision after the NPMHU's appeal to Step 3. Indeed, the Union here had a double opportunity to evaluate and respond to the Postal Service's position, as it filed two related grievances. Therefore, the NPMHU has no plausible argument that any prejudice whatsoever was caused by the "belated" Step 2 decision. And notably, it is due to the NPMHU's own refusal to cooperate in remanding the grievance to Step 2 that this "interpretive" issue even arose.

The cases also do not support the proposition that if a Step 2 decision is issued after an appeal has been taken under Article 15.3C, the union is entitled to an automatic victory, as it is effectively seeking here. The NPMHU's invitation to add new consequences on top of negotiated contract language must be declined, for what it seeks is improper and contrary to both the CBA, which prohibits the arbitrator from legislating for the parties, and to customary rules of contract interpretation, which prohibit decision-makers from — under the guise of contract interpretation — rewriting or modifying the parties' negotiated agreement. In addition to the fact that adding these negative consequences would be tantamount to rewriting the parties' contract, it would also encourage games of "gotcha". In short, there would be less incentive to cooperate, which both the NPMHU and the APWU agree is an important part of the grievance-arbitration process. The proposal of the NPMHU to find that additional consequences outside the contract flow from the absence of a Step 2 decision prior to an appeal to Step 3 would therefore not only conflict with the contract itself, but would also be a disservice to the truth and to the mutual cooperation that underlies successful collective bargaining relationships.

In addition, to accept the NPMHU's proposal would be tantamount to granting the Union a default judgment in all discipline cases involving 14-day suspensions–a result the Union has attempted but failed to achieve in bargaining. By seeking in arbitration what it failed to achieve in bargaining, the NPMHU hopes to chip ts way closer to its unachieved bargaining demands from 1993 and 1998. This is improper. See Elkouri at 454 ("[A] party may not obtain 'through arbitration what it could not acquire through negotiation'" (quoting Postal Service v. APWU, 204 F.3d 523, 530 (4th Cir. 2000)). Accordingly, the NPMHU's improper, unjustified and contra-contractual request should be denied.

The NPMHU's due process claims are disingenuous and without merit, as the Grievant suffered no harm. Further, no due process violation arises in cases where no Step 2 meeting is held or timely Step 2 decision is issued. The parties anticipated that Step 2 may be bypassed in drafting their agreement and, therefore, the parties provided for a full opportunity to explain their versions of the facts and arguments — including new arguments not raised previously — at Step 3. Although Article 15.3C begins with the phrase, "[f]ailure by the Employer to schedule a meeting," many instances exist where, due to one intervening event or another, it is virtually impossible for the Postal Service to schedule a Step 2 meeting within seven days or for the parties to meet at Step 2 within seven days as required by Article 15.2.Step 2(c). And common experience teaches that from time to time events happen that hinder the scheduling of a Step 2 meeting or someone's attendance at a Step 2 meeting, and one party is unwilling to agree to an extension agreement. To namejust a few examples, the parties' scheduled days off, sick, personal, or annual leave usage, natural or human-caused disasters, traffic problems, business travel, grievance processing, and/or arbitration hearings may make scheduling, or attaining an extension, within seven days difficult, if not impossible. Although the NPMHU is under an obligation to act in good faith, sometimes the Union plays games, as it admittedly did here in refusing to remand the grievance to Step 2.

The NPMHU urges that the opportunity to issue a Step 2 decision is extinguished once the Union has taken an appeal to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C. The NPMHU reasons that once such an appeal has been taken, "jurisdiction" over the grievance resides solely at Step 3 and no longer resides at Step 2. This artful and hyper-technical argument may make sense in the context of a district court opinion that has been appealed under clearly written jurisdictional statutes and judicial precedent. But it is specious in this context where no provision of the CBA discusses the Union's concept of "jurisdiction," or whether a Step 2 decision can be rendered after an appeal to Step 3 has been taken. Since the parties are expressly permitted to present new facts and arguments at Step 3, it follows that the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision after an appeal to Step 3 as a way to provide additional facts and arguments. The NPMHU's "jurisdictional" view, however, would effectively create a forfeiture where no "timely" Step 2 decision is issued. This nonsensical result could not possibly have been what the parties intended and, indeed, the Postal Service rejected such views during the 1993 and 1998 negotiations. Moreover, because "the law abhors a forfeiture," Elkouri at 482, the Postal Service's interpretation, which avoids one, is preferable. See id. ("If any agreement is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would work a forfeiture and one of which would not, the arbitrator will be inclined to adopt the interpretation that will prevent the forfeiture").

APWU

The APWU supports the NALC's position that the contractual language is clear in providing that the only instance in which the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of the contractual time limits set forth in Article 15.2 of the collective bargaining agreements. It makes little sense to ignore the parties' mutual agreement that the only instance in which the Postal Service may hold a Step 2 meeting or issue a Step 2 decision beyond the contractual time requirements is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of time. Absent such agreement to extend the time limits, if the Postal Service fails to timely respond, it has forfeited its opportunity to issue a decision on the grievance at Step 2.

The Postal Service claims that the contractual language permits it to issue an untimely Step 2 decision, even where there has been no Step 2 meeting, because the contract is silent regarding the result of the Postal Service's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting. This argument stretches the imagination and ignores the plain language of Article 15. The contract is not at all silent about the required steps of the grievance procedure, which requires the Postal Service to meet with the Union representative within seven days of receiving the Step 2 appeal. The Step 2 decision does not exist independent of the Step 2 meeting, but must be issued within ten days of the Step 2 meeting. If the Postal Service fails to meet either time limit, then absent an agreement to extend the time limits, Step 2 is over and the grievance is "deemed to move ... to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure."

According to the Postal Service, however, this particular consequence apparently does not preclude it from continuing to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 and the applicable time limits no longer apply. This reading of the contract defies logic and renders the relevant contractual provisions meaningless. If the grievance has moved to the next step of the grievance procedure, then the Postal Service may not continue to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 by issuing an untimely Step 2 decision.

There is no silence or ambiguity regarding the impact of the Postal Service's failure to comply with the contractual time lines. Absent agreement to extend those time lines, the Postal Service may not schedule an untimely Step 2 meeting or issue an untimely Step 2 decision. IV. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above and at the hearing in this matter, the Arbitrator should sustain NPMHU's grievance and find that, in the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, the Postal Service may not issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

OPINION OF THE NATIONAL ARBITRATOR

ISSUE

The Parties did not present a joint submission of the issue(s) to be determined in this National-level arbitration case of Case No. 194M-11-C 98072898. In Steps 2, 3 and 4 handling, supra, both Parties had framed the issue presented by Grievance No. 194M-11-C 98072898 in straight forward factual terms whether a "Step 2 denial" dated February 19, 1998, of a grievance "deemed moved" to Step 3 on February 4, 1998 because no Step 2 meeting had been timely scheduled by the Employer, was effective to initiate a 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly Article 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. However, during the hearing on June 13, 2006, and later in their respective posthearing briefs, Counsel advanced various revisions of the issue formulations customized by artful pleading to better fit preferred theories of the case. At the June 13, 2006 arbitration hearing, the NPMHU proposed the following alternative formulation of the issue: If the Postal Service fails to schedule a Step 2 meeting on a grievance within the time provided by Article 15.2 of the NPMHU/USPS Agreement (including mutually agreed to extension periods) --thus triggering Article 15.3C, which states that such a failure "shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step [i.e., Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure" -- can the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance? In its March 21, 2008, post-hearing brief, NPMHU again reformulated its statement of the issue, as follows: When a grievance properly is "deemed . . .move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," may the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance?

For its part, the Postal Service initially re-framed its suggested issue as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting? In its post-hearing brief, dated March 21, 2008, the Postal Service again reformulated its earlier suggested statements of the issue, as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement ("CBA") between the NPMHU and Postal Service prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting and the NPMHU has appealed the grievance to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C of the CBA?

As the Intervenor, APWU suggested that the following articulation best describes its perspective on the issue presented for determination in this case: In the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, may the Postal Service issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in Article 15, Section 2, Step 2.f of the National Agreement between the APWU and the Postal Service?

After carefully considering the facts and circumstances of this record and the competing formulations, I conclude that none of the foregoing formulations accurately sets forth the only issue fairly presented by the factual record of this case. In that regard, it begs the question to ask whether the Agreement "prohibits" issuing or whether the Postal Service "can" or "may" issue a Step 2 decision after the grievance has already moved on to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C. Rather, the real (and only) question presented by the facts of this particular is case is whether such a belatedly issued Step 2 decision has any contractual validity, force or effect for purposes of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Moreover, the various revised issue formulations proposed by Counsel all openly invite dicta and/or arbitral determination of related disputed issues which might or could arise under a different set of facts but which are not adequately presented for determination in this record.

Finally, it must also be noted that the record in the present case squarely presents for arbitral determination only the limited issue of contractual interplay between Articles 15.2 Step 2(c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of 16.5 (16.4 in the previous contract). This case does not properly present any issue concerning the last sentence of Article 15.3.B-- a matter raised de novo by the NPMHU at the arbitration hearing. In the present case, the Postal Service asserted no timeliness objections below and the NPMHU never raised any Article 15.3.B waiver argument in any of the moving papers. Black letter law in labor arbitration holds that when written grievances and grievance procedure discussions clearly limit the issues in dispute, arbitrators should foreclose introduction of new claims at the time of the hearing (other than fundamental jurisdictional challenges). See, International Paper, 105 LA 970, 974 (Duda, 1996); Mason & Dixon Tank Lines, 94 LA 1225, 1228 (Byars, 1990);

City of Cadillac, 88 LA 924, 925 (Huston, 1987); NLRB Union, 76 LA 450, 456 (Gentile, 1981); Ralston Purina Co., 71 LA 519, 523-24 (Andrews, 1978). Were the rule otherwise, the most basic purpose of the Parties' grievance resolution mechanism--prompt discussion and consideration of issues at informal and earlier stages of the grievance procedure with the goal of resolution short of arbitration--would be frustrated.

Accordingly, I find that the only interpretive issue fairly presented by Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 for determination in this National-level arbitration case is objectively framed as follows:

> Does a Step 2 decision issued by the Postal Service after the grievance has been progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the "deemed to move" provisions of Article 15.3.C, because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time provided in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c) (including mutually agreed to extension periods), have any validity, force or effect under the last sentence of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement?[3]

DECISION

The Postal Service quite correctly points out that the NPMHU bears the burden of proving its grievance claim in this case by a persuasive preponderance of record evidence. See Postal Service and Nat'l Rural Ltr. Carrier's Assoc., Case No. E95R-4E-C 99099528, at 19 (Nat'l Arb., Jan. 12, 2003: Eischen, Arb.) ("The charging party in a grievance over interpretation and application of a contract bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the record evidence, that the responding party violated the agreement in some fashion"; see also Postal Service andNat'l Rural Ltr. Carrier's Assoc., No. Q95R-4Q-C 02101253 (National Arb., May 15, 2006: Eischen, Arb.): "[I]t is well-established that the charging party in a nondisciplinary grievance bears the burden of proof, by a

[3] My use of the emphasized conjunctive phrase "because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting" tracks the literal language of Article 15.3.C and posits the undisputed fact that in this particular case no intervening event and no delay, default or dereliction by the employee or the Union caused or contributed in any way to the Employer's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time required by the Agreement. Similarly, my use of the emphasized adverb in "progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the 'deemed to move' provisions of Article 15.3.C" serves to skirt the significant dispute between the Parties (not fairly presented by the facts of this particular case) of how a grievance progresses contractually from Step 2 to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C ("automatically", as the NPMHU would have it, or only through the filing of "a formal appeal", as the Postal Service would have it). Thus, determination of the of the issue set forth in the foregoing formulation resolves the specific controversy presented in this case but preserves for possible arbitral resolution at a later date, hopefully in an appropriate case with an adequately informed record, the respective positions of the Parties on these various other potential but currently inchoate issues.

The arbitrator's primary goal must be to effectuate the intent of the parties, which ordinarily is best ascertained from the plain words used in their collective bargaining agreement to express their bargain. Even when the parties to an agreement disagree on what was intended by disputed contract language, an arbitrator who finds the language to be unambiguous will enforce its plain meaning. See Safeway Stores, 85 LA 472, 476 (1985) (Thorp); Metropolitan Warehouse, 76 LA 14, 17-18 (1981) (Darrow). Arbitrators and courts alike presume that understandable language means what it says, despite the contentions of one of the parties that something other than the apparent meaning was intended. Independent School Dist. No. 47, 86 LA 97, 103 (1985) (Gallagher). Thus, it is a maxim of contract construction that an arbitrator cannot properly eviscerate the contract by ignoring clear-cut contractual language nor usurp the role of the labor organization and employer by legislating new language under the guise of interpretation. Clean Coverall Supply Company, 47 LA 272, 277 (Fred Witney, 1966). See also, Continental Oil Company, 69 LA 399, 404 (A. J. Wann, 1977) and Andrew Williams Meat Company, 8 LA 518, 524 (A. J. Chaney, 1947).

The following language of Article 15.3.C first appeared in the 1978 National Agreement and has appeared in haec verba in every National Agreement since that time:

> Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

In a National Arbitration award issued shortly after that contractual provision (in its current form) appeared in 1978, Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal construed the language of Article 15.3C, as follows (USPS and NALC Case N8-NAT-0006, p.7):

> [T]he parties wrote into the present grievance procedure that a grievance will automatically move to the next step where there is a "failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting . . . in any of the Steps . . . within the time herein provided. . ." The Postal Service has an obligation to schedule a Step 3 meeting once a proper appeal has been taken from a Step 2 decision. But that obligation pertains strictly to time constraints.(emphasis added).

The use of the disjunctive "or" in the grammatical construction of Article 15.3.C makes it clear that a procedural failure by the Employer to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting carries the same consequence as a failure of the Employer to render a [timely Step 2] decision-- i.e., a timeliness failure by the Postal Service of either specified kind "shall be deemed to move the grievance to [Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure."[4] Further, under that express wording, it is also clear that the catalyst for an Article 15.3.C "deemed to move" progression of a grievance from the current step to the next step of the grievance-arbitration procedure is a "[f]ailure by the Employer" to fulfill its contractual obligation to initiate one or the other of those two specified procedural actions in a timely manner at the current step.[5]

The bottom line question presented by this grievance and this factual record is whether the Parties mutually intended that a Step 2 decision "rendered" belatedly by the Employer, some two weeks after the grievance was "deemed to move" properly from Step 2 to Step 3 under Article 15.3.C, because the Employer had failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting, has any validity, force or effect for the purpose of requiring the Grievant to begin serving a fourteen-day disciplinary suspension that had been tolled, pending rendition of the Step 2 decision, by the following express language in the last sentence of ¶2 Article 16.5 of the National Agreement: " [I]f the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered". The undisputed facts of record and the plain words of the Agreement language persuade me that the Union carried its initial burden of making out a prima facie showing that the contracting Parties mutually intended no such thing.

[4] At the risk of redundancy, I reiterate previous disclaimers that no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

[5] See also page 5, footnote 4 of the NPMHU brief, viz., "the NPMHU readily acknowledges that 'if there has been no Step 2 meeting' on a grievance owing to a failure of some kind on the NPMHU's part—for example, the failure by a Union representative to attend a Step 2 meeting timely scheduled by the Postal Service—the Service would not on account of that NPMHU failure be precluded from issuing a Step 2 decision on the grievance". (Emphasis in original).

Those undisputed facts of record in this case show that the Union or employee timely initiated the grievance and timely appealed the grievance to Step 2, that the Employer failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting and that the Employer "rendered" the Step 2 decision long after the grievance had been properly progressed to Step 3. The Postal Service responds that an untimely Step 2 decision issued in the absence of a Step 2 meeting and after the grievance is at Step 3 has the same force and effect under Article 16.5 as a timely issued Step 2 decision rendered after a timely Step 2 meeting because neither Article 15.2 nor 15.3 expressly state that a Step 2 decision belatedly rendered after the grievance has been progressed to Step 3 has no force and effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 and because the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 does not expressly state that to have force and effect for the purpose of that sentence the Step 2 decision referenced therein must have been timely rendered before the grievance was progressed to Step 3. The Employer's "lack of express language" theory is misplaced and unpersuasive because it stands logic, reason and the so-called "plain-meaning rule" on its head.

The lack of such express disclaimer(s) is not fatal to the Union's grievance because the necessary implication of the cited Agreement provisions is that a Step 2 decision must be timely rendered while the grievance is still at Step 2 to have contractual validity, force and effect for the purpose of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Courts and arbitrators routinely recognize that it is proper and fitting to give effect to the manifest intent of contracting parties plainly evidenced in the "necessary implications" of their express contract language.[6] Such judicious inference of mutual intent founded in the logical, reasonable, natural and necessary implications of express contract language is readily distinguishable from improper arbitral rewriting of the Agreement.[7]

[6] Indeed, discernment of mutual intent through necessary implication is particularly appropriate in the interpretation and application of a collective bargaining agreement, which is"more than a contract; it is a generalized code to govern the myriad of cases which the draftsmen cannot wholly anticipate. . .The collective agreement covers the whole employment relationship." United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 578-82, 80 S.Ct. 1347, 46 LRRM 2416 1960, citing, at 363 U.S. 579 n.6, Cox, "Reflections Upon Labor Arbitration", 72 Harvard. L. Rev. 1482, 1498-99 (1959).

Experienced practitioners and arbitrators understand that a collective bargaining agreement is not (and cannot reasonably be expected to function as), an ersatz "Napoleonic Code"; addressing in express language every consequence and contingency that flows logically from agreed-upon contractual provisions. For example, it would be odd indeed if the parties to this collective bargaining agreement had found it necessary to specify expressly in Articles 15.3.C. or 16.5 that they did not mutually intend that the Employer could circle back unilaterally to Step 2, after the grievance was properly progressed to Step 3, to issue a belated Step 2 decision it had failed to render in a timely manner when the grievance was at Step 2 for the purpose of requiring a grievant to start serving a 14-day disciplinary suspension which had been tolled pending rendition of the Step 2 decision. To the contrary, the reasonable, logical and necessary implication of the plain language of Articles 15.3.C and 16.5 is that a Step 2 decision must be rendered in a timely manner and before the grievance is progressed properly to Step 3 to have any validity and contractual force or effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5.

Although obviously not binding in this National Arbitration, the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Eastman Kodak Co. v. STWB, Inc., 452 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2006), which was rendered shortly after the hearing in this case, lends strong support to this common sense reading of Articles 15.3C and 16.5. The Eastman Kodak decision involved an ERISA regulation adopted by the United States Department of Labor ("DOL")—dubbed the "deemed exhausted" provision/regulation by the Second Circuit—which provides in full:

> In the case of the failure of a[n] [ERISA] plan to establish or follow claims procedures consistent with the requirements of this section, a claimant shall be deemed to have exhausted the administrative remedies available under the plan and shall be entitled to pursue any available remedies under section 502(a) of the Act on the basis that the plan has failed to provide a reasonable claims procedure that would yield a decision on the merits of the claim.

The Second Circuit agreed with the DOL that the "deemed exhausted" regulation properly was interpreted to foreclose the defendant ERISA plan from "effectively 'undeem[ing]' exhaustion by enacting, for the first time, procedures that complied with the claims regulation after [plaintiff] filed suit and after failing to offer an appropriate procedure in the many months preceding [plaintiff's] lawsuit." Id. at 222 (emphasis added). As the appellate court succinctly put it, "[g]iving retroactive effect to a plan amendment in these circumstances . . . plainly conflicts with the 'deemed exhausted' regulation." Id. (emphasis added). And, as the appellate court added: "The 'deemed exhausted' provision was plainly designed to give claimants faced with inadequate claims procedures a fast track into court—an end not compatible with allowing a 'do-over' to plans that failed to get it right the first time." Id. (emphasis added). Applying that reasoning to the facts of this case, to allow the Postal Service a unilateral "do-over" of Step 2, after a grievance properly has been progressed to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, because of the Postal Service's failure to get the contractually-required Step 2 procedures right the first time, would plainly conflict with the mutual intent of the Parties, as manifested in the plain language and the logical, reasonable and necessary implications of Articles 15.2, Step 2 (c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

In my considered judgement, the Union carried its ultimate burden of persuasion in this case that a Step 2 decision issued after the grievance has been "deemed to move" properly to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C, lacks contractual validity, force or effect to implement a 14-day suspension under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the National Agreement.

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, William Flynn, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance at Step 4 is whether management violated Article 15 of the 1998 National Agreement when it presented its case before an arbitrator after the Union unilaterally notified the arbitrator that it was canceling the hearing for that date.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that neither party has the right to unilaterally cancel an arbitration hearing once it has been scheduled pursuant to Article 15.4. If either party maintains that unforeseen circumstances prevent them from presenting their case, they may appear before the arbitrator to request a continuance and the arbitrator shall have the authority to grant or deny the request on its merits. If such a continuance is granted, the requesting party shall be responsible for all costs of the arbitrator for that date.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to regional level arbitration to be placed in front of the Arbitrator from whom it was withdrawn.

For purposes of this specific case, we further agree that the only issue before the Arbitrator will be the merits of the case.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Sincerely,

Subject: Payment of Union Witnesses - Travel and Waiting Time For Arbitration Hearings

Statement of the Issue: Whether the Postal Service is required by the National Agreement to pay Union witnesses for time spent traveling to and from arbitration hearings and for time spent waiting to testify at arbitration hearings?

Contract Provisions Involved: Article 5; Article 15, Section 4A(5); Article 17, Section 4; and Article 19 of the July 21, 1981 National Agreement.

Appearances: For the Postal Service, Eric J. Scharf, Attorney, Office of Labor Law; for NALC, Richard N. Gilberg, Attorney (Cohen, Weiss & Simon); for APWU, Anton Hajjar and Philip Tabbita, Attorneys (O'Donnell & Schwartz).

Statement of the Award: With respect to travel time, the grievance is denied. With respect to waiting time at the hearing, the grievance is disposed of in the manner set forth in the foregoing opinion.

BACKGROUND

This grievance concerns Union witnesses who attend an arbitration hearing during their regular working hours. Such witnesses are paid for time spent testifying and reasonable waiting time at the hearing. The question in this case is whether they are also entitled to pay for time spent traveling to and from the hearing and all time waiting at the hearing. NALC and APWU claim that payment for such time is required by Article 15, Section 4A(5) of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

Because this is an interpretive question initiated by NALC at Step 4 of the grievance procedure, there is no specific set of facts before me. It would be helpful therefore to describe in general terms how the parties handle Union witnesses. Ordinarily a Business Agent informs Management in advance of the names of the employees he intends to call as witnesses at a pending arbitration. He may confer with Management to determine when the witnesses should be released from work. But Management usually is in the best position to predict when witnesses will be needed. For most arbitrations involve disciplinary action and hence require the Postal Service to present its case first. Management estimates the length of its presentation and plans for Union witnesses accordingly. It tells supervision to release the witness at a certain time although occasionally the witness may request to leave earlier.

If the hearing is held in the same facility where the witness is working, no travel time issue is likely to arise. But if the hearing is somewhere else, the witness must often take a car, bus or train to the hearing site. After he arrives, he may have to wait a period of time before he is called upon to testify. This travel time to and from the hearing and waiting time at the hearing are the crux of this dispute.

Article 15, Section 4A(5) of the National Agreement addresses this subject:

> "Arbitration hearings normally will be held during working hours where practical. Employees whose attendance as witnesses is required at hearings during their regular working hours shall be on Employer time when appearing at the hearing, provided time spent as a witness is part of the employee's regular working hours." (Emphasis added)

NALC stresses the phrase "time spent as a witness" and contends that "witness" status begins when an employee is released from work to attend the arbitration and ends when the employee returns to regular work. It believes, accordingly, that "time spent as a witness" includes travel and all wait time. It further maintains that Article 15, Section 4A(5) should be construed in the Union's favor because of past practice. It alleges that the practice nationally has been to compensate Union witnesses for travel and all wait time. It claims that the Postal Service unilaterally discontinued this practice after the award in Case No. N8-N-0221 which held that Article 17, Section 4 did not entitle grievants to pay for time spent traveling to and from Step 2 meetings.

The Postal Service asserts that the phrase "time spent as a witness" cannot be read in isolation but rather must be related to the far more significant phrase, "when appearing at the hearing." It urges that the latter words plainly reveal the parties' intention to pay only for such time as witnesses are actually present "at the hearing", i.e., time spent testifying and reasonable waiting time. It denies that there has been a practice of paying witnesses in the manner claimed by NALC. It contends that Management policy nationally has been to pay witnesses only for time spent testifying and reasonable waiting time. It maintains that any instances of payment for travel time or all wait time would be deviations from its long-standing policy and practice.

It should be noted that although this case only involves witnesses at an arbitration hearing, the parties agree that grievants should be treated the same as witnesses for pay purposes.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

Article 15, Section 4A(5) deals with employees whose "attendance as witnesses" is "required" at an arbitration hearing "during their regular working hours." It provides that such witnesses "shall be on Employer time when appearing at the hearing, provided the time spent as a witness is part of the employee's regular working hours." The underscored language is the primary test for determining when an employee-witness is "on Employer time." He is paid only "when appearing at the hearing." These words clearly refer to physical presence at the hearing. When an employee-witness is traveling from his work location to the hearing site or vice-versa, he is certainly not "...at the hearing." Thus, travel time is not compensable.

NALC seeks to avoid this conclusion by stressing the contract phrase, "time spent as a witness." It asserts that when an employee is traveling to the hearing to testify or returning to his work place after testifying, all of that is "time spent as a witness." It urges he should therefore be considered "on Employer time" and be paid when traveling.

The difficulty with this argument is that it ignores the relationship between principle and proviso in the sentence in question. The principle is that the employee-witness be paid "when appearing at the hearing." The proviso is simply a means of insuring that the employee-witness be paid for "appearing at the hearing" only to the extent that such appearance time occurs "during regular working hours." This proviso serves to narrow the principle upon which it rests*, to limit the application of Section 4A(5). It is a secondary test for determining when an employee-witness is "on Employer time." But NALC here seeks to make the proviso a primary test, to allow the proviso to enlarge the application of Section 4A(5). That certainly is not what the parties intended. Indeed, if NALC were correct, there would have been no need for the parties to say anything other than that the employee shall be "on Employer time" for all "time spent as a witness." That would in effect treat the principle and the critical words in Section 4A(5), "when appearing at the hearing", as mere surplusage. Such a reading of Section 4A(5) conflicts with the plain meaning of its terms.

These findings are supported by my earlier award in Case No. H8N-1A-C-7812 (also referred to as Case No. N8-N-0221). There, the issue was whether grievants are entitled to pay for travel time to and from Step 2 meetings. Article 17, Section 4 called for grievants to be paid in Step 2 "for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigations and meetings with the Employer." The ruling was that this contract language does not encompass travel time. I stated:

> "...While the grievant is on a bus or train en route to the [Step 2] meeting, he is not engaged in the 'actual...handling...' of a grievance. He is traveling, nothing more. His 'grievance handling' begins only when he arrives at the meeting..."

* That is the normal function of a proviso.

Similarly, "time spent as a witness" in the Article 15, Section 4A(5) proviso begins when the employee arrives at the arbitration hearing and ends when he leaves. These words do not encompass travel time. They apparently were meant to be synonomous with time spent "appearing at the hearing."

Moreover, the parties were well aware of how to express a pay formula in terms which would embrace travel time. They stated in Article 17, Section 4 that "...the Employer will compensate any witnesses for the time required to attend a Step 2 meeting." Clearly, the "time required to attend..." includes travel time. The arbitration witness clause speaks of paying the employee "when appearing at the hearing" or for "time spent as a witness." It says nothing whatever about "time required to attend..." the arbitration hearing. It can hardly be interpreted to mean the same thing as the Step 2 witness payment clause.

NALC resists these conclusions in the belief that Article 15, Section 4A(5) must be interpreted in light of past practice. It maintains that Management has customarily paid travel time to employees required as witnesses at arbitration hearings. It urges that this long-standing practice has become an accepted part of the postal bargaining relationship and should be a controlling consideration in the disposition of this grievance.

This argument is not persuasive. To begin with, the principle set forth in Article 15, Section 4A(5) seems reasonably clear. I have already explained why this language plainly supports the Postal Service's view. Given my reading of Section 4A(5), it would require the strongest proof of past practice to interpret this clause in a manner contrary to its apparent intent, that is, to interpret this clause as authorizing pay for travel time. NALC and APWU have not met that test. They have introduced evidence that travel time was paid to arbitration witnesses on many occasions. But the Postal Service has introduced evidence that travel time was not paid on other occasions and, more importantly, that its policy has for years always been to deny payment for travel time. The most that can be said, on the present state of the record, is that there has been a mixed practice. It is clear, however, that the management group responsible for negotiating Section 4A(5) never acquiesced in any payment of travel time to arbitration witnesses.

It would serve no useful purpose to review all of the evidence introduced by the parties. But certain points made by the Postal Service should be noted. For those points together preclude a finding that the parties had in effect, through past practice, agreed that Section 4A(5) calls for the payment of travel time to arbitration witnesses.

First, there are several grievance answers in which the Postal Service unequivocally rejected the payment of travel time for arbitration witnesses. A NALC grievance (V-74-6217) requested payment for travel time to and from arbitration for a grievant-witness. That grievance was denied in Step 3 in 1974, the Postal Service asserting that "there is no requirement for the employer to pay for the witness' travel time." Another NALC grievance (NC-N-4440) requested payment for such travel time for a grievant-witness. That grievance was denied in Step 4 in 1977, the Postal Service asserting that "there is no contractual provision which allows for the payment of travel to and from the hearing site." The matter was appealed to arbitration but later withdrawn in 1980. The withdrawal letter*, signed by the parties, stated the Postal Service's position that "only time at the arbitration hearing is compensable."

APWU seems to have conceded the practice question in its resolution of a recent grievance (H1C-5F-C-20272). That grievance was settled in Step 4 in 1984, the parties agreeing that the Postal Service "is not contractually obligated to pay employees for the time spent traveling to and from the hearing location nor has such a policy been established by the Postal Service." Although this settlement was later repudiated by APWU on the ground that it had been misled by Management, the fact remains that an informed Union representative acknowledged that the Postal Service had never established a policy of paying travel time to arbitration witnesses.

All of this was confirmed by the testimony of various Postal Service Regional Managers. They instructed their local management people not to pay travel time to arbitration witnesses. Some of them communicated that message to Union representatives. The Northeast Manager of Arbitration recalled a 1975 conversation with a NALC Business Agent who objected to the Postal Service's refusal to pay travel time and suggested that travel be minimized by scheduling arbitrations at local sites. An Eastern Manager recalled a NALC Local President complaining about the Postal Service being "cheap" for not paying travel time. It may well be that Management's instructions were sometimes (or often) misunderstood or ignored. But the resultant payments for travel time were certainly not made with the knowledge or approval of those responsible for Postal Service policy on Section 4A(5).

Moreover, the bargaining history is highly suggestive. NALC proposed in the 1978 negotiations* that the arbitration witness clause be changed to read, "...Employees whose attendance is required at [arbitration] hearings during their regular hours shall be on Employer time." These words would have granted pay for travel time for witnesses. The Postal Service rejected the proposal. If the NALC proposal simply reflected a long-established national practice, as NALC claims, there would have been no reason for the Postal Service to object to this change in contract language. Its objection suggests the practice was quite different. Either the practice was to deny travel time or there was a mixed practice. The Postal Service was obviously attempting to prevent the introduction of a new contractual rule, paid travel time for witnesses.

None of this is meant to detract from the force of the Union's evidence. Rather, the purpose is to illustrate my conviction that there was a mixed practice. To prevail here, the Unions would have to show a practice so uniform and so widely accepted as to warrant finding that the higher echelons of labor-management authority had agreed to apply Section 4A(5) in the manner urged by NALC and APWU. No such showing has been made. Therefore, practice cannot alter my earlier interpretation of Section 4A(5).

* I rely on bargaining history not to prove the meaning of Section 4A(5) but rather to help determine the nature of the disputed practice.

The remaining issue is whether arbitration witnesses are entitled to pay for all waiting time at the hearing as the Unions claim or only reasonable waiting time as the Postal Service claims.

The answer can be found, once again, in the language of Section 4A(5). The arbitration witness is "...on Employer time when appearing at the hearing." These words suggest that all time spent at the hearing is compensable. There is, however, one important qualification. The benefit in Section 4A(5) applies only to those "whose attendance is required at the hearing..." Suppose, for instance, a witness appears at the very start of the hearing some hours before he is expected to testify. His presence then may or may not be "required." The reason for his being there may be critical. If his knowledge of the case is vital and the Union advocate needs him by his side, surely his presence is "required." He would be entitled to pay for all waiting time. But if he is called to corroborate what others will be testifying to and he is merely an observer, his early presence is hardly "required." He would not be entitled to pay for all waiting time. The point at which someone's attendance is "required" is a question of fact. The relevant considerations are the judgment of the parties' advocates, the nature of the case, the relationship of the witness to the case, the testimony he is expected to give, and so on. This ruling is not altered in any way by past practice.

AWARD

With respect to travel time, the grievance is denied. With respect to waiting time at the hearing, the grievance is disposed of in the manner set forth in the foregoing opinion.

Dear Mr. May:

On September 8, 1976, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The issue raised in this grievance questions whether the Employer is required to compensate an employee for attendance at an arbitration hearing when no relevant testimony is given.

Article XV, Section 3 of the National Agreement requires that employee witnesses shall be on Employer time when appearing at the arbitration hearing, provided the time is during the employee's regular working hours. There is no distinction made in this section as to whether testimony is given or whether such testimony is relevant. The intent of the language in this part is that it be a "no loss-no gain" situation. It is implicit in this section that a person requested to appear at an arbitration hearing as a witness, is necessary to the orderly process of the hearing and is knowledgeable about the issues in the case being arbitrated. This section does not intend that a person is on official time for appearing at an arbitration hearing as an "observer" who cannot furnish information which has a substantive or probative value in relation to the case being heard.

Available information involving the particulars presented in this case indicates that the grievant's appearance at the arbitration hearings in question was within the spirit and intent of Article XV, Section 3 of the National Agreement. It is indicated that he appeared for the purpose of attesting to the validity and accuracy of route data forms utilized during the count and inspection of routes, which were presented into the record in this case. Such testimony can reasonably be viewed as contributing to the orderly processing of the case in arbitration.

Accordingly, by copy of this letter, the Postmaster is instructed to take the necessary measures to assure that the time in question in this case is charged to official time and that the grievant is reimbursed accordingly.

Sincerely,

(signed)

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, Dick Collins, to discuss the above captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these grievances is the manner in which management in Brooklyn, New York, selects employees to work overtime, once Management has determined that overtime is necessary to meet operational needs.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. The facts and circumstances presented in the above referenced grievances are resolved by arbitration award number A94M-1A-C 98082567, arising from this same Brooklyn, New York post office, and decided by Arbitrator Sarah Cannon Holden on August 12, 1999, as a member of the regular regional arbitration panel. That case arose from a substantively similar dispute between the local parties over the right of mail handlers on the overtime desired list to be assigned the opportunity to work overtime assignments prior to employees whose names were not on the overtime desired list.

The parties agree that Article 15.4, Section A6 of the National Agreement clearly provides that "All decisions of an arbitrator will be final and binding." The parties further agree that this exclusion of further contractual avenues includes appeals to Step 4 of the grievance arbitration procedure. The parties further agreed that a regional arbitration award is binding precedent in the facility in which a case was heard when a subsequent grievance involves the same material facts as those presented in the arbitrated case. (See Step 4 grievance decisions H7M-3W-C 20857, and H7M-3W-C 19636) Such is the case in the above referenced grievances.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand these cases to the parties at the area/regional level to be settled in accordance with the language contained in Arbitrator Holden's award.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgement of agreement to remand this case to the parties at the regional level for settlement.

Dear Mr. Conway:

At the Blue Ribbon Committee meeting on September 23, 1975, the subject of the filing of requests for reconsideration by arbitrators of their awards was discussed. It was agreed that sound labor relations policy and the arbitration processes established under Article XV would be better served by precluding requests for reconsideration by either a Union or Postal Service for reconsideration of arbitration awards. Accordingly, it was agreed that, beginning with the date of this letter, no requests or motions for reconsideration of arbitration awards would be filed by any Union signatory to the 1975 National Agreement or by the Postal Service.

Out of an abundance of caution, I wish to make clear that nothing herein is intended to preclude any right that any party may have to seek judicial review of an arbitrator's award. Nor is anything herein intended to preclude an arbitrator from correcting clerical mistakes or obvious errors of arithmetical computation.

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, Dallas Jones, to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the arbitrator failed to give weight to a previous settlement on the same issue.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Arbitration is the last step of the grievance-arbitration procedure. There are no further contractual avenues for management or the union to challenge or appeal an arbitration award, although judicial relief or enforcement of an arbitration award may be available (source: National Level Agreement dated October 3, 1975).

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 to discuss and/or adjudicate any remaining issues or proceed to regional arbitration if necessary.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

Subject: Authority of the Arbitrator - Maximization of Full-Time Assignments - Remedy

Statement of the Issues: Whether the arbitrator has the authority under the National Agreement to remedy the failure of the parties, through a Joint Committee, to agree on maximization criteria? If so, what is the appropriate remedy?

Contract Provisions Involved: Article VI; Article VII, Section 3; Article XV, Sections 2 and 4; and the Memorandums of Understanding on Maximization and on Jurisdictional Disputes of the July 21, 1978 National Agreement.

Grievance Data:

	Date
Grievance Filed:	September 21, 1979
Case Heard:	April 16, 1980
Transcript Received:	April 30, 1980
Briefs Submitted:	June 10, 1980

Statement of the Award: The arbitrator has the authority to remedy the Joint Committee's failure to agree on maximization criteria under the pertinent Memorandum of Understanding. The parties are directed to take the steps described in Part III (Remedy).

BACKGROUND

This case arises from the parties' failure to develop criteria for the establishment of additional full-time duty assignments pursuant to the Memorandum of Understanding on Maximization. The dispute concerns the arbitrator's authority to remedy this failure. NALC urges that the arbitrator has this authority and should exercise it; the Postal Service claims the arbitrator has no such authority.

The regular work force in a postal installation consists of full-time employees and part-time employees. The size of these groups, in relation to one another, has been a continuing source of disagreement between the parties. The National Agreement has provisions which govern this relationship. Article VII, Section 3 requires that any installation with 200 or more man-years of employment be staffed with "90% full-time employees." It states also that the Postal Service "shall maximize the number of full-time employees and minimize the number of part-time employees who have no fixed work schedules..." It contains the following conversion formula: "A part-time flexible employee working eight (8) hours within ten (10), on the same five (5) days each week and the same assignment over a six-month period will demonstrate the need for converting the assignment to a full-time position."

NALC has apparently been dissatisfied with both this 90% figure and the conversion formula. It believed that full-time employees should constitute even more than 90% of the work force and that many part-time employees should be converted to full-time status. It pressed for such changes. The question of maximizing the number of full-time employees was discussed in the 1978 negotiations. Those discussions resulted in the following Memorandum of Understanding which is incorporated in the 1978 National Agreement:

> "The parties hereby commit themselves to the maximization of full-time employees in all installations. Therfore, they agree to establish a National Joint Committee on Maximization. That Committee shall, during the first year of the 1978 National Agreement, develop criteria applicable by craft for the establishment of additional full-time duty assignments with either regular or flexible schedules. To this end, the Committee shall develop both an approach to combining part-time flexible work hours into full-time duty assignments and a method for determining scheduling needs compatible with the creation of the maximum possible number of such assignments."*

NALC wrote to the Postal Service on February 28, 1979, requesting a meeting of the National Joint Committee. The first meeting was held on March 9. It was attended not just by NALC but by APWU and LIUNA as well, the other unions covered by the National Agreement. The parties agreed to exchange proposals with respect to maximization criteria. NALC submitted its proposal on March 19; the Postal Service sent its ideas to NALC on March 21, outlining the points to be pursued in developing the necessary criteria.

The second meeting was held on March 23. The ideas and proposals, exchanged earlier, were discussed. NALC requested data relating to auxiliary assignments. It was agreed that separate discussions would thereafter take place between the Postal Service and each of the unions. The initial meeting with NALC alone occurred on April 17. The Postal Service suggested "criteria for establishing a data base to determine the need to maximize the number of full-time duty assignments." The next meeting with NALC took place on May 10. NALC presented a list of pending maximization grievances, alleged violations of Article VII, Section 3. It asked that these grievances be handled in a more expeditious manner. It suggested a new set of criteria for the conversion of part-time hours into full-time assignments. It reduced this suggestion to writing, a letter proposal, and sent it to the Postal Service on May 11. In that letter, it also withdrew its previous request for data on auxiliary assignments.

The next meeting on September 12 involved all the unions. However, separate discussions between the Postal Service and NALC were resumed later that day. NALC initiated a Step 4 grievance on September 21, complaining of the failure of the Joint Committee to develop maximization criteria. It nonetheless was willing to engage in further discussion of the problem. The Postal Service replied by letter on October 26, proposing new maximization criteria.

* This Memorandum is dated September 15, 1978.

That proposal was discussed at another meeting on December 3. NALC was apparently prepared to accept such criteria if it was understood that coverage of scheduled and unscheduled absences by part-time employees could qualify the latter for conversion to full-time status. That condition was unacceptable to the Postal Service. The parties thus were unable to reach agreement. They tried once more, on January 4, 1980, but were again unsuccessful. NALC appealed the matter to arbitration on January 9.

It should be noted that the negotiations between the Postal Service and APWU and between the Postal Service and LIUNA were successful. Those negotiations led to written agreements on "experimental" maximization criteria. NALC was unwilling to accept the terms of those agreements.

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

NALC argues that the Memorandum of Understanding "mandated" the parties to develop maximization criteria, that the Postal Service and NALC failed to do so, and that this failure means the "Memorandum...has been violated." It believes this is a "breach of contract", the Memorandum being part of the National Agreement, for which the arbitrator should issue an appropriate remedy. It asserts that "a general unrestricted arbitration clause, such as Article XV, confers broad remedial powers on the arbitrator so as to deal with a wide variety of situations."

It insists it is not asking that the National Agreement be "altered, amended or modified" in any way. Rather, its position is that the arbitrator should do what the parties have improperly failed to do in violation of their contractual responsibilities. It claims adoption of the Postal Service view would mean that the Memorandum of Understanding was "a nullity -- an 'agreement' without any practical effect...which Management could violate with impunity." It alleges that the failure to carry out the Memorandum's mandate was "attributable solely to Management's bad faith."

It asks the arbitrator to remedy the claimed violation by either (1) issuing maximization criteria which would adopt NALC's last proposal in the December 1979-January 1980 Joint Committee meetings or (2) ordering the parties to resume negotiations on this matter, setting ground rules (including a deadline) for those negotiations, and reserving the power to formulate criteria in the event the parties are unable to do so.

The Postal Service contends that the arbitrator "lacks authority to remedy the parties' inability to develop maximization criteria." It urges that the arbitrator has only that authority which the parties have granted him under the National Agreement. It notes that the Memorandum of Understanding says nothing whatever about arbitration. It insists the parties nowhere gave the arbitrator the authority to resolve maximization issues which the Joint Committee was unable to resolve. It maintains that "had the parties intended [such] interest arbitration in the event agreement could not be reached, they would have included an arbitration clause in the Memorandum of Understanding."

It emphasizes the presence in the National Agreement of arbitration clauses to deal with the resolution of jurisdictional disputes not disposed of by the Committee on Jurisdiction* and to deal with the resolution of lay-off rules disputes not disposed of by the parties through Article VI negotiations. It believes the absence of such an arbitration clause in the Memorandum on Maximization indicates that the parties did not contemplate arbitration of any Joint Committee impasse.

It relies on Article XV, Section 4D(1) which says "only cases involving interpretive issues under this Agreement or supplements thereto...will be arbitrated at the national level." It asserts that this case, absent an arbitration clause in the Memorandum of Understanding, raises no "interpretive issue" and hence is not arbitrable. It states that NALC's desired remedies would modify the National Agreement contrary to the arbitral limitations in Article XV, Section 4A(6). Finally, it flatly denies that Management members of the Joint Committee were guilty of bad faith in negotiating maximization criteria.

For these reasons, the Postal Service says that this grievance is not a proper subject for arbitration and that the arbitrator has no authority to provide a remedy for the parties' failure to agree on maximization criteria.

* These arrangements are spelled out in the Memorandum on Jurisdictional Disputes.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The arbitrator's authority is derived from the National Agreement. He is "limited" by Article XV, Section 4A(6) "to the terms and provisions of this Agreement." He is expressly prohibited by this same section from altering, amending or modifying such terms and provisions. He is, when serving on the "national panel", restricted by Article XV, Section 4D(1) to "interpretive issues under this Agreement or supplements thereto of general application..." His function, in short, is the interpretation and application of these various contractual commitments.

The Memorandum of Understanding on Maximization is either a "term" or "provision" of the National Agreement or a "supplement thereto of general application." NALC reads the Memorandum as establishing a firm and fixed obligation; the Postal Service reads the same words quite differently. Thus, the NALC grievance does raise "interpretive issues" with respect to the Memorandum. It follows that the dispute is arbitrable and that I have authority to consider the NALC allegation that the Memorandum has been violated.

The crux of this case is the meaning of the Memorandum, the significance of the failure of the Joint Committee created by the Memorandum to agree on maximization criteria. NALC insists that this failure is a violation of the Memorandum and that the arbitrator must therefore provide a remedy for this violation. The Postal Service disagrees, asserting that the Joint Committee simply deadlocked and that the parties failed to make provision in the Memorandum for resolution of such a deadlock. Its position seems to be that the Memorandum has not been violated and that the arbitrator has no authority to provide any kind of remedy in these circumstances.

The crucial issue, in other words, is whether there has been a contract violation. If a violation of the Memorandum has occurred, as NALC claims, the arbitrator must then formulate an appropriate remedy.* The authority to do so is implicit in the terms of the National Agreement. Indeed, the remedy for an alleged violation is a facet of every grievance. The parties specifically stated in the grievance procedure that NALC must designate the "remedy sought" in its appeal to Step 2 and in the discussions at Step 2. As the grievance passes through later steps to arbitration, the "remedy sought" remains an essential ingredient of the dispute. Hence, when the arbitrator considers the grievance and finds merit in a NALC claim, he is free to deal with the remedy question. That must have been contemplated by the parties. The grievance procedure is a system not only for adjudicating rights but also for redressing wrongs.

I - Contract Violation

The Postal Service acknowledges that it was obliged to participate with NALC in a Joint Committee in an attempt to establish maximization criteria. It says it satisfied this procedural obligation. Its view seems to be that, from a substantive standpoint, the Memorandum involved merely a conditional commitment. It believes that Management would only be bound by maximization criteria if the Joint Committee agreed to such criteria. It maintains that because no agreement was reached, the condition was not met and Management was relieved of any duties it may otherwise have had regarding new maximization criteria. It concludes that the Memorandum was not violated and that the arbitrator should leave the parties precisely where he finds them.

This argument is not without a surface appeal. But a careful reading of the Memorandum, in light of its evident purpose and in contrast to the provisions of Article VII, Section 3, indicates that more than a conditional commitment was made in this case.

To begin with, Article VII, Section 3 requires postal installations with 200 or more man-years of employment to operate with 90% full-time employees. It also commits Management to "maximize the number of full-time employees ...in all...installations." The Memorandum repeats this commitment and then goes further. It creates a Joint Committee which "shall...develop criteria applicable by craft for the establishment of additional full-time duty assignments..." These underscored words, it seems to me, represent the real purpose of the parties. They reveal that the Memorandum was intended as a means of expanding the complement of full-time employees beyond the 90% figure set forth in Article VII, Section 3. The Memorandum must be read with that purpose clearly in mind.

The Postal Services suggests that the parties are bound only by what the Joint Committee agrees to, that no obligation exists in the absence of a Joint Committee agreement. That is too narrow a reading of the Memorandum. The parties committed themselves, in unmistakeable terms, to greater maximization. They were uncertain how that agreed upon goal should be achieved. They appear to have recognized that maximization was a technical question which needed far more study. Hence, they placed the problem in the hands of a Joint Committee which was supposed to create the procedure, the maximization criteria, which would enable the parties to realize the greater maximization they had bargained for. The Joint Committee was a means to an end, not an end in itself.

The Memorandum, construed in this way, is certainly not a conditional commitment. It is a firm and definite commitment to greater maximization during the life of the 1978 National Agreement. The parties have no choice in this matter. They were commanded to appoint a Joint Committee which was in turn commanded to produce the necessary maximization criteria. The Memorandum's language is mandatory, the Joint Committee "shall...develop criteria..." and "shall develop...an approach to combining part-time flexible work hours into full-time duty assignments..." The failure of the Joint Committee meant that the purpose of the Memorandum has been defeated, that the parties' commitment to greater maximization has not been carried out.

For these reasons, I find there has been a contract violation. On account of the Joint Committee impasse, the parties are in breach of their Memorandum commitment to greater maximization. It is no less a breach because the parties bear equal responsibility for the impasse.* Most contract violations involve the employer inasmuch as the union is typically the grieving party. Few violations derive from union conduct. But this tradition, from a conceptual point of view, does not prevent the occurrence of a joint violation under the kind of unusual circumstances present here.

* The NALC charge that the Postal Service did not negotiate in good faith in the Joint Committee discussions is not borne out by the evidence.

I I - Other Considerations

In arriving at these conclusions, several Postal Service arguments have been considered and rejected. Those arguments deserve brief comment.

First, it is true that there is no mention of arbitration in the Memorandum of Understanding on Maximization. The Postal Service views this silence as a crucial consideration. However, given the existence of a contract violation (Part I) and given the arbitrator's inherent power to remedy violations, this silence is immaterial.*

Second, it is true that Article VI of the National Agreement specifically grants an arbitrator the right to dispose of "unresolved issues" with respect to lay-off rules and procedures. The Postal Service emphasizes that no such grant of arbitral authority is found in the Memorandum on Maximization. However, Article VI has a very special history. It was not written by the parties. It was written by Arbitrator Healy in an interest arbitration agreed to by the parties in an attempt to resolve a deadlock in the 1978 negotiations. The reference to arbitration in Article VI was a device for Arbitrator Healy to retain jurisdiction over certain phases of the lay-off controversy which he had returned to the parties for additional negotiations.

Third, it is true that the Memorandum on Jurisdictional Disputes expressly permits arbitration of disputes unresolved by the Committee on Jurisdiction. The Postal Service notes that no such provision was made for disputes unresolved by the Joint Committee on Maximization. However, these Committees are entirely different. The Jurisdiction Committee is a dispute-resolution group which anticipates disagreements. It required a special arbitration procedure because of the special problems posed by a dispute involving more than one union. The then

* If the Postal Service had refused to participate in the Joint Committee at all, that refusal would be a violation of the Memorandum. An arbitrator could surely order the Postal Service to participate in the Joint Committee, to do what it had promised to do, notwithstanding the silence of the Memorandum on the matter of arbitration. Thus, alleged violations of the Memorandum can properly become the subject of arbitration proceedings.

existing procedure would not have bound anyone other than the aggrieved union and the Postal Service. The Maximization Committee, on the other hand, anticipated no disagreements. For it was commanded to work out the details necessary to realize the agreed upon goal of greater maximization. It required no special arbitration procedure. It was expected to carry out its function during the first year of the 1978 National Agreement.

None of these arguments call for a different result in this case.

I I I - Remedy

The appropriate remedy raises a different set of problems. Mr. Justice Douglas, speaking for the Supreme Court in the Enterprise Wheel case, observed that the arbitrator must "bring his informed judgment to bear in order to reach a fair solution...[in] formulating remedies."*

NALC asks the arbitrator to impose maximization criteria on the parties, to do what the Joint Committee failed to do. It believes I should adopt the criteria it suggested at the Joint Committee meetings. In my opinion, no such remedy could be justified at this time. There are not enough facts or arguments in the record to make a confident finding as to what would be fair maximization criteria. Fairness is, in any event, a "two-way street." Any remedy must be fair from the standpoint not only of the employees (i.e., providing greater maximization of full-time assignments) but also of Management (i.e., protecting the operational needs set forth in the Memorandum).

The remedy shall be two-fold. First, the Joint Committee is directed to return to the bargaining table and to make a good faith effort to reach agreement on maximization criteria. I cannot assume those negotiations will be fruitless. Indeed, the parties should realize that their failure to agree is likely to result in an imposed solution. That is a new element which should serve to prompt the parties to more sympathetic consideration of one another's needs. Second, should the Joint Committee fail to reach agreement within a period of 60 days from the date of this award, either party may request a hearing before one of the "national panel" arbitrators. At that hearing, both sides will be given an opportunity to propose criteria and to submit evidence and argument on the question of what criteria should be adopted. The arbitrator will then determine the criteria to apply under the Memorandum.

AWARD

The arbitrator has the authority to remedy the Joint Committee's failure to agree on maximization criteria under the pertinent Memorandum of Understanding. The parties are directed to take the steps described in Part III (Remedy).

CONTRACT YEAR: 1994-98

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the National Association of Letter Carriers, when it has intervened in an area-level arbitration case, has the right to refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. It is so ordered and awarded.

Respectfully submitted,

Date: January 1, 2000

Melinda Holmes of the O'Donnell, Schwartz, and Anderson law firm in Washington, D.C. represented the American Postal Workers Union. Mr. Keith Secular of Cohen, Weiss, and Simon in New York, N.Y. represented the National Association of Letter Carriers.

The hearing proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence and to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. Mr. Peter Shonerd of Diversified Reporting Services, tape-recorded the proceeding for the parties and submitted a transcript of 137 pages. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties.

There were no challenges to the substantive or procedural arbitrability of the dispute, and the parties stipulated that the matter properly had been submitted to arbitration. They authorized the arbitrator to state the issue. The parties elected to submit the matter on the basis of evidence presented at the hearing as well as post-hearing briefs. The arbitrator officially closed the hearing on August 2, 1999 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from November 21, 1994 through November 20, 1998. A hearing occurred on April 14, 1999 in a conference room of Postal Headquarters located at L'Enfant Plaza in Washington, D.C. Mr. Kevin Rachel, Deputy Managing Counsel, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. Darryl Anderson and Ms.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

Does the National Association of Letter Carriers, on intervening in an area-level arbitration case, have a contractual right to refer a case to Step 4 of the relevant grievance procedure?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 15 - GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 5. Arbitration

A. General Provisions

9. In any arbitration proceeding in which a Union feels that its interests may be affected, it shall be entitled to intervene and participate in such arbitration proceeding, but it shall be required to share the cost of such arbitration equally with any or all other Union parties to such proceeding. Any dispute as to arbitrability may be submitted to the arbitrator and be determined by such arbitrator. The arbitrator's determination shall be final and binding.

B. Area Level Arbitration - Regular

5. If either party concludes that a case referred to Area Arbitration involves an interpretive issue under the National Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, that party may withdraw the case from arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. (Emphasis in the original.)

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the American Postal Workers Union argued that another union which intervened in an APWU area level arbitration proceeding enjoyed no contractual right to refer the dispute to Step 4 of the grievance procedure codified in the contract between the Employer and the APWU. To pursue its contention, the American Postal Workers Union initiated a grievance against the Employer at Step 4 on February 17, 1998. It is this narrow issue which has been submitted to the arbitrator.

The focus of the dispute between the parties is on the correct interpretation of the labor contract, and factual matters are not in dispute. The limited purpose of the grievance is to determine whether unions that choose to intervene in area level arbitration proceedings of the American Postal Workers Union enjoy a contractual right to refer the APWU grievance to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. To preserve any right it might have in the matter, the National Association of Letter Carriers intervened and enjoyed full participation at the arbitration hearing at the national level.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. American Postal Workers Union

It is the contention of the American Postal Workers Union that an intervening union in an APWU area-level arbitration proceeding has no authority to withdraw a grievance from arbitration and refer it to Step 4 of the APWU grievance procedure. The APWU believes that an intervening union may fully participate in the arbitration process but that only the APWU or the Employer actually may refer an APWU grievance to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. According to the APWU, (1) the plain meaning of the parties' agreement, (2) the context in which the terms in the contract have been used, (3) the bargaining history between the APWU and the Employer, and (4) considerations of efficiency compel adoption of its position in this dispute. The American Postal Workers Union asserts that, while an intervening union enjoys a right to participate actively in an arbitration proceeding in which it intervenes, this right is distinct and separate from the authority, as Intervenor, to guide a grievance through the contractual process set forth in the collective bargaining agreement between the Employer and the American Postal Workers Union. The APWU believes that, while an intervening union possesses participatory rights, it does not possess internal appellate rights secured as a part of the bargain between the Employer and the American Postal Workers Union.

The American Postal Workers Union also argues that the Employer and the APWU agree on two pivotal aspects of the dispute, namely, (1) that the intervening union does not have a right to withdraw or to settle an APWU grievance; and (2) that, after another union has intervened, the APWU retains the authority to withdraw the grievance or to settle it, without consultation with the intervening union.

B. The Employer

The Employer contends that a union which chooses to intervene in an area-level arbitration proceeding may withdraw the grievance from area-level arbitration and send it forward to Step 4 of the APWU grievance procedure. It is the belief of the Employer that contractual language in the collective bargaining agreement between the Employer and the APWU does not prohibit such a course of action. In fact, the Employer contends the verbiage of the parties' agreement strongly implies that an intervening union is to be accorded the same rights in the arbitration proceeding that are enjoyed by the grieving union. Moreover, the Employer maintains that both the past practice of the parties as well as federal arbitration policy favor resolving this issue by recognizing that an intervening union possesses the right to withdraw a grievance from area-level arbitration and to submit it to Step 4 of the APWU grievance process.

C. National Association of Letter Carriers

The position of the National Association of Letter Carriers is substantially similar to that of the United States Postal Service.

VI. ANALYSIS

A. Arbitral Jurisprudence

Parties who negotiate collective bargaining agreements are presumed to know that, if it becomes necessary for an arbitrator to interpret the labor contract, he or she will rely on arbitral jurisprudence as an important source of interpretive principles. To the extent that parties leave gaps in their agreement, arbitrators will use rules that have evolved in arbitral jurisprudence to fill gaps in incomplete contracts, unless the parties have made clear their intent to bargain around such default rules. The collective bargaining agreement of the parties remains as an arbitrator's lodestone, but contractual incompleteness is remedied by applying arbitral jurisprudence to fill contractual gaps in a manner consistent with the intent of the parties.

It is part of the genius of arbitral jurisprudence that it includes a body of principles consistent with Anglo-American legal standards of contract interpretation. Parties are presumed to understand that an arbitrator will draw on this source of guidance in fulfilling arbitral duties. Moreover, the parties have designed their arbitral process as a precedential system, and national arbitration decisions provide a conclusive interpretation of the parties' agreement. The parties have enjoyed a long relationship of collective bargaining, and it is their custom to incorporate prior decisions into their agreement, unless and until they bargain around such decisions.

One well-established standard of contract interpretation states that:

> When interpreting agreements, arbitrators use the ordinary and popular meaning of words, unless there is an indication that the parties intended a special meaning. (See St. Antoine, The Common Law of the Workplace, 69 (1998).)

This arbitral standard is merely a restatement of a common law rule used in aid of interpretation. It states that, "where language has a generally prevailing meaning, it is interpreted in accordance with that meaning." (See Restatement (Second) of Contracts, §202(3)(a), 86 (1981).) Whether the source is arbitral jurisprudence or a court of law, interpretive principles are applied to the context of a full document. As Restatement (Second) makes clear, "English words are read as having the meaning given them by general usage," but the context of a contractual provision provides the backdrop against which any disputed verbiage must be understood. (See p. 89 (1981).) As a part of reading a contract in context, an arbitrator assumes, absent contrary evidence, that parties used contractual language in a sense which would generally be understood throughout the country; and without turning it into a fortress, a dictionary may provide a good source of general usage of language.

B. Meaning of the Contract

Any resolution of the dispute between the parties must be rooted in the agreement reached by them at the bargaining table and codified in their collective bargaining agreement. A starting point in the analysis is Article 15.5.A.9 of the agreement which states:

> In any arbitration proceeding in which a Union feels that its interest may be affected, it shall be entitled to intervene and participate in such arbitration proceeding, but it shall be required to share the cost of such arbitration equally with any or all other Union parties to such proceeding. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 103.)

There is no ambiguity about the fact that the American Postal Workers Union and the Employer agreed to allow unions that possess an interest in the outcome of an arbitration proceeding between the APWU and the Employer to participate in the arbitral process. It is equally clear from the context of the parties' agreement that they have not defined precisely how an intervening union may protect its "affected interests." Rights to which an intervening union is entitled are not explicitly enumerated in the agreement between the Employer and the American Postal Workers Union. As a consequence, arbitrators from time to time have been asked to determine the scope of rights enjoyed by an intervening union. For example, an arbitrator found that the APWU, as the intervenor, had a right to present exhibits in a dispute between the Employer and the Mail Handlers Union, notwithstanding the fact that the APWU did not present the exhibits at Step 2 of the grievance procedure. (See Employer's Exhibit No. 6, Case No. W7M-5F-C 7637 (1989); see also, Case No. H4N-4J-C 18504 (1989).)

Even though the collective bargaining agreement between the American Postal Workers Union and the Employer did not explicitly define specific rights of an intervening union, the parties would have the arbitrator infer certain rights from the text of the collective bargaining agreement. For example, the National Association of Letter Carriers argued that, as an intervening union, it must be characterized as a "party" to the arbitration proceeding. As such a "party," the NALC contended that it enjoys rights equal to every other party to the proceeding. It is the belief of the NALC that Article 15.5.A.9 of the APWU agreement impliedly classes an intervening union as a "party" to the arbitration proceeding. This conclusion allegedly is supported by the contractual requirement that an intervening union must share the cost of the arbitration process with all "other" parties. The contractual reference to "other Union parties" necessarily requires that an intervening union be a party to the proceeding, in the opinion of the NALC. Otherwise, use of the word "other" in the contractual provision would be superfluous. As Restatement (Second) of Contracts makes clear, "where an integrated agreement has been negotiated with care and in detail and has been expertly drafted for the particular transaction, an interpretation is very strongly negated if it would render some provisions superfluous." (See 93 (1981).)

Consistent with the argument of the NALC, prior arbitration decisions have treated an intervening union as a "party" to the proceeding. (See Case No. W7M-5F-C 7637 (1989).) As the 1989 arbitration decision concluded, "once a party to the process, there is no basis for treating one party differently from another." (See Case No. W7M-5F-C 7637, p. 51 (1989).) This arbitral conclusion, of course, must be understood as meaning that an intervening union can only possess rights in the arbitration proceeding that do not conflict with rights of the original grievants. For example, an intervening union would not have a right to withdraw a grievance from arbitration or to settle a dispute against the wishes of the original parties. In other words, logic inherent in the parties' agreement teaches that some rights held by the original parties to the dispute are not available to the intervening union.

Article 15.B.5 of the parties' agreement states that, "if either party concludes that a case referred to Area Arbitration involves an interpretive issue . . . , that party may withdraw the case from arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure." (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 104, emphasis added.) The word "either" is subject to much dispute. In the view of the APWU, the word "either" is one of qualification and means that not every party may refer a case to Step 4. According to the APWU, the dictionary definition of the word "either" implies that only one of two parties is entitled to this right of referral. The position vigorously espoused by the APWU is that the parties with such a right obviously are the original two parties, namely, the APWU and the Employer. If, however, three parties are present in an intervention, it is not a foregone conclusion that the term "either party" refers to only two of the three parties. The text of the collective bargaining agreement itself gives no direct instruction with respect to whether or not an intervening union has a right to refer a matter to Step 4.

The National Association of Letter Carriers supported its theory of the case by returning its own volleys over the net. Opposed to the APWU's view, the NALC responded that the reference in the agreement to the word "either" was intended to describe the "typical" arbitration proceeding between two parties. Because an intervening union, however, is also a "party" to the proceeding, the NALC argued that the word "either" must be construed broadly to include a third party in the "atypical" circumstance when an intervening union is present. According to the NALC, the presence of three parties in a proceeding compels a broad construction of the word "either " in Article 15.B.5 of the APWU agreement. It is the belief of the NALC that, notwithstanding the dictionary definition of the word, its construction is not inconsistent with the common meaning attached to the word.

The ease of the parties' ability to play dueling decisions, in an effort to show that established arbitral principles favor their respective cases, only served to illustrate that the term "either party" is ambiguous and not dispositive of the issue presented to the arbitrator. The American Postal Workers Union argued that the phrase, in and of itself, determined the result in the case. But the tenn, even assuming its clarity in the abstract, certainly is not clear when considered within the factual context in which it is used. In the typical arbitration setting, only two parties are present, namely, the original grieving union and the Employer. But the parties have designed their arbitration process to include the atypical case in which three parties might be present. The APWU argued that use of the word "either" meant the parties intended to afford only the original two parties the right at issue in this case, but the argument failed to address the impact of such a contractual construction on an intervenor's rights. While the APWU's construction of the term is feasible, it is not logically required. The term "either" could just as logically be understood to mean any one of the three parties.

Nor does the argument that the status of an intervening union is that of "an equally contributing party" dictate the result in this case. Although an intervening union's status as a third party to the arbitration proceeding calls into question the APWU's theory of the case, the status of the intervening union as a party that contributes equally to the cost of the arbitration process fails to define other specific rights of an intervening union under the collective bargaining agreement. In other words, this is one of those cases where the contractual force of gravity has pulled the parties into a black hole where few words have been used but the gap in the parties' agreement is resplendent with meaning. None of the parties' understanding of intervenor rights is necessarily unreasonable, but neither is any single theory of the case dispositive.

The American Postal Workers Union added velocity to its argument that only the original two parties enjoy a right to submit a dispute to Step 4 by asserting that the NALC and the Employer would spread confusion with their contractual interpretation. As the APWU saw it, the NALC and the Employer confused an intervening union's right to participate in the arbitration proceeding with the right of the original parties to guide the grievance through the grievance procedure. The APWU complained that the NALC must not expect to control an APWU grievance. Thus, the APWU argued that an intervening union enjoys a right to participate in the arbitration proceeding and, accordingly, possesses all rights necessary to guarantee such participation. But the status of an intervenor does not extend to unrelated rights incident to the grievance procedure, according to the APWU. For example, the right to refer a matter to Step 4 is incident only to the grievance procedure and is not a right that emanates from participating in arbitration, according to the APWU. Hence, such a right is not available to an intervenor, as the APWU sees it.

The APWU premised its construction of the agreement on the design of the grievance procedure set forth in the labor contract. For example, only the APWU may file a grievance under the collective bargaining agreement. Only the APWU and the Employer may settle or withdraw a grievance. Only the APWU and the Employer at Step 3 may determine whether an interpretive issue exists, whether a settlement should conclude the dispute, or whether to advance the matter to arbitration, either at the regional or national level. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, art. 15, Step 3(c), (d), and (e).) The parties agree that an intervening union is not entitled to these rights because such intervenor rights would deny the original grievant and the Employer the right to participate under their own collective bargaining agreement.

Accordingly, the APWU argued for the existence of a distinction between a procedural right to guide a grievance through the grievance procedure (a right given only to original parties) and the right substantively to participate in an arbitration proceeding (a right given to both the original parties and the intervening union). The APWU maintained that, since the right to refer a matter to Step 4 is not incident to the arbitration proceeding, an intervening union must be denied such a right.

Even assuming the division for which the APWU argued exists, a bright line between rights incident to the grievance procedure and rights incident only to participation in the arbitration process is not nearly as bright as the APWU suggested. The right to transmute a regional arbitration hearing into a national grievance by referring a dispute to Step 4 affects both the substantive nature of the arbitration proceeding itself as well as the procedural posture of the dispute. If a matter is sent to national arbitration, an intervening union will be bound by a ruling that affects its interests and is national in scope. The ability to refer a matter to Step 4 and, then, to national arbitration is tantamount to the ability to affect a party's interest. The right to do so is not less intrinsic to the arbitration process than the right to present evidence in a case to advance one's cause, and such a right to present evidence is an essential part of participating in the arbitration proceeding.

Relying on Article 15.2, Step 3(e), the American Postal Workers Union also argued that the phrase "either party" supports its construction of the labor contract. The provision states:

> If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue under the National Agreement . . ., the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 . . . . (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 96, emphasis added.)

According to the analysis of the APWU, the phrase "either party" is consistently used in a manner that restricts its application to the original parties. As the APWU sees it, since the term "either party" is restricted to only the original parties, the use of the same term in Article 15.5.B.5 is necessarily qualified by that same meaning.

The use of the term "either party" in one setting, however, does not necessarily dictate that all circumstances surrounding the use of the term were intended to qualify the meaning of the term when used in another, entirely different setting. The fact that the parties applied the term "either party" to situations where the number of parties to which the term referred varied from two to three or more suggests that the parties did not intend to saddle the term with one rigid meaning. It is equally plausible that the parties intended a broader meaning of the word "either." It could include a meaning that encompassed three or more parties. Moreover, results achieved when using this analysis change with the order of its application. It is at least plausible that the term "either party" is defined by its use in Article 15.5.B.5 (where it is used in a three party setting) so that it might logically follow that, if an intervenor found itself in Step 2, it might have a right to refer the matter to Step 3. The point of this abstract litany is that, while the contract is clear about the fact that an intervening union may participate in the arbitration proceeding, nothing in the labor contract dictates with clarity and specificity what rights are given the intervening union. Nothing in the text of the agreement or the structure of the grievance procedure itself provides an absolute source of guidance for the arbitrator.

Hence, it is necessary to turn to other sources of guidance in the relationship between the parties, such as bargaining history and past practice.

C. The Matter of Past Practice

The U.S. Supreme Court has been clear about the importance of past practice as a source of guidance in understanding the contractual intent of the parties to a labor contract. As the Court stated:

> The labor arbitrator's source of law is not confined to the express provisions of the contract, as the industrial common law--the practices of the industry and the shop--is equally a part of the collective bargaining agreement although not expressed in it. (See United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 576 (1960).)

As the Court recognized, past practice in a collective bargaining relationship is important because "there are too many people, too many problems, too many unforeseeable contingencies to make the words of the contract the exclusive source of rights and duties." (P. 575.) As another court noted, past practice and bargaining history are useful in determining contractual intent, observing that "it is necessary to consider the scope of other related bargaining agreements, as well as the practice, usage, and

Past practice has been the subject of scholarly examination for decades, and it would be inaccurate to comment on the topic without making reference to that doyen of arbitral insight, Richard Mittenthal. He set forth ground-breaking observations on past practice almost four decades ago, and the principles he posited have stood the test of time and been universally adopted by labor arbitrators. (See Mittenthal, Proceedings of the Fourteenth Annual Meeting of the National Academy of Arbitrators 30 (1961).)

Mittenthal taught that conduct or activity "qualifies as a past practice if it is shown to be the understood and accepted way of doing things over an extended period of time." (P. 32.) He suggested that it was appropriate to test a past practice by its (1) clarity and consistency; (2) longevity and repetition; (3) acceptability; and (4) mutuality. When past practice is used to give meaning to an ambiguous contractual provision, its use is chiefly evidentiary. The burden of going forward with such evidence, of course, is on the party asserting the existence of a past practice. (See St. Antoine, The Common Law of the Workplace, 81 (1998).)

The National Association of Letter Carriers invoked past practice as a source of guidance to clarify ambiguity in Article 15 of the agreement between the APWU and the Employer. With past practice as the backdrop, the NALC relied on three arbitration cases to assert that an intervening union enjoys a right to refer a dispute to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. In the first case, the APWU intervened in a 1987 regional arbitration proceeding and asserted a right to withdraw the case from arbitration and to refer it to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. (See NALC Exhibit No. 1.) Both the Employer and the APWU supported such a right of referral. The NALC declined to take a position as to whether or not the referral was permissible under the NALC agreement but did not expressly oppose the referral. (See NALC's Post-hearing Brief, p. 4, fn. 1.)

The second case on which the NALC relied was a national arbitration decision. (See NALC's Exhibit No. 3, Case No. H7N-4Q-C 10845 (1991).) In this 1991 dispute, the NALC filed a grievance which proceeded to arbitration; and at this point the APWU intervened. The Employer, then, altered its position so that it was consistent with the NALC, the original grievant. Despite the fact that the original parties to the dispute now agreed, they did not withdraw the dispute but proceeded to process the matter because the APWU was not in agreement with the joint position of the NALC and the Employer. The NALC concluded that "this disposition reflects the parties' mutual understanding that APWU once it intervened, was equally entitled to have this interpretive matter resolved on the merits." (See NALC's Post-hearing Brief, p. 5.)

Finally, the NALC relied on a settlement agreement in 1994 between the NALC and the Employer. (See APWU's Exhibit No. L.) The 1994 settlement agreement between the NALC and the Employer reached the following determination:

> During our discussion, we mutually agreed that upon intervention at a hearing, the intervening union becomes a full party to the hearing. As a party, the intervening union has the right to refer a grievance to Step 4. (See APWU's Exhibit No. L, emphasis added.)

The NALC argued that this settlement agreement revealed what the parties have understood their past practice to be, namely, "(1) that an intervening union is a full party to the arbitration proceeding; and (2) that full party status necessarily encompasses the right to refer a grievance to Step 4." (See NALIC's Post-hearing Brief, p. 5.)

Arbitrator Mittenthal taught that a past practice must be tested against a pattern of clarity and consistency. When this test is applied to the facts of the case before the arbitrator, the first Mittenthal principle is not satisfied. The 1991 decision is not determinative because the intervening union did not attempt to refer the dispute to Step 4. Consequently, it is not a useful source of guidance in establishing an intervening union's right of referral. The remaining two decisions, however, are useful in unraveling the issue presented to the arbitrator. In both situations, an intervening union referred a dispute to Step 4. Although the disputed right is defined with clarity, it has not been applied with consistency. The 1987 case relied on by the NALC was referred to Step 4 by the Employer over NALC reservations with respect to the scope of intervention rights. The attempt in 1987 to keep the arbitration referral "as procedurally clean as possible" by having the Employer refer the matter to Step 4 (instead of the intervening union accompanied with the NALC's qualified approval) stands in contrast to the wholesale adoption of the policy referred to in the 1991 settlement agreement. (See NALC's Exhibit No. 1 and APWU's Exhibit No. L.). Moreover, in a case on which the NALC did not rely in this proceeding, the past practice was rejected by both the APWU as well as a regional arbitrator. (See APWU's Exhibit No. Q.) Additionally, no national-level case cited by the NALC presented a wholesale adoption of the principle. At best, the cases cited represented an ambiguous application of the right, ranging from a qualified approval (where an original party referred a dispute to Step 4) to adoption of an uncontested right, while also including an example of a rejection of the right altogether.

Mittenthal also taught that an alleged past practice should be tested by its longevity and repetition. No bright line separates conduct or activity that has longevity and is consistent from conduct that is not. Often whether the conduct of parties satisfies this particular criterion is a reflection of the equitable discretion of an arbitrator. As Mittenthal taught:

> A period of time has to elapse during which a consistent pattern of behavior emerges. Hence, one or two isolated instances of a certain conduct do not establish a practice. Just how frequently and over how long a period something must be done before it can be characterized as a practice is a matter of good judgment for which no formula can be devised. (P. 32, emphasis added.)

It is the conclusion of this arbitrator that two instances over a seven year period are not sufficient to satisfy this test of a past practice.

The final lens through which an alleged past practice should be viewed is that the activity or conduct must be acceptable to both parties to the agreement and mutually consented to by them. Evidence submitted to the arbitrator made clear that any alleged practice in this case, although accepted at various points in time by each party, has not been consistently accepted by them. Although the Employer always has supported the right of an intervening union to refer a dispute to Step 4 of the grievance procedure, both the APWU and the NALC have been wavering in their support and have espoused the right only if it served their interests. Thus, in 1987 the APWU supported the right of referral, while the NALC allowed it to occur but reserved the right to reject it in future proceedings. At other times, the APWU has objected to the NALC's motion, as an intervening union, to refer a matter to Step 4. An arbitrator sustained the objection and denied the intervening union any right of referral, although the case was subsequently referred to Step 4 of the grievance procedure pursuant to the Employer's motion of referral.

Such an inconsistent pattern of conduct hardly satisfies the definition of a past practice as activity that is "shown to be the understood and accepted way of doing things over an extended period of time." On the contrary, each party has attempted to make the best use of such an alleged right of referral to serve immediate organizational interests. The consequence of such an approach has produced an inconsistent application of the alleged right. It would be inappropriate to allow the doctrine of past practice to be used like a dowser's hazel twig "to witch" an area of land for water with all of its uncertainty and "hit or miss" characteristics.. The concept of past practice, when evidence supports its use, is a reasonably predictable tool of contract interpretation and should be used in a way that helps stabilize the meaning of the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

D. The Matter of Bargaining History

An invaluable source for understanding the meaning of a labor contract is the bargaining history of the parties. Evidence of bargaining history in this case is rooted in testimony by Mr. William Burrus, Executive Vice-president of the American Postal Workers Union. Years ago, he served as president of the Cleveland, Ohio Local as well as a member of the bargaining advisory committee. He acted as a liaison between his geographical area and national negotiators for the national contract. Although often briefed about the substance of national negotiations, he participated in no joint meetings in the early years of his career. (See Tr. 61.)

With regard to the right of an intervening union to refer a matter to Step 4 of the grievance procedure, Mr. Burrus testified that:

> The information I was provided by the negotiators in 1978 [was that the] right to refer was limited between the Postal Service and the grieving union .... (See Tr. 63.)

He understood that only the original two parties to the dispute had a right of referral.

Coming forward in time to 1994, Mr. Burrus had been promoted to the position of Executive Vice-president of the American Postal Workers Union. He served in contract negotiations as the APWU's chief spokesperson on noneconomic contractual issues. At this point in time, the NALC and the APWU were in transition from a period of joint bargaining to bargaining separately with the Employer. According to Mr. Burrus, it was necessary after the NALC's departure to "sanitize" contractual language by removing all references to the NALC from the APWU collective bargaining agreement. This insured that the agreement would reflect promises between only the Employer and the APWU.

Mr. Burrus testified that the parties did not modify language in Article 15.5.B.5 (the referral provision) because the understanding of the parties made it unnecessary to do so. He testified as follows:

> The language in question was not changed because it was understood by the parties in the 1994 negotiations as accurately reflecting the existing parties to the 1994 agreement. It was our understanding even before the breakup of the joint bargaining committee, NALC and APWU, that the language in Subsection 5 applied to the grieving union and the U.S. Postal Service. (See Tr. 66-67.)

Mr. Burrus contended that the meaning attributed to the language in 1978 was retained by the parties in subsequent agreements. Hence, it was unnecessary to make any change in that particular contractual provision after the two unions discontinued joint bargaining.

In 1998, the Employer and the APWU made changes to Article 15 of the collective bargaining agreement. The language at issue in this proceeding, however, was not changed. Prompted by concerns of efficiency, the parties removed from regional representatives any power to refer a case to national arbitration. They vested such power in representatives at the national level. Although the issue of referral by an intervening union was a subject of discussions in negotiations between the Employer and the APWU, the parties in their wisdom elected not to share such evidence with the arbitrator. (See Tr. 75.)

The theory espoused by the APWU was that the meaning of language adopted by the parties in 1978 was intended to apply only to the grieving union and the Employer. According to the APWU, such language and its meaning never changed in subsequent agreements. As a result, the APWU argued that this meaning infused the disputed language before the arbitrator in this proceeding.

The evidence, however, failed to be persuasive in several ways. First, Mr. Burrus, whose verisimilitude is unchallenged, was never present during the joint discussions in 1978. He based his understanding on the perceptions shared with him by APWU negotiators, and there was no suggestion that their understanding reflected the mutual intent of the parties. Moreover, the evidence was clear that discussions Mr. Burrus held with APWU negotiators did not directly concern referral in the context of a union which already had intervened in an arbitration proceeding. (See Tr. 71-72.) The limited nature of discussions he held with negotiators about the subject in dispute before the arbitrator failed to be persuasive with respect to their intent to restrict application of Article 15.5.B.5 to only the original grievant and the Employer.

Second, the meaning attributed to Article 15.5.B.5 by Mr. Burrus has not been handled in a manner by the parties that is consistent with a mutual agreement to restrict the right of referral to only the original parties to a grievance. Initial conduct by the parties under the collective bargaining agreement demonstrated that its meaning was unclear with respect to the right of an intervening union to refer a matter to Step 4. In 1987 (when the issue first arose), neither the NALC, the APWU, nor the Employer had a ready answer with respect to whether the collective bargaining agreement allowed an intervening union to refer a matter to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. (See NALC's Exhibit No. 1.) In the class action grievance of 1987, the APWU, as an intervening union, attempted to refer a case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. A NALC memorandum described the response to the situation as follows:

> The file will reflect that the APWU intervened at regional level arbitration in this case and requested that the case be submitted to Step 4.
> Subsequently, because it is unclear whether the contract allows an intervening union to submit a case to Step 4 and in order to keep this matter as procedurally clean as possible, the Postal Service decided to submit the case to Step 4 as indicated by the enclosed. (See NALC's Exhibit No. 1, p.5, emphasis added.)

Even though the APWU asserted a right of referral as an intervening union, all three parties apparently recognized that the collective bargaining agreement was unclear with respect to the scope of an intervenor's rights.

Whatever meaning may have been given to Article 15.5.B.5 in 1978, it is no longer conclusive in 1999. The most recent set of negotiations between the parties addressed the meaning of this disputed provision as well as whether an intervening union may refer a matter to Step 4. The parties determined, however, that such discussions should be characterized as "off-the-record" and should not be shared with the arbitrator. It seems reasonable to conclude that, during those discussions, the parties asserted contrary positions. Since 1994, the Employer has strongly supported the right of referral by an intervening union. (See APWU's Exhibit No. L.) Since at least 1997, the APWU has refused to acknowledge an intervening union's right of referral. (See APWU's Exhibit No. K.) Despite the disagreement, off-the-record discussions failed to produce any alteration in Article 15.5.B.5 of the parties' agreement. Despite years of conflicting decisions, the parties failed to resolve the issue by clarifying the language in their collective bargaining agreement. (Compare Case No. 91N-412 (1992) with Case No. G90C-4G-C 92040749 (1994).) It is reasonable to conclude from the totality of the record submitted to the arbitrator that the bargaining history of the parties failed to provide a definitive source of guidance with respect to the meaning of the disputed language before the arbitrator. The parties have left it to the arbitrator to fill the gap in their agreement by following other well-established rules of contract interpretation.

E. Design of the Parties' Dispute Resolution System

The APWU argued that it would violate the parties' collective bargaining agreement and clearly exceed an arbitrator's authority to interpret the labor contract as giving an intervening union broader rights than those provided under the agreement itself. (See APWU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 23.) The argument is wide of the mark, however, because the parties' collective bargaining agreement has left a gap to be filled with respect to rights of an intervening union. Arbitral jurisprudence calls on rules of contract construction to capture any ambiguous or silent meaning inherent in language selected by the parties to express their bargain. Such gap-filling procedures are a fundamental aspect of contract interpretation and long have been recognized not only by arbitrators but by courts of law as well. While it is not the role of an arbitrator to make contracts for parties, decision-makers for almost two hundred years have accepted the role of defining the scope of language in a contract. (See, e.g., Gardiner v. Gray, 171 Eng. Rep. 46 (K.B. 1815).) It is an arbitrator's duty to defer to the agreement of the parties, but applying established methods of filling contract gaps constitutes a legitimate aspect of determining their contractual intention. The eminent Justice Learned Hand once observed that, "as courts become increasingly sure of themselves, interpretation more and more involves an imaginative projection of the expressed purpose upon situations arising later, for which the parties did not provide and which they did not have in mind." (See L. M. Jackson & Co. v. Royal Norwegian Government, 177 F.2d 694, 702 (2nd Cir. 1949), cert. denied, 339 U.S. 914 (1950).)

Arbitrators within the parties' own arbitration system, likewise, have been compelled to engage in the gap-filling process. As Arbitrator Mittenthal recently stated, an arbitrator must "listen to what is left unsaid." (See 54 Dispute Resolution Journal 40, 41 (1999).) Over a decade ago, a national level arbitrator observed that "arbitrators are frequently required to address matters raised by the parties without having the benefit of an express contract provision upon which to base their judgment." (See Case No. H4N-4J-C 18504, (1989), p. 9.).) It is not unusual for an arbitrator to use principles of contract interpretation as a source of guidance in filling gaps in a contract as long as the meaning is drawn from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. As the U.S. Supreme Court made clear, an arbitrator may "look for guidance from many sources, yet his award is legitimate only so long as it draws its essence from the collective bargaining agreement." (See United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 595 (1960).)

Another useful building block of contract interpretation is the doctrine of reasonable expectations. The doctrine of reasonable expectations often is a helpful tool when an ambiguous provision in a contract must be interpreted. A contractual provision is ambiguous if it admits of more than one plausible interpretation and if the plausible interpretations have contrary effects on rights of the parties. Using the doctrine of reasonable expectations to determine common expectations and to clarify contractual ambiguity is bedrock arbitration law. It is using the language of the parties' contract itself to infer that the parties shared a common expectation. It is assuming that woven into their common expectation is a standard of fairness. The U. S. Supreme Court has said that an arbitration award must draw its essence from the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In searching for the "essence of the agreement," an arbitrator seeks the essence of a fair agreement. As the parties well understand, every contract includes an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. (See Restatement (Second) of Contracts §205, 99 (1981).)

The totality of the parties' agreement makes it reasonable to conclude that an efficient, speedy dispute resolution system constituted a shared expectation of the parties. The parties are presumed to have understood the impact of principles governing the right of intervention on the efficiency of their dispute resolution system. They implicitly understood that intervention is a device that balances competing interests of the parties. On one side of the balance is the interest of an existing party in controlling the course of an arbitration proceeding it initiated. On the other side of the balance is the interest of a union in entering an arbitration if the outcome will have an effect on its bargaining unit members. In addition, the union seeking to intervene might possess some expertise or additional information that could help an arbitrator make the best decision. Finally, the parties implicitly understood that an arbitrator has an interest in resolving controversies efficiently and that such efficiency is advanced by deciding related disputes in a single proceeding. While arbitrators generally defer to the right of original parties to control the arbitration proceeding, an appropriate balance occasionally must be struck between conflicting goals. As one scholar observed, "the basic problem of intervention practice is the adjustment between the need [for protection of third parties] and the traditional view that an [arbitration proceeding] is a private controversy in which outsiders have no place." (See Berger, 50 Yale L.J. 65 (1940).) Courts have struggled with finding the same balance. As one court stated, "the decision whether intervention of right is warranted thus involves an accommodation between two potentially conflicting goals: to achieve judicial economies of scale by resolving related issues in a single lawsuit and to prevent the single lawsuit from becoming fruitlessly complex or unending." (See Smuck v. Hobson, 408 F.2d 175, 179 (D.C. Cir. 1969); see also Tobias, "Standing to Intervene," 1991 Wis. L. Rev. 415 (1991).)

In designing their system of dispute resolution, the parties chose arbitration as their enforcement mechanism. As a quick and efficient means of dispute resolution, private arbitration proceedings are a logical alternative to traditional litigation. Both the APWU and the Employer (as well as the NALC in a nearly identical design) have recognized the importance of an efficient dispute resolution system by recognizing the possibility of arbitrating any "dispute, difference, disagreement, or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment." (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 91.) Concerns of efficiency, speed, and expense permeate the parties' collective bargaining agreement, and the parties made clear their commitment to an informal, speedy disposition of grievances. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 91-108.) Indeed, society generally has recognized benefits of arbitration by narrowly restricting judicial review of arbitration decisions. Some courts have gone so far as to ordering parties to pay their opponent's legal fees if they disingenuously assert that an arbitration award failed to draw its essence from the contract. (See Teamsters Local No. 579 v. B.&M Transit, Inc., 882 F.2d 274 (7th Cir. 1989); and Dreis and Krump Mfg. Co. v. Int'l Association of Machinists, 802 F.2d 247 (7th Cir. 1986).) Even in public policy matters, the U. S. Supreme Court has been clear about the enforceability of an arbitration award unless it violates "some explicit public policy that is well-defined and dominant and is to be ascertainable by reference to the laws and legal precedents and not from general considerations of supposed public interests." (See United Paperworkers Int'l Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 33 (1987).)

Strong evidence of the parties' intent to capture these benefits of a relatively informal and speedy dispute resolution system is found in Article 15.5.A.9 itself. The "right of intervention" set forth in Article 15.5.A.9 recognizes competing interests that arise when an employer deals with a number of collective bargaining representatives. Disputes, for example, between the American Postal Workers Union and the Employer with regard to allocation of work, elimination of existing jobs, cross-craft transfers, and interpretations of the collective bargaining agreement often implicate interests of the National Association of Letter Carriers and possibly other unions. Under Article 15.5.A.9, a union whose "interests may be affected " can protect those interests by intervening in the arbitration proceeding, instead of filing its own grievance under its labor contract with the Employer. This aspect of the dispute resolution system advances goals of efficiency and economy by consolidating what inevitably would have been two or more proceedings into a single undertaking. By designing their dispute resolution system in this way, the parties also reduce the risk of conflicting arbitration awards. Should conflicting awards be issued, it no doubt would prompt protracted litigation between the parties.

Advancing efficiency and economy by consolidating arbitration proceedings is a value mirrored in American case law. Even though the concept of intervention is a relatively recent development in the law and is vested in the civil law of Louisiana, strong policy reasons for its adoption have led to its rapid growth. For example, the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit has recognized that "compelling all three parties to submit their grievance to the same arbitration is practicable, economical, convenient, and fair. It not only avoids the duplication of effort, but also avoids the possibility of conflicting awards." (See U.S. Postal Service v. American Postal Workers Union, 893 F.2d 1117, 1121 (9th Cir. 1990).) Other courts have concluded that benefits of consolidated hearings outweigh concerns about the inability of parties to agree on an arbitrator. (See, e.g., U.S. Postal Service v. National Rural Letter Carriers, 959 F.2d 283 (D.C. Cir. 1992).) As a general rule, the U.S. Supreme Court has elevated the goal of efficiency when addressing the issue of consolidated arbitration proceedings. (See, generally, Volt Information Sciences, Inc. v. Leland Stanford University, 489 U. S. 468 (1989).) Recognizing potential tension between the goal of promoting efficiency and violating a party's contractual right, it becomes the burden of the party objecting to the consolidation to demonstrate prejudice to a substantial right. Merely desiring to have one's dispute heard in a separate proceeding is not a sufficiently substantial right to prevent consolidation. If, on the other hand, one contract called for disputes to be resolved in litigation and another related contract called for disputes to be resolved in arbitration, it arguably would prejudice a substantial right of a party to construe the agreement as imposing an arbitral forum.. The parties impliedly intended their agreement to be construed in a way that struck an appropriate balance which gives respect to competing interests of the parties. As one scholar stated, "throughout the history of the intervention doctrine, the traditional raison d'etre of intervention of right--minimizing the injury to third parties caused by judicial processes--has conflicted with court concern about prejudice to existing parties and impairments of orderly judicial processes." (See 89 Yale L.J. 586, 591 (1980).) No prejudice to a substantial right has been shown in the dispute before this arbitrator.

In this case, substantial harm to the goals of efficiency and economy would result by denying an intervening union a right to refer a dispute to Step 4. First, denial of such a right would deter future interventions. A union that sought to intervene in a dispute in an effort to compel a national interpretation would be narrowly restricted in its ability if the APWU's construction of Article 15.5.A.9 was adopted as the correct one. Instead, the union that desired to intervene would be required to file its own grievance under a similar collective bargaining agreement or might initiate a judicial proceeding against the Employer. Absent resolution of the interpretive issue, repeated arbitration proceedings, with potentially inconsistent results, likely would be the consequence. Such a conclusion would cause the parties to waste valuable resources. To avoid such waste some courts have permitted intervention. (See Matter of Arbitration between Office and Professional Employees, 1998 WL 226160 (S.D.N.Y., May 5, 1998); See also Emergy Airfreight Corp., 1998 WL 720180 (E.D.N.Y., October 8, 1998).)

Another important reason supports a conclusion that the parties intended to permit an intervening union to refer a dispute to Step 4. It is reasonable to expect that parties will qualify contractual language which is not in accord with their expectations, and the absence of unambiguous qualifying language in this case suggests the Employer and the APWU recognized that it would clutter the landscape of risk if such qualifying language were added to the agreement. The risk would be that such language would have created a climate of greater uncertainty and would have risked driving various collective bargaining units with whom the Employer dealt further apart. When the parties made promises to each other in their collective bargaining agreement, it is reasonable to assume their expectation was that they were designing a system which would work; and both parties committed themselves to making the system work economically and efficiently. To apply the APWU's construction of the agreement in this case would deprive the parties of some of the essential value of making the grievance-arbitration system serve its purpose, namely, to make the relationship with the Employer work more efficiently.

Although rights of clerks and letter carriers are no longer determined jointly, both unions retain a common past; and their futures are inextricably enmeshed. By retaining similar collective bargaining agreements, the APWU and the NALC remain tightly connected not only by the common mission of the Employer but also by a plethora of arbitration awards that have given their agreements a shared meaning. Creating two separate galaxies of unrelated, independent arbitration proceedings involving closely similar issues would pose a threat to each galaxy and undermine the overall efficiency of the Employer with its work force.

At a minimum, the APWU's proposed design for the dispute resolution system would undermine an incentive for cooperation between the APWU and the NALC. Such a design would further tax resources of the Employer and would impede its ability to resolve conflicts within its overall work force. A common tradition has the potential of bringing the parties closer together and making it easier for the Employer to streamline workplace processes. Building an impregnable firewall between segments of the work force inevitably will increase tensions between the parties and require more resources to protect similar, but separate interests. It advances the interests of all parties for their galaxies not to diverge irrevocably. Allowing an intervening union a right to turn an area-level arbitration into a national-level one advances the goal of cooperation between the parties by requiring collective bargaining representatives and the Employer to remain in constant communication with each other and by compelling the interpretation of similar agreements in one setting.

Believing that this entire line of argument burns itself out like a supernova, the APWU argued that greater, not less, efficiency would be promoted by denying an intervening union the right of referral. According to the APWU, giving a third party a right to refer a matter to Step 4 would waste resources by creating procedural uncertainty in the grievance process. As the APWU saw it, such uncertainty was highlighted by the Monroe arbitration. (See APWU's Exhibit O.) In the Monroe case, the NALC intervened in an area-level arbitration between the APWU and the Employer. The dispute was sent to Step 4 where, without allowing the NALC to participate in the Step 4 proceeding, the original parties to the dispute issued a resolution to the effect that there was no interpretive issue and referred the matter back to area-level arbitration. On remand, the arbitrator concluded that:

> Either (1) this matter has not been properly remanded to regional level arbitration because the Intervenor NALC was not a party to the Step 4 resolution; or (2) if the remand is proper, the Intervenor has the same rights now as before under Article 15 to intervene and again, as before, to refer the matter to Step 4. (See Case No. G90C-4G-C 92040749 (1994), pp. 4-5.)

The APWU concluded that such a result from the arbitrator demonstrated the procedural limbo that disputes will undergo as the parties try to define rights of the intervenor after the matter has been referred to Step 4.

First, the APWU's concern can be addressed by clarifying the procedural posture of the case after it has been remanded. Although this decision does not define those rights, it is reasonable to believe that future awards would allow the interventor, who had referred the matter to Step 4, to participate in those negotiations. Participation in the Step 4 proceedings, as contemplated by the arbitrator in the Monroe decision, would minimize procedural uncertainty by allowing all parties to participate in determining how the dispute should proceed. Striking the appropriate balance in that part of the process must await another day and another arbitrator.

Moreover, even if increased time and resources were expended as disputes bounce back and forth between Step 4 and area-level arbitration, the loss would be minor compared to the loss associated with a decrease in tripartite grievance arbitration. To a certain extent, any loss associated with procedural uncertainty ought to be mitigated by the parties' own good judgment and economic incentive to minimize resources spent on allowing a dispute to bounce around needlessly in a procedural limbo. In short, economic and efficiency concerns should drive the parties toward a mutual resolution of any procedural uncertainty, as the ultimate disposition of the case in Monroe, Louisiana demonstrated. If the parties, however, are regularly required to initiate two grievances in order to address disputes that arise from a single set of circumstances, the waste of resources cannot be similarly mitigated. Irrevocably trapped in separate proceedings, the parties would be unable, or at least have less incentive, to resolve the dispute in a three-party setting. The result would be a proliferation of arbitration proceedings, potentially conflicting interpretations of similar language in contracts with the same Employer, and a deleterious impact on the ability of the Employer to plan and to manage its workforce. A shared expectation of the parties was that their agreement would advance the Employer's efficient management of the workforce, and that expectation supports a conclusion that the parties to the agreement intended an intervening union to enjoy the right to withdraw a dispute from area-level arbitration and to submit it to Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the National Association of Letter Carriers, when it has intervened in an area-level arbitration case, has the right to refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. It is so ordered and awarded.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On October 22, 1998, I met with your representative, Richard Collins, to discuss the above-referenced grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedures.

The issue in these grievances is whether the union appealed the grievances to Step 3 in a timely manner.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is presented in these cases.

The case file indicates that these cases were appealed to Step 4 from regional arbitration. Accordingly, in compliance with the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures, we agreed that they will be returned directly to regional arbitration to be heard before the same arbitrator who was scheduled to hear the cases at the time of the referral to Step 4. Additionally, if the hearing had opened, the case will be returned to the same stage of arbitration.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases.

Time limits at Step 4 were extended by mutual consent.

Sincerely,

Subject: Withdrawal from Regional Arbitration

Statement of the Issue: Whether the instant grievance presently belongs in regional arbitration as the APWU asserts or in Step 4 of the grievance procedure as the Postal Service asserts?

Contract Provisions Involved: Article XV, Sections 2, 3 and 4 of the July 21, 1978 National Agreement.

Grievance Data:

Briefs Submitted:	Nov. 29, 1982 and January 3, 1983

Statement of the Award: The instant grievance belongs in Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

BACKGROUND

This case involves a dispute as to where the instant grievance belongs in the grievance and arbitration procedure. The APWU says that it belongs in regional arbitration and that the Postal Service did not properly remove it from regional arbitration to Step 4. The Postal Service disagrees. It urges that it referred the grievance to Step 4 in accordance with the procedure set forth in Article XV, Section 4B(5) of the National Agreement. It believes there is no sound basis, at this time, for returning this matter to regional arbitration.

The grievance was filed on December 3, 1979, on behalf of two part-time flexible employees in Duluth, Minnesota. These employees had been scheduled in advance to work a certain day but were then told not to report. They did not report. They claimed, however, that they were entitled to be paid "for four hours guarantee as if they had worked." The Postal Service denied the grievance at the various steps of the grievance procedure. Its Step 3 answer added:

> "In our judgment, the grievance does not involve any interpretive issue(s) pertaining to the National Agreement or any supplement thereto which may be of general application. Unless the union believes otherwise, the case may be appealed directly to regional arbitration..."

The APWU agreed with this Management view and appealed the case to regional arbitration.

A hearing was held before Arbitrator Gerald Cohen on January 19, 1981. The Postal Service representative, J. K. Hellquist, apparently was surprised by the argument made by the APWU. He concluded during the hearing that the grievance seemed to raise an interpretive issue under the National Agreement. He told Arbitrator Cohen and the APWU that he would, after the hearing but prior to the filing of post-hearing briefs, determine whether he wished to refer the case to Step 4 in accordance with Article XV, Section 4B(5). That provision reads:

> "If either party concludes that a case referred to Regional Arbitration involves an interpretative issue under the National Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, that party may withdraw the case from arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure."

Hellquist wrote to Arbitrator Cohen and the APWU on February 13, 1981. His letter stated in part:

> "After lengthy discussions with the Union in the person of Mr. Williams, APWU Regional Coordinator, Mr. Williams has indicated to me that it was the decision at the national level of the [APWU]...that employees who are advised to not come in to work under similar circumstances constitutes an obligation on the part of the employer for call-in pay. In view of the fact that the Union insists that this is a national interpretation of the call-in pay provision, which is allegedly supported by Arbitrator Garrett's National Award on this subject, the employer considers this to be a national issue that should be handled at Step 4 of the grievance procedure.
> "The arbitrator should issue no opinion and award on this matter until there has been a determination at Step 4 as to whether or not this is a national interpretive issue. If it is decided that this is a national interpretive issue, the arbitrator's jurisdiction over this matter is revoked by virtue of the contract language. If the Postal Service decides at Step 4 that this is not a national interpretive issue, the arbitrator will be advised as to whether or not the parties wish to have it decided." (Emphasis added)

The APWU replied on February 20, 1981. It urged that the Hellquist letter did not comply with Article XV, Section 4B(5) because although there'd been a "referral" to Step 4, there'd been no "withdrawal" from regional arbitration. Its letter explained its position in these words:

> "...Mr. Hellquist's request does not conform to the agreement and, therefore, you [Arbitrator Cohen] do not have the authority to honor that request.
> "The parties have a further opportunity under Article XV, Section 4B(5) to reassess their positions and determine whether one party or the other wishes to withdraw from arbitration at the regional level and refer the case to Step 4. The contract is clear. The party which determines the case involves an interpretive issue must withdraw and refer. The language does not permit a referral without the withdrawal as Mr. Hellquist seems to be requesting. In his letter, ...he states: 'The employer considers this to be a national issue that should be handled at Step 4 of the grievance procedure.' If that is true, he should withdraw the case and refer it to Step 4. However, in the [next]...paragraph, he requests that you not issue a decision until a determination has been made at Step 4 as to whether or not this is a national interpretive issue. He goes on to state that if the Postal Service at Step 4 decides unilaterally that the issue is not a national interpretive issue, you (Arbitrator Cohen) will be advised as to whether or not to decide the case.

"Mr. Hellquist cannot have both a Step 4 grievance and a case certified for arbitration all within the same case. He must decide, as he assured us at the hearing he would, prior to the date set for filing briefs.

"In light of all of the above, I must assume, in the absence of a specific withdrawal from arbitration by the Employer, that you retain authority to decide this case within the time frame mutually agreed to at the hearing..."

The APWU filed its post-hearing brief on February 24, 1981. It urged Arbitrator Cohen to "decide this case in accordance with the mutual agreement made at the hearing." The arbitrator initially accepted the APWU's view of Hellquist's February 13, 1981 letter. He advised the parties on March 2, 1981 that "the matter has not been formally appealed to Step 4" by the Postal Service and that he therefore would "pursue my duties as the Arbitrator..." Hellquist did not file a post-hearing brief. Instead, he promptly advised the arbitrator and the APWU on March 5, 1981 that "my prior letter indicates that the matter has been referred to Step 4." The arbitrator, relying on this last statement from Hellquist, notified the parties on March 16, 1981 that "I will take no further action in the matter, as my jurisdiction and authority ceases immediately upon reference to Step 4."

The APWU protested. But Arbitrator Cohen stood by his ruling. It is not clear whether there has actually been a Step 4 meeting on this grievance after March 16, 1981. The APWU took the position that the Postal Service had not properly removed this grievance from regional arbitration and that the merits of the grievance should be returned to Arbitrator Cohen for a decision. It brought this procedural issue to national arbitration.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The applicable contract principle is found in Article XV, Section 4B(5). Where either party determines that a case involves a national interpretive issue, it "may withdraw the case from [regional] arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure." The question here is whether the Postal Service properly invoked this right in the instant case. The Postal Service says it did; the APWU says it did not.

The evidence plainly supports the Postal Service's position. The regional arbitration was held on January 19, 1981. During the course of the hearing, the Postal Service spokesman (Hellquist) stated that he would advise the arbitrator and the APWU, prior to the filing of post-hearing briefs, whether he wished to refer this grievance to Step 4 pursuant to Article XV, Section 4B(5). Some twelve or thirteen days before the briefs were due, Hellquist wrote to the arbitrator and the APWU. He stated that "the employer considers this to be a national issue that should be handled at Step 4 of the grievance procedure." His intentions could not have been clearer. He was invoking Article XV, Section 4B(5) and "refer[ring] the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure."

The APWU asserts that Article XV, Section 4B(5) requires two separate and distinct actions: "withdraw[ing] the case from [regional] arbitration" and "refer[ring] the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure." It concedes that the necessary referral took place[1] but it insists that no withdrawal occurred. This argument, however, is unrealistic. It enshrines form at the expense of substance.

1 This concession is obvious from the APWU's February 20, 1981 letter quoted at length earlier in this opinion.

The act of referring the case to Step 4 necessarily included withdrawing the case from regional arbitration. The Postal Service did not have to utter the precise words of Article XV, Section 4B(5) to trigger the application of this provision. It simply had to express its intention to invoke this provision, its intention to move the dispute from regional arbitration to Step 4. It did so.[2]

Hellquist's letter stated too that Arbitrator Cohen "should issue no opinion...until there has been a determination at Step 4 as to whether or not this is a national interpretive issue." He then added that if a national issue is involved "the arbitrator's jurisdiction over the matter is revoked..." but that if a national issue is not involved "the arbitrator will be advised as to whether or not the parties wish to have it decided." The APWU, in its correspondence with Arbitrator Cohen[3], viewed Hellquist's words as evidence that the Postal Service was not withdrawing the case from regional arbitration. I cannot agree. This portion of the Hellquist letter was merely a statement of opinion as to what might be decided in Step 4 and how any such decision would affect Arbitrator Cohen's authority to rule on the merits of the dispute. Nothing he said here has any significance for purposes of this dispute. For he had already stated in clear and unequivocal language that the Postal Service was moving the case to Step 4 and hence necessarily removing the case from regional arbitration.

The Postal Service did not waive its right to refer the case to Step 4. It told Arbitrator Cohen and the APWU in the regional arbitration hearing that it would advise them, prior to the filing of post-hearing briefs, whether it wished to invoke Article XV, Section 4B(5). It decided to invoke this provision and gave notice of its decision in Hellquist's February 13, 1981 letter. This was almost two weeks before the brief ffling date. The case was properly referred to Step 4.

2 Arbitrator Cohen's initial ruling that Hellquist's February 13, 1981 letter did not properly invoke Article XV, Section 4B(5) is certainly not binding on this national arbitrator. That ruling was, in my opinion, wrong.

3 The APWU did not really pursue this point in its post-hearing brief at this national arbitration.

The Postal Service also requests in this national arbitration that the grievance be denied on its merits. However, only the procedural problem under Article XV, Section 4B(5) was explored at the national arbitration hearing. I do not have sufficient evidence or argument for a ruling on the merits. In any event, the case properly belongs in Step 4 for further discussion and disposition.

AWARD

The instant grievance belongs in Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

APPEARANCES: D. James Shipman for the Postal Service; O'Donnell, Schwartz & Anderson, by Susan L. Catler, Esq.

DECISION

This grievance arose under and is governed by the 1981-1984 National Agreement (JX-1) between the above-named parties. The undersigned having been jointly selected by the parties to serve as sole arbitrator, a hearing was held on 13 January 1984, in Washington, D. C. Both parties appeared and presented evidence and argument. The arbitrator finds the issues to be as follows:

1. Does Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the National Agreement preclude either party from ordering a verbatim transcript of a regular arbitration hearing at the regional level without the consent of the other?

2. Did the Postal Service violate Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the 1981-1984 National Agreement by ordering a verbatim transcript of all regular arbitration hearings at the regional level before one particular arbitrator?

3. If the answer to Issue #1 or Issue #2, or both of them, is in the affirmative, what is the appropriate remedy?

A verbatim transcript was made of the arbitration proceeding. Each side filed a post-hearing brief.

On the basis of the entire record, the arbitrator makes the following

AWARD

1. Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the 1981-1984 National Agreement does not preclude either party from ordering a verbatim transcript of a regular arbitration hearing at the regional level without the consent of the other, so long as reasonable advance notice is provided.

2. The Postal Service did not violate Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the 1981-1984 National Agreement by ordering a verbatim transcript of all regular arbitration hearings at the regional level before one particular arbitrator.

3. The grievance is denied.

OPINION

Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the 1981-1984 National Agreement (JX-1) provides in pertinent part:

> Normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration, except either party at the National level may request a transcript, and either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief.

Article 15, Section 4.A(7) provides in pertinent part: "All arbitrators on the Regular Regional Panels . . . shall serve for the term of this Agreement and shall continue to serve for six (6) months thereafter, unless the parties otherwise mutually agree."

Some time in April, 1982, the Postal Service notified the Union that transcripts would be made of regular arbitrations at the regional level before a particular arbitrator. (In January, 1982, the Postal Service had passed up its opportunity to remove this arbitrator from the Regional Panel.) Thereafter, transcripts were routinely requested by the national office of the Postal Service in all regular regional arbitrations conducted by that arbitrator. The reason subsequently given by the Postal Service at the arbitration hearing for following this procedure was that its representatives had observed that the arbitrator had "some difficulty . . . [in keeping] the facts straight and we believe that particular Arbitrator may need some assistance in that for our own interest, to protect our own interest." (Tr. 16)

On 26 April 1982, William Burrus, the Union's General Executive Vice President, wrote a letter (UX-1) to Joseph F. Morris, Senior Assistant Postmaster General, Employee and Labor Relations Group, stating in part:

> The . . . Union maintains that demand for transcripts in all Hearings before a specific arbitrator is violative of the National Agreement.
> Article 15, Section 4.B(7) states in part "normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings."

In a letter dated 4 February 1983 (JX-2) to James C. Gildea, Assistant Postmaster General, Labor Relations Department, Union President Moe Biller submitted a "dispute over the interpretation of Article 15, Section 4, B(7) as prohibiting USPS policy of demanding transcripts in all cases heard before" the arbitrator in question. His letter also stated in part:

> The union interprets the language of exception ". . . except either party at the National level may request a transcript." as requiring the party who desires a transcript to make such request from the other party.
> The union further interprets the application of "normally" as restricting the right of either party to demand transcripts in all cases heard before a particular arbitrator.

On 22 February 1983, William E. Henry, Jr., Director, Office of Grievance and Arbitration, wrote a letter to Burrus (JX-2), stating the position of the Postal Service on the Union's grievance, as follows:

> It is the position of the Postal Service that the language in dispute reserves to each party individually the right to have a regular regional arbitration hearing recorded and transcribed when the need arises, without seeking the concurrence of the other party; and that this same right is reserved for the submission of post-hearing briefs on the same basis. This position anticipates that appropriate reasonable notice be given the other party in each such instance.

On 9 March 1983, the Union formally appealed the dispute to arbitration. (JX-2)

Concerning the practice followed before the arbitrator in question during the period between April, 1983, and January, 1984, a representative of the Postal Service, D. James Shipman, advised that the Postal Service initially had advised the Union by telephone of its intention to order a transcript of the hearing, but later had acceded to the Union's demand that the request be in writing. Shipman also provided the following additional information (Tr. 62-63):

> When we have made a request or a notification . . . to the National Union concerning [this particular arbitrator], we've never received back a written response or anything saying, "We do not agree to this," or, "We object to it." There have been instances wherein advocates who agree to a level arbitration hearing have, in fact, asserted objections at the hearing.
> [The arbitrator in question] has basically taken a look at the particular cases and in some cases he found that, irrespective of whether it was he or any other Arbitrator, there was a basis for taking a transcript and permitted the taking of a transcript.
>
> . . . In one case . . . [he] reserved a ruling on whether or not to take a transcript and he wrote an opinion and award which . . . addressed the question of whether a transcript ought to be taken and he took it upon himself to interpret this language as requiring some agreement by the parties et cetra. However, he did allow the transcript in that particular case and then said "This is how I'm going to rule in future cases."
>
> In one other case . . . [he] declined to allow the Court Reporter to take a transcript for the purpose of making a record of the proceeding and in that particular matter it ultimately eventuated that the Court Reporter remain[ed] simply for the purpose of making notes for the Postal Service and this was strictly a Postal Service record. A copy was not provided to the Arbitrator.
> In another case, the Union objected to the presence of a Court Reporter and it was pointed out to [the arbitrator] that a request had, in fact, been made in that case at the National level and notification by the Postal Service to the Union. The Union, at the National level, had never asserted any objection to the presence of a Court Reporter and the Union . . . at the Regional > level hearing, could not then assert an objection to the standard procedure. In that case he permitted the presence of the Court Reporter and did receive a copy of that and rendered an opinion and award concerning the matter . . . .

Phillip Tabbita, a Union representative, added the following to Shipman's account (Tr. 64):

> . . . [I]n quite a number of cases that . . . [this particular arbitrator] has had, the objections have been raised and . . . [he] has acted quite vigorously to avoid a ruling on that, feeling that . . . the transcripts were directed at him but he would prefer not to be the person who decides whether or not the transcript will be taken and a number of other advocates have failed to pursue their objections, based on his desire not to be the focal point in making the decision.

The Postal Service also called as a witness, Frederick W. Frost, Jr., formerly General Manager, Arbitration Division and currently General Manager, Labor Contract Administration, who testified, over the Union's objections, concerning the background of negotiations over Article 15, Section 4.B(7) prior to its introduction into the 1978-1981 National Agreement.(Ex-4) His testimony, in essence, was to the effect that he had refused to yield to Union proposals that transcripts could be ordered only by mutual agreement, and that the parties had ultimately agreed that > the National parties could make a determination in the sense that if I wanted a transcript on the National basis, I would call Frosty [Forrest M. Newman, APWU Director of Industrial Relations] or call [Frank] Conners [Vice President of the NALC] and tell them, "I'm going to get a transcript in this case" (Tr. 44).

The Postal Service also introduced a letter dated 26 May 1983 (EX-6) to Sherry S. Barber, General Manager, Arbitration Division, from John P. Richards, APWU Industrial Relations Director, reading as follows:

> Pursuant to Article 15, 4B(7), the . . . Union will have a court reporter for: [specify the date, arbitrator, location, grievance number, and grievant]. . . .
> P.S. Frank Dyer of the USPS was informed by phone this date.

It also appears that the determination whether to file a post-hearing brief in any given regular regional arbitration case has been made unilaterally by each party, without requesting the consent of the other.

II

Union counsel objected to the admission of Frost's unrebutted testimony at the arbitration hearing on two grounds: first, because the language of Article 15, Section 4.B(7) is "clear," and second, because "bargaining history was not mentioned in the Step 4 decision, where it should have been mentioned, if they're going to rely on it." (Tr. 23(a)) I do not find either objection persuasive.

To characterize the language of Article 15, Section 4.B(7) as "clear" strains credulity; the provision is studded with ambiguities, as the competing arguments of the parties prove only too well. Specifically, they cannot agree on the meaning of "Normally" or of "request." Nor do I believe that the Union has been prejudiced because the Postal Service introduced testimony about bargaining history for the first time at the arbitration hearing. Of course, it would have been better practice for the Postal Service to have indicated its partial reliance on bargaining history in the grievance procedure, but the Union can hardly claim to have been surprised by Frost's testimony at the arbitration hearing. Whenever the meaning of contract language is in dispute, the parties are automatically on notice that the relevant bargaining history may come up in an arbitration hearing. In any case, I think this particular dispute can be resolved primarily on the basis of a common-sense interpretation of the disputed provision.

Construed in context, the word "Normally" means, in my judgment, "usually," rather than "in all but abnormal cases." I reject the latter interpretation because there is no indication in the National Agreement itself or in the bargaining history that the parties ever had a common understanding of what constitutes an "abnormal" case, and also because the former interpretation seems to conform better with past practice.

It also seems clear that the word "request" does not mean what it normally does in a different context; rather, in this provision it means "notify." That this interpretation takes a certain liberty with the contract language is true; but it also adopts a construction that conforms with that adopted by the parties themselves. Thus, as previously noted, when the Union decided it wanted a transcript in a regular case at the regional level, it advised the Postal Service that it would "have" a court reporter, and added that a Postal Service representative had been "informed" of its decision by telephone. That is not a request; it is a notification. Frost's testimony of Postal Service practice was to the same effect. Finally, according to statements by both Postal Service and Union representatives, even the particular arbitrator in question was uncertain how to handle the issue of a transcript ordered by the Postal Service, deciding on some occasions to allow it, on others to refuse to use it, and on still others, quite understandably, to avoid ruling on the question.

I therefore conclude that Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the National Agreement does not preclude either party from ordering a verbatim transcript of a regular arbitration hearing at the regional level without the consent of the other, so long as reasonable advance notice is provided, and that in the circumstances of this case the Postal Service did not violate the National Agreement by regularly ordering transcripts in cases heard by one particular arbitrator.

This determination is not intended, of course, as an endorsement of the Postal Service's policy, the consequences of which are to cause great embarrassment to the arbitrator in question and to create doubts in the Union's mind about the Postal Service's good faith. Nevertheless, there is no indication that the number of cases heard by that arbitrator constituted so unusually high a percentage of regular cases in that region as to offend against the principle that neither party will usually (i.e., "normally") order a transcript.

IN THE MATTER OF ARBITRATION BETWEEN AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION AND UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE (Case No. H4C-3W-C 8590) (Post-Hearing Briefs Grievance)	ANALYSIS AND AWARD Carlton J. Snow Arbitrator

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from July 21, 1987 through November 20, 1990. A hearing occurred on November 20, 1992 in a conference room of the USPS Headquarters Building located at 475 L'Enfante Plaza in Washington, D.C. Ms. Susan L. Catler of the O'Donnell, Schwartz, and Anderson law firm in Washington, D.C. represented the American Postal Workers Union. Mr. James K. Hellquist, Labor Relations Assistant, represented the United States Postal Service.

The hearing proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The hearing was transcribed by a reporter for Diversified Reporting Services, Inc. The arbitrator received a transcript of 88 pages. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties.

The parties agreed that the matter properly had been submitted to arbitration and that there were no issues of substantive or procedural arbitrability to be resolved. They submitted the matter on the basis of evidence presented at the hearing as well as arguments set forth in post-hearing briefs. The arbitrator officially closed the hearing on February 18, 1993 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

Does Article 15.4.B(7) which states that "either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief" provide each party with the procedural right to file a post-hearing brief after notifying the other party and the arbitrator of its intent to do so?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 15 - GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

15.4.A.6 - All decisions of an arbitrator will be final and binding. All decisions of arbitrators shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement, and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended, or modified by an arbitrator. Unless otherwise provided in this Article, all costs, fees, and expenses charged by an arbitrator will be shared equally by the parties.

15.4.B.7. Normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration, except either party at the National level may request a transcript, and either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief. However, each party may file a written statement setting forth its understanding of the facts and issues and its argument at the beginning of the hearing and also shall be given an adequate opportunity to present argument at the conclusion of the hearing.

15.4.C.3. The hearing shall be conducted in accordance with the following:

a. the hearing shall be informal;
b. no briefs shall be filed or transcripts made;

. . . .

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, there has been a disagreement about the correct interpretation of contractual language in Article 15.4.B(7) of the parties' National Agreement. At the conclusion of an earlier rights arbitration hearing before another arbitrator, the Employer informed the Union of its intention to file post-hearing briefs. The Union objected to filing post-hearing briefs in that case on the basis of efficiency. The parties were unable to resolve their disagreement, and they ultimately submitted the matter to the arbitrator for resolution. The arbitrator in the earlier case determined that post-hearing briefs were unnecessary and ruled that the Employer could not file a post-hearing brief in the matter. The Employer appealed that decision to Step 4 of the grievance procedure for resolution of the issue with regard to whether the parties have a contractual right to file post-hearing briefs in regular regional arbitration cases after notifying the other party and the arbitrator of an intent to do so. Being unable to resolve their differences, the matter proceeded to arbitration at the national level.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The Union

It is the position of the Union that language in Article 15.4.B(7) is clear and unambiguous, and the Union maintains that the plain meaning of the language should be adopted. According to the Union, the plain meaning means that a party may request permission from the arbitrator to file a post-hearing brief, but the arbitrator has authority to deny the request. That is the plain meaning of "either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief," and the Union believes it should be implemented.

The Union contends that the plain meaning of the language is supported by the context in which the parties placed it. According to the Union, the sentence immediately following the language at issue demonstrates that the parties were capable of drafting language which provided for a unilateral, procedural right of a party. The sentence immediately follow ing states:

> However, each party may file a written statement setting forth its understanding of the facts and issues and its argument at the beginning of the hearing and also shall be given an adequate opportunity to present arguments at the conclusion of the hearing. (See, Joint Exhibit 1, pp. 67-68, emphasis added, and Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 6).

According to the Union, interpreting the phrase "may request" in the disputed language to give the parties an absolute right to file a post-hearing brief, in effect, would interpret the phrase "may request" completely out of Article 15.4.B(7).

It is also the belief of the Union that bargaining history supports its interpretation of the disputed language. First, the Union argues that an earlier award by Arbitrator Aaron did not dispose of the issue before this arbitrator. According to the Union, the Aaron award merely determined that the parties had a right to request a verbatim transcript in regular regional arbitration proceedings without the consent of the other party. It is the contention of the Union that, in the case before this arbitrator, it is not saying both parties must consent to the filing of post-hearing briefs. Rather, the Union is arguing that the arbitrator has the authority to deny a party's request to file a post-hearing brief.

The Union also believes that bargaining history shows impartial Chairperson Sylvester Garrett urging the parties to adopt language that would prohibit the parties from filing post-hearing briefs in regular arbitration hearings unless the arbitrator requested briefs. The Union believes that the parties' rejection of that position does not support the Employer's interpretation of contractual language but, instead, demonstrates the parties adopted language which provides that a party may request leave to file a post-hearing brief, but the arbitrator retains authority to deny that request.

Additionally, the Union contends that the testimony of witnesses at the arbitration hearing failed to support the Employer's interpretation of the disputed language. It is the belief of the Union testimony from witnesses merely illustrated that, in most cases, the parties are able to reach agreement on whether to file post-hearing briefs and that, therefore, the issue normally was not submitted to an arbitrator for resolution. According to the Union, the Employer presented no evidence of any arbitrator having ruled that regional arbitrators lack authority to preclude post-hearing briefs.

The Union contends the general rule, supported by reference to U.S. Supreme Court case law, is that arbitrators determine procedural rules to be followed by parties at arbitration hearings. That is, "when the subject matter of a dispute is arbitrable, 'procedural' questions which grow out of the dispute and bear on its final disposition are to be left to the arbitrator." (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, 3, quoting United States Paperworkers International Union v. Misco, Inc., 484 U.S. 29, 40 (1987)). It is the position of the Union that the contractual language at issue in this case does not withdraw from arbitrators their well-recognized authority to determine procedural rules but, rather, codifies their authority by requiring a party to "request" permission from the arbitrator before filing a post-hearing brief.

B. The Employer

It is the position of the Employer that Article 15.4.B(7) grants both parties a right to submit a post-hearing brief in any regular regional arbitration case without the consent of the other party or permission from the arbitrator, after proper notification to the other party and the arbitrator. The Employer maintains that a 1985 national level arbitration award issued by Arbitrator Aaron is dispositive in the case. Arbitrator Aaron interpreted similar language in Article 15.4.B(7) with respect to the contractual right to request a transcript at regular regional arbitration hearings, and he concluded that the language granted a procedural right to each party to have the hearing transcribed, provided appropriate notice had been given to the other party.

It is the position of the Employer that this arbitrator is precluded from interpreting the language of Article 15.4.B(7) with respect to filing post-hearing briefs in any way that is contrary to the Aaron award. As the Employer sees it, "what the Union would like this arbitrator to do in this case is to rule that the words 'may request' mean something different than the words 'may request' mean eight words further on down the sentence. Arbitrator Aaron's ruling in that case disposed of the issue as to what 'may request' means for Article 15.4.B(7) in both instances of filing, as well as having transcripts in an arbitration proceeding." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, 4).

The Employer maintains that, even if Arbitrator Aaron's award is not dispositive of the issue before this arbitrator, the bargaining history of the parties as well as their past practice under the disputed provision supports management's interpretation of Article 15.4.B(7). The Employer contends the testimony of its witnesses established that, in regular regional arbitration cases, the Employer always has submitted post-hearing briefs whenever it determined briefs to be necessary, after notification to the other party. This allegedly has been done without first requesting permission from the arbitrator to do so. According to the Employer, the fact that the language in Article 15.4.B(7) has remained the same throughout the 1984-87 as well as the 1987-90 collective bargaining agreements means that the Aaron award interpreting the language now has been incorporated by the parties into the National Agreement. It is the position of the Employer that the bargaining history between the parties shows the Union proposed that Article 15.4.B(7) be read to mean both parties must consent to filing post-hearing briefs unless the arbitrator requested them, but the Employer rejected the Union's proposal. It is the contention of the Employer that the Union now is attempting to achieve through arbitration what it failed to obtain at the bargaining table.

VI. ANALYSIS

A. The Plain Meaning Rule of Interpretation

The dispute in this case involves an interpretation of Article 15.4.B(7) of the parties' National Agreement. It states:

> Normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration, except either party at the National level may request a transcript, and either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief. However, each party may file a written statement setting forth its understanding of the facts and issues and its argument at the beginning of the hearing and also shall be given an adequate opportunity to present argument at the conclusion of the hearing. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, pp. 66-67, emphasis added).

A fundamental objective of interpreting contracts is to give effect to the intent of the parties, and the Union has argued that this goal is best achieved here by applying the plain meaning rule of contract interpretation. In other words, the Union has argued that the phrase "may request" should be interpreted according to the ordinary meaning of those words. The ordinary meaning of "request" is "to ask for something or for permission or authority to do, see, hear, etc., something; to solicit; and is synonymous with beg, entreat and beseech." (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, 6).

During the last four decades in the United States, there has been a shift in judicial and scholarly attitudes toward the plain meaning rule. The eminent contract scholar, Samuel Williston, as well as the first Restatement of Contracts took the position that, in an effort to understand the meaning of language, it was appropriate to consider prior negotiations only if the language of the parties' contract was unclear and ambiguous. As Section 230 of the first Restatement stated, "Oral statements by the parties of what they intended the written language to mean are excluded, though those statements might show the parties gave their words a meaning that would not otherwise be apparent." Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, a proponent of the viewpoint set forth in the first Restatement, once stated that he would be willing to look outside a contract for extrinsic evidence to prove that "'ten dollars' meant in Canadian dollars, but it [the extrinsic evidence] would not be allowed to show the parties meant twenty dollars." (See, Mellon Bank, 619 F.2d 1001 (3rd Cir. 1980)). This approach to contract interpretation would look beyond the four corners of the document only when the contract is ambiguous on its face.

The Restatement (Second) of Contracts, however, has moved away from the restrictive plain meaning rule championed by Williston. Section 202(1) of Restatement (Second) of Contracts states:

> Words and other conduct are interpreted in the light of all the circumstances, and if the principal purpose of the parties is ascertainable, it is given great weight. (See, p. 86 (1981), emphasis added.)

It is not necessary to prove an ambiguity in the contractual language of the parties before evaluating the totality of circumstances that created the language. The language of the parties is understood only in context. As the Restatement

(Second) of Contracts has instructed:

> It is sometimes said that extrinsic evidence cannot change the plain meaning of a writing, but meaning can almost never be plain except in a context. Accordingly, the rule stated in Subsection (1) (interpretation of an integrated agreement) is not limited to cases where it is determined that the language used is ambiguous. Any determination of meaning or ambiguity should only be made in the light of the relevant evidence of the situation and relations of the parties, the subject matter of the transaction, preliminary negotiations and statements made therein, usage of trade, and the course of dealing between the parties. (See, p. 126 (1981)).

The parties' collective bargaining agreement is the most important codification of their contractual intent, but modern contract theory permits reference to the negotiation history of the parties in an effort to show the meaning of language in their agreement.)See, "The Plain Meaning Rule in Labor Arbitration," LV Fordham Law Review 681 (1987).

B. Bargaining History

The Employer submitted a number of exhibits from contract negotiations for the 1984-87 collective bargaining agreement. One such exhibit consisted of final minutes for the 1978 negotiations. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9). During those negotiation meetings, the parties extensively discussed the subject of post-hearing briefs in regular regional arbitration cases. In 1978, the Employer proposed the following language for Article 15.4.B(7):

> Normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration, except either party at the National level may request a transcript, and either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief. However, each party may file a written statement setting forth its understanding of the facts and issues and its argument at the beginning of the hearing and also shall be given an adequate opportunity to present argument at the conclusion of the hearing. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 8, pp. 16-17).

In response to the Employer's suggestion with regard to post-hearing briefs, the Union in 1978 submitted the following counter proposal:

> ~~Normally,~~ there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration, unless otherwise mutually agreed ~~except either party at the National level may request a transcript, and either party at the hearing may request to file a post-hearing brief.~~ However, each party may file a written statement setting forth its understanding of the facts and issues and its argument at the beginning of the hearing and also shall be given an adequate opportunity to present argument at the conclusion of the hearing. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9, pp. 18-19).

The Union's proposal called for bracketed words to be deleted and underlined words to be added to the proposal.

Mr. James Conway, Chief Spokesperson for the Employer in 1978, refused to accept the Union's counter proposal. He critiqued the Union's proposal by observing that "you,[the Union] are asking us to give up an independent judgment" regarding whether to file a post-hearing brief in a particular case. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9, p. 23). Mr. Conway offered the following explanation for the Employer's position with regard to filing post-hearing briefs. He stated:

> We feel the language as proposed on Page 18, Item (7) is logical and think either party should have the option of requesting a transcript or post-hearing brief with control at the National level, so that there are no abuses by either parties. We see no reason to surrender the right of the Employer to have that option. We are saying that normally there will be none, but we are opening up the option of either party to request it, and therefore, we are not proposing to change our position in that respect. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9, p. 21, emphasis added).

The parties stipulated before this arbitrator that the disputed contractual language has not changed since the 1984-87 collective bargaining agreement and that the parties adopted the Employer's proposal.

C. Meaning of the Bargaining History

Bargaining history submitted to the arbitrator strongly supports the Employer's position that the parties' retained the right to file post-hearing briefs on request at regular regional arbitration hearings. Although the parties may have used the phrase "may request," there is clear and convincing evidence that the Employer informed the Union at the bargaining table of its understanding that the language meant either party may file a post-hearing brief as a matter of right, after properly notifying the other party of an intent to do so and without the arbitrator's permission. The law is no stranger to words in a contract having a meaning different from that set forth in the dictionary. (See, e.g., Allied

Steel and Conveyors, Inc., 277 F.2d 907 (1960),(where the court interpreted "should" to mean "may.")

In the parties' agreement, there has been no express denial of a right to file a post-hearing brief. Juxtaposing the language in Article 15.4.B(7) with the language in Article 15.4.C(3), it is clear that the parties were capable of drafting language expressly prohibiting any filing of post-hearing briefs. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4, p. 67). If the parties had intended to prohibit post-hearing briefs unless permitted by the arbitrator, they were capable of doing so. As one court has observed:

> Where the bargain is the result of elaborate negotiations in which the parties are aided by counsel, in such circumstances it is easier to assume that a failure to make provision in the agreement resulted not from ignorance of the problem, but from agreement not to require it. (See, General Foods Corp., 365 F.2d 77, 79 (1966)).

D. The Impact of Past Practice

Restatement (Second) of Contracts has taught that it is appropriate to interpret words of an agreement in light of all the circumstances, and an important circumstance giving strong evidence of the meaning of the parties is found in the way they have implemented their bargain. As Section 202(4) of Restatement (Second) states:

> Where an agreement involves repeated occasions for performance by either party with knowledge of the nature of the performance and opportunity for objection to it by the other, any course of performance accepted or acquiesced in without objection is given great weight within the interpretation of the agreement. (See, p. 86 (1981)).

The Employer's interpretation of language in Article 15.4.B(7) conforms to the parties' practice under the provision. Mr. Martin Rothbaum, Labor Relations Program Analyst Principal for the Northeast Region, testified about the practice of the parties. He indicated that he personally has handled at least a thousand arbitration cases in the Northeast, Central, Eastern, and Southern Regions. He testified as follows with respect to the practice of filing post-hearing briefs at regular regional level arbitrations:

QUESTION: When you arbitrate cases in these locations, have you ever had an occasion to file a brief?

ANSWER: Yes sir.

QUESTION: Who made that decision to file a brief?

ANSWER: I did.

QUESTION: Was it made in conjunction with agreement with the Union?

ANSWER: No sir. Where we felt it was necessary to file a brief, I made that determination and told the arbitrator I intended to do so.

QUESTION: Did you consult with the arbitrator to ask permission if you could file a brief?

ANSWER: No sir. (See, Tr., 57).

A number of advocates report to Mr. Rothbaum, and later in his direct examination, he offered the following observation:

QUESTION: Could you reflect on what you know the practice to be from working with these other advocates and directing them in regards to the filing of post-hearing briefs?

ANSWER: Well, not only do we teach it, but we also engage, if there was ever a problem, to give direction, that we have the right to file a brief if we feel it necessary to do so, and the Union has the right to file a brief if they feel it necessary to do so. (See, Tr., 58).

Several other witnesses testified the same as did Mr. Rothbaum, including representatives from each of the regions.

Although the Union is accurate in its contention that none of the witnesses had ever submitted the issue of post-hearing briefs to an arbitrator for resolution, evidence submitted to the arbitrator was clear in showing that the parties did not believe an arbitrator's permission was necessary before filing a post-hearing brief, as long as the other party properly had been notified. The practice described in the evidence conforms to the Employer's interpretation of language in Article 15.4.B(7), and such evidence further supports a conclusion that the parties did not intend arbitral permission to be necessary in order to be able to file a post-hearing brief. It is clear from the evidence that the parties intended each party to retain a unilateral right to file a post-hearing brief in regular regional arbitration cases on proper notification without the other party's consent or an arbitrator's permission.

The Employer argued that Arbitrator Aaron's award is binding precedent on this arbitrator and established that the parties intended the phrase "may request" in Article 15.4.B(7) to mean that each party would have a right to a verbatim transcript as well as a right to file a post-hearing brief in regular regional arbitration cases on proper notification to the other party. Arbitrator Aaron interpreted the phrase "may request" in the context of Article 15.4.B to mean "notification." He observed:

> It also seems clear that the word "request" does not mean what it normally does in a different context; rather, in this provision [Article 15.4B(7)] it means "notify." (See, Case No. H1C-NA-C 52, p. 7 (1985)).

Arbitrator Aaron's award, however, does not constitute a precedent for the grievance before this arbitrator. The issue before Arbitrator Aaron was as follows:

> Does Article 15, Section 4.B(7) of the National Agreement preclude either party from ordering a verbatim transcript of a regular arbitration hearing at the regional level without the consent of the other? (See, Case No. H1C-NA-C 52, p.1 (1985)).

The issue before Arbitrator Aaron is not the issue before this arbitrator. Arbitrator Aaron's award was issued in 1985. During that proceeding, the Employer again informed the Union of its understanding that Article 15.4.B(7) provides each party with a unilateral right to file a post-hearing brief on proper notification. The parties negotiated a new contract in 1987, and the language in Article 15.4.B(7) remained unchanged. This fact further supports the arbitrator's conclusion that the parties' intent underlying Article 15.4.B(7) was to preserve for each party a unilateral right to file a post-hearing brief in regular regional arbitration cases.

The Union in its post-hearing brief cited several decisions of the United States Supreme Court as well as a number of arbitration cases for the proposition that arbitrators have an inherent authority to set procedural rules to be followed at arbitration hearings. The Court has been clear that, "once it is determined, as we have, that the parties are obligated to submit the subject matter of a dispute to arbitration, 'procedural' questions which grow out of the dispute and bear on its final disposition should be left to the arbitrator." (See, John Wiley & Sons v. Livingston, 370 U.S. 543, 547 (1964)). The arbitrator certainly would not presume to challenge the soundness of the Court's decision. The parties in this case, however, have themselves chosen to vary the judicial guideline.

In the absence of a contractual provision to the contrary, an arbitrator has inherent authority to decide procedural questions raised at the arbitration hearing. At the same time, the arbitrator has no authority to contradict procedural rules that the parties themselves have bargained for and made a part of their collective bargaining agreement. The parties are free to set the procedural rules for arbitrators to follow. In this case, the parties have bargained for a right to file post-hearing briefs in regional arbitration cases on notifying the other party. An arbitrator may not deny the parties that contractual right.

Article 15.4.A(6) of the parties' agreement states that "All decisions of arbitrators shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement, and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended, or modified by an arbitrator." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 65). On the basis of bargaining history as well as the past practice of the party, it is reasonable to conclude that the parties intended to retain to themselves the unilateral right to file post-hearing briefs in regular regional arbitration cases on proper notification to the other party of an intent to do so. Under Article 15.4.B(7), an arbitrator does not have authority to deny a party the right to file a post-hearing brief on proper notification to the other party.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that Article 15.4.B(7) provides each party with the procedural right to file a post-hearing brief after notifying the other party and the arbitrator of its intent to do so. The grievance is denied. It is so ordered and awarded.

The issue presented in this case is whether the Union may, over the objection of the Postal Service, use a tape recorder at Regional level arbitration proceedings.

The issue arose on September 17, 1985, when the grievance of D. Miles, an employee at the Atlanta, Georgia Bulk Mail Center was scheduled to be heard in arbitration at the Regional level before Arbitrator Samuel J. Nicholas, Jr. In a letter to the parties' representatives, dated September 20, 1985, Nicholas recounted what occurred at the hearing, in part as follows:

> "Prior to the commencement of the hearing, Union's representative, Mr. James C. Terrell, requested that he be permitted to record the proceedings for the sole purpose of having an accounting of the testimony for aiding him in his preparation of Union's post-hearing brief. USPS strongly objected to this request and stated that Management had initiated a 'policy' that precluded the use of a tape recorder by either party for recording testimony given at arbitration hearings...The Arbitrator duly noted the USPS memorandum, as prepared by Mr. Gordon Jacobs, General Manager, Labor Relations Division, Southern Regional Office, and dated August 21, 1985. Upon further argument heard on Union's Motion, the Arbitrator ruled that USPS could not show good and sufficient reason for precluding Union its sought request. Specifically, the Arbitrator advised that the parties' new collective bargaining Agreement, dated July 21, 1984-July 20, 1987, does not contain language which precludes a party from recording arbitral proceedings, be they of the regular or expedited type. Article 15, Section 15.4 B7, in relevant part, provides "Normally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings or filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration,. . .' In no way can this language be interpreted as a mandate against the use of a party recording the proceedings in all scheduled cases. Had the framers of the Agreement had such intent in mind it must be presumed that words and phrases other than that written would have been incorporated into the Agreement. Also, it must be presumed that the parties chose to write the instant words supra in order to allow the parties and the Arbitrator considerable flexibility for the purpose of "making a Record in a given case and to be in accord with the majority of arbitral and court held thought which allows an Arbitrator to make the decision as to what type of Record may be made in a case and by whom, with full consideration given to the subject collective bargaining Agreement.

The Arbitrator found the USPS reliance on Section .29, Subsection .291 of its Employee & Labor Relations manual is not controlling on the instant subject, for this particular language relates to employee services ('During the course of activities related to postal employment') and not the airing of grievances before a neutral third party subsequent to one's removal from service. To be sure, the relied upon language does not refer to one's unemployment or any reason therefor. Also, with the Arbitrator having been advised by these parties that other Arbitrators (Coffey & Carson) have honored similar Motions on other such occurrences he was of the opinion that Union should be permitted to make its record as requested.

Upon receiving the Arbitrator's decision the USPS representative conferred with local Management and, in turn, advised the Arbitrator that USPS was withdrawing from the proceedings..."

Shortly thereafter, on October 7, 1985, the Postal Service sent Nicholas a letter confirming its withdrawal of the case from Regional level arbitration in accordance with Article 15. 4B5 of the Agreement and referral of it to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. The parties were unable to resolve the dispute at Step 4. Therefore, the case was appealed to the National level as one involving "an interpretive issue under the National Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application...".

In addition, on October 8, 1985, in Grievance No. SIM-3D-D 46367 (T. Thompson, Grievant), the same issue arose before Arbitrator John F. Caraway at a Regional level arbitration proceeding. In a written decision issued the same day, Caraway stated he considered himself bound by the ruling of Arbitrator Nicholas. He, therefore, granted the Union request to use a tape recorder at the hearing and the Postal Service withdrew from the hearing. In his decision, Caraway also observed:

> "It must be emphasized that the use of a tape recorder is simply a form of note taking. The official transcript of the hearing is the Arbitrator's notes. If a conflict exists between the tape recorder transcript and the Arbitrator's notes, the latter governs. Use of a tape recorder is conditional upon its use not being disruptive to the hearing. This Arbitrator has had no such problem in the many cases in which a tape recorder has been used in cases heard by him."

At the hearing before this Arbitrator, the parties agreed that the merits of the disciplinary action imposed in this case and the Thompson grievance would proceed to Regional arbitration as soon as possible; that no tape recorder would be used; and that this would be without prejudice to any rights which the Union may be found to have in this proceeding.

Relevant parts of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) read:

The Postal Service contends that the parties' use of the word "normally" in Article 15.4b(7) indicates they intended "there will be very few transcripts of arbitration hearings". Moreover, the Service argues that in this language "the parties addressed the question of transcripts and/or verbatim recordings of the hearings by stating that they normally do not wish to have a written or transcribed record of a regional hearing". As the Service sees it, the language in Article 15.4C3(b) prohibiting transcripts in expedited arbitration at the Regional level further demonstrates "that transcripts are not desired" in Regional level arbitration. Also, the Service says the parties have no bargaining history concerning requests for transcripts in Regional arbitration hearings; that this shows they desire to eliminate them to assure a faster hearing and speedier resolution of such cases.

In addition, the Postal Service points out that, under Article 19.1 of the Agreement, Sections 668.291 and 668.3 of the ELM are applicable to the situation presented here. The Service says that Regional arbitration proceedings "deal with a variety of subjects ranging from the removal of an employee to complicated contractual issues". In effect, the Service suggests that tape recording such information could be misused by revealing "information of a personal nature pertaining to...postal employees" which should be kept in confidence.

The Service cites numerous decisions of the Courts, the NLRB, and arbitrators concerning tape recording either negotiating sessions or grievance meetings to support the proposition that "unilateral recording" of such proceedings "tend to have a chilling effect" or one "that prohibits the free exchange of ideas and expression of thought". Also, the Service believes this would "serve to inhibit the conduct of the parties at" arbitration hearings; that "it would tend to cause the parties to speak for the record, rather than to the merits of the issue at hand". Furthermore, the Service suggests that in an organization of its size, it would be difficult afterwards to control who listened to such tapes or how they might be used or altered. The Postal Service says the parties' established past practice is to take handwritten notes at arbitration proceedings; that this has worked and should be sufficient in the future.

The Postal Service contends the Union has been inconsistent because, at least on one occasion, it agreed with the Postal Service's objection to a Grievant's use of a tape recorder.

Furthermore, the Service maintains that prior to the Thompson case, Arbitrator Caraway ruled against the Union's request to use a tape recorder in another arbitration proceeding. Finally, the Service maintains that in order to rule in favor of the Union in this case, this Arbitrator would have "to write a condition into the agreement" concerning the use of tape recorders, and that this would be violative of the provisions in Article 15.4A6.

The Union contends that Article 15.4B7 permits it to tape record Regional level arbitration hearings for the sole purpose of providing the Union representative with an accurate record of the proceedings. The Union asserts Section 668.291 of the ELM does not forbid it; that two Regional Arbitrators have already upheld the Union on this question and that this Arbitrator "should likewise adopt that position".

Quoting from How Arbitration Works, Elkouri and Elkouri (4th ed. 1985), p. 425, the Union argues that previous arbitration decisions concerning the identical issue and/or contractual provision have considerable precedential weight; that such an award "usually becomes a binding part of the agreement and will be applied by arbitrators thereafter". The Union urges that this Arbitrator should adhere to the interpretation which Arbitrators Nicholas and Caraway gave to Article 15.4B7 of the Agreement and Section 668.291 of the ELM.

Also, the Union requests that no weight be given the internal Management Memorandum which the Service presented concerning a decision, purportedly by Arbitrator Caraway, disallowing the APWU's use of a tape recording. The Union points out there is no evidence intrinsic in the document that the decision is his. Even if it is, the Union claims it is not the text of Caraway's decision, but a memorandum prepared by the Postal Service and fails to give Caraway's reasons for deciding as he did.

The Union maintains that tape recording a Regional arbitration hearing is a form of "notetaking"; that Article 15.4B7 makes no mention of this and refers only to "transcripts". Moreover, the Union notes that this provision merely states that "(n)ormally, there will be no transcripts". In essence, the Union says it cannot be inferred "from language permitting written transcripts under certain circumstances that a tape recording of the proceedings may not be had". The Union agrees that the purpose of Article 15.4B7 is to speed up the arbitration process and to reduce its costs by eliminating post-hearing briefs and transcripts. However, the Union insists that this provision "simply does not address" the question of a party using "an inexpensive, accurate and more convenient method of note taking". The Union maintains that mere silence on the subject is not enough to infer that tape recording a Regional level arbitration hearing is prohibited.

The Union denies that Section 668.291 of the ELM applies in this case. This is so, because the Union says an arbitration hearing does not involve an "oral communication" as defined in 18 U.S.C. Section 2510. Also, the Union contends the Postal Service has never claimed to have a subjective expectation of privacy in such situations. But, the Union argues that even if this were so, it would not be an objectively reasonable expectation. This is because the Union asserts an arbitration hearing is analogous to a judicial proceeding in which there is a record and statements are made to a neutral third party.

The Union takes the view that the cases on which the Service relies do not apply because they deal with a stenographic transcript, or tape recording, of collective bargaining sessions or grievance meetings. The Union asserts none of those issues are present in this case. The Union acknowledges, as Justice Douglas observed in United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior and Gulf Navig.Co., 363 U.S. 569(1960), that arbitration "is part and parcel of the collective bargaining process itself". Nevertheless, the Union argues the NLRB rulings finding it to be an unfair labor practice for a party to insist to impasse on tape recording bargaining or grievance sessions are not applicable to arbitration proceedings. The Union asserts that the NLRB recognizes the latter are different and that the policy considerations calling for "spontaneity and flexibility" in bargaining and grievance sessions which might be inhibited by tape recording them are not present in arbitration.

Also, the Union maintains the Postal Service has failed to demonstrate "any reasonable policy supporting a blanket prohibition on the Union's taping arbitration hearings". In effect, the Union declares the Postal Service testimony about the negative impact which this would have on the arbitration hearing amounts to "the rankest speculation". The Union accordingly urges the Arbitrator to find that it can "tape record regional arbitration hearings for the purpose" outlined at the outset.

Discussion

The Union is correct that, ordinarily, prior arbitral awards involving identical issues under the same Agreement have great precedential weight. However, in this Agreement, the parties have agreed that grievances "involving interpretive issues under (the) Agreement or supplements thereto of general application" will be handled at Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. If not resolved there, they are to be arbitrated at the National level. Here, the question involving the interpretation of Article 15.4B7 of the Agreement and Section 668.291 of the ELM did not arise until this case was before Regional Arbitrator Nicholas. When it did, the Postal Service exercised its right, under Article 15.4B5, to withdraw the case from arbitration at the Regional level and referred it to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. This also occurred in the Thompson grievance which was before Arbitrator Caraway. In these circumstances, the rulings of Arbitrators Nicholas and Caraway can have no "final and binding" effect or be given any precedential value in this proceeding.

Turning then to the issue presented, this Arbitrator can find no support in the Agreement, or in the ELM, for the position of the Postal Service. Article 15.4B7 states that "(n)ormally, there will be no transcripts of arbitration hearings...in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitrations". The Agreement has no definition of what the parties regarded as "transcripts". Generally, in labor arbitration proceedings, "a transcript" is considered to be a typewritten verbatim record of what happened at the hearing. Such a transcript can be achieved in a variety of ways. They include stenographic techniques using a stenotype machine, shorthand notes, or voice recording. It also can be done by utilizing a tape recorder. However, it is the typewritten record, not the means of producing it, which is generally viewed in labor arbitration as "a transcript". The Postal Service equates the tape recording of an arbitration hearing with a typewritten transcript. Clearly, they are not the same. Moreover, tape recording the hearing would not necessarily be inconsistent with the manifest purpose of Article 15.4B7 to provide for a speedier and less costly resolution of grievances at the Regional level. And, in the absence of any evidence evincing some other intent, the Arbitrator believes the word "transcripts" in Article 15.4B7 should be construed in line with the general understanding of that term in labor arbitration. *]

In view of this conclusion, there obviously is nothing in the Agreement specifically prohibiting a party from tape recording a Regional level arbitration hearing. The Agreement simply does not address that matter. It is axiomatic, that where the parties have not spelled out in the Agreement the details of how an arbitration hearing will be conducted, or mutually agreed on the procedures to be followed, this is left to the reasonable discretion of the arbitrator. Hence, it did not violate the Agreement in this case for the Regional Arbitrator to grant the Union representative's request to tape record the hearing for the purpose of aiding in the preparation of the Grievant's post-hearing brief.

*] The policy considerations which the NLRB has invoked in deciding whether a party violates the law in insisting to impasse on tape recording bargaining sessions or grievance meetings are not relevant to the interpretation of this clause of the Agreement dealing with arbitration.

In this regard, the Arbitrator notes that Article 15.4B7 also provides that "(n)ormally, there will be no...filing of post-hearing briefs in cases heard in Regular Regional level arbitration". This contrasts with Article 15.4C3b which says in expedited Regional level arbitration "no briefs shall be filed". Plainly, Article 15.4B7 leaves it to the discretion of the Regional Arbitrator in Regular cases to determine those unusual instances when post-hearing briefs are appropriate. In expedited arbitration, Article 15.4C3b specifically prohibits them. This same reasoning applies to the parties' treatment of transcripts, in these two provisions. Thus, even if a tape recording were regarded as "a transcript" under Article 15.4B7, this would not rule out the use of one in all cases. It would still be within the Regional Arbitrator's discretion whether the particular case is so different from normal to warrant the use of a transcript.

With regard to the provisions of the ELM which the Postal Service cites, they have no application to arbitration proceedings. The Arbitrator agrees with the Union that statements made at an arbitration hearing do not come within the meaning of an "oral communication" where the Regional Arbitrator grants a Union representative's request to tape record the proceeding. This is so, even though the request is granted over the objection of the Postal Service. As for Section 668.3, it is doubtful that it applies to information about employees of a personal nature divulged at an arbitration hearing. At any rate, this is a matter of conjecture on the part of the Postal Service. Should an employee improperly disclose such information, that would be the appropriate time for the Postal Service to enforce the rule.

Decision

For the reasons given, the Arbitrator finds that it does not violate the Agreement, or the ELM, for a Regional Arbitrator to grant a Union request to tape record the arbitration hearing over the objection of the Postal Service.

Dear Mr. Amma:

On August 4, 1989, we met with your representative Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether a regular regional arbitrator's award is binding throughout that particular region.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that a regular regional arbitrator's award is binding only on the installation where the grievance arose and only to the extent that a subsequent grievance involves the same material facts. It may be cited outside the participating installation as persuasive authority only, not binding authority.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On March 26, 1996, I met with your representative T.J. Branch to discuss the aforementioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is whether management violated the National Agreement when management referred the case from expedited to regular arbitration.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issues is fairly presented in this case. Article 15, Section 4.C3 allows for either party to conclude that issues in a case involving complexity or significance may warrant reference to regular arbitration. Pursuant to this section either party may refer a case and notify the other party of such reference at least twenty-four hours prior to the scheduled time for the expedited arbitration.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing or to be rescheduled for arbitration, as appropriate.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

PROCEEDINGS

In January 2002, the United States Postal Service ("USPS", "Postal Service" or "Employer") and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union("NPMHU", "Mailhandlers" or "Union") designated me arbitrate National-level disputes arising under Article 15, Section 5 D of their 2000-2004 National Agreement. Ultimately, the terms of that USPS/NPMHU National Agreement are dispositive of the matter in dispute. However, in advancing their respective positions in this case, both the USPS and the NPMHU cited and relied upon contract language contained in various Memoranda of Understanding between USPS and the American Postal Workers Union ("APWU").

At the hearing of this matter in Washington, D.C. on March 11, 2003, the USPS and NPMHU were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument. At the outset of the arbitration hearing, I was assured by the USPS and NPMHU representatives that the APWU apparently had elected not to participate in the proceedings, after being provided with Third Party notice of this arbitration.

Following receipt of the transcribed stenographic record, post hearing briefs and reply briefs were filed and exchanged nu USPS and NPMHU and the record was closed. At my request, the Parties graciously allowed me some additional time for the rendition of this Opinion and Award.

ISSUE

The Parties did not submit a joint stipulation framing the issue presented for determination in this National-level arbitration case. At the arbitration hearing, the NPMHU proposed the following formulation of the issue:

> Whether the NPMHU is entitled to cite an arbitration award- not as binding precedent, but for whatever persuasive value the award may have- that was issued under the Modified Grievance procedure between the APWU and the Postal Service by an arbitrator who knew at the time of his decision that the award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose?.

The USPS did not take express exception to the NPMHU's forgoing suggested statement of issue; although, in the Step 4 denial letter dated December 6, 2000, the USPS had described the disputed issue in this case more broadly, as follows:

> [W]hether management violated the National Agreement when it maintained that arbitration awards issued under the Modified Article 15 procedure with the American Postal Workers Union (APWU) were not citable in arbitration of a case initiated by the National Postal Mail Handlers Union?

Article 15, Section 5 D1 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement specifies that "only cases involving interpretive issues under this Agreement or supplements thereto of general application will be arbitrated at the National level". Consistent with the contract language which establishes my jurisdiction and authority in this matter and the facts and circumstances of this record, I conclude that the following interpretive issue is presented for determination in this National-level arbitration case:

> Is the NPMHU barred from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, not as authoritative precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement by an arbitrator who was informed at the time of his decision that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose?

PERTINENT CONTRACT PROVISIONS

2000 Mail Handlers National Agreement (between NPMHU/USPS)

ARTICLE 15 GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 15.1 Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Section 15.2 Grievance Procedure-Steps

Step 1: (a) Any employee who feels aggrieved must discuss the grievance with the employee's immediate supervisor within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the employee or the Union first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause. The employee, if he or she so desires, may be accompanied and represented by the employee's steward or a Union representative. The Union also may initiate a grievance at Step 1 within 14 days of the date the Union first became aware of (or reasonably should have become aware of) the facts giving rise to the grievance. In such case the participation of an individual grievant is not required.

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue under this Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (21) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Steps 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center.

The party whose representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue shall provide the other party a written notice specifying in detail the precise interpretive issues(s) to be decided. The Employer's notice shall be included in the Step 3 decision. The Union's written notice shall be automatically included as part of the grievance record in the case but the filing of such notice shall not affect the time limits for appeal.

Step 4: (a) In any case properly appealed or referred to this Step the parties shall meet at the National level promptly, but in no event later than thirty (30) days after filing such appeal or referral in an attempt to resolve the grievance. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part. The parties' Step 4 representatives may, by mutual agreement, return any grievance to Step 3 where (a) the parties agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented or (b) it appears that all relevant facts have not been developed adequately. In such event, the parties shall meet at Step 3 within fifteen (15) days after the grievance is returned to Step 3. Thereafter the procedures and time limits applicable to Step 3 grievances shall apply. Following their meeting in any case not returned to Step 3, a written decision by the Employer will be rendered within fifteen (15) days after the Step 4 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. The decision shall include an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor. In any instance where the parties have been unable to dispose of a grievance by settlement or withdrawal, the Union shall be entitled to appeal it to arbitration at the National level within thirty (30) days after receipt of the Employer's Step 4 decision.

* * *

Section 15.4 Arbitration

A General Provisions

A1 A request for arbitration shall be submitted within the specified time limit for appeal.

A2 No grievance may be arbitrated at the National level except when timely notice of appeal is given the Employer in writing by the Union. No grievance may be appealed to arbitration at the Regional level except when timely notice of appeal is given in writing to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center by the certified representative of the Union in the particular Region. Such representative shall be certified to appeal grievances by the Union to the Employer at the National level.

A6 All decisions of an arbitrator will be final and binding. All decisions of arbitrators shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement, and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended, or modified by an arbitrator. Unless otherwise provided in this Article, all costs, fees and expenses charged by an arbitrator will be shared equally by the parties. (Emphasis added).

A7 The parties agree that, upon receipt of the award, each arbitrator's fees and expenses shall be paid in a prompt and timely manner.

A8 All arbitrators on the District Regular Contract/Discipline Panels and the District Expedited Panels and on the National Panel shall serve for the term of this Agreement and shall continue to serve for six (6) months thereafter, unless the parties otherwise mutually agree.

A9 Arbitrators on the National and on the District Regular Contract/Discipline and District Expedited Panels shall be selected by the method agreed upon by the parties at the National Level. The parties shall meet for this purpose within ninety (90) days after signing this Agreement. In the event the parties cannot agree on individuals to serve on these panels, or to fill any vacancies, selection shall be made by the alternate striking of names from the appropriate list.

B Regional Level Arbitration-Regular

B1 In each District three (3) separate dockets of cases to be heard in arbitration shall be maintained for the Union by the Employer at the Area level:

B1a one for all removal cases and cases involving suspensions for more than 30 days;
B1b one for all cases appealed or referred to Expedited Arbitration; and B1c one for all other cases appealed to arbitration at the Regional Level.

C Regional Level Arbitration- Expedited

C1 The parties agree to continue the utilization of an expedited arbitration system for disciplinary cases of 30 days suspension or less which do not involve interpretation of this Agreement and for such other cases as the parties may mutually determine. This system may be utilized by agreement of the Union through the Union and the Vice-President, Labor Relations, or designee. In any such case, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service or American Arbitration Association shall immediately notify the designated arbitrator.

The designated arbitrator is that member of the District Expedited Panel who, pursuant to a rotation system, is scheduled for the next arbitration hearing. Immediately upon such notification the designated arbitrator shall arrange a place and date for the hearing promptly but within a period of not more than ten (10) working days. If the designated arbitrator is not available to conduct a hearing within the ten (10) working days, the next panel member in rotation shall be notified until an available arbitrator is obtained.

C2 The parties agree that all cases will be heard in arbitration within 90 days from the date of the grievance appeal to arbitration. If a grievance is not heard in arbitration within the 90 days, the grievance will be scheduled as the first case to be heard on the next available arbitration date. If, one (1) year after the effective date of this Agreement, this hearing requirement is not complied with by a particular District Panel(s) for three (3) consecutive Accounting Periods, the parties will meet to jointly select a sufficient number of additional arbitrators for that panel(s) to ensure compliance with this hearing requirement. Such meetings and addition of arbitrators will continue, as jointly agreed to by the parties, until the panel(s) is in compliance with the hearing requirement.

C3 If either party concludes that the issues involved are of such complexity or significance as to warrant reference to the District Regular Contract/Discipline Arbitration Panel(s), that party shall notify the other party of such reference at least twenty-four (24) hours prior to the scheduled time for the expedited arbitration.

C4 The hearing shall be conducted in accordance with the following:

C4a the hearing shall be informal;
C4b no briefs shall be filed or transcripts made;
C4c there shall be no formal rules of evidence;
C4d the hearing shall normally be completed within one day;
C4e if the arbitrator or the parties mutually conclude at the hearing that the issues involved are of such complexity or significance as to warrant reference to the District Regular Contract/Discipline Arbitration Panel, the case shall be referred to that panel; and C4f the arbitrator may issue a bench decision at the hearing but in any event shall render a decision within forty-eight (48) hours after conclusion of the hearing. Such decision shall be based on the record before the arbitrator and may include a brief written explanation of the basis for such conclusion. These decisions will not be cited as a precedent. The arbitrator's decision shall be final and binding. An arbitrator who issues a bench decision shall furnish a written copy of the award to the parties within forty-eight (48) hours of the close of the hearing.

C5 No decision by a member of the District Expedited Panel in such a case shall be regarded as a precedent or be cited in any future proceeding, but otherwise will be a final and binding decision.

C6 The District Expedited Arbitration Panel shall be developed by the National parties, on a geographic area basis, with the aid of the American Arbitration Association and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

D National Level Arbitration

D1 Only cases involving interpretive issues under this Agreement or supplements thereto of general application will be arbitrated at the National level. (Emphasis added)

D2 A docket of cases appealed to arbitration at the National level shall be maintained for the Union. The arbitrators on the National Panel shall be scheduled to hear cases on a rotating system basis, unless otherwise agreed by the parties. Cases on the docket will be scheduled for arbitration in the order in which appealed, unless the Union and Employer otherwise agree.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING (Incorporated into December 24, 1984 Award) between the
UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE
AND JOINT BARGAINING COMMITTEE
(American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, and National Association of Letter Carriers, AFL-CIO)

The parties agree to establish at the national level a "Task Force on Discipline." The Task Force shall have two representatives of the NALC, two representatives of the APWU, and four representatives of the USPS, and shall be chaired by an individual selected by the parties and subject to the direction of the parties. The fees and expenses incurred by this individual shall be paid as follows: One-fourth by NALC, one-fourth by APWU, and one-half by USPS.

The purpose of the Task Force shall be to study the manner in which discipline is administered by the USPS, the manner in which disputes about discipline are handled by the parties, and to recommend changes and improvements which can be made in the discipline and dispute resolution systems.

The Task Force is authorized, at its discretion, to conduct tests of alternative discipline and dispute resolution systems in various facilities.

The Task Force shall convene periodically but at least quarterly, at such times and at such places as it deems appropriate during the term of the 1984 National Agreement. No action or recommendations may be taken by the Task Force except by a consensus of its parties.

Nothing herein shall preclude any of the parties from exercising the rights which they may otherwise have.

1. The test of the modified grievance and arbitration procedure will only be done at offices where local union officials and local managers are willing to test the modified procedure.

2. Each office will have a sufficient number of arbitrators on the panel to ensure timely processing and hearing of arbitration cases. Generally, grievances that are not resolved at Step 2 should be heard within one month.

3. The parties, at the national level, will agree on the standard form that should be used or developed in processing grievances.

4. The parties, at the national level, will provide seven calendar days' advance written notice prior to termination of the modified grievance-arbitration procedure at any test office.

Memorandum of Understanding of September 1988
(between USPS and APWU and NALC)

The parties hereby agree that any arbitration award arising under the Modified Article 15 grievance and arbitration procedure will be referenced in the following manner:

1. It shall not be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceedings occurring outside of a test office.

2. It way, however be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceedings occurring within a test office.

This Memorandum will apply to any office implementing Modified Article 15 and shall continue as long as the program is in existence at the test office.

Memorandum of Understanding of November 1988
(between USPS and APWU and NALC)

. . . this language [of the MOU of September 1988] in no way changes the present contractual provision which provides that expedited arbitration decisions shall not be regarded as a precedent or be cited in any future proceeding.

Memorandum of Understanding of April 1995
(between USPS and APWU)

RE: Modified Arbitration Decisions

The parties agree that Arbitration Awards issued under any Modified Grievance procedure are not to be cited in any future arbitrations when and if the parties withdraw from that modified grievance procedure.

Arbitration Awards rendered in any modified grievance procedure are intended to apply only in the specific subject office of the grievance and only while the office is under the modified grievance procedure.

BACKGROUND

There were significant snowstorms in the New Haven, CT area on January 8, 1994 and February 12, 1994 . A number of postal employees who were absent from the workplace or who arrived late on those days requested administrative leave. When the Postal Service denied the leave requests for affected employees, the APWU and the Mail Handlers filed a number of grievances under their respective National Agreements, alleging violations of provisions of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM). When those grievances were denied by USPS at all levels of handling, each of the Unions appealed its deadlocked grievances to arbitration under the applicable provisions of their respective separate National Agreements.

Specifically, the NPMHU grievances were appealed to regional arbitration under the "Expedited" arbitration provisions, as set forth in Article 15.4. C of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement supra. The APWU grievances were appealed to local area arbitration under the provisions of a "Grievance-Arbitration Procedure for Resolving Grievances at the Lowest Level" (a.k.a."Modified Article 15" or "Mod-15"), as set forth in Article 15 of the USPS/APWU National Agreement, as modified by various supplemental Memoranda of Understanding ("MOU")of December 24, 1984, October 7, 1986 and September-November 1988, supra. A proper understanding of the instant case requires brief discussion of the bargaining history which led to the separate and independent arbitration systems to which the New Haven CT 1994 snowstorm grievances were appealed by APWU and NPMHU under the respective USPS/APWU and USPS/NPMHU National Agreements.

For the first ten years under the Postal Reorganization Act ("PRA") of 1970, the Mail Handlers and the APWU had bargained jointly with the National Association of Letter Carriers, AFL-CIO ("NALC"); resulting in a single National Agreement governing the Postal Service's relationship with the various unions. In 1981, however, NPMHU opted out of joint bargaining and during the ensuing twenty years has negotiated separate National Agreements with the Postal Service, culminating in the "2000 Mail Handlers National Agreement". The APWU and the NALC continued to jointly negotiate National Agreements with the Postal Service through 1987, but since the 1991 bargaining round each of those unions also has negotiated separate National Agreements with the USPS.

Notwithstanding the independent bargaining tracks with USPS since 1981, the common lineage of the APWU and NPMHU National Agreements continues to show through in the three-tier system of arbitration ("Regional expedited", "Regional regular" and "National-level"). This pyramidal hierarchy first appeared in the jointly negotiated 1978 National Agreement, to which the NPMHU, the APWU, the Postal Service and other postal unions all were parties. As initially set forth in that 1978 Agreement, and as retained in the respective separate agreements, the top tier of arbitration is National-level Arbitration, in which the parties arbitrate "only cases involving interpretive issues under [the] Agreement or supplements thereto of general application." [There is no dispute that decisions issued by National-level arbitrators are binding on a nationwide basis against all parties participating in the arbitration and may be cited in subsequent arbitrations without limitation]. Below National arbitration is "Regular" regional-level arbitration, which has been established to issue final and binding decisions at the local level. [Regular regional arbitration awards are fully "citable" and also are binding against participating parties at the postal installation from which the case arose]. The bottom tier of arbitration, common to each of the National Agreements, is "Expedited" arbitration, conducted at the regional or local level using less formal abbreviated hearing procedures. [By common understanding, the awards resulting from Expedited arbitration are otherwise final and binding but have little or no authoritative value under the National Agreements, as typified by Article 15.4.C5 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement, which expressly provides that "[n]o decision by a member of the Expedited Panel ... shall be regarded as precedent or be cited in any future proceeding."

Although the three-tier arbitration system initially established in 1978 has remained virtually intact in the separate NPMHU and APWU National Agreements and continues to operate to this day, there are also significant differences in the separate National Agreements, specifically including certain unique supplemental understandings. Thus, the NPMHU was not a party to the October 1986 Memorandum of Understanding by which the Postal Service and the APWU established the "Mod-15" arbitration procedure. Consequently, NPMHU was not a party to the various supplemental Memoranda of Understanding of September 1988, November 1988 and April 1995, supra, in which USPS and APWU further amended their Mod-15 agreement.

The APWU administrative leave grievances arising out of the January-February 1994 snowstorms were heard on September 21, 1994 by Arbitrator Joseph Parker under the "Mod-15" arbitration process which APWU and USPS had elected to use in the Greater Connecticut Area, including New Haven CT. On October 25, 1994, Arbitrator Parker issued a series of arbitration awards in the USPS/APWU Mod-15 proceedings, upholding in some cases and denying in other cases the APWU grievances. Each of the Mod-15 decisions by Arbitrator Parker contained the following disclaimer:

> This Award shall not be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceedings accruing (sic) outside of this test office. It may however, be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceeding accruing (sic) within this test office.

The Mail Handlers and USPS had experimented at other locations with a separate Modified 15 process, the details of which were not fully developed on this record, but had not elected for Modified 15 status in New Haven, CT. Thus, the Mail Handlers' administrative leave grievances arising out of the same January-February 1994 snowstorms at that same location were appealed for hearing in "Expedited" regional-level arbitration under the terms of Article 15 of the NPMHU National Agreement with the Postal Service. For reasons not disclosed on this record, however, the NPMHU's January-February 1994 snowstorm grievances were not scheduled to be heard in "Expedited" arbitration until some three years after the above-referenced Mod-15 decisions by Arbitrator Parker had been rendered. During that interim, the USPS and the APWU had entered into the April 1995 MOU, supra, further amending their Mod-15 arrangements; followed in October 1995 by the APWU's withdrawal from any further participation in Mod-15 arbitration in the Greater Connecticut Area, including New Haven CT.

The foregoing undisputed facts establish the context in which the pending NPMHU 1994 New Haven, CT snowstorm grievances finally were scheduled for hearing on November 20, 1997, before Arbitrator John Phelan, in "Expedited" regional-level arbitration under Article 15.4.C of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. The issue which is now before me in this National-level arbitration first arose during a November 13, 1997 pre-arbitration conference between local representatives, when the APWU advocate served notice on his USPS counterpart of intent to cite and submit to Arbitrator Phelan one or more of the above-referenced Mod-15 arbitration awards which Arbitrator Parker had issued some three years earlier. When the USPS advocate objected that such usage of the USPS/APWU Mod-15 awards was "inappropriate", the Parties mutually agreed to adjourn the pending arbitration of the merits of the underlying grievances; pending a National-level determination of the procedural "interpretive issue pertaining to the National Agreement".

NPMHU promptly appealed the matter to and, following discussions and mutual extension of the time limits, USPS submitted the following Step 4 response to the NPMHU National President on December 6, 2000:

> The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement when it maintained that arbitration awards issued under the Modified Article 15 procedure with the American Postal Workers Union (APWU) were not citable in arbitration of a case initiated by the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) claiming administrative leave for certain employees for January 8,1994.
> NPMHU contends that it is not precluded from submitting arbitration awards issued under a Modified Article 15 test conducted under the terms of the APWU collective bargaining agreement for their persuasive value. In the instant case, the union attempted to submit into the record awards issued by Arbitrator J. Parker in four grievances processed under the USPS-APWU Modified Article 15 grievance and arbitration procedure.
> It is the position of the Postal Service that awards issued under a modified grievance and arbitration procedure are citable only in subsequent cases filed under the same collective bargaining agreement arising within the office in which the test is being conducted. That principle is clearly defined in documents executed by the parties to the test conducted in the S. Connecticut P&DC. The Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) of September 6,1988 between the Postal Service and the APWU specifically states that cases arising under the modified procedure "shall not be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceedings occurring outside of a test office."

It is further the position of the Postal Service that the NPMHU is barred from citing arbitration awards issued under a separate collective bargaining agreement negotiated with another union when that collective bargaining agreement precludes such submission. The citing of expedited arbitration awards arising under the 1990 APWU National Agreement is barred by the terms of Article 15.4.C.4. thereof (15.5.C.4 in subsequent National Agreements). NPMHU is barred from submitting the Parker awards by the terms of the September 1988, and April 1995, MOUs, referenced above. Additionally, the Parker awards themselves stipulate that they "shall not be cited as precedent in any future arbitration proceedings accruing outside of this test office."

This was further reinforced in the Step 4 decision between the Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union for case J87-4J-C 89016049 (copy attached), "that arbitration awards rendered in any modified grievance procedure are intended to apply only in the specific subject office of the grievance and only while the office is under the modified grievance procedure".

It is further noted that the test of the Modified Article 15 procedure in the S. Connecticut P&DC was discontinued on November 18,1995. Thereafter, even the APWU is precluded from citing awards issued under the modified procedure in other arbitration hearings by the terms of the MOU of April 1995. The instant grievance was scheduled for expedited arbitration on November 20,1997.

The NPMHU conducted tests of a similar Modified Article 15 procedure in several offices, subsequent to negotiation of the 1987 Collective Bargaining Agreement. However, the NPMHU never participated in such a test in the S. Connecticut P&DC.

Relating to the union's request for administrative leave . . . the position of the Postal Service is outlined in the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions, incorporated herein by reference.

In view of these considerations, this grievance is denied.

When the matter remained unresolved, NPMHU made a timely appeal for final and binding determination of the confronting issue, in National-level arbitration under Article 15.4.D of the 2000 Mail Handlers National Agreement between NPMHU and USPS.

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

The following statements of position have been extrapolated and edited from the respective post hearing briefs:

The NPMHU

Absent an express agreement to the contrary, the NPMHU may cite any arbitration award that represents an arbitrator's reasoned interpretation of the governing agreement. The gravamen of the Postal Service's argument in this case is that it may take a subsequent agreement it makes with the APWU to limit the citation of certain sources of arbitral authority and, without obtaining the NPMHU's consent, apply that agreement to the NPMHU as well. There are, however, significant considerations of contract law, policy and fairness that cut against this position.

Both the history of the relevant agreements and the application of basic arbitral principles strongly support the position that the NPMHU may cite, as persuasive authority, an arbitration award issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure between the APWU and the Postal Service by an arbitrator who knew at the time of his decision that the award could be cited as binding precedent. Based on the structure and purpose of the Mod-15 procedure, and the clear language of the September 9, 1988 MOU, there can only be one understanding of the agreement between the APWU and the Postal Service relative to the citation of Mod-15 awards, as of October 1994. That is, at the time those awards were issued, they could be cited as binding authority within the test facility, and could be cited outside the facility - not as binding precedent, but for whatever persuasive authority they might be given. It therefore is clear that the awards should be considered sufficiently well reasoned to qualify as a source of authority that the NPMHU may rely upon in subsequent arbitrations.

The Postal Service also posits that allowing the NPMHU to cite the Mod-15 awards would deprive it of the benefit of the bargain it made with the APWU. The Postal Service suggests that a Regular Regional arbitrator who finds a Mod-15 decision persuasive could have his own decision cited by the APWU in a subsequent case. Whether such a scenario would violate an agreement between the Postal Service and APWU is a question to be answered in a different grievance - namely, a case between the Postal Service and the APWU, who are free to establish the rules governing their own arbitration procedure. In any event, the speculative possibility that such second-order citation may occur is not a sufficient basis for imposing terms on the NPMHU without its consent. In short, neither fairness nor equity require the NPMHU to observe limitations on the citation of authority in arbitration that have been negotiated after the issuance of the disputed arbitration awards by the Postal Service and another postal union.

For the foregoing reasons, the Arbitrator should conclude that the NPMHU is entitled to cite and rely upon, for their persuasive value, the five awards issued by Arbitrator Parker in October 1994 under the Mod-15 procedure established between the APWU and the Postal Service. An appropriate remand order also should be issued.

The USPS

The Mail Handlers union was never a participant in the Modified 15 process in New Haven. Nevertheless, the Mail Handlers union attempted to avail themselves of a New Haven APWU/USPS Modified 15 award, despite the fact that Modified 15 awards (1) could not be cited by any other union except the APWU local in the test office; (2) could only be cited in another Modified 15 arbitration in the same test office; and (3) could only be cited by parties if the office was an active participant of the Modified 15 process. In short, the Mail Handlers union is attempting to utilize a 1994 APWU Modified 15 award in a 1997 Mail Handler arbitration proceeding arising under its own agreement, while the Postal Service and APWU are explicitly precluded from utilizing the same decision in any forum. As such, the Mail Handler's attempt to cite the 1994 APWU Modified 15 awards must be denied.

The case presentation by the Mail Handlers was sparse, relying on counsel's interpretation of the USPS/APWU contract language, without any witness support for counsel's interpretation. Admittedly, where contract language is ambiguous, an arbitrator can be called upon to render an interpretation reconciling the ambiguous language. However, here there is no ambiguity and the arbitrator's authority is severely limited. The parties to the Modified 15 proceedings (i.e., the Postal Service and the APWU) are in a full agreement that Modified 15 awards can only be cited by the parties to the award in the test office, only in a modified proceeding, and only if the parties remain participants to the Modified 15 process. Therefore, when both parties to a contract are in agreement about the meaning and intent of specific language contained in a contract or memorandum of understanding, a non-party's interpretation is meaningless and not relevant, especially if the third party seeks to benefit by its singular interpretation.

A Modified 15 award is a type of settlement that exists in the postal service on a non-citable, non-precedential basis. Surely, when both parties are precluded by contract language from presenting a non-citable settlement to be reviewed by an arbitrator a non-party should not have greater fights to cite the parties' non-citable settlement. Non-precedential, non-citable agreements are widely used within the Postal Service and the outcome of this case may have an impact on the future of any such settlements. Indeed, the Modified 15 award is akin to a court decision that is "non-publishable", which means that it cannot be cited not only by either party in the future but any other litigants. Thus, the attempt to use as evidence arbitration awards which by their terms are limited as to time and place, is contrary to the Snow Award, (inasmuch as the Mail Handlers have no contractual right in its contract to cite these non-precedential Modified 15 awards), but also violates the specific limitations of those award which, as previously noted, are comparable to a non-publishable and non-citable judicial decisions. In sum, the Mail Handler position is unseemly in light of the experimental nature of the program.

Finally, there are significant labor relations issues which should preclude a ruling expanding the use of Modified 15 awards, as urged by the Mail Handlers in this case. A ruling for a party not part of the process would have a "chilling" effect on any future experimental programs in the Postal Service. The risk of a "rogue" award being resurrected and cited by others opens the proverbial "Pandora's Box". Moreover, in terms of elemental fairness, a non-party seeks to reap the benefits, while a party like the Postal Service is precluded from citing any Modified 15 awards except against the APWU at the New Haven office and only during the Modified 15 processes use in New Haven. For all the foregoing reasons, the Mail Handlers' grievance should be denied in its entirety.

OPINION OF THE IMPARTIAL ARBITRATOR

Since 1981, NPMHU and APWU have negotiated somewhat similar but separate and independent National Agreements with the Postal Service; each of which also incorporates certain unique supplemental understandings. Because the NPMHU and the APWU no longer are bound by a single National Agreement with USPS, it follows that neither is contractually bound by supplemental Memoranda of Understanding unique to those separate National Agreements, i.e., MOUs which USPS has negotiated with one or the other but not with both. There is no dispute that NPMHU was not a signatory to the October 1986 Memorandum of Understanding by which the Postal Service, the APWU and the NALC established a "Grievance-Arbitration Procedure for Resolving Grievances at the Lowest Level", a.k.a., "Modified Article 15" or "Mod-15". Nor can there be any doubt that NPMHU was not a party to the supplemental Memoranda of Understanding of September 1988, November 1988 and April 1995 between USPS and APWU regarding citation of Mod-15 arbitration decisions.

The Postal Service's position that its contractual understandings with the APWU relative to Mod-15 arbitration under the USPS/APWU National Agreement are somehow binding upon NPMHU is contrary to primary principles of contract law. It is elemental that a party cannot be bound to an agreement to which it does not assent and to which it is not a party. See, e.g., 17 Am. Jur. 2d Contracts § 22 (2002). Indeed, USPS stands logic on its head when it posits that "the Mail Handlers union cannot avail themselves of a New Haven APWU/USPS Modified 15 award" because the NPMHU "was never a participant in the Modified 15 process in New Haven."

Equally unavailing are the Postal Service's plea that equity requires quasi-contractual imputation of express mutual undertakings between USPS and APWU regarding citation of Mod-15 arbitration decisions into Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. Such legislative intervention by arbitral fiat would exceed the express limits on my authority set forth in the second sentence of Article 15.4.A.2: "All decisions of arbitrators shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement, and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended, or modified by an arbitrator". (Emphasis added). Moreover, the Postal Service argument that it is somehow "unfair" for NPMHU to cite Mod-15 decisions which USPS has undertaken with APWU to refrain from citing simply begs the question at issue in this case. It cannot seriously be maintained that NPMHU was a Third Party beneficiary of the agreements USPS made with APWU, by which each limited the other's right to cite arbitration decisions issued under the USPS/APWU Mod-15 procedures. The critical point is that the Postal Service and APWU agreed in collective bargaining negotiations to limit their respective rights to cite Mod-15 arbitration decisions in subsequent arbitrations but NPMHU and USPS have no such contractual undertaking.

As a general principle, absent mutual agreement to the contrary, advocates in a collective bargaining agreement arbitration may cite and proffer for the arbitrator's acceptance and consideration any authority that they deem persuasive. Absent mutual agreement to the contrary, an arbitrator in a labor-management arbitration has very broad discretion to accept or reject such proffered evidence and, if accepted, to accord antecedent decisions whatever degree of persuasive value s/he deems appropriate. See John Wiley & Sons, Inc. v. Livingston, 376 U.S. 543, 556-557, 84 S. Ct. 909, 55 LRRM 2769 (1964); Interstate Brands Corp. v. Teamsters Local 135, 909 F.2d 885, 135 LRRM 2006 (6th Cir. 1990). See also Elkouri & Elkouri, How Arbitration Works 605 (BNA 5th ed. 1997) (citing NAA/AAA/FMCS Code of Professional Responsibility for Arbitrators of Labor-Management Disputes § 2(G) (1996)); Owen Fairweather, Practices and Procedure in Labor Arbitration, 161 (1983); Dana E. Eischen, The Arbitration Hearing: Administration, Conduct and Procedures in "Labor and Employment Arbitration" (Edited by Bornstein, Gosline & Greenbaum), Chapter 1, Vol.1, § 1.01[7][a] (Matthew Bender 2nd ed. 1999).

Article 15.4.C.5 of the of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement does expressly restrict the citation and authoritative value of "Expedited" arbitration decisions. However, nothing in Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement or past practice thereunder restricts either Party from citing and proffering any other type of arbitration awards from any other source to an arbitrator conducting an "Expedited" arbitration hearing under Article 15.4.C. of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. If, arguendo, appeals to equity struck a resonant chord, it would be patently unfair to impose upon the NPMHU by arbitral fiat a restriction on its rights to cite USPS/APWU Mod-15 decisions in arbitration under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement, simply because USPS refrains from reciprocal citation to Mod-15 decisions under a self-imposed restriction it negotiated with APWU under a separate and independent National Agreement. As Arbitrator Carlton Snow observed in USPS/APWU/NALC National Arbitration Case No. H94N-4H-C 96090200 (Nov. 4, 1998): "If promises to one craft infringe on rights of another, the Employer is obligated to negotiate the authority to implement such rights [promises] within the craft whose rights are being infringed .... Simply because complying with one agreement would violate the other does not relieve management of its obligation to comply with both."(Id. at 23.)

Based on all of the foregoing, I conclude that NPMHU is not barred by contract, past practice or equity from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, not as authoritative precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement, by an arbitrator who was informed at the time of his decision that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose. Because only that very narrow issue was presented for determination in this record, it should be understood that my decision in this case is intentionally stated in such narrow terms.

Finally, whether the Mod-15 decisions cited and proffered by NPMHU are accepted into the hearing record and, if accepted, how much persuasive value to accord them in determining the merits of the underlying grievances, are matters left to the informed discretion of the arbitrator in the "Expedited" proceedings under Article 15.4.C. On that basis, the NPMHU 1994 snowstorm grievances are remanded to the Regional arbitrator, for disposition of the procedural issue consistent with the terms of this Award. Ironically enough, whatever determination the Article 15.4.C arbitrator ultimately makes concerning relevance, admissibility or persuasive value of the Mod-15 awards cited and proffered by NPMHU in arbitration of the pending NPMHU 1994 snowstorm grievances will have no precedent value under the express terms Article 15.4.C 5 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

USPS/NPMHU
NATIONAL ARBITRATION PROCEEDINGS
AWARD OF THE IMPARTIAL ARBITRATOR

1) Neither contract language nor mutual past practice under the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement bars the NPMHU from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement, not as authoritative precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement by an arbitrator who was informed, at the time of his decision, that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose.

2) Memoranda of Understanding between USPS and APWU which limit or restrict the rights of the USPS and APWU to refer to and cite "Mod-15" arbitration decisions as authority in subsequent arbitration proceedings do not bar NPMHU, a non-party to such Memoranda of Understanding, from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, not as authoritative precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement, rendered by an arbitrator who was informed at the time of his decision that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose.

3) In arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, discretion is vested in the individual arbitrator to accept or reject such above-described "Mod-15" arbitration decisions as the NPMHU may cite and proffer and, if accepted, to accord such above-described "Mod-15" arbitration decisions whatever persuasive value the individual arbitrator deems appropriate.

4) Case Nos. B90M-1 B-C 94024725 and B90M-1 B-C 94021081 are remanded back to Regional arbitration, for hearing and decision consistent with the terms of this Award.

5) Jurisdiction is retained for the sole purpose of resolving any disputes which may arise between the Parties regarding the meaning, application or implementation of this Award

Dear Mr. Hegarty:

This is in reference to Arbitrator Eischen's decision regarding the above captioned cases. These cases involve management's claim that Mod-15 arbitration awards cannot be introduced in arbitration by a union not participating in the Modified Article 15 program.

Mr. Eischen found:

(1) Neither contract language nor mutual past practice under the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement bars the NPMHU from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement, not as precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement by an arbitrator who was informed , at the time of his decision, that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose.

(2) Memoranda of Understanding between USPS and APWU which limit or restrict the rights of the USPS and APWU to refer to and cite "Mod-15" arbitration decision as authority in subsequent arbitration proceedings do not bar NPMHU, a non-party to such Memoranda of Understanding, from citing and proffering in arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, not as authoritative precedent but for whatever persuasive value the arbitrator deems appropriate, arbitration decisions issued under the Modified Grievance Procedure of the USPS/APWU Agreement, rendered by an arbitrator who was informed at the time of his decision that the "Mod-15" award could be cited as binding precedent between the APWU and the Postal Service in the post office from which the award arose.

(3) In arbitration proceedings under Article 15 of the USPS/NPMHU Agreement, discretion is vested in the individual arbitrator to accept or reject such above-described "Mod-15" arbitration decisions as the NPMHU may cite and proffer and, if accepted, to accord such above-described"Mod-15" arbitration decisions whatever persuasive value the individual arbitrator deems appropriate.

In the Matter of Arbitration Between UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE And NATIONAL POST OFFICE MAIL HANDLERS, WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS AND GROUP LEADERS DIVISION OF THE LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO	OPINION AND AWARD Nicholas H. Zumas, Arbitrator Case No.: H1M-NA-C-99

This is a Step 4 appeal to National Level Arbitration pursuant to the provisions of Article 15 of the National Agreement between United States Postal Service (hereinafter "Service") and National Post Office Mail Handlers, Watchmen, Messengers and Group Leaders Division of the Laborers' International Union of North America, AFL-CIO (hereinafter "Union"). Hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on February 26, 1986, at which time testimony was taken, exhibits offered and made part of the record and oral argument was heard. The hearing was stenographically reported resulting in a transcript of the proceedings numbering 107 pages. Post-hearing briefs were filed on April 29, 1986.

APPEARANCES

For the Service: D. James Shipman, Esq.

For the Union: Joseph N. Amma, Jr.
Ralph H. Goldstein, Esq.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In this grievance, the Union protests the unilateral implementation by the Service of three programs which the Union alleges fundamentally change the nature of the disciplinary process by eliminating suspensions (as well as Letters of Warning in one of the programs). The grievance also protests the unilateral termination by the Service of one of the programs. The Union asserts that these programs are violative of the provisions of successively collectively bargained National Agreements and long-established past practices relating to progressive discipline. By implementing these programs and by terminating one of them unilaterally, the Union charges that the Service violated its duty to bargain under the National Agreement and the National Labor Relations Act, and disregarded past practice.

The Service contends that the National Agreement does not prohibit the implementation of the these programs or preclude the types of discipline utilized in these programs. The Service further contends that it has no obligation to negotiate over the provisions of these programs; and that the past practice between the parties clearly indicates a unilateral right to implement such programs.

The parties, unable to resolve the matter during the various Steps of the grievance procedure, referred the dispute to this Arbitrator for resolution.

ISSUES

The Union frames the issue as follows:

> "Whether the Service has a duty to bargain with the Union over changes in the employee discipline process, and whether the Service violated this duty under the National Agreement and the National Labor Relations Act by implementing unilaterally three new disciplinary programs, by terminating one of the programs unilaterally, and by failing to bargain with the Union over these programs; and if so, what should the remedy be."

The Service frames the issue as follows:

> "Whether the Service violated Article 16 of the 1981-84 National Agreement by implementing these pilot programs at certain sites within the Central Region."

RELEVANT CONTRACT PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 3

MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

3.1 To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;

3.2 To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees;

3.3 To maintain the efficiency of the operations entrusted to it;

3.4 To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

3.5 To prescribe a uniform dress to be worn by designated employees; and

3.6 To take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out its mission in emergency situations, i.e., an unforeseen circumstance or combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action in a situation which is not expected to be of recurring nature.

ARTICLE 5

PROHIBITION OF UNILATERAL ACTION

The Employer will not take any actions affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms and conditions of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law.

ARTICLE 16

DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 16.1 - Statement of Principle

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

Section 16.2 - Discussions

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Section 16.3 - Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary letter of warning, which shall include an explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 16.4 - Suspensions of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after two (2) working days during which two-day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer.

Section 16.5 - Suspensions of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure. A preference eligible who chooses to appeal a suspension of more than fourteen (14) days or his discharge to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) rather than through the grievance-arbitration procedure shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement or through exhaustion of his MSPB appeal. When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days' advance written notice in a discharge action, but shall given such lesser number of days advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

Section 16.8 - Review of Discipline

A. In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee.

B. In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

Section 16.9 - Veterans' Preference

A preference eligible is not hereunder deprived of whatever rights of appeal such employee may have under the Veterans' Preference Act, however, if the employee appeals under the Veterans' Preference Act, the employee thereby waives access to any procedure under the Agreement beyond Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

Section 16.10 - Employee Discipline Records

The records of a disciplinary action against an employee shall not be considered in any subsequent disciplinary action if there has been no disciplinary action initiated against the employee for a period of two years. Upon the employee's written request, a disciplinary notice or decision letter will be removed from the employee's official personnel folder after two years if there has been no disciplinary action initiated against the employee in that two-year period.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

In late 1983 and early 1984, management in the Service's Central Region initiated three pilot employee motivational programs at three postal facilities. Lawrence G. Handy, a Central Region Labor Relations official, described their purpose as follows:

"...We developed three separate programs, pilot programs, if you will, which were designed to minimize the necessity for disciplining employees, and to approach the relationship between the employee and the supervisor in a more positive vein than had previously been done."

The first of the three programs implemented was Positive Attendance Control (hereinafter "PAC"). PAC became effective on November 26, 1983 in the St. Louis Post Office. In this program, no time off discipline (suspension) was to be given with respect to any attendance-related deficiencies or infractions. In lieu of suspension, progressively more severe Letters of Warning were to be issued for any attendance-related deficiencies. A PAC 1 letter was similar to a Section 16.3 Letter of Warning. A PAC 2 letter would be issued in lieu of Section 16.4 supension (14 days or less). A PAC 3 letter would be issued in lieu of a Section 16.5 suspension (14 days or more). Both the PAC 2 and PAC 3 letters would include statements that the employee's offense was serious enough to merit a suspension of the appropriate length. The Service considered the PAC program a success. In the year prior to the implementation of the program, 172 Section 16.3 Letters of Warning had been issued, while in the following year only 51 PAC 1 letters were issued. There had been 33 Section 16.4 suspensions, but only 3 PAC 2 letters. There were 37 Section 16.5 suspensions issued the previous year, but no PAC 3 letters were issued the following year.

The second program established was No Discipline Employee Motivation (N-DEM). This program became effective on January 21, 1984 in the St. Paul, Minnesota Post Office. This program eliminated the use of Letters of Warning and suspensions altogether, except that it allowed management to retain the right to discharge for serious offenses such as theft or assault. The basic thrust of the N-DEM was to allow management to discuss problems with employees and encourage employees to resolve them. This program was eventually terminated on July 1, 1985 because, according to Handy, there were "operational problems." When asked to amplify, Handy stated that, "The working management did not feel comfortable with the program, or I should say certain members of management didn't feel comfortable with the program...there are some supervisors even today that think that the only thing to solve a problem with an employee is to give them a suspension or suspensions."

The third program implemented was No Time Off Letter of Warning (N-TOL). This program was implemented on February 18, 1984 in the Louisville, Kentucky Post Office. The program eliminated time-off suspensions for work-related deficiencies and substituted progressively severe Letters of Warning. Employees were given the right to appeal the issuance of a Letter of Warning under the grievance arbitration procedure.

The program, like PAC, used three letters. A N-TOL 1 letter was similar to a Section 16.3 Letter of Warning. A N-TOL 2 letter would be issued in lieu of a Section 16.4 suspension. A N-TOL 3 letter would be the substitute for a Section 16.5

suspension. Both N-TOL 2 and N-TOL 3 letters would include statements that the employee's offense was serious enough to merit a suspension of the appropriate length.

The Service also considered this program a success. In the year before the establishment of the N-TOL program, 185 Section 16.3 Letters of Warning were issued, while only 16 N-TOL 1 letters were written. There had been 59 Section 16.4 suspensions, but only 10 N-TOL letters. A total of 32 suspensions under Section 16.5 was reduced to 4 N-TOL 3 letters.

Before each program was implemented, the Service advised all employees. They also presented a slide-show to all supervisors, explaining the program. This same slide-show was presented to the four major unions. It was also presented to the Regional representatives, the Local representatives and the Shop Stewards of the unions. The Service offered to make the presentation to employees at local union halls, but only the National Association of Letter Carriers accepted this offer.

There is some dispute as to the initial reaction to these programs. Handy, who was a Program Manager in the Central Region at the time, testified that the reaction was favorable. Marcellus Wilson, an Administrative Technical Assistant for the Union, testified that he attended a December 1983 meeting where PAC was explained. Wilson testified that the Union protested the establishment of the program.

As indicated earlier, the Service issued a Memorandum dated July 2, 1985, stating that the N-DEM program would be terminated; and that the Service would "return to using the discipline procedures set forth in Article 16 of the National Agreement." (Underscoring added)

On March 21, 1984, the Union filed a Step 4 grievance protesting the Service's "unilateral action in altering the terms, conditions and past practice application of Article 16 of the National Agreement in several sites in the Central Region." It should be noted that the American Postal Workers Union filed a similar grievance, but there is no record that it had been progressed to National Arbitration.

POSITION OF THE UNION

The Union asserts that the Service violated the National Agreement when it unilaterally implemented these three programs and refused to engage in collective bargaining, contending that they are inconsistent with the successively negotiated National Agreements and long-established past practices which mandate a progressive disciplinary procedure, beginning with Letters of Warning, progressed to short and then long suspensions, and ultimately discharge.

> "The Union does not argue that suspensions constitute in any way a superior, or inferior, method for disciplining employees, or that the PAC, N-DEM and the N-TOL programs constitute a worse or better method. Rather, the Union contends simply that the Postal Service has a duty to engage in collective bargaining with the Union over a modification of that procedure--regardless of its merit -- and that the Service has violated that duty in the present case by failing to bargain with the Union."

The Union maintains that these programs not only violate Article 5 of the National Agreement, which prohibits unilateral changes, but that these programs violate the provisions of Article 16 as well inasmuch as they change the established and agreed upon disciplinary procedure. Pointing to the history of negotiations and of Article 16 of the National Agreement, the Union asserts that suspensions have always been a topic of major concern to both the Service and the Union; and that changes in disciplinary procedures have been bargained over in each successive negotiation between the parties. Article 16, the Union asserts, contemplates that the progression from pre-disciplinary discussions to Letters of Warning, to suspensions of increasing duration and then to discharge is made "absolutely certain by the past practice of imposing discipline in precisely these forms and in precisely this order," and that the PAC, N-DEM and N-TOL programs represent a major departure from the disciplinary procedures set forth in Article 16.

With respect to the reliance by the Service on Article 3 of the National Agreement (the reservation of management rights clause), the Union points out that Article 3 may grant the Service exclusive rights, but it makes these rights "subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations...." Therefore, Articles 5 and 16 limit the "exclusive rights" of the Service under Article 3.

The Union next argues that the exhibits submitted by the Service concerning alleged prior unilateral changes in the disciplinary procedures should not be given serious consideration. The Union maintains that these exhibits are internal memorandums, and that the Service produced no evidence regarding the decision-making process which brought them about, or that there is any evidence showing whether the Unions were notified of these memorandums or were consulted in advance; and that there was no evidence as to the Unions' responses, or whether the Unions requested bargaining or waived their rights to bargain.

Finally, the Union takes the position that the Service violated the National Labor Relations Act, arguing that a change in disciplinary procedure is a change in "working conditions" as defined by the Act, pointing out that Article 5 of the National Agreement prohibits unilateral changes "affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law."

The Union points out that the NLRB and the Courts have ruled repeatedly that disciplinary procedures that affect a continuation of employment constitute mandatory subjects of bargaining. There is nothing in the National Agreement that contains any language waiving the Union's rights over disciplinary procedures, and there is no evidence in the bargaining history that would indicate that the Union ever waived its right to bargain over disciplinary procedures.

By way of remedy, the Union asks this Arbitrator to find that the Service violated the Agreement by implementing unilaterally new programs concerning discipline; and that the Arbitrator order the Service to negotiate with the Union in this regard.

POSITION OF THE SERVICE

The Service contends that these three programs and the manner in which they were implemented do not violate the National Agreement, arguing that they do not change Article 16, nor does such implementation violate Article 16.

Preliminarily, the Service emphasizes that these programs are not intended to supplant traditional disciplinary methods, including suspensions and other disciplinary tools.

The Service maintains that these three programs do not, in any way, alter the provisions of Article 16, pointing out that the programs are intended to be corrective and not punitive. According to the Service, Article 16 does not require that any particular form of discipline be used in a particular situation; that by these programs, the Service has elected not to utilize certain disciplinary action; and that these programs are effective supplements to the traditional disciplinary concepts currently in use in the Service, consistent with the corrective and non-punitive mandates of Article 16.

The Service asserts that Article 3 of the National Agreement gives it the right to implement these programs since, under Article 3, it has the exclusive right to "suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action," and that historically the Service has exercised its discretion to implement management policy with respect to discipline within the procedural constraints of Article 16.

The Service further argues that the implementation of these programs is consistent with past practice. At the hearing, the Service introduced several exhibits which it maintains is proof of such past practice. It points to Exhibit 23, a 1972 letter announcing the temporary elimination of Letters of Warning, and Exhibit 24, indicating a unilateral reinstatement of Letters of Warning and substituting them for suspensions of less than five days. The Service points to Exhibit 26, announcing a new policy of not imposing suspensions greater than 14 days, except in unusual circumstances.

The Service argues that these exhibits clearly show that the parties intended that the Service have the discretion to implement unilaterally such programs.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

After review of the record, this Arbitrator concludes that the unilateral implementation of these pilot programs violated the National Agreement between the parties, and that this grievance must be sustained.

Prior to the implementation of these three pilot programs, the parties have generally followed the progressive discipline procedures set forth in Article 16. Disciplinary measures have been imposed progressively, beginning with oral or written warnings, then progressing to short and long suspensions, and finally to discharge. While the number of warnings preceding suspension or the number of suspensions preceding discharge vary from case to case, this progressive pattern has been generally followed. These three new pilot programs alter this progressive pattern by utilizing special Letters of Warning or eliminating suspensions altogether. It is clear that these programs represent a substantial departure from the traditional and established order of progressive and corrective discipline under Article 16.

It should be noted for the purposes of this dispute, the question of whether these changes are good or bad is of no relevance. Since the programs represent major changes, the essential question is whether these programs were properly implemented in accordance with the requirements of the National Agreement.

While Article 3 gives the Service the exclusive right "to suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action," such authority, as the Service concedes, is "subject to the [other] provisions of this Agreement." In this dispute, the rights of the Service in this regard are limited by the provisions of Article 5 and Article 16.

Article 5, the Prohibition of Unilateral Action clause, provides that the Service "will not take any actions altering wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment." It is well established that discipline procedure is a term and condition of employment, and the unilateral implementation of programs which alter such procedure is an action that affects the terms and conditions of employment in violation of Article 5. In Electri-Flex Co. vs. NLRB, 570 F. 2d 1327 (7th Cir 1978), cert. denied, 439 US 911, 99 LRRM 2743 (1978), the Court of Appeals held:

> "...the institution of a new system of discipline is a significant change in working conditions, and thus one of the mandatory subjects for bargaining under the provisions of Section 8(d) of the Act, included within the phrase 'other terms and conditions of employment.'"

The next area of inquiry is whether there was an established past practice in respect to similar changes in discipline procedure implemented unilaterally by the Service so as to constitute a waiver of the Union's right to demand that such changes be negotiated. In order to justify the unilateral implementation by the Service of these three programs on the basis of established past practice, it must be shown not only that there was acquiescence, either expressly or by implication, but that the prior unilateral changes were similar in magnitude and scope.

As indicated earlier, the Service presented exhibits indicating that during the 1970s numerous apparent unilateral changes were made in the disciplinary procedure. While the Union is correct in asserting that there is no evidence that these changes were not a result of previous or subsequent negotiation, or that there is any evidence that the Union ever acquiesced to unilateral changes, the Union has not presented any evidence to the contrary. On the state of the record, it must be assumed that these prior changes were unilateral and that the Union waived its right to negotiate and acquiesced to the changes instituted by the Service.

The record, therefore, reveals the following: There was a unilateral change during the 1972 Agreement; a unilateral change during the 1973-75 Agreement; and a unilateral change during the 1978-81 Agreement. (No change was made during the 1975-78 Agreement.) The programs at the heart of this dispute represent an attempted change during the 1981-1984 Agreement.

Thus, at first glance, it would appear that the prior practice of unilateral changes made without objection gave the Service the right to unilaterally implement the programs in dispute. However, a closer analysis of the prior changes and a comparison with these disputed programs compel a different conclusion.

As evidenced by Exhibit 23, the use of Letters of Warning was temporarily suspended pending formulation of a standard national procedure. Exhibit 24 involves the implementation of using Letters of Warning in lieu of suspensions of less than five days. Exhibit 26 established a policy of not imposing suspensions greater than 14 days except in unusual circumstances.

Each of these unilateral implementations involved a change at only one Step of the disciplinary process. However, the changes in the pilot programs involved in this dispute affect several Steps in the disciplinary process, so drastically alter the progressive nature of the disciplinary process, and are of such magnitude that the prior unilateral changes do not provide an established past practice justification for the unilateral implementation of the changes in these programs.

Both PAC and N-TOL eliminate two levels of suspension and replace them with Letters of Warning. The N-DEM program completely eliminates the progressive Steps set forth in Article 16. These changes have such a fundamental impact on employees' working conditions that they must be negotiated.

Further indication that these prior unilateral changes have little or no effect as binding past practice is the Memorandum of Understanding incorporated into and made part of the identical Article 16 provisions in the 1984-1987 National Agreement with the American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of

Letter Carriers.[1] The Memorandum of Understanding created a national-level "Task Force on Discipline," and reads, in pertinent part:

> "The purpose of the Task Force shall be to study the manner in which discipline is administered by the USPS, the manner in which disputes about discipline are handled by the parties, and to recommend changes and improvements which can be made in the discipline and dispute resolution systems.
>
> "The Task Force is authorized, at its discretion, to conduct tests of alternative discipline and dispute resolution systems in various facilities.
> "The Task Force shall convene periodically but at least quarterly at such times and at such places as it deems appropriate during the term of the 1984 National Agreement. No action or recommendations may be taken by the Task Force except by a consensus of its parties." (underscoring added)

While this Union was not a party to this Memorandum of Understanding, the fact remains that its members and the members of the APWU and NALC are all part of the total work force and are all governed by identical Article 16 Discipline Procedure provisions in their respective collective bargaining agreements. It would be illogical in the extreme to allow the Service to implement unilaterally disciplinary changes affecting the members of this Union while at the same time negotiate, by Agreement, any such changes with the APWU and NALC.

AWARD

Grievance sustained. The Service violated the National Agreement by unilaterally implementing the PAC, N-DEM and N-TOL pilot programs, by unilaterally terminating the N-DEM, and by failing and refusing to bargain with the Union over these programs. The Service is ordered to enter into collective bargaining with the Union over these programs.

Re: See Attached

I recently met with your representative, Kevin Fletcher, to discuss the above captioned cases at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issues presented in these grievances concern whether management is required to follow the progressive disciplinary steps used for career Mail Handler employees when issuing discipline to Mail Handler Assistant employees (MHAs).

After reviewing the case files, the parties agree to the following:

Disciplinary procedures for MHAs are outlined in the Memorandum of Understanding Re Mail Handler Assistant Employees, Section 3.A. (Other Provisions, Article 15). That MOU provides that MHAs who have completed either 90 work days or a 120 calendar day period (whichever comes first) within the preceding six months may be disciplined only for just cause and that such discipline is subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure. The parties also agree that an MHA who has not completed a period of either 90 work days or 120 calendar days within the preceding six months does not have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure if disciplined. Furthermore, in the case of removal for cause within the term of an appointment, an MHA is entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her, in accordance with the Fishgold award.

Discipline for an MHA who does have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure does not generally have to be issued in the same progressive manner as discipline issued to a career employee. However, an appropriate element of just cause is that discipline should be progressive and corrective in nature rather than punitive. When management removes or otherwise disciplines an MHA, determining whether the disciplinary action taken is appropriate must be based on the individual facts and circumstances of each case.

Based on the above understanding, we agree to remand these grievances to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On June 27, 1985, and again on July 17, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the 7-day suspension issued to the grievant was punitive rather than corrective in nature.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Article 16 of the National Agreement to the fact circumstances.

The parties at this level agree that while discussions for minor offenses may not be cited as an element of prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities. Any notation regarding prior discussions in the said letter of suspension shall be stricken.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

On March 10, 1981, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The instant dispute is settled in that discussion notations made by a supervisor are strictly personal and are not to be considered official Postal service documents. As such, they are not to be made a part of a central record system to which other individuals have access.

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

On April 23, 1981, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that there is no interpretive dispute between the parties at the National level as to the meaning and intent of the language set forth in Article XVI of the National Agreement as that language relates to supervisors conducting "discussions" with employees where minor offenses are concerned.

Based upon information contained in the file, the supervisor referred to in this grievance conducted a discussion with the grievant in accordance with the provisions of Article XVI. During the discussion, the supervisor indicated that improvement was needed insofar as the grievant's attendance was concerned. There is nothing in the file which establishes that the discussion was conducted to elicit information relative to the grievant's absence from duty (2 days sick) for the purpose of taking disciplinary action because of that absence. Under these circumstances, the grievant was not entitled to have a steward present. The discussion was properly held in private between the grievant and her supervisor. With this understanding, we mutually agreed to consider this grievance resolved.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On November 10, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether local management is making improper notations on Forms 3972.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Whether the notations being made on the forms are improper is a local dispute suitable for regional determination based on the particular circumstances.

The parties at this level agree that discussions shall not be noted on the reverse of Forms 3972.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Dear Mr. Lingberg:

On March 11, 1986, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether illegal discussion files are being maintained by local management.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We agreed that supervisors will not exchange written notes regarding discussions. Also, a supervisor of a former employee may orally exchange information, relative to discussions, with the employee's current supervisor. Any records that do not comply with the above and Article 16 of the National Agreement are to be destroyed.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing in accord with the above.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On March 22, 1988, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

instance, the parties agree that a one day count and inspection may not be used as the sole basis to establish a standard against which a carrier's performance may be measured for disciplinary purposes.

Whether or not discipline is properly issued, i.e., just cause exists under given circumstances, is a factual dispute suitable for regional determination.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, if necessary.

Dear Mr. Amma:

On March 1, 1988, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance involves the proper conduct of a supervisor and an employee during discussions.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case.

It was further agreed that, during a discussion held between a supervisor and an employee, both parties are expected to conduct themselves in a professional manner at all times.

The purpose of such discussions is to give a supervisor the opportunity to bring to the attention of an employee through non-disciplinary means, a minor offense committed by the employee. Clearly, the intent of a discussion is to provide the supervisor and the employee an informal setting in which both parties may address the minor offense.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Joseph N. Amma, Jr. 2

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

Case No. NB-E-5724
Robert Kurtz
Phildelphia, PA

Issued: February 23, 1977

Background

This case involves an employer claim against Letter Carrier Robert Kurtz for his failure to deliver and account for registered article #3366397. There was no record taken of the hearing. The parties filed timely post-hearing briefs.

The Grievant, Robert Kurtz, was a part-time flexible letter carrier at the William Penn Station of the Philadelphia Pennsylvania Post Office. On April 23, 1974 he was assigned to route #639. Route #639 is essentially a business route which includes a number of jewelry establishments. The route is known in the William Penn Station as the "Jewel Route." The Grievant cased his mail that morning and picked up his registered articles from the key table. Registered articles are handled in the following manner at the William Penn Station. When a carrier completes the casing of the mail for his route he calls his number to the Accountable Mail Clerk at the key table. If the clerk has prepared the accountable items for that route he calls the carrier to the table, gives the accountables to the carrier and requires that he acknowledge receipt of each accountable item by signing for it on an appropriate form (Form 3867). The carrier then returns to his case, prepares a receipt (Form 3849) for each accountable item and fuses it into his mail for delivery. In this way he can readily determine that an accountable item is destined for a particular customer when a receipt appears among that customer's mail. Accountables are placed in the bottom of the bag under the regular mail. As the receipts appear, the carrier delivers the accountable item to the appropriate customer and the customer acknowledges delivery by signing the receipt and returning the receipt to the carrier. When the carrier returns to the Post Office, he produces the receipts and reconciles them with the listing that he had signed out for earlier in the day. He does this in the presence of the Accountable Mail Clerk and if there is a complete reconciliation the clerk clears him of his liability for those accountables. In this case

In this situation Kurtz had cased his mail and told the accountable mail clerk that he was prepared to receive his accountables. When the clerk was ready for Kurtz he called him. Kurtz picked up his accountables, signed out for them and returned to his case where he filled out and cased a receipt for each accountable item. He placed the accountables in the bottom of his satchel according to instructions and swept his case, bundled the mail, and put it in his satchel on top of the accountable items.

Having completed his work in the office he prepared to go out on the street. Before leaving he set his satchel on the floor near his case, threw his coat over it and went to the washroom. When he returned from the washroom he noticed nothing amiss, picked up his satchel and left for his route.

As the Grievant delivered his route he would finger the mail for each upcoming address. Approaching 111 South 8th Street he came across a receipt for registered parcel No. 3366397 addressed to the LaPais Jewelry Company. His procedure was to then look to his accountables in the bottom of his satchel for that parcel. Normally he would deliver the parcel and present the receipt to the addressee or his representative for signature. However, at this point he discovered that parcel No. 3366397 was missing. He completed his deliveries and then retraced his route in an attempt to determine whether or not he had delivered the parcel to some other address in error. He was unsuccessful and he returned to his station.

Contentions

The Union claims that the Grievant exercised reasonable care in the handling of parcel No. 3366397 as required by Article XXVIII - Employer Claims which reads in pertinent part:

> ARTICLE XXVIII - EMPLOYER CLAIMS
>
> The parties agree that continued public confidence in the Postal Service requires the proper care and handling of the U.S.P.S. property, postal funds, and the mails. In advance of any money demand upon an employee for any reason, he must be informed in writing and the demand must include the reasons therefor.
> x x x x x x x
> Section 2. Loss or Damage of the Mails. An employee is responsible for the protection of the mails entrusted to him. Such employee shall not be financially liable for any loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery of or depredation on, the mails or failure to collect or remit C.O.D. funds unless the employee failed to exercise reasonable care.

The parcel was stolen, says the Union, either when Kurtz left his case to sweep his mail from the center racks or when he went to the washroom. It insists that he exercised reasonable care of the mail by delivering his route in a manner so as to keep his satchel in front of him as he walked. To establish proof of theft the Union points to the discharge of M. for pilfering the mail and established that M. was on the floor the morning of April 23, 1974. The Union claims that any carrier at the William Penn Station must leave his satchel unattended under certain circumstances in order to properly perform his duties. Therefore, it claims, it is unreasonable for Management to require the carrier to be responsible for the mail when he must leave the area without it.

The Union also claims that the failure of the Grievant to protest the 5-9-75 Letter of Warning was related to the Supervisor's remark "not to worry" when the loss was first reported. Further, it says, the letter was improper in that it was not in accordance with instructions issued by Senior Assistant Postmaster General Brown. The Union produced the following instruction from Brown:

November 7, 1973

MEMORANDUM TO: Assistant Regional Postmasters General Employee and Labor Relations
SUBJECT: Letters of Warning
FROM: Darrell Brown

Article XVI - Discipline Procedure of the 1973 National Agreement sets forth the basic principle that discipline must be corrective in nature rather than punitive. Our objective is to correct employees, not to punish or harass them. During the negotiations, the Employer emphasized its commitment to this philosophy and made it clear that letters of warning would be used in appropriate circumstances since they are legitimate disciplinary tools. It is USPS policy, effective immediately, that letters of warning be used in lieu of suspensions of less than five (5) days. There will be circumstances, of course, in which the offense is so grave that suspension or even discharge will be required without any previous letter of warning.

Managers must remember that for minor offenses, counselling in private should be employed. If letters of warning are used, they should contain the following:

1. A statement identifying the letter as an official letter of warning, including sufficient detail (names, dates, times, occasions -- not generalities) as to the deficiency or misconduct that the recipient will know what he is being charged with;

2. A statement that further disciplinary action may result if correction is not achieved;

3. Previous discussion and/or counselling which has gone unheeded, if pertinent to the current infraction;

4. Information as to the employee's right to appeal the issuance of the letter of warning through the grievance procedure. (Underscoring added)

The Letter of Warning dated several months later is as follows:

DATE: May 9, 1974
SUBJECT: LETTER OF WARNING
TO: Mr. Robert K. Kurtz
P/T Flex Carrier
473 40 4399
William Penn Annex
Badge #7063

This official letter of warning is being issued for the express purpose of advising you of the following serious deficiency in your record which must be corrected immediately:

You failed to account for registered article #3366397 on Tuesday, April 23, 1974.

A copy of this letter of warning will be retained in your personnel folder for two years. If there is any repetition of the offense or you fail in any other manner to meet the requirements of your position more severe disciplinary action will be taken.

You are reminded that in accordance with present regulations employees who fail to meet the essential requirements of their position may have their periodic step increase withheld.

If you have any objection to the imposition of the above cited warning against your record, you may protest it in writing to the Postmaster within five days. Your protest will be reviewed on its merits by an authority different from the one that took the action and you will be advised of the decision reached.

Management claims that Kurtz took responsibility for the parcel when he signed out for it at the key table. It maintains that he is constrained to handle the mail with care and the loss is his since the mail was entrusted to his care. The failure of the Grievant to protest the Letter of Warning, says Management, is proof that he recognized that he was responsible for the safe keeping of the accountable item. Management does not accuse the Grievant of stealing the parcel. It does not know how the parcel was lost but, in Management's view, the loss must be attributable to the Grievant's error and he is, therefore, liable for the monetary loss suffered by the Postal Service.

Findings

Article XXVII provides that a Carrier must exercise "reasonable care." It is not enough that a Carrier state that he exercised reasonable care since there is no manner in which the veracity of that statement can be substantiated. Under the present circumstances the Carrier must demonstrate that he was unable to exercise reasonable care due to factors outside his control.

In the case of Kurtz each of the possibilities raised by the Union must be explored. First, Kurtz demonstrated that he delivered his route holding his satchel in front of him as he walked and fingered the mail. While this is a commendable and a useful precaution it serves only as self-protection for the carrier and does not relieve him from liability for loss on the basis of taking reasonable care. Carrying the satchel in front of him, then, does not demonstrate that the carrier was for some reason unable to exercise reasonable care.

Other possibilities brought forth by the Union bear more heavily on factors outside the control of the Grievant. The carrier is issued his accountables an hour before he leaves the office. During that time he is required to leave his case to go to mail racks in the center of a large room to sweep mail for his route from racks that are constantly being worked by clerks. If the carrier has already obtained his accountables, he must leave them unattended at his case while he sweeps mail from the central racks. There was no evidence that there is a procedure in effect enabling a carrier to protect his accountables during this time. On another point it was stated by the Union and not denied by Management that carriers are not permitted to take their satchels into the washroom. The normal practice is for a carrier to leave his satchel at his case or outside the washroom when he uses the washroom for a period of five or six minutes prior to his leaving for the street. Kurtz claims that his satchel was left unattended on April 23, 1974 under these exact circumstances.

The Grievant testified that he and a Union Steward promptly discussed the matter with a Supervisor (now retired and unavailable to testify) who is alleged to have told them, "Don't worry about it" and, "I am not at liberty to tell you anything, just don't worry." Management made no attempt to deny the allegation nor did it confirm the Union's statement. Another carrier, M., was apprehended on June 8, 1974 and discharged on June 21, 1974 for theft of the mail. The Union maintains that since M. was on the floor at the time Kurtz's bag was unattended, it is reasonable to conclude that M. purloined the package. The Postal Service states that if M. would have gone near Kurtz's bag, other carriers working cases nearby would have noticed his presence. There is no evidence that M. was seen in the vicinity of Kurtz's case. In any event, says Management, M. was discharged because he stole mail that was entrusted to him.

The connection between the presence of M. on the day of the Grievant's loss and the loss is much too tenuous to reasonably assume that M. pilfered Item No. 3366397. According to reliable testimony of the Union witnesses, it is possible that the statement of the Supervisor "not to worry" was in error and subsequent events could not link M. to the loss of parcel No 3366397.

Management's contention that Kurtz's failure to grieve the Warning Letter of May 9, 1974 limits his defense concerning the Letter of Demand dated March 25, 1975 is without merit. The Warning Letter was not properly constructed as directed by Senior Assistant Postmaster General Brown and even if it were the Warning Letter must be considered a part of the total Management action against the Grievant. The Grievant, therefore, did not waive his right to grieve the Letter of Demand when he failed to protest the Warning Letter.

The practice of leaving the satchel when sweeping the clerk's racks or when using the washroom puts the carrier at risk. He must either entrust his satchel to another carrier or take it with him. It doesn't make sense to sweep the center racks carrying a satchel and taking the satchel into the washroom is against regulations. Certainly the integrity of fellow carriers is not generally open to question. However, M. was a fellow carrier and he was discharged for stealing mail. The carriers in the William Penn Station must gamble each time they leave their cases as they must do in order to perform their duties.

The ultimate issue in this case is by no means free from doubt. There are cogent arguments suggesting

Thus, the hard fact is that he noticed nothing amiss with his satchel when he returned to his case on the morning of April 23. It is undenied that the other carriers noticed nothing unusual about, nor any stranger near, Kurtz's satchel while he was in the washroom. This indicated that the parcel was lost outside the Post Office. Finally, Kurtz could not demonstrate that some factor outside his control caused him to lose the parcel even though he claims that he exercised reasonable care. Given these critical facts, the conclusion is clear that Grievant Kurtz properly was held responsible for the loss in issue.

Award

The Grievance is denied.

This is in regard to our discussions concerning the MOU on Purging of Warning Letters agreed to during the 1987 National Negotiations.

As discussed, I agree that if a disciplinary action is modified by the parties or an arbitrator resulting in a letter of warning, such letters of warning will not be considered to have been issued in lieu of a suspension or a removal action pursuant to Item 3 of the MOU.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Assistant Regional Postmasters General

By memorandum dated November 13, 1973, there was established as USPS policy the utilization of letters of warning in lieu of suspensions of less than five (5) days. This same policy is effective throughout the grievance process where consideration is being given to a reduction in discipline imposed. If a suspension of five (5) days or more is reduced administratively, the reduction should be to a letter of warning rather than a suspension of four (4) days or less, unless such short suspension constitutes an agreed upon settlement of the grievance.

Please review your existing discipline cases to insure that this policy is operative and take the necessary corrective action where necessary to insure compliance.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Quinn:

Recently I met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is what is the remedy when an employee serves a suspension of 14 days or less before receiving a written Step 2 decision from management.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that where an employee begins serving a suspension before the issuance of a written Step 2 decision of a properly appealed grievance under Article 16.4 of the Agreement, the appropriate remedy is to rescind the suspension and make the grievant whole. This make whole remedy is without prejudice to the Postal Service position that it may reissue the suspension to correct an administrative error and without prejudice to the Union's position that the Postal Service may not reissue the suspension.

This case is to be remanded to Step 3 for application of this settlement.

Please and sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgement of agreement to settle this case.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On July 10, 1996, I discussed with your representative Richard Collins the aforementioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

Article 16.4 of the National Agreement states that no employee will begin to serve a suspension prior to the issuance of a Step 2 written decision. The issue in this case is what remedy shall be effectuated when an employee serves a suspension prior to this finding.

PROCEEDINGS

The United States Postal Service ("USPS", "Postal Service" or "Employer") and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union("NPMHU", "Mailhandlers" or "Union") designated me to arbitrate National-level disputes under Article 15. 5. D of their National Agreement. The terms of Article 15.3.C of that USPS/NPMHU National Agreement are dispositive of the matter in dispute but, in advancing their respective positions in this case, both the USPS and the NPMHU also cited and relied upon arbitration awards construing virtually identical language in Article 15.4.C of the National Agreement between USPS and the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO ("APWU"). After being provided with third party notice of this arbitration proceeding, the APWU elected to participate as an Intervenor in this case by appearing and participating in the hearing and filing a post-hearing brief. [At the arbitration hearing on June 13, 2006, Counsel for the APWU stipulated as follows: "Since we have intervened in this case as a third party, then [the decision in this case] interpreting that language would bind the APWU"]. See Tr. p.81, lines 10-12.

The USPS, the NPMHU and the APWU each were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument at the hearing of this matter. Following receipt of the transcribed stenographic record, the Parties deferred filing post-hearing briefs, pending the possibility of a resolution of the controversy in connection with ongoing national-level collective bargaining negotiations. The Parties subsequently advised me that their discussions had not resolved the matter and eventually filed and exchanged their respective post-hearing briefs in late March 2008. At my request, the Parties graciously allowed me an extension of the contractual time limits for the rendition of this Opinion and Award.

USPS/NPMHU 2002-2004 NATIONAL AGREEMENT
ARTICLE 15 GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 15.1 Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Step 2: (a) The standard grievance form appealing to Step 2 shall be filed with the installation head or designee. In any associate post office of twenty (20) or less employees, the Employer shall designate an official outside of the installation as the Step 2 official, and shall so notify the Union Step I representative.

(b) Any grievance initiated at Step 2, pursuant to Article 2 of this Agreement, must be filed within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the Union or the employee first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause.

(c) The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date. In all grievances appealed from Step 1 or filed at Step 2, the grievant shall be represented in Step 2 for all purposes by a steward or a Union representative who shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance as a result of discussions or compromise in this Step. The installation head or designee in Step 2 also shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part.

(d) At the meeting the Union representative shall make a full and detailed statement of facts relied upon, contractual provisions involved, and remedy sought. The Union representative may also furnish written statements from witnesses or other individuals. The Employer representative shall also make a full and detailed statement of facts and contractual provisions relied upon. The parties' representatives shall cooperate fully in the effort to develop all necessary facts, including the exchange of copies of all relevant papers or documents in accordance with Article 31. The parties' representatives may mutually agree to jointly interview witnesses where desirable to assure full development of all facts and contentions. In addition, in cases involving discharge either party shall have the right to present no more than two witnesses, Such right shall not preclude the parties from jointly agreeing to interview additional witnesses as provided above.

(e) Where grievances appealed to Step 2 involve the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, one such grievance to be selected by the Union representative shall be designated the "representative" grievance. If not resolved at Step 2, the "representative" grievance may be appealed to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. All other grievances which have been mutually agreed to as involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts as those involved in the "representative" grievance shall be held at Step 2 pending resolution of the "representative" grievance, provided they were timely filed at Step I and properly appealed to Step 2 in accordance with the grievance procedure.

(f) Following resolution of the "representative" grievance, the parties involved in that grievance shall meet at Step 2 within seven (7) days of their receipt of that resolution, unless the parties agree upon a later date, to identify the other pending grievances involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, and to apply the resolution to those grievances. Disputes over the applicability of the resolution of the "representative" grievance shall be resolved through the grievance arbitration procedures contained in this Article; in the event it is decided that the resolution of the "representative" grievance is not applicable to a particular grievance, the merits of that grievance shall also be considered.

(g) Any settlement or withdrawal of a grievance in Step 2 shall be in writing or shall be noted on the standard grievance form and shall be furnished to the Union representative within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. Any such settlement or withdrawal shall not be a precedent for any purpose, unless the parties specifically so agree or develop an agreement to dispose of future similar or related problems.

(h) Where agreement is not reached, the Employer's decision shall be furnished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. The decision shall include a full statement of the Employer's understanding of (1) all relevant facts, (2) the contractual provisions involved, and (3) the detailed reasons for denial of the grievance.

(i) If the Union representative believes that the facts or contentions set forth in the decision are incomplete or inaccurate, such representative should, within ten (10) days of receipt of the Step 2 decision, transmit to the Employer's representative a written statement setting forth corrections or additions deemed necessary by the Union. Any such statement must be included in the file as part of the grievance record in the case. The filing of such corrections or additions shall not affect the time limits for appeal to Step 3.

(j) The Union may appeal an adverse Step 2 decision to Step 3. Any such appeal must be made within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Employer's decision unless the parties' representatives agree to extend the time for appeal. Any appeal must include copies of (1) the standard grievance form, (2) the Employer's written Step 2 decision, and, if filed (3) the Union corrections or additions to the Step 2 decision.

Step 3: (a) Any appeal from an adverse decision in Step 2 shall be in writing to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center with a copy to the Employer's Step 2 representative, and shall specify the reasons for the appeal.

(b) The grievant shall be represented at Step 3 level by the Union's Regional representative, or designee. The Step 3 meeting of the parties' representatives to discuss the grievance shall be held at the respective Postal Service office (former regional headquarters) within fifteen (15) days after it has been appealed to Step 3. Each party's representative shall be responsible for making certain that all relevant facts and contentions have been developed and considered. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative likewise shall have authority to grant the grievance in whole or in part. In any case where the parties' representatives mutually conclude that relevant facts or contentions were not developed adequately in Step 2, they shall have authority to jointly return the grievance to the Step 2 level for full development of all facts and further consideration at that level. In such event, the parties' representatives at Step 2 shall meet within seven (7) days after the grievance is returned to Step 2. Thereafter, the time limits and procedures applicable to Step 2 grievances shall apply.

(c) The Employer's written Step 3 decision on the grievance shall be provided to the Union's Step 3 representative within fifteen (15) days after the parties have met in Step 3, unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. Such decision shall state the reasons for the decision in detail and shall include a statement of any additional facts and contentions not previously set forth in the record of the grievance as appealed from Step 2. Such decision also shall state whether the Employer's Step 3 representative believes that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(d) The Union, at the Regional level, may appeal an adverse decision directly to arbitration at the Regional level within twenty-one (21) days after the receipt of the Employer's Step 3 decision in accordance with the procedure hereinafter set forth; provided the Employer's Step 3 decision states that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue under this Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (2 1) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Steps 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center.

The party whose representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue shall provide the other party a written notice specifying in detail the precise interpretive issues(s) to be decided. The Employer's notice shall be included in the Step 3 decision. The Union's written notice shall be automatically included as part of the grievance record in the case but the filing of such notice shall not affect the time limits for appeal.

Step 4: (a) In any case properly appealed or referred to this Step the parties shall meet at the National level promptly, but in no event later than thirty (30) days after filing such appeal or referral in an attempt to resolve the grievance. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part. The parties' Step 4 representatives may, by mutual agreement, return any grievance to Step 3 where (a) the parties agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented or (b) it appears that all relevant facts have not been developed adequately. In such event, the parties shall meet at Step 3 within fifteen (15) days after the grievance is returned to Step 3. Thereafter the procedures and time limits applicable to Step 3 grievances shall apply. Following their meeting in any case not returned to Step 3, a written decision by the Employer will be rendered within fifteen (15) days after the Step 4 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. The decision shall include an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor. In any instance where the parties have been unable to dispose of a grievance by settlement or withdrawal, the Union shall be entitled to appeal it to arbitration at the National level within thirty (30) days after receipt of the Employer's Step 4 decision.

Article 15.3

A. The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement or withdrawal of substantially all grievances initiated hereunder at the lowest possible step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end. Every effort shall be made to ensure timely compliance and payment of monetary grievance settlements and arbitration awards. The Employer agrees that upon receipt of necessary paperwork, from the grievant and/or union, concerning a grievance settlement of arbitration award, monetary remuneration will be made. The necessary paperwork is the documents and statements specified in Subchapter 436.4 of the ELM. The Employer will provide the union copies of appropriate pay adjustment forms, including confirmation that such forms were submitted to the appropriate postal officials for compliance and that action has been taken to ensure that the affected employee(s) receives payment and/or other benefits. In the event that an employee is not paid within sixty (60) days after submission of all the necessary paperwork, such employee, upon request, will be granted authorization from management to receive a pay advance equal to seventy (70) percent of the payment owed the employee. In the event of a dispute between the parties concerning the correct amount to be paid, the advance required by this section will be the amount that is not in dispute.

B The failure of the employee or the Union in Step 1, or the Union thereafter to meet the prescribed time limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance. However, if the Employer fails to raise the issue of timeliness at Step 2, or at the step at which the employee or Union failed to meet the prescribed time limits, whichever is later, such objection to the processing of the grievance is waived.

C Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D It is agreed that in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the Union. Such a grievance shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to he decided and the contention of the Union. Thereafter the parties shall meet in Step 4 within thirty (30) days in an effort to define the precise issues involved, develop all necessary facts, and reach agreement. Should they fail to agree, then, within fifteen (15) days of such meeting, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues. In the event the parties have failed to reach agreement within sixty (60) days of the initiation of the grievance in Step 4, the Union then may appeal it to arbitration, within thirty (30) days thereafter,

E The parties have agreed to jointly develop and implement a Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM) within six (6) months after the effective date of the 1998 National Agreement. The CIM will set forth the parties' mutual understanding regarding the proper interpretation and/or application of the provisions of this Agreement. It is not intended to add to, modify, or replace, in any respect, the language in the current Agreement; nor is it intended to modify in any way the rights, responsibilities, or benefits of the parties under the Agreement. However, production of the CIM demonstrates the mutual intent of the parties at the National level to encourage their representatives at all levels to reach resolution regarding issues about which the parties are in agreement and to encourage consistency in the application of the terms of the Agreement. For these reasons, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM shall be binding on the representatives of both parties in the resolution of disputes at the Local and Regional levels, and in the processing of grievances through Steps 1, 2 and 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure. In addition, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM are binding on the arbitrator, in accordance with the provisions of Article 15AA6, in any Regional level arbitration case in which the CIM is introduced. The CIM will be updated periodically to reflect any modifications to the parties' positions which may result from National level arbitration awards, Step 4 decisions, or other sources. The parties' representatives are encouraged to utilize the most recent version of the CIM at all times.

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days , the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after fourteen (14) calendar days during which ten day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance arbitration procedure. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

The decade-old facts giving rise to this National-level grievance are fairly straightforward and not much in material dispute. On December 30, 1997, Lewis J. Rothman, III was notified by Management of a proposed 14-day disciplinary suspension, for alleged attendance irregularity and excessive absenteeism from his job in the Des Moines, Iowa BMC. The timely filed Step 1 grievance challenge by NPMHU, claiming lack of just cause for that discipline, (Grievance No. 22-333-00698) was denied by Management on January 16, 1998 and appealed to Step 2 by the Union on January 23, 1998. When the Employer thereafter failed to schedule any Step 2 meeting within the time limits set forth in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c), the NPMHU, on February 4, 1998, simultaneously invoked the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3.C and also filed a formal appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698 to Step 3.[1] After the Union declined a request by Management to "remand" the case back to a Step 2 meeting, Management responded with the following document, dated February 19, 1998, labeled "Step 2 Denial":

> The subject Step 2 grievance was not discussed with your representative, Tony Irvin in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement. The Union appealed with out the benefit of a meeting; respectfully request the grievance be remanded to step 2.
> The union contends the grievant was issued a 14 day suspension and allege violation of article 16 of the National Agreement and ELM 5 15. The union requests the discipline be expunged from all files and records.
>
> The facts in this case are the grievant received a 14 day suspension for failing to meet the attendance requirements, after receiving a 5 day suspension and a letter of warning for failing to meet the attendance requirements of his position. There was a settlement on the five day suspension. One date cited on the notice of suspension, was outside of the review period, however there were a sufficient number of absences to establish just cause. Information provided by the union in their written appeal did not establish a violation of article 16 or ELM 15.
> Inasmuch as the union has failed to establish a contractual violation, a contractual basis for the requested remedy, or that just cause did not exist, this grievance is denied.

The Union thereafter perfected its appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698, which eventually resulted in a regional arbitration award, on October 26, 1998, by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, infra. In the meantime, after Management had directed Mr. Rathman to begin serving the 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, the NPMHU also filed Grievance No. 98072898; invoking Article 15.3.C and claiming violations of Articles 3,5,and 16.4 of the National Agreement. The string of successive Management denials of that grievance leading to this arbitration read as follows:

[1] As noted in my discussion of the Issue, infra, no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

The subject Step 2 grievance was discussed . . . on March 16, 1998, in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement.

The union contends the grievant was placed on suspension and allege a violation of articles 3, 5, and 16, of the National Agreement. The union did not explain the relevance of articles 3 and or how they were violated. The union requests the grievant be made whole and the subject discipline be expunged from all files and records.

As claimed by the union, this grievance was appealed to step 3 without the benefit of a step 2 meeting. Management attempted to meet with the union at step 2 after their appeal, but the union refused.

In accordance with Article 16.4 of the National Agreement, the grievant did not begin his suspension until a step 2 decision had been issued prior.

Step 3 Denial of June 2, 1998

Pursuant to the terms and obligations as set forth in Article 15 of the 1994 National Agreement, management and union designees met at Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The result of that meeting on the above referenced case is as follows:

The issue is whether management violated Articles 3, 5 and 16 of the National Agreement when the grievant was allegedly placed on suspension prior to management rendering its step two decision.

The record establishes that the grievant initiated a grievance concerning a notice of suspension received on January 6, 1998. The parties did not discuss that grievance at step two within the prescribed time limits. On February 4,1998 the union appealed that grievance to step three without holding a step two meeting. On February 19 management provided the local union with its written step two decision for the grievance at issue. On February 21 the grievant began serving the suspension period.

The local union's claim that management was prohibited from (ever) requiring the grievant to serve his suspension is totally baseless. The union has failed to present any evidence to support their allegation that management is barred from ever requiring an employee to serve a suspension when the grievance (protesting the suspension) is appealed to step three due to the failure to meet at step two in a timely manner. Indeed, the union's assertion would change the clear intent of the requirement to "delay" a suspension outlined In Article 16.4 of the Agreement. In any event, the step two decision n this case was "rendered" and provided to the union prior to the grievant beginning his suspension.

The union's attempt to disavow the step two decision is groundless as is their entire "position" in this matter. The union has failed to demonstrate a violation or the relevance of the cited Articles of the Agreement. Absent the union meeting their burden in this contractual matter and absent the union providing a foundation for their requested remedy, this grievance is denied.

Step 4 Denial of November 9, 1998

On November 2. 1998, 1 met with your representative Dallas Jones to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement when management issued a Step 2 Decision without meeting with the Union at the Step 2 level of the grievance process.

The Union contends that this is an issue of due process in that management had to meet with the union before it could issue a Step 2 decision. The Union contends that if management failed to meet at Step 2, then it could not rightfully issue a Step 2 decision. The union further contends that if there is no Stop 2 decision, then management would be in violation of Article 16.4 of the National Agreement by forcing the Grievant to serve the fourteen (14) day suspension.

It is the position of the Postal Service that no interpretive issue involving the terms and conditions of the National Agreement is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Article 16, Section 2 of the National Agreement to the particular circumstances. However, inasmuch as the Union did not agree, the following represents the decision of the Postal Service.

Article 15.2 Step 2: (c) of the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) National Agreement states in part; ' The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date...

Article 15.3. C. off the National Agreement further states, in part; "Failure by the Employer to scheduled a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance arbitration procedure.

Management contends that the terms and conditions of Article 15 compel management to meet with the union as soon as possible after receipt of a timely Step 2 Appeal; likewise, Article 15 provides for the union to proceed to the next stop in the grievance process if management fails to meet within the required time period.

The evidence of record indicates that management did not to meet within the seven (7) day period after a grievance was initiated by the union. Although the seven (7) day time period had elapsed, the record indicates that management made good faith attempts to meet with the union to discuss the grievance. However, the terms of Article 15 state that the both parties have agree to any extension to meet beyond the seven (7) day period. The union's Step 2 Representative in this case did not agree to an extension; therefore, the union exercised its contractual rights and appealed the grievance to the Stop 3 level of the grievance process.

It is management's position that the grievance procedures outlined in Article 15 include provisions for the parties to take if the steps of the grievance process are not properly adhered to. Management argues that the union did in fact exercise its contractual rights by forwarding the grievance to Step 3 which was the appropriate resolve if the parties did not meet at Step 2.

Furthermore, Article 15.2 Step 2: (h) of the National Agreement states in part: "Where agreement is not reached, the Employees decision shall be fumished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period..."

In accordance with Article 16 of the National Agreement regarding suspensions of 14 Days or less, Section 16.4 states in part: "...the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered." This provision outlined in the discipline procedure requires management to render a decision prior to a grievant serving the suspension. This provision does not dictate that managements decision hinges on whether or not a Step 2 meeting took place.

It is the Service's position that this is not a dispute for national interpretation. The terms and conditions of Article 15 dearly identify and plainly articulate the steps to process a grievance. There are no provisions at any level of the grievance process that prohibits management from issuing a Step 2 decision letter.

After careful review of the facts surrounding this grievance, it is managements position that this dispute does not rise to application for interpretive determination. In view of the above considerations, this grievance is denied.

When that matter remained unresolved, NPMHU made a timely appeal for final and binding determination of the confronting procedural issue in Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 to National-level arbitration, under Article 15.4.D of the Mail Handlers National Agreement between NPMHU and USPS. While the appeals of that case were progressing to this National Arbitration, however, the underlying grievance protesting the merits of the 14 day suspension (No. 22-333-00698) was decided long ago, in expedited arbitration by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, whose Award of October 26, 1998 reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

FACTS: Grievant, Lewis J. Rothman III, was issued a Notice of Fourteen Day Suspension for being irregular in attendance. Grievant had previously received a Letter of Warning, dated December 31, 1996, and a five day suspension, dated May 27, 1997, both for failure To Maintain Regular Attendance.

UNION'S POSITION: Union contends that the Suspension was punitive, rather than corrective action and therefore lacked just cause; that it was procedurally defective; and that it should be rescinded and Grievant made whole.

MANAGEMENT'S POSITION: Management contends that there was just cause to issue the.,Notice of Suspension to Grievant; that the procedure was not defective; and therefore the grievance should be denied.

A. Jurisdiction of the Arbitrator

There is a serious question whether the Arbitrator has jurisdiction of the case since Union referred the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure on August 12, 1998, Management Exhibit 5. Pursuant to Article 15, Sec. 15.4(b)51 either party may remove a case from regional arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. In that event, the referring party pays the entire cost of the regional arbitrator, unless another scheduled case is heard on that date. No other case was heard. Although the August 12, 1998 referral by Union to Step 4 did state the case was withdrawn from regional arbitration, neither party renewed the request that the case be withdrawn from regional arbitration on October 20, 1998, the date of the arbitration. Management sought a decision on the merits while Union sought a decision on both the procedural issue and the merits.

No provision in the Agreement was cited to Arbitrator that directly addressed the question: Can an Arbitrator proceed to decide an issue (in this case, the merits) while another issue is pending at Step 4 (in this case, the procedural issue)?

Since both parties were willing to have the arbitrator proceed on the merits and since the Arbitrator did hear evidence on the merits, it would seem inconsistent with the purposes of arbitration to be expeditious and inexpensive for the Arbitrator to dismiss the entire grievance on jurisdictional grounds. Accordingly, the Arbitrator will render a decision on the merits but will stay implementation of the decision until completion of the Step 4 proceeding and its possible appeal to National Arbitration.

B. Issues to be Decided

The parties differ on the jurisdiction of the Arbitrator to render a decision-on the procedural matter which is now pending at Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

The procedural matter arises from the failure of the parties to meet within 7 days of the receipt of the Step 2 appeal. Union claims that such a failure to meet prohibits a Step 2 decision from being validly rendered, and without a Step 2 decision, there can be no discipline. (Management contends that there was a valid Step 2 decision rendered, and that a Step 2 meeting is not necessary to make the Step 2 decision valid).

The Arbitrator agrees with Management that he cannot decide this procedural issue which is now pending at Step 4 as an interpretative issue under the National Agreement. Article 15, Section 15.4(b)5, does not contemplate a regional arbitrator resolving the very same issue, in the same case, that is pending at Step 4.

Therefore, the Arbitrator will not address the procedural issue but will only decide the merits.

* * *

AWARD: Grievance denied but the 14 day suspension is not to take effect until after the Step IV decision and appeal to Arbitration, if any, in the case involving this same Grievant, Regional # 194M-II-C-98072898, dated August 12, 1998 (sic). If the ruling in that case sustains the Grievance concerning the lack of a Step 2 meeting, the suspension upheld in this case is not to take effect and shall be expunged from all records. If the ruling in that case denies the Grievance, the 14 day suspension in the case before this Arbitrator shall take effect and may be cited in later discipline.[2]

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

NPMHU

Once a grievance properly has been "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance arbitration process pursuant to Article 15.3C, Step 2 of that process has, by definition, ended. By agreement of the parties, "jurisdiction" (as it were) has passed from Step 2 of the grievance-arbitration process to Step 3, and from that point forward the grievance is to be handled and ultimately resolved exclusively in accordance with the various provisions of Article 15 governing those steps of the grievance-arbitration process beyond Step 2. This being so, there is no basis whatsoever in the National Agreement or in common sense for the Postal Service's assertion of a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances for any purpose—whether for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article 15.3B of the National Agreement, see infra pp. 21-24, or for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement. Recognition of such a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances would in effect excuse the Postal Service's "[f]ailure . . . to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," and there is no warrant in Article 15.3C or in any other provision of the National Agreement for excusing such a failure on the Postal Service's part.

The premise of that Postal Service response is that where a collective bargaining agreement does not set out the parties' agreement on a particular issue in express language, it is never appropriate for an arbitrator to imply an agreement between the parties on that issue. But that premise is a false one, as every experienced labor arbitrator knows. Given the realities of collective bargaining, labor arbitrators regularly are called upon—and properly so—to resolve interpretative disputes over the consequences that flow from an agreed-upon contractual provision that does not state those consequences in express language. And, a labor arbitrator who answers that call by reasonably concluding that the wording of contractual provision "X" necessarily implies consequence "Y" does not thereby commit the cardinal sin of "re-writing" the parties' agreement for them.

For the foregoing reasons, the NPMHU respectfully requests that the Arbitrator to find that when a grievance properly is "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," the Postal Service may not thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance for any purpose, including specifically (i) for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article15.3B of the National Agreement; and(ii) for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement.

U.S.P.S.

The NPMHU has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the Postal Service violated the contract by issuing a Step 2 decision after the NPMHU had appealed the grievance to Step 3. The clear and unambiguous language of the parties' agreement does not prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting. Rather, the agreement specifies the single consequence resulting from a failure to schedule a step 2 meeting or issue a timely step 2 decision–the only consequence of not scheduling or having a meeting is that the Union may, after the relevant time periods have expired, move

There was no prejudice to the grievant or Union as a result of the issuance of the Step 2 decision after the NPMHU's appeal to Step 3. Indeed, the Union here had a double opportunity to evaluate and respond to the Postal Service's position, as it filed two related grievances. Therefore, the NPMHU has no plausible argument that any prejudice whatsoever was caused by the "belated" Step 2 decision. And notably, it is due to the NPMHU's own refusal to cooperate in remanding the grievance to Step 2 that this "interpretive" issue even arose.

The cases also do not support the proposition that if a Step 2 decision is issued after an appeal has been taken under Article 15.3C, the union is entitled to an automatic victory, as it is effectively seeking here. The NPMHU's invitation to add new consequences on top of negotiated contract language must be declined, for what it seeks is improper and contrary to both the CBA, which prohibits the arbitrator from legislating for the parties, and to customary rules of contract interpretation, which prohibit decision-makers from — under the guise of contract interpretation — rewriting or modifying the parties' negotiated agreement. In addition to the fact that adding these negative consequences would be tantamount to rewriting the parties' contract, it would also encourage games of "gotcha". In short, there would be less incentive to cooperate, which both the NPMHU and the APWU agree is an important part of the grievance-arbitration process. The proposal of the NPMHU to find that additional consequences outside the contract flow from the absence of a Step 2 decision prior to an appeal to Step 3 would therefore not only conflict with the contract itself, but would also be a disservice to the truth and to the mutual cooperation that underlies successful collective bargaining relationships.

In addition, to accept the NPMHU's proposal would be tantamount to granting the Union a default judgment in all discipline cases involving 14-day suspensions–a result the Union has attempted but failed to achieve in bargaining. By seeking in arbitration what it failed to achieve in bargaining, the NPMHU hopes to chip ts way closer to its unachieved bargaining demands from 1993 and 1998. This is improper. See Elkouri at 454 ("[A] party may not obtain 'through arbitration what it could not acquire through negotiation'" (quoting Postal Service v. APWU, 204 F.3d 523, 530 (4th Cir. 2000)). Accordingly, the NPMHU's improper, unjustified and contra-contractual request should be denied.

The NPMHU's due process claims are disingenuous and without merit, as the Grievant suffered no harm. Further, no due process violation arises in cases where no Step 2 meeting is held or timely Step 2 decision is issued. The parties anticipated that Step 2 may be bypassed in drafting their agreement and, therefore, the parties provided for a full opportunity to explain their versions of the facts and arguments — including new arguments not raised previously — at Step 3. Although Article 15.3C begins with the phrase, "[f]ailure by the Employer to schedule a meeting," many instances exist where, due to one intervening event or another, it is virtually impossible for the Postal Service to schedule a Step 2 meeting within seven days or for the parties to meet at Step 2 within seven days as required by Article 15.2.Step 2(c). And common experience teaches that from time to time events happen that hinder the scheduling of a Step 2 meeting or someone's attendance at a Step 2 meeting, and one party is unwilling to agree to an extension agreement. To namejust a few examples, the parties' scheduled days off, sick, personal, or annual leave usage, natural or human-caused disasters, traffic problems, business travel, grievance processing, and/or arbitration hearings may make scheduling, or attaining an extension, within seven days difficult, if not impossible. Although the NPMHU is under an obligation to act in good faith, sometimes the Union plays games, as it admittedly did here in refusing to remand the grievance to Step 2.

The NPMHU urges that the opportunity to issue a Step 2 decision is extinguished once the Union has taken an appeal to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C. The NPMHU reasons that once such an appeal has been taken, "jurisdiction" over the grievance resides solely at Step 3 and no longer resides at Step 2. This artful and hyper-technical argument may make sense in the context of a district court opinion that has been appealed under clearly written jurisdictional statutes and judicial precedent. But it is specious in this context where no provision of the CBA discusses the Union's concept of "jurisdiction," or whether a Step 2 decision can be rendered after an appeal to Step 3 has been taken. Since the parties are expressly permitted to present new facts and arguments at Step 3, it follows that the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision after an appeal to Step 3 as a way to provide additional facts and arguments. The NPMHU's "jurisdictional" view, however, would effectively create a forfeiture where no "timely" Step 2 decision is issued. This nonsensical result could not possibly have been what the parties intended and, indeed, the Postal Service rejected such views during the 1993 and 1998 negotiations. Moreover, because "the law abhors a forfeiture," Elkouri at 482, the Postal Service's interpretation, which avoids one, is preferable. See id. ("If any agreement is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would work a forfeiture and one of which would not, the arbitrator will be inclined to adopt the interpretation that will prevent the forfeiture").

APWU

The APWU supports the NALC's position that the contractual language is clear in providing that the only instance in which the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of the contractual time limits set forth in Article 15.2 of the collective bargaining agreements. It makes little sense to ignore the parties' mutual agreement that the only instance in which the Postal Service may hold a Step 2 meeting or issue a Step 2 decision beyond the contractual time requirements is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of time. Absent such agreement to extend the time limits, if the Postal Service fails to timely respond, it has forfeited its opportunity to issue a decision on the grievance at Step 2.

The Postal Service claims that the contractual language permits it to issue an untimely Step 2 decision, even where there has been no Step 2 meeting, because the contract is silent regarding the result of the Postal Service's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting. This argument stretches the imagination and ignores the plain language of Article 15. The contract is not at all silent about the required steps of the grievance procedure, which requires the Postal Service to meet with the Union representative within seven days of receiving the Step 2 appeal. The Step 2 decision does not exist independent of the Step 2 meeting, but must be issued within ten days of the Step 2 meeting. If the Postal Service fails to meet either time limit, then absent an agreement to extend the time limits, Step 2 is over and the grievance is "deemed to move ... to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure."

According to the Postal Service, however, this particular consequence apparently does not preclude it from continuing to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 and the applicable time limits no longer apply. This reading of the contract defies logic and renders the relevant contractual provisions meaningless. If the grievance has moved to the next step of the grievance procedure, then the Postal Service may not continue to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 by issuing an untimely Step 2 decision.

There is no silence or ambiguity regarding the impact of the Postal Service's failure to comply with the contractual time lines. Absent agreement to extend those time lines, the Postal Service may not schedule an untimely Step 2 meeting or issue an untimely Step 2 decision. IV. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above and at the hearing in this matter, the Arbitrator should sustain NPMHU's grievance and find that, in the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, the Postal Service may not issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

ISSUE

The Parties did not present a joint submission of the issue(s) to be determined in this National-level arbitration case of Case No. 194M-11-C 98072898. In Steps 2, 3 and 4 handling, supra, both Parties had framed the issue presented by Grievance No. 194M-11-C 98072898 in straight forward factual terms whether a "Step 2 denial" dated February 19, 1998, of a grievance "deemed moved" to Step 3 on February 4, 1998 because no Step 2 meeting had been timely scheduled by the Employer, was effective to initiate a 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly Article 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. However, during the hearing on June 13, 2006, and later in their respective posthearing briefs, Counsel advanced various revisions of the issue formulations customized by artful pleading to better fit preferred theories of the case. At the June 13, 2006 arbitration hearing, the NPMHU proposed the following alternative formulation of the issue: If the Postal Service fails to schedule a Step 2 meeting on a grievance within the time provided by Article 15.2 of the NPMHU/USPS Agreement (including mutually agreed to extension periods) --thus triggering Article 15.3C, which states that such a failure "shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step [i.e., Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure" -- can the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance? In its March 21, 2008, post-hearing brief, NPMHU again reformulated its statement of the issue, as follows: When a grievance properly is "deemed . . .move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," may the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance?

For its part, the Postal Service initially re-framed its suggested issue as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting? In its post-hearing brief, dated March 21, 2008, the Postal Service again reformulated its earlier suggested statements of the issue, as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement ("CBA") between the NPMHU and Postal Service prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting and the NPMHU has appealed the grievance to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C of the CBA?

As the Intervenor, APWU suggested that the following articulation best describes its perspective on the issue presented for determination in this case: In the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, may the Postal Service issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in Article 15, Section 2, Step 2.f of the National Agreement between the APWU and the Postal Service?

After carefully considering the facts and circumstances of this record and the competing formulations, I conclude that none of the foregoing formulations accurately sets forth the only issue fairly presented by the factual record of this case. In that regard, it begs the question to ask whether the Agreement "prohibits" issuing or whether the Postal Service "can" or "may" issue a Step 2 decision after the grievance has already moved on to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C. Rather, the real (and only) question presented by the facts of this particular is case is whether such a belatedly issued Step 2 decision has any contractual validity, force or effect for purposes of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Moreover, the various revised issue formulations proposed by Counsel all openly invite dicta and/or arbitral determination of related disputed issues which might or could arise under a different set of facts but which are not adequately presented for determination in this record.

Finally, it must also be noted that the record in the present case squarely presents for arbitral determination only the limited issue of contractual interplay between Articles 15.2 Step 2(c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of 16.5 (16.4 in the previous contract). This case does not properly present any issue concerning the last sentence of Article 15.3.B-- a matter raised de novo by the NPMHU at the arbitration hearing. In the present case, the Postal Service asserted no timeliness objections below and the NPMHU never raised any Article 15.3.B waiver argument in any of the moving papers. Black letter law in labor arbitration holds that when written grievances and grievance procedure discussions clearly limit the issues in dispute, arbitrators should foreclose introduction of new claims at the time of the hearing (other than fundamental jurisdictional challenges). See, International Paper, 105 LA 970, 974 (Duda, 1996); Mason & Dixon Tank Lines, 94 LA 1225, 1228 (Byars, 1990);

City of Cadillac, 88 LA 924, 925 (Huston, 1987); NLRB Union, 76 LA 450, 456 (Gentile, 1981); Ralston Purina Co., 71 LA 519, 523-24 (Andrews, 1978). Were the rule otherwise, the most basic purpose of the Parties' grievance resolution mechanism--prompt discussion and consideration of issues at informal and earlier stages of the grievance procedure with the goal of resolution short of arbitration--would be frustrated.

Accordingly, I find that the only interpretive issue fairly presented by Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 for determination in this National-level arbitration case is objectively framed as follows:

> Does a Step 2 decision issued by the Postal Service after the grievance has been progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the "deemed to move" provisions of Article 15.3.C, because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time provided in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c) (including mutually agreed to extension periods), have any validity, force or effect under the last sentence of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement?[3]

DECISION

The Postal Service quite correctly points out that the NPMHU bears the burden of proving its grievance claim in this case by a persuasive preponderance of record evidence. See Postal Service and Nat'l Rural Ltr. Carrier's Assoc., Case No. E95R-4E-C 99099528, at 19 (Nat'l Arb., Jan. 12, 2003: Eischen, Arb.) ("The charging party in a grievance over interpretation and application of a contract bears the burden of proving, by a preponderance of the record evidence, that the responding party violated the agreement in some fashion"; see also Postal Service andNat'l Rural Ltr. Carrier's Assoc., No. Q95R-4Q-C 02101253 (National Arb., May 15, 2006: Eischen, Arb.): "[I]t is well-established that the charging party in a nondisciplinary grievance bears the burden of proof, by a

[3] My use of the emphasized conjunctive phrase "because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting" tracks the literal language of Article 15.3.C and posits the undisputed fact that in this particular case no intervening event and no delay, default or dereliction by the employee or the Union caused or contributed in any way to the Employer's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time required by the Agreement. Similarly, my use of the emphasized adverb in "progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the 'deemed to move' provisions of Article 15.3.C" serves to skirt the significant dispute between the Parties (not fairly presented by the facts of this particular case) of how a grievance progresses contractually from Step 2 to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C ("automatically", as the NPMHU would have it, or only through the filing of "a formal appeal", as the Postal Service would have it). Thus, determination of the of the issue set forth in the foregoing formulation resolves the specific controversy presented in this case but preserves for possible arbitral resolution at a later date, hopefully in an appropriate case with an adequately informed record, the respective positions of the Parties on these various other potential but currently inchoate issues.

The arbitrator's primary goal must be to effectuate the intent of the parties, which ordinarily is best ascertained from the plain words used in their collective bargaining agreement to express their bargain. Even when the parties to an agreement disagree on what was intended by disputed contract language, an arbitrator who finds the language to be unambiguous will enforce its plain meaning. See Safeway Stores, 85 LA 472, 476 (1985) (Thorp); Metropolitan Warehouse, 76 LA 14, 17-18 (1981) (Darrow). Arbitrators and courts alike presume that understandable language means what it says, despite the contentions of one of the parties that something other than the apparent meaning was intended. Independent School Dist. No. 47, 86 LA 97, 103 (1985) (Gallagher). Thus, it is a maxim of contract construction that an arbitrator cannot properly eviscerate the contract by ignoring clear-cut contractual language nor usurp the role of the labor organization and employer by legislating new language under the guise of interpretation. Clean Coverall Supply Company, 47 LA 272, 277 (Fred Witney, 1966). See also, Continental Oil Company, 69 LA 399, 404 (A. J. Wann, 1977) and Andrew Williams Meat Company, 8 LA 518, 524 (A. J. Chaney, 1947).

The following language of Article 15.3.C first appeared in the 1978 National Agreement and has appeared in haec verba in every National Agreement since that time:

> Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

In a National Arbitration award issued shortly after that contractual provision (in its current form) appeared in 1978, Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal construed the language of Article 15.3C, as follows (USPS and NALC Case N8-NAT-0006, p.7):

> [T]he parties wrote into the present grievance procedure that a grievance will automatically move to the next step where there is a "failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting . . . in any of the Steps . . . within the time herein provided. . ." The Postal Service has an obligation to schedule a Step 3 meeting once a proper appeal has been taken from a Step 2 decision. But that obligation pertains strictly to time constraints.(emphasis added).

The use of the disjunctive "or" in the grammatical construction of Article 15.3.C makes it clear that a procedural failure by the Employer to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting carries the same consequence as a failure of the Employer to render a [timely Step 2] decision-- i.e., a timeliness failure by the Postal Service of either specified kind "shall be deemed to move the grievance to [Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure."[4] Further, under that express wording, it is also clear that the catalyst for an Article 15.3.C "deemed to move" progression of a grievance from the current step to the next step of the grievance-arbitration procedure is a "[f]ailure by the Employer" to fulfill its contractual obligation to initiate one or the other of those two specified procedural actions in a timely manner at the current step.[5]

The bottom line question presented by this grievance and this factual record is whether the Parties mutually intended that a Step 2 decision "rendered" belatedly by the Employer, some two weeks after the grievance was "deemed to move" properly from Step 2 to Step 3 under Article 15.3.C, because the Employer had failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting, has any validity, force or effect for the purpose of requiring the Grievant to begin serving a fourteen-day disciplinary suspension that had been tolled, pending rendition of the Step 2 decision, by the following express language in the last sentence of ¶2 Article 16.5 of the National Agreement: " [I]f the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered". The undisputed facts of record and the plain words of the Agreement language persuade me that the Union carried its initial burden of making out a prima facie showing that the contracting Parties mutually intended no such thing.

[4] At the risk of redundancy, I reiterate previous disclaimers that no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

[5] See also page 5, footnote 4 of the NPMHU brief, viz., "the NPMHU readily acknowledges that 'if there has been no Step 2 meeting' on a grievance owing to a failure of some kind on the NPMHU's part—for example, the failure by a Union representative to attend a Step 2 meeting timely scheduled by the Postal Service—the Service would not on account of that NPMHU failure be precluded from issuing a Step 2 decision on the grievance". (Emphasis in original).

Those undisputed facts of record in this case show that the Union or employee timely initiated the grievance and timely appealed the grievance to Step 2, that the Employer failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting and that the Employer "rendered" the Step 2 decision long after the grievance had been properly progressed to Step 3. The Postal Service responds that an untimely Step 2 decision issued in the absence of a Step 2 meeting and after the grievance is at Step 3 has the same force and effect under Article 16.5 as a timely issued Step 2 decision rendered after a timely Step 2 meeting because neither Article 15.2 nor 15.3 expressly state that a Step 2 decision belatedly rendered after the grievance has been progressed to Step 3 has no force and effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 and because the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 does not expressly state that to have force and effect for the purpose of that sentence the Step 2 decision referenced therein must have been timely rendered before the grievance was progressed to Step 3. The Employer's "lack of express language" theory is misplaced and unpersuasive because it stands logic, reason and the so-called "plain-meaning rule" on its head.

The lack of such express disclaimer(s) is not fatal to the Union's grievance because the necessary implication of the cited Agreement provisions is that a Step 2 decision must be timely rendered while the grievance is still at Step 2 to have contractual validity, force and effect for the purpose of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Courts and arbitrators routinely recognize that it is proper and fitting to give effect to the manifest intent of contracting parties plainly evidenced in the "necessary implications" of their express contract language.[6] Such judicious inference of mutual intent founded in the logical, reasonable, natural and necessary implications of express contract language is readily distinguishable from improper arbitral rewriting of the Agreement.[7]

[6] Indeed, discernment of mutual intent through necessary implication is particularly appropriate in the interpretation and application of a collective bargaining agreement, which is"more than a contract; it is a generalized code to govern the myriad of cases which the draftsmen cannot wholly anticipate. . .The collective agreement covers the whole employment relationship." United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 578-82, 80 S.Ct. 1347, 46 LRRM 2416 1960, citing, at 363 U.S. 579 n.6, Cox, "Reflections Upon Labor Arbitration", 72 Harvard. L. Rev. 1482, 1498-99 (1959).

Experienced practitioners and arbitrators understand that a collective bargaining agreement is not (and cannot reasonably be expected to function as), an ersatz "Napoleonic Code"; addressing in express language every consequence and contingency that flows logically from agreed-upon contractual provisions. For example, it would be odd indeed if the parties to this collective bargaining agreement had found it necessary to specify expressly in Articles 15.3.C. or 16.5 that they did not mutually intend that the Employer could circle back unilaterally to Step 2, after the grievance was properly progressed to Step 3, to issue a belated Step 2 decision it had failed to render in a timely manner when the grievance was at Step 2 for the purpose of requiring a grievant to start serving a 14-day disciplinary suspension which had been tolled pending rendition of the Step 2 decision. To the contrary, the reasonable, logical and necessary implication of the plain language of Articles 15.3.C and 16.5 is that a Step 2 decision must be rendered in a timely manner and before the grievance is progressed properly to Step 3 to have any validity and contractual force or effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5.

Although obviously not binding in this National Arbitration, the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Eastman Kodak Co. v. STWB, Inc., 452 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2006), which was rendered shortly after the hearing in this case, lends strong support to this common sense reading of Articles 15.3C and 16.5. The Eastman Kodak decision involved an ERISA regulation adopted by the United States Department of Labor ("DOL")—dubbed the "deemed exhausted" provision/regulation by the Second Circuit—which provides in full:

> In the case of the failure of a[n] [ERISA] plan to establish or follow claims procedures consistent with the requirements of this section, a claimant shall be deemed to have exhausted the administrative remedies available under the plan and shall be entitled to pursue any available remedies under section 502(a) of the Act on the basis that the plan has failed to provide a reasonable claims procedure that would yield a decision on the merits of the claim.

The Second Circuit agreed with the DOL that the "deemed exhausted" regulation properly was interpreted to foreclose the defendant ERISA plan from "effectively 'undeem[ing]' exhaustion by enacting, for the first time, procedures that complied with the claims regulation after [plaintiff] filed suit and after failing to offer an appropriate procedure in the many months preceding [plaintiff's] lawsuit." Id. at 222 (emphasis added). As the appellate court succinctly put it, "[g]iving retroactive effect to a plan amendment in these circumstances . . . plainly conflicts with the 'deemed exhausted' regulation." Id. (emphasis added). And, as the appellate court added: "The 'deemed exhausted' provision was plainly designed to give claimants faced with inadequate claims procedures a fast track into court—an end not compatible with allowing a 'do-over' to plans that failed to get it right the first time." Id. (emphasis added). Applying that reasoning to the facts of this case, to allow the Postal Service a unilateral "do-over" of Step 2, after a grievance properly has been progressed to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, because of the Postal Service's failure to get the contractually-required Step 2 procedures right the first time, would plainly conflict with the mutual intent of the Parties, as manifested in the plain language and the logical, reasonable and necessary implications of Articles 15.2, Step 2 (c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

In my considered judgement, the Union carried its ultimate burden of persuasion in this case that a Step 2 decision issued after the grievance has been "deemed to move" properly to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C, lacks contractual validity, force or effect to implement a 14-day suspension under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the National Agreement.

AWARD OF THE IMPARTIAL ARBITRATOR

1) A Step 2 decision issued by the Postal Service after the grievance has been progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the "deemed to move" provisions of Article 15.3.C, because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time provided in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c) (including mutually agreed to extension periods), has no validity, force or effect under the last sentence of ¶ 2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

Dear Mr. Tunstall:

On July 16, 1991, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the time limits an employee must meet in order to grieve a proposed removal action.

As a result of our discussion, we mutually agreed to close this case based on the following understanding:

1. For the purpose of grievance procedure appeals, the time limits of Section 2 of Article 15 of the National Agreement shall run from the proposed removal notice, not from any decision letter on the proposed notice.

2. Once a notice of proposed removal is grieved, it is not necessary to also file a grievance on the decision letter. Once a grievance on a notice of proposed removal is filed, it is not necessary to also file a grievance on the decision letter.

3. Receipt of a notice of proposed removal starts the 30 day advance notice period of Section 5 of Article 16 of the National Agreement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to close this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Hutchins:

On October 26, 1988, a meeting was held with the NALC Director of City Delivery, Brian Farris, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the day of receipt of a notice of discipline should be included as part of the required minimum period of notice to the employee.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that for purposes of computing the period of notice required in advance of the imposition of various disciplinary measures, such notice period shall be deemed to commence on the day following the date upon which the letter of notification is received by the employee.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further consistent with the above, processing including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	CASE NO. NC-NAT-8580
and	INTERPRETATION OF ARTICLE XVI, Section 3, of the 1975 National Agreement
	ISSUED: September 29, 1978
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, AFL-CIO

BACKGROUND

This national level grievance involves interpretation of the last sentence of Section 3 of Article XVI in the 1975 National Agreement. Relevant portions of Article XVI include: 1

"ARTICLE XVI
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

"In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

"Section 3. Suspensions of More Than 30 Days or Discharge. In the case of suspensions of more than thirty (30) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure. A preference eligible who chooses to appeal his suspension of more than thirty (30) days or his discharge to the Civil Service Commission rather than through the grievance-arbitration procedure shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had either by settlement or through exhaustion of his Civil Service appeal. When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the advance notice requirement shall not apply and such an employee may be immediately removed from pay status.

"Section 4. Emergency Procedure. An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U.S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to himself or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than thirty (30) days or discharge him, the emergency action taken under this Section may be made the subject of a separate grievance."

The basic problem here is whether, when (1) an employee has been suspended indefinitely because the USPS has reasonable cause to believe the individual is guilty of a crime for which imprisonment may result and (2) the criminal charge later is dropped or the employee found not guilty, the employee, upon reinstatement, properly can be made whole for earnings lost during the period of suspension. In order to define the problem more clearly, the parties have presented a specific grievance from Cleveland. There Grievant M-, a long service Carrier with an unblemished record, was 2 indicted for allegedly having had sexual relations with two young girls (ages 12 and 11). Upon learning of the indictment the Service sent M- a notice of removal on March 16, 1977 reading, in relevant part--

> "This is notice that it is proposed to remove you from the Postal Service no earlier than 72 hours from the time you receive this notice. There is reasonable cause to believe you are guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed."

On March 17, 1977 M-'s attorney wrote the Service 3
stating that there was no actual evidence to indicate M- had committed any crime other than statements of the two young girls and attaching (1) results of a lie detector test which a professional polygrapher deemed to show M- to be innocent of the charges, and (2) other evidence calculated to establish M-'s innocence. M- nonetheless was removed from duty as of March 23 with the advice that he would remain on non-duty, non-pay, status pending disposition of his case. In subsequent processing of the grievance the Union unsuccessfully urged that M- should be assigned to temporary Clerk duties, on any shift, until his trial occurred. The June 10, 1977 USPS denial of the grievance in Step 2-B recited that the placing of M- in non-duty, non-pay, status had been for "just cause."

Meanwhile, M- had been found not guilty on May 21, 1977 and the USPS promptly advised of his acquittal. He was not returned to active duty until June 2, 1977, however, because the USPS insisted upon receiving formal notice of the verdict, signed by the Judge. The grievance accordingly protests the loss of pay during M-'s suspension up to June 2, 1977. The Union does not concede, however, that such suspension was for just cause and does not here seek any ruling on this aspect of the grievance. In other words, for purposes of shaping the issue in this case, the Union does not contest the USPS assertion that initially there was "just cause" for M-'s suspension, but reserves the right to continue to press that contention, if necessary, depending upon the outcome of the present case. 4

In urging that M- should be made whole for lost earnings for the entire period of his suspension, the NALC places great weight upon a May 31, 1977 decision of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in Grievance No. AC-S-9758 (herein called the Williams case) where (following arrest on a marijuana charge) the employee had been suspended for more than 11 months until he was found not guilty. The Associate Impartial Chairman granted a "make whole" remedy for earnings lost during the period of the suspension, stating that the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 served only to eliminate the advance 30-day notice requirement in such a situation, and that since there was no showing of "just cause" for the suspension, the Grievant should be made whole, as contemplated in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI. 5

> "It has come to my attention that the Postal Service has decided to ignore the agreed-upon precedential effect of Associate Impartial Chairman Paul J. Fasser's Award in Case No. AC-S-9758 (Curtiss Williams, Birmingham, Alabama), and that it continues to maintain that Article XVI, Section 3, last sentence, and Section 4, provide that the Postal Service is excused from all back pay liability stemming from indefinite and emergency suspension actions, notwithstanding the fact that the Postal Service cannot later establish that the discipline imposed was for 'just cause.'
> "NALC disagrees with that Postal Service interpretation of Article XVI, Sections 3 and 4, and contends instead, as Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser found (and as so approved by Impartial Chairman Garrett) that those sections of Article XVI deal only with the question of notice and thus do not insulate the Postal Service from back pay liability as a result of indefinite or emergency suspension actions where the Service cannot establish just cause > for discipline imposed. Accordingly, based on the foregoing, I am forced to conclude that there exists 'a dispute between the union and the employer as to the interpretation of [the] Agreement' within the meaning of Article XV, Section 2, last paragraph. I, therefore, hereby institute that dispute as a grievance at the National Level and request an immediate Step 4 meeting to attempt to resolve the same."

After a meeting on September 6, the USPS replied to President Vacca by letter of September 15, 1977, stating in part: 7

> "It is our position that the award issued by Arbitrator Paul J. Fasser, Jr. under date of May 31, 1977, addressed itself to the particulars in the case before him in arbitration (AC-S-9758), and that the award set forth what he considered to be the appropriate remedy to be granted based on those particulars."

At the hearing herein, the parties briefly outlined the facts in another grievance (which is being held in abeyance in the grievance procedure) as a further aid in developing a practical context for interpreting Article XVI, Section 3. In this other grievance another long service Carrier was arrested for the rape-murder of a customer on his route, with 8

a great deal of resultant local publicity. The arrest occurred on September 27, 1977 and the Service advised him on September 29 that it planned to suspend him pending investigation. On October 3 the Carrier was suspended indefinitely effective October 8, 1977. Later he was indicted and was awaiting trial at the time of the arbitration hearing in the present case. Meanwhile the grievance had been filed protesting his suspension, and it ultimately was appealed to arbitration. The Union nonetheless would not agree to proceed with an arbitration hearing until disposition of the rape-murder charges. Its position on this matter was made clear in a March 18, 1978 letter to General Manager Frost of the USPS Arbitration Division (on still another case) reading:

> "This replies to your March 13, 1978 letter concerning the above-referenced grievance. In that letter you indicate that, in the opinion of the Postal Service, the Union's request not to have that case heard in arbitration on February 23, 1978 (because the grievant is under criminal indictment for charges identical to those cited in the removal) constitutes a termination of any possible financial liability of the Postal Service beyond that date.
> "NALC disagrees with that Postal Service position and will oppose the same if it is raised at any future arbitration hearing > in the case. Furthermore, because the grievant is under criminal indictment for charges identical to those on which his removal is based, NALC will not agree to schedule that case for hearing prior to the resolution of the criminal charges. That refusal is based on what the Union considers is its duty to fairly represent the grievant and because exposing the grievant to an arbitration hearing prior to resolution of the criminal charges could have an adverse impact on his Constitutional rights associated with that process."

Article XVI, Section 3, appeared in its present form in the National Agreement between USPS and the Postal Worker Unions, effective July 20, 1971. This was the first collectively bargained agreement between the parties subsequent to enactment of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1969. 9

In the 1968 Agreement between the Post Office Department and the Unions, Article X had set forth detailed procedures governing "Adverse Action" against employees with right of appeal through Departmental procedures or to the Civil Service Commission. There was no provision for binding arbitration and the decision of the Department's Board of Appeals and Review was final (except for "appeal for a court ruling"). Article X, Section C stated: 10

"Whenever it is proposed to take adverse action against an employee the responsible official must determine that it is for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. The letter of proposed adverse action must state specifically and in detail the reasons for the action thereby affording the employee a fair opportunity of offering refutation to the charges."

Article X, Section D of the 1968 Agreement included the following under the caption "Duty Status During Notice Period": 11

"1. Employees against whom adverse action is proposed shall be retained in an active duty status during the notice period except when the circumstances are such that the retention of an employee in an active-duty status during the notice period may result in damage to Government property, or loss of mail or funds, or may be injurious to the employee, his fellow workers, or the general public. The employee may then be temporarily assigned to duties in which these conditions will not exist or placed on leave with his consent. In an emergency case when because of the circumstances described in this paragraph the employee cannot be kept in an active-duty status during the advance notice period, the employee may be suspended without his consent.

"2. This is a separate adverse action and the employee is entitled to a letter informing him of the reasons for his suspension, his right of reply and the time limit. An employee may be placed in a nonduty status with pay for such time, not to exceed five working days, as is necessary to effect his suspension. In the emergency case, the employee must receive at least a 24-hour notice of his suspension."

A great deal of additional background material was presented at the hearing but need not be recited here, since adequately noted in the development of the parties' arguments. 12

THE USPS ANALYSIS

The basic USPS position here seems to be that the "reasonable cause" language in the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3, had such a clearly established meaning in Federal personnel law, when it was embodied in the 1971 National Agreement, that the negotiators either knew or should have understood that they in effect were adopting that meaning. It thus should follow that whenever the Service has reasonable cause for such an indefinite suspension in a "crime case" there can be no back pay obligation even if the employee ultimately is found not guilty. 13

The USPS recitation of relevant background in support of this position starts with the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944. The Congress there provided that adverse actions--such as an indefinite suspension--could be taken against "preference eligibles" (as defined in the Act) only "for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service" 5 U.S.C. §7512. Title 5 of the U.S. Code contemplates that rules and regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission thereunder would have the force of law, binding upon the heads of Federal agencies. 14

The 1944 Act includes a provision that-- 15

> "(b) A preference eligible employee against whom adverse action is proposed is entitled to--

> "(1) at least 30 days' advance written notice, except when there is reasonable cause to believe him guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, stating any and all reasons, specifically and in detail, for the proposed action." (5 U.S.C. § 7512)

From 1944 forward, this legislation covered all "preference eligible" Postal employees.

By Executive Order 11491, President Nixon extended these rights to all Federal employees effective January 1, 1970. This included the right of any employee "in the competitive service" to appeal an adverse action to the Civil Service Commission and required that any recommendation by the Commission resulting from such an appeal "be complied with by the head of the agency." As of January 1, 1970, therefore, the Civil Service Commission rulings and regulations in respect to adverse actions became applicable to all Postal employees in the competitive service. 16

The USPS evidence includes an excerpt from the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) under date of November 18, 1963, which includes under "Exceptions to Notice Requirements": 17

"b. Criminal conduct. In cases where reasonable cause exists to believe that the employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the employee need not be given the full 30 days' advance written notice, but must be given such less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. If the adverse action is appealed, the agency action with respect to such shorter length of notice will also be reviewed."

The Service also cites excerpts from FPM Supplement 1P 752-1 dated February 14, 1968 which include the following passages:

" ... SEC. 752.202(c) Exceptions to notice period and opportunity to prepare answer. (1) Advance written notice and opportunity to answer are not necessary in cases of furlough without pay due to unforeseeable circumstances, such as sudden breakdowns in equipment, acts of God, or emergencies requiring immediate curtailment of activities.

(2) When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the agency is not required to give the employee the full 30 days' advance written notice, but shall give him such less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. ...

"a. '... in cases of furlough without pay due to unforeseeable circumstances ...' This provision is intended for use in situations when the department or agency concerned is powerless to avoid a sudden and unexpected general work stoppage. If it is utilized, the agency should be prepared to show that the stoppage was brought about by conditions which could not be changed by any level of government management having responsibility for the activity concerned. While this provision waives the advance notice requirement, other provisions of the regulations, including the right of appeal, continue to apply.

"b. ' ... When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed ...' (1) This provision is concerned solely with what is required in the way of advance notice and opportunity to answer in cases in which the stated condition exists; it does not deal with the problem of the employee's work status during whatever advance notice period is determined to be appropriate.

"(2) The chief difficulty in construing and applying this provision is to know what the words 'a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed' actually intend. (This is the language which appears in the statute.) The word 'crime' has sometimes been used to designate a gross violation of law, as distinguished from a relatively minor infraction. On the other hand, it has also been held to apply in its broadest sense to any violation of law which is punished by a criminal prosecution. Thus, in general, it appears that an agency would be technically correct in invoking the 'crime' provision in any case when there was reasonable cause to believe the employee guilty of some conduct for which he could be sentenced by appropriate civil authority (Federal, State, county or municipal) to be imprisoned for some period of time, however short. Nevertheless, if the agency has any doubt about whether a 'crime' for which a 'sentence of imprisonment' can be imposed is involved, it ordinarily would be the better practice to resolve this doubt in favor of the employee. (Agencies should keep in mind that there are other provisions for placing an employee in a nonduty status during an advance notice period of 30 days, and that it would probably be sounder to invoke the 'crime' provision on the basis of actual need rather than mere availability. This does not mean, of course, that an agency does not have the right to proceed on the latter basis if it so desires.)

"(3) If an agency determines that it should invoke this regulatory provision, the question remains about what 'less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer' should be given the employee. This can be decided only on the basis of all the facts and circumstances of each individual case. Some considerations which might well enter the picture are:

(a) The gravity of the alleged crime and the conclusiveness of the evidence that the employee committed it.

(b) The minimum time that actually will be needed to afford the employee a reasonable opportunity to answer both personally and in writing.

(c) The probable reaction of the press and the public to information that the alleged perpetrator is still being carried on the agency's rolls as an employee."

Reference is made by the Service, also, to an FPM excerpt dated October 26, 1970, but this seems not to add anything to the foregoing excerpts. Nothing in any Civil Service ruling or regulation as of 1970 or early 1971 has been cited in the present case to indicate, in specific. 19 language, that an employee suspended without pay under the "crime provision" either would or would not be entitled to be made whole for lost earnings if ultimately found not guilty or otherwise vindicated. The Service also cites FPM excerpts dated December 21, 1976, April 12, 1972, October 26, 1970, October 11, 1976, and February 4, 1972 providing detail as to Civil Service Commission policies up to the present.

Also in evidence are 4 recent decisions by the Federal Employee Appeals Authority (under the Civil Service Commission), 2 of which involve Postal Service employees. The Opinions in each case (January 12, 1977 and February 25, 1976) include substantially the same passages, reading: 20

> "In instances where the agency has reasonable cause to believe that an employee is guilty of an offense for which a penalty of imprisonment can be imposed, it can invoke the 'crime' provision which allows the agency to give an employee less than thirty days advance written notice of adverse action, and which also provides a basis for indefinitely suspending an employee pending investigation. In this connection, Section S5-3(b)(3) of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Supplement 752-1 provides, in pertinent part, that an agency cannot invoke the 'crime' provision solely on evidence that the employee was arrested. However, if the agency has evidence that the employee was arrested and was held for further action by a magistrate or was indicted by a grand jury, the agency would have reasonable cause for believing the employee guilty of a crime.

"In this case, the record reflects that the appellant was arrested on September 24, 1976, by the Pensacola Police Department and was charged with three (3) counts of forgery. In light of the fact that the appellant was arrested and held for further legal action, we find that the agency had reasonable cause to believe him guilty of a crime for which a penalty of imprisonment could be imposed; and that such belief provided a proper basis for the agency's decision to indefinitely suspend the appellant pending investigation. Therefore, we find the reasons stated for the proposed indefinite suspension to be sustained.

IV. DECISION

"In our view, the indefinite suspension, based on the sustained reasons, is neither arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable; and is for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. Accordingly, the agency's decision is affirmed.

"Civil Service Regulation 772.309(b) provides that decisions of the Federal Employee Appeals Authority are final and that there is no further right of administrative appeal."

The USPS also cites a 1976 decision by the U.S. Court of Claims, Jankowitz vs. U.S. (533 F. (2d) 538). There an employee's indefinite suspension without pay by HUD was held proper when the employee was indicted for accepting payments to influence his official acts as an appraiser for HUD. More than 14 months after the suspension was imposed, the employee was acquitted of all charges. His claim for back pay for this period, on motion for summary judgment, was denied. The Court concluded, as to this aspect of the case: 21

> "In our estimation, plaintiff's employer followed the FPM scrupulously, including adopting an advance notice of proposed indefinite suspension almost identical to that set out as an example in FPM Supp. 752-1, sample form B-7. Since we find that the Government in fact followed applicable procedural recommendations and safeguards in the FPM, we do not agree that plaintiff's indefinite suspension without pay was either unjustified or unwarranted. This much of plaintiff's claim for back pay must fail."

Finally, the USPS presented testimony by a witness who had served as Appeals Examiner and Supervisory Appeals Examiner for the Postal Service Board of Appeals and Review during 1969 through 1971. He confirmed that over the period 22 of his knowledge Postal employees frequently had been suspended indefinitely when there was reasonable cause to believe them guilty of a serious crime and that back pay was not awarded where an employee ultimately was found not guilty.

THE NALC ANALYSIS

The Union relies essentially on the precise language of Article XVI. The initial paragraph thereof permits discipline only for "just cause" and its last sentence leaves no doubt that, where a disciplinary suspension or discharge is found not to have been for "just cause," an award of back pay may result in arbitration. Thus, says the Union, the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 serves only to provide an exception to the 30-day notice requirement which otherwise would apply. Here it cites the May 31, 1977 Opinion of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in the Williams Case where the Opinion noted that the matter of remedial back pay was dealt with "clearly and completely" in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI. In the case before Associate Chairman Fasser the employee had been suspended indefinitely simply because he had been arrested on a marijuana charge. There had been no indictment nor had the Grievant been held for further proceedings after a magistrate's hearing. Given these facts, the Associate Chairman concluded that-- 23

" ... it is clear no proper cause for the grievant's discharge has been shown, so that he is presumptively entitled to be made whole for lost earnings in the absence of some cogent reason for denying him such back pay.

"The last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 does not provide such a cogent reason, since it serves only to provide an exception to the 'advance notice requirement' established in the first sentence of Section 3."

The NALC urges that the history of the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 fully supports the interpretation embraced in the Williams case. The Postal Reorganization Act preserved for Postal Workers certain rights which they had as conventional government employees. In Section 1005(a)(2), indeed, Congress provided that "preference eligible" employees would retain their rights under the Veterans Preference Act and that those rights could not be changed by collectively bargained agreements. Those rights included procedural protections in "adverse actions," such as the 30 days' advance written notice requirement except "when there is reasonable cause to believe" the employee guilty of a crime "for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed." 24 was for proper cause--its obvious and only purpose was to relieve the agency of the need to meet the procedural requirement of giving the full 30 days of advance notice. The NALC cites legislative history to support this view.

It was against this background that Article XVI, Section 3 was adopted in the 1971 National Agreement and continued unchanged in the 1973 and 1975 National Agreements. Indeed, by Executive Order 11491, the procedural protections afforded "preference eligibles" in adverse actions had become applicable to all Postal Workers as of January 1, 1970. When the Postal Reorganization Act was adopted early in 1971, therefore, it should have been reasonably apparent that similar protections might be embodied in any collective bargaining agreements which might ensue. Moreover, says the NALC, all Civil Service Commission Regulations since 1971 continue to make clear that the 30-day notice provision, and its exceptions, represent "procedural requirements" only. On this score it emphasizes a provision in the 1976 FPM Supplement dated October 11, 1976. This Subchapter 3 covers the subject "Merit of Adverse Action" and Part S3-2 thereof reads, under the heading "Insufficient Cause": 26

> "a. Pitfalls to avoid. Agencies should be alert to avoid such errors as the following:
> (1) Cause based on fact of arrest. Generally, the mere fact that an employee was arrested for a crime does not provide a cause for taking adverse action against the employee, even though the evidence of the arrest is fully recited and established. The employee may be innocent of the crime for which he was arrested. The agency action should be based, not on the fact of the arrest, but on the misconduct that led to the arrest, if there is sufficient evidence to prove misconduct or warrant suspension pending further investigation.

"(2) Cause based on criminal indictment. Except when the agency suspends an employee indefinitely pending disposition of a criminal action, the agency should not base an adverse action on a criminal indictment or conviction. Instead, the agency should base the action on what the employee did that was wrong. If the cause relied on is a criminal indictment or conviction, then a subsequent acquittal of the employee or a dismissal of the criminal charge would, in effect, vacate the cause for action. However, if the cause relied on is the employee's acts of wrongdoing, generally the administrative action will not be affected by the subsequent court action on the criminal case (see S7-1c(2))."

FINDINGS

This is the first case since negotiation of Article XVI in 1971 in which the parties have made complete presentations concerning the authority of an Arbitrator to award remedial back pay to an employee suspended in a "crimes case" and later found not guilty. The Opinion of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in the Williams case included the following pertinent paragraphs: 27

> "Article XVI, Section 3 deals with the giving of notice when an employee is discharged or suspended for more than 30 days. Any such employee is entitled to 30 days advance notice of the suspension and discharge, unless there is 'reasonable cause' to believe the employee is guilty of a crime 'for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed.'
> "Nothing in Article XVI, Section 3 (or Section 4) deals in any way with the matter of remedial back pay in a case where an employee has been suspended or discharged without proper cause. This matter is clearly and completely treated in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI, which declares:

> 'In the administration of this article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature; rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.'

"Under this paragraph it is entirely clear that when an employee is found to have been discharged wrongfully, such employee may be entitled to 'reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.' In the present case, it is clear that no proper cause for the grievant's discharge has been shown, so that he is presumptively entitled to be made whole for lost earnings in the absence of some cogent reason for denying him such back pay.

"The last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 does not provide such a cogent reason, since it serves only to provide an exception to the 'advance notice requirement' established in the first sentence of > Section 3. It is true that Article XVI, Section 4 also states that an employee may 'immediately be placed on an off-duty status (without pay)' in certain specified types of cases (none of which actually would seem to apply in the present case). But like Section 3, this Section in no way is addressed to the matter of remedial back pay--it deals only with emergency removal of an employee from active duty without advance notice. Because no 30-day advance notice is required, this Section (like Section 3) recognizes that the employee immediately goes onto off-duty status without pay. To repeat, however, this waiver of the notice requirement has nothing at all to do with the matter of remedial back pay when an employee subsequently has been found to have been discharged wrongfully."

As is clear from these passages, the Associate Impartial Chairman considered the interpretive problem in terms of the language of Article XVI, standing alone, without benefit of comprehensive presentations such as embodied in this record. Disposition of the present case thus requires close analysis both of the language in Article XVI and of the context in which it was negotiated in 1971. In a December 1, 1972 Opinion involving "Guarantee of Pay for Employees Called in Outside Regular Shift," this Arbitrator observed: 28

"The interpretation of particular language in a collective bargaining agreement, when the parties fall into dispute, normally requires determination of the objective meaning of the actual words used. The subjective intent or understanding of one or more of the negotiators, not actually disclosed in the negotiations, cannot be of controlling, or even dominant, significance for this purpose. It is no more than one element in all of the evidence which may be relevant in a given case. This principle indubitably applies in this case.

" ... Parties in collective bargaining often fail to achieve clear understanding as to the meaning of provisions negotiated under difficult circumstances. An effort to define, mutually, all potentially broad or ambiguous terms used in dealing with difficult matters probably would bog down the negotiations completely. Thus it now is the difficult responsibility of the Arbitrator to find the reasonable meaning of the disputed language in the specific context in which the parties negotiated it. That context includes all other relevant terms of the 1971 Agreement, plus any relevant background of earlier agreements, regulations, and practices."

The parties' presentations here particularly stress two sentences in Article XVI: (1) The Union emphasizes that the last sentence in the introductory paragraph makes clear that all discipline must be for "just cause" and that any grievance protesting a suspension or discharge "could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay." (2) The USPS, in turn, emphasizes that the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 renders the 30-day advance notice requirement in major discipline cases inapplicable and says that the "employee may be immediately removed from pay status" where there is reasonable basis for believing the employee guilty of a crime for which a prison sentence may be imposed. Neither party suggests, of course, that either sentence can be read in isolation from the other--both parties appear to recognize that an indefinite suspension in a "crimes case" represents disciplinary action which must be for "just cause." 29

The last sentence in Section 3 includes language which traces back through various Civil Service Regulations to the 1944 Veteran's Preference Act and arguably represents some kind of projection into the 1971 Agreement of policies developed by the Civil Service Commission. Section 3 as a whole consists of four sentences which seem addressed primarily, if not entirely, to the requirement of advance notice in all cases of discharge or suspension for more than 30 days. The last sentence, however, is by no means unique in referring to a "non-pay" status for a suspended employee: both the second and third sentences include similar language. The third sentence recognizes the right of "preference eligible" employees to elect to appeal to the Civil Service Commission while remaining on the rolls in "non-pay status" 30 and this immediately precedes the last sentence dealing with "crimes cases." Since all of these provisions can be traced to earlier Civil Service Commission policies reaching back to 1944, it seems obvious that the parties' negotiators on July 20, 1971 either were aware, or should have been, of the existing policies of the Civil Service Commission in respect to USPS "adverse actions."

Given the history of Civil Service Commission Regulations and Post Office Department (and USPS) practices up to July 20, 1971, moreover, it also may be inferred that the Union negotiators were aware--or should have been--that in "crimes cases" it was not the USPS policy to award remedial back pay to a properly suspended employee who later was found innocent. 31

Thus there is no reason to doubt that up to July 20, 1971 the USPS (1) regarded its reasonable belief in a "crimes case" that the employee had committed an imprisonable crime as providing lawful reason for suspending the employee promptly without pay until guilt or innocence could be established, and deemed it clear that (2) there would be no right to retroactive remedial back pay if the employee's innocence later were established. 32

That is not the ultimate question to be decided here, however. The real issue is whether it can be found that the negotiators for all parties in July of 1971 reasonably could--or should--have understood that such existing USPS policies might continue without change under Article XVI. This key question must be evaluated in light of those dominant features of Article XVI which unmistakably and dramatically departed from the past: 33

First, an employee could be suspended or discharged prior to July 20, 1971 "for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service" under Article X, Section C of the March 9, 1968 POD Agreement with the respective Postal Unions. The new Article XVI declared that discharge or suspension could be imposed only for "just cause." 34

Second, a USPS employee who was suspended or discharged prior to July 20, 1971 could not file a grievance through the Union. The avenues for possible redress were appeal either (1) to the Civil Service Commission, or (2) to the USPS Regional Director (and ultimately to the Department's Board of Appeals and Review) with Management's ultimate decision being "final" (save for the possibility of seeking a "court ruling"). The new Article XVI entitled the employee, through the Union, to press a grievance into arbitration where the Arbitrator's ruling concerning "just cause" for the disciplinary action would be "final and binding" under Article XV. 35

Third, there was no provision in the 1968 Agreement to authorize the awarding of remedial back pay in any "adverse action" in a "crimes case." In contrast, the new Article XVI spelled out that "reinstatement and restitution, including back pay" could result from use of the grievance/arbitration procedure. 36

Given these fundamental changes wrought through collective bargaining, obviously departing from traditional Civil Service policies and procedures, it is inconceivable that the sophisticated negotiators for the USPS in 1971 reasonably could have believed that the suspension of an employee because of alleged commission of a crime would not be subject to a full independent review in arbitration to deter- 37

mine whether the suspension was for "just cause" and whether remedial action, including back pay, might be appropriate. This conclusion seems unavoidable even under the language of the last sentence in Section 3, in itself, since it requires that there be "reasonable cause" to believe the employee "guilty" of the alleged crime. In any grievance involving "just cause" for suspension in a "crimes case" the presence or absence of "reasonable cause" to believe the employee guilty would be an unavoidable first question. It also seems apparent that some alleged crimes could have no material bearing on an employee's ability to perform his or her job without embarrassment to the Service or impairment of efficiency or safety. Yet, as the Service concedes, there must be a "nexus" in any such case between the alleged crime and the employee's job with USPS. Whether such a "nexus" exists also is an obvious question under the "just cause" test.

38 Given these circumstances there was no reasonable basis for the negotiators to have believed in 1971 that, under the last sentence of Section 3, a good faith belief that an employee was guilty of an imprisonable offense in itself would constitute "just cause" for suspending the employee without pay, so as to bar any retroactive remedial action. Those Opinions of some Regional USPS Arbitrators in recent years which might be read to imply otherwise seem, to this extent, to be in error.

39 This, however, by no means is an end of the matter. Given the authority of the Arbitrator in every "crimes case" to determine the presence--or absence--of "just cause" for a suspension or discharge, there remains the possibility that an Arbitrator in a given case still might find "just cause" for the suspension--in whole or in part--in light of the policy considerations which underlay the pre-1971 Civil Service and USPS policy.

As earlier Civil Service rulings indicate, one prime 40 reason for imposing such a suspension lay in the unique nature of the Federal Service, and the fact that Federal employees may occupy sensitive positions in relation to the public, or appear as representatives of the Federal Service in the public mind. The Postal Service Manual in Part 442.12 reflects this aspect of employment in the USPS--

> "Postal employees are servants of the general public and their conduct, in many instances, must be subject to more restrictions and to higher standards than certain private employments. Employees are expected to conduct themselves during and outside of working hours in a manner which will reflect favorably upon the Postal Service. Although it is not the policy of the Postal Service to interfere with the private lives of employees, it does require that postal personnel be honest, reliable, trustworthy, and of good character and reputation."

Under Article XVI of the 1971 National Agreement, an 41
Arbitrator thus appropriately may consider and give appropriate weight to the special nature of USPS employment in deciding a

"just cause" issue in a "crimes case" in respect to (1) the propriety of the initial suspension, (2) the duration of the suspension, and (3) whether, and the extent to which, remedial back pay may be warranted under the particular facts of the given case.

Moreover, it is clearly possible that an Arbitrator in such a case might conclude that there was "just cause" for the suspension initially and that no back pay might be proper, in whole or in part, even though the criminal charge later was dropped. Such a possibility obviously would exist in any such case where the USPS presented convincing evidence in arbitration establishing an employee's guilt, even though the criminal charge may have been dropped in the meantime. It also seems possible that an Arbitrator might conclude, on the basis of the unique facts in a given case, that an indictment for a serious crime (such as rape or murder) in itself would make it unreasonable to continue an employee in a position requiring routine contact with the public, so as to deny remedial back pay in whole or in part. 42

In short, the following general conclusions now seem warranted in respect to the determination of "just cause" in a "crimes case" under Article XVI, as negotiated in 1971: 43

(1) Every suspension effected under the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 is reviewable in arbitration to the same extent as any other suspension to determine whether "just cause" for the disciplinary action has been shown; 44

(2) Such a review in arbitration necessarily involves considering at least (a) the presence or absence of "reasonable cause" to believe the employee guilty of the crime alleged, and (b) whether such a relationship exists between the alleged crime and the employee's job in the USPS as to warrant the suspension; 45

(3) An Arbitrator in any such case, when the employee has been acquitted or the prosecution dropped, also has discretion to award remedial back pay, in whole or in part, if deemed reasonable under the facts of the given case; and finally 46

(4) An Arbitrator may deem the evidence in a particular case to establish "just cause" for a suspension effected under the last sentence of Section 3, even though the charge against the employee later may have been dropped, and so withhold remedial back pay for some or all of the period of suspension. 47

In light of these basic principles, a few words may be in order concerning the ruling of the Associate Impartial Chairman in the Williams case, which involved a suspension of more than 11 months. The charge there involved an alleged sale of marijuana, where the Grievant from the beginning had asserted a defense of mistaken identity. His suspension was effected simply upon the basis of his arrest, without an indictment or preliminary hearing. Any "nexus" between the charge and his ZMT Operator job would have been attenuated at best. His suspension actually was 48 effected before a Postal Inspector had submitted an Investigative Memorandum which showed that the arrest of April 16, 1975 had been based on a warrant alleging a sale of marijuana to an undercover agent nearly 7 months earlier (on September 23, 1974) at an address which differed from the Grievant's home address (where he had been arrested). The Investigative Memorandum specifically noted that a preliminary hearing had not yet been held.

On these facts, the Associate Impartial Chairman had ample basis to find a lack of just cause for the precipitate suspension in that case. Nonetheless, the Williams decision and a number of Regional Arbitrators' decisions finding "just cause" for suspensions in "crimes cases," all were formulated without the benefit of comprehensive presentations by both parties, such as those now in hand. They accordingly are of only limited value, at best. 49

As for the grievance in Case NC-NAT-8580, it is impossible now to rule on the matter of "just cause" for the initial suspension under the general principles set forth above. This issue specifically has been reserved by the NALC for further consideration in the grievance procedure in the event that M-'s acquittal is not found to entitle him automatically to be made whole for lost earnings. Thus there appear to be at least three questions which the parties now may wish to consider fully in disposing of this grievance:

(1) Whether there in fact was a "reasonable basis" to believe M- guilty of the alleged crime; 51

(2) Whether there was a sufficient relationship between the alleged crime and M-'s job as a Carrier (or such other job to which he might have been assigned in accordance with his seniority) to warrant the initial suspension; and

(3) Whether in any event M- was returned to his job with reasonable dispatch following his acquittal.

Should the parties fail to achieve settlement of M-'s grievance in light of this Opinion, the case may be returned to the Arbitrator for final disposition.

AWARD

The specific grievance used by the parties to illustrate the interpretive problem in this case, as outlined in Marginal Paragraph 2, now should be settled in the grievance procedure in light of the Opinion herein.

BACKGROUND

These grievances raise several questions with respect to the interpretation and application of Article 16, Section 7 (Emergency Procedure) of the National Agreement. The Unions believe that an employee placed on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to 16.7 has been disciplined, that such discipline, if challenged, can be affirmed only through a Management showing of "just cause", that an employee cannot be suspended under 16.7 without first having been provided written notice of the charge made against him, and that an employee suspended in this manner must be paid for his lost time until he actually receives such written notice. The Postal Service disagrees with each of these propositions. It argues that placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to 16.7 is an administrative action rather than discipline, that Management need only show "reasonable cause" rather than "just cause" to support its action, that no written notice of a 16.7 administrative action is required, and that therefore an employee placed on this non-duty, non-pay status is not entitled to be paid until written notice is given.

The key provision in this case is of course Article 16, Section 7. Because this section is part of Article 16 (Discipline Procedure) and because both the Unions and the Postal Service rely on other provisions of Article 16 as well, a substantial portion of the entire article should be quoted:

> Section 1. Principles
>
> In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure...which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.
>
> Section 2. Discussion
> For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee... Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable... However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder...

Section 3. Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary notice in writing...which shall include an explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 4. Suspensions of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges...and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after ten (10) calendar days during which ten day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer.

Section 5. Suspensions of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case...either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance procedure... When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days advance written notice in a discharge action, but shall give such lesser number of days advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable... The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

Section 6. Indefinite Suspension - Crime Situation

A. The Employer may indefinitely suspend an employee in those cases where the Employer has reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed. In such cases, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days advance notice of indefinite suspension, but shall give such lesser number of days of advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable... The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

B. The just cause of an indefinite suspension is grievable. The arbitrator shall have the authority to reinstate and make the employee whole...

* * *

D. The Employer may take action to discharge an employee during the period of an indefinite suspension whether or not the criminal charges have been resolved, and whether or not such charges have been resolved in favor of the employee. Such action must be for just cause, and is subject to the requirements of Section 5...

Section 7. Emergency Procedure

An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U. S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to self or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than thirty (30) days or discharge the employee, the emergency action taken under this Section may be made the subject of a separate grievance.

Section 8. Review of Discipline

In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee...

The essential facts are not in dispute. J. Burch was a part-time flexible letter carrier in the Nederland, Texas post office in 1987. Management placed him on non-duty, non-pay status on June 26, 1987, pursuant to Article 16.7. It believed that he had discarded deliverable mail and that his retention on duty "may result in...loss of mail..." It did not provide Burch with advance written notice of this removal. A grievance was filed in Step 1 on July 9, 1987, protesting his placement in non-pay status. Management advised him in writing on July 27, 1987, that he was being discharged for discarding deliverable mail. Another grievance was apparently filed protesting his discharge. Arbitrator P. M. Williams ruled on September 28, 1988, that the discharge was not for "just cause" and that Burch should be reinstated with full back pay.

J. Ferrell was a full-time regular letter carrier in the Dallas, Texas post office, Spring Valley station, in 1987. Management placed him on non-duty, non-pay status on June 16, 1987, pursuant to Article 16.7. It believed that he had committed a theft of mail and that his retention on duty "may result in...loss of mail..." It did not provide Ferrell with advance written notice of this removal. A grievance was filed in Step 1 on June 26, 1987, protesting his placement in non-pay status. Management advised him in writing on June 25, 1987, that he was being discharged for theft of mail. Ferrell protested the discharge through an appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB). His appeal was settled by an agreement with the Postal Service on October 26, 1987, his discharge being reduced to a disciplinary suspension from July 30 through October 26, 1987. He was then returned to work, evidently without back pay.

Neither the Williams award nor the MSPB settlement appear to have resolved the claim made in these grievances that Burch and Ferrell were, prior to their discharges, improperly placed on non-duty, non-pay status under Article 16.7. NALC asserts that this claim should be sustained and the two men made whole for their loss of pay attributable to the 16.7 "emergency procedure" on the ground that they "were not served with written notice of the reasons for Management's action."[1] In the alternative, NALC urges that the grievances be remanded to the parties with instructions that Management "has the burden of proving that its action met the standard of just cause for discipline." APWU has intervened in this arbitration in support of NALC's claims. The Postal Service insists, on the other hand, that there is no merit in the Unions' argument.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

Three distinct issues are raised by these grievances. The first concerns the nature of Management's action under Article 16.7, namely, whether placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status through this "emergency procedure" constitutes discipline. The second concerns the level of proof necessary to validate Management's action in invoking 16.7, namely, whether it must show "just cause" or whether a mere showing of "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief") will suffice. The third concerns the existence of a notice requirement, namely, whether an employee can properly be placed on non-duty, non-pay status under 16.7 without first being provided with written notice of the charge made against him.

I - Nature of Management's Action

The Unions assert that an employee placed on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to Article 16.7 has been disciplined. The Postal Service insists that this action is essentially investigatory or administrative in nature and cannot properly be viewed as discipline.

Article 16 establishes a comprehensive discipline system for postal employees. Section 1 identifies some basic disciplinary principles, for instance, that discipline should be "corrective" rather than "punitive" and that discipline can be imposed only for "just cause." Section 2 states that when an employee commits a "minor offense", supervision may "discuss" the matter with him but that such "discussion" shall not be considered discipline. Sections 3, 4 and 5 are the typical levels of discipline - from a letter of warning (16.3) to a suspension of 14 days or less (16.4) to a suspension of more than 14 days or discharge (16.5). Section 6 contemplates an indefinite suspension in a crime situation and is plainly a permissible variation in the range of available discipline. Section 7, the subject of this dispute, is an "emergency procedure" which allows Management to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status in certain specified situations. Sections 8, 9 and 10 refer to a necessary internal managerial "review of discipline", a "veteran's preference" in the choice of a forum for contesting discipline, and a statute of limitations as to "employee discipline records."

Given this structure, the strong presumption must be that all of Article 16 relates to discipline. When the parties intended some procedure to be outside the scope of Article 16, to be beyond the disciplinary principles of Article 16, they said so. Thus, Section 2 expressly provides that supervisory "discussions" of the "minor offenses" of employees "are not considered discipline..." No such disclaimer is found in Section 7. Nowhere did the parties state that placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to Section 7 "is not considered discipline..." Had that been their wish, it would have been a simple matter to write those words into the "emergency procedure."

The employee misconduct which may trigger Management's use of Section 7 is "intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules or regulations." The very same acts of misconduct are cited in Section 1 as constituting "just cause" for discipline. It is difficult to understand the Postal Service view that a suspension for such misconduct is discipline when Management invokes Section 4 or 5 but is not discipline when Management invokes Section 7. The impact on the employee is much the same in all three situations. The employee is taken off of the job against his will and placed on non-duty, non-pay status because of such misconduct. He is denied work and wages. He is punished, that is, suspended, because Management believes he is intoxicated or has stolen something or has ignored safety rules. Indeed, the suspension under Section 7 is more burdensome for the employee because its length is indeterminate and because he may not have been given written notice of the charge against him, conditions which can only serve to heighten his sense of concern.

The Postal Service sees Section 7, the "emergency procedure", as an independent provision unrelated to the typical suspension arrangements found in Sections 4 and 5. However, when one reviews the history of this provision and the overall structure of Article 16, it seems to me that Section 7 should more appropriately be construed as a broad exception to Sections 4 and 5. The "emergency procedure" is, as those words indicate, a recognition that situations do arise where supervision must act "immediately" in suspending an employee because of immediate risks or dangers which do not allow the more time-consuming procedures of Sections 4 and 5. Thus, Section 7 is a permissible variation from the conventional suspensions contemplated by the parties. But it is a suspension nonetheless, one which must be considered an integral part of the Article 16 "discipline procedure."

My conclusion, accordingly, is that a Section 7 suspension should in appropriate circumstances be regarded as discipline. I emphasize "appropriate circumstances" because of one other significant factor. Not all of the Section 7 situations which prompt Management's use of the "emergency procedure" involve employee misconduct. Management can invoke Section 7 when the employee's retention on the job (1) "may result in damage to...property or loss of mail or funds" or (2) "may be injurious to self or others." These situations may or may not involve employee misconduct. Suppose, for example, an employee drives a postal vehicle on a delivery route and suffers from a physical ailment which is ordinarily kept under control through medication. Suppose further that, notwithstanding the medication, he suddenly loses control and can no longer drive the vehicle safely although he is unaware of this reality. No doubt Management would invoke Section 7 because the employee "may be injurious to self or others." But because there is no real misconduct, he is not subject to discipline. He is placed on non-duty, non-pay status in the interest of safety. The "emergency procedure", in other words, is broad enough to encompass displacement from the job for non-disciplinary reasons.

These observations suggest the answer to the first issue. When Management places an employee on non-duty, non-pay status because of misconduct covered by Section 7, the employee has been disciplined. That would be true of both grievants in this case, Burch and Ferrell. But when Management places an employee on such status for reasons stated in Section 7 which do not involve misconduct, the employee should not be regarded as having been disciplined. With this distinction in mind, I turn to the next issue.

II - Level of Proof Necessary

The Unions assert that any Management action taken pursuant to the Section 7 "emergency procedure" must be supported by "just cause." The Postal Service insists that "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief") is all that need be shown.

My response to this disagreement depends, in large part, upon how the Section 7 "emergency" action is characterized. If that action is discipline for alleged misconduct, then Management is subject to a "just cause" test. To quote from Section 1, "No employee may be disciplined...except for just cause." If, on the other hand, that action is not prompted by misconduct and hence is not discipline, the "just cause" standard is not applicable. Management then need only show "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief"), a test which is easier to satisfy.

One important caveat should be noted. "Just cause" is not an absolute concept. Its impact, from the standpoint of the degree of proof required in a given case, can be somewhat elastic. For instance, arbitrators ordinarily use a "preponderance of the evidence" rule or some similar standard in deciding fact questions in a discipline dispute. Sometimes, however, a higher degree of proof is required where the alleged misconduct includes an element of moral turpitude or criminal intent. The point is that "just cause" can be calibrated differently on the basis of the nature of the alleged misconduct.

By the same token, "just cause" may depend to some extent upon the nature of the particular disciplinary right being exercised. Section 7 grants Management a right to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status because of an "allegation" of certain misconduct (or because his retention "may" have certain harmful consequences). "Just cause" takes on a different cast in these circumstances. The level of proof required to justify this kind of "immediate..." action may be something less than would be required had Management suspended the employee under Section 4 or 5 where ten or thirty days' advance written notice of the suspension is given. To rule otherwise, to rule that the same level of proof is necessary in all suspension situations, would as a practical matter diminish Management's right to take "immediate..." action.

No generalization by the arbitrator can provide a final resolution to this kind of problem. It should be apparent that the facts of a given case are a good deal more important than any generalization in determining whether "just cause" for discipline has been established.

III - Existence of Notice Requirement

The Unions assert that an employee cannot properly be placed on non-duty, non-pay status under Section 7 without first being provided written notice of the charge made against him.[2] They contend that because the grievants did not receive such written notice, Management had no right to displace them from their jobs pursuant to Section 7 and they should be paid for the time they were suspended. The Postal Service insists that there is no written notice requirement in Section 7 and that the absence of such notice in this case in no way undermined the propriety of Management's use of the "emergency procedure."

Any analysis of this issue must begin with the suspension rules in Sections 4 and 5. When Management intends to suspend an employee under either of these sections, it must provide him with "advance written notice" of the charge against him. A Section 4 suspension (14 days or less) requires 10 days' written notice during which time the employee remains "on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer." A Section 5 suspension (more than 14 days) requires 30 days' written notice during which time the employee remains "on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer." Any suspended employee, even one subject to an indeterminate suspension under Section 7, receives these benefits, according to the language of Section 5, "unless otherwise provided herein." These words acknowledge that a suspended employee could have these notice and pay protections taken away or modified by other provisions of Article 16. That is exactly what happened in Section 7.

When the "emergency procedure" in Section 7 is properly invoked, the employee is "immediately" placed on non-duty, non-pay status. He does not have a right to remain, for any period of time, "on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer." He suffers an instant loss of pay. In short, the pay protection in Section 4 or 5 is negated by Section 7. The question here is whether the notice protection, the "advance written notice" requirement in Section 4 or 5, is likewise negated by Section 7. Or, to put the question in broader terms, is the employee suspended pursuant to the "emergency procedure" entitled to the "advance written notice" contemplated by Section 4 or 5?

There is no express mention of "advance written notice" in Section 7. Both parties rely on that silence to prove their case. The Unions argue that the silence means that the notice requirement of Section 4 or 5 has not been negated by Section 7 and must therefore apply to an employee suspended under Section 7. The Postal Service argues that this silence, when contrasted with the specific notice requirement contained in Sections 4, 5 and 6, means that the parties had no intention of establishing a notice requirement in Section 7.

The critical factor, in my opinion, is that Management was given the right to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status on the basis of certain happenings. An "immediate..." action is one that occurs instantly, without any lapse of time. Nothing intervenes between the decision to act and the act itself. That is what the term "immediately" suggests. If Management were required to provide "advance written notice" of the displacement of an employee under Section 7, it would no longer have the right to respond "immediately." The very purpose of a Section 7 "emergency procedure" is to permit an "immediate..." response by Management. The language of Section 7, by necessary implication, means that no "advance written notice" can be required in a true Section 7 situation. The notice requirement in Section 4 or 5 has indeed been negated by Section 7. Hence, Management's failure to provide such notice to Burch and Ferrell was not a violation of Article 16.

Neither the history of Article 16 nor various Management publications regarding that article convince me that a different result is justified here. There has been a great deal of confusion for years about the meaning of Section 7. That confusion is reflected in the conflicting awards of regional arbitrators.

These findings, however, do not fully resolve the dispute. The fact that no "advance written notice" is required does not mean that Management has no notice obligation whatever. The employee suspended pursuant to Section 7 has a right to grieve his suspension. He cannot effectively grieve unless he is formally made aware of the charge against him, the reason why Management has invoked Section 7. He surely is entitled to such notice within a reasonable period of time following the date of his displacement. To deny him such notice is to deny him his right under the grievance procedure to mount a credible challenge against Management's action. Indeed, Section 7 speaks of the employee remaining on non-duty, non-pay status "until disposition of the case has been had." That "disposition" could hardly be possible without formal notice to the employee so that he has an opportunity to tell Management his side of the story. Fundamental fairness requires no less.

Whether Burch and Ferrell received formal notice of the charges against them is not really clear from the record in this case. Assuming they did, there is no evidence with respect to whether such notice was given within a reasonable period after they were displaced from their jobs. These are fact questions which can best be developed and argued at the regional level. These matters are therefore remanded to Step 3 of the grievance procedure for further consideration.

AWARD

The grievances are remanded to Step 3 of the grievance procedure for further consideration in light of the views expressed in this opinion.

The dispute in this case is resolved on the basis set forth in the above Findings.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

On January 4, 2001, the Postal Service sent a letter to the American Postal Workers Union stating:

> In accordance with the provisions of Article 15, the Postal Service is initiating a dispute at Step 4 of the grievance procedure on the following interpretive issue:
>
> > Whether the National Agreement specifics [sic] that there is only one management official who may issue discipline to each employee.
>
> The facts giving rise to this dispute are:
>
> > The American Postal Workers at the local level, in Case E98C-1E-D 00036123, asserts that the Postal Service violated the National Agreement when a attendance coordinator supervisor, whose responsibility encompasses attendance control, issued discipline.
> The Postal Service's position is that the allocation of responsibility for issuing discipline is a management right pursuant to Article 3 of the National Agreement. Therefore, the assignment of authority to an attendance coordinator supervisor is consistent with the National Agreement.

After discussion at Step 4 failed to resolve this matter, the APWU appealed the dispute to National arbitration. The National Postal Mail Handlers Union, which has a similar dispute with the Postal Service, intervened in this case at arbitration.

At arbitration, the Unions made it clear that they are not contending that only the employee's immediate supervisor can issue discipline in attendance related (or other) matters, but that the National Agreement contemplated that this responsibility "normally" would be exercised by this official.[1]

The key contractual provision relied on by the Unions is Article 16.8, but they stress that provision needs to be read in context of other provisions, particularly Article 16.1, Article 16.2 and Article 15.2 (Step 1). The Postal Service insists that it has never agreed to limit its explicit, statutory right, recognized in Article 3, to entrust supervisors and managers with the authority and responsibility to maintain efficiency, good order and discipline in the workplace. These provisions of the APWU National Agreement (the NPMHU National Agreement includes corresponding provisions) state as follows:

ARTICLE 3
MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

> The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:
>
> A. To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;
> B. To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees;

[1] The parties' respective articulations of the issue in this case are not precisely the same, but the gist of the dispute is clear enough and was fully addressed by all of the parties. No party has raised any procedural objection to the arbitrator deciding the dispute as it was presented at arbitration.

C. To maintain the efficiency of the operations entrusted to it;

D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Step 1:

(a) Any employee who feels aggrieved must discuss the grievance with the employee's immediate supervisor within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the employee or the Union first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause....

(b) In any such discussion the supervisor shall have authority to settle the grievance....

ARTICLE 16
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 1. Principles

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

Section 2. Discussion

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such a discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Section 8. Review of Discipline

In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and > concurred in by the installation head or designee.

> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

The relevant contractual provisions essentially have been in effect since the first National Agreement was negotiated in 1971.

The APWU and the NPMHU each rely, in part, on contract interpretation manuals they have negotiated with the Postal Service. Both the APWU/USPS Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM), finalized in June 2004, and the NPMHU/USPS Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM), finalized in July 2003, in discussing Article 16.8 of the respective National Agreement, state: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action."[2] The Postal Service agrees that the Mail Handler CIM may be cited in this

proceeding, but insists that the APWU JCIM may not be cited at National level arbitration.[3]

For at least 25 years, the Postal Service at some facilities has assigned supervisors to monitor employee attendance, and those supervisors typically are not the employees' floor supervisors. At the heart of the present dispute is whether these attendance control supervisors properly may issue discipline for attendance violations or whether, at least normally, such discipline has to be issued by the employee's "immediate supervisor" who oversees the employee's work performance on a day-to-day basis.

The Unions point out that the relevant contractual provisions, for the most part, reflect the practices that were in effect prior to Postal Reorganization, including supervisors' responsibilities for counseling employees and administering discipline. In 1982, the U.S. General Accounting Office issued a report entitled "Postal Service Needs Stricter Control Over Employee Absences." In commenting on a draft of this GAO report, the Postmaster General stated:

> The Postal Service has recognized the need for more effective absence controls, and plans are under way to develop a nationally directed attendance-control program. We will examine the feasibility of more extensive reporting and tracking procedures > for unscheduled absences and have also begun discussions with the unions to explore possible areas for a joint approach to attendance-control matters.

> We believe the involvement of first-line supervision is critical in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action based upon individual circumstances. We will do nothing to diminish the first-line supervisor's responsibility for controlling absences and will not issue a "cookbook" set of rules that will relieve him of the need to use good judgment in identifying and disciplining employees with attendance problems. However, we do envision a more structured and centrally managed program that will provide a facility-level review of attendance control, possible goal setting, and active assistance to first-line supervisors in exercising their responsibilities.

The final GAO report recommended that: "The control office should notify supervisors of employees with potential attendance problems and ensure that disciplinary actions are timely and progressively severe." The GAO report also stated: "The Service believes as we do that the involvement of firstline supervision is critical in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action based upon individual circumstances."

A Management Instruction relating to Attendance Control issued soon after the GAO report on October 1, 1983 (EL-510-83-9) states: "Each supervisor continues to have direct responsibility for ensuring the regular and dependable attendance of his subordinate employees." A Supervisor's Guide to Attendance Improvement issued in May 1984 (EL-501) states: "Effective control of attendance can only be accomplished at the individual employee level. Therefore, the direct responsibility for effective attendance improvement lies at the level of the immediate supervisor." The Unions assert, as the APWU's Director of Industrial Relations Greg Bell testified, that this is and has been the historical practice at the Postal Service. An August 1990 Supervisor's Guide to Handling Grievances (EL-921), the Unions add, implicitly recognizes that the employee's immediate supervisor who handles grievances at Step 1 is also the supervisor who issues discipline, when it states: "Just because the discipline was fully discussed at the time of issuance is no reason for the supervisor to breeze through Step 1 with a quick, 'Grievance Denied.'"

The Unions also point to a Step 4 settlement reached in March 2003 between the Postal Service and the APWU relating to implementation of the Postal Service Resource Management Database and its web-based enterprise Resource Management System, in which the parties agreed:

> RMD/eRMS enables local management to establish a set number of absences used to ensure that employee attendance records are being reviewed by their supervisor. However, it is the supervisor's review of the attendance record and the supervisor's determination on a case-by-case basis in light of all relevant evidence and circumstances, not any set number of absences, that determine whether corrective action is warranted. Any rule setting a fixed amount or percentage of sick leave usage after which an employee will be, as a > matter of course, automatically disciplined is inconsistent with the National Agreement and applicable handbooks and manuals. Any corrective action that results from the attendance reviews must be in accordance with Article 16 of the National Agreement.

The Unions do not claim that this settlement was intended to resolve the present dispute -- which predates the settlement -- but they do contend that the stated goal is not consistent with the Postal Service's position that, at its sole discretion, it may bypass the immediate supervisor and delegate the responsibility to discipline employees for absenteeism to any management official.

The Postal Service presented testimony regarding an unwritten attendance control program in effect at the JFK Airport facility in New York City for at least the past 25 years. There is a leave administrator assigned on each tour (600+ employees) who monitors attendance and handles all aspects of leave administration. This leave administrator has the responsibility to administer discipline related to attendance and leave. The floor supervisors review their employees' attendance status with the leave administrators on average once every pay period. A management witness said it would be rare for a leave administrator to issue discipline without having first consulted with the employee's floor supervisor. The leave administrator also has access to the employee's personnel file, if needed. Step 1 grievances relating to discipline issued by the leave administrators to Mail Handler employees at JFK are handled by the leave administrators, whereas grievances from APWU employees are handled by the floor supervisors, based on the APWU's choice. The Management witness estimated that 30-35% of the APWU grievances are resolved or settled at Step 1 by removing the discipline.

Sandra Savoie, a headquarters Labor Relations Specialist, testified to the assignment of attendance supervisors in Dayton, Ohio in the late 1970s and early 1980s when she worked there. Those supervisors discussed attendance issues with employees and issued discipline, when warranted. She also testified to a variety of other contexts in which supervisors other than an employee's immediate floor supervisor have imposed discipline for a variety of misconduct and noted there are situations where employees have multiple floor supervisors during the course of their work day.

APWU POSITION

The APWU contends that the parties have agreed that the immediate supervisor shall normally be responsible for the imposition of discipline. The key issue is the interpretation of the term "supervisor" used in Article 16.8. The APWU argues that the Postal Service's contention that the term "supervisor" refers to any management official, and therefore, any management official can impose discipline on a craft employee makes no sense either in the context of Article 16 or the parties' bargaining history and practice.

Prior to Postal Reorganization, postal regulations distinguished between Directors, Postmasters and Supervisors, and specifically assigned both the responsibility of giving counsel and advice to employees and, then, imposing discipline, especially after counseling fails, only to supervisors. This allocation of responsibility, the APWU asserts, was carried forward into collective bargaining. Article 16 lays out the steps of progressive discipline. The first time the term "supervisor" is used in Article 16 is in Section 2, which assigns the specific task of discussing minor offenses with the employee to the supervisor. Obviously, the only official who normally would have enough day-to-day contact to observe and discuss minor offenses is the employee's immediate supervisor. Any lack of clarity on the matter is resolved by the further requirement that such discussions be held "in private between the employee and supervisor." In context, it is clear that the supervisor referred to in Section 2 is the immediate supervisor, the official with day-to-day working contact with the employee, not someone in another building or off-site computerized attendance control office.

The next time the term "supervisor" is used in Article 16 is in Section 8, which is the final point in the progressive discipline process. There is no reason to believe, the APWU maintains, that the term "supervisor" as used in Section 8 would have any different meaning than in Section 2. There also appears to be no reason why the official who is responsible for ensuring the employee has been given adequate private guidance on his responsibilities (and maybe the only official who knows this guidance has been given), would not also normally be responsible for determining that this guidance has not worked and that suspension or termination is called for. This is particularly so in the realm of absenteeism where the Postal Service has repeatedly assured the Unions that the immediate supervisor will play the central role in attendance control and management has specifically assigned the immediate supervisor the task of responding to requests for scheduled and unscheduled absences (EL-510-83-9).

This application of the term "supervisor" also is consistent with the definition of that term in Section 113.2(b) of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) which states that a "supervisor" is "one who has a direct responsibility for ensuring the accomplishment of work through the effort of others." The concept of "direct responsibility" obviously refers to officials with direct contact with craft employees in their work capacity, a matter confirmed by numerous other provisions of the ELM in which the "supervisor" is responsible for performance evaluations of employees. The APWU argues it is simply not plausible to believe that the term "supervisor" means one thing for the purposes of private, non-disciplinary discussions, performance evaluations, or handling scheduled and unscheduled absences, but something completely different for purposes of imposition of discipline.

The APWU insists that while the contract, as well as Postal Manuals, clearly support the Unions' interpretation of "supervisor", the terms of the JCIM definitely resolve the matter. The JCIM provides the following binding guidance with respect to Article 16.8: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action...."

The APWU freely concedes that "normally" does not mean "always", and that there may be "abnormal" circumstances which justify delegating imposition of discipline to someone other than the employee's immediate supervisor. Both Union and Postal Service witnesses provided a number of examples of such situations, all of which involved unusual operational circumstances, beyond the fact that an employee is being disciplined. The normal practice, however, is for discipline to be issued by the immediate supervisor.

The APWU rejects the Postal Service's contention that if the parties had intended to limit the imposition of discipline to "immediate supervisors" they would have used that term as they did in subparagraph (a) of Article 15.2 (Step 1). The APWU maintains this is not a tenable argument because it does not explain the binding guidance of the JCIM (or the Mail Handler's CIM) and it also ignores the purpose and structure of Article 15. It is crucial to define with precision exactly when and with whom grievances must be filed because rights are waived (and there is potential liability) if grievances are not timely filed. There is no agreement -- as there is with respect to Article 16 -- that the role of the immediate supervisor in handling the first step is only the "normal" practice. Moreover, the APWU asserts, this line of argument proves too much. If the Postal Service is correct that every time the parties fail to condition the term "supervisor" with "immediate" it, by default, refers to all levels of management, that would apply to the use of the term "supervisor" in subparagraph (b) and subsequent subparagraphs of Article 15.2 (Step 1). Yet, it is clear from the context that those references to "supervisor" mean immediate supervisor.

The APWU insists that the failure to condition "supervisor" with "immediate" proves nothing, and that in order to surmise the intended application of the term both its context and history must be examined. These make it perfectly clear that "supervisor" means -- at least normally -- immediate supervisor. This context is further clarified by the admonition in Article 15.4 that: "The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement of substantially all grievances...at the lowest possible step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end." It simply defies logic and experience to suggest that reasonable settlements at the lowest level are likely when supervisors are reviewing -- not their own decisions -- but the decisions of someone labeled an attendance control expert or specialist whom the supervisor may or may not interact with or know.

The Postal Service has cited a decision of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, USPS v. NALC, 847 F.2d 775 (1988), in which the court stated that the "Collective Bargaining Agreement does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice." The APWU points out that this decision, in which the court referenced, but then ignored the principles of the Steelworkers Trilogy, is not consistent with the applicable law in the District of Columbia Circuit. In any event, the APWU stresses, the Unions do not contend that only the immediate supervisor may issue discipline, only that the contract contemplates that he or she "normally" will do so, and the Eleventh Circuit's opinion was issued long before the parties' binding agreement in the JCIM that this is in fact the correct application of Article 16.8.

The APWU stresses that the requirement that the official making the initial disciplinary decisions normally be the employee's immediate supervisor meets the Unions' concern that, particularly in attendance related matters, discipline will not be meted out based on a cookbook or mathematical formula, but rather will be leavened by human interaction with an official with direct contact and responsibility for the worker. The Unions also recognize that there are common sense exceptions to this rule. By contrast, the Postal Service has not articulated any interest or need supporting its interpretation, aside from its desire to preserve unfettered discretion wherever possible.

Finally, the APWU insists there is no agreement between the parties not to cite or reference the JCIM at the National level. The National Agreement not only contains no restriction on the citability of the JCIM, but the Memorandum of Understanding directing creation of the JCIM states that the parties "will be bound by these joint interpretations." There also is nothing in the JCIM itself which states that the parties are foreclosed from referencing it in National arbitration.

NPMHU POSITION

The NPMHU's position parallels that of the APWU. It points out, however, that there is no dispute that the Mail Handler CIM may be cited in National arbitration.

The NPMHU believes it is significant that Article 16.8 uses the specific term "supervisor" and not a more general term such as "manager", "management official" or "employer". The word "supervisor" suggests a specific individual who has direct, personal, and ongoing contact with the employee. The term plainly refers to a person who has the responsibility for overseeing employees' day-to-day activities. Any argument that because the parties could have used the term "immediate supervisor" the reference to "supervisor" should not be interpreted to mean immediate supervisor is completely undercut by the CIM jointly developed by the Postal Service and the Mail Handlers. The CIM specifically and unequivocally interprets the provisions of Article 16.8 to mean that "[i]t is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action." Therefore the only remaining question should be what constitutes an abnormal circumstance that would justify issuance of discipline by someone other than the immediate supervisor.

The NPMHU submits that poor attendance by an employee is not, in and of itself, an abnormal circumstance that makes it impossible or inappropriate for the employee's immediate supervisor to issue discipline. Rather, poor attendance is a routine type of misconduct and, by its very nature, generally does not require emergency action or an immediate response in the absence of an immediate supervisor. A requirement that normally discipline be initiated by an employee's immediate supervisor is also consistent with other provisions of Section 16.1 of the National Agreement in which the parties have agreed that in administering discipline a basic principle shall be that discipline shall be corrective in nature, rather than punitive, and that there shall be just cause for any discipline that is issued. Because attendance control supervisors lack critical information about an employee's overall job performance, they cannot responsibly judge which sanctions will be corrective and which punitive. Similarly it is only the immediate supervisor, in contrast to an attendance control supervisor, who is in a direct supervisory relationship with the employee and therefore is in a position to balance the employee's alleged infraction against any mitigating factors to determine whether just cause for discipline exists.

The NPMHU points out that in 1995 the Postal Service and the National Rural Letter Carriers Association -- which was one of the parties to the 1971 National Agreement which first included the language now found in Article 16.8 of the NPMHU and APWU Agreements -- agreed with the Postal Service to change that provision in the NRLCA National Agreement. They agreed to remove any reference to a supervisor imposing discipline. Moreover, in a jointly prepared and published "analysis of changes" the parties explicitly acknowledged that this change "clarifies the parties' position that discipline may be imposed by a manager other than the rural carrier's supervisor."[4] The NPMHU insists that the Postal Service may not seek to achieve by fiat against the NPMHU and the APWU what it has accomplished through negotiations with the NRLCA.

The NPMHU also asserts that the evidence in the record shows that the Postal Service's attendance control system, as initially conceived in the early 1980s, was not designed to remove the traditional disciplinary role of the immediate supervisor. Rather attendance control supervisors were to assist the immediate supervisor by flagging attendance related problems. The evidence in this case as to prior practice shows that discipline, including attendance related discipline, principally has been handled by the immediate supervisor. Even the management testimony regarding the practice at JFK shows that immediate supervisors are involved in the decisions to impose discipline and that it would be rare for a leave administrator to issue discipline without having consulted with the supervisor regarding the individual employee.

To the extent the Postal Service contends it can divide discipline into subject areas so that employees are subject to discipline by multiple "immediate supervisors" for one job, which implicitly concedes that only the immediate supervisor may issue discipline as set forth in the CIM, its position contradicts the clear language of the ELM. Section

[4] The parties stipulated at this arbitration hearing that the Postal Service would have presented testimony that the NRLCA and the Postal Service bargaining representatives agreed at the bargaining table that this change was cosmetic in nature.

122(b) of the ELM provides that each position should be "subject to the line authority of only one higher position." Similarly, Section 143.21 states that "[s]ubordinate positions never report administratively to more than one higher level supervisor." As the ELM makes clear, the NPMHU argues, there is only one supervisor for each position. It is that supervisor who, under Section 16.8 of the National Agreement, normally must impose suspension or discharge. The NPMHU also maintains that if an individual employee has multiple immediate supervisors, as the Postal Service seems to argue is possible, then no individual supervisor will have the kind of direct knowledge about the employee that is necessary for discipline to meet the fundamental requirements of Article 16, namely that discipline be corrective in nature and imposed only for just cause.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Postal Service insists it has not agreed to forego its managerial right and duty to select which supervisory or management officials have responsibility to discipline employees. A "supervisor", as that term is understood in labor relations, is one who is authorized by an employer to maintain discipline and order in the workplace. The term "supervisor" has that functional meaning in the National Labor Relations Act, which provides the foundation for postal labor relations. That definition likely informed the meaning of that term when the parties negotiated their initial contract in 1970. Because postal facilities typically have multiple layers of supervisors and managers, that definition includes all levels of supervisors and managers, as all have been invested with the responsibility to maintain efficiency and order in the workplace. Only where there is some explicit limit as, for example, in Article 15.2 (Step 1) do the contracts refer to a particular level of supervision.

Article 3 says the Postal Service may discipline employees. Significantly, it does not say only an employee's immediate supervisor may impose discipline. Article 16 lists three levels of progressive discipline and discusses discipline at length, but includes no limitation on the Postal Service's right to entrust any particular level of supervisors with the authority and responsibility to maintain discipline. Neither Union, the Postal Service stresses, offered any evidence that the parties ever discussed such fundamental limits on the Postal Service's ability to manage the efficiency of its workers.

The Postal Service insists that Article 16.8 only provides a general rule that no supervisor may impose substantial discipline until after the discipline has been approved by the top managerial official in the facility (or designee). This provision reinforces the Postal Service's position, because there is no limitation on who may discipline employees, only who must review it in the first instance. In contrast, the use of the term "immediate supervisor" in Articles 15 and 17[5] shows the parties knew very well how to use that phrase when they wanted to limit or define which supervisors were to be involved in an activity.

The Postal Service maintains that the predominant weight of postal and private arbitral awards demonstrate that employers retain discretion to entrust authority in persons and positions of their choice. Moreover, the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has ruled on the issue in contention here (USPS v. NALC). In vacating a regular-level arbitral award that overturned the removal of an employee who had stolen mail because a higher level supervisor had terminated the employee, the court explained that the collective bargaining agreement "does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice." Given that the parties have made no material changes to the relevant parts of the contract since that decision, the Postal Service submits it is binding in this case.

Testimony of Postal Service witnesses further demonstrates that the Postal Service retains discretion to assign responsibility to its supervisors and managers to maintain discipline and the Postal Service has exercised such authority for over three decades. Those witnesses testified without contradiction that at JFK in New York City and in Dayton the Postal Service has assigned responsibility for monitoring irregular attendance to supervisors who do not work directly with the employees, and those leave administrators administer discipline. The witnesses also testified without contradiction that an employee may work for multiple floor supervisors on any given day. Significantly there is no restriction in either Union's contract that prohibits the Postal Service from entrusting different types of supervisors to monitor different kinds of employee activity, as the Service deems most efficient in carrying out its responsibility.

Provisions in Article 16.6 and 16.7 which state that "the Employer" may indefinitely suspend employees where the Employer has reasonable cause to believe the employee is guilty of certain crimes and may place employees off-duty under certain circumstances further erode the Unions' claim that only an employee's immediate supervisor may discipline an employee.

The Postal Service also contends that the phrase "immediate supervisor" does not have the restrictive meaning asserted by the Unions. In 1984 the APWU and the Postal Service agreed that the meaning of "immediate supervisor" for purposes of Article 15.2 (Step 1) must be determined locally. More recently, the National parties have varied that general rule as it applies to part-time flexible employees working outside their home office by establishing a presumption that Step 1 grievances will be handled at the facility where the grievance arose. Also, as testified to at arbitration, the Mail Handlers at the JFK facility have met with leave administrators at Step 1 to discuss attendance related discipline for over eight years. Accordingly, even if Article 16 were interpreted by reference to Article 15, which it should not be, the phrase "immediate supervisor" does not have the restricted meaning sought by the APWU.

The Postal Service argues that the joint interpretive manuals, the JCIM and the CIM, also do not support the Unions' position in this case. In the first place, each manual specifically disclaims any intention to vary the terms of the contract. Accordingly, if the National Agreement does not contain a limitation on the right to assign responsibility to discipline, the interpretation manual cannot create it. Moreover, even if the manual were a commitment, it only states "normally the responsibility...," which plainly means such responsibilities are not exclusive. Rather than being a commitment or a restriction, that statement is no more than a description of a way the Postal Service traditionally has disciplined employees -- supervisors normally do so. Simply because in the run of cases "immediate supervisors" normally discipline their employees, however, does not reflect an agreement that only such supervisors may do so; nor is the statement in the manuals a waiver of the rights and responsibilities conferred by Congress upon the Postal Service in the Postal Reorganization Act.

The Postal Service also argues that there is a major difference between a description of what normally happens and an agreement that only that process is authorized. The Postal Service has never agreed that normally discipline has to be issued by the immediate supervisor, rather, the statement in the manuals means it is a normal responsibility of an immediate supervisor to discipline employees, not that other supervisors and managers are prohibited from maintaining good order and discipline, too.

The Postal Service states that the manuals describe the assignment by the Postal Service of the normal responsibility to initiate discipline to first level supervisors. That responsibility is normally conferred on one or more "floor" supervisors with respect to employee productivity and upon other first level supervisors with respect to monitoring unscheduled absences. As such, the manuals describe normal practices, but they do not prohibit the Postal Service from also assigning or reassigning those responsibilities to other management representatives, for example, the next level of supervisor, or bar those supervisors and managers from exercising their own responsibilities to maintain order and discipline in the workplace.

The Postal Service insists there is no contractual requirement that supervisors with the authority to discipline must possess a certain level of knowledge of the employee to be disciplined. Information required to correct and to discipline employees is available to managers on an as needed basis.

The Postal Service contends that use of the term "immediate supervisor" in Article 15 does not support the Unions' view that the term must also apply elsewhere in the contracts. There is no reason an immediate supervisor who is authorized to adjust a grievance at Step 1 could not correct a mistake made by a colleague or even a superior. There also is no evidence that attendance control supervisors are higher level supervisors than the employee's floor level supervisor who may handle the Step 1 grievance.

The Postal Service argues that internal postal guidelines cited by the Unions do not reflect contractual obligations and are subject to change by the Postal Service.

The NPMHU has asserted that Section 113.2 of the ELM defines a supervisor as meaning a person who has no subordinates with managerial responsibility, thus indicating only first level supervisors meet that definition. The Postal Service maintains there is no evidence that the parties understood that particular definition of supervisor to apply whenever the term supervisor is used in the collective bargaining agreement. Indeed, the cited version of the ELM was written long after the parties negotiated their initial collective bargaining agreement, which included the provisions at issue here. Moreover, if the NPMHU were correct, there would be no reason to limit the breadth of positions covered by the parties' understandings of the term "supervisor" by inserting the modifier "immediate" before "supervisor" in Articles 15.2 and 17.3. Other sections of the ELM also use the term "supervisor" in a broader context. Finally, even assuming that the ELM and the guidelines cited by the APWU refer only to a first level supervisor, the Postal Service is free to change that restriction whenever it wishes because the right to designate the individuals in whom to repose authority and responsibility to maintain order and discipline in the workplace is not subject to compulsory bargaining.

the issue of whether the JCIM may be cited in this case, the Postal Service maintains that both the introductory language of the JCIM and the testimony presented at arbitration regarding the parties' adoption of that document establish that there was an agreement by the parties that it would not be cited at National arbitration. Moreover, if the parties decide to change that agreement they will also need to resolve how the JCIM may be cited.

FINDINGS

Citation of JCIM in National Arbitration

The 2000-2003 APWU National Agreement includes the following Memorandum of Understanding:

> Re: Joint Contract Interpretation Manual
> The United States Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union have engaged in extensive discussion on ways to improve the parties' workplace relationship, as well as ways to improve the Grievance/Arbitration procedure. Accordingly, the parties have agreed to establish a joint contract manual that will contain the joint interpretation of contract provisions. The parties will be bound by these joint interpretations and grievances will not be filed asserting a position contrary to a joint interpretation. The parties agree to initiate the process of establishing a joint contract interpretation manual no later than 90 days from the signing of this agreement.

The parties finalized the JCIM in June 2004. The Introduction and Preface, in relevant part, state as follows:

> INTRODUCTION
> The United States Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union have engaged in extensive discussion on ways to enhance the parties' workplace relationship, including methods to improve the Grievance/ Arbitration procedure. Consistent with that goal, the parties agreed to jointly establish a manual which outlines areas of agreement on contract application.

This Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) represents the mutual agreement of the national parties on the interpretation/ application of the issues discussed in this document and no inference should be drawn from the absence of national settlements, agreements or arbitration awards.

A primary purpose of this JCIM is to provide the local parties with guidance and to require consistency with contract compliance. The parties are bound by this manual and grievances should not be initiated which assert a position contrary to the JCIM.

PREFACE

The JCIM is self-explanatory and is not intended to, nor does it, increase or decrease the rights, responsibilities or benefits of the parties under the National Agreement and it shall be applied by the parties at the lower grievance steps in an effort to settle grievances at the lowest possible level.

If introduced in area/regional level arbitration, the JCIM will speak for itself and the parties' advocates will not seek testimony on its content.

The evidence shows that prior to mutual adoption of the above language, the APWU modified a Postal Service proposal by deleting the words "at all levels" following the reference to "[t]he parties" in the last sentence of the Introduction, and,

added the words "in area/regional level" before the reference to "arbitration" in the second paragraph of the Preface. Testimony as to communications between certain representatives of the parties regarding these APWU changes does not all march in one direction, but there is little question that the Postal Service believed the APWU position was that the JCIM could not be cited in National arbitration. APWU President William Burrus, who made the changes, denies this was the intent, although there is testimony that at least one high-ranking APWU official indicated the contrary to a high level Postal Service official.

In any event, there is no language in the JCIM or any other agreement that explicitly addresses citation of the JCIM in National arbitration. Moreover, in the present proceeding top officials of both parties stated it was their position that once the parties agreed on the substance of the JCIM the parties should live by it at all levels. This position is consistent with both the MOU in the National Agreement that led to adoption of the JCIM and statements in the JCIM Introduction that it "represents the agreement of the national parties on the interpretation/ application of the issues discussed in this document..." and that "[t]he parties are bound by this manual...."

The Postal Service legitimately raises the point that if it thought it would be permissible for the JCIM to be cited at National arbitration it would have insisted on some agreed to criteria. As I indicated in a sidebar at the hearing, that is something the parties need to address, but for purposes of this case I think it is significant that neither party has sought to do anything but cite the agreed-to JCIM provision regarding Article 16.8 and let it speak for itself, which is precisely what the Postal Service originally proposed and conforms to the parties' agreement in the Preface that "[t]he JCIM is self-explanatory."

Furthermore, the explication of Article 16.8 in the JCIM is identical, insofar as relevant to this case, to that in the Mail Handler CIM, which there is no dispute may be cited in National arbitration. It also seems to make little sense that the parties would agree on an interpretation of a provision of their contract -- and agree that they are bound by that interpretation -- and then ask a National arbitrator to rule on an issue relating to that provision without the benefit of their agreed interpretation. One need only consider the consequences of a National arbitration decision written without awareness of a contradictory or inconsistent JCIM provision that the parties have agreed is binding on them and on all area/regional arbitrators.

Under all these circumstances, I conclude, at least for purposes of this case, that the provision of the JCIM relating to Article 16.8 may be cited in this National arbitration.

Article 16 Issue

Under Article 3 (Management Rights) the Postal Service has the right to determine which management personnel may initiate disciplinary action against employees, except as otherwise restricted by the provisions of the applicable National Agreement or applicable laws and regulations.

In administering discipline, the Postal Service is, of course, bound to comply with the requirements set forth in Article 16.1 that:

But it cannot be concluded as a general proposition that only an employee's immediate supervisor -- leaving aside for the moment who that is -- can initiate discipline or must normally initiate discipline for it to be consistent with Article 16.1. Nor is the Postal Service required to articulate a need or interest that is subject to arbitral scrutiny to support an exercise of its management rights that is not in conflict or inconsistent with its contractual obligations.

Article 16 contains no use of the term "immediate supervisor." That term is found, however, in two other provisions of the National Agreement, Articles 15.2 and 17.3. This shows that the parties, when drafting the National Agreement, had the concept of "immediate supervisor" in mind.[6]

[6] The Postal Service has entered into Step 4 agreements with both the APWU and the NPMHU which provide that who is the "immediate supervisor" of an employee at a particular installation, for purposes of Article 15.2, is to be determined locally or regionally. (Postal Service Exhibits 20 and 22.)

Thus, under general principles of contract interpretation, it is reasonable to conclude that when the parties use the term "supervisor," rather than "immediate supervisor," in a particular provision the former is not confined to the latter, absent an indication to the contrary.[7]

Article 16.8, which the Unions principally rely on, states:

> Section 8. Review of Discipline
>
> In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee.
>
> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.
>

Article 16.8 addresses the issuance of discipline (suspensions and discharges) for all offenses, not just those relating to attendance issues. It seems inappropriate, however, to attempt in this case to provide a blanket determination regarding the interpretation and application of Article 16.8's reference to the imposition of disciplinary action by "a supervisor." The underlying grievances in this case referred to in the Step 4 documents relate to attendance control supervisors issuing discipline, and that was the focus of the arbitration hearing. This decision will be confined to that particular context; that is, whether the Postal Service's use of attendance control supervisors (whatever their particular title), not only to monitor employee attendance, but to issue discipline for attendance-related offenses is in conflict or inconsistent with Article 16.8.

---

Article 16.8 focuses not on which supervisor may initiate discipline, but on the need for review and concurrence by the appropriate higher authority. The regional arbitration cases cited by the Unions where discipline imposed by a higher authority than the employee's immediate supervisor was overturned, usually on "due process" grounds, either were based on the arbitrator's finding of a lack of the necessary separate review and concurrence or premised on the arbitrator's determination that the imposition of discipline by the higher authority deprived the employee of his rights under Article 15.2, because the immediate supervisor handling the grievance at

Step 1 did not have the authority to settle the grievance.[8] Other regional arbitration decisions cited by the Postal Service have dismissed grievances protesting that discipline was imposed by a supervisor other than the employee's immediate supervisor in a variety of contexts, including issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors.

In the early 1980s when the GAO issued its report on Postal Service control of absenteeism, there is no question that the Postal Service emphasized the continuing role of first line supervisors in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action. This is reflected in contemporaneous Postal Service documents which the Unions have cited. Those documents, which set forth Postal Service policy at that time, do not, however, establish a contractual commitment to the Unions that would bar the Postal Service, for example, from assigning a supervisor the responsibility not only to monitor attendance of all or some employees at a particular facility, but also to initiate attendance-related disciplinary action, provided this is done in a manner consistent with Articles 16.1 and 15.2.

[8] The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals in a 1988 decision (USPS v. NALC) vacated a regional arbitration decision which overturned the removal of an employee who had stolen mail because the Post Master, rather than the employee's immediate supervisor, terminated the employee, which the arbitrator deemed to be a "due process" violation. On the facts of the case, the Court concluded that this determination was arbitrary or capricious, and that any procedural error was corrected and nonprejudicial. In its decision, the Court stated: "The Collective Bargaining Agreement does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice."

Evidence was presented in this case regarding the attendance control program administered at the JFK facility in New York City for at least the past 25 years. Attendance control supervisors -- referred to as leave administrators -- are responsible for attendance and leave matters for all employees on their tour. These supervisors are not at a higher level of management than the supervisors who oversee work performance on the floor, and they regularly consult with the employees' floor supervisors, in particular before imposing discipline. As described in this record, I cannot conclude that this application of discipline is inherently inconsistent with Article 16.1 or with other Postal Service commitments, in particular, the March 2003 Step 4 settlement relating to implementation of the Postal Service RMD/eRMS. At the JFK facility, Mail Handler employees file Step 1 grievances protesting discipline issued by a leave administrator with the leave administrator, whereas APWU employees do so with their floor supervisors, apparently based on each local Union's determination. The testimony indicates that the floor supervisors are fully capable of exercising Article 15.2 authority to settle grievances over discipline issued to APWU employees by leave administrators.

It also is worth pointing out that an attendance control supervisor is not excluded from the definition of "supervisor" in Section 113.2 of the ELM: "--one who has a direct responsibility for ensuring the accomplishment of work through the efforts of others. Normally a supervisor has no subordinate employees with managerial responsibility for others." An employee who fails to meet his or her obligation to report to work hinders the "accomplishment of work." The specific attendance control officers referred to in this record did not have subordinate employees with managerial responsibility for others; they were first line supervisors, albeit they specialized in attendance control. There also does not appear to be any reason why an attendance control supervisor cannot function consistent with the principles of "sound supervision" set forth in Section 372 of the ELM, provided they consult with an employee's floor supervisor, as was testified routinely is done at the JFK facility.[9]

There also is nothing in Article 16.2 that would preclude an attendance control supervisor from discussing attendance issues with an employee prior to imposition of any discipline. Nor does Article 16.3 limit who may issue a letter of warning. With appropriate access, as needed, to an employee's personnel file and consultation with an employee's work floor supervisor, an attendance control supervisor can take into account mitigating factors -- and the employee and the Union can always raise those in the grievance and arbitration procedure. An attendance control supervisor also may be in a better position to provide consistency in applying attendance-related discipline in a particular facility, so as to lessen the likelihood of uneven or disparate treatment, which is an important component of "just cause."

While the practice at many, if not most, postal facilities may have been that employees' immediate supervisors who oversee other work performance issues also have been responsible for initiating discipline for attendance matters, that has not been uniform. In addition to the JFK facility in New York and Dayton, as to which testimony was presented in this proceeding -- and where the matter apparently was not grieved -- attendance control supervisors have issued discipline at other locations, including Atlanta, Baltimore, Harrisburg and Dallas, where grievances protesting such management action were denied by regional arbitrators.[10] Thus, there has not been a sufficiently uniform and consistent practice in the application of Article 16.8 to establish that the parties mutually understood that provision to preclude issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors.

The evidence presented by the NPMHU regarding the modification of Article 16.8's counterpart in the NRLCA National Agreement in 1995 does not show that those parties agreed to a substantive change in the meaning of that provision, only that they agreed to "clarify" it. Moreover, according to a Postal Service witness, Postal Service and NRLCA representatives agreed at the bargaining table that the change in language was "cosmetic."

The APWU and NPMHU grievances underlying the present Step 4 disputes each involved a Union protest of the imposition of discipline by an attendance control supervisor on the basis that supervisor was not the employee's immediate supervisor. The preceding paragraphs basically describe the contractual and factual context at the time the present Step 4 disputes were initiated and discussed.

Subsequently, the respective parties reached agreement on the JCIM and CIM. In addressing Article 16.8, the Mail Handler CIM includes a note referring to the existence of a National level dispute "regarding whether discipline can be issued by other than the employee's immediate supervisor." This note is of some significance in that it seems to recognize that an attendance control supervisor is not the employee's "immediate supervisor." The Postal Service's acquiescence at the JFK facility in the local APWU's position that grievances protesting discipline issued by leave administrators are to be presented to the employee's floor supervisor in Step 1 also may reflect management's recognition that the leave administrators, while they may be supervisors, may not be the employee's "immediate supervisor," as that term is used in Article 15.2. Other evidence in this record further supports that conclusion

The Unions view the JCIM and CIM provisions interpreting Article 16.8 as conclusive on the matter in dispute in this case. Consistent with the parties' understandings, the interpretations in these interpretive manuals should be considered self-explanatory and binding on the parties. As the Postal Service stresses, however, both manuals explicitly state they are not intended to alter in any way the parties' rights, responsibilities or benefits under the respective National Agreement. They are intended to provide guidance as to the agreed-to meaning of specific contractual provisions.

The pertinent language in the APWU JCIM states as follows:

>
> It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action. Before a suspension or removal may be imposed, the discipline must be reviewed and concurred in by a manager who is a higher level than the initiating or issuing supervisor. This act of review and concurrence must take place prior to the discipline being issued.

The Mail Handler CIM includes exactly the same language prefaced by the statement that: "Concurrence is a specific contract requirement to the issuance of a suspension or a discharge."[11]

The key sentence in the JCIM and CIM relied on by the Unions reads: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action." I conclude that the parties intended the term "immediate supervisor" in this sentence to have the same meaning as it does in Articles 15.2 and 17.3 of the National Agreement. For reasons already stated, I conclude that, unless otherwise locally agreed,[12] this term does not refer to a supervisor, such as an attendance control supervisor who does not oversee an employee's work performance on the floor of the facility.

The Unions agree that the wording of the JCIM and CIM allow for exceptions, but they argue from the use of the words "[i]t is normally the responsibility..." that such exceptions must be confined to abnormal circumstances, as, for example, where the immediate supervisor is unavailable or compromised in some way so as not to be able to appropriately issue the discipline. In context, this language does not support such a restrictive reading. Article 16.8, which does not use the term "immediate supervisor," broadly applies to discipline for all offenses, and focuses on the requirement for review and concurrence. Notably, the following two sentences in the JCIM and CIM which address review and concurrence both use mandatory ("must") language. The sentence on which the Unions rely here is not written in mandatory terms. It is more descriptive than prescriptive. It does not, in my view, connote that a supervisor other than the employee's immediate supervisor can initiate discipline only in circumstances where it would not be feasible or appropriate for the immediate supervisor to do so.

Accordingly, for purposes of this case, issuance of attendance-related discipline by an attendance control supervisor at a particular facility, when the Postal Service deems that to better meet the needs of the Service, does not conflict with the interpretation of Article 16.8 set forth in the JCIM and CIM. Of course, the imposition of a suspension or discharge must not only be reviewed and concurred in by the appropriate higher authority, but it also must be consistent with Article 16.1 and any other applicable contract provision, and must not impair the application of Article 15.2.

The issue in this case does not lend itself to simplistic conclusions. The Unions have raised a number of legitimate concerns. The Postal Service seeks to preserve its management rights. Various provisions of the National Agreement address the Unions' concerns and impose requirements and limitations on the exercise of management rights. In the final analysis, however, the Unions have not established that issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors is precluded by Article 16.8 or other sections of the National Agreement, provided such an exercise of management authority is administered consistent with other applicable contractual provisions, as discussed in this opinion.

PROCEEDINGS

Article 15, Section 5 of the National Agreement between the United States Postal Service ("USPS" or "Employer") and the National Rural Letter Carrier's Association ("NRLCA" or "Association") provides for two-tier grievance arbitration: Article 15.5.C "National Arbitration" of "certified cases involving national interpretations" and/or "other cases which the parties agree have substantial significance"; and, Article 15.5.D "area arbitration" of "removal cases and contract cases not involving national issues". In December 2001, these Parties designated me to serve as their National Arbitrator, to hear and decide unresolved national level interpretive grievances filed at Step 4, in accordance with Article 15, Section 3.D of the National Agreement.

The record before the National Arbitrator in this case presents a fundamental conflict between the NRLCA and the United States Postal Service concerning the proper interpretation of the "review and concurrence" provision contained in Article 16, Section 6 of their National Agreement. It is not disputed that this review and concurrence language has been a fertile source of controversy over the last thirty (30) years, resulting in scores of decisions by area arbitrators interpreting and applying its provisions. The ostensible vehicle for bringing certain generic issue(s) concerning the interpretation and application of Article 16.6 to this National Arbitration, at this time, was a grievance concerning the removal of rural carrier Ms. Julie DeWitt, from the Buhl, Idaho post office. However, the DeWitt grievance, per se, is not before the National Arbitrator for decision in this proceeding.

The Grievant in that case was issued a Notice of Removal dated October 6, 2000, for allegedly driving unsafely and failing to immediately report an accident. As a defense, the NRLCA asserted that there was improper review and concurrence as required by Article 16.6. The Postal Service disagreed with the NRLCA's interpretation of Article 16.6 and the Association declared the issue to be interpretive.

After the Association referred the instant case to Step 4 of the parties' grievance procedure, the Postal Service referred to Step 4 a number of other removal grievances, which had been denied at Step 3 and were pending area arbitration. The Postal Service determined that each of those cases raised Article 16.6 issues likely be impacted by the national interpretive decision on the issues raised herein. [The record is not entirely clear whether the number of related cases held in abeyance is sixteen (16) or twenty-one (21). It is noted that Attachment H to the NRLCA post-hearing brief is a list of relevant information about sixteen (16) such cases). Each entry contains the name of the Grievant, the location where he or she was employed, the NRLCA case number, the Postal Service case number, subject of the grievance, date of the Step 3 denial, date the case was appealed to area arbitration, date (if any) the case had been scheduled for area arbitration, and the date when the case was referred to Step 4 by the Postal Service (if known).]

Some of these cases apparently involve grievances concerning both an emergency suspension and the subsequent removal of the Grievant, which were consolidated during the grievance procedure. Like the DeWitt case, these related cases have also been held at Step 4, awaiting the resolution of the national interpretive issues presented in this case. The Parties agree that these cases (some of which were appealed to area arbitration as far back as 2000) should be processed in area arbitration as expeditiously as possible. To that end, at the hearing in this case, the parties stipulated that the National Arbitrator should also decide in this proceeding "the issue of what to do with the pending Step 4 cases that have similar issues in them."

The broad, general interpretive issues concerning the "review and concurrence"provision of Article 16.6, as presented in the Step 4 appeal and answer, are decided herein, without reference to the specifics of the DeWitt case. Further, no opinion is expressed or implied by this National Arbitrator concerning the facts or merits of that specific grievance nor concerning the facts and merits of the other related cases which are also pending hearing in area arbitrations; held in abeyance by the Parties, pending the outcome of the national interpretation issue(s) appealed to Step 4 by the Union in the instant case, pursuant to Article 15, Section 3.D of the National Agreement.

A National Arbitration hearing was held at Washington, D.C., on June 4, 2002, at which both Parties were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument. A transcribed certified stenographic record was made and the proceedings were closed with the filing and exchange of briefs and reply briefs. The Parties graciously granted an extension of the contractual time limits for rendition of the Opinion and Award.

PERTINENT NATIONAL AGREEMENT PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 15
GRIEVANCE AND ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 1. General Policy

Grievances which are filed pursuant to this Article are to be processed and adjudicated based on the principle of resolving such grievances at the lowest possible level in an expeditious manner, insuring that all facts and issues are identified and considered by both parties. In the event that a grievance is processed beyond Step 1, both parties are responsible to insure all facts, issues and documentation are provided to the appropriate union and management officials at the next higher level of the grievance procedure. The parties further agree that at any step in the grievance procedure, the Union representative shall have full authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer representative, likewise, shall have full authority to grant, settle or deny the grievance in whole or in part.

Section 2. Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement.

* * *

Section 4. Grievance Procedure-General

A. Observance of Principles and Procedures

The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement or withdrawal of substantially all grievances initiated hereunder at the lowest possible Step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end.

B. Failure to Meet Time Limits

The failure of the employee or the Union at Step 1, or the Union thereafter, to meet the prescribed time limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance.

C. Failure to Schedule Meetings

Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D. National Level Grievance

It is agreed that in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the President of the Union. Such a grievance shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to be decided and the contention of the Union. Thereafter the parties shall meet at Step 4 within thirty (30) days in an effort to define the precise issues involved, develop all necessary facts, and reach agreement. Should they fail to agree, then, within fifteen (15) days of such meeting, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues. In the event the parties have failed to reach agreement within sixty (60) days of the initiation of the grievance at Step 4, the Union then may appeal it to arbitration, within thirty (30) days thereafter.

* * *

Section 5. Arbitration

A. General

A request for arbitration must be submitted within the time limit for appeal as specified for the appropriate Step. The National President of the Union must give written authorization of approval to the Employer at the national level before the request for arbitration is submitted.

Grievances referred to arbitration will be placed on a pending arbitration list. Except for discharge cases, the Union will have sixty (60) days from the date of such referral to certify the case to be scheduled for arbitration at the earliest possible date. Cases which are not certified for arbitration within the sixty (60) day period shall be considered waived and removed from the pending arbitration list. Discharge cases referred to arbitration shall be placed on a separate pending arbitration list. The Union will have fifteen (15) days from the date of such referral to certify the case to be scheduled for arbitration at the earliest possible date. Cases which are not certified for arbitration within the fifteen

(15) day period shall be considered waived and removed from the pending arbitration list. If there are other certified disciplinary cases related to the employee's removal grievance, these cases shall be scheduled for hearing along with the removal cases.

The case with the lowest docket number pending before a panel will be scheduled to be heard first. However, the parties may mutually agree to assign such cases for hearing out of numerical sequence in order to fill a vacated hearing date, or to lessen the amount of the arbitrator's travel time and expense or for other valid reasons. Arbitration hearings shall be held during working hours. Employee witnesses shall be on Employer time when appearing at the hearing provided the time spent as a witness is part of the employee's regular working hours.

Any dispute as to arbitrability may be submitted and determined by the arbitrator. The arbitrator's determination shall be final and binding. The arbitrator shall render his award within thirty (30) days of the close of the hearing, or if briefs are submitted, within thirty (30) days of the receipt of such briefs on cases which do not involve interpretation of the Agreement, or are not of a technical or policy making nature. On all other cases, the award shall be rendered within thirty (30) days if possible. All decisions of the arbitrator shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended or modified by the arbitrator. Unless otherwise provided in this Article, all costs, fees and expenses charged by an arbitrator will be borne by the party whose position is not sustained by the arbitrator. In those cases of compromise where neither party's position is clearly sustained, the arbitrator shall be responsible for assessing costs on an equitable basis.

B. Selection of Panels

National and Area Arbitration Panels are established as set forth below:

The members of these panels will be selected in accordance with the procedure set forth below and will serve for the term of this Agreement and shall continue to serve for six (6) months thereafter unless the parties otherwise mutually agree. To assure the expeditious processing of grievances, the parties by agreement may increase the size of these panels at any time. Should vacancies occur, or additional members be required on the National or Area panels, such vacancies shall be filled by mutual agreement. In the event the parties cannot agree on individuals to serve on these panels, or to fill any vacancies which may exist, a list of five (5) arbitrators will be supplied by the American Arbitration Association for each selection to be made. The parties shall then proceed by alternately striking names from the list until only one individual remains. Such individual shall be selected to remain on the panel.

C. National Arbitration

Effective August 3, 1996, a National Panel of not more than three (3) arbitrators will be established to hear certified cases involving national interpretations or other cases which the parties agree have substantial significance. Arbitrators on the National Panel will be assigned to hear cases on a rotating basis. Member(s) of the Area Panel may by mutual agreement be member(s) of the National Panel.

Prior to the scheduled hearing each party to the dispute may separately submit to the arbitrator who has been assigned the case, and to the other party to the dispute, a statement setting forth the following:

a. the facts relevant to the grievance;
b. the issue in the case;
c. the position(s) or contention(s) of the party submitting the statement.

The parties may by mutual agreement submit a joint statement to the arbitrator. A stenographic record will be taken if requested by either party to the dispute. In such case, the cost of such record shall be borne by the requesting party. The other party, upon request, will be furnished a copy of the record, in which case the cost of such record shall be borne equally by both parties to the dispute.

D. Area Arbitration

A geographically balanced Area Panel of arbitrators is established to hear removal cases and contract cases not involving national issues.

Normally, a stenographic record shall not be taken at these hearings, nor post hearing briefs filed. However, either party may make exception to this policy. The case with the lowest docket number pending before a panel will be scheduled to be heard first. However, the parties may mutually agree to assign such cases for hearing out of numerical sequence in order to fill a vacated hearing date, or to lessen the amount of the arbitrator's travel time and expense or for other valid reasons.

ARTICLE 16
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 1. Statement of Principle

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable.

Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Section 2. Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary notice in writing, identified as an official disciplinary letter of warning which shall include explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 3. Suspension of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that the employee will be suspended after two (2) working days during which two-day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer. For the term of the 1995 Agreement, the notice period shall be increased to ten (10) calendar days and if the employee initiates a grievance during that period, the suspension will not be served until disposition of the grievance or issuance of the Step 2 decision, whichever comes first

Section 4. Suspension of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspension of more than fourteen (14) days or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against the employee and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the employee's case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the advance notice requirement shall not apply and such an employee may be immediately removed from a pay status.

Section 5. Emergency Procedure

An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U.S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to self or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than fourteen (14) days or discharge the employee, the emergency action taken under this section may be made the subject of a separate grievance.

Section 6. Review of Discipline

In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority. Such concurrence shall be in writing. (Emphasis added)

In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

ISSUES

The Parties did not formulate a joint submission to arbitration nor did either Party elect to file individual pre-hearing statements of relevant facts, issues and contentions, as suggested by Article 15, Section 5.C. At the arbitration hearing, the Parties submitted differing articulations of the interpretive issues presented for determination in this matter. Before setting forth those respective statements of issues, however, it is instructive to review the process leading to the certification of this case to National Arbitration under Article 15.5.C.

The dispute concerning the proper interpretation of Article 16.6, now under consideration, crystallized during Step 3 discussions of the Dewitt discharge area grievance (E95R-4E-D 01027978). In that context, by letter dated May 11, 2001, Mr. Baffa submitted the matter to Step 4 in accordance with Article 15.4.D and requested national arbitration, as follows:

> The purpose of this letter is to appeal the subject-named grievance to Step 4. The union is appealing the above referenced case from Area Arbitration to Step 4 because the union believes it contains nationally interpretive issues.
> This appeal letter does not constitute a waiver by this Union of any issue or violation as it relates to this grievance; it is for the sole purpose of bringing this grievance to a Step 4 hearing.
> Please schedule this grievance for an early discussion.

The attached written grievance submitted to national handling at Step 4 by Mr. Baffa read as follows:

> The NRLCA position and interpretation of Article 16, Section 6, which many Area Arbitrators continue to conclude, if the facts of the particular case permit, that Article 16.6 of the National Agreement is violated if:
> 1) There is a "command decision" from above;
> 2) There is a joint decision to impose a suspension or discharge;
> 3) There is a failure of either the initiating or review and concurring official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

4) There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

5) There is no showing of harm.

In recent Step 3 decisions, the USPS designee refers to the Association's position on review and concurrence as a "total bastardization of Article 16, Section 6." The Association strongly disagrees with the USPS designee's characterization as expressed in this and other Step 3 decisions involving Article 16.6. The Association's position is grounded in the language of Article 16.6 and the many arbitration awards between the Association and the USPS. Based on the above referenced Step 3 decisions, is it the position and interpretation of the USPS that Article 16.6, as agreed to in the 1995-99 National Agreement and Extension, bars the Association from citing as violations of Article 16.6 the following:

1) "Command decisions" from above;

2) Joint decisions;

3) Failure of either the initiating or review and concurring official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence, prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

4) No evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

Following Step 4 discussions of these Article 16.6 national interpretive issues between USPS Labor Relations Specialist William Daigneault and NRLCA Director of Labor Relations Randy Anderson, Mr. Daigneault denied the national interpretive grievance at Step 4, by letter of September 27, 2001, as follows:

Re: E95R-4E-D 01027978 J. DeWitt Buhl, ID 83316-9998

On several occasions, the most recent being September 14, 2001, I discussed with the Union the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the interpretation of Article 16.6 of the National Agreement concerning review and concurrence of discipline.

It is the Union's position that a violation of Article 16.6, Review of Discipline has occurred in the following situations:

1. There is a command decision from higher authority that instructs the issuance of a suspension or discharge.

2. The decision by the in initiating official to suspend or discharge is reached jointly with the review and concurring official and was not an independent decision by the initiating official.

3. The initiating official or reviewing official failed to complete an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of the suspension or discharge.

4. There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of the suspension or discharge.

It is the Union's position that a showing of harmful error in relation to review and concurrence is not required to sustain the Union's grievance on the discipline. The Union also contends that their position is "grounded in the language of Article 16.6 and the many arbitration awards between the USPS and NRLCA."

It is the position of the Postal Service that Article 16.6 restricts a supervisor, manager or postmaster from imposing a suspension or discharge upon an employee in the rural carrier bargaining unit without review and concurrence by a higher authority. It protects carriers from a new, inexperienced supervisor that intends to suspend or remove the carrier without just cause. It provides for a higher authority to review the situation (either review of paperwork, discussion with proposing official or general knowledge of the situation giving rise to the charges) to determine whether, on the surface, it appears that the action being proposed is appropriate.. It requires that the higher authority document his/her concurrence with the action being proposed in writing.

Article 16.6 does not require that the concurring official conduct an independent investigation. It does not prohibit the concurring official from having previous knowledge of the charges, discussing the charges with the proposing official, being involved in the investigation with the proposing official or providing advice. It does not restrict management from having more than one concurring official.

In the case at hand, the Union alleges Management violated Article 16.6 claiming the review and concurrence was nothing more than a "rubber stamp." The Union contends that the review and concurrence official did not review anything except the proposing official's request for discipline.

It is Management's position that the concurring officials in the case at hand went above and beyond the requirements of Article 16.6. While the contract only requires review a nd concurrence by one higher authority, several managers in higher authority reviewed the evidence submitted by the proposing official in this case. All the managers agreed the action being proposed was appropriate.

In the absence of any contractual violation, this grievance is denied. Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

At the arbitration hearing in this matter, each Party submitted its own specific statement of national interpretive issues regarding violations and compliance with Article 16.6, upon which it seeks a decision in this case. Additionally, they submitted by joint stipulation two other "issues of national significance", regarding appropriate remedies for proven violations of Article 16.6 and post-National Arbitration administration of the pending area arbitration cases, now held in abeyance. Rather than rewording the issues advanced by the Parties into some form of synthesized issues, I will address in this Opinion and Award the following joint and several interpretive concerns expressed by the Parties, respectively, in their Step 4 correspondence and at the arbitration hearing, viz.:

1) Is Article 16.6 Review of Discipline of the Extension to the 1995-1999 USPS-NRLCA National Agreement violated if:

a) The lower level supervisor consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline;

b) There is a "command decision" from higher authority to impose a suspension or discharge;

c) There is a joint decision by the initiating and reviewing officials to impose a suspension or discharge;

d) The higher level authority does not conduct an independent investigation and relies upon the record submitted by the supervisor when reviewing and concurring with the proposed discipline;

e) There is a failure of either the initiating or reviewing official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

f) There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

2) Does a proven violation of Article 16.6 automatically sustain the grievance and overturn any discipline, absent a showing of "actual harm", i.e., "that the reviewing official would not have concurred with the proposing official and that the discipline would not have been issued in the first instance".

3) What should be done next with those pending Step 4 cases which have been held in abeyance for area arbitration, awaiting the outcome of this National Arbitration case?

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

The following statements of position have been edited from the respective posthearing briefs and reply briefs.

NRLCA

It is the Association's position that Article 16.6 requires two separate independent judgments on discipline -- the first by the initiating official who proposes discipline, and the second by a higher authority who reviews and concurs in that discipline before it is imposed. It is the Association's position that such requirement is violated: (1) when the initiating official does not possess the freedom to make his own independent determination on discipline free of command from higher authority, (2) when the initiating and concurring officials jointly make one decision, or (3) when the concurring official does not meaningfully review the record before concurring in the proposed discipline. In each such instance, there have not been two separate independent judgments on discipline, and the rural carrier who is facing the potential loss of his livelihood has been deprived of the due process protection -- the essential "check and balance" -- that Article 16.6 is intended to provide.

Compliance with Article 16.6 is required in every case before a suspension or discharge can be imposed. Failure by the Postal Service to comply with Article 16.6's dictates is fatal to the disciplinary action. Consequently, the appropriate remedy for such violation is reinstatement with full back pay, without consideration of the underlying merits of the disciplinary action. The Postal Service apparently contends that a "harmless error" rule should apply to Article 16.6 violations -- that the disciplinary action should stand notwithstanding such violation if it can be shown that the same action would have been taken even if Article 16.6 had been complied with. The Postal Service is wrong. Article 16.6 says nothing about a "harmful error" requirement but it does say is that "in no case" may discipline be imposed without compliance with Article 16.6's due process requirements. In addition, the Postal Service also offers the totally insupportable notion that in the case of a proven Article 16.6 violation, the aggrieved employee is not to be reinstated to his job but merely to receive backpay from the date of his removal to the date of a Step 2 decision in the grievance process. As in the case of Article 16.6's due process requirement -- two separate independent judgments on discipline -- the arbitral remedy for a violation of Article 16.6 -- reinstatement with full backpay -- has been incorporated into the parties' agreement. The universal arbitral remedy of reinstatement, and the almost universal arbitral remedy of full backpay, has never been addressed by the Postal Service in collective bargaining negotiations.

The language of Article 16.6 has been in the parties' agreements for more than 30 years. The language has been interpreted consistently by area arbitrators throughout this period. The Postal Service has never sought to renegotiate that language to undo any of the interpretations of those arbitrators, and this National Arbitrator should not do now for the Postal Service what it has failed to seek or achieve at the bargaining table.

USPS

Because the language at issue is so clear and unambiguous there is no need to search any further. If the NRLCA wants to impose more stringent standards and criteria of review then they should negotiate such changes at the bargaining table. To pretend that such criteria are present in the long standing language of Article 16.6 is to ignore the plain meaning of the language itself. Absent any special meaning assigned by the parties to the words "review" and "concur", the Arbitrator is bound by the language of the bargain as expressed in Article 16.6. A careful reading of Article 16.6 reveals that the language does not call for overturning a removal action but states that "In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority". (Emphasis added) Therefore, where a violation of Article 16.6 is found to have taken place the only appropriate remedy is to place the employee back into a pay status until review and concurrence takes place. Once review and concurrence takes place the discipline may then be imposed.

In summary, the ability to issue and impose discipline is an exclusive management right expressly incorporated into the Collective Bargaining Agreement at Article 3. Article 16.6 merely requires a procedure that two management officials concur before a suspension or discharge is imposed. It does not in any way alter the exclusive discretion that management has in issuing or imposing suspensions and removals. There is no violation of Article 16.6 if the proposing official consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the reviewing official before deciding to propose discipline. There is no violation of Article 16.6 if the reviewing official does not conduct an independent investigation and relies on the record submitted by the proposing official. As long as the reviewing official can articulate that a review has occurred and concurrence was given in writing, the Postal Service has met its obligation under Article 16.6. The standard of review required by Article 16.6 is simply and only that each of the management officials is satisfied that suspension or discharge be imposed.

Because the "review and concur" requirement does not factor into the "just cause" determination, any potential remedy should not disturb the final analysis regarding "just cause" in any particular case. Furthermore, any procedural defect of noncompliance with Article 16.6 will have been cured at Step 2 of the grievance procedure because a higher authority will have reviewed the file and issued a written concurrence in the form of a Step 2 denial. Even if a violation of Article 16.6 can be proven, the NRLCA still must demonstrate in each individual case how the grievant has been harmed. A violation of Article 16.6 does not automatically sustain the grievance, but rather the Association has the burden of showing that a harmful error has occurred. At the most, the appropriate remedy would be to delay imposition of the discipline until such written concurrence has occurred. Finally, all pending Step 4 grievances in which the NRLCA alleges a violation of Article 16.6 should be remanded to Step 3 for application of the award in this case.

OPINION OF THE NATIONAL ARBITRATOR

Bargaining History, Arbitral Authority and Mutual Intent

Certification of the instant case to Article 15.5.C National Arbitration marks the first occasion for a definitive resolution of the national interpretive issues presented, supra. However, the contract language under analysis in this case has been part of the collectively negotiated contracts between these parties for some thirty (30) years. Thus, a certain valuable perspective is gained by considering the bargaining history and administrative practice thereunder; especially since this very language has been so frequently interpreted and applied in final and binding decisions by scores of arbitrators in Article 15.5.D area arbitration of removal cases.

Turning first to bargaining history, the language which now appears as Article 16.6 of the current USPS/NRLCA National Agreement is essentially unchanged, dating from the 1971-73 Joint Collective Bargaining Agreement. Following passage of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, the major craft unions representing postal employees bargained jointly with the Postal Service and entered into a joint collective bargaining agreement covering all crafts. Those unions covered by the first agreement included the NRLCA, as well as the APWU (then known as the United Federation of Postal Clerks), the NALC, the Mail Handlers (and three others which have since been absorbed by the mentioned unions).

Article 16, Section 5 of that seminal agreement provided:

> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

Over the intervening years, these unions have sometimes bargained in coalitions of differing combinations and sometimes negotiated separate contracts with the Postal Service, but the review and concur language has remained virtually constant throughout.

As for the NRLCA/Postal Service contracts, since the original language of Article 16.6 was adopted by the Parties in the 1971-73 joint Collective Bargaining Agreement, the language was re-adopted unchanged in the successive agreements negotiated in 1973, 1975, 1978, 1981, 1984, 1988, 1990, and 1993. In 1995, the NRLCA and the Postal Service amended the language of the first paragraph of Article 16.6 to provide as follows: (Emphasis in original, to denominate the changes.)

> In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority. Such concurrence shall be in writing.

It is noted that the NRLCA and the Postal Service jointly prepare and publish an "Analysis of Changes" following renegotiation of their agreements. The 1995 Analysis stated with respect to the above changes in Article 16.6:

> The first change clarifies the parties' position that discipline may be imposed by a manager other than the rural carrier's supervisor. The second change makes it clear that the concurring official need not be the installation head, provided the official is a higher authority, i.e., a higher organizational level or higher grade level. The third change requires that there be written evidence of such review and concurrence.

My focus in this case remains the language of Article 16.6 of the current Agreement, in a national interpretive context; with due regard for bargaining and arbitral history concerning the interpretation and application of that language since 1971, to the extent such evidence assists in determining the mutual intent of the contracting parties. In that connection, from the inception of the first collective bargaining agreement in 1971 to date, a period spanning some 30 years and 11 separately negotiated agreements, the NRLCA and the Postal Service have permitted area arbitrators to interpret and apply the provisions of Article 16.6, without resort to National Arbitration. Indeed, over the last three decades, area arbitration decisions construing and applying the review and concur language of Article 16.6 have been stacking up like cordwood. [Parenthetically, area arbitrators in cases involving the other crafts likewise have consistently interpreted the meaning of the review and concurrence provision in the same manner].

It is worth re-emphasizing that, notwithstanding the Postal Service's ostensible opposition to the interpretation and application of that language rendered by virtually all of the area arbitrators in these Article 15.5.D removal cases, the substance of the "review and concur" language has been repeatedly re-adopted by the Parties, without material change, in every successive National Agreement since 1971-73. In short, during more than three decades of living with this language as interpreted and applied by the area arbitrators, with a remarkable degree of consistency, in nearly 100 decisions. In all that time, neither Party ever exercised its right to renegotiate the controlling language of Article 16.6. Nor, prior to the instant case, did either Party deem it necessary to submit the review and concurrence language of Article 16.6 for definitive interpretation in Article 15.5.C National Arbitration, as a certified "national interpretive issue".

The Postal Service quite properly points out that, under the two-tier arbitration system adopted by these Parties, National Arbitration decisions govern in matters of national interpretations and the area arbitration decisions therefore are not authoritative precedent in this case. But just because National Arbitration decisions pre-empt area decisions in certified cases of national interpretation does not mean that thirty (30) years' worth of arbitration decisions by scores of prominent arbitrators, consistently construing and applying the language of Article 16.6 in area arbitration cases, are irrelevant, immaterial or unpersuasive in this National Arbitration case.

This National Arbitrator has the power and authority, as the contractual "Court of Last Resort", to interpret Article 16.6 in a manner other than as consistently and uniformly interpreted by scores of distinguished area arbitrators. It is manifest that Article 15.5.C area arbitration decisions are not res judicata, stare decisis, or in any sense dispositive, in Article 15.5.D National Arbitration. My responsibility to function as the designated National Arbitrator is not fulfilled simply by taking an opinion poll of area arbitrators.

But, in the absence of a National Arbitration decision interpreting a particular provision of the National Agreement, area arbitrators are regularly called upon to interpret and apply the various provisions of that Agreement, including Article 16.6. Area arbitrators have interpreted and applied Article 16.6 for more than 20 years in scores of cases, because the Association and the Postal Service have permitted them to do so and there is no contractual prohibition on them doing so. Of course, the interpretation of Article 16.6 in this National Arbitration case will govern and apply in all future area arbitrations, because National Arbitration under the Agreement represents a ruling by the Parties' designated "Supreme Court". On the other hand, in this particular case, most of those area arbitration decisions do in fact comport with my own interpretation of the language at issue in this case, based upon my independent analysis of the record before me. In short, the great majority of those area arbitration decisions are correct and as the National Arbitrator I reach essentially the same conclusions concerning the meaning of the language of Article 16.6.

Area arbitration may not be the "Supreme Court" under the parties' Agreement, but it most certainly is the "Court of Appeals"and area arbitration decisions are as "final and binding" as National Arbitration awards. If either party disagrees with an interpretation of the Agreement made by one or more area arbitrators, it can initiate a national interpretive grievance at Step 4 and take it on to national arbitration, to obtain a "Supreme Court" ruling. Unless and until that occurs, however, the area arbitration decisions construing and applying Article 16.6 represented the "law" of the Parties. More importantly, in my considered judgement, those accumulated decisions also constitute persuasive evidence of the mutual intent of the contracting Parties.

Those area arbitrations have laid on a persuasive interpretive gloss to Article 16.6 over a period of thirty(30) years, during which the Parties jointly re-negotiated the controlling National Agreement eleven (11) times, without even seeking, let alone achieving, any significant modification of the language of Article 16.6. When, as here, the area arbitration awards uniformly interpret a contract provision over a long period, and neither party seeks national arbitration or change in the contract language, but rather continually re-adopts the critical contract language time and time again in collective bargaining, it may well be concluded that the area arbitral interpretation has been incorporated into the Agreement. Elkouri & Elkouri, How Arbitration Works (5th edition) (BNA 1997), states the governing principle of incorporation or adoption, at page 615:

> [I]f the agreement is renegotiated without materially changing a provision that has been interpreted by arbitration, the parties may be held to have adopted the award as a part of the contract. Indeed, the binding force of an award may even be strengthened by such renegotiation without change.

The Postal Service may be technically correct, as a matter of logic, that incorporation/re-adoption theory should not be dispositive, because none of the myriad arbitration decisions construing and applying Article 16.6 was in the National Arbitration forum. However, to argue that the adoption theory should not even be considered seems to me an elevation of form over substance in this particular factual record. In my considered judgement, the arbitral gloss applied by the area arbitrators has in fact and in practice been largely accepted by both Parties and is reflective of their mutual understanding and intent concerning the interpretation and application of Article 16.6 in removal cases.

Issues No. 1(a)-1(f): Article 16.6 Violation/Compliance

When the rhetorical excesses of ardent advocacy are stripped away, I do not perceive any meaningful disagreement between these Parties with the fundamental proposition that Article 16.6. requires two separate and independent managerial judgments, each based on substantive review of the record evidence, before a suspension or discharge disciplinary action may be imposed on an employee: the first by the initiating official who proposes discipline, and the second by a higher authority who must review and concur in the proposed discipline before it is imposed upon the employee.

It necessarily follows that the requirement of two separate and independent judgements, constitutes the very heart and core of Article 16.6, is violated when the reviewing/concurring official "commands" or "dictates" the disciplinary action to the proposing official, when the higher authority merely "rubber-stamps" the disciplinary action proposed by the employee's supervisor and/or when the sequential steps of a separate and independent supervisory initiation, followed by a separate and independent higher authority review/concurrence, are merged into a single consolidated joint decision by the two managers to suspend or discharge the employee.

Just as the area arbitration decisions rendered by a long line of prominent arbitrators have consistently held, I now hold that a violation of Article 16.6 occurs whenever: (1) the initiating official is deprived of freedom to make his own independent determination to discipline by a "command decision" dictated from higher authority to suspend or discharge; (2) the initiating and reviewing/concurring officials jointly make one consolidated disciplinary action decision, or (3) the higher authority does not review the record and consider all of the available evidence before concurring in the supervisor's proposed discipline. In each such instance, because there have not been two separate and independent judgments on discipline, the employee is deprived of the essential due process check and balance protection that Article 16.6 is intended to provide.

However, so long as the sine qua non of Article 16.6, separateness and and independence of judgement in a two-stage process, is not violated by "command" decisions, joint decisions and/or "rubber-stamping", Article 16.6 does not bar the lower level supervisor from consulting, discussing, communicating with or jointly conferring with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline. Indeed, it is common, and in many ways commendable and conducive to fulfillment of the intent of Article 16.6, for the lower level authority to communicate with higher management and discuss policies, options, and other factors to be considered, before determining whether, and to what extent, to propose suspension or discharge of an employee. In short, so long as the initiating official retains independence of judgment and is not commanded by higher authority to issue the discipline, such communications for advice and counsel between the initiating official and a higher authority are to be encouraged rather than chilled or prohibited. The determining factor under Article 16.6 is not whether the officer in charge seeks advice and counsel outside his office but whether, once having obtained such information, the initiating official acts independently or surrenders that independence completely to the person from whom he has sought such advice. In the former case, Article 16.6 is not violated but, in the latter case, Article 16.6 is violated.

By the same token, it is not per se a violation of Article 16.6 when the higher level authority relies in the reviewing/concurring step upon the record considered by the lower level official in proposing the discipline. The higher authority is not required by Article 16.6 to make an "independent investigation". In my judgement, the requirements of Article 16.6 are met when the higher authority makes a substantive review of and bases the decision to concur on the record developed below.

Contrary to the position advanced by the Postal Service in this case, however, that process of review and concurrence contemplated by Article 16.6 is not a ministerial formality or a mere technical "laying on of hands" by the reviewing/concurring official. The requirement of a separate and independent second step of review and concurrence by the higher authority is not met by just a declaration of agreement with the first step supervisor's proposed disciplinary action. Compliance with Article 16.6 requires a substantive review of the matter by the higher authority in light of all the current information and the higher authority's concurrence with imposition of the disciplinary action proposed by the supervisor. Since the 1995 amendments, Article 16.6 specifies that this statement of concurrence by the higher authority must be set forth in writing.

Issue No. 1, supra, presents a subset of six (6) specific interrogatories concerning Article 16.6 compliance and violation, submitted by the Parties for determination in National Arbitration. Based on all of the foregoing, I conclude that Issues 1(a), and 1(d) are answered in the negative and Issues 1(b), 1(c), 1(e) and 1(f) are answered in the affirmative.

Issue No. 2- - The Remedy for Proven Violations of Article 16.6

The operative language of Article 16.6 provides (emphasis added):

> In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority.

This language clearly and unambiguously mandates that compliance with the two-step, two-stage process set forth in Article 16.6 is a condition precedent to the imposition of a removal or suspension. Accordingly, I concur without equivocation with those many area arbitrators who have concluded that the substantive violations of Article 16.6 set forth in Issues 1(b), 1(c) and 1(e) invalidate the disciplinary action. Because these are substantive violations which effectively deny an employee the due process rights granted by Article 16.6, persuasive proof of such fatal violations requires arbitral reversal of the improperly imposed suspension or discharge, without consideration of the underlying merits of the disciplinary action, i.e., reinstatement with "make whole" damages.

In my considered judgement, those relatively few area arbitration decisions which have engrafted onto the condition precedent language of Article 16.6 an additional requirement of proof of "actual harm", notwithstanding persuasive proof of a "command decision", a "joint decision" or that the reviewing/concurring official merely "rubber-stamped" the proposed disciplinary action, are just plain wrong. Under different contract language, arbitrators might properly overlook procedural defects in administration of discipline which do not unduly compromise the rights of an employee whose suspension or discharge is otherwise justified on the record. However, the precise terminology of Article 16.6 precludes recourse to that "harmless error" argument. If this plain language of Article 16.6 occasionally produces a manifestly unfair result, as undoubtedly it has in some cases, the proper recourse is renegotiation at the bargaining table, not arbitral legislation of "actual harm" or "harmless error" rules which are at odds with the express wording of Article 16.6.

The only caveat I would add concerns the procedural violation described in Issue 1(f), i.e., failure of the Postal Service to produce evidence that the higher authority's concurrence was reduced to writing, as required by the 1995 amendment to Article 16.6. Such a failure to express concurrence in written form clearly is a procedural violation of Article 16.6, for which an arbitral remedy might well be appropriate. But it is not so clear that such a violation, standing alone, would invalidate the disciplinary action and require reversal and reinstatement in every case.

The record in this matter is insufficiently developed to make an informed judgement concerning bargaining history and mutual intent regarding the 1995 amendment. The facts and circumstances of each particular case determine whether a procedural failure to concur in writing adversely impacted substantive Article 16.6 rights of an individual suspended or discharged employee. For these reasons, I refrain from making a definitive generic ruling on that single remedial aspect of the submitted issues at this time. Area arbitrators remain free to exercise their own best judgement as to whether, in the facts and circumstances of the individual case, an Issue 1(f) type of violation requires reversal of the disciplinary action or some other remedy. For Issue 1(b), 1(c) and 1(e) violations, however, Article 16.6 requires reversal of the disciplinary action and reinstatement with remedial "make-whole" damages.

AWARD OF THE NATIONAL ARBITRATOR
CASE NO. E95R-4E-D 01027978

Having been designated National Arbitrator in accordance with Article 15, Section 5.C of the National Agreement between the above-named parties, and having been duly sworn and having duly heard the proofs and allegations of the parties, I hereby AWARD as follows:

Article 16.6 Review of Discipline of the Extension to the 1995-1999 USPS-NRLCA National Agreement:

a) Is not violated if the lower level supervisor consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline;

b) Is violated if there is a "command decision" from higher authority to impose a suspension or discharge;

c) Is violated if there is a joint decision by the initiating and reviewing officials to impose a suspension or discharge;

d) Is not violated if the higher level authority does not conduct an independent investigation and relies upon the record submitted by the supervisor when reviewing and concurring with the proposed discipline;

e) Is violated if there is a failure of either the initiating or reviewing official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

f) Is violated if there is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

ISSUE No. 2

(a) Proven violations of Article 16.6 as set forth in Issues 1 (b), 1(c) or 1(e) are fatal. Such substantive violation invalidate the disciplinary action and require a remedy of reinstatement with "make-whole" damages.

(b) Whether a violation of Article 16.6 as set forth in Issue 1(f) is fatal, invalidates the disciplinary action and requires a remedy of reinstatement with "make-whole" damages is for the area arbitrator to determine based on the facts and circumstances if the individual case.

ISSUE No. 3

On this 3rd day of December, 2002, I, DANA E. EISCHEN, upon my oath as National Arbitrator, do hereby affirm and certify, pursuant to Section 7507 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules of the State of New York, that I have executed and issued the foregoing instrument and I acknowledge that it is my Opinion and Award in Case No. E95R-4E-D 01027978.

In the Matter of Arbitration Between UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE And NATIONAL POST OFFICE MAIL HANDLERS, WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS AND GROUP LEADERS DIVISION OF THE LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO	OPINION AND AWARD Nicholas H. Zumas, Arbitrator Case No.: H1M-NA-C-99

This is a Step 4 appeal to National Level Arbitration pursuant to the provisions of Article 15 of the National Agreement between United States Postal Service (hereinafter "Service") and National Post Office Mail Handlers, Watchmen, Messengers and Group Leaders Division of the Laborers' International Union of North America, AFL-CIO (hereinafter "Union"). Hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on February 26, 1986, at which time testimony was taken, exhibits offered and made part of the record and oral argument was heard. The hearing was stenographically reported resulting in a transcript of the proceedings numbering 107 pages. Post-hearing briefs were filed on April 29, 1986.

APPEARANCES

For the Service: D. James Shipman, Esq.

For the Union: Joseph N. Amma, Jr.
Ralph H. Goldstein, Esq.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In this grievance, the Union protests the unilateral implementation by the Service of three programs which the Union alleges fundamentally change the nature of the disciplinary process by eliminating suspensions (as well as Letters of Warning in one of the programs). The grievance also protests the unilateral termination by the Service of one of the programs. The Union asserts that these programs are violative of the provisions of successively collectively bargained National Agreements and long-established past practices relating to progressive discipline. By implementing these programs and by terminating one of them unilaterally, the Union charges that the Service violated its duty to bargain under the National Agreement and the National Labor Relations Act, and disregarded past practice.

The Service contends that the National Agreement does not prohibit the implementation of the these programs or preclude the types of discipline utilized in these programs. The Service further contends that it has no obligation to negotiate over the provisions of these programs; and that the past practice between the parties clearly indicates a unilateral right to implement such programs.

The parties, unable to resolve the matter during the various Steps of the grievance procedure, referred the dispute to this Arbitrator for resolution.

ISSUES

The Union frames the issue as follows:

> "Whether the Service has a duty to bargain with the Union over changes in the employee discipline process, and whether the Service violated this duty under the National Agreement and the National Labor Relations Act by implementing unilaterally three new disciplinary programs, by terminating one of the programs unilaterally, and by failing to bargain with the Union over these programs; and if so, what should the remedy be."

The Service frames the issue as follows:

> "Whether the Service violated Article 16 of the 1981-84 National Agreement by implementing these pilot programs at certain sites within the Central Region."

RELEVANT CONTRACT PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 3

MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

3.1 To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;

3.2 To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees;

3.3 To maintain the efficiency of the operations entrusted to it;

3.4 To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

3.5 To prescribe a uniform dress to be worn by designated employees; and

3.6 To take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out its mission in emergency situations, i.e., an unforeseen circumstance or combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action in a situation which is not expected to be of recurring nature.

ARTICLE 5

PROHIBITION OF UNILATERAL ACTION

The Employer will not take any actions affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms and conditions of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law.

ARTICLE 16

DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 16.1 - Statement of Principle

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

Section 16.2 - Discussions

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Section 16.3 - Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary letter of warning, which shall include an explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 16.4 - Suspensions of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after two (2) working days during which two-day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer.

Section 16.5 - Suspensions of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure. A preference eligible who chooses to appeal a suspension of more than fourteen (14) days or his discharge to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) rather than through the grievance-arbitration procedure shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement or through exhaustion of his MSPB appeal. When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days' advance written notice in a discharge action, but shall given such lesser number of days advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

Section 16.8 - Review of Discipline

A. In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee.

B. In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

Section 16.9 - Veterans' Preference

A preference eligible is not hereunder deprived of whatever rights of appeal such employee may have under the Veterans' Preference Act, however, if the employee appeals under the Veterans' Preference Act, the employee thereby waives access to any procedure under the Agreement beyond Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

Section 16.10 - Employee Discipline Records

The records of a disciplinary action against an employee shall not be considered in any subsequent disciplinary action if there has been no disciplinary action initiated against the employee for a period of two years. Upon the employee's written request, a disciplinary notice or decision letter will be removed from the employee's official personnel folder after two years if there has been no disciplinary action initiated against the employee in that two-year period.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

In late 1983 and early 1984, management in the Service's Central Region initiated three pilot employee motivational programs at three postal facilities. Lawrence G. Handy, a Central Region Labor Relations official, described their purpose as follows:

"...We developed three separate programs, pilot programs, if you will, which were designed to minimize the necessity for disciplining employees, and to approach the relationship between the employee and the supervisor in a more positive vein than had previously been done."

The first of the three programs implemented was Positive Attendance Control (hereinafter "PAC"). PAC became effective on November 26, 1983 in the St. Louis Post Office. In this program, no time off discipline (suspension) was to be given with respect to any attendance-related deficiencies or infractions. In lieu of suspension, progressively more severe Letters of Warning were to be issued for any attendance-related deficiencies. A PAC 1 letter was similar to a Section 16.3 Letter of Warning. A PAC 2 letter would be issued in lieu of Section 16.4 supension (14 days or less). A PAC 3 letter would be issued in lieu of a Section 16.5 suspension (14 days or more). Both the PAC 2 and PAC 3 letters would include statements that the employee's offense was serious enough to merit a suspension of the appropriate length. The Service considered the PAC program a success. In the year prior to the implementation of the program, 172 Section 16.3 Letters of Warning had been issued, while in the following year only 51 PAC 1 letters were issued. There had been 33 Section 16.4 suspensions, but only 3 PAC 2 letters. There were 37 Section 16.5 suspensions issued the previous year, but no PAC 3 letters were issued the following year.

The second program established was No Discipline Employee Motivation (N-DEM). This program became effective on January 21, 1984 in the St. Paul, Minnesota Post Office. This program eliminated the use of Letters of Warning and suspensions altogether, except that it allowed management to retain the right to discharge for serious offenses such as theft or assault. The basic thrust of the N-DEM was to allow management to discuss problems with employees and encourage employees to resolve them. This program was eventually terminated on July 1, 1985 because, according to Handy, there were "operational problems." When asked to amplify, Handy stated that, "The working management did not feel comfortable with the program, or I should say certain members of management didn't feel comfortable with the program...there are some supervisors even today that think that the only thing to solve a problem with an employee is to give them a suspension or suspensions."

The third program implemented was No Time Off Letter of Warning (N-TOL). This program was implemented on February 18, 1984 in the Louisville, Kentucky Post Office. The program eliminated time-off suspensions for work-related deficiencies and substituted progressively severe Letters of Warning. Employees were given the right to appeal the issuance of a Letter of Warning under the grievance arbitration procedure.

The program, like PAC, used three letters. A N-TOL 1 letter was similar to a Section 16.3 Letter of Warning. A N-TOL 2 letter would be issued in lieu of a Section 16.4 suspension. A N-TOL 3 letter would be the substitute for a Section 16.5

suspension. Both N-TOL 2 and N-TOL 3 letters would include statements that the employee's offense was serious enough to merit a suspension of the appropriate length.

The Service also considered this program a success. In the year before the establishment of the N-TOL program, 185 Section 16.3 Letters of Warning were issued, while only 16 N-TOL 1 letters were written. There had been 59 Section 16.4 suspensions, but only 10 N-TOL letters. A total of 32 suspensions under Section 16.5 was reduced to 4 N-TOL 3 letters.

Before each program was implemented, the Service advised all employees. They also presented a slide-show to all supervisors, explaining the program. This same slide-show was presented to the four major unions. It was also presented to the Regional representatives, the Local representatives and the Shop Stewards of the unions. The Service offered to make the presentation to employees at local union halls, but only the National Association of Letter Carriers accepted this offer.

There is some dispute as to the initial reaction to these programs. Handy, who was a Program Manager in the Central Region at the time, testified that the reaction was favorable. Marcellus Wilson, an Administrative Technical Assistant for the Union, testified that he attended a December 1983 meeting where PAC was explained. Wilson testified that the Union protested the establishment of the program.

As indicated earlier, the Service issued a Memorandum dated July 2, 1985, stating that the N-DEM program would be terminated; and that the Service would "return to using the discipline procedures set forth in Article 16 of the National Agreement." (Underscoring added)

On March 21, 1984, the Union filed a Step 4 grievance protesting the Service's "unilateral action in altering the terms, conditions and past practice application of Article 16 of the National Agreement in several sites in the Central Region." It should be noted that the American Postal Workers Union filed a similar grievance, but there is no record that it had been progressed to National Arbitration.

POSITION OF THE UNION

The Union asserts that the Service violated the National Agreement when it unilaterally implemented these three programs and refused to engage in collective bargaining, contending that they are inconsistent with the successively negotiated National Agreements and long-established past practices which mandate a progressive disciplinary procedure, beginning with Letters of Warning, progressed to short and then long suspensions, and ultimately discharge.

> "The Union does not argue that suspensions constitute in any way a superior, or inferior, method for disciplining employees, or that the PAC, N-DEM and the N-TOL programs constitute a worse or better method. Rather, the Union contends simply that the Postal Service has a duty to engage in collective bargaining with the Union over a modification of that procedure--- regardless of its merit -- and that the Service has violated that duty in the present case by failing to bargain with the Union."

The Union maintains that these programs not only violate Article 5 of the National Agreement, which prohibits unilateral changes, but that these programs violate the provisions of Article 16 as well inasmuch as they change the established and agreed upon disciplinary procedure. Pointing to the history of negotiations and of Article 16 of the National Agreement, the Union asserts that suspensions have always been a topic of major concern to both the Service and the Union; and that changes in disciplinary procedures have been bargained over in each successive negotiation between the parties. Article 16, the Union asserts, contemplates that the progression from pre-disciplinary discussions to Letters of Warning, to suspensions of increasing duration and then to discharge is made "absolutely certain by the past practice of imposing discipline in precisely these forms and in precisely this order," and that the PAC, N-DEM and N-TOL programs represent a major departure from the disciplinary procedures set forth in Article 16.

With respect to the reliance by the Service on Article 3 of the National Agreement (the reservation of management rights clause), the Union points out that Article 3 may grant the Service exclusive rights, but it makes these rights "subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations...." Therefore, Articles 5 and 16 limit the "exclusive rights" of the Service under Article 3.

The Union next argues that the exhibits submitted by the Service concerning alleged prior unilateral changes in the disciplinary procedures should not be given serious consideration. The Union maintains that these exhibits are internal memorandums, and that the Service produced no evidence regarding the decision-making process which brought them about, or that there is any evidence showing whether the Unions were notified of these memorandums or were consulted in advance; and that there was no evidence as to the Unions' responses, or whether the Unions requested bargaining or waived their rights to bargain.

Finally, the Union takes the position that the Service violated the National Labor Relations Act, arguing that a change in disciplinary procedure is a change in "working conditions" as defined by the Act, pointing out that Article 5 of the National Agreement prohibits unilateral changes "affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law."

The Union points out that the NLRB and the Courts have ruled repeatedly that disciplinary procedures that affect a continuation of employment constitute mandatory subjects of bargaining. There is nothing in the National Agreement that contains any language waiving the Union's rights over disciplinary procedures, and there is no evidence in the bargaining history that would indicate that the Union ever waived its right to bargain over disciplinary procedures.

By way of remedy, the Union asks this Arbitrator to find that the Service violated the Agreement by implementing unilaterally new programs concerning discipline; and that the Arbitrator order the Service to negotiate with the Union in this regard.

POSITION OF THE SERVICE

The Service contends that these three programs and the manner in which they were implemented do not violate the National Agreement, arguing that they do not change Article 16, nor does such implementation violate Article 16.

Preliminarily, the Service emphasizes that these programs are not intended to supplant traditional disciplinary methods, including suspensions and other disciplinary tools.

The Service maintains that these three programs do not, in any way, alter the provisions of Article 16, pointing out that the programs are intended to be corrective and not punitive. According to the Service, Article 16 does not require that any particular form of discipline be used in a particular situation; that by these programs, the Service has elected not to utilize certain disciplinary action; and that these programs are effective supplements to the traditional disciplinary concepts currently in use in the Service, consistent with the corrective and non-punitive mandates of Article 16.

The Service asserts that Article 3 of the National Agreement gives it the right to implement these programs since, under Article 3, it has the exclusive right to "suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action," and that historically the Service has exercised its discretion to implement management policy with respect to discipline within the procedural constraints of Article 16.

The Service further argues that the implementation of these programs is consistent with past practice. At the hearing, the Service introduced several exhibits which it maintains is proof of such past practice. It points to Exhibit 23, a 1972 letter announcing the temporary elimination of Letters of Warning, and Exhibit 24, indicating a unilateral reinstatement of Letters of Warning and substituting them for suspensions of less than five days. The Service points to Exhibit 26, announcing a new policy of not imposing suspensions greater than 14 days, except in unusual circumstances.

The Service argues that these exhibits clearly show that the parties intended that the Service have the discretion to implement unilaterally such programs.

FINDINGS AND CONCLUSIONS

After review of the record, this Arbitrator concludes that the unilateral implementation of these pilot programs violated the National Agreement between the parties, and that this grievance must be sustained.

Prior to the implementation of these three pilot programs, the parties have generally followed the progressive discipline procedures set forth in Article 16. Disciplinary measures have been imposed progressively, beginning with oral or written warnings, then progressing to short and long suspensions, and finally to discharge. While the number of warnings preceding suspension or the number of suspensions preceding discharge vary from case to case, this progressive pattern has been generally followed. These three new pilot programs alter this progressive pattern by utilizing special Letters of Warning or eliminating suspensions altogether. It is clear that these programs represent a substantial departure from the traditional and established order of progressive and corrective discipline under Article 16.

It should be noted for the purposes of this dispute, the question of whether these changes are good or bad is of no relevance. Since the programs represent major changes, the essential question is whether these programs were properly implemented in accordance with the requirements of the National Agreement.

While Article 3 gives the Service the exclusive right "to suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action," such authority, as the Service concedes, is "subject to the [other] provisions of this Agreement." In this dispute, the rights of the Service in this regard are limited by the provisions of Article 5 and Article 16.

Article 5, the Prohibition of Unilateral Action clause, provides that the Service "will not take any actions altering wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment." It is well established that discipline procedure is a term and condition of employment, and the unilateral implementation of programs which alter such procedure is an action that affects the terms and conditions of employment in violation of Article 5. In Electri-Flex Co. vs. NLRB, 570 F. 2d 1327 (7th Cir 1978), cert. denied, 439 US 911, 99 LRRM 2743 (1978), the Court of Appeals held:

> "...the institution of a new system of discipline is a significant change in working conditions, and thus one of the mandatory subjects for bargaining under the provisions of Section 8(d) of the Act, included within the phrase 'other terms and conditions of employment.'"

The next area of inquiry is whether there was an established past practice in respect to similar changes in discipline procedure implemented unilaterally by the Service so as to constitute a waiver of the Union's right to demand that such changes be negotiated. In order to justify the unilateral implementation by the Service of these three programs on the basis of established past practice, it must be shown not only that there was acquiescence, either expressly or by implication, but that the prior unilateral changes were similar in magnitude and scope.

As indicated earlier, the Service presented exhibits indicating that during the 1970s numerous apparent unilateral changes were made in the disciplinary procedure. While the Union is correct in asserting that there is no evidence that these changes were not a result of previous or subsequent negotiation, or that there is any evidence that the Union ever acquiesced to unilateral changes, the Union has not presented any evidence to the contrary. On the state of the record, it must be assumed that these prior changes were unilateral and that the Union waived its right to negotiate and acquiesced to the changes instituted by the Service.

The record, therefore, reveals the following: There was a unilateral change during the 1972 Agreement; a unilateral change during the 1973-75 Agreement; and a unilateral change during the 1978-81 Agreement. (No change was made during the 1975-78 Agreement.) The programs at the heart of this dispute represent an attempted change during the 1981-1984 Agreement.

Thus, at first glance, it would appear that the prior practice of unilateral changes made without objection gave the Service the right to unilaterally implement the programs in dispute. However, a closer analysis of the prior changes and a comparison with these disputed programs compel a different conclusion.

As evidenced by Exhibit 23, the use of Letters of Warning was temporarily suspended pending formulation of a standard national procedure. Exhibit 24 involves the implementation of using Letters of Warning in lieu of suspensions of less than five days. Exhibit 26 established a policy of not imposing suspensions greater than 14 days except in unusual circumstances.

Each of these unilateral implementations involved a change at only one Step of the disciplinary process. However, the changes in the pilot programs involved in this dispute affect several Steps in the disciplinary process, so drastically alter the progressive nature of the disciplinary process, and are of such magnitude that the prior unilateral changes do not provide an established past practice justification for the unilateral implementation of the changes in these programs.

Both PAC and N-TOL eliminate two levels of suspension and replace them with Letters of Warning. The N-DEM program completely eliminates the progressive Steps set forth in Article 16. These changes have such a fundamental impact on employees' working conditions that they must be negotiated.

Further indication that these prior unilateral changes have little or no effect as binding past practice is the Memorandum of Understanding incorporated into and made part of the identical Article 16 provisions in the 1984-1987 National Agreement with the American Postal Workers Union and the National Association of

Letter Carriers.[1] The Memorandum of Understanding created a national-level "Task Force on Discipline," and reads, in pertinent part:

> "The purpose of the Task Force shall be to study the manner in which discipline is administered by the USPS, the manner in which disputes about discipline are handled by the parties, and to recommend changes and improvements which can be made in the discipline and dispute resolution systems.
>
> "The Task Force is authorized, at its discretion, to conduct tests of alternative discipline and dispute resolution systems in various facilities.
> "The Task Force shall convene periodically but at least quarterly at such times and at such places as it deems appropriate during the term of the 1984 National Agreement. No action or recommendations may be taken by the Task Force except by a consensus of its parties." (underscoring added)

While this Union was not a party to this Memorandum of Understanding, the fact remains that its members and the members of the APWU and NALC are all part of the total work force and are all governed by identical Article 16 Discipline Procedure provisions in their respective collective bargaining agreements. It would be illogical in the extreme to allow the Service to implement unilaterally disciplinary changes affecting the members of this Union while at the same time negotiate, by Agreement, any such changes with the APWU and NALC.

1. This Union was not a party to that Agreement, having elected in 1981 to negotiate separate collective bargaining agreements with the Service.

AWARD

Grievance sustained. The Service violated the National Agreement by unilaterally implementing the PAC, N-DEM and N-TOL pilot programs, by unilaterally terminating the N-DEM, and by failing and refusing to bargain with the Union over these programs. The Service is ordered to enter into collective bargaining with the Union over these programs.

Re: See Attached

I recently met with your representative, Kevin Fletcher, to discuss the above captioned cases at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issues presented in these grievances concern whether management is required to follow the progressive disciplinary steps used for career Mail Handler employees when issuing discipline to Mail Handler Assistant employees (MHAs).

After reviewing the case files, the parties agree to the following:

Disciplinary procedures for MHAs are outlined in the Memorandum of Understanding Re Mail Handler Assistant Employees, Section 3.A. (Other Provisions, Article 15). That MOU provides that MHAs who have completed either 90 work days or a 120 calendar day period (whichever comes first) within the preceding six months may be disciplined only for just cause and that such discipline is subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure. The parties also agree that an MHA who has not completed a period of either 90 work days or 120 calendar days within the preceding six months does not have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure if disciplined. Furthermore, in the case of removal for cause within the term of an appointment, an MHA is entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her, in accordance with the Fishgold award.

Discipline for an MHA who does have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure does not generally have to be issued in the same progressive manner as discipline issued to a career employee. However, an appropriate element of just cause is that discipline should be progressive and corrective in nature rather than punitive. When management removes or otherwise disciplines an MHA, determining whether the disciplinary action taken is appropriate must be based on the individual facts and circumstances of each case.

Based on the above understanding, we agree to remand these grievances to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On June 27, 1985, and again on July 17, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the 7-day suspension issued to the grievant was punitive rather than corrective in nature.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Article 16 of the National Agreement to the fact circumstances.

The parties at this level agree that while discussions for minor offenses may not be cited as an element of prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities. Any notation regarding prior discussions in the said letter of suspension shall be stricken.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

On April 23, 1981, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that there is no interpretive dispute between the parties at the National level as to the meaning and intent of the language set forth in Article XVI of the National Agreement as that language relates to supervisors conducting "discussions" with employees where minor offenses are concerned.

Based upon information contained in the file, the supervisor referred to in this grievance conducted a discussion with the grievant in accordance with the provisions of Article XVI. During the discussion, the supervisor indicated that improvement was needed insofar as the grievant's attendance was concerned. There is nothing in the file which establishes that the discussion was conducted to elicit information relative to the grievant's absence from duty (2 days sick) for the purpose of taking disciplinary action because of that absence. Under these circumstances, the grievant was not entitled to have a steward present. The discussion was properly held in private between the grievant and her supervisor. With this understanding, we mutually agreed to consider this grievance resolved.

Please sign a copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to consider this grievance resolved.

Sincerely,

George B. McDougald

Dear Mr. Connors:

On November 10, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether local management is making improper notations on Forms 3972.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Whether the notations being made on the forms are improper is a local dispute suitable for regional determination based on the particular circumstances.

The parties at this level agree that discussions shall not be noted on the reverse of Forms 3972.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

This replaces the decision dated October 22, 1987.

Dear Mr. Lingberg:

On March 11, 1986, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether illegal discussion files are being maintained by local management.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We agreed that supervisors will not exchange written notes regarding discussions. Also, a supervisor of a former employee may orally exchange information, relative to discussions, with the employee's current supervisor. Any records that do not comply with the above and Article 16 of the National Agreement are to be destroyed.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing in accord with the above.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On March 22, 1988, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management was proper in denying the union's request for copies of a supervisor's personal notes which were taken during a discussion.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that when requested, the union will be given the date and subject of a discussion, providing that such discussion was relied upon by the supervisor in a disciplinary action to establish that the employee had been made aware of his/her obligations and responsibilities.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Dear Mr. Amma:

On March 1, 1988, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance involves the proper conduct of a supervisor and an employee during discussions.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case.

It was further agreed that, during a discussion held between a supervisor and an employee, both parties are expected to conduct themselves in a professional manner at all times.

The purpose of such discussions is to give a supervisor the opportunity to bring to the attention of an employee through non-disciplinary means, a minor offense committed by the employee. Clearly, the intent of a discussion is to provide the supervisor and the employee an informal setting in which both parties may address the minor offense.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

Case No. NB-E-5724
Robert Kurtz
Phildelphia, PA

Issued: February 23, 1977

Background

This case involves an employer claim against Letter Carrier Robert Kurtz for his failure to deliver and account for registered article #3366397. There was no record taken of the hearing. The parties filed timely post-hearing briefs.

The Grievant, Robert Kurtz, was a part-time flexible letter carrier at the William Penn Station of the Philadelphia Pennsylvania Post Office. On April 23, 1974 he was assigned to route #639. Route #639 is essentially a business route which includes a number of jewelry establishments. The route is known in the William Penn Station as the "Jewel Route." The Grievant cased his mail that morning and picked up his registered articles from the key table. Registered articles are handled in the following manner at the William Penn Station. When a carrier completes the casing of the mail for his route he calls his number to the Accountable Mail Clerk at the key table. If the clerk has prepared the accountable items for that route he calls the carrier to the table, gives the accountables to the carrier and requires that he acknowledge receipt of each accountable item by signing for it on an appropriate form (Form 3867). The carrier then returns to his case, prepares a receipt (Form 3849) for each accountable item and fuses it into his mail for delivery. In this way he can readily determine that an accountable item is destined for a particular customer when a receipt appears among that customer's mail. Accountables are placed in the bottom of the bag under the regular mail. As the receipts appear, the carrier delivers the accountable item to the appropriate customer and the customer acknowledges delivery by signing the receipt and returning the receipt to the carrier. When the carrier returns to the Post Office, he produces the receipts and reconciles them with the listing that he had signed out for earlier in the day. He does this in the presence of the Accountable Mail Clerk and if there is a complete reconciliation the clerk clears him of his liability for those accountables. In this case

In this situation Kurtz had cased his mail and told the accountable mail clerk that he was prepared to receive his accountables. When the clerk was ready for Kurtz he called him. Kurtz picked up his accountables, signed out for them and returned to his case where he filled out and cased a receipt for each accountable item. He placed the accountables in the bottom of his satchel according to instructions and swept his case, bundled the mail, and put it in his satchel on top of the accountable items.

Having completed his work in the office he prepared to go out on the street. Before leaving he set his satchel on the floor near his case, threw his coat over it and went to the washroom. When he returned from the washroom he noticed nothing amiss, picked up his satchel and left for his route.

As the Grievant delivered his route he would finger the mail for each upcoming address. Approaching 111 South 8th Street he came across a receipt for registered parcel No. 3366397 addressed to the LaPais Jewelry Company. His procedure was to then look to his accountables in the bottom of his satchel for that parcel. Normally he would deliver the parcel and present the receipt to the addressee or his representative for signature. However, at this point he discovered that parcel No. 3366397 was missing. He completed his deliveries and then retraced his route in an attempt to determine whether or not he had delivered the parcel to some other address in error. He was unsuccessful and he returned to his station.

Contentions

The Union claims that the Grievant exercised reasonable care in the handling of parcel No. 3366397 as required by Article XXVIII - Employer Claims which reads in pertinent part:

>
> The parties agree that continued public confidence in the Postal Service requires the proper care and handling of the U.S.P.S. property, postal funds, and the mails. In advance of any money demand upon an employee for any reason, he must be informed in writing and the demand must include the reasons therefor.
> Section 2. Loss or Damage of the Mails. An employee is responsible for the protection of the mails entrusted to him. Such employee shall not be financially liable for any loss, rifling, damage, wrong delivery of or depredation on, the mails or failure to collect or remit C.O.D. funds unless the employee failed to exercise reasonable care.

The parcel was stolen, says the Union, either when Kurtz left his case to sweep his mail from the center racks or when he went to the washroom. It insists that he exercised reasonable care of the mail by delivering his route in a manner so as to keep his satchel in front of him as he walked. To establish proof of theft the Union points to the discharge of M. for pilfering the mail and established that M. was on the floor the morning of April 23, 1974. The Union claims that any carrier at the William Penn Station must leave his satchel unattended under certain circumstances in order to properly perform his duties. Therefore, it claims, it is unreasonable for Management to require the carrier to be responsible for the mail when he must leave the area without it.

The Union also claims that the failure of the Grievant to protest the 5-9-75 Letter of Warning was related to the Supervisor's remark "not to worry" when the loss was first reported. Further, it says, the letter was improper in that it was not in accordance with instructions issued by Senior Assistant Postmaster General Brown. The Union produced the following instruction from Brown:

November 7, 1973

MEMORANDUM TO: Assistant Regional Postmasters General Employee and Labor Relations
SUBJECT: Letters of Warning
FROM: Darrell Brown

Article XVI - Discipline Procedure of the 1973 National Agreement sets forth the basic principle that discipline must be

corrective in nature rather than punitive. Our objective is to correct employees, not to punish or harass them. During the negotiations, the Employer emphasized its commitment to this philosophy and made it clear that letters of warning would be used in appropriate circumstances since they are legitimate disciplinary tools. It is USPS policy, effective immediately, that letters of warning be used in lieu of suspensions of less than five (5) days. There will be circumstances, of course, in which the offense is so grave that suspension or even discharge will be required without any previous letter of warning.

Managers must remember that for minor offenses, counselling in private should be employed. If letters of warning are used, they should contain the following:

1. A statement identifying the letter as an official letter of warning, including sufficient detail (names, dates, times, occasions -- not generalities) as to the deficiency or misconduct that the recipient will know what he is being charged with;

2. A statement that further disciplinary action may result if correction is not achieved;

3. Previous discussion and/or counselling which has gone unheeded, if pertinent to the current infraction;

4. Information as to the employee's right to appeal the issuance of the letter of warning through the grievance procedure. (Underscoring added)

The Letter of Warning dated several months later is as follows:

DATE: May 9, 1974
SUBJECT: LETTER OF WARNING
TO: Mr. Robert K. Kurtz
P/T Flex Carrier
473 40 4399
William Penn Annex
Badge #7063

This official letter of warning is being issued for the express purpose of advising you of the following serious deficiency in your record which must be corrected immediately:

You failed to account for registered article #3366397 on Tuesday, April 23, 1974.

A copy of this letter of warning will be retained in your personnel folder for two years. If there is any repetition of the offense or you fail in any other manner to meet the requirements of your position more severe disciplinary action will be taken.

You are reminded that in accordance with present regulations employees who fail to meet the essential requirements of their position may have their periodic step increase withheld.

If you have any objection to the imposition of the above cited warning against your record, you may protest it in writing to the Postmaster within five days. Your protest will be reviewed on its merits by an authority different from the one that took the action and you will be advised of the decision reached.

Management claims that Kurtz took responsibility for the parcel when he signed out for it at the key table. It maintains that he is constrained to handle the mail with care and the loss is his since the mail was entrusted to his care. The failure of the Grievant to protest the Letter of Warning, says Management, is proof that he recognized that he was responsible for the safe keeping of the accountable item. Management does not accuse the Grievant of stealing the parcel. It does not know how the parcel was lost but, in Management's view, the loss must be attributable to the Grievant's error and he is, therefore, liable for the monetary loss suffered by the Postal Service.

Findings

Article XXVII provides that a Carrier must exercise "reasonable care." It is not enough that a Carrier state that he exercised reasonable care since there is no manner in which the veracity of that statement can be substantiated. Under the present circumstances the Carrier must demonstrate that he was unable to exercise reasonable care due to factors outside his control.

In the case of Kurtz each of the possibilities raised by the Union must be explored. First, Kurtz demonstrated that he delivered his route holding his satchel in front of him as he walked and fingered the mail. While this is a commendable and a useful precaution it serves only as self-protection for the carrier and does not relieve him from liability for loss on the basis of taking reasonable care. Carrying the satchel in front of him, then, does not demonstrate that the carrier was for some reason unable to exercise reasonable care.

Other possibilities brought forth by the Union bear more heavily on factors outside the control of the Grievant. The carrier is issued his accountables an hour before he leaves the office. During that time he is required to leave his case to go to mail racks in the center of a large room to sweep mail for his route from racks that are constantly being worked by clerks. If the carrier has already obtained his accountables, he must leave them unattended at his case while he sweeps mail from the central racks. There was no evidence that there is a procedure in effect enabling a carrier to protect his accountables during this time. On another point it was stated by the Union and not denied by Management that carriers are not permitted to take their satchels into the washroom. The normal practice is for a carrier to leave his satchel at his case or outside the washroom when he uses the washroom for a period of five or six minutes prior to his leaving for the street. Kurtz claims that his satchel was left unattended on April 23, 1974 under these exact circumstances.

The Grievant testified that he and a Union Steward promptly discussed the matter with a Supervisor (now retired and unavailable to testify) who is alleged to have told them, "Don't worry about it" and, "I am not at liberty to tell you anything, just don't worry." Management made no attempt to deny the allegation nor did it confirm the Union's statement. Another carrier, M., was apprehended on June 8, 1974 and discharged on June 21, 1974 for theft of the mail. The Union maintains that since M. was on the floor at the time Kurtz's bag was unattended, it is reasonable to conclude that M. purloined the package. The Postal Service states that if M. would have gone near Kurtz's bag, other carriers working cases nearby would have noticed his presence. There is no evidence that M. was seen in the vicinity of Kurtz's case. In any event, says Management, M. was discharged because he stole mail that was entrusted to him.

The connection between the presence of M. on the day of the Grievant's loss and the loss is much too tenuous to reasonably assume that M. pilfered Item No. 3366397. According to reliable testimony of the Union witnesses, it is possible that the statement of the Supervisor "not to worry" was in error and subsequent events could not link M. to the loss of parcel No 3366397.

Management's contention that Kurtz's failure to grieve the Warning Letter of May 9, 1974 limits his defense concerning the Letter of Demand dated March 25, 1975 is without merit. The Warning Letter was not properly constructed as directed by Senior Assistant Postmaster General Brown and even if it were the Warning Letter must be considered a part of the total Management action against the Grievant. The Grievant, therefore, did not waive his right to grieve the Letter of Demand when he failed to protest the Warning Letter.

The practice of leaving the satchel when sweeping the clerk's racks or when using the washroom puts the carrier at risk. He must either entrust his satchel to another carrier or take it with him. It doesn't make sense to sweep the center racks carrying a satchel and taking the satchel into the washroom is against regulations. Certainly the integrity of fellow carriers is not generally open to question. However, M. was a fellow carrier and he was discharged for stealing mail. The carriers in the William Penn Station must gamble each time they leave their cases as they must do in order to perform their duties.

The ultimate issue in this case is by no means free from doubt. There are cogent arguments suggesting that the Grievant should not be held liable for this specific loss. On the other hand there are even stronger factual considerations indicating a lack of due care on the part of Kurtz.

Thus, the hard fact is that he noticed nothing amiss with his satchel when he returned to his case on the morning of April 23. It is undenied that the other carriers noticed nothing unusual about, nor any stranger near, Kurtz's satchel while he was in the washroom. This indicated that the parcel was lost outside the Post Office. Finally, Kurtz could not demonstrate that some factor outside his control caused him to lose the parcel even though he claims that he exercised reasonable care. Given these critical facts, the conclusion is clear that Grievant Kurtz properly was held responsible for the loss in issue.

The Grievance is denied.

This is in regard to our discussions concerning the MOU on Purging of Warning Letters agreed to during the 1987 National Negotiations.

SUBJECT: Letters of Warning

By memorandum dated November 13, 1973, there was established as USPS policy the utilization of letters of warning in lieu of suspensions of less than five (5) days. This same policy is effective throughout the grievance process where consideration is being given to a reduction in discipline imposed. If a suspension of five (5) days or more is reduced administratively, the reduction should be to a letter of warning rather than a suspension of four (4) days or less, unless such short suspension constitutes an agreed upon settlement of the grievance.

Please review your existing discipline cases to insure that this policy is operative and take the necessary corrective action where necessary to insure compliance.

Between the United States Postal Service
and the
National Postal Mail Handlers Union
Questions and Answers

Effective Dates

1. What are the effective dates of implementation of the 2019 National Agreement?

Work Rules. All work rules revised by the 2019 National Agreement take effect on Saturday, April 25, 2020, unless the National Agreement specifies another date.

Wages. With regard to wage increases and new wage rates – which to this point include the November 2019 general wage increase and the COLA which was effective February 29, 2020 (paid on March 20, 2020) – these are implemented prospectively in Pay Period 10, which begins on April 25, 2020.

Night Differential. The new night differential rates begin in Pay Period 11, which begins on May 9, 2020.

MHA Overtime. The new rules on MHA overtime, providing overtime pay for hours over eight in a service day, begin on May 9, 2020.

MHA Conversions. The date for conversion of MHAs to career under the one-time conversion program for MHAs with 2.5 years of service is June 6, 2020.

Elimination of Casual Employees. The last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

MHA Relative Standing. The effective date for deeming all newly hired MHAs to be hired on a Saturday at the start of the pay period during which they begin work, solely for relative-standing-based-conversion to career, is May 9, 2020.

Starting Times. The effective date for measuring cumulative changes in starting time for a bid under revised Article 12.3B6 is the date of ratification, or April 7, 2020.

LMOUs. Because of the ongoing pandemic, the NPMHU and the Postal Service have agreed on a Memorandum of Understanding to delay the period during which the parties at each Installation will be authorized to conduct negotiations over the terms of their Local Memoranda of Understanding or LMOUs. In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing. Initialed copies of this written statement and copies of all proposals and counterproposals pertinent to the issue(s) in dispute shall be appealed within fifteen (15) days after October 31, 2020 to all of the following addresses:

   LR Service Center
   Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

Casuals

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2. the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

Recently I met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is what is the remedy when an employee serves a suspension of 14 days or less before receiving a written Step 2 decision from management.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that where an employee begins serving a suspension before the issuance of a written Step 2 decision of a properly appealed grievance under Article 16.4 of the Agreement, the appropriate remedy is to rescind the suspension and make the grievant whole. This make whole remedy is without prejudice to the Postal Service position that it may reissue the suspension to correct an administrative error and without prejudice to the Union's position that the Postal Service may not reissue the suspension.

This case is to be remanded to Step 3 for application of this settlement.

Please and sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgement of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On July 10, 1996, I discussed with your representative Richard Collins the aforementioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

Article 16.4 of the National Agreement states that no employee will begin to serve a suspension prior to the issuance of a Step 2 written decision. The issue in this case is what remedy shall be effectuated when an employee serves a suspension prior to this finding.

After reviewing this matter we mutually agreed that where an employee begins servings a suspension before the issuance of a written Step 2 decision of a properly appealed grievance under Article 16.4 of the National Agreement, the appropriate remedy will be to rescind the suspension and make the grievant whole.

This make whole remedy is without prejudice to the Postal Service's position that it may reissue the suspension to correct an administrative error and without prejudice to the Union's position that the Postal Service may not reissue the suspension.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to Step 3 for application of this settlement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

PROCEEDINGS

The United States Postal Service ("USPS", "Postal Service" or "Employer") and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union("NPMHU", "Mailhandlers" or "Union") designated me to arbitrate National-level disputes under Article 15. 5. D of their National Agreement. The terms of Article 15.3.C of that USPS/NPMHU National Agreement are dispositive of the matter in dispute but, in advancing their respective positions in this case, both the USPS and the NPMHU also cited and relied upon arbitration awards construing virtually identical language in Article 15.4.C of the National Agreement between USPS and the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO ("APWU"). After being provided with third party notice of this arbitration proceeding, the APWU elected to participate as an Intervenor in this case by appearing and participating in the hearing and filing a post-hearing brief. [At the arbitration hearing on June 13, 2006, Counsel for the APWU stipulated as follows: "Since we have intervened in this case as a third party, then [the decision in this case] interpreting that language would bind the APWU"]. See Tr. p.81, lines 10-12.

The USPS, the NPMHU and the APWU each were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument at the hearing of this matter. Following receipt of the transcribed stenographic record, the Parties deferred filing post-hearing briefs, pending the possibility of a resolution of the controversy in connection with ongoing national-level collective bargaining negotiations. The Parties subsequently advised me that their discussions had not resolved the matter and eventually filed and exchanged their respective post-hearing briefs in late March 2008. At my request, the Parties graciously allowed me an extension of the contractual time limits for the rendition of this Opinion and Award.

USPS/NPMHU 2002-2004 NATIONAL AGREEMENT
ARTICLE 15 GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 15.1 Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Step 2: (a) The standard grievance form appealing to Step 2 shall be filed with the installation head or designee. In any associate post office of twenty (20) or less employees, the Employer shall designate an official outside of the installation as the Step 2 official, and shall so notify the Union Step I representative.

(b) Any grievance initiated at Step 2, pursuant to Article 2 of this Agreement, must be filed within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the Union or the employee first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause.

(c) The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date. In all grievances appealed from Step 1 or filed at Step 2, the grievant shall be represented in Step 2 for all purposes by a steward or a Union representative who shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance as a result of discussions or compromise in this Step. The installation head or designee in Step 2 also shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part.

(d) At the meeting the Union representative shall make a full and detailed statement of facts relied upon, contractual provisions involved, and remedy sought. The Union representative may also furnish written statements from witnesses or other individuals. The Employer representative shall also make a full and detailed statement of facts and contractual provisions relied upon. The parties' representatives shall cooperate fully in the effort to develop all necessary facts, including the exchange of copies of all relevant papers or documents in accordance with Article 31. The parties' representatives may mutually agree to jointly interview witnesses where desirable to assure full development of all facts and contentions. In addition, in cases involving discharge either party shall have the right to present no more than two witnesses, Such right shall not preclude the parties from jointly agreeing to interview additional witnesses as provided above.

(e) Where grievances appealed to Step 2 involve the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, one such grievance to be selected by the Union representative shall be designated the "representative" grievance. If not resolved at Step 2, the "representative" grievance may be appealed to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. All other grievances which have been mutually agreed to as involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts as those involved in the "representative" grievance shall be held at Step 2 pending resolution of the "representative" grievance, provided they were timely filed at Step I and properly appealed to Step 2 in accordance with the grievance procedure.

(f) Following resolution of the "representative" grievance, the parties involved in that grievance shall meet at Step 2 within seven (7) days of their receipt of that resolution, unless the parties agree upon a later date, to identify the other pending grievances involving the same, or substantially similar issues or facts, and to apply the resolution to those grievances. Disputes over the applicability of the resolution of the "representative" grievance shall be resolved through the grievance arbitration procedures contained in this Article; in the event it is decided that the resolution of the "representative" grievance is not applicable to a particular grievance, the merits of that grievance shall also be considered.

(g) Any settlement or withdrawal of a grievance in Step 2 shall be in writing or shall be noted on the standard grievance form and shall be furnished to the Union representative within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. Any such settlement or withdrawal shall not be a precedent for any purpose, unless the parties specifically so agree or develop an agreement to dispose of future similar or related problems.

(h) Where agreement is not reached, the Employer's decision shall be furnished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period. The decision shall include a full statement of the Employer's understanding of (1) all relevant facts, (2) the contractual provisions involved, and (3) the detailed reasons for denial of the grievance.

(i) If the Union representative believes that the facts or contentions set forth in the decision are incomplete or inaccurate, such representative should, within ten (10) days of receipt of the Step 2 decision, transmit to the Employer's representative a written statement setting forth corrections or additions deemed necessary by the Union. Any such statement must be included in the file as part of the grievance record in the case. The filing of such corrections or additions shall not affect the time limits for appeal to Step 3.

(j) The Union may appeal an adverse Step 2 decision to Step 3. Any such appeal must be made within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Employer's decision unless the parties' representatives agree to extend the time for appeal. Any appeal must include copies of (1) the standard grievance form, (2) the Employer's written Step 2 decision, and, if filed (3) the Union corrections or additions to the Step 2 decision.

Step 3: (a) Any appeal from an adverse decision in Step 2 shall be in writing to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center with a copy to the Employer's Step 2 representative, and shall specify the reasons for the appeal.

(b) The grievant shall be represented at Step 3 level by the Union's Regional representative, or designee. The Step 3 meeting of the parties' representatives to discuss the grievance shall be held at the respective Postal Service office (former regional headquarters) within fifteen (15) days after it has been appealed to Step 3. Each party's representative shall be responsible for making certain that all relevant facts and contentions have been developed and considered. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative likewise shall have authority to grant the grievance in whole or in part. In any case where the parties' representatives mutually conclude that relevant facts or contentions were not developed adequately in Step 2, they shall have authority to jointly return the grievance to the Step 2 level for full development of all facts and further consideration at that level. In such event, the parties' representatives at Step 2 shall meet within seven (7) days after the grievance is returned to Step 2. Thereafter, the time limits and procedures applicable to Step 2 grievances shall apply.

(c) The Employer's written Step 3 decision on the grievance shall be provided to the Union's Step 3 representative within fifteen (15) days after the parties have met in Step 3, unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. Such decision shall state the reasons for the decision in detail and shall include a statement of any additional facts and contentions not previously set forth in the record of the grievance as appealed from Step 2. Such decision also shall state whether the Employer's Step 3 representative believes that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(d) The Union, at the Regional level, may appeal an adverse decision directly to arbitration at the Regional level within twenty-one (21) days after the receipt of the Employer's Step 3 decision in accordance with the procedure hereinafter set forth; provided the Employer's Step 3 decision states that no interpretive issue under this Agreement or some supplement thereto which may be of general application is involved in the case.

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue under this Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (2 1) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Steps 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the appropriate management official at the Grievance/Arbitration Processing Center.

The party whose representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue shall provide the other party a written notice specifying in detail the precise interpretive issues(s) to be decided. The Employer's notice shall be included in the Step 3 decision. The Union's written notice shall be automatically included as part of the grievance record in the case but the filing of such notice shall not affect the time limits for appeal.

Step 4: (a) In any case properly appealed or referred to this Step the parties shall meet at the National level promptly, but in no event later than thirty (30) days after filing such appeal or referral in an attempt to resolve the grievance. The Union representative shall have authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer's representative shall have authority to grant or settle the grievance in whole or in part. The parties' Step 4 representatives may, by mutual agreement, return any grievance to Step 3 where (a) the parties agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented or (b) it appears that all relevant facts have not been developed adequately. In such event, the parties shall meet at Step 3 within fifteen (15) days after the grievance is returned to Step 3. Thereafter the procedures and time limits applicable to Step 3 grievances shall apply. Following their meeting in any case not returned to Step 3, a written decision by the Employer will be rendered within fifteen (15) days after the Step 4 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the fifteen (15) day period. The decision shall include an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor. In any instance where the parties have been unable to dispose of a grievance by settlement or withdrawal, the Union shall be entitled to appeal it to arbitration at the National level within thirty (30) days after receipt of the Employer's Step 4 decision.

Article 15.3

A. The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement or withdrawal of substantially all grievances initiated hereunder at the lowest possible step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end. Every effort shall be made to ensure timely compliance and payment of monetary grievance settlements and arbitration awards. The Employer agrees that upon receipt of necessary paperwork, from the grievant and/or union, concerning a grievance settlement of arbitration award, monetary remuneration will be made. The necessary paperwork is the documents and statements specified in Subchapter 436.4 of the ELM. The Employer will provide the union copies of appropriate pay adjustment forms, including confirmation that such forms were submitted to the appropriate postal officials for compliance and that action has been taken to ensure that the affected employee(s) receives payment and/or other benefits. In the event that an employee is not paid within sixty (60) days after submission of all the necessary paperwork, such employee, upon request, will be granted authorization from management to receive a pay advance equal to seventy (70) percent of the payment owed the employee. In the event of a dispute between the parties concerning the correct amount to be paid, the advance required by this section will be the amount that is not in dispute.

B The failure of the employee or the Union in Step 1, or the Union thereafter to meet the prescribed time limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance. However, if the Employer fails to raise the issue of timeliness at Step 2, or at the step at which the employee or Union failed to meet the prescribed time limits, whichever is later, such objection to the processing of the grievance is waived.

C Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D It is agreed that in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the Union. Such a grievance shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to he decided and the contention of the Union. Thereafter the parties shall meet in Step 4 within thirty (30) days in an effort to define the precise issues involved, develop all necessary facts, and reach agreement. Should they fail to agree, then, within fifteen (15) days of such meeting, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues. In the event the parties have failed to reach agreement within sixty (60) days of the initiation of the grievance in Step 4, the Union then may appeal it to arbitration, within thirty (30) days thereafter,

E The parties have agreed to jointly develop and implement a Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM) within six (6) months after the effective date of the 1998 National Agreement. The CIM will set forth the parties' mutual understanding regarding the proper interpretation and/or application of the provisions of this Agreement. It is not intended to add to, modify, or replace, in any respect, the language in the current Agreement; nor is it intended to modify in any way the rights, responsibilities, or benefits of the parties under the Agreement. However, production of the CIM demonstrates the mutual intent of the parties at the National level to encourage their representatives at all levels to reach resolution regarding issues about which the parties are in agreement and to encourage consistency in the application of the terms of the Agreement. For these reasons, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM shall be binding on the representatives of both parties in the resolution of disputes at the Local and Regional levels, and in the processing of grievances through Steps 1, 2 and 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure. In addition, the positions of the parties as set forth in the CIM are binding on the arbitrator, in accordance with the provisions of Article 15AA6, in any Regional level arbitration case in which the CIM is introduced. The CIM will be updated periodically to reflect any modifications to the parties' positions which may result from National level arbitration awards, Step 4 decisions, or other sources. The parties' representatives are encouraged to utilize the most recent version of the CIM at all times.

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days , the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after fourteen (14) calendar days during which ten day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance arbitration procedure. However, if the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered.

BACKGROUND

The decade-old facts giving rise to this National-level grievance are fairly straightforward and not much in material dispute. On December 30, 1997, Lewis J. Rothman, III was notified by Management of a proposed 14-day disciplinary suspension, for alleged attendance irregularity and excessive absenteeism from his job in the Des Moines, Iowa BMC. The timely filed Step 1 grievance challenge by NPMHU, claiming lack of just cause for that discipline, (Grievance No. 22-333-00698) was denied by Management on January 16, 1998 and appealed to Step 2 by the Union on January 23, 1998. When the Employer thereafter failed to schedule any Step 2 meeting within the time limits set forth in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c), the NPMHU, on February 4, 1998, simultaneously invoked the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3.C and also filed a formal appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698 to Step 3.[1] After the Union declined a request by Management to "remand" the case back to a Step 2 meeting, Management responded with the following document, dated February 19, 1998, labeled "Step 2 Denial":

> The subject Step 2 grievance was not discussed with your representative, Tony Irvin in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement. The Union appealed with out the benefit of a meeting; respectfully request the grievance be remanded to step 2.
> The union contends the grievant was issued a 14 day suspension and allege violation of article 16 of the National Agreement and ELM 5 15. The union requests the discipline be expunged from all files and records.
>
> The facts in this case are the grievant received a 14 day suspension for failing to meet the attendance requirements, after receiving a 5 day suspension and a letter of warning for failing to meet the attendance requirements of his position. There was a settlement on the five day suspension. One date cited on the notice of suspension, was outside of the review period, however there were a sufficient number of absences to establish just cause. Information provided by the union in their written appeal did not establish a violation of article 16 or ELM 15.
> Inasmuch as the union has failed to establish a contractual violation, a contractual basis for the requested remedy, or that just cause did not exist, this grievance is denied.

The Union thereafter perfected its appeal of Grievance No. 22-333-00698, which eventually resulted in a regional arbitration award, on October 26, 1998, by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, infra. In the meantime, after Management had directed Mr. Rathman to begin serving the 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, the NPMHU also filed Grievance No. 98072898; invoking Article 15.3.C and claiming violations of Articles 3,5,and 16.4 of the National Agreement. The string of successive Management denials of that grievance leading to this arbitration read as follows:

[1] As noted in my discussion of the Issue, infra, no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

Step 2 Denial of March 30, 1998

The subject Step 2 grievance was discussed . . . on March 16, 1998, in accordance with Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement.

The union contends the grievant was placed on suspension and allege a violation of articles 3, 5, and 16, of the National Agreement. The union did not explain the relevance of articles 3 and or how they were violated. The union requests the grievant be made whole and the subject discipline be expunged from all files and records.

As claimed by the union, this grievance was appealed to step 3 without the benefit of a step 2 meeting. Management attempted to meet with the union at step 2 after their appeal, but the union refused.

In accordance with Article 16.4 of the National Agreement, the grievant did not begin his suspension until a step 2 decision had been issued prior.

Step 3 Denial of June 2, 1998

Pursuant to the terms and obligations as set forth in Article 15 of the 1994 National Agreement, management and union designees met at Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The result of that meeting on the above referenced case is as follows:

The issue is whether management violated Articles 3, 5 and 16 of the National Agreement when the grievant was allegedly placed on suspension prior to management rendering its step two decision.

The record establishes that the grievant initiated a grievance concerning a notice of suspension received on January 6, 1998. The parties did not discuss that grievance at step two within the prescribed time limits. On February 4,1998 the union appealed that grievance to step three without holding a step two meeting. On February 19 management provided the local union with its written step two decision for the grievance at issue. On February 21 the grievant began serving the suspension period.

The local union's claim that management was prohibited from (ever) requiring the grievant to serve his suspension is totally baseless. The union has failed to present any evidence to support their allegation that management is barred from ever requiring an employee to serve a suspension when the grievance (protesting the suspension) is appealed to step three due to the failure to meet at step two in a timely manner. Indeed, the union's assertion would change the clear intent of the requirement to "delay" a suspension outlined In Article 16.4 of the Agreement. In any event, the step two decision n this case was "rendered" and provided to the union prior to the grievant beginning his suspension.

The union's attempt to disavow the step two decision is groundless as is their entire "position" in this matter. The union has failed to demonstrate a violation or the relevance of the cited Articles of the Agreement. Absent the union meeting their burden in this contractual matter and absent the union providing a foundation for their requested remedy, this grievance is denied.

Step 4 Denial of November 9, 1998

On November 2. 1998, I met with your representative Dallas Jones to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement when management issued a Step 2 Decision without meeting with the Union at the Step 2 level of the grievance process.

The Union contends that this is an issue of due process in that management had to meet with the union before it could issue a Step 2 decision. The Union contends that if management failed to meet at Step 2, then it could not rightfully issue a Step 2 decision. The union further contends that if there is no Stop 2 decision, then management would be in violation of Article 16.4 of the National Agreement by forcing the Grievant to serve the fourteen (14) day suspension.

It is the position of the Postal Service that no interpretive issue involving the terms and conditions of the National Agreement is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Article 16, Section 2 of the National Agreement to the particular circumstances. However, inasmuch as the Union did not agree, the following represents the decision of the Postal Service.

Article 15.2 Step 2: (c) of the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) National Agreement states in part; ' The installation head or designee will meet with the steward or a Union representative as expeditiously as possible, but no later than seven (7) days following receipt of the Step 2 appeal unless the parties agree upon a later date...

Article 15.3. C. off the National Agreement further states, in part; "Failure by the Employer to scheduled a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance arbitration procedure.

Management contends that the terms and conditions of Article 15 compel management to meet with the union as soon as possible after receipt of a timely Step 2 Appeal; likewise, Article 15 provides for the union to proceed to the next stop in the grievance process if management fails to meet within the required time period.

The evidence of record indicates that management did not to meet within the seven (7) day period after a grievance was initiated by the union. Although the seven (7) day time period had elapsed, the record indicates that management made good faith attempts to meet with the union to discuss the grievance. However, the terms of Article 15 state that the both parties have agree to any extension to meet beyond the seven (7) day period. The union's Step 2 Representative in this case did not agree to an extension; therefore, the union exercised its contractual rights and appealed the grievance to the Stop 3 level of the grievance process.

It is management's position that the grievance procedures outlined in Article 15 include provisions for the parties to take if the steps of the grievance process are not properly adhered to. Management argues that the union did in fact exercise its contractual rights by forwarding the grievance to Step 3 which was the appropriate resolve if the parties did not meet at Step 2.

Furthermore, Article 15.2 Step 2: (h) of the National Agreement states in part: "Where agreement is not reached, the Employees decision shall be fumished to the Union representative in writing within ten (10) days after the Step 2 meeting unless the parties agree to extend the ten (10) day period..."

In accordance with Article 16 of the National Agreement regarding suspensions of 14 Days or less, Section 16.4 states in part: "...the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered." This provision outlined in the discipline procedure requires management to render a decision prior to a grievant serving the suspension. This provision does not dictate that managements decision hinges on whether or not a Step 2 meeting took place.

It is the Service's position that this is not a dispute for national interpretation. The terms and conditions of Article 15 dearly identify and plainly articulate the steps to process a grievance. There are no provisions at any level of the grievance process that prohibits management from issuing a Step 2 decision letter.

After careful review of the facts surrounding this grievance, it is managements position that this dispute does not rise to application for interpretive determination. In view of the above considerations, this grievance is denied.

When that matter remained unresolved, NPMHU made a timely appeal for final and binding determination of the confronting procedural issue in Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 to National-level arbitration, under Article 15.4.D of the Mail Handlers National Agreement between NPMHU and USPS. While the appeals of that case were progressing to this National Arbitration, however, the underlying grievance protesting the merits of the 14 day suspension (No. 22-333-00698) was decided long ago, in expedited arbitration by Arbitrator Roger L. Goldman, whose Award of October 26, 1998 reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

FACTS: Grievant, Lewis J. Rothman III, was issued a Notice of Fourteen Day Suspension for being irregular in attendance. Grievant had previously received a Letter of Warning, dated December 31, 1996, and a five day suspension, dated May 27, 1997, both for failure To Maintain Regular Attendance.

UNION'S POSITION: Union contends that the Suspension was punitive, rather than corrective action and therefore lacked just cause; that it was procedurally defective; and that it should be rescinded and Grievant made whole.

MANAGEMENT'S POSITION: Management contends that there was just cause to issue the.,Notice of Suspension to Grievant; that the procedure was not defective; and therefore the grievance should be denied.

A. Jurisdiction of the Arbitrator

There is a serious question whether the Arbitrator has jurisdiction of the case since Union referred the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure on August 12, 1998, Management Exhibit 5. Pursuant to Article 15, Sec. 15.4(b)51 either party may remove a case from regional arbitration and refer the case to Step 4 of the grievance procedure. In that event, the referring party pays the entire cost of the regional arbitrator, unless another scheduled case is heard on that date. No other case was heard. Although the August 12, 1998 referral by Union to Step 4 did state the case was withdrawn from regional arbitration, neither party renewed the request that the case be withdrawn from regional arbitration on October 20, 1998, the date of the arbitration. Management sought a decision on the merits while Union sought a decision on both the procedural issue and the merits.

No provision in the Agreement was cited to Arbitrator that directly addressed the question: Can an Arbitrator proceed to decide an issue (in this case, the merits) while another issue is pending at Step 4 (in this case, the procedural issue)?

Since both parties were willing to have the arbitrator proceed on the merits and since the Arbitrator did hear evidence on the merits, it would seem inconsistent with the purposes of arbitration to be expeditious and inexpensive for the Arbitrator to dismiss the entire grievance on jurisdictional grounds. Accordingly, the Arbitrator will render a decision on the merits but will stay implementation of the decision until completion of the Step 4 proceeding and its possible appeal to National Arbitration.

B. Issues to be Decided

The parties differ on the jurisdiction of the Arbitrator to render a decision-on the procedural matter which is now pending at Step 4 of the grievance procedure.

The procedural matter arises from the failure of the parties to meet within 7 days of the receipt of the Step 2 appeal. Union claims that such a failure to meet prohibits a Step 2 decision from being validly rendered, and without a Step 2 decision, there can be no discipline. (Management contends that there was a valid Step 2 decision rendered, and that a Step 2 meeting is not necessary to make the Step 2 decision valid).

The Arbitrator agrees with Management that he cannot decide this procedural issue which is now pending at Step 4 as an interpretative issue under the National Agreement. Article 15, Section 15.4(b)5, does not contemplate a regional arbitrator resolving the very same issue, in the same case, that is pending at Step 4.

Therefore, the Arbitrator will not address the procedural issue but will only decide the merits.

AWARD: Grievance denied but the 14 day suspension is not to take effect until after the Step IV decision and appeal to Arbitration, if any, in the case involving this same Grievant, Regional # 194M-II-C-98072898, dated August 12, 1998 (sic). If the ruling in that case sustains the Grievance concerning the lack of a Step 2 meeting, the suspension upheld in this case is not to take effect and shall be expunged from all records. If the ruling in that case denies the Grievance, the 14 day suspension in the case before this Arbitrator shall take effect and may be cited in later discipline.[2]

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

The following statements of position have been extrapolated and edited from the respective post hearing briefs:

NPMHU

Once a grievance properly has been "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance arbitration process pursuant to Article 15.3C, Step 2 of that process has, by definition, ended. By agreement of the parties, "jurisdiction" (as it were) has passed from Step 2 of the grievance-arbitration process to Step 3, and from that point forward the grievance is to be handled and ultimately resolved exclusively in accordance with the various provisions of Article 15 governing those steps of the grievance-arbitration process beyond Step 2. This being so, there is no basis whatsoever in the National Agreement or in common sense for the Postal Service's assertion of a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances for any purpose—whether for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article 15.3B of the National Agreement, see infra pp. 21-24, or for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement. Recognition of such a contractual right belatedly to issue a Step 2 decision in these circumstances would in effect excuse the Postal Service's "[f]ailure . . . to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," and there is no warrant in Article 15.3C or in any other provision of the National Agreement for excusing such a failure on the Postal Service's part.

The premise of that Postal Service response is that where a collective bargaining agreement does not set out the parties' agreement on a particular issue in express language, it is never appropriate for an arbitrator to imply an agreement between the parties on that issue. But that premise is a false one, as every experienced labor arbitrator knows. Given the realities of collective bargaining, labor arbitrators regularly are called upon—and properly so—to resolve interpretative disputes over the consequences that flow from an agreed-upon contractual provision that does not state those consequences in express language. And, a labor arbitrator who answers that call by reasonably concluding that the wording of contractual provision "X" necessarily implies consequence "Y" does not thereby commit the cardinal sin of "re-writing" the parties' agreement for them.

For the foregoing reasons, the NPMHU respectfully requests that the Arbitrator to find that when a grievance properly is "deemed . . . move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," the Postal Service may not thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance for any purpose, including specifically (i) for the purpose of resurrecting a timeliness objection to the Union's processing of the grievance that has been "waived" under Article15.3B of the National Agreement; and(ii) for the purpose of requiring the grievant to serve a fourteen-day suspension that has been tolled pending a Step 2 decision under Article 16.5 of the National Agreement.

U.S.P.S.

The NPMHU has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that the Postal Service violated the contract by issuing a Step 2 decision after the NPMHU had appealed the grievance to Step 3. The clear and unambiguous language of the parties' agreement does not prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting. Rather, the agreement specifies the single consequence resulting from a failure to schedule a step 2 meeting or issue a timely step 2 decision–the only consequence of not scheduling or having a meeting is that the Union may, after the relevant time periods have expired, move

There was no prejudice to the grievant or Union as a result of the issuance of the Step 2 decision after the NPMHU's appeal to Step 3. Indeed, the Union here had a double opportunity to evaluate and respond to the Postal Service's position, as it filed two related grievances. Therefore, the NPMHU has no plausible argument that any prejudice whatsoever was caused by the "belated" Step 2 decision. And notably, it is due to the NPMHU's own refusal to cooperate in remanding the grievance to Step 2 that this "interpretive" issue even arose.

The cases also do not support the proposition that if a Step 2 decision is issued after an appeal has been taken under Article 15.3C, the union is entitled to an automatic victory, as it is effectively seeking here. The NPMHU's invitation to add new consequences on top of negotiated contract language must be declined, for what it seeks is improper and contrary to both the CBA, which prohibits the arbitrator from legislating for the parties, and to customary rules of contract interpretation, which prohibit decision-makers from — under the guise of contract interpretation — rewriting or modifying the parties' negotiated agreement. In addition to the fact that adding these negative consequences would be tantamount to rewriting the parties' contract, it would also encourage games of "gotcha". In short, there would be less incentive to cooperate, which both the NPMHU and the APWU agree is an important part of the grievance-arbitration process. The proposal of the NPMHU to find that additional consequences outside the contract flow from the absence of a Step 2 decision prior to an appeal to Step 3 would therefore not only conflict with the contract itself, but would also be a disservice to the truth and to the mutual cooperation that underlies successful collective bargaining relationships.

In addition, to accept the NPMHU's proposal would be tantamount to granting the Union a default judgment in all discipline cases involving 14-day suspensions–a result the Union has attempted but failed to achieve in bargaining. By seeking in arbitration what it failed to achieve in bargaining, the NPMHU hopes to chip ts way closer to its unachieved bargaining demands from 1993 and 1998. This is improper. See Elkouri at 454 ("[A] party may not obtain 'through arbitration what it could not acquire through negotiation'" (quoting Postal Service v. APWU, 204 F.3d 523, 530 (4th Cir. 2000)). Accordingly, the NPMHU's improper, unjustified and contra-contractual request should be denied.

The NPMHU's due process claims are disingenuous and without merit, as the Grievant suffered no harm. Further, no due process violation arises in cases where no Step 2 meeting is held or timely Step 2 decision is issued. The parties anticipated that Step 2 may be bypassed in drafting their agreement and, therefore, the parties provided for a full opportunity to explain their versions of the facts and arguments — including new arguments not raised previously — at Step 3. Although Article 15.3C begins with the phrase, "[f]ailure by the Employer to schedule a meeting," many instances exist where, due to one intervening event or another, it is virtually impossible for the Postal Service to schedule a Step 2 meeting within seven days or for the parties to meet at Step 2 within seven days as required by Article 15.2.Step 2(c). And common experience teaches that from time to time events happen that hinder the scheduling of a Step 2 meeting or someone's attendance at a Step 2 meeting, and one party is unwilling to agree to an extension agreement. To namejust a few examples, the parties' scheduled days off, sick, personal, or annual leave usage, natural or human-caused disasters, traffic problems, business travel, grievance processing, and/or arbitration hearings may make scheduling, or attaining an extension, within seven days difficult, if not impossible. Although the NPMHU is under an obligation to act in good faith, sometimes the Union plays games, as it admittedly did here in refusing to remand the grievance to Step 2.

The NPMHU urges that the opportunity to issue a Step 2 decision is extinguished once the Union has taken an appeal to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C. The NPMHU reasons that once such an appeal has been taken, "jurisdiction" over the grievance resides solely at Step 3 and no longer resides at Step 2. This artful and hyper-technical argument may make sense in the context of a district court opinion that has been appealed under clearly written jurisdictional statutes and judicial precedent. But it is specious in this context where no provision of the CBA discusses the Union's concept of "jurisdiction," or whether a Step 2 decision can be rendered after an appeal to Step 3 has been taken. Since the parties are expressly permitted to present new facts and arguments at Step 3, it follows that the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision after an appeal to Step 3 as a way to provide additional facts and arguments. The NPMHU's "jurisdictional" view, however, would effectively create a forfeiture where no "timely" Step 2 decision is issued. This nonsensical result could not possibly have been what the parties intended and, indeed, the Postal Service rejected such views during the 1993 and 1998 negotiations. Moreover, because "the law abhors a forfeiture," Elkouri at 482, the Postal Service's interpretation, which avoids one, is preferable. See id. ("If any agreement is susceptible of two constructions, one of which would work a forfeiture and one of which would not, the arbitrator will be inclined to adopt the interpretation that will prevent the forfeiture").

APWU

The APWU supports the NALC's position that the contractual language is clear in providing that the only instance in which the Postal Service may issue a Step 2 decision is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of the contractual time limits set forth in Article 15.2 of the collective bargaining agreements. It makes little sense to ignore the parties' mutual agreement that the only instance in which the Postal Service may hold a Step 2 meeting or issue a Step 2 decision beyond the contractual time requirements is where the parties have mutually agreed to an extension of time. Absent such agreement to extend the time limits, if the Postal Service fails to timely respond, it has forfeited its opportunity to issue a decision on the grievance at Step 2.

The Postal Service claims that the contractual language permits it to issue an untimely Step 2 decision, even where there has been no Step 2 meeting, because the contract is silent regarding the result of the Postal Service's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting. This argument stretches the imagination and ignores the plain language of Article 15. The contract is not at all silent about the required steps of the grievance procedure, which requires the Postal Service to meet with the Union representative within seven days of receiving the Step 2 appeal. The Step 2 decision does not exist independent of the Step 2 meeting, but must be issued within ten days of the Step 2 meeting. If the Postal Service fails to meet either time limit, then absent an agreement to extend the time limits, Step 2 is over and the grievance is "deemed to move ... to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure."

According to the Postal Service, however, this particular consequence apparently does not preclude it from continuing to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 and the applicable time limits no longer apply. This reading of the contract defies logic and renders the relevant contractual provisions meaningless. If the grievance has moved to the next step of the grievance procedure, then the Postal Service may not continue to treat the grievance as if it remained at Step 2 by issuing an untimely Step 2 decision.

There is no silence or ambiguity regarding the impact of the Postal Service's failure to comply with the contractual time lines. Absent agreement to extend those time lines, the Postal Service may not schedule an untimely Step 2 meeting or issue an untimely Step 2 decision. IV. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above and at the hearing in this matter, the Arbitrator should sustain NPMHU's grievance and find that, in the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, the Postal Service may not issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

OPINION OF THE NATIONAL ARBITRATOR

ISSUE

The Parties did not present a joint submission of the issue(s) to be determined in this National-level arbitration case of Case No. 194M-11-C 98072898. In Steps 2, 3 and 4 handling, supra, both Parties had framed the issue presented by Grievance No. 194M-11-C 98072898 in straight forward factual terms whether a "Step 2 denial" dated February 19, 1998, of a grievance "deemed moved" to Step 3 on February 4, 1998 because no Step 2 meeting had been timely scheduled by the Employer, was effective to initiate a 14-day suspension on February 21, 1998, under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly Article 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement. However, during the hearing on June 13, 2006, and later in their respective posthearing briefs, Counsel advanced various revisions of the issue formulations customized by artful pleading to better fit preferred theories of the case. At the June 13, 2006 arbitration hearing, the NPMHU proposed the following alternative formulation of the issue: If the Postal Service fails to schedule a Step 2 meeting on a grievance within the time provided by Article 15.2 of the NPMHU/USPS Agreement (including mutually agreed to extension periods) --thus triggering Article 15.3C, which states that such a failure "shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step [i.e., Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure" -- can the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance? In its March 21, 2008, post-hearing brief, NPMHU again reformulated its statement of the issue, as follows: When a grievance properly is "deemed . . .move[d]" to Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration process under Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, based on a "[f]ailure by the [Postal Service] to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting," may the Postal Service thereafter issue a Step 2 decision with respect to that grievance?

For its part, the Postal Service initially re-framed its suggested issue as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting? In its post-hearing brief, dated March 21, 2008, the Postal Service again reformulated its earlier suggested statements of the issue, as follows: Does the Collective Bargaining Agreement ("CBA") between the NPMHU and Postal Service prohibit the Postal Service from issuing a Step 2 decision if there has been no Step 2 meeting and the NPMHU has appealed the grievance to Step 3 in accordance with Article 15.3C of the CBA?

As the Intervenor, APWU suggested that the following articulation best describes its perspective on the issue presented for determination in this case: In the absence of a mutually agreed upon extension of time, may the Postal Service issue a Step 2 decision beyond the time limits prescribed in Article 15, Section 2, Step 2.f of the National Agreement between the APWU and the Postal Service?

After carefully considering the facts and circumstances of this record and the competing formulations, I conclude that none of the foregoing formulations accurately sets forth the only issue fairly presented by the factual record of this case. In that regard, it begs the question to ask whether the Agreement "prohibits" issuing or whether the Postal Service "can" or "may" issue a Step 2 decision after the grievance has already moved on to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C. Rather, the real (and only) question presented by the facts of this particular is case is whether such a belatedly issued Step 2 decision has any contractual validity, force or effect for purposes of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Moreover, the various revised issue formulations proposed by Counsel all openly invite dicta and/or arbitral determination of related disputed issues which might or could arise under a different set of facts but which are not adequately presented for determination in this record.

Finally, it must also be noted that the record in the present case squarely presents for arbitral determination only the limited issue of contractual interplay between Articles 15.2 Step 2(c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of 16.5 (16.4 in the previous contract). This case does not properly present any issue concerning the last sentence of Article 15.3.B-- a matter raised de novo by the NPMHU at the arbitration hearing. In the present case, the Postal Service asserted no timeliness objections below and the NPMHU never raised any Article 15.3.B waiver argument in any of the moving papers. Black letter law in labor arbitration holds that when written grievances and grievance procedure discussions clearly limit the issues in dispute, arbitrators should foreclose introduction of new claims at the time of the hearing (other than fundamental jurisdictional challenges). See, International Paper, 105 LA 970, 974 (Duda, 1996); Mason & Dixon Tank Lines, 94 LA 1225, 1228 (Byars, 1990);

City of Cadillac, 88 LA 924, 925 (Huston, 1987); NLRB Union, 76 LA 450, 456 (Gentile, 1981); Ralston Purina Co., 71 LA 519, 523-24 (Andrews, 1978). Were the rule otherwise, the most basic purpose of the Parties' grievance resolution mechanism--prompt discussion and consideration of issues at informal and earlier stages of the grievance procedure with the goal of resolution short of arbitration--would be frustrated.

Accordingly, I find that the only interpretive issue fairly presented by Case No. 194M-11-C-98072898 for determination in this National-level arbitration case is objectively framed as follows:

> Does a Step 2 decision issued by the Postal Service after the grievance has been progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the "deemed to move" provisions of Article 15.3.C, because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time provided in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c) (including mutually agreed to extension periods), have any validity, force or effect under the last sentence of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement?[3]

DECISION

The Postal Service quite correctly points out that the NPMHU bears the burden of proving its grievance claim in this case by a persuasive preponderance of record evidence. See Postal Service and Nat'l Rural Ltr. Carrier's Assoc., No. Q95R-4Q-C 02101253 (National Arb., May 15, 2006: Eischen, Arb.): "[I]t is well-established that the charging party in a nondisciplinary grievance bears the burden of proof, by a

[3] My use of the emphasized conjunctive phrase "because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting" tracks the literal language of Article 15.3.C and posits the undisputed fact that in this particular case no intervening event and no delay, default or dereliction by the employee or the Union caused or contributed in any way to the Employer's failure to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time required by the Agreement. Similarly, my use of the emphasized adverb in "progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the 'deemed to move' provisions of Article 15.3.C" serves to skirt the significant dispute between the Parties (not fairly presented by the facts of this particular case) of how a grievance progresses contractually from Step 2 to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C ("automatically", as the NPMHU would have it, or only through the filing of "a formal appeal", as the Postal Service would have it). Thus, determination of the of the issue set forth in the foregoing formulation resolves the specific controversy presented in this case but preserves for possible arbitral resolution at a later date, hopefully in an appropriate case with an adequately informed record, the respective positions of the Parties on these various other potential but currently inchoate issues.

The arbitrator's primary goal must be to effectuate the intent of the parties, which ordinarily is best ascertained from the plain words used in their collective bargaining agreement to express their bargain. Even when the parties to an agreement disagree on what was intended by disputed contract language, an arbitrator who finds the language to be unambiguous will enforce its plain meaning. See Safeway Stores, 85 LA 472, 476 (1985) (Thorp); Metropolitan Warehouse, 76 LA 14, 17-18 (1981) (Darrow). Arbitrators and courts alike presume that understandable language means what it says, despite the contentions of one of the parties that something other than the apparent meaning was intended. Independent School Dist. No. 47, 86 LA 97, 103 (1985) (Gallagher). Thus, it is a maxim of contract construction that an arbitrator cannot properly eviscerate the contract by ignoring clear-cut contractual language nor usurp the role of the labor organization and employer by legislating new language under the guise of interpretation. Clean Coverall Supply Company, 47 LA 272, 277 (Fred Witney, 1966). See also, Continental Oil Company, 69 LA 399, 404 (A. J. Wann, 1977) and Andrew Williams Meat Company, 8 LA 518, 524 (A. J. Chaney, 1947).

The following language of Article 15.3.C first appeared in the 1978 National Agreement and has appeared in haec verba in every National Agreement since that time:

> Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

In a National Arbitration award issued shortly after that contractual provision (in its current form) appeared in 1978, Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal construed the language of Article 15.3C, as follows (USPS and NALC Case N8-NAT-0006, p.7):

> [T]he parties wrote into the present grievance procedure that a grievance will automatically move to the next step where there is a "failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting . . . in any of the Steps . . . within the time herein provided. . ." The Postal Service has an obligation to schedule a Step 3 meeting once a proper appeal has been taken from a Step 2 decision. But that obligation pertains strictly to time constraints.(emphasis added).

The use of the disjunctive "or" in the grammatical construction of Article 15.3.C makes it clear that a procedural failure by the Employer to schedule a [timely Step 2] meeting carries the same consequence as a failure of the Employer to render a [timely Step 2] decision-- i.e., a timeliness failure by the Postal Service of either specified kind "shall be deemed to move the grievance to [Step 3] of the grievance-arbitration procedure."[4] Further, under that express wording, it is also clear that the catalyst for an Article 15.3.C "deemed to move" progression of a grievance from the current step to the next step of the grievance-arbitration procedure is a "[f]ailure by the Employer" to fulfill its contractual obligation to initiate one or the other of those two specified procedural actions in a timely manner at the current step.[5]

The bottom line question presented by this grievance and this factual record is whether the Parties mutually intended that a Step 2 decision "rendered" belatedly by the Employer, some two weeks after the grievance was "deemed to move" properly from Step 2 to Step 3 under Article 15.3.C, because the Employer had failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting, has any validity, force or effect for the purpose of requiring the Grievant to begin serving a fourteen-day disciplinary suspension that had been tolled, pending rendition of the Step 2 decision, by the following express language in the last sentence of ¶2 Article 16.5 of the National Agreement: " [I]f the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the action and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the grievant shall not begin to serve the suspension until after the Step 2 decision has been rendered". The undisputed facts of record and the plain words of the Agreement language persuade me that the Union carried its initial burden of making out a prima facie showing that the contracting Parties mutually intended no such thing.

[4] At the risk of redundancy, I reiterate previous disclaimers that no opinion is expressed or implied in this decision on the countervailing positions of the Parties regarding whether filing a formal Step 3 appeal is a contractual necessity when a Step 2 grievance is"deemed to move" to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure under the provisions of Article 15.3.C.

[5] See also page 5, footnote 4 of the NPMHU brief, viz., "the NPMHU readily acknowledges that 'if there has been no Step 2 meeting' on a grievance owing to a failure of some kind on the NPMHU's part—for example, the failure by a Union representative to attend a Step 2 meeting timely scheduled by the Postal Service—the Service would not on account of that NPMHU failure be precluded from issuing a Step 2 decision on the grievance". (Emphasis in original).

Those undisputed facts of record in this case show that the Union or employee timely initiated the grievance and timely appealed the grievance to Step 2, that the Employer failed to timely schedule the Step 2 meeting and that the Employer "rendered" the Step 2 decision long after the grievance had been properly progressed to Step 3. The Postal Service responds that an untimely Step 2 decision issued in the absence of a Step 2 meeting and after the grievance is at Step 3 has the same force and effect under Article 16.5 as a timely issued Step 2 decision rendered after a timely Step 2 meeting because neither Article 15.2 nor 15.3 expressly state that a Step 2 decision belatedly rendered after the grievance has been progressed to Step 3 has no force and effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 and because the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 does not expressly state that to have force and effect for the purpose of that sentence the Step 2 decision referenced therein must have been timely rendered before the grievance was progressed to Step 3. The Employer's "lack of express language" theory is misplaced and unpersuasive because it stands logic, reason and the so-called "plain-meaning rule" on its head.

The lack of such express disclaimer(s) is not fatal to the Union's grievance because the necessary implication of the cited Agreement provisions is that a Step 2 decision must be timely rendered while the grievance is still at Step 2 to have contractual validity, force and effect for the purpose of the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5. Courts and arbitrators routinely recognize that it is proper and fitting to give effect to the manifest intent of contracting parties plainly evidenced in the "necessary implications" of their express contract language.[6] Such judicious inference of mutual intent founded in the logical, reasonable, natural and necessary implications of express contract language is readily distinguishable from improper arbitral rewriting of the Agreement.[7]

[6] Indeed, discernment of mutual intent through necessary implication is particularly appropriate in the interpretation and application of a collective bargaining agreement, which is "more than a contract; it is a generalized code to govern the myriad of cases which the draftsmen cannot wholly anticipate. . .The collective agreement covers the whole employment relationship." United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574, 578-82, 80 S.Ct. 1347, 46 LRRM 2416 1960, citing, at 363 U.S. 579 n.6, Cox, "Reflections Upon Labor Arbitration", 72 Harvard. L. Rev. 1482, 1498-99 (1959).

[7] See USPS and NALC/APWU (Intervenor) Case H4N-3U-C-58637/H4N-3A-C-59518, National Award, (Mittenthal, Arb., August 3, 1990) and USPS and NALC Case G9ON-4G-D93040395, National Award, (Mittenthal, Arb., August 18, 1994).

Experienced practitioners and arbitrators understand that a collective bargaining agreement is not (and cannot reasonably be expected to function as), an ersatz "Napoleonic Code"; addressing in express language every consequence and contingency that flows logically from agreed-upon contractual provisions. For example, it would be odd indeed if the parties to this collective bargaining agreement had found it necessary to specify expressly in Articles 15.3.C. or 16.5 that they did not mutually intend that the Employer could circle back unilaterally to Step 2, after the grievance was properly progressed to Step 3, to issue a belated Step 2 decision it had failed to render in a timely manner when the grievance was at Step 2 for the purpose of requiring a grievant to start serving a 14-day disciplinary suspension which had been tolled pending rendition of the Step 2 decision. To the contrary, the reasonable, logical and necessary implication of the plain language of Articles 15.3.C and 16.5 is that a Step 2 decision must be rendered in a timely manner and before the grievance is progressed properly to Step 3 to have any validity and contractual force or effect under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5.

Although obviously not binding in this National Arbitration, the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit in Eastman Kodak Co. v. STWB, Inc., 452 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2006), which was rendered shortly after the hearing in this case, lends strong support to this common sense reading of Articles 15.3C and 16.5. The Eastman Kodak decision involved an ERISA regulation adopted by the United States Department of Labor ("DOL")—dubbed the "deemed exhausted" provision/regulation by the Second Circuit—which provides in full:

> In the case of the failure of a[n] [ERISA] plan to establish or follow claims procedures consistent with the requirements of this section, a claimant shall be deemed to have exhausted the administrative remedies available under the plan and shall be entitled to pursue any available remedies under section 502(a) of the Act on the basis that the plan has failed to provide a reasonable claims procedure that would yield a decision on the merits of the claim.

The Second Circuit agreed with the DOL that the "deemed exhausted" regulation properly was interpreted to foreclose the defendant ERISA plan from "effectively 'undeem[ing]' exhaustion by enacting, for the first time, procedures that complied with the claims regulation after [plaintiff] filed suit and after failing to offer an appropriate procedure in the many months preceding [plaintiff's] lawsuit." Id. at 222 (emphasis added). As the appellate court succinctly put it, "[g]iving retroactive effect to a plan amendment in these circumstances . . . plainly conflicts with the 'deemed exhausted' regulation." Id. (emphasis added). And, as the appellate court added: "The 'deemed exhausted' provision was plainly designed to give claimants faced with inadequate claims procedures a fast track into court—an end not compatible with allowing a 'do-over' to plans that failed to get it right the first time." Id. (emphasis added). Applying that reasoning to the facts of this case, to allow the Postal Service a unilateral "do-over" of Step 2, after a grievance properly has been progressed to Step 3 under the "deemed to move" provision of Article 15.3C of the National Agreement, because of the Postal Service's failure to get the contractually-required Step 2 procedures right the first time, would plainly conflict with the mutual intent of the Parties, as manifested in the plain language and the logical, reasonable and necessary implications of Articles 15.2, Step 2 (c), 15.3.C and the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

In my considered judgement, the Union carried its ultimate burden of persuasion in this case that a Step 2 decision issued after the grievance has been "deemed to move" properly to Step 3, by dint of Article 15.3.C, lacks contractual validity, force or effect to implement a 14-day suspension under the last sentence of ¶2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the National Agreement.

AWARD OF THE IMPARTIAL ARBITRATOR

1) A Step 2 decision issued by the Postal Service after the grievance has been progressed properly to Step 3 in accordance with the "deemed to move" provisions of Article 15.3.C, because of failure by the Employer to schedule a Step 2 meeting within the time provided in Article 15.2 Step 2 (c) (including mutually agreed to extension periods), has no validity, force or effect under the last sentence of ¶ 2 of Article 16.5 (formerly 16.4) of the USPS/NPMHU National Agreement.

2) Jurisdiction is retained for the sole purpose of resolving any disputes which may arise between the Parties regarding the meaning, application or implementation of this Award.

Dear Mr. Tunstall:

On July 16, 1991, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the time limits an employee must meet in order to grieve a proposed removal action:

As a result of our discussion, we mutually agreed to close this case based on the following understanding:

1. For the purpose of grievance procedure appeals, the time limits of Section 2 of Article 15 of the National Agreement shall run from the proposed removal notice, not from any decision letter on the proposed notice.

2. Once a notice of proposed removal is grieved, it is not necessary to also file a grievance on the decision letter. Once a grievance on a notice of proposed removal is filed, it is not necessary to also file a grievance on the decision letter.

3. Receipt of a notice of proposed removal starts the 30 day advance notice period of Section 5 of Article 16 of the National Agreement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to close this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Hutchins:

On October 26, 1988, a meeting was held with the NALC Director of City Delivery, Brian Farris, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the day of receipt of a notice of discipline should be included as part of the required minimum period of notice to the employee.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that for purposes of computing the period of notice required in advance of the imposition of various disciplinary measures, such notice period shall be deemed to commence on the day following the date upon which the letter of notification is received by the employee.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further consistent with the above, processing including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

CASE NO. NC-NAT-8580

INTERPRETATION OF ARTICLE XVI, Section 3, of the 1975 National Agreement

ISSUED: September 29, 1978

BACKGROUND

This national level grievance involves interpretation of the last sentence of Section 3 of Article XVI in the 1975 National Agreement. Relevant portions of Article XVI include: 1

"ARTICLE XVI
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

"In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

"Section 3. Suspensions of More Than 30 Days or Discharge. In the case of suspensions of more than thirty (30) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against him and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure. A preference eligible who chooses to appeal his suspension of more than thirty (30) days or his discharge to the Civil Service Commission rather than through the grievance-arbitration procedure shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had either by settlement or through exhaustion of his Civil Service appeal. When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the advance notice requirement shall not apply and such an employee may be immediately removed from pay status.

"Section 4. Emergency Procedure. An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U.S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to himself or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of his case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than thirty (30) days or discharge him, the emergency action taken under this Section may be made the subject of a separate grievance."

The basic problem here is whether, when (1) an employee has been suspended indefinitely because the USPS has reasonable cause to believe the individual is guilty of a crime for which imprisonment may result and (2) the criminal charge later is dropped or the employee found not guilty, the employee, upon reinstatement, properly can be made whole for earnings lost during the period of suspension. In order to define the problem more clearly, the parties have presented a specific grievance from Cleveland. There Grievant M-, a long service Carrier with an unblemished record, was 2 indicted for allegedly having had sexual relations with two young girls (ages 12 and 11). Upon learning of the indictment the Service sent M- a notice of removal on March 16, 1977 reading, in relevant part--

> "This is notice that it is proposed to remove you from the Postal Service no earlier than 72 hours from the time you receive this notice. There is reasonable cause to believe you are guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed."

stating that there was no actual evidence to indicate M- had committed any crime other than statements of the two young girls and attaching (1) results of a lie detector test which a professional polygrapher deemed to show M- to be innocent of the charges, and (2) other evidence calculated to establish M-'s innocence. M- nonetheless was removed from duty as of March 23 with the advice that he would remain on non-duty, non-pay, status pending disposition of his case. In subsequent processing of the grievance the Union unsuccessfully urged that M- should be assigned to temporary Clerk duties, on any shift, until his trial occurred. The June 10, 1977 USPS denial of the grievance in Step 2-B recited that the placing of M- in non-duty, non-pay, status had been for "just cause."

Meanwhile, M- had been found not guilty on May 21, 1977 and the USPS promptly advised of his acquittal. He was not returned to active duty until June 2, 1977, however, because the USPS insisted upon receiving formal notice of the verdict, signed by the Judge. The grievance accordingly protests the loss of pay during M-'s suspension up to June 2, 1977. The Union does not concede, however, that such suspension was for just cause and does not here seek any ruling on this aspect of the grievance. In other words, for purposes of shaping the issue in this case, the Union does not contest the USPS assertion that initially there was "just cause" for M-'s suspension, but reserves the right to continue to press that contention, if necessary, depending upon the outcome of the present case. 4

In urging that M- should be made whole for lost earnings for the entire period of his suspension, the NALC places great weight upon a May 31, 1977 decision of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in Grievance No. AC-S-9758 (herein called the Williams case) where (following arrest on a marijuana charge) the employee had been suspended for more than 11 months until he was found not guilty. The Associate Impartial Chairman granted a "make whole" remedy for earnings lost during the period of the suspension, stating that the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 served only to eliminate the advance 30-day notice requirement in such a situation, and that since there was no showing of "just cause" for the suspension, the Grievant should be made whole, as contemplated in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI. 5

On August 1, 1977 NALC President Vacca wrote the Senior Assistant Postmaster General, Employee and Labor Relations, stating: 6

> "It has come to my attention that the Postal Service has decided to ignore the agreed-upon precedential effect of Associate Impartial Chairman Paul J. Fasser's Award in Case No. AC-S-9758 (Curtiss Williams, Birmingham, Alabama), and that it continues to maintain that Article XVI, Section 3, last sentence, and Section 4, provide that the Postal Service is excused from all back pay liability stemming from indefinite and emergency suspension actions, notwithstanding the fact that the Postal Service cannot later establish that the discipline imposed was for 'just cause.'
> "NALC disagrees with that Postal Service interpretation of Article XVI, Sections 3 and 4, and contends instead, as Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser found (and as so approved by Impartial Chairman Garrett) that those sections of Article XVI deal only with the question of notice and thus do not insulate the Postal Service from back pay liability as a result of indefinite or emergency suspension actions where the Service cannot establish just cause > for discipline imposed. Accordingly, based on the foregoing, I am forced to conclude that there exists 'a dispute between the union and the employer as to the interpretation of [the] Agreement' within the meaning of Article XV, Section 2, last paragraph. I, therefore, hereby institute that dispute as a grievance at the National Level and request an immediate Step 4 meeting to attempt to resolve the same."

After a meeting on September 6, the USPS replied to President Vacca by letter of September 15, 1977, stating in part: 7

> "It is our position that the award issued by Arbitrator Paul J. Fasser, Jr. under date of May 31, 1977, addressed itself to the particulars in the case before him in arbitration (AC-S-9758), and that the award set forth what he considered to be the appropriate remedy to be granted based on those particulars."

At the hearing herein, the parties briefly outlined the facts in another grievance (which is being held in abeyance in the grievance procedure) as a further aid in developing a practical context for interpreting Article XVI, Section 3. In this other grievance another long service Carrier was arrested for the rape-murder of a customer on his route, with 8

a great deal of resultant local publicity. The arrest occurred on September 27, 1977 and the Service advised him on September 29 that it planned to suspend him pending investigation. On October 3 the Carrier was suspended indefinitely effective October 8, 1977. Later he was indicted and was awaiting trial at the time of the arbitration hearing in the present case. Meanwhile the grievance had been filed protesting his suspension, and it ultimately was appealed to arbitration. The Union nonetheless would not agree to proceed with an arbitration hearing until disposition of the rape-murder charges. Its position on this matter was made clear in a March 18, 1978 letter to General Manager Frost of the USPS Arbitration Division (on still another case) reading:

> "This replies to your March 13, 1978 letter concerning the above-referenced grievance. In that letter you indicate that, in the opinion of the Postal Service, the Union's request not to have that case heard in arbitration on February 23, 1978 (because the grievant is under criminal indictment for charges identical to those cited in the removal) constitutes a termination of any possible financial liability of the Postal Service beyond that date.

> in the case. Furthermore, because the grievant is under criminal indictment for charges identical to those on which his removal is based, NALC will not agree to schedule that case for hearing prior to the resolution of the criminal charges. That refusal is based on what the Union considers is its duty to fairly represent the grievant and because exposing the grievant to an arbitration hearing prior to resolution of the criminal charges could have an adverse impact on his Constitutional rights associated with that process."

Article XVI, Section 3, appeared in its present form in the National Agreement between USPS and the Postal Worker Unions, effective July 20, 1971. This was the first collectively bargained agreement between the parties subsequent to enactment of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1969. 9

In the 1968 Agreement between the Post Office Department and the Unions, Article X had set forth detailed procedures governing "Adverse Action" against employees with right of appeal through Departmental procedures or to the Civil Service Commission. There was no provision for binding arbitration and the decision of the Department's Board of Appeals and Review was final (except for "appeal for a court ruling"). Article X, Section C stated: 10

"Whenever it is proposed to take adverse action against an employee the responsible official must determine that it is for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. The letter of proposed adverse action must state specifically and in detail the reasons for the action thereby affording the employee a fair opportunity of offering refutation to the charges."

Article X, Section D of the 1968 Agreement included the following under the caption "Duty Status During Notice Period": 11

"1. Employees against whom adverse action is proposed shall be retained in an active duty status during the notice period except when the circumstances are such that the retention of an employee in an active-duty status during the notice period may result in damage to Government property, or loss of mail or funds, or may be injurious to the employee, his fellow workers, or the general public. The employee may then be temporarily assigned to duties in which these conditions will not exist or placed on leave with his consent. In an emergency case when because of the circumstances described in this paragraph the employee cannot be kept in an active-duty status during the advance notice period, the employee may be suspended without his consent.

"2. This is a separate adverse action and the employee is entitled to a letter informing him of the reasons for his suspension, his right of reply and the time limit. An employee may be placed in a nonduty status with pay for such time, not to exceed five working days, as is necessary to effect his suspension. In the emergency case, the employee must receive at least a 24-hour notice of his suspension."

(Underscoring added.)

A great deal of additional background material was presented at the hearing but need not be recited here, since adequately noted in the development of the parties' arguments. 12

THE USPS ANALYSIS

The basic USPS position here seems to be that the "reasonable cause" language in the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3, had such a clearly established meaning in Federal personnel law, when it was embodied in the 1971 National Agreement, that the negotiators either knew or should have understood that they in effect were adopting that meaning. It thus should follow that whenever the Service has reasonable cause for such an indefinite suspension in a "crime case" there can be no back pay obligation even if the employee ultimately is found not guilty. 13

The USPS recitation of relevant background in support of this position starts with the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944. The Congress there provided that adverse actions--such as an indefinite suspension--could be taken against "preference eligibles" (as defined in the Act) only "for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service" 5 U.S.C. §7512. Title 5 of the U.S. Code contemplates that rules and regulations promulgated by the Civil Service Commission thereunder would have the force of law, binding upon the heads of Federal agencies. 14

> "(b) A preference eligible employee against whom adverse action is proposed is entitled to--

> "(1) at least 30 days' advance written notice, except when there is reasonable cause to believe him guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, stating any and all reasons, specifically and in detail, for the proposed action." (5 U.S.C. § 7512)

From 1944 forward, this legislation covered all "preference eligible" Postal employees.

By Executive Order 11491, President Nixon extended these rights to all Federal employees effective January 1, 1970. This included the right of any employee "in the competitive service" to appeal an adverse action to the Civil Service Commission and required that any recommendation by the Commission resulting from such an appeal "be complied with by the head of the agency." As of January 1, 1970, therefore, the Civil Service Commission rulings and regulations in respect to adverse actions became applicable to all Postal employees in the competitive service. 16

The USPS evidence includes an excerpt from the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) under date of November 18, 1963, which includes under "Exceptions to Notice Requirements": 17

"b. Criminal conduct. In cases where reasonable cause exists to believe that the employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the employee need not be given the full 30 days' advance written notice, but must be given such less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. If the adverse action is appealed, the agency action with respect to such shorter length of notice will also be reviewed."

The Service also cites excerpts from FPM Supplement 1P 752-1 dated February 14, 1968 which include the following passages:

" ... SEC. 752.202(c) Exceptions to notice period and opportunity to prepare answer. (1) Advance written notice and opportunity to answer are not necessary in cases of furlough without pay due to unforeseeable circumstances, such as sudden breakdowns in equipment, acts of God, or emergencies requiring immediate curtailment of activities.

(2) When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the agency is not required to give the employee the full 30 days' advance written notice, but shall give him such less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer as under the circumstances is reasonable and can be justified. ...

"a. '... in cases of furlough without pay due to unforeseeable circumstances ...' This provision is intended for use in situations when the department or agency concerned is powerless to avoid a sudden and unexpected general work stoppage. If it is utilized, the agency should be prepared to show that the stoppage was brought about by conditions which could not be changed by any level of government management having responsibility for the activity concerned. While this provision waives the advance notice requirement, other provisions of the regulations, including the right of appeal, continue to apply.

"b. ' ... When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed ...' (1) This provision is concerned solely with what is required in the way of advance notice and opportunity to answer in cases in which the stated condition exists; it does not deal with the problem of the employee's work status during whatever advance notice period is determined to be appropriate.

"(2) The chief difficulty in construing and applying this provision is to know what the words 'a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed' actually intend. (This is the language which appears in the statute.) The word 'crime' has sometimes been used to designate a gross violation of law, as distinguished from a relatively minor infraction. On the other hand, it has also been held to apply in its broadest sense to any violation of law which is punished by a criminal prosecution. Thus, in general, it appears that an agency would be technically correct in invoking the 'crime' provision in any case when there was reasonable cause to believe the employee guilty of some conduct for which he could be sentenced by appropriate civil authority (Federal, State, county or municipal) to be imprisoned for some period of time, however short. Nevertheless, if the agency has any doubt about whether a 'crime' for which a 'sentence of imprisonment' can be imposed is involved, it ordinarily would be the better practice to resolve this doubt in favor of the employee. (Agencies should keep in mind that there are other provisions for placing an employee in a nonduty status during an advance notice period of 30 days, and that it would probably be sounder to invoke the 'crime' provision on the basis of actual need rather than mere availability. This does not mean, of course, that an agency does not have the right to proceed on the latter basis if it so desires.)

"(3) If an agency determines that it should invoke this regulatory provision, the question remains about what 'less number of days' advance notice and opportunity to answer' should be given the employee. This can be decided only on the basis of all the facts and circumstances of each individual case. Some considerations which might well enter the picture are:

(a) The gravity of the alleged crime and the conclusiveness of the evidence that the employee committed it.

(b) The minimum time that actually will be needed to afford the employee a reasonable opportunity to answer both personally and in writing.

(c) The probable reaction of the press and the public to information that the alleged perpetrator is still being carried on the agency's rolls as an employee."

Reference is made by the Service, also, to an FPM excerpt dated October 26, 1970, but this seems not to add anything to the foregoing excerpts. Nothing in any Civil Service ruling or regulation as of 1970 or early 1971 has been cited in the present case to indicate, in specific 19

language, that an employee suspended without pay under the "crime provision" either would or would not be entitled to be made whole for lost earnings if ultimately found not guilty or otherwise vindicated. The Service also cites FPM excerpts dated December 21, 1976, April 12, 1972, October 26, 1970, October 11, 1976, and February 4, 1972 providing detail as to Civil Service Commission policies up to the present.

Also in evidence are 4 recent decisions by the Federal Employee Appeals Authority (under the Civil Service Commission), 2 of which involve Postal Service employees. The Opinions in each case (January 12, 1977 and February 25, 1976) include substantially the same passages, reading: 20

> "In instances where the agency has reasonable cause to believe that an employee is guilty of an offense for which a penalty of imprisonment can be imposed, it can invoke the 'crime' provision which allows the agency to give an employee less than thirty days advance written notice of adverse action, and which also provides a basis for indefinitely suspending an employee pending investigation. In this connection, Section S5-3(b)(3) of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Supplement 752-1 provides, in pertinent part, that an agency cannot invoke the 'crime' provision solely on evidence that the employee was arrested. However, if the agency has evidence that the employee was arrested and was held for further action by a magistrate or was indicted by a grand jury, the agency would have reasonable cause for believing the employee guilty of a crime.

"In this case, the record reflects that the appellant was arrested on September 24, 1976, by the Pensacola Police Department and was charged with three (3) counts of forgery. In light of the fact that the appellant was arrested and held for further legal action, we find that the agency had reasonable cause to believe him guilty of a crime for which a penalty of imprisonment could be imposed; and that such belief provided a proper basis for the agency's decision to indefinitely suspend the appellant pending investigation. Therefore, we find the reasons stated for the proposed indefinite suspension to be sustained.

IV. DECISION

"In our view, the indefinite suspension, based on the sustained reasons, is neither arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable; and is for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. Accordingly, the agency's decision is affirmed.

"Civil Service Regulation 772.309(b) provides that decisions of the Federal Employee Appeals Authority are final and that there is no further right of administrative appeal."

(Underscoring added.)

The USPS also cites a 1976 decision by the U.S. Court of Claims, Jankowitz vs. U.S. (533 F. (2d) 538). There an employee's indefinite suspension without pay by HUD was held proper when the employee was indicted for accepting payments to influence his official acts as an appraiser for HUD. More than 14 months after the suspension was imposed, the employee was acquitted of all charges. His claim for back pay for this period, on motion for summary judgment, was denied. The Court concluded, as to this aspect of the case: 21

> "In our estimation, plaintiff's employer followed the FPM scrupulously, including adopting an advance notice of proposed indefinite suspension almost identical to that set out as an example in FPM Supp. 752-1, sample form B-7. Since we find that the Government in fact followed applicable procedural recommendations and safeguards in the FPM, we do not agree that plaintiff's indefinite suspension without pay was either unjustified or unwarranted. This much of plaintiff's claim for back pay must fail."

Finally, the USPS presented testimony by a witness who had served as Appeals Examiner and Supervisory Appeals Examiner for the Postal Service Board of Appeals and Review during 1969 through 1971. He confirmed that over the period 22 of his knowledge Postal employees frequently had been suspended indefinitely when there was reasonable cause to believe them guilty of a serious crime and that back pay was not awarded where an employee ultimately was found not guilty.

THE NALC ANALYSIS

The Union relies essentially on the precise language of Article XVI. The initial paragraph thereof permits discipline only for "just cause" and its last sentence leaves no doubt that, where a disciplinary suspension or discharge is found not to have been for "just cause," an award of back pay may result in arbitration. Thus, says the Union, the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 serves only to provide an exception to the 30-day notice requirement which otherwise would apply. Here it cites the May 31, 1977 Opinion of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in the Williams Case where the Opinion noted that the matter of remedial back pay was dealt with "clearly and completely" in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI. In the case before Associate Chairman Fasser the employee had been suspended indefinitely simply because he had been arrested on a marijuana charge. There had been no indictment nor had the Grievant been held for further proceedings after a magistrate's hearing. Given these facts, the Associate Chairman concluded that-- 23

" ... it is clear no proper cause for the grievant's discharge has been shown, so that he is presumptively entitled to be made whole for lost earnings in the absence of some cogent reason for denying him such back pay.

"The last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 does not provide such a cogent reason, since it serves only to provide an exception to the 'advance notice requirement' established in the first sentence of Section 3."

The NALC urges that the history of the last sentence 24 of Article XVI, Section 3 fully supports the interpretation embraced in the Williams case. The Postal Reorganization Act preserved for Postal Workers certain rights which they had as conventional government employees. In Section 1005(a)(2), indeed, Congress provided that "preference eligible" employees would retain their rights under the Veterans Preference Act and that those rights could not be changed by collectively bargained agreements. Those rights included procedural protections in "adverse actions," such as the 30 days' advance written notice requirement except "when there is reasonable cause to believe" the employee guilty of a crime "for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed."

This last exception, or proviso, under Section 25
7512(b)(1) of the Veterans Preference Act, says the NALC, was not intended to mean that the "adverse action" ipso facto

was for proper cause--its obvious and only purpose was to relieve the agency of the need to meet the procedural requirement of giving the full 30 days of advance notice. The NALC cites legislative history to support this view.

It was against this background that Article XVI, Section 3 was adopted in the 1971 National Agreement and continued unchanged in the 1973 and 1975 National Agreements. Indeed, by Executive Order 11491, the procedural protections afforded "preference eligibles" in adverse actions had become applicable to all Postal Workers as of January 1, 1970. When the Postal Reorganization Act was adopted early in 1971, therefore, it should have been reasonably apparent that similar protections might be embodied in any collective bargaining agreements which might ensue. Moreover, says the NALC, all Civil Service Commission Regulations since 1971 continue to make clear that the 30-day notice provision, and its exceptions, represent "procedural requirements" only. On this score it emphasizes a provision in the 1976 FPM Supplement dated October 11, 1976. This Subchapter 3 covers the subject "Merit of Adverse Action" and Part S3-2 thereof reads, under the heading "Insufficient Cause": 26

> "a. Pitfalls to avoid. Agencies should be alert to avoid such errors as the following:
> (1) Cause based on fact of arrest. Generally, the mere fact that an employee was arrested for a crime does not provide a cause for taking adverse action against the employee, even though the evidence of the arrest is fully recited and established. The employee may be innocent of the crime for which he was arrested. The agency action should be based, not on the fact of the arrest, but on the misconduct that led to the arrest, if there is sufficient evidence to prove misconduct or warrant suspension pending further investigation.

"(2) Cause based on criminal indictment. Except when the agency suspends an employee indefinitely pending disposition of a criminal action, the agency should not base an adverse action on a criminal indictment or conviction. Instead, the agency should base the action on what the employee did that was wrong. If the cause relied on is a criminal indictment or conviction, then a subsequent acquittal of the employee or a dismissal of the criminal charge would, in effect, vacate the cause for action. However, if the cause relied on is the employee's acts of wrongdoing, generally the administrative action will not be affected by the subsequent court action on the criminal case (see S7-1c(2))."

FINDINGS

This is the first case since negotiation of Article XVI in 1971 in which the parties have made complete presentations concerning the authority of an Arbitrator to award remedial back pay to an employee suspended in a "crimes case" and later found not guilty. The Opinion of Associate Impartial Chairman Fasser in the Williams case included the following pertinent paragraphs: 27

> "Article XVI, Section 3 deals with the giving of notice when an employee is discharged or suspended for more than 30 days. Any such employee is entitled to 30 days advance notice of the suspension and discharge, unless there is 'reasonable cause' to believe the employee is guilty of a crime 'for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed.'
> "Nothing in Article XVI, Section 3 (or Section 4) deals in any way with the matter of remedial back pay in a case where an employee has been suspended or discharged without proper cause. This matter is clearly and completely treated in the introductory paragraph of Article XVI, which declares:

'In the administration of this article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature; rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.'

"Under this paragraph it is entirely clear that when an employee is found to have been discharged wrongfully, such employee may be entitled to 'reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.' In the present case, it is clear that no proper cause for the grievant's discharge has been shown, so that he is presumptively entitled to be made whole for lost earnings in the absence of some cogent reason for denying him such back pay.

"The last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 does not provide such a cogent reason, since it serves only to provide an exception to the 'advance notice requirement' established in the first sentence of > Section 3. It is true that Article XVI, Section 4 also states that an employee may 'immediately be placed on an off-duty status (without pay)' in certain specified types of cases (none of which actually would seem to apply in the present case). But like Section 3, this Section in no way is addressed to the matter of remedial back pay--it deals only with emergency removal of an employee from active duty without advance notice. Because no 30-day advance notice is required, this Section (like Section 3) recognizes that the employee immediately goes onto off-duty status without pay. To repeat, however, this waiver of the notice requirement has nothing at all to do with the matter of remedial back pay when an employee subsequently has been found to have been discharged wrongfully."

As is clear from these passages, the Associate Impartial Chairman considered the interpretive problem in terms of the language of Article XVI, standing alone, without benefit of comprehensive presentations such as embodied in this record. Disposition of the present case thus requires close analysis both of the language in Article XVI and of the context in which it was negotiated in 1971. In a December 1, 1972 Opinion involving "Guarantee of Pay for Employees Called in Outside Regular Shift," this Arbitrator observed: 28

"The interpretation of particular language in a collective bargaining agreement, when the parties fall into dispute, normally requires determination of the objective meaning of the actual words used. The subjective intent or understanding of one or more of the negotiators, not actually disclosed in the negotiations, cannot be of controlling, or even dominant, significance for this purpose. It is no more than one element in all of the evidence which may be relevant in a given case. This principle indubitably applies in this case.

" ... Parties in collective bargaining often fail to achieve clear understanding as to the meaning of provisions negotiated under difficult circumstances. An effort to define, mutually, all potentially broad or ambiguous terms used in dealing with difficult matters probably would bog down the negotiations completely. Thus it now is the difficult responsibility of the Arbitrator to find the reasonable meaning of the disputed language in the specific context in which the parties negotiated it. That context includes all other relevant terms of the 1971 Agreement, plus any relevant background of earlier agreements, regulations, and practices."

The parties' presentations here particularly stress two sentences in Article XVI: (1) The Union emphasizes that the last sentence in the introductory paragraph makes clear that all discipline must be for "just cause" and that any grievance protesting a suspension or discharge "could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay." (2) The USPS, in turn, emphasizes that the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 renders the 30-day advance notice requirement in major discipline cases inapplicable and says that the "employee may be immediately removed from pay status" where there is reasonable basis for believing the employee guilty of a crime for which a prison sentence may be imposed. Neither party suggests, of course, that either sentence can be read in isolation from the other--both parties appear to recognize that an indefinite suspension in a "crimes case" represents disciplinary action which must be for "just cause." 29

The last sentence in Section 3 includes language which traces back through various Civil Service Regulations to the 1944 Veteran's Preference Act and arguably represents some kind of projection into the 1971 Agreement of policies developed by the Civil Service Commission. Section 3 as a whole consists of four sentences which seem addressed primarily, if not entirely, to the requirement of advance notice in all cases of discharge or suspension for more than 30 days. The last sentence, however, is by no means unique in referring to a "non-pay" status for a suspended employee: both the second and third sentences include similar language. The third sentence recognizes the right of "preference eligible" employees to elect to appeal to the Civil Service Commission while remaining on the rolls in "non-pay status" 30 and this immediately precedes the last sentence dealing with "crimes cases." Since all of these provisions can be traced to earlier Civil Service Commission policies reaching back to 1944, it seems obvious that the parties' negotiators on July 20, 1971 either were aware, or should have been, of the existing policies of the Civil Service Commission in respect to USPS "adverse actions."

Given the history of Civil Service Commission Regulations and Post Office Department (and USPS) practices up to July 20, 1971, moreover, it also may be inferred that the Union negotiators were aware--or should have been--that in "crimes cases" it was not the USPS policy to award remedial back pay to a properly suspended employee who later was found innocent. 31

Thus there is no reason to doubt that up to July 20, 1971 the USPS (1) regarded its reasonable belief in a "crimes case" that the employee had committed an imprisonable crime as providing lawful reason for suspending the employee promptly without pay until guilt or innocence could be established, and deemed it clear that (2) there would be no right to retroactive remedial back pay if the employee's innocence later were established. 32

That is not the ultimate question to be decided here, however. The real issue is whether it can be found that the negotiators for all parties in July of 1971 reasonably could--or should--have understood that such existing USPS policies might continue without change under Article XVI. This key question must be evaluated in light of those dominant features of Article XVI which unmistakably and dramatically departed from the past: 33

First, an employee could be suspended or discharged prior to July 20, 1971 "for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service" under Article X, Section C of the March 9, 1968 POD Agreement with the respective Postal Unions. The new Article XVI declared that discharge or suspension could be imposed only for "just cause." 34

Second, a USPS employee who was suspended or discharged prior to July 20, 1971 could not file a grievance through the Union. The avenues for possible redress were appeal either (1) to the Civil Service Commission, or (2) to the USPS Regional Director (and ultimately to the Department's Board of Appeals and Review) with Management's ultimate decision being "final" (save for the possibility of seeking a "court ruling"). The new Article XVI entitled the employee, through the Union, to press a grievance into arbitration where the Arbitrator's ruling concerning "just cause" for the disciplinary action would be "final and binding" under Article XV. 35

Third, there was no provision in the 1968 Agreement to authorize the awarding of remedial back pay in any "adverse action" in a "crimes case." In contrast, the new Article XVI spelled out that "reinstatement and restitution, including back pay" could result from use of the grievance/arbitration procedure. 36

Given these fundamental changes wrought through collective bargaining, obviously departing from traditional Civil Service policies and procedures, it is inconceivable that the sophisticated negotiators for the USPS in 1971 reasonably could have believed that the suspension of an employee because of alleged commission of a crime would not be subject to a full independent review in arbitration to deter- 37

mine whether the suspension was for "just cause" and whether remedial action, including back pay, might be appropriate. This conclusion seems unavoidable even under the language of the last sentence in Section 3, in itself, since it requires that there be "reasonable cause" to believe the employee "guilty" of the alleged crime. In any grievance involving "just cause" for suspension in a "crimes case" the presence or absence of "reasonable cause" to believe the employee guilty would be an unavoidable first question. It also seems apparent that some alleged crimes could have no material bearing on an employee's ability to perform his or her job without embarrassment to the Service or impairment of efficiency or safety. Yet, as the Service concedes, there must be a "nexus" in any such case between the alleged crime and the employee's job with USPS. Whether such a "nexus" exists also is an obvious question under the "just cause" test.

Given these circumstances there was no reasonable basis for the negotiators to have believed in 1971 that, under the last sentence of Section 3, a good faith belief that an employee was guilty of an imprisonable offense in itself would constitute "just cause" for suspending the employee without pay, so as to bar any retroactive remedial action. Those Opinions of some Regional USPS Arbitrators in recent years which might be read to imply otherwise seem, to this extent, to be in error. 38

This, however, by no means is an end of the matter. Given the authority of the Arbitrator in every "crimes case" to determine the presence--or absence--of "just cause" for a suspension or discharge, there remains the possibility that an Arbitrator in a given case still might find "just cause" 39

for the suspension--in whole or in part--in light of the policy considerations which underlay the pre-1971 Civil Service and USPS policy.

As earlier Civil Service rulings indicate, one prime reason for imposing such a suspension lay in the unique nature of the Federal Service, and the fact that Federal employees may occupy sensitive positions in relation to the public, or appear as representatives of the Federal Service in the public mind. The Postal Service Manual in Part 442.12 reflects this aspect of employment in the USPS-- 40

> "Postal employees are servants of the general public and their conduct, in many instances, must be subject to more restrictions and to higher standards than certain private employments. Employees are expected to conduct themselves during and outside of working hours in a manner which will reflect favorably upon the Postal Service. Although it is not the policy of the Postal Service to interfere with the private lives of employees, it does require that postal personnel be honest, reliable, trustworthy, and of good character and reputation."

Under Article XVI of the 1971 National Agreement, an Arbitrator thus appropriately may consider and give appropriate weight to the special nature of USPS employment in deciding a 41

"just cause" issue in a "crimes case" in respect to (1) the propriety of the initial suspension, (2) the duration of the suspension, and (3) whether, and the extent to which, remedial back pay may be warranted under the particular facts of the given case.

Moreover, it is clearly possible that an Arbitrator in such a case might conclude that there was "just cause" for the suspension initially and that no back pay might be proper, in whole or in part, even though the criminal charge later was dropped. Such a possibility obviously would exist in any such case where the USPS presented convincing evidence in arbitration establishing an employee's guilt, even though the criminal charge may have been dropped in the meantime. It also seems possible that an Arbitrator might conclude, on the basis of the unique facts in a given case, that an indictment for a serious crime (such as rape or murder) in itself would make it unreasonable to continue an employee in a position requiring routine contact with the public, so as to deny remedial back pay in whole or in part. 42

In short, the following general conclusions now seem warranted in respect to the determination of "just cause" in a "crimes case" under Article XVI, as negotiated in 1971: 43

(1) Every suspension effected under the last sentence of Article XVI, Section 3 is reviewable in arbitration to the same extent as any other suspension to determine whether "just cause" for the disciplinary action has been shown; 44

(2) Such a review in arbitration necessarily involves considering at least (a) the presence or absence of "reasonable cause" to believe the employee guilty of the crime alleged, and (b) whether such a relationship exists between the alleged crime and the employee's job in the USPS as to warrant the suspension; 45

(3) An Arbitrator in any such case, when the employee has been acquitted or the prosecution dropped, also has discretion to award remedial back pay, in whole or in part, if deemed reasonable under the facts of the given case; and finally 46

(4) An Arbitrator may deem the evidence in a particular case to establish "just cause" for a suspension effected under the last sentence of Section 3, even though the charge against the employee later may have been dropped, and so withhold remedial back pay for some or all of the period of suspension. 47

In light of these basic principles, a few words may be in order concerning the ruling of the Associate Impartial Chairman in the Williams case, which involved a suspension of more than 11 months. The charge there involved an alleged sale of marijuana, where the Grievant from the beginning had asserted a defense of mistaken identity. His suspension was effected simply upon the basis of his arrest, without an indictment or preliminary hearing. Any "nexus" between the charge and his ZMT Operator job would have been attenuated at best. His suspension actually was 48

effected before a Postal Inspector had submitted an Investigative Memorandum which showed that the arrest of April 16, 1975 had been based on a warrant alleging a sale of marijuana to an undercover agent nearly 7 months earlier (on September 23, 1974) at an address which differed from the Grievant's home address (where he had been arrested). The Investigative Memorandum specifically noted that a preliminary hearing had not yet been held.

On these facts, the Associate Impartial Chairman had ample basis to find a lack of just cause for the precipitate suspension in that case. Nonetheless, the Williams decision and a number of Regional Arbitrators' decisions finding "just cause" for suspensions in "crimes cases," all were formulated without the benefit of comprehensive presentations by both parties, such as those now in hand. They accordingly are of only limited value, at best. 49

As for the grievance in Case NC-NAT-8580, it is impossible now to rule on the matter of "just cause" for the initial suspension under the general principles set forth above. This issue specifically has been reserved by the NALC for further consideration in the grievance procedure in the event that M-'s acquittal is not found to entitle him automatically to be made whole for lost earnings. Thus there appear to be at least three questions which the parties now may wish to consider fully in disposing of this grievance:

(1) Whether there in fact was a "reasonable basis" to believe M- guilty of the alleged crime; 51

(2) Whether there was a sufficient relationship between the alleged crime and M-'s job as a Carrier (or such other job to which he might have been assigned in accordance with his seniority) to warrant the initial suspension; and

(3) Whether in any event M- was returned to his job with reasonable dispatch following his acquittal.

Should the parties fail to achieve settlement of M-'s grievance in light of this Opinion, the case may be returned to the Arbitrator for final disposition.

AWARD

The specific grievance used by the parties to illustrate the interpretive problem in this case, as outlined in Marginal Paragraph 2, now should be settled in the grievance procedure in light of the Opinion herein.

BACKGROUND

These grievances raise several questions with respect to the interpretation and application of Article 16, Section 7 (Emergency Procedure) of the National Agreement. The Unions believe that an employee placed on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to 16.7 has been disciplined, that such discipline, if challenged, can be affirmed only through a Management showing of "just cause", that an employee cannot be suspended under 16.7 without first having been provided written notice of the charge made against him, and that an employee suspended in this manner must be paid for his lost time until he actually receives such written notice. The Postal Service disagrees with each of these propositions. It argues that placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to 16.7 is an administrative action rather than discipline, that Management need only show "reasonable cause" rather than "just cause" to support its action, that no written notice of a 16.7 administrative action is required, and that therefore an employee placed on this non-duty, non-pay status is not entitled to be paid until written notice is given.

The key provision in this case is of course Article 16, Section 7. Because this section is part of Article 16 (Discipline Procedure) and because both the Unions and the Postal Service rely on other provisions of Article 16 as well, a substantial portion of the entire article should be quoted:

>
> In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure...which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.
>
> Section 2. Discussion
> For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee... Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable... However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder...

Section 3. Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary notice in writing...which shall include an explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 4. Suspensions of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges...and shall be further informed that he/she will be suspended after ten (10) calendar days during which ten day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer.

Section 5. Suspensions of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspensions of more than fourteen (14) days, or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case...either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance procedure... When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days advance written notice in a discharge action, but shall give such lesser number of days advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable... The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

Section 6. Indefinite Suspension - Crime Situation

A. The Employer may indefinitely suspend an employee in those cases where the Employer has reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed. In such cases, the Employer is not required to give the employee the full thirty (30) days advance notice of indefinite suspension, but shall give such lesser number of days of advance written notice as under the circumstances is reasonable... The employee is immediately removed from a pay status at the end of the notice period.

B. The just cause of an indefinite suspension is grievable. The arbitrator shall have the authority to reinstate and make the employee whole...

* * *

D. The Employer may take action to discharge an employee during the period of an indefinite suspension whether or not the criminal charges have been resolved, and whether or not such charges have been resolved in favor of the employee. Such action must be for just cause, and is subject to the requirements of Section 5...

Section 7. Emergency Procedure

An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U. S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to self or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than thirty (30) days or discharge the employee, the emergency action taken under this Section may be made the subject of a separate grievance.

Section 8. Review of Discipline

In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee...

The essential facts are not in dispute. J. Burch was a part-time flexible letter carrier in the Nederland, Texas post office in 1987. Management placed him on non-duty, non-pay status on June 26, 1987, pursuant to Article 16.7. It believed that he had discarded deliverable mail and that his retention on duty "may result in...loss of mail..." It did not provide Burch with advance written notice of this removal. A grievance was filed in Step 1 on July 9, 1987, protesting his placement in non-pay status. Management advised him in writing on July 27, 1987, that he was being discharged for discarding deliverable mail. Another grievance was apparently filed protesting his discharge. Arbitrator P. M. Williams ruled on September 28, 1988, that the discharge was not for "just cause" and that Burch should be reinstated with full back pay.

J. Ferrell was a full-time regular letter carrier in the Dallas, Texas post office, Spring Valley station, in 1987. Management placed him on non-duty, non-pay status on June 16, 1987, pursuant to Article 16.7. It believed that he had committed a theft of mail and that his retention on duty "may result in...loss of mail..." It did not provide Ferrell with advance written notice of this removal. A grievance was filed in Step 1 on June 26, 1987, protesting his placement in non-pay status. Management advised him in writing on June 25, 1987, that he was being discharged for theft of mail. Ferrell protested the discharge through an appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB). His appeal was settled by an agreement with the Postal Service on October 26, 1987, his discharge being reduced to a disciplinary suspension from July 30 through October 26, 1987. He was then returned to work, evidently without back pay.

Neither the Williams award nor the MSPB settlement appear to have resolved the claim made in these grievances that Burch and Ferrell were, prior to their discharges, improperly placed on non-duty, non-pay status under Article 16.7. NALC asserts that this claim should be sustained and the two men made whole for their loss of pay attributable to the 16.7 "emergency procedure" on the ground that they "were not served with written notice of the reasons for Management's action."[1] In the alternative, NALC urges that the grievances be remanded to the parties with instructions that Management "has the burden of proving that its action met the standard of just cause for discipline." APWU has intervened in this arbitration in support of NALC's claims. The Postal Service insists, on the other hand, that there is no merit in the Unions' argument.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

Three distinct issues are raised by these grievances. The first concerns the nature of Management's action under Article 16.7, namely, whether placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status through this "emergency procedure" constitutes discipline. The second concerns the level of proof necessary to validate Management's action in invoking 16.7, namely, whether it must show "just cause" or whether a mere showing of "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief") will suffice. The third concerns the existence of a notice requirement, namely, whether an employee can properly be placed on non-duty, non-pay status under 16.7 without first being provided with written notice of the charge made against him.

I - Nature of Management's Action

The Unions assert that an employee placed on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to Article 16.7 has been disciplined. The Postal Service insists that this action is essentially investigatory or administrative in nature and cannot properly be viewed as discipline.

Article 16 establishes a comprehensive discipline system for postal employees. Section 1 identifies some basic disciplinary principles, for instance, that discipline should be "corrective" rather than "punitive" and that discipline can be imposed only for "just cause." Section 2 states that when an employee commits a "minor offense", supervision may "discuss" the matter with him but that such "discussion" shall not be considered discipline. Sections 3, 4 and 5 are the typical levels of discipline - from a letter of warning (16.3) to a suspension of 14 days or less (16.4) to a suspension of more than 14 days or discharge (16.5). Section 6 contemplates an indefinite suspension in a crime situation and is plainly a permissible variation in the range of available discipline. Section 7, the subject of this dispute, is an "emergency procedure" which allows Management to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status in certain specified situations. Sections 8, 9 and 10 refer to a necessary internal managerial "review of discipline", a "veteran's preference" in the choice of a forum for contesting discipline, and a statute of limitations as to "employee discipline records."

Given this structure, the strong presumption must be that all of Article 16 relates to discipline. When the parties intended some procedure to be outside the scope of Article 16, to be beyond the disciplinary principles of Article 16, they said so. Thus, Section 2 expressly provides that supervisory "discussions" of the "minor offenses" of employees "are not considered discipline..." No such disclaimer is found in Section 7. Nowhere did the parties state that placement of an employee on non-duty, non-pay status pursuant to Section 7 "is not considered discipline..." Had that been their wish, it would have been a simple matter to write those words into the "emergency procedure."

The employee misconduct which may trigger Management's use of Section 7 is "intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules or regulations." The very same acts of misconduct are cited in Section 1 as constituting "just cause" for discipline. It is difficult to understand the Postal Service view that a suspension for such misconduct is discipline when Management invokes Section 4 or 5 but is not discipline when Management invokes Section 7. The impact on the employee is much the same in all three situations. The employee is taken off of the job against his will and placed on non-duty, non-pay status because of such misconduct. He is denied work and wages. He is punished, that is, suspended, because Management believes he is intoxicated or has stolen something or has ignored safety rules. Indeed, the suspension under Section 7 is more burdensome for the employee because its length is indeterminate and because he may not have been given written notice of the charge against him, conditions which can only serve to heighten his sense of concern.

The Postal Service sees Section 7, the "emergency procedure", as an independant provision unrelated to the typical suspension arrangements found in Sections 4 and 5. However, when one reviews the history of this provision and the overall structure of Article 16, it seems to me that Section 7 should more appropriately be construed as a broad exception to Sections 4 and 5. The "emergency procedure" is, as those words indicate, a recognition that situations do arise where supervision must act "immediately" in suspending an employee because of immediate risks or dangers which do not allow the more time-consuming procedures of Sections 4 and 5. Thus, Section 7 is a permissible variation from the conventional suspensions contemplated by the parties. But it is a suspension nonetheless, one which must be considered an integral part of the Article 16 "discipline procedure."

My conclusion, accordingly, is that a Section 7 suspension should in appropriate circumstances be regarded as discipline. I emphasize "appropriate circumstances" because of one other significant factor. Not all of the Section 7 situations which prompt Management's use of the "emergency procedure" involve employee misconduct. Management can invoke Section 7 when the employee's retention on the job (1) "may result in damage to...property or loss of mail or funds" or (2) "may be injurious to self or others." These situations may or may not involve employee misconduct. Suppose, for example, an employee drives a postal vehicle on a delivery route and suffers from a physical ailment which is ordinarily kept under control through medication. Suppose further that, notwithstanding the medication, he suddenly loses control and can no longer drive the vehicle safely although he is unaware of this reality. No doubt Management would invoke Section 7 because the employee "may be injurious to self or others." But because there is no real misconduct, he is not subject to discipline. He is placed on non-duty, non-pay status in the interest of safety. The "emergency procedure", in other words, is broad enough to encompass displacement from the job for non-disciplinary reasons.

These observations suggest the answer to the first issue. When Management places an employee on non-duty, non-pay status because of misconduct covered by Section 7, the employee has been disciplined. That would be true of both grievants in this case, Burch and Ferrell. But when Management places an employee on such status for reasons stated in Section 7 which do not involve misconduct, the employee should not be regarded as having been disciplined. With this distinction in mind, I turn to the next issue.

II - Level of Proof Necessary

The Unions assert that any Management action taken pursuant to the Section 7 "emergency procedure" must be supported by "just cause." The Postal Service insists that "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief") is all that need be shown.

My response to this disagreement depends, in large part, upon how the Section 7 "emergency" action is characterized. If that action is discipline for alleged misconduct, then Management is subject to a "just cause" test. To quote from Section 1, "No employee may be disciplined...except for just cause." If, on the other hand, that action is not prompted by misconduct and hence is not discipline, the "just cause" standard is not applicable. Management then need only show "reasonable cause" (or "reasonable belief"), a test which is easier to satisfy.

One important caveat should be noted. "Just cause" is not an absolute concept. Its impact, from the standpoint of the degree of proof required in a given case, can be somewhat elastic. For instance, arbitrators ordinarily use a "preponderance of the evidence" rule or some similar standard in deciding fact questions in a discipline dispute. Sometimes, however, a higher degree of proof is required where the alleged misconduct includes an element of moral turpitude or criminal intent. The point is that "just cause" can be calibrated differently on the basis of the nature of the alleged misconduct.

By the same token, "just cause" may depend to some extent upon the nature of the particular disciplinary right being exercised. Section 7 grants Management a right to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status because of an "allegation" of certain misconduct (or because his retention "may" have certain harmful consequences). "Just cause" takes on a different cast in these circumstances. The level of proof required to justify this kind of "immediate..." action may be something less than would be required had Management suspended the employee under Section 4 or 5 where ten or thirty days' advance written notice of the suspension is given. To rule otherwise, to rule that the same level of proof is necessary in all suspension situations, would as a practical matter diminish Management's right to take "immediate..." action.

No generalization by the arbitrator can provide a final resolution to this kind of problem. It should be apparent that the facts of a given case are a good deal more important than any generalization in determining whether "just cause" for discipline has been established.

III - Existence of Notice Requirement

The Unions assert that an employee cannot properly be placed on non-duty, non-pay status under Section 7 without first being provided written notice of the charge made against him.[2] They contend that because the grievants did not receive such written notice, Management had no right to displace them from their jobs pursuant to Section 7 and they should be paid for the time they were suspended. The Postal Service insists that there is no written notice requirement in Section 7 and that the absence of such notice in this case in no way undermined the propriety of Management's use of the "emergency procedure."

Any analysis of this issue must begin with the suspension rules in Sections 4 and 5. When Management intends to suspend an employee under either of these sections, it must provide him with "advance written notice" of the charge against him. A Section 4 suspension (14 days or less) requires 10 days' written notice during which time the employee remains "on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer." A Section 5 suspension (more than 14 days) requires 30 days' written notice during which time the employee remains "on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer." Any suspended employee, even one subject to an indeterminate suspension under Section 7, receives these benefits, according to the language of Section 5, "unless otherwise provided herein." These words acknowledge that a suspended employee could have these notice and pay protections taken away or modified by other provisions of Article 16. That is exactly what happened in Section 7.

When the "emergency procedure" in Section 7 is properly invoked, the employee is "immediately" placed on non-duty, non-pay status. He does not have a right to remain, for any period of time, "on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer." He suffers an instant loss of pay. In short, the pay protection in Section 4 or 5 is negated by Section 7. The question here is whether the notice protection, the "advance written notice" requirement in Section 4 or 5, is likewise negated by Section 7. Or, to put the question in broader terms, is the employee suspended pursuant to the "emergency procedure" entitled to the "advance written notice" contemplated by Section 4 or 5?

There is no express mention of "advance written notice" in Section 7. Both parties rely on that silence to prove their case. The Unions argue that the silence means that the notice requirement of Section 4 or 5 has not been negated by Section 7 and must therefore apply to an employee suspended under Section 7. The Postal Service argues that this silence, when contrasted with the specific notice requirement contained in Sections 4, 5 and 6, means that the parties had no intention of establishing a notice requirement in Section 7.

[2] The Unions concede that Management may properly displace an employee from his job in an "emergency" and put him on administrative leave. They object, however, to any such displacement pursuant to Section 7 without advance written notice.

The critical factor, in my opinion, is that Management was given the right to place an employee "immediately" on non-duty, non-pay status on the basis of certain happenings. An "immediate..." action is one that occurs instantly, without any lapse of time. Nothing intervenes between the decision to act and the act itself. That is what the term "immediately" suggests. If Management were required to provide "advance written notice" of the displacement of an employee under Section 7, it would no longer have the right to respond "immediately." The very purpose of a Section 7 "emergency procedure" is to permit an "immediate..." response by Management. The language of Section 7, by necessary implication, means that no "advance written notice" can be required in a true Section 7 situation. The notice requirement in Section 4 or 5 has indeed been negated by Section 7. Hence, Management's failure to provide such notice to Burch and Ferrell was not a violation of Article 16.

Neither the history of Article 16 nor various Management publications regarding that article convince me that a different result is justified here. There has been a great deal of confusion for years about the meaning of Section 7. That confusion is reflected in the conflicting awards of regional arbitrators.

These findings, however, do not fully resolve the dispute. The fact that no "advance written notice" is required does not mean that Management has no notice obligation whatever. The employee suspended pursuant to Section 7 has a right to grieve his suspension. He cannot effectively grieve unless he is formally made aware of the charge against him, the reason why Management has invoked Section 7. He surely is entitled to such notice within a reasonable period of time following the date of his displacement. To deny him such notice is to deny him his right under the grievance procedure to mount a credible challenge against Management's action. Indeed, Section 7 speaks of the employee remaining on non-duty, non-pay status "until disposition of the case has been had." That "disposition" could hardly be possible without formal notice to the employee so that he has an opportunity to tell Management his side of the story. Fundamental fairness requires no less.

Whether Burch and Ferrell received formal notice of the charges against them is not really clear from the record in this case. Assuming they did, there is no evidence with respect to whether such notice was given within a reasonable period after they were displaced from their jobs. These are fact questions which can best be developed and argued at the regional level. These matters are therefore remanded to Step 3 of the grievance procedure for further consideration.

AWARD

The grievances are remanded to Step 3 of the grievance procedure for further consideration in light of the views expressed in this opinion.

Award Summary

The dispute in this case is resolved on the basis set forth in the above Findings.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

On January 4, 2001, the Postal Service sent a letter to the American Postal Workers Union stating:

> In accordance with the provisions of Article 15, the Postal Service is initiating a dispute at Step 4 of the grievance procedure on the following interpretive issue:
>
> > Whether the National Agreement specifics [sic] that there is only one management official who may issue discipline to each employee.
>
> The facts giving rise to this dispute are:
>
> > The American Postal Workers at the local level, in Case E98C-1E-D 00036123, asserts that the Postal Service violated the National Agreement when a attendance coordinator supervisor, whose responsibility encompasses attendance control, issued discipline.
> The Postal Service's position is that the allocation of responsibility for issuing discipline is a management right pursuant to Article 3 of the National Agreement. Therefore, the assignment of authority to an attendance coordinator supervisor is consistent with the National Agreement.

After discussion at Step 4 failed to resolve this matter, the APWU appealed the dispute to National arbitration. The National Postal Mail Handlers Union, which has a similar dispute with the Postal Service, intervened in this case at arbitration.

At arbitration, the Unions made it clear that they are not contending that only the employee's immediate supervisor can issue discipline in attendance related (or other) matters, but that the National Agreement contemplated that this responsibility "normally" would be exercised by this official.[1]

The key contractual provision relied on by the Unions is Article 16.8, but they stress that provision needs to be read in context of other provisions, particularly Article 16.1, Article 16.2 and Article 15.2 (Step 1). The Postal Service insists that it has never agreed to limit its explicit, statutory right, recognized in Article 3, to entrust supervisors and managers with the authority and responsibility to maintain efficiency, good order and discipline in the workplace. These provisions of the APWU National Agreement (the NPMHU National Agreement includes corresponding provisions) state as follows:

ARTICLE 3
MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

> The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:
>
> A. To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;
> B. To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees;

[1] The parties' respective articulations of the issue in this case are not precisely the same, but the gist of the dispute is clear enough and was fully addressed by all of the parties. No party has raised any procedural objection to the arbitrator deciding the dispute as it was presented at arbitration.

D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 2. Grievance Procedure Steps

Step 1:

(a) Any employee who feels aggrieved must discuss the grievance with the employee's immediate supervisor within fourteen (14) days of the date on which the employee or the Union first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause....

(b) In any such discussion the supervisor shall have authority to settle the grievance....

ARTICLE 16
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 1. Principles

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

Section 2. Discussion

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such a discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

* * *

Section 8. Review of Discipline

In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and > concurred in by the installation head or designee.

> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

The relevant contractual provisions essentially have been in effect since the first National Agreement was negotiated in 1971.

The APWU and the NPMHU each rely, in part, on contract interpretation manuals they have negotiated with the Postal Service. Both the APWU/USPS Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM), finalized in June 2004, and the NPMHU/USPS Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM), finalized in July 2003, in discussing Article 16.8 of the respective National Agreement, state: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action."[2] The Postal Service agrees that the Mail Handler CIM may be cited in this

[2] The Mail Handlers CIM includes the following parenthetical statement: "(Note that, as of this writing, the parties at the National level have an ongoing dispute regarding whether discipline can be issued by other than the employee's immediate supervisor.)" proceeding, but insists that the APWU JCIM may not be cited at National level arbitration.[3]

For at least 25 years, the Postal Service at some facilities has assigned supervisors to monitor employee attendance, and those supervisors typically are not the employees' floor supervisors. At the heart of the present dispute is whether these attendance control supervisors properly may issue discipline for attendance violations or whether, at least normally, such discipline has to be issued by the employee's "immediate supervisor" who oversees the employee's work performance on a day-to-day basis.

The Unions point out that the relevant contractual provisions, for the most part, reflect the practices that were in effect prior to Postal Reorganization, including supervisors' responsibilities for counseling employees and administering discipline. In 1982, the U.S. General Accounting Office issued a report entitled "Postal Service Needs Stricter Control Over Employee Absences." In commenting on a draft of this GAO report, the Postmaster General stated:

> The Postal Service has recognized the need for more effective absence controls, and plans are under way to develop a nationally directed attendance-control program. We will examine the feasibility of more extensive reporting and tracking procedures > for unscheduled absences and have also begun discussions with the unions to explore possible areas for a joint approach to attendance-control matters.

[3] It was agreed that the Postal Service may cite the JCIM on the merits of the dispute without prejudice to its position that JCIM may not be cited in National arbitration, and that the arbitrator would rule on the latter issue in deciding this case.

> We believe the involvement of first-line supervision is critical in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action based upon individual circumstances. We will do nothing to diminish the first-line supervisor's responsibility for controlling absences and will not issue a "cookbook" set of rules that will relieve him of the need to use good judgment in identifying and disciplining employees with attendance problems. However, we do envision a more structured and centrally managed program that will provide a facility-level review of attendance control, possible goal setting, and active assistance to first-line supervisors in exercising their responsibilities.

The final GAO report recommended that: "The control office should notify supervisors of employees with potential attendance problems and ensure that disciplinary actions are timely and progressively severe." The GAO report also stated: "The Service believes as we do that the involvement of firstline supervision is critical in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action based upon individual circumstances."

A Management Instruction relating to Attendance Control issued soon after the GAO report on October 1, 1983 (EL-510-83-9) states: "Each supervisor continues to have direct responsibility for ensuring the regular and dependable attendance of his subordinate employees." A Supervisor's Guide to Attendance Improvement issued in May 1984 (EL-501) states: "Effective control of attendance can only be accomplished at the individual employee level. Therefore, the direct responsibility for effective attendance improvement lies at the level of the immediate supervisor." The Unions assert, as the APWU's Director of Industrial Relations Greg Bell testified, that this is and has been the historical practice at the Postal Service. An August 1990 Supervisor's Guide to Handling Grievances (EL-921), the Unions add, implicitly recognizes that the employee's immediate supervisor who handles grievances at Step 1 is also the supervisor who issues discipline, when it states: "Just because the discipline was fully discussed at the time of issuance is no reason for the supervisor to breeze through Step 1 with a quick, 'Grievance Denied.'"

The Unions also point to a Step 4 settlement reached in March 2003 between the Postal Service and the APWU relating to implementation of the Postal Service Resource Management Database and its web-based enterprise Resource Management System, in which the parties agreed:

> RMD/eRMS enables local management to establish a set number of absences used to ensure that employee attendance records are being reviewed by their supervisor. However, it is the supervisor's review of the attendance record and the supervisor's determination on a case-by-case basis in light of all relevant evidence and circumstances, not any set number of absences, that determine whether corrective action is warranted. Any rule setting a fixed amount or percentage of sick leave usage after which an employee will be, as a > matter of course, automatically disciplined is inconsistent with the National Agreement and applicable handbooks and manuals. Any corrective action that results from the attendance reviews must be in accordance with Article 16 of the National Agreement.

The Unions do not claim that this settlement was intended to resolve the present dispute -- which predates the settlement -- but they do contend that the stated goal is not consistent with the Postal Service's position that, at its sole discretion, it may bypass the immediate supervisor and delegate the responsibility to discipline employees for absenteeism to any management official.

The Postal Service presented testimony regarding an unwritten attendance control program in effect at the JFK Airport facility in New York City for at least the past 25 years. There is a leave administrator assigned on each tour (600+ employees) who monitors attendance and handles all aspects of leave administration. This leave administrator has the responsibility to administer discipline related to attendance and leave. The floor supervisors review their employees' attendance status with the leave administrators on average once every pay period. A management witness said it would be rare for a leave administrator to issue discipline without having first consulted with the employee's floor supervisor. The leave administrator also has access to the employee's personnel file, if needed. Step 1 grievances relating to discipline issued by the leave administrators to Mail Handler employees at JFK are handled by the leave administrators, whereas grievances from APWU employees are handled by the floor supervisors, based on the APWU's choice. The Management witness estimated that 30-35% of the APWU grievances are resolved or settled at Step 1 by removing the discipline.

Sandra Savoie, a headquarters Labor Relations Specialist, testified to the assignment of attendance supervisors in Dayton, Ohio in the late 1970s and early 1980s when she worked there. Those supervisors discussed attendance issues with employees and issued discipline, when warranted. She also testified to a variety of other contexts in which supervisors other than an employee's immediate floor supervisor have imposed discipline for a variety of misconduct and noted there are situations where employees have multiple floor supervisors during the course of their work day.

APWU POSITION

The APWU contends that the parties have agreed that the immediate supervisor shall normally be responsible for the imposition of discipline. The key issue is the interpretation of the term "supervisor" used in Article 16.8. The APWU argues that the Postal Service's contention that the term "supervisor" refers to any management official, and therefore, any management official can impose discipline on a craft employee makes no sense either in the context of Article 16 or the parties' bargaining history and practice.

Prior to Postal Reorganization, postal regulations distinguished between Directors, Postmasters and Supervisors, and specifically assigned both the responsibility of giving counsel and advice to employees and, then, imposing discipline, especially after counseling fails, only to supervisors. This allocation of responsibility, the APWU asserts, was carried forward into collective bargaining. Article 16 lays out the steps of progressive discipline. The first time the term "supervisor" is used in Article 16 is in Section 2, which assigns the specific task of discussing minor offenses with the employee to the supervisor. Obviously, the only official who normally would have enough day-to-day contact to observe and discuss minor offenses is the employee's immediate supervisor. Any lack of clarity on the matter is resolved by the further requirement that such discussions be held "in private between the employee and supervisor." In context, it is clear that the supervisor referred to in Section 2 is the immediate supervisor, the official with day-to-day working contact with the employee, not someone in another building or off-site computerized attendance control office.

The next time the term "supervisor" is used in Article 16 is in Section 8, which is the final point in the progressive discipline process. There is no reason to believe, the APWU maintains, that the term "supervisor" as used in Section 8 would have any different meaning than in Section 2. There also appears to be no reason why the official who is responsible for ensuring the employee has been given adequate private guidance on his responsibilities (and maybe the only official who knows this guidance has been given), would not also normally be responsible for determining that this guidance has not worked and that suspension or termination is called for. This is particularly so in the realm of absenteeism where the Postal Service has repeatedly assured the Unions that the immediate supervisor will play the central role in attendance control and management has specifically assigned the immediate supervisor the task of responding to requests for scheduled and unscheduled absences (EL-510-83-9).

This application of the term "supervisor" also is consistent with the definition of that term in Section 113.2(b) of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) which states that a "supervisor" is "one who has a direct responsibility for ensuring the accomplishment of work through the effort of others." The concept of "direct responsibility" obviously refers to officials with direct contact with craft employees in their work capacity, a matter confirmed by numerous other provisions of the ELM in which the "supervisor" is responsible for performance evaluations of employees. The APWU argues it is simply not plausible to believe that the term "supervisor" means one thing for the purposes of private, non-disciplinary discussions, performance evaluations, or handling scheduled and unscheduled absences, but something completely different for purposes of imposition of discipline.

The APWU insists that while the contract, as well as Postal Manuals, clearly support the Unions' interpretation of "supervisor", the terms of the JCIM definitely resolve the matter. The JCIM provides the following binding guidance with respect to Article 16.8: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action...."

The APWU freely concedes that "normally" does not mean "always", and that there may be "abnormal" circumstances which justify delegating imposition of discipline to someone other than the employee's immediate supervisor. Both Union and Postal Service witnesses provided a number of examples of such situations, all of which involved unusual operational circumstances, beyond the fact that an employee is being disciplined. The normal practice, however, is for discipline to be issued by the immediate supervisor.

The APWU rejects the Postal Service's contention that if the parties had intended to limit the imposition of discipline to "immediate supervisors" they would have used that term as they did in subparagraph (a) of Article 15.2 (Step 1). The APWU maintains this is not a tenable argument because it does not explain the binding guidance of the JCIM (or the Mail Handler's CIM) and it also ignores the purpose and structure of Article 15. It is crucial to define with precision exactly when and with whom grievances must be filed because rights are waived (and there is potential liability) if grievances are not timely filed. There is no agreement -- as there is with respect to Article 16 -- that the role of the immediate supervisor in handling the first step is only the "normal" practice. Moreover, the APWU asserts, this line of argument proves too much. If the Postal Service is correct that every time the parties fail to condition the term "supervisor" with "immediate" it, by default, refers to all levels of management, that would apply to the use of the term "supervisor" in subparagraph (b) and subsequent subparagraphs of Article 15.2 (Step 1). Yet, it is clear from the context that those references to "supervisor" mean immediate supervisor.

The APWU insists that the failure to condition "supervisor" with "immediate" proves nothing, and that in order to surmise the intended application of the term both its context and history must be examined. These make it perfectly clear that "supervisor" means -- at least normally -- immediate supervisor. This context is further clarified by the admonition in Article 15.4 that: "The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement of substantially all grievances...at the lowest possible step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end." It simply defies logic and experience to suggest that reasonable settlements at the lowest level are likely when supervisors are reviewing -- not their own decisions -- but the decisions of someone labeled an attendance control expert or specialist whom the supervisor may or may not interact with or know.

The Postal Service has cited a decision of the Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals, USPS v. NALC, 847 F.2d 775 (1988), in which the court stated that the "Collective Bargaining Agreement does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice." The APWU points out that this decision, in which the court referenced, but then ignored the principles of the Steelworkers Trilogy, is not consistent with the applicable law in the District of Columbia Circuit. In any event, the APWU stresses, the Unions do not contend that only the immediate supervisor may issue discipline, only that the contract contemplates that he or she "normally" will do so, and the Eleventh Circuit's opinion was issued long before the parties' binding agreement in the JCIM that this is in fact the correct application of Article 16.8.

The APWU stresses that the requirement that the official making the initial disciplinary decisions normally be the employee's immediate supervisor meets the Unions' concern that, particularly in attendance related matters, discipline will not be meted out based on a cookbook or mathematical formula, but rather will be leavened by human interaction with an official with direct contact and responsibility for the worker. The Unions also recognize that there are common sense exceptions to this rule. By contrast, the Postal Service has not articulated any interest or need supporting its interpretation, aside from its desire to preserve unfettered discretion wherever possible.

Finally, the APWU insists there is no agreement between the parties not to cite or reference the JCIM at the National level. The National Agreement not only contains no restriction on the citability of the JCIM, but the Memorandum of Understanding directing creation of the JCIM states that the parties "will be bound by these joint interpretations." There also is nothing in the JCIM itself which states that the parties are foreclosed from referencing it in National arbitration.

NPMHU POSITION

The NPMHU's position parallels that of the APWU. It points out, however, that there is no dispute that the Mail Handler CIM may be cited in National arbitration.

The NPMHU believes it is significant that Article 16.8 uses the specific term "supervisor" and not a more general term such as "manager", "management official" or "employer". The word "supervisor" suggests a specific individual who has direct, personal, and ongoing contact with the employee. The term plainly refers to a person who has the responsibility for overseeing employees' day-to-day activities. Any argument that because the parties could have used the term "immediate supervisor" the reference to "supervisor" should not be interpreted to mean immediate supervisor is completely undercut by the CIM jointly developed by the Postal Service and the Mail Handlers. The CIM specifically and unequivocally interprets the provisions of Article 16.8 to mean that "[i]t is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action." Therefore the only remaining question should be what constitutes an abnormal circumstance that would justify issuance of discipline by someone other than the immediate supervisor.

The NPMHU submits that poor attendance by an employee is not, in and of itself, an abnormal circumstance that makes it impossible or inappropriate for the employee's immediate supervisor to issue discipline. Rather, poor attendance is a routine type of misconduct and, by its very nature, generally does not require emergency action or an immediate response in the absence of an immediate supervisor. A requirement that normally discipline be initiated by an employee's immediate supervisor is also consistent with other provisions of Section 16.1 of the National Agreement in which the parties have agreed that in administering discipline a basic principle shall be that discipline shall be corrective in nature, rather than punitive, and that there shall be just cause for any discipline that is issued. Because attendance control supervisors lack critical information about an employee's overall job performance, they cannot responsibly judge which sanctions will be corrective and which punitive. Similarly it is only the immediate supervisor, in contrast to an attendance control supervisor, who is in a direct supervisory relationship with the employee and therefore is in a position to balance the employee's alleged infraction against any mitigating factors to determine whether just cause for discipline exists.

The NPMHU points out that in 1995 the Postal Service and the National Rural Letter Carriers Association -- which was one of the parties to the 1971 National Agreement which first included the language now found in Article 16.8 of the NPMHU and APWU Agreements -- agreed with the Postal Service to change that provision in the NRLCA National Agreement. They agreed to remove any reference to a supervisor imposing discipline. Moreover, in a jointly prepared and published "analysis of changes" the parties explicitly acknowledged that this change "clarifies the parties' position that discipline may be imposed by a manager other than the rural carrier's supervisor."[4] The NPMHU insists that the Postal Service may not seek to achieve by fiat against the NPMHU and the APWU what it has accomplished through negotiations with the NRLCA.

The NPMHU also asserts that the evidence in the record shows that the Postal Service's attendance control system, as initially conceived in the early 1980s, was not designed to remove the traditional disciplinary role of the immediate supervisor. Rather attendance control supervisors were to assist the immediate supervisor by flagging attendance related problems. The evidence in this case as to prior practice shows that discipline, including attendance related discipline, principally has been handled by the immediate supervisor. Even the management testimony regarding the practice at JFK shows that immediate supervisors are involved in the decisions to impose discipline and that it would be rare for a leave administrator to issue discipline without having consulted with the supervisor regarding the individual employee.

To the extent the Postal Service contends it can divide discipline into subject areas so that employees are subject to discipline by multiple "immediate supervisors" for one job, which implicitly concedes that only the immediate supervisor may issue discipline as set forth in the CIM, its position contradicts the clear language of the ELM. Section

[4] The parties stipulated at this arbitration hearing that the Postal Service would have presented testimony that the NRLCA and the Postal Service bargaining representatives agreed at the bargaining table that this change was cosmetic in nature.

122(b) of the ELM provides that each position should be "subject to the line authority of only one higher position." Similarly, Section 143.21 states that "[s]ubordinate positions never report administratively to more than one higher level supervisor." As the ELM makes clear, the NPMHU argues, there is only one supervisor for each position. It is that supervisor who, under Section 16.8 of the National Agreement, normally must impose suspension or discharge. The NPMHU also maintains that if an individual employee has multiple immediate supervisors, as the Postal Service seems to argue is possible, then no individual supervisor will have the kind of direct knowledge about the employee that is necessary for discipline to meet the fundamental requirements of Article 16, namely that discipline be corrective in nature and imposed only for just cause.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Postal Service insists it has not agreed to forego its managerial right and duty to select which supervisory or management officials have responsibility to discipline employees. A "supervisor", as that term is understood in labor relations, is one who is authorized by an employer to maintain discipline and order in the workplace. The term "supervisor" has that functional meaning in the National Labor Relations Act, which provides the foundation for postal labor relations. That definition likely informed the meaning of that term when the parties negotiated their initial contract in 1970. Because postal facilities typically have multiple layers of supervisors and managers, that definition includes all levels of supervisors and managers, as all have been invested with the responsibility to maintain efficiency and order in the workplace. Only where there is some explicit limit as, for example, in Article 15.2 (Step 1) do the contracts refer to a particular level of supervision.

Article 3 says the Postal Service may discipline employees. Significantly, it does not say only an employee's immediate supervisor may impose discipline. Article 16 lists three levels of progressive discipline and discusses discipline at length, but includes no limitation on the Postal Service's right to entrust any particular level of supervisors with the authority and responsibility to maintain discipline. Neither Union, the Postal Service stresses, offered any evidence that the parties ever discussed such fundamental limits on the Postal Service's ability to manage the efficiency of its workers.

The Postal Service insists that Article 16.8 only provides a general rule that no supervisor may impose substantial discipline until after the discipline has been approved by the top managerial official in the facility (or designee). This provision reinforces the Postal Service's position, because there is no limitation on who may discipline employees, only who must review it in the first instance. In contrast, the use of the term "immediate supervisor" in Articles 15 and 17[5] shows the parties knew very well how to use that phrase when they wanted to limit or define which supervisors were to be involved in an activity.

[5] Article 17.3 provides that a steward shall request permission from the "immediate supervisor" to leave his or her work area on specified Union business.

The Postal Service maintains that the predominant weight of postal and private arbitral awards demonstrate that employers retain discretion to entrust authority in persons and positions of their choice. Moreover, the Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit has ruled on the issue in contention here (USPS v. NALC). In vacating a regular-level arbitral award that overturned the removal of an employee who had stolen mail because a higher level supervisor had terminated the employee, the court explained that the collective bargaining agreement "does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice." Given that the parties have made no material changes to the relevant parts of the contract since that decision, the Postal Service submits it is binding in this case.

Testimony of Postal Service witnesses further demonstrates that the Postal Service retains discretion to assign responsibility to its supervisors and managers to maintain discipline and the Postal Service has exercised such authority for over three decades. Those witnesses testified without contradiction that at JFK in New York City and in Dayton the Postal Service has assigned responsibility for monitoring irregular attendance to supervisors who do not work directly with the employees, and those leave administrators administer discipline. The witnesses also testified without contradiction that an employee may work for multiple floor supervisors on any given day. Significantly there is no restriction in either Union's contract that prohibits the Postal Service from entrusting different types of supervisors to monitor different kinds of employee activity, as the Service deems most efficient in carrying out its responsibility.

Provisions in Article 16.6 and 16.7 which state that "the Employer" may indefinitely suspend employees where the Employer has reasonable cause to believe the employee is guilty of certain crimes and may place employees off-duty under certain circumstances further erode the Unions' claim that only an employee's immediate supervisor may discipline an employee.

The Postal Service also contends that the phrase "immediate supervisor" does not have the restrictive meaning asserted by the Unions. In 1984 the APWU and the Postal Service agreed that the meaning of "immediate supervisor" for purposes of Article 15.2 (Step 1) must be determined locally. More recently, the National parties have varied that general rule as it applies to part-time flexible employees working outside their home office by establishing a presumption that Step 1 grievances will be handled at the facility where the grievance arose. Also, as testified to at arbitration, the Mail Handlers at the JFK facility have met with leave administrators at Step 1 to discuss attendance related discipline for over eight years. Accordingly, even if Article 16 were interpreted by reference to Article 15, which it should not be, the phrase "immediate supervisor" does not have the restricted meaning sought by the APWU.

The Postal Service argues that the joint interpretive manuals, the JCIM and the CIM, also do not support the Unions' position in this case. In the first place, each manual specifically disclaims any intention to vary the terms of the contract. Accordingly, if the National Agreement does not contain a limitation on the right to assign responsibility to discipline, the interpretation manual cannot create it. Moreover, even if the manual were a commitment, it only states "normally the responsibility...," which plainly means such responsibilities are not exclusive. Rather than being a commitment or a restriction, that statement is no more than a description of a way the Postal Service traditionally has disciplined employees -- supervisors normally do so. Simply because in the run of cases "immediate supervisors" normally discipline their employees, however, does not reflect an agreement that only such supervisors may do so; nor is the statement in the manuals a waiver of the rights and responsibilities conferred by Congress upon the Postal Service in the Postal Reorganization Act.

The Postal Service also argues that there is a major difference between a description of what normally happens and an agreement that only that process is authorized. The Postal Service has never agreed that normally discipline has to be issued by the immediate supervisor, rather, the statement in the manuals means it is a normal responsibility of an immediate supervisor to discipline employees, not that other supervisors and managers are prohibited from maintaining good order and discipline, too.

The Postal Service states that the manuals describe the assignment by the Postal Service of the normal responsibility to initiate discipline to first level supervisors. That responsibility is normally conferred on one or more "floor" supervisors with respect to employee productivity and upon other first level supervisors with respect to monitoring unscheduled absences. As such, the manuals describe normal practices, but they do not prohibit the Postal Service from also assigning or reassigning those responsibilities to other management representatives, for example, the next level of supervisor, or bar those supervisors and managers from exercising their own responsibilities to maintain order and discipline in the workplace.

The Postal Service insists there is no contractual requirement that supervisors with the authority to discipline must possess a certain level of knowledge of the employee to be disciplined. Information required to correct and to discipline employees is available to managers on an as needed basis.

The Postal Service contends that use of the term "immediate supervisor" in Article 15 does not support the Unions' view that the term must also apply elsewhere in the contracts. There is no reason an immediate supervisor who is authorized to adjust a grievance at Step 1 could not correct a mistake made by a colleague or even a superior. There also is no evidence that attendance control supervisors are higher level supervisors than the employee's floor level supervisor who may handle the Step 1 grievance.

The Postal Service argues that internal postal guidelines cited by the Unions do not reflect contractual obligations and are subject to change by the Postal Service.

The NPMHU has asserted that Section 113.2 of the ELM defines a supervisor as meaning a person who has no subordinates with managerial responsibility, thus indicating only first level supervisors meet that definition. The Postal Service maintains there is no evidence that the parties understood that particular definition of supervisor to apply whenever the term supervisor is used in the collective bargaining agreement. Indeed, the cited version of the ELM was written long after the parties negotiated their initial collective bargaining agreement, which included the provisions at issue here. Moreover, if the NPMHU were correct, there would be no reason to limit the breadth of positions covered by the parties' understandings of the term "supervisor" by inserting the modifier "immediate" before "supervisor" in Articles 15.2 and 17.3. Other sections of the ELM also use the term "supervisor" in a broader context. Finally, even assuming that the ELM and the guidelines cited by the APWU refer only to a first level supervisor, the Postal Service is free to change that restriction whenever it wishes because the right to designate the individuals in whom to repose authority and responsibility to maintain order and discipline in the workplace is not subject to compulsory bargaining.

the issue of whether the JCIM may be cited in this case, the Postal Service maintains that both the introductory language of the JCIM and the testimony presented at arbitration regarding the parties' adoption of that document establish that there was an agreement by the parties that it would not be cited at National arbitration. Moreover, if the parties decide to change that agreement they will also need to resolve how the JCIM may be cited.

FINDINGS

Citation of JCIM in National Arbitration

The 2000-2003 APWU National Agreement includes the following Memorandum of Understanding:

> The United States Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union have engaged in extensive discussion on ways to improve the parties' workplace relationship, as well as ways to improve the Grievance/Arbitration procedure. Accordingly, the parties have agreed to establish a joint contract manual that will contain the joint interpretation of contract provisions. The parties will be bound by these joint interpretations and grievances will not be filed asserting a position contrary to a joint interpretation. The parties agree to initiate the process of establishing a joint contract interpretation manual no later than 90 days from the signing of this agreement.

The parties finalized the JCIM in June 2004. The Introduction and Preface, in relevant part, state as follows:

>
> The United States Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union have engaged in extensive discussion on ways to enhance the parties' workplace relationship, including methods to improve the Grievance/ Arbitration procedure. Consistent with that goal, the parties agreed to jointly establish a manual which outlines areas of agreement on contract application.

This Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) represents the mutual agreement of the national parties on the interpretation/ application of the issues discussed in this document and no inference should be drawn from the absence of national settlements, agreements or arbitration awards.

A primary purpose of this JCIM is to provide the local parties with guidance and to require consistency with contract compliance. The parties are bound by this manual and grievances should not be initiated which assert a position contrary to the JCIM.

PREFACE

The JCIM is self-explanatory and is not intended to, nor does it, increase or decrease the rights, responsibilities or benefits of the parties under the National Agreement and it shall be applied by the parties at the lower grievance steps in an effort to settle grievances at the lowest possible level.

If introduced in area/regional level arbitration, the JCIM will speak for itself and the parties' advocates will not seek testimony on its content.

The evidence shows that prior to mutual adoption of the above language, the APWU modified a Postal Service proposal by deleting the words "at all levels" following the reference to "[t]he parties" in the last sentence of the Introduction, and,

added the words "in area/regional level" before the reference to "arbitration" in the second paragraph of the Preface. Testimony as to communications between certain representatives of the parties regarding these APWU changes does not all march in one direction, but there is little question that the Postal Service believed the APWU position was that the JCIM could not be cited in National arbitration. APWU President William Burrus, who made the changes, denies this was the intent, although there is testimony that at least one high-ranking APWU official indicated the contrary to a high level Postal Service official.

In any event, there is no language in the JCIM or any other agreement that explicitly addresses citation of the JCIM in National arbitration. Moreover, in the present proceeding top officials of both parties stated it was their position that once the parties agreed on the substance of the JCIM the parties should live by it at all levels. This position is consistent with both the MOU in the National Agreement that led to adoption of the JCIM and statements in the JCIM Introduction that it "represents the agreement of the national parties on the interpretation/ application of the issues discussed in this document..." and that "[t]he parties are bound by this manual...."

The Postal Service legitimately raises the point that if it thought it would be permissible for the JCIM to be cited at National arbitration it would have insisted on some agreed to criteria. As I indicated in a sidebar at the hearing, that is something the parties need to address, but for purposes of this case I think it is significant that neither party has sought to do anything but cite the agreed-to JCIM provision regarding Article 16.8 and let it speak for itself, which is precisely what the Postal Service originally proposed and conforms to the parties' agreement in the Preface that "[t]he JCIM is self-explanatory."

Furthermore, the explication of Article 16.8 in the JCIM is identical, insofar as relevant to this case, to that in the Mail Handler CIM, which there is no dispute may be cited in National arbitration. It also seems to make little sense that the parties would agree on an interpretation of a provision of their contract -- and agree that they are bound by that interpretation -- and then ask a National arbitrator to rule on an issue relating to that provision without the benefit of their agreed interpretation. One need only consider the consequences of a National arbitration decision written without awareness of a contradictory or inconsistent JCIM provision that the parties have agreed is binding on them and on all area/regional arbitrators.

Under all these circumstances, I conclude, at least for purposes of this case, that the provision of the JCIM relating to Article 16.8 may be cited in this National arbitration.

Article 16 Issue

Under Article 3 (Management Rights) the Postal Service has the right to determine which management personnel may initiate disciplinary action against employees, except as otherwise restricted by the provisions of the applicable National Agreement or applicable laws and regulations.

In administering discipline, the Postal Service is, of course, bound to comply with the requirements set forth in Article 16.1 that:

But it cannot be concluded as a general proposition that only an employee's immediate supervisor -- leaving aside for the moment who that is -- can initiate discipline or must normally initiate discipline for it to be consistent with Article 16.1. Nor is the Postal Service required to articulate a need or interest that is subject to arbitral scrutiny to support an exercise of its management rights that is not in conflict or inconsistent with its contractual obligations.

Article 16 contains no use of the term "immediate supervisor." That term is found, however, in two other provisions of the National Agreement, Articles 15.2 and 17.3. This shows that the parties, when drafting the National Agreement, had the concept of "immediate supervisor" in mind.[6]

[6] The Postal Service has entered into Step 4 agreements with both the APWU and the NPMHU which provide that who is the "immediate supervisor" of an employee at a particular installation, for purposes of Article 15.2, is to be determined locally or regionally. (Postal Service Exhibits 20 and 22.)

Thus, under general principles of contract interpretation, it is reasonable to conclude that when the parties use the term "supervisor," rather than "immediate supervisor," in a particular provision the former is not confined to the latter, absent an indication to the contrary.[7]

Article 16.8, which the Unions principally rely on, states:

> Section 8. Review of Discipline
>
> In no case may a supervisor impose suspension or discharge upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action by the supervisor has first been reviewed and concurred in by the installation head or designee.
>
> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.
>

Article 16.8 addresses the issuance of discipline (suspensions and discharges) for all offenses, not just those

---

[7] Within the particular context of Article 15.2 (Step 1), for example, it seems clear that the reference to "the supervisor" in the subparagraphs following subparagraph (a) are to the "immediate supervisor" referred to in subparagraph (a).

relating to attendance issues. It seems inappropriate, however, to attempt in this case to provide a blanket determination regarding the interpretation and application of Article 16.8's reference to the imposition of disciplinary action by "a supervisor." The underlying grievances in this case referred to in the Step 4 documents relate to attendance control supervisors issuing discipline, and that was the focus of the arbitration hearing. This decision will be confined to that particular context; that is, whether the Postal Service's use of attendance control supervisors (whatever their particular title), not only to monitor employee attendance, but to issue discipline for attendance-related offenses is in conflict or inconsistent with Article 16.8.

Article 16.8 focuses not on which supervisor may initiate discipline, but on the need for review and concurrence by the appropriate higher authority. The regional arbitration cases cited by the Unions where discipline imposed by a higher authority than the employee's immediate supervisor was overturned, usually on "due process" grounds, either were based on the arbitrator's finding of a lack of the necessary separate review and concurrence or premised on the arbitrator's determination that the imposition of discipline by the higher authority deprived the employee of his rights under Article 15.2, because the immediate supervisor handling the grievance at

Step 1 did not have the authority to settle the grievance.[8] Other regional arbitration decisions cited by the Postal Service have dismissed grievances protesting that discipline was imposed by a supervisor other than the employee's immediate supervisor in a variety of contexts, including issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors.

In the early 1980s when the GAO issued its report on Postal Service control of absenteeism, there is no question that the Postal Service emphasized the continuing role of first line supervisors in absence control and in determining appropriate disciplinary action. This is reflected in contemporaneous Postal Service documents which the Unions have cited. Those documents, which set forth Postal Service policy at that time, do not, however, establish a contractual commitment to the Unions that would bar the Postal Service, for example, from assigning a supervisor the responsibility not only to monitor attendance of all or some employees at a particular facility, but also to initiate attendance-related disciplinary action, provided this is done in a manner consistent with Articles 16.1 and 15.2.

[8] The Eleventh Circuit Court of Appeals in a 1988 decision (USPS v. NALC) vacated a regional arbitration decision which overturned the removal of an employee who had stolen mail because the Post Master, rather than the employee's immediate supervisor, terminated the employee, which the arbitrator deemed to be a "due process" violation. On the facts of the case, the Court concluded that this determination was arbitrary or capricious, and that any procedural error was corrected and nonprejudicial. In its decision, the Court stated: "The Collective Bargaining Agreement does not suggest that only the immediate supervisor can issue the disciplinary notice."

Evidence was presented in this case regarding the attendance control program administered at the JFK facility in New York City for at least the past 25 years. Attendance control supervisors -- referred to as leave administrators -- are responsible for attendance and leave matters for all employees on their tour. These supervisors are not at a higher level of management than the supervisors who oversee work performance on the floor, and they regularly consult with the employees' floor supervisors, in particular before imposing discipline. As described in this record, I cannot conclude that this application of discipline is inherently inconsistent with Article 16.1 or with other Postal Service commitments, in particular, the March 2003 Step 4 settlement relating to implementation of the Postal Service RMD/eRMS. At the JFK facility, Mail Handler employees file Step 1 grievances protesting discipline issued by a leave administrator with the leave administrator, whereas APWU employees do so with their floor supervisors, apparently based on each local Union's determination. The testimony indicates that the floor supervisors are fully capable of exercising Article 15.2 authority to settle grievances over discipline issued to APWU employees by leave administrators.

It also is worth pointing out that an attendance control supervisor is not excluded from the definition of "supervisor" in Section 113.2 of the ELM: "--one who has a direct responsibility for ensuring the accomplishment of work through the efforts of others. Normally a supervisor has no subordinate employees with managerial responsibility for others." An employee who fails to meet his or her obligation to report to work hinders the "accomplishment of work." The specific attendance control officers referred to in this record did not have subordinate employees with managerial responsibility for others; they were first line supervisors, albeit they specialized in attendance control. There also does not appear to be any reason why an attendance control supervisor cannot function consistent with the principles of "sound supervision" set forth in Section 372 of the ELM, provided they consult with an employee's floor supervisor, as was testified routinely is done at the JFK facility.[9]

There also is nothing in Article 16.2 that would preclude an attendance control supervisor from discussing attendance issues with an employee prior to imposition of any discipline. Nor does Article 16.3 limit who may issue a letter of warning. With appropriate access, as needed, to an employee's personnel file and consultation with an employee's work floor supervisor, an attendance control supervisor can take into account mitigating factors -- and the employee and the Union can always raise those in the grievance and arbitration procedure. An attendance control supervisor also may be in a better position to provide consistency in applying attendance-related discipline in a particular facility, so as to lessen the likelihood of uneven or disparate treatment, which is an important component of "just cause."

[9] The observations in this paragraph are not intended to equate the term "supervisor" in Article 16.8 with any particular use of that term in the ELM.

While the practice at many, if not most, postal facilities may have been that employees' immediate supervisors who oversee other work performance issues also have been responsible for initiating discipline for attendance matters, that has not been uniform. In addition to the JFK facility in New York and Dayton, as to which testimony was presented in this proceeding -- and where the matter apparently was not grieved -- attendance control supervisors have issued discipline at other locations, including Atlanta, Baltimore, Harrisburg and Dallas, where grievances protesting such management action were denied by regional arbitrators.[10] Thus, there has not been a sufficiently uniform and consistent practice in the application of Article 16.8 to establish that the parties mutually understood that provision to preclude issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors.

The evidence presented by the NPMHU regarding the modification of Article 16.8's counterpart in the NRLCA National Agreement in 1995 does not show that those parties agreed to a substantive change in the meaning of that provision, only that they agreed to "clarify" it. Moreover, according to a Postal Service witness, Postal Service and NRLCA representatives agreed at the bargaining table that the change in language was "cosmetic."

[10] As the APWU points out, not all of these decisions squarely addressed the issue presented in this case. No regional arbitration case has been cited which held that issuance of discipline by an attendance control supervisor was contractually impermissible. One case cited by the NPMHU, Case No. N7M-1A-D 38367 (1992) may have some tangential bearing on this issue, but is difficult to decipher.

The APWU and NPMHU grievances underlying the present Step 4 disputes each involved a Union protest of the imposition of discipline by an attendance control supervisor on the basis that supervisor was not the employee's immediate supervisor. The preceding paragraphs basically describe the contractual and factual context at the time the present Step 4 disputes were initiated and discussed.

Subsequently, the respective parties reached agreement on the JCIM and CIM. In addressing Article 16.8, the Mail Handler CIM includes a note referring to the existence of a National level dispute "regarding whether discipline can be issued by other than the employee's immediate supervisor." This note is of some significance in that it seems to recognize that an attendance control supervisor is not the employee's "immediate supervisor." The Postal Service's acquiescence at the JFK facility in the local APWU's position that grievances protesting discipline issued by leave administrators are to be presented to the employee's floor supervisor in Step 1 also may reflect management's recognition that the leave administrators, while they may be supervisors, may not be the employee's "immediate supervisor," as that term is used in Article 15.2. Other evidence in this record further supports that conclusion

The Unions view the JCIM and CIM provisions interpreting Article 16.8 as conclusive on the matter in dispute in this case. Consistent with the parties' understandings, the interpretations in these interpretive manuals should be considered self-explanatory and binding on the parties. As the Postal Service stresses, however, both manuals explicitly state they are not intended to alter in any way the parties' rights, responsibilities or benefits under the respective National Agreement. They are intended to provide guidance as to the agreed-to meaning of specific contractual provisions.

The pertinent language in the APWU JCIM states as follows:

>
> It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action. Before a suspension or removal may be imposed, the discipline must be reviewed and concurred in by a manager who is a higher level than the initiating or issuing supervisor. This act of review and concurrence must take place prior to the discipline being issued.

The Mail Handler CIM includes exactly the same language prefaced by the statement that: "Concurrence is a specific contract requirement to the issuance of a suspension or a discharge."[11]

The key sentence in the JCIM and CIM relied on by the Unions reads: "It is normally the responsibility of the immediate supervisor to initiate disciplinary action." I conclude that the parties intended the term "immediate supervisor" in this sentence to have the same meaning as it does in Articles 15.2 and 17.3 of the National Agreement. For reasons already stated, I conclude that, unless otherwise locally agreed,[12] this term does not refer to a supervisor, such as an attendance control supervisor who does not oversee an employee's work performance on the floor of the facility.

The Unions agree that the wording of the JCIM and CIM allow for exceptions, but they argue from the use of the words "[i]t is normally the responsibility..." that such exceptions must be confined to abnormal circumstances, as, for example, where the immediate supervisor is unavailable or compromised in some way so as not to be able to appropriately issue the discipline. In context, this language does not support such a restrictive reading. Article 16.8, which does not use the term "immediate supervisor," broadly applies to discipline for all offenses, and focuses on the requirement for review and concurrence. Notably, the following two sentences in the JCIM and CIM which address review and concurrence both use mandatory ("must") language. The sentence on which the Unions rely here is not written in mandatory terms. It is more descriptive than prescriptive. It does not, in my view, connote that a supervisor other than the employee's immediate supervisor can initiate discipline only in circumstances where it would not be feasible or appropriate for the immediate supervisor to do so.

Accordingly, for purposes of this case, issuance of attendance-related discipline by an attendance control supervisor at a particular facility, when the Postal Service deems that to better meet the needs of the Service, does not conflict with the interpretation of Article 16.8 set forth in the JCIM and CIM. Of course, the imposition of a suspension or discharge must not only be reviewed and concurred in by the appropriate higher authority, but it also must be consistent with Article 16.1 and any other applicable contract provision, and must not impair the application of Article 15.2.

The issue in this case does not lend itself to simplistic conclusions. The Unions have raised a number of legitimate concerns. The Postal Service seeks to preserve its management rights. Various provisions of the National Agreement address the Unions' concerns and impose requirements and limitations on the exercise of management rights. In the final analysis, however, the Unions have not established that issuance of discipline by attendance control supervisors is precluded by Article 16.8 or other sections of the National Agreement, provided such an exercise of management authority is administered consistent with other applicable contractual provisions, as discussed in this opinion.

AWARD

The dispute in this case is resolved on the basis set forth in the above Findings.

PROCEEDINGS

Article 15, Section 5 of the National Agreement between the United States Postal Service ("USPS" or "Employer") and the National Rural Letter Carrier's Association ("NRLCA" or "Association") provides for two-tier grievance arbitration: Article 15.5.C "National Arbitration" of "certified cases involving national interpretations" and/or "other cases which the parties agree have substantial significance"; and, Article 15.5.D "area arbitration" of "removal cases and contract cases not involving national issues". In December 2001, these Parties designated me to serve as their National Arbitrator, to hear and decide unresolved national level interpretive grievances filed at Step 4, in accordance with Article 15, Section 3.D of the National Agreement.

The record before the National Arbitrator in this case presents a fundamental conflict between the NRLCA and the United States Postal Service concerning the proper interpretation of the "review and concurrence" provision contained in Article 16, Section 6 of their National Agreement. It is not disputed that this review and concurrence language has been a fertile source of controversy over the last thirty (30) years, resulting in scores of decisions by area arbitrators interpreting and applying its provisions. The ostensible vehicle for bringing certain generic issue(s) concerning the interpretation and application of Article 16.6 to this National Arbitration, at this time, was a grievance concerning the removal of rural carrier Ms. Julie DeWitt, from the Buhl, Idaho post office. However, the DeWitt grievance, per se, is not before the National Arbitrator for decision in this proceeding.

The Grievant in that case was issued a Notice of Removal dated October 6, 2000, for allegedly driving unsafely and failing to immediately report an accident. As a defense, the NRLCA asserted that there was improper review and concurrence as required by Article 16.6. The Postal Service disagreed with the NRLCA's interpretation of Article 16.6 and the Association declared the issue to be interpretive.

After the Association referred the instant case to Step 4 of the parties' grievance procedure, the Postal Service referred to Step 4 a number of other removal grievances, which had been denied at Step 3 and were pending area arbitration. The Postal Service determined that each of those cases raised Article 16.6 issues likely be impacted by the national interpretive decision on the issues raised herein. [The record is not entirely clear whether the number of related cases held in abeyance is sixteen (16) or twenty-one (21). It is noted that Attachment H to the NRLCA post-hearing brief is a list of relevant information about sixteen (16) such cases). Each entry contains the name of the Grievant, the location where he or she was employed, the NRLCA case number, the Postal Service case number, subject of the grievance, date of the Step 3 denial, date the case was appealed to area arbitration, date (if any) the case had been scheduled for area arbitration, and the date when the case was referred to Step 4 by the Postal Service (if known).]

Some of these cases apparently involve grievances concerning both an emergency suspension and the subsequent removal of the Grievant, which were consolidated during the grievance procedure. Like the DeWitt case, these related cases have also been held at Step 4, awaiting the resolution of the national interpretive issues presented in this case. The Parties agree that these cases (some of which were appealed to area arbitration as far back as 2000) should be processed in area arbitration as expeditiously as possible. To that end, at the hearing in this case, the parties stipulated that the National Arbitrator should also decide in this proceeding "the issue of what to do with the pending Step 4 cases that have similar issues in them."

The broad, general interpretive issues concerning the "review and concurrence"provision of Article 16.6, as presented in the Step 4 appeal and answer, are decided herein, without reference to the specifics of the DeWitt case. Further, no opinion is expressed or implied by this National Arbitrator concerning the facts or merits of that specific grievance nor concerning the facts and merits of the other related cases which are also pending hearing in area arbitrations; held in abeyance by the Parties, pending the outcome of the national interpretation issue(s) appealed to Step 4 by the Union in the instant case, pursuant to Article 15, Section 3.D of the National Agreement.

A National Arbitration hearing was held at Washington, D.C., on June 4, 2002, at which both Parties were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to present documentary evidence, testimony subject to cross-examination and oral argument. A transcribed certified stenographic record was made and the proceedings were closed with the filing and exchange of briefs and reply briefs. The Parties graciously granted an extension of the contractual time limits for rendition of the Opinion and Award.

ARTICLE 15
GRIEVANCE AND ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 1. General Policy

Grievances which are filed pursuant to this Article are to be processed and adjudicated based on the principle of resolving such grievances at the lowest possible level in an expeditious manner, insuring that all facts and issues are identified and considered by both parties. In the event that a grievance is processed beyond Step 1, both parties are responsible to insure all facts, issues and documentation are provided to the appropriate union and management officials at the next higher level of the grievance procedure. The parties further agree that at any step in the grievance procedure, the Union representative shall have full authority to settle or withdraw the grievance in whole or in part. The Employer representative, likewise, shall have full authority to grant, settle or deny the grievance in whole or in part.

Section 2. Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement.

* * *

Section 4. Grievance Procedure-General

A. Observance of Principles and Procedures

The parties expect that good faith observance, by their respective representatives, of the principles and procedures set forth above will result in settlement or withdrawal of substantially all grievances initiated hereunder at the lowest possible Step and recognize their obligation to achieve that end.

B. Failure to Meet Time Limits

The failure of the employee or the Union at Step 1, or the Union thereafter, to meet the prescribed time limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance.

C. Failure to Schedule Meetings

Failure by the Employer to schedule a meeting or render a decision in any of the Steps of this procedure within the time herein provided (including mutually agreed to extension periods) shall be deemed to move the grievance to the next Step of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D. National Level Grievance

It is agreed that in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the President of the Union. Such a grievance shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to be decided and the contention of the Union. Thereafter the parties shall meet at Step 4 within thirty (30) days in an effort to define the precise issues involved, develop all necessary facts, and reach agreement. Should they fail to agree, then, within fifteen (15) days of such meeting, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues. In the event the parties have failed to reach agreement within sixty (60) days of the initiation of the grievance at Step 4, the Union then may appeal it to arbitration, within thirty (30) days thereafter.

* * *

Section 5. Arbitration

A. General

A request for arbitration must be submitted within the time limit for appeal as specified for the appropriate Step. The National President of the Union must give written authorization of approval to the Employer at the national level before the request for arbitration is submitted.

Grievances referred to arbitration will be placed on a pending arbitration list. Except for discharge cases, the Union will have sixty (60) days from the date of such referral to certify the case to be scheduled for arbitration at the earliest possible date. Cases which are not certified for arbitration within the sixty (60) day period shall be considered waived and removed from the pending arbitration list. Discharge cases referred to arbitration shall be placed on a separate pending arbitration list. The Union will have fifteen (15) days from the date of such referral to certify the case to be scheduled for arbitration at the earliest possible date. Cases which are not certified for arbitration within the fifteen

(15) day period shall be considered waived and removed from the pending arbitration list. If there are other certified disciplinary cases related to the employee's removal grievance, these cases shall be scheduled for hearing along with the removal cases.

The case with the lowest docket number pending before a panel will be scheduled to be heard first. However, the parties may mutually agree to assign such cases for hearing out of numerical sequence in order to fill a vacated hearing date, or to lessen the amount of the arbitrator's travel time and expense or for other valid reasons. Arbitration hearings shall be held during working hours. Employee witnesses shall be on Employer time when appearing at the hearing provided the time spent as a witness is part of the employee's regular working hours.

Any dispute as to arbitrability may be submitted and determined by the arbitrator. The arbitrator's determination shall be final and binding. The arbitrator shall render his award within thirty (30) days of the close of the hearing, or if briefs are submitted, within thirty (30) days of the receipt of such briefs on cases which do not involve interpretation of the Agreement, or are not of a technical or policy making nature. On all other cases, the award shall be rendered within thirty (30) days if possible. All decisions of the arbitrator shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended or modified by the arbitrator. Unless otherwise provided in this Article, all costs, fees and expenses charged by an arbitrator will be borne by the party whose position is not sustained by the arbitrator. In those cases of compromise where neither party's position is clearly sustained, the arbitrator shall be responsible for assessing costs on an equitable basis.

B. Selection of Panels

National and Area Arbitration Panels are established as set forth below:

The members of these panels will be selected in accordance with the procedure set forth below and will serve for the term of this Agreement and shall continue to serve for six (6) months thereafter unless the parties otherwise mutually agree. To assure the expeditious processing of grievances, the parties by agreement may increase the size of these panels at any time. Should vacancies occur, or additional members be required on the National or Area panels, such vacancies shall be filled by mutual agreement. In the event the parties cannot agree on individuals to serve on these panels, or to fill any vacancies which may exist, a list of five (5) arbitrators will be supplied by the American Arbitration Association for each selection to be made. The parties shall then proceed by alternately striking names from the list until only one individual remains. Such individual shall be selected to remain on the panel.

C. National Arbitration

Effective August 3, 1996, a National Panel of not more than three (3) arbitrators will be established to hear certified cases involving national interpretations or other cases which the parties agree have substantial significance. Arbitrators on the National Panel will be assigned to hear cases on a rotating basis. Member(s) of the Area Panel may by mutual agreement be member(s) of the National Panel.

Prior to the scheduled hearing each party to the dispute may separately submit to the arbitrator who has been assigned the case, and to the other party to the dispute, a statement setting forth the following:

a. the facts relevant to the grievance;
b. the issue in the case;
c. the position(s) or contention(s) of the party submitting the statement.

The parties may by mutual agreement submit a joint statement to the arbitrator. A stenographic record will be taken if requested by either party to the dispute. In such case, the cost of such record shall be borne by the requesting party. The other party, upon request, will be furnished a copy of the record, in which case the cost of such record shall be borne equally by both parties to the dispute.

D. Area Arbitration

A geographically balanced Area Panel of arbitrators is established to hear removal cases and contract cases not involving national issues.

Normally, a stenographic record shall not be taken at these hearings, nor post hearing briefs filed. However, either party may make exception to this policy. The case with the lowest docket number pending before a panel will be scheduled to be heard first. However, the parties may mutually agree to assign such cases for hearing out of numerical sequence in order to fill a vacated hearing date, or to lessen the amount of the arbitrator's travel time and expense or for other valid reasons.

ARTICLE 16
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 1. Statement of Principle

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violation of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable.

Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities.

Section 2. Letter of Warning

A letter of warning is a disciplinary notice in writing, identified as an official disciplinary letter of warning which shall include explanation of a deficiency or misconduct to be corrected.

Section 3. Suspension of 14 Days or Less

In the case of discipline involving suspensions of fourteen (14) days or less, the employee against whom disciplinary action is sought to be initiated shall be served with a written notice of the charges against the employee and shall be further informed that the employee will be suspended after two (2) working days during which two-day period the employee shall remain on the job or on the clock (in pay status) at the option of the Employer. For the term of the 1995 Agreement, the notice period shall be increased to ten (10) calendar days and if the employee initiates a grievance during that period, the suspension will not be served until disposition of the grievance or issuance of the Step 2 decision, whichever comes first

Section 4. Suspension of More Than 14 Days or Discharge

In the case of suspension of more than fourteen (14) days or of discharge, any employee shall, unless otherwise provided herein, be entitled to an advance written notice of the charges against the employee and shall remain either on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days. Thereafter, the employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the employee's case has been had either by settlement with the Union or through exhaustion of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed, the advance notice requirement shall not apply and such an employee may be immediately removed from a pay status.

Section 5. Emergency Procedure

An employee may be immediately placed on an off-duty status (without pay) by the Employer, but remain on the rolls where the allegation involves intoxication (use of drugs or alcohol), pilferage, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations, or in cases where retaining the employee on duty may result in damage to U.S. Postal Service property, loss of mail or funds, or where the employee may be injurious to self or others. The employee shall remain on the rolls (non-pay status) until disposition of the case has been had. If it is proposed to suspend such an employee for more than fourteen (14) days or discharge the employee, the emergency action taken under this section may be made the subject of a separate grievance.

Section 6. Review of Discipline

In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority. Such concurrence shall be in writing. (Emphasis added)

In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

ISSUES

The Parties did not formulate a joint submission to arbitration nor did either Party elect to file individual pre-hearing statements of relevant facts, issues and contentions, as suggested by Article 15, Section 5.C. At the arbitration hearing, the Parties submitted differing articulations of the interpretive issues presented for determination in this matter. Before setting forth those respective statements of issues, however, it is instructive to review the process leading to the certification of this case to National Arbitration under Article 15.5.C.

The dispute concerning the proper interpretation of Article 16.6, now under consideration, crystallized during Step 3 discussions of the Dewitt discharge area grievance (E95R-4E-D 01027978). In that context, by letter dated May 11, 2001, Mr. Baffa submitted the matter to Step 4 in accordance with Article 15.4.D and requested national arbitration, as follows:

> The purpose of this letter is to appeal the subject-named grievance to Step 4. The union is appealing the above referenced case from Area Arbitration to Step 4 because the union believes it contains nationally interpretive issues.
> This appeal letter does not constitute a waiver by this Union of any issue or violation as it relates to this grievance; it is for the sole purpose of bringing this grievance to a Step 4 hearing.
> Please schedule this grievance for an early discussion.

The attached written grievance submitted to national handling at Step 4 by Mr. Baffa read as follows:

> The NRLCA position and interpretation of Article 16, Section 6, which many Area Arbitrators continue to conclude, if the facts of the particular case permit, that Article 16.6 of the National Agreement is violated if:
> 1) There is a "command decision" from above;
>
> 2) There is a joint decision to impose a suspension or discharge;
> 3) There is a failure of either the initiating or review and concurring official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

4) There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

5) There is no showing of harm.

In recent Step 3 decisions, the USPS designee refers to the Association's position on review and concurrence as a "total bastardization of Article 16, Section 6." The Association strongly disagrees with the USPS designee's characterization as expressed in this and other Step 3 decisions involving Article 16.6. The Association's position is grounded in the language of Article 16.6 and the many arbitration awards between the Association and the USPS. Based on the above referenced Step 3 decisions, is it the position and interpretation of the USPS that Article 16.6, as agreed to in the 1995-99 National Agreement and Extension, bars the Association from citing as violations of Article 16.6 the following:

1) "Command decisions" from above;

2) Joint decisions;

3) Failure of either the initiating or review and concurring official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence, prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

4) No evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

Following Step 4 discussions of these Article 16.6 national interpretive issues between USPS Labor Relations Specialist William Daigneault and NRLCA Director of Labor Relations Randy Anderson, Mr. Daigneault denied the national interpretive grievance at Step 4, by letter of September 27, 2001, as follows:

Re: E95R-4E-D 01027978 J. DeWitt Buhl, ID 83316-9998

On several occasions, the most recent being September 14, 2001, I discussed with the Union the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the interpretation of Article 16.6 of the National Agreement concerning review and concurrence of discipline.

It is the Union's position that a violation of Article 16.6, Review of Discipline has occurred in the following situations:

1. There is a command decision from higher authority that instructs the issuance of a suspension or discharge.

2. The decision by the in initiating official to suspend or discharge is reached jointly with the review and concurring official and was not an independent decision by the initiating official.

3. The initiating official or reviewing official failed to complete an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of the suspension or discharge.

4. There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of the suspension or discharge.

It is the Union's position that a showing of harmful error in relation to review and concurrence is not required to sustain the Union's grievance on the discipline. The Union also contends that their position is "grounded in the language of Article 16.6 and the many arbitration awards between the USPS and NRLCA."

It is the position of the Postal Service that Article 16.6 restricts a supervisor, manager or postmaster from imposing a suspension or discharge upon an employee in the rural carrier bargaining unit without review and concurrence by a higher authority. It protects carriers from a new, inexperienced supervisor that intends to suspend or remove the carrier without just cause. It provides for a higher authority to review the situation (either review of paperwork, discussion with proposing official or general knowledge of the situation giving rise to the charges) to determine whether, on the surface, it appears that the action being proposed is appropriate.. It requires that the higher authority document his/her concurrence with the action being proposed in writing.

Article 16.6 does not require that the concurring official conduct an independent investigation. It does not prohibit the concurring official from having previous knowledge of the charges, discussing the charges with the proposing official, being involved in the investigation with the proposing official or providing advice. It does not restrict management from having more than one concurring official.

In the case at hand, the Union alleges Management violated Article 16.6 claiming the review and concurrence was nothing more than a "rubber stamp." The Union contends that the review and concurrence official did not review anything except the proposing official's request for discipline.

It is Management's position that the concurring officials in the case at hand went above and beyond the requirements of Article 16.6. While the contract only requires review a nd concurrence by one higher authority, several managers in higher authority reviewed the evidence submitted by the proposing official in this case. All the managers agreed the action being proposed was appropriate.

In the absence of any contractual violation, this grievance is denied. Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

At the arbitration hearing in this matter, each Party submitted its own specific statement of national interpretive issues regarding violations and compliance with Article 16.6, upon which it seeks a decision in this case. Additionally, they submitted by joint stipulation two other "issues of national significance", regarding appropriate remedies for proven violations of Article 16.6 and post-National Arbitration administration of the pending area arbitration cases, now held in abeyance. Rather than rewording the issues advanced by the Parties into some form of synthesized issues, I will address in this Opinion and Award the following joint and several interpretive concerns expressed by the Parties, respectively, in their Step 4 correspondence and at the arbitration hearing, viz.:

1) Is Article 16.6 Review of Discipline of the Extension to the 1995-1999 USPS-NRLCA National Agreement violated if:

a) The lower level supervisor consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline;

b) There is a "command decision" from higher authority to impose a suspension or discharge;

c) There is a joint decision by the initiating and reviewing officials to impose a suspension or discharge;

d) The higher level authority does not conduct an independent investigation and relies upon the record submitted by the supervisor when reviewing and concurring with the proposed discipline;

e) There is a failure of either the initiating or reviewing official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

f) There is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

2) Does a proven violation of Article 16.6 automatically sustain the grievance and overturn any discipline, absent a showing of "actual harm", i.e., "that the reviewing official would not have concurred with the proposing official and that the discipline would not have been issued in the first instance".

3) What should be done next with those pending Step 4 cases which have been held in abeyance for area arbitration, awaiting the outcome of this National Arbitration case?

POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

The following statements of position have been edited from the respective posthearing briefs and reply briefs.

NRLCA

It is the Association's position that Article 16.6 requires two separate independent judgments on discipline -- the first by the initiating official who proposes discipline, and the second by a higher authority who reviews and concurs in that discipline before it is imposed. It is the Association's position that such requirement is violated: (1) when the initiating official does not possess the freedom to make his own independent determination on discipline free of command from higher authority, (2) when the initiating and concurring officials jointly make one decision, or (3) when the concurring official does not meaningfully review the record before concurring in the proposed discipline. In each such instance, there have not been two separate independent judgments on discipline, and the rural carrier who is facing the potential loss of his livelihood has been deprived of the due process protection -- the essential "check and balance" -- that Article 16.6 is intended to provide.

Compliance with Article 16.6 is required in every case before a suspension or discharge can be imposed. Failure by the Postal Service to comply with Article 16.6's dictates is fatal to the disciplinary action. Consequently, the appropriate remedy for such violation is reinstatement with full back pay, without consideration of the underlying merits of the disciplinary action. The Postal Service apparently contends that a "harmless error" rule should apply to Article 16.6 violations -- that the disciplinary action should stand notwithstanding such violation if it can be shown that the same action would have been taken even if Article 16.6 had been complied with. The Postal Service is wrong. Article 16.6 says nothing about a "harmful error" requirement but it does say is that "in no case" may discipline be imposed without compliance with Article 16.6's due process requirements. In addition, the Postal Service also offers the totally insupportable notion that in the case of a proven Article 16.6 violation, the aggrieved employee is not to be reinstated to his job but merely to receive backpay from the date of his removal to the date of a Step 2 decision in the grievance process. As in the case of Article 16.6's due process requirement -- two separate independent judgments on discipline -- the arbitral remedy for a violation of Article 16.6 -- reinstatement with full backpay -- has been incorporated into the parties' agreement. The universal arbitral remedy of reinstatement, and the almost universal arbitral remedy of full backpay, has never been addressed by the Postal Service in collective bargaining negotiations.

The language of Article 16.6 has been in the parties' agreements for more than 30 years. The language has been interpreted consistently by area arbitrators throughout this period. The Postal Service has never sought to renegotiate that language to undo any of the interpretations of those arbitrators, and this National Arbitrator should not do now for the Postal Service what it has failed to seek or achieve at the bargaining table.

USPS

Because the language at issue is so clear and unambiguous there is no need to search any further. If the NRLCA wants to impose more stringent standards and criteria of review then they should negotiate such changes at the bargaining table. To pretend that such criteria are present in the long standing language of Article 16.6 is to ignore the plain meaning of the language itself. Absent any special meaning assigned by the parties to the words "review" and "concur", the Arbitrator is bound by the language of the bargain as expressed in Article 16.6. A careful reading of Article 16.6 reveals that the language does not call for overturning a removal action but states that "In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority". (Emphasis added) Therefore, where a violation of Article 16.6 is found to have taken place the only appropriate remedy is to place the employee back into a pay status until review and concurrence takes place. Once review and concurrence takes place the discipline may then be imposed.

In summary, the ability to issue and impose discipline is an exclusive management right expressly incorporated into the Collective Bargaining Agreement at Article 3. Article 16.6 merely requires a procedure that two management officials concur before a suspension or discharge is imposed. It does not in any way alter the exclusive discretion that management has in issuing or imposing suspensions and removals. There is no violation of Article 16.6 if the proposing official consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the reviewing official before deciding to propose discipline. There is no violation of Article 16.6 if the reviewing official does not conduct an independent investigation and relies on the record submitted by the proposing official. As long as the reviewing official can articulate that a review has occurred and concurrence was given in writing, the Postal Service has met its obligation under Article 16.6. The standard of review required by Article 16.6 is simply and only that each of the management officials is satisfied that suspension or discharge be imposed.

Because the "review and concur" requirement does not factor into the "just cause" determination, any potential remedy should not disturb the final analysis regarding "just cause" in any particular case. Furthermore, any procedural defect of noncompliance with Article 16.6 will have been cured at Step 2 of the grievance procedure because a higher authority will have reviewed the file and issued a written concurrence in the form of a Step 2 denial. Even if a violation of Article 16.6 can be proven, the NRLCA still must demonstrate in each individual case how the grievant has been harmed. A violation of Article 16.6 does not automatically sustain the grievance, but rather the Association has the burden of showing that a harmful error has occurred. At the most, the appropriate remedy would be to delay imposition of the discipline until such written concurrence has occurred. Finally, all pending Step 4 grievances in which the NRLCA alleges a violation of Article 16.6 should be remanded to Step 3 for application of the award in this case.

OPINION OF THE NATIONAL ARBITRATOR

Bargaining History, Arbitral Authority and Mutual Intent

Certification of the instant case to Article 15.5.C National Arbitration marks the first occasion for a definitive resolution of the national interpretive issues presented, supra. However, the contract language under analysis in this case has been part of the collectively negotiated contracts between these parties for some thirty (30) years. Thus, a certain valuable perspective is gained by considering the bargaining history and administrative practice thereunder; especially since this very language has been so frequently interpreted and applied in final and binding decisions by scores of arbitrators in Article 15.5.D area arbitration of removal cases.

Turning first to bargaining history, the language which now appears as Article 16.6 of the current USPS/NRLCA National Agreement is essentially unchanged, dating from the 1971-73 Joint Collective Bargaining Agreement. Following passage of the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970, the major craft unions representing postal employees bargained jointly with the Postal Service and entered into a joint collective bargaining agreement covering all crafts. Those unions covered by the first agreement included the NRLCA, as well as the APWU (then known as the United Federation of Postal Clerks), the NALC, the Mail Handlers (and three others which have since been absorbed by the mentioned unions).

Article 16, Section 5 of that seminal agreement provided:

> In associate post offices of twenty (20) or less employees, or where there is no higher level supervisor than the supervisor who proposes to initiate suspension or discharge, the proposed disciplinary action shall first be reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority outside such installation or post office before any proposed disciplinary action is taken.

Over the intervening years, these unions have sometimes bargained in coalitions of differing combinations and sometimes negotiated separate contracts with the Postal Service, but the review and concur language has remained virtually constant throughout.

As for the NRLCA/Postal Service contracts, since the original language of Article 16.6 was adopted by the Parties in the 1971-73 joint Collective Bargaining Agreement, the language was re-adopted unchanged in the successive agreements negotiated in 1973, 1975, 1978, 1981, 1984, 1988, 1990, and 1993. In 1995, the NRLCA and the Postal Service amended the language of the first paragraph of Article 16.6 to provide as follows: (Emphasis in original, to denominate the changes.)

> In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority. Such concurrence shall be in writing.

It is noted that the NRLCA and the Postal Service jointly prepare and publish an "Analysis of Changes" following renegotiation of their agreements. The 1995 Analysis stated with respect to the above changes in Article 16.6:

> The first change clarifies the parties' position that discipline may be imposed by a manager other than the rural carrier's supervisor. The second change makes it clear that the concurring official need not be the installation head, provided the official is a higher authority, i.e., a higher organizational level or higher grade level. The third change requires that there be written evidence of such review and concurrence.

My focus in this case remains the language of Article 16.6 of the current Agreement, in a national interpretive context; with due regard for bargaining and arbitral history concerning the interpretation and application of that language since 1971, to the extent such evidence assists in determining the mutual intent of the contracting parties. In that connection, from the inception of the first collective bargaining agreement in 1971 to date, a period spanning some 30 years and 11 separately negotiated agreements, the NRLCA and the Postal Service have permitted area arbitrators to interpret and apply the provisions of Article 16.6, without resort to National Arbitration. Indeed, over the last three decades, area arbitration decisions construing and applying the review and concur language of Article 16.6 have been stacking up like cordwood. [Parenthetically, area arbitrators in cases involving the other crafts likewise have consistently interpreted the meaning of the review and concurrence provision in the same manner].

It is worth re-emphasizing that, notwithstanding the Postal Service's ostensible opposition to the interpretation and application of that language rendered by virtually all of the area arbitrators in these Article 15.5.D removal cases, the substance of the "review and concur" language has been repeatedly re-adopted by the Parties, without material change, in every successive National Agreement since 1971-73. In short, during more than three decades of living with this language as interpreted and applied by the area arbitrators, with a remarkable degree of consistency, in nearly 100 decisions. In all that time, neither Party ever exercised its right to renegotiate the controlling language of Article 16.6. Nor, prior to the instant case, did either Party deem it necessary to submit the review and concurrence language of Article 16.6 for definitive interpretation in Article 15.5.C National Arbitration, as a certified "national interpretive issue".

The Postal Service quite properly points out that, under the two-tier arbitration system adopted by these Parties, National Arbitration decisions govern in matters of national interpretations and the area arbitration decisions therefore are not authoritative precedent in this case. But just because National Arbitration decisions pre-empt area decisions in certified cases of national interpretation does not mean that thirty (30) years' worth of arbitration decisions by scores of prominent arbitrators, consistently construing and applying the language of Article 16.6 in area arbitration cases, are irrelevant, immaterial or unpersuasive in this National Arbitration case.

This National Arbitrator has the power and authority, as the contractual "Court of Last Resort", to interpret Article 16.6 in a manner other than as consistently and uniformly interpreted by scores of distinguished area arbitrators. It is manifest that Article 15.5.C area arbitration decisions are not res judicata, stare decisis, or in any sense dispositive, in Article 15.5.D National Arbitration. My responsibility to function as the designated National Arbitrator is not fulfilled simply by taking an opinion poll of area arbitrators.

But, in the absence of a National Arbitration decision interpreting a particular provision of the National Agreement, area arbitrators are regularly called upon to interpret and apply the various provisions of that Agreement, including Article 16.6. Area arbitrators have interpreted and applied Article 16.6 for more than 20 years in scores of cases, because the Association and the Postal Service have permitted them to do so and there is no contractual prohibition on them doing so. Of course, the interpretation of Article 16.6 in this National Arbitration case will govern and apply in all future area arbitrations, because National Arbitration under the Agreement represents a ruling by the Parties' designated "Supreme Court". On the other hand, in this particular case, most of those area arbitration decisions do in fact comport with my own interpretation of the language at issue in this case, based upon my independent analysis of the record before me. In short, the great majority of those area arbitration decisions are correct and as the National Arbitrator I reach essentially the same conclusions concerning the meaning of the language of Article 16.6.

Area arbitration may not be the "Supreme Court" under the parties' Agreement, but it most certainly is the "Court of Appeals"and area arbitration decisions are as "final and binding" as National Arbitration awards. If either party disagrees with an interpretation of the Agreement made by one or more area arbitrators, it can initiate a national interpretive grievance at Step 4 and take it on to national arbitration, to obtain a "Supreme Court" ruling. Unless and until that occurs, however, the area arbitration decisions construing and applying Article 16.6 represented the "law" of the Parties. More importantly, in my considered judgement, those accumulated decisions also constitute persuasive evidence of the mutual intent of the contracting Parties.

Those area arbitrations have laid on a persuasive interpretive gloss to Article 16.6 over a period of thirty(30) years, during which the Parties jointly re-negotiated the controlling National Agreement eleven (11) times, without even seeking, let alone achieving, any significant modification of the language of Article 16.6. When, as here, the area arbitration awards uniformly interpret a contract provision over a long period, and neither party seeks national arbitration or change in the contract language, but rather continually re-adopts the critical contract language time and time again in collective bargaining, it may well be concluded that the area arbitral interpretation has been incorporated into the Agreement. Elkouri & Elkouri, How Arbitration Works (5th edition) (BNA 1997), states the governing principle of incorporation or adoption, at page 615:

> [I]f the agreement is renegotiated without materially changing a provision that has been interpreted by arbitration, the parties may be held to have adopted the award as a part of the contract. Indeed, the binding force of an award may even be strengthened by such renegotiation without change.

The Postal Service may be technically correct, as a matter of logic, that incorporation/re-adoption theory should not be dispositive, because none of the myriad arbitration decisions construing and applying Article 16.6 was in the National Arbitration forum. However, to argue that the adoption theory should not even be considered seems to me an elevation of form over substance in this particular factual record. In my considered judgement, the arbitral gloss applied by the area arbitrators has in fact and in practice been largely accepted by both Parties and is reflective of their mutual understanding and intent concerning the interpretation and application of Article 16.6 in removal cases.

Issues No. 1(a)-1(f): Article 16.6 Violation/Compliance

When the rhetorical excesses of ardent advocacy are stripped away, I do not perceive any meaningful disagreement between these Parties with the fundamental proposition that Article 16.6. requires two separate and independent managerial judgments, each based on substantive review of the record evidence, before a suspension or discharge disciplinary action may be imposed on an employee: the first by the initiating official who proposes discipline, and the second by a higher authority who must review and concur in the proposed discipline before it is imposed upon the employee.

It necessarily follows that the requirement of two separate and independent judgements, constitutes the very heart and core of Article 16.6, is violated when the reviewing/concurring official "commands" or "dictates" the disciplinary action to the proposing official, when the higher authority merely "rubber-stamps" the disciplinary action proposed by the employee's supervisor and/or when the sequential steps of a separate and independent supervisory initiation, followed by a separate and independent higher authority review/concurrence, are merged into a single consolidated joint decision by the two managers to suspend or discharge the employee.

Just as the area arbitration decisions rendered by a long line of prominent arbitrators have consistently held, I now hold that a violation of Article 16.6 occurs whenever: (1) the initiating official is deprived of freedom to make his own independent determination to discipline by a "command decision" dictated from higher authority to suspend or discharge; (2) the initiating and reviewing/concurring officials jointly make one consolidated disciplinary action decision, or (3) the higher authority does not review the record and consider all of the available evidence before concurring in the supervisor's proposed discipline. In each such instance, because there have not been two separate and independent judgments on discipline, the employee is deprived of the essential due process check and balance protection that Article 16.6 is intended to provide.

However, so long as the sine qua non of Article 16.6, separateness and and independence of judgement in a two-stage process, is not violated by "command" decisions, joint decisions and/or "rubber-stamping", Article 16.6 does not bar the lower level supervisor from consulting, discussing, communicating with or jointly conferring with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline. Indeed, it is common, and in many ways commendable and conducive to fulfillment of the intent of Article 16.6, for the lower level authority to communicate with higher management and discuss policies, options, and other factors to be considered, before determining whether, and to what extent, to propose suspension or discharge of an employee. In short, so long as the initiating official retains independence of judgment and is not commanded by higher authority to issue the discipline, such communications for advice and counsel between the initiating official and a higher authority are to be encouraged rather than chilled or prohibited. The determining factor under Article 16.6 is not whether the officer in charge seeks advice and counsel outside his office but whether, once having obtained such information, the initiating official acts independently or surrenders that independence completely to the person from whom he has sought such advice. In the former case, Article 16.6 is not violated but, in the latter case, Article 16.6 is violated.

By the same token, it is not per se a violation of Article 16.6 when the higher level authority relies in the reviewing/concurring step upon the record considered by the lower level official in proposing the discipline. The higher authority is not required by Article 16.6 to make an "independent investigation". In my judgement, the requirements of Article 16.6 are met when the higher authority makes a substantive review of and bases the decision to concur on the record developed below.

Contrary to the position advanced by the Postal Service in this case, however, that process of review and concurrence contemplated by Article 16.6 is not a ministerial formality or a mere technical "laying on of hands" by the reviewing/concurring official. The requirement of a separate and independent second step of review and concurrence by the higher authority is not met by just a declaration of agreement with the first step supervisor's proposed disciplinary action. Compliance with Article 16.6 requires a substantive review of the matter by the higher authority in light of all the current information and the higher authority's concurrence with imposition of the disciplinary action proposed by the supervisor. Since the 1995 amendments, Article 16.6 specifies that this statement of concurrence by the higher authority must be set forth in writing.

Issue No. 1, supra, presents a subset of six (6) specific interrogatories concerning Article 16.6 compliance and violation, submitted by the Parties for determination in National Arbitration. Based on all of the foregoing, I conclude that Issues 1(a), and 1(d) are answered in the negative and Issues 1(b), 1(c), 1(e) and 1(f) are answered in the affirmative.

Issue No. 2- - The Remedy for Proven Violations of Article 16.6

The operative language of Article 16.6 provides (emphasis added):

> In no case may a suspension or discharge be imposed upon an employee unless the proposed disciplinary action has first been reviewed and concurred in by a higher authority.

This language clearly and unambiguously mandates that compliance with the two-step, two-stage process set forth in Article 16.6 is a condition precedent to the imposition of a removal or suspension. Accordingly, I concur without equivocation with those many area arbitrators who have concluded that the substantive violations of Article 16.6 set forth in Issues 1(b), 1(c) and 1(e) invalidate the disciplinary action. Because these are substantive violations which effectively deny an employee the due process rights granted by Article 16.6, persuasive proof of such fatal violations requires arbitral reversal of the improperly imposed suspension or discharge, without consideration of the underlying merits of the disciplinary action, i.e., reinstatement with "make whole" damages.

In my considered judgement, those relatively few area arbitration decisions which have engrafted onto the condition precedent language of Article 16.6 an additional requirement of proof of "actual harm", notwithstanding persuasive proof of a "command decision", a "joint decision" or that the reviewing/concurring official merely "rubber-stamped" the proposed disciplinary action, are just plain wrong. Under different contract language, arbitrators might properly overlook procedural defects in administration of discipline which do not unduly compromise the rights of an employee whose suspension or discharge is otherwise justified on the record. However, the precise terminology of Article 16.6 precludes recourse to that "harmless error" argument. If this plain language of Article 16.6 occasionally produces a manifestly unfair result, as undoubtedly it has in some cases, the proper recourse is renegotiation at the bargaining table, not arbitral legislation of "actual harm" or "harmless error" rules which are at odds with the express wording of Article 16.6.

The only caveat I would add concerns the procedural violation described in Issue 1(f), i.e., failure of the Postal Service to produce evidence that the higher authority's concurrence was reduced to writing, as required by the 1995 amendment to Article 16.6. Such a failure to express concurrence in written form clearly is a procedural violation of Article 16.6, for which an arbitral remedy might well be appropriate. But it is not so clear that such a violation, standing alone, would invalidate the disciplinary action and require reversal and reinstatement in every case.

The record in this matter is insufficiently developed to make an informed judgement concerning bargaining history and mutual intent regarding the 1995 amendment. The facts and circumstances of each particular case determine whether a procedural failure to concur in writing adversely impacted substantive Article 16.6 rights of an individual suspended or discharged employee. For these reasons, I refrain from making a definitive generic ruling on that single remedial aspect of the submitted issues at this time. Area arbitrators remain free to exercise their own best judgement as to whether, in the facts and circumstances of the individual case, an Issue 1(f) type of violation requires reversal of the disciplinary action or some other remedy. For Issue 1(b), 1(c) and 1(e) violations, however, Article 16.6 requires reversal of the disciplinary action and reinstatement with remedial "make-whole" damages.

CASE NO. E95R-4E-D 01027978

Having been designated National Arbitrator in accordance with Article 15, Section 5.C of the National Agreement between the above-named parties, and having been duly sworn and having duly heard the proofs and allegations of the parties, I hereby AWARD as follows:

Article 16.6 Review of Discipline of the Extension to the 1995-1999 USPS-NRLCA National Agreement:

a) Is not violated if the lower level supervisor consults, discusses, communicates with or jointly confers with the higher reviewing authority before deciding to propose discipline;

b) Is violated if there is a "command decision" from higher authority to impose a suspension or discharge;

c) Is violated if there is a joint decision by the initiating and reviewing officials to impose a suspension or discharge;

d) Is not violated if the higher level authority does not conduct an independent investigation and relies upon the record submitted by the supervisor when reviewing and concurring with the proposed discipline;

e) Is violated if there is a failure of either the initiating or reviewing official to make an independent substantive review of the evidence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge;

f) Is violated if there is no evidence of written review and concurrence prior to the imposition of a suspension or discharge.

ISSUE No. 2

(a) Proven violations of Article 16.6 as set forth in Issues 1 (b), 1(c) or 1(e) are fatal. Such substantive violation invalidate the disciplinary action and require a remedy of reinstatement with "make-whole" damages.

(b) Whether a violation of Article 16.6 as set forth in Issue 1(f) is fatal, invalidates the disciplinary action and requires a remedy of reinstatement with "make-whole" damages is for the area arbitrator to determine based on the facts and circumstances if the individual case.

ISSUE No. 3

Case No. E95R-4E-D 01027978 and all other similar cases held in abeyance at Step 4, pending this National Arbitration interpretation of Article 16.6, are remanded to area arbitration, for priority scheduling consistent with Article 15, Section 5.A of the National Agreement.

Jurisdiction is retained for the sole purpose of resolving any disputes which may arise between the Parties regarding the meaning, application or implementation of this National Arbitration Award.

STATE OF NEW YORK } COUNTY OF TOMPKINS } SS:

On this 3rd day of December, 2002, I, DANA E. EISCHEN, upon my oath as National Arbitrator, do hereby affirm and certify, pursuant to Section 7507 of the Civil Practice Law and Rules of the State of New York, that I have executed and issued the foregoing instrument and I acknowledge that it is my Opinion and Award in Case No. E95R-4E-D 01027978.

IN THE MATTER OF ARBITRATION BETWEEN UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE AND NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS WITH AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION as Intervenor (J. Goode Grievance) (CASE NOS.: D90N-4D-D 95003945 D90N-4D-D 95003961)	ANALYSIS AND AWARD Carlton J. Snow Arbitrator

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from June 12, 1991 through November 20, 1994. A hearing occurred on September 24, 1996 in a conference room of Postal Headquarters located at 955 L'Enfant Plaza, S.W. in Washington, D.C. Ms. Patricia A. Heath, Labor Relations Specialist, represented the United State Postal Service. Mr. Keith Secular of the Cohen, Weiss, & Simon law firm in New York City represented the National Association of Letter Carriers. Ms. Susan L. Catler of the O'Donnell, Schwartz & Anderson law firm in Washington, D.C. represented the American Postal Workers Union.

The hearing proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties. A reporter from Diversified Reporting Services, Inc. reported the proceeding for the parties and submitted a transcript of 123 pages.

The parties stipulated that the issue before the arbitrator involves the matter of substantive arbitrability and that there are no other challenges to the arbitrator's jurisdiction. They agreed that, should be matter be adjudged substantively arbitrable, the dispute will be remanded to a regional arbitrator for a decision on the merits. The arbitrator officially closed the hearing on January 2, 1997 after receipt of all post-hearing briefs in the matter. Influenza delayed preparation of the report.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

- Is the grievance substantively arbitrable?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 15 ARBITRATION-GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE

Section 4. Arbitration

A. General Provisions

9. In any arbitration proceeding in which a Union feels that its interests may be affected, it shall be entitled to intervene and participate in such arbitration proceeding, but it shall be required to share the cost of such arbitration equally with any or all other Union parties to such proceeding. Any dispute as to arbitrability may be submitted to the arbitrator and be determined by such asrbitrator. The arbitrator's determination shall be final and binding.

ARTICLE 16 DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 9. Veterans' Preference

A preference eligible is not hereunder deprived of whatever rights of appeal such employee may have under the Veterans' Preference Act; however, if the employee appeals under the Veterans' Preference Act, the employee thereby waives access to any procedure under the Agreement beyond Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Employer challenged the substantive arbitrability of the dispute before the arbitrator. It is a narrow dispute before the arbitrator, and the question is whether a regional arbitrator had authority to assert subject matter jurisdiction over the underlying dispute in this case. Central to the case is the coalescence of several federal statutes with the parties' collective bargaining agreement, and their impact on special circumstances of the dispute.

The grievant is a preference eligible, full-time regular letter carrier. He received a proposed Notice of Removal on January 3, 1994. After receiving the Notice, the grievant requested Equal Employment Opportunity counseling and alleged that racial discrimination actually was the case of his removal. On July 8, 1994, the Employer issued a Letter of Decision that upheld the proposed removal. In response, the National Association of Letter Carriers filed two grievances, one addressing the proposed Notice of Removal and the other addressing the Letter of Decision. After a final interview with an EEO Counselor on August 16, 1994, the grievant filed a formal complaint on August 25, 1994. The complaint was accepted for investigation on October 3, 1994.

While the administrative action was moving forward in the system, the grievances proceeded through Step 3; and arbitration was requested in both matters on December 19, 1994. On February 8, 1995, the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission completed its investigation. On May 18, 1995, the administrative agency issued a final decision indicating that neither racial nor reprisal discrimination had been a factor in the grievant's removal. This was an administrative determination made without a hearing. The decision rendered by the administrative agency informed the grievant of his right to appeal the decision to the Merit Systems Protection Board or to file a civil action in district court within 30 days.

On June 16, 1995, the grievant filed an appeal with the Merit Systems Protection Board concerning his EEO complaint. On June 30, 1995, the grievant's case was scheduled to be heard before a regional arbitrator. Subsequently, an administrative law judge for the Merit Systems Protection Board granted the grievant's request to dismiss the appeal without prejudice so that he might pursue his contractual rights in arbitration. The dispute, however, did not reach the regional arbitrator because the Employer challenged the substantive arbitrability of the dispute based on the grievant's appeal to the Merit Systems Protection Board. When the parties were unable to resolve the matter, it proceeded to arbitration at the national level.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The Employer

The Employer contends that the underlying grievances in this case are not arbitrable due to the parties' agreement as codified in Article 16.9 of the National Agreement. The Employer also relies on a Memorandum of Understanding dated March 3, 1988. It is the position of the Employer that, once the grievant appealed his EEO complaint to the Merit Systems Protection Board, he waived any right to proceed through the arbitration system set forth in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. It is the belief of the Employer that Article 16.9 of the collective bargaining agreement clearly and unequivocally precludes "preference eligible" employes who exercise their right to appeal to the MSPB from seeking additional resolution within the contractually negotiated grievance procedure.

It is also the position of the Employer that circumstances of this case are not such that they create an exception to explicit language in the parties' agreement. Management argues that merely because the present dispute deals with an EEO claim does not justify deviation from the written agreement. According to the Employer, if such an exception was intended to become a part of the parties' agreement, it was the obligation of the Union at the bargaining table to have the exception expressly codified in the parties' agreement. The fact that it has not been expressly incorporated into the National Agreement allegedly proves that no such exception exists in the parties' labor contract.

Moreover, management rejects the Union's allegation that neither Article 16.9 nor the Memorandum of Understanding applies in this case. It is the contention of the Employer that legislation calling for EEO claims of "preference eligible" employes to be appealed through the Merit Systems Protection Board does not establish any additional rights for such employes. Rather, the legislation simply established a process that enables a "preference eligible" employe to exercise rights under the Veterans' Preference Act, according to the Employer. Finally, management alleges that arbitral authority at the national level supports its position in this dispute and that any other conclusion would produce a harsh result.

B. The National Association of Letter Carriers

The National Association of Letter Carriers contends that the grievant did not waive access to arbitration by appealing the denial of his EEO complaint to the Merit Systems Protection Board. Previous arbitral awards allegedly have interpreted Article 16.9 of the parties' agreement in a way that suggests a strong presumption against waiver. To overcome the presumption against waiver, a party allegedly must clearly and unambiguously establish such a forfeiture. The National Association of Letter Carriers believes that the parties' agreement is far from clear and unambiguous with regard to the issue of EEO appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board.

It is the contention of the National Association of Letter Carriers that, pursuant to Article 16.9, employes waive their right to arbitration only when appealing to the Merit Systems Protection Board pursuant to the Veterans' Preference Act. According to the Union's theory of the case, the grievant used EEO procedures to assert his right to be free from racial discrimination under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. Regulations of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission allegedly require "preference eligible" employes to use this process, although they are not necessarily filing a claim under the Veterans' Prefernce Act. Hence, there allegedly was no waiver in this case.

The National Association of Letter Carriers also contends that the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding, although negotiated after the procedures for filing "mixed" cases had been established, failed specifically to address the issue of such "mixed case" appeals. Since the parties did not clearly express an intent to adopt the "waiver" procedure in the Memorandum of Understanding and to apply it to the type of dispute before the arbitrator, the Union argues that it does not have such an effect. Moreover, a regional arbitrator specifically addressed the issue and allegedly found in favor of the position of the National Association of Letter Carriers. Finally, the Union contends that three national arbitration decisions on which the Employer relies actually support the position of the Union.

C. The American Postal Workers Union

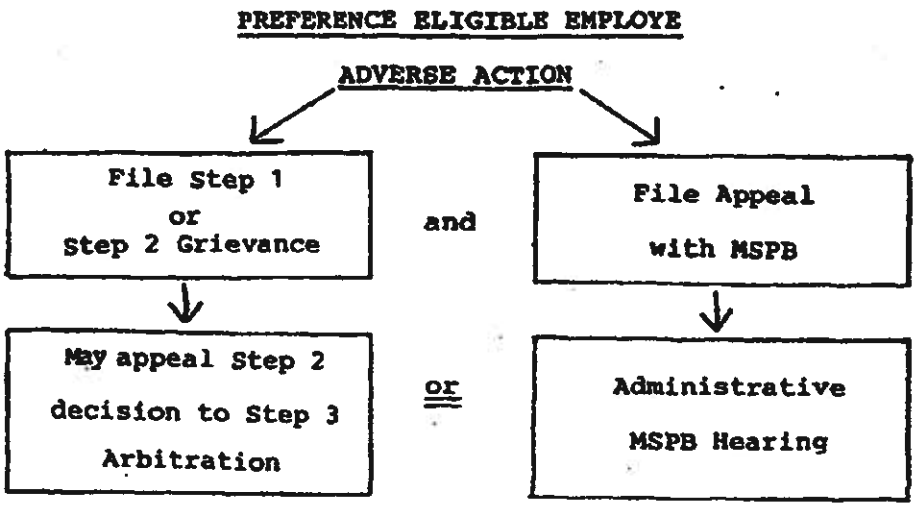
The American Postal Workers Union adopts the position of the National Association of Letter Carriers insofar as it addresses Article 16.9 of the parties' agreement. To the extent, however, that the position of the National Association of Letter Carriers is premised on the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding, tho American Postal Workers Union asserts that it is not bound by any obligations, since it was not a party to that agreement.

VI. ANALYSIS

Like Scylla and Charybdis of old, the modern concept of substantive arbitrability guards the gateway to arbitration; and an arbitrator's steering a correct course is as important to the parties. As a consequence of numerous prior decisions on the topic of substantive arbitrability, the parties possess an extensive institutional knowledge of issues involving subject matter jurisdiction. There is little utility in reviewing principles that are all too familiar to them. This case, however, is different in that the matter of substantive arbitrability at issue in the dispute hinges to a large extent on interplay between federally mandated procedures and the parties' negotiated agreement. There is a dearth of guidelines on this complex aspect of substantive arbitrability and little informative authority.

To gain a clearer understanding of the issue, it is useful to contrast "adverse action" procedures. An "adverse action" is defined as: removal, suspension for more than 14 days, reduction in grade, reduction in pay or a furlough of 30 days or less. (See, 5 U.S.C. 7512). Procedures exist for "preference eligible" employes and "nonpreference eligible" employes both in a non-EEO case. A "preference eligible" refers to a military veteran who may have rights under the Veterans' Preference Act.

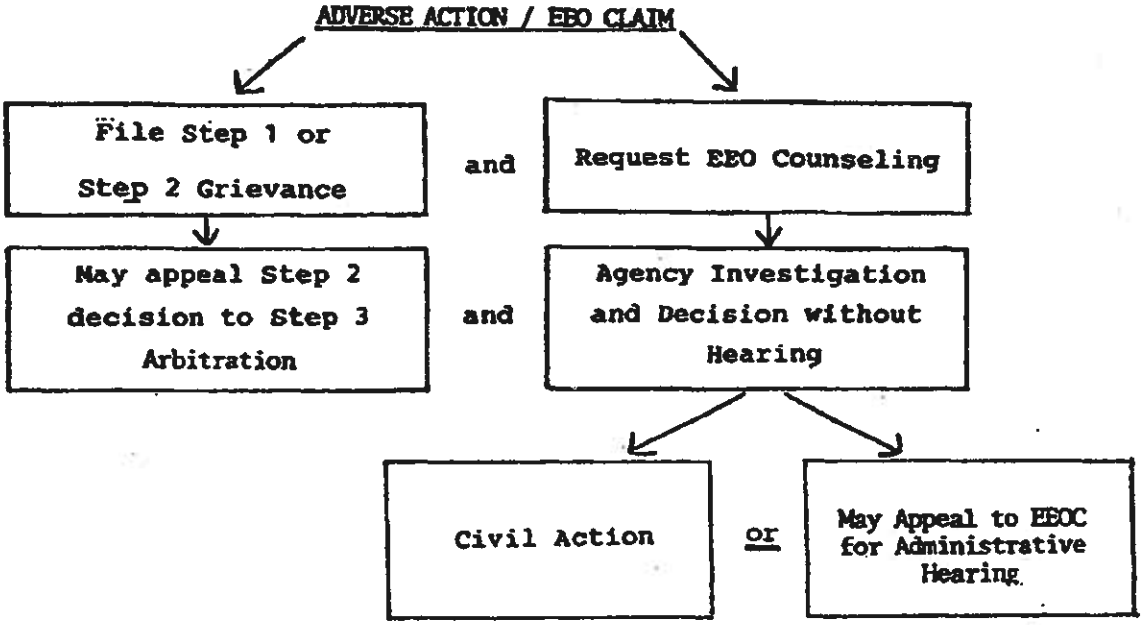
Rights of a "preference eligible" employe in a non-EEO case could be diagrammed as follows:



In a non-EEO situation, all employes receive only one chance for a full hearing on the merits concerning an adverse action. The Merit Systems Protection Board gives special consideration to "preference eligible" employes. An appeal, however, through this administrative process means that an employe waives rights to an arbitration hearing. The waiver constitutes a compromise between the special status of "preference eligible" employes and the impracticality of compelling the Employer to defend against two claims each in a different forum arising from the same event. Once, however, a Title VII complaint alleging employment discrimination has been filed, the process undergoes a significant change. This change is not mandated by the parties' agreement but by federal statutes. (See, 29 CFR § 1614 and 5 USC § 7702.)

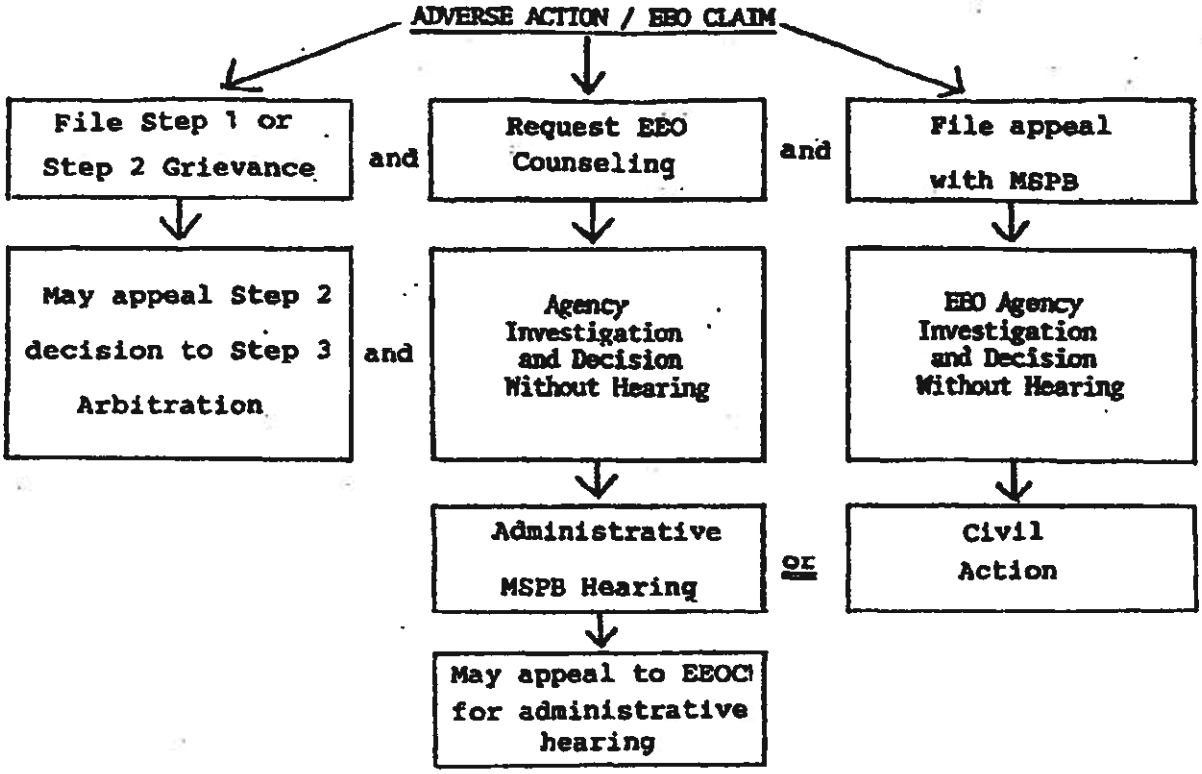
It is useful to contrast the difference between "nonpreference eligible" employes and "preference eligible" employes who pursue a complaint before the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission The system is designed as follows for a "nonpreference eligible" employe in an EEO case:

"NON-PREFERENCE ELIGIBLE" EMPLOYEE IN AN EEO CASE



An even more complicated system is available to "preference eligible" employes in an EEO case. The design is as follows:

"PREFERENCE ELIGIBLE" EMPLOYEES IN AN EEO CASE



In a "mixed" case (that is, one involving an EEO claim of a "preference eligible" employe), federal regulations require that "preference eligible" employes process any claim through the Merit Systems Protection Board if a "preference eligible" employe is to receive an administrative hearing on the merits of the EEO claim. (See, 5 USC § 7702 and 29 CFR 1614.303). Moreover, if such an individual is to have a claim heard at all by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission, it is necessary, first, to proceed through the Merit Systems Protection Board. (For examples of mixed cases, see Werners v. Dept. of Navy, 7 MSPR 272, 7 MSPB 171 (1981), or Portlock v. VA, 14 MSPR 359 (1983), 16 MSPR 92 (1983), reaffirmed.) The right to an administrative hearing by the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission is guaranteed to "preference eligible" employes regardless of their decision to grieve the matter to arbitration. (See, 29 CFR 1614.401.07). The purpose of federal regulations which route EEO claims through the Merit Systems Protection Board is to avoid inconsistent results in simultaneous EEOC and MSPB hearings. Accordingly, EEO claims and MSPB appeals are combined into one process. This results in a mandated MSPB hearing before an EEO claim may reach the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission.

The United States Supreme Court has held that all federal employes are entitled to such protection. (See, Brown v. General Services Administration, 42 U.S. 820, 96 S. Ct. 1961 (1976)). It is clear that "nonpreference eligible" employes with an EEO claim are entitled to an administrative hearing on the matter. Such a choice does not waive an individual's right to gain access to the arbitration procedure in the parties' agreement. Theoretically, it should be no different for "preference eligible" employes.

Since federal legislation mandates that "preference Eligible" employes must appeal EEO claims through the Merit Systems Protection Board, it is not reasonable to conclude that such employes have made a meaningful choice between the Merit Systems Protection Board and a negotiated arbitration system. Such an individual is merely pursuing an EEO claim by federally mandated procedures. This is a statutory process which should not affect an employe's rights under the parties' collective bargaining agreement, unless the parties have expressly included such procedures in their agreement.

Such a design grants to "preference eligible" employes an opportunity for a full hearing in two forums, and it is conceivable that the Employer might be compelled to defend itself in two cases. Such inefficiency, however, is not unique to "preference eligible" employes. As observed in another arbitration case, "nonpreference eliglble" employes who pursue EEO claims get "two bites of the apple." (See, Case No. S4N-3U-D 13382, p. 7). It would be a highly curious result, if, due to the special status accorded "preference eligible" employes, they received fewer rights within their place of employment. Neither legislation nor labor contract supports such a result.

A regional arbitrator for the parties addressing the same basic problem offered these insightful comments:

> The basis of the prohibition in [Article 16], Section 9 is to prevent two "bites of the apple" and to prevent a burdensome procedure of both contesting the grievance and the appeal by the Employer. However, it must be noted that the removal of the right to arbitrate is limited to the holder of veteran's rights in exercising his rights under the Veteran's Preference Act. Section 5 defines the rights as a right to file under the provisions of the MSPB.
> In this case, grievant filed an action under his rights under the Equal Employment Opportunity Act. He ended up with the MSPB, not through exercise of his rights of the Veterans Preference Act, but by procedural requirements of the EEOC. There is no contractual prohibition of arbitration, or waiver of grievance procedure/arbitration rights for EEOC discrimination claims. There is also no contract prohibition of arbitration for filing before the MSPB.

> The only prohibition occurs if he files with the MSPB as an exercise of his Veterans Preference Act rights. It is the Employer's burden to demonstrate that this has occurred. In this it has failed. The evidence demonstrates that the MSPB proceeding resulted from exercise of grievant's rights under the EEOC, not the Veterans Preference Act. To proceed through the EEOC, a protected activity, grievant must first file with the MSPB and appeal a negative response to the EEOC. (See, Exhibit No. 23, pp. 7-8, emphasis added).

While recognizing it as an anomalous result, the Employer argued that this is precisely the design for which the parties bargained. A deeply rooted belief in freedom of contract in the United States honors even imprudent bargains between the parties as long as they are not unconscionable, and it is for the parties to negotiate their own bargain without the intrusion of an arbitrator into the validity of an agreement based on personal beliefs about equity. (See, e.g., Bliss v. Rhodes, 384 N.E.2d 512 (1978); and Black Industries, Inc. v. Bush, 110 F. Supp. 801 (1953)). For an arbitrator to conclude that a bargain has crossed the line and has become one that no person in his or her right senses would make, there must be compelling evidence. The question in this case is not whether the Union agreed to an improvident bargain it now wants to avoid but, rather, what was the intent of the parties in Article 16.9.

A general standard of preference in contract interpretation is the principle that express terms of the parties' agreement provide the best expression of their commitments to each other. (See, Restatement (Second) of Contracts, § 203, comment d, 94 (1981)). Express terms in the parties' National Agreement, however, failed to establish the anomalous contractual interpretation for which the Employer argued. The relevant contractual provision is Article 16.9, and it states that:

> A preference eligible is not hereunder deprived of whatever rights of appeal such employee may have under the Veterans' Preference Act; however, if the employee appeals under the Veterans' Preference Act, the employee thereby waives access to any procedure under the Agreement beyond Step 3 of the grievance-arbitration procedure. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, emphasis added).

Article 16.9 of the agreement simply failed to address "mixed" cases or disputes involving EEO claims. Evidence presented at the arbitration hearing established that, at the time the article came into existence in 1971, "mixed case" procedures did not exist. (See, NALC Exhibit Nos. 16 and 18).

Nor did the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding, executed after the parties established the "mixed" case procedure, explore or even mention such disputes. There simply is nothing expressed in the Memorandum of Understanding to indicate that the Memorandum was or was not intended to apply in such circumstances. Evidence that the parties might have intended it to cover such situations came from Mr. Stephen Furgeson, Appeal Review Specialist with the Office of EEO Appeals and Compliance for the Employer. He testified as follows:

> Q Do you recall any discussion involving representatives of both the employer and the union with respect to mixed case complaints?
> A I don't recall the discussion in specific detail as far as this was concerned. I know it was an issue that had come up. It was certainly a problem in our minds, because that was one of the issues that was causing it.

Q Well, I -- let's be precise here, because there may or may not have been issues in both our minds. I'm asking you the very narrow question whether you can presently recall any discussion with any representative of the union in which there was explicit reference to mixed case complaints.

A I don't have crystal clear, verbatim recollection. I do have a strong impression that when we had originally discussed it --

MR. SECULAR: Well, Mr. Arbitrator, I would object to any impressions. I'm asking for a recollection as to a specific discussion.

ARBITRATOR SNOW: I think he was about to state a recollection, but it was a more vague recollection. But if that's not what you were about to do, perhaps you ought not. But you may state a recollection.

THE WITNESS: The vague -- recollection that I recall is, when we had these general meetings to set up the process to come up with such an agreement, that this was one of the troubling areas. The mixed case process was part of the troubling areas that we were trying to address.

I didn't have detailed discussion on it. It was just one of the general areas that came up when we discussed it with Larry and Bill Downes and myself. (See, Tr., pp. 63-64, emphasis added).

Beyond a vague recollection unsupported by any hinted of detail, the arbitrator received no evidence that "mixed case" appeals constituted a pervasive problem or a topic of mutual discussion at the time the parties negotiated the relevant Memorandum of Understanding. Such insubstantial evidence failed to support the sort of significant deviation for which management argued. As Justice Cardozo once observed, "The law will be slow to impute a purpose, in the silence of the parties, where the significance of the default is grievously out of proportion to the oppression of the forfeiture." (See, Jacob and Youngs v. Kent, 230 N.Y. 239 (1921)).

There is no express language in the parties' agreement addressing the issue before the arbitrator. Any conclusion that the parties' agreement forces a waiver of rights to arbitration on the part of "preference eligible" employes must be implied. While implications are "standard stuff in the process of contract reading," evidence is required to establish that the implied term is consistent with the reasonable expectations of the parties. (See, Mittenthal and Block, NAA Proceedings for the 42nd Annual Meeting, 65, 66 (1989)). Some implications in contract interpretation result from well-established default rules. If an ambiguity or a gap has been left in an agreement, an arbitrator might resolve an ensuing dispute based on implications flowing from a default rule.

Arbitrators, for example, have implied a "good faith" term in collective bargaining agreements because there is a well-established principle in the common law of the shop that there is a duty of good faith in the performance of labor contracts. But no such default rule provides a basis for concluding that a waiver occurred in this case, absent documentary or testamentary evidence to the contrary. Testimony from one witness provided relatively insubstantial evidence to support a conclusion that the parties intended the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding to cover the area in dispute. Arbitrators are slow to impute a contractual forfeiture without more substantial evidence.

As the parties know from an earlier decision, there is a strong arbitral presumption against construing unclear contractual language as setting forth a waiver or forfeiture of rights. (See, Case No. H7C-3D-D 13422, p. 13). Apart from a clear contractual term, an intention of waiver is not easily presumed by arbitrators and needs considerable evidence to support it. The Employer in this case argued that clear and unambiguous language of Article 16.9 in the parties' agreement as well as the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding expressed an unassailable intent of the parties to waive arbitration rights of "preference eligible" employes with EEO claims, if they appealed their right through the Merit Systems Protection Board.

Yet, neither language of Article 16.9 in the parties' agreement nor the 1988 Memorandum of Understanding expressly examined the issue. There was no direct or indirect reference in either document to "mixed case" situations. Testamentary evidence was inconclusive. In view of a need for a clear and unmistakable expression of a waiver in this case, the process of implication ultimately is not helpful. There is no credible basis for implying that language in the parties' agreement precluded the grievant from pursuing the matter in arbitration.

The Employer also argued that prior national arbitration decisions support an implication of a waiver in this case. None of the cases cited by the Employer, however, addressed the issue of waiver when appealing an EEO claim. (See, Case Nos. AB-W-113 69 and NB-N 4980-D; Case No. AC-N-8662-D; Case No. H4C-3W-W 40195; and Case No. H7C-3D-D 13422.) Those cases examined the timing of waivers and not a need for a clear and unmistakable implication of a waiver. While the cases were enlightening with regard to the scope and purpose of the "Veterans Preference waiver" provision of Article 16, they failed to analyze "mixed case" situations directly or by implication. It should be noted, however, all those cases highlighted the fact that the special status given to "preference eligible" employes was not intended to place them at a disadvantage with regard to their rights under the negotiated agreement. Accordingly, the decisions may not be used in this case to support an interpretation which almost certainly would accomplish such a result.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the grievance is substantively arbitrable and that there is arbitral jurisdiction to proceed to the merits of the case. The grievant did not waive his right to arbitration under the parties' collective bargaining agreement by appealing the denial of his EEO complaint to the Merit Systems Protection Board. The matter is remanded to a regional arbitrator for a hearing on the merits of the case. It is so ordered and awarded.

Respectfully submitted,

Award Summary:

As set forth in the above Findings, discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may not be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

The issue in this national level interpretive dispute is whether discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status, or whether the noncareer employee's disciplinary record is eliminated and his or her record starts anew upon conversion and appointment to the career position.

The parties have consolidated two Step 4 appeals in which full-time career Mail Handlers faced disciplinary action -- in Nashua, New Hampshire and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, respectively -- and where the disciplinary action cited infractions and disciplines incurred during the employee's time as an MHA.

MHAs were established by an interest arbitration award issued by Arbitrator Herbert Fishgold in February 2013 and incorporated into the 2011-2016 National Agreement.[1] MHAs are noncareer bargaining unit employees who are hired for terms of 360 days with a break in service of five days if reappointed. When full-time career Mail Handler vacancies arise, MHAs are converted to fill the vacancy in the order of their relative standing on an MHA roster which they are placed on in the order of their initial appointment in the installation.

The parties' Memorandum of Understanding Re: Mail Handler Assistant Employees (MHA MOU), as set forth in the 2016-2019 National Agreement, includes the following provisions:

> 3. Other Provisions
>
> A. Article 15
>
> 3. The separation of MHAs upon completion of their 360-day term and the decision to not reappoint MHAs to a new term are not grievable, except where it is alleged that the decision to not reappoint is pretextual....

[1] Earlier, in 2011, the Postal Service and the APWU negotiated the equivalent Postal Support Employee (PSE) noncareer position, and an NALC/Postal Service interest arbitration award created the equivalent City Carrier Assistant (CCA) position.

> MHAs may be disciplined or removed within the term of their appointment for just cause and any such discipline or removal will be subject to the grievance arbitration procedure, provided that within the immediately preceding six months, the employee has completed ninety (90) work days, or has been employed for 120 calendar days (whichever comes first) of their initial appointment.
> In the case of removal for cause within the term of an appointment, a MHA shall be entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her in accordance with the provisions of Article 16 of the National Agreement.
> 4. Discipline for an MHA who does have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure does not generally have to be issued in the same progressive manner as discipline issued to a career employee. However, an appropriate element of just cause is that discipline should be progressive and corrective in nature rather than punitive. When management removes or otherwise disciplines an MHA, determining whether the disciplinary action taken is appropriate must be based on the individual facts and circumstances of each case.

Bruce Lerner, General Counsel for the NPMHU, testified generally about the differences between MHAs and career employees. He pointed out:

> MHAs have a different pay scale. They really just have a pay rate. They get no retirement, little health insurance, very little leave. Their schedules are unfixed. They really basically are a separate category of employees in many, many ways. The ways have changed over the years and the negotiations have changed those ways, but coming out of the 2011 contract...there were all sorts of issues about how the MHAs would get implemented, and that led us to extensive bargaining over those issues in 2016 and '19.

In 2016 negotiations, one of the Union's proposals was to include in Article 16 (Discipline Procedure) the following provision:

> The disciplinary record of an MHA employee shall be removed from his/her file upon conversion to career status and may not be cited or considered in a subsequent disciplinary action against that employee.

Lerner testified that he "stated on the record that we were proposing this to clarify our understanding of what the national agreement already meant." He noted that by that time the issue had arisen in local grievances and that the NPMHU was "winning the issue in regional arbitration," as was the APWU.[2]

Patrick Devine, Manager of Contract Administration for the NPMHU contract, was the Postal Service's chief spokesperson in 2016 bargaining. He testified that he did not remember the Union claiming it already had the right to have MHA discipline expunged prior to its proposal or stating that the purpose of the proposal was to clarify existing contract language. (He added that there was no language to clarify.) He said he was aware there might have been some grievance activities, but there had been no request to move the issue to the national level as an interpretive issue.

The issue came up again in 2019 negotiations, but there is no dispute that by then the grievances in the present case had been appealed to arbitration at the national level.

Lerner stressed that the issue here is what happens if, after conversion to a career position, an employee engages in conduct that management determines justifies discipline and the Postal Service seeks to cite or rely on discipline issued to the employee prior to conversion. The Union concedes that if an MHA is issued a notice of removal, which the employee challenges, and then is up for conversion, the employee does not acquire career status prior to the removal action being resolved. Devine maintained, however, that the general practice in such circumstances has been to go ahead with the conversion.

In 2015 I issued a national level award in a grievance filed by the NALC involving the right of former CCAs to use annual leave following their conversion to full-time career status. The NPMHU and the APWU both intervened in that arbitration. Case No. Q11N-4Q-C 14239951, hereinafter referred to as "the 2015 arbitration." At issue in that case was the requirement in ELM Section 512.313 that: "new employees are not credited with and may not take annual leave until they complete 90 days of continuous employment...." The Unions argued that CCAs (and MHAs and PSEs) are not "new employees." The Postal Service contended that this ELM provision applies only to new career employees. I upheld the Postal Service position.

UNION POSITION

The National Agreement is silent on whether the Postal Service may consider or cite to discipline of a noncareer MHA when determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after conversion to career status. The Union argues, however, that review of the National Agreement as a whole, confirms that the parties' did not intend MHA discipline to carry over to career employment.

ELM Section 421.41 recognizes that a "career appointment" is a "new hire for an appointment without time limit...that confers full employee benefits and privileges." The ELM's declaration that an MHA converted to a career appointment is a "new hire," the Union asserts, is confirmed by a review of the National Agreement. When an MHA is hired into a career position, the employee: has no seniority; receives no credit for any service as a noncareer MHA for placement on the salary schedule; is not permitted to carry over any annual leave -- but instead such leave must be paid out as terminal leave; and has no service credit for retirement purposes or for leave accrual. Moreover, as held in the 2015 arbitration, time as an MHA does not count for satisfying the 90-day qualifying period to utilize annual leave.

The Union also points to unchallenged testimony of its General Counsel, Bruce Lerner, that in both 2016 and 2019 bargaining the Postal Service repeatedly stressed the importance of maintaining the demarcation between noncareer and career to avoid legal challenges to their separate treatment for purposes such as participation in federal retirement and health insurance programs. Not surprisingly, the Union asserts, where the parties wanted to depart from the general rule that career employees were "new hires" without a link to their noncareer appointment, they did so expressly.[3]

The Union contends that, consistent with the 2015 arbitration, it would be improper for the Postal Service to discipline a career employee by relying upon prior discipline imposed under a different set of rules and standards than those applicable to career employees, including the full protections of just cause and the disciplinary procedures set out in Article 16. The Union stresses that this is particularly true in the two grievances leading to this case, both of which involved attendance issues. MHAs have unfixed schedules and reduced leave, as well as lower standards for "just cause," which may well have contributed to the underlying attendance issues.

The Union adamantly rejects the Postal Service's claim that the NPMHU is attempting in this case to achieve in arbitration what it failed to achieve in bargaining. During bargaining for the 2016 and 2019 contracts, the NPMHU made, and later withdrew, proposals seeking to prohibit the carryover of MHA discipline. Notably, by the spring of 2016, when the parties were in negotiations, there was an ongoing dispute between the parties on this issue. Not only had the Union filed numerous grievances, including the two at issue here, but the NPMHU had prevailed in regional arbitration on this issue -- as had the APWU. Lerner credibly testified that in both rounds of bargaining he stated on the record that the purpose of the proposal was to clarify the National Agreement to conform to the Union's position as to what it already meant.

The Union also rejects the Postal Service's arguments that barring the Postal Service from considering discipline imposed while an employee was an MHA is impractical or [3] The Union points to the following instances where linkage between noncareer and career appointments is set out in the National Agreement: (1) relative standing of MHAs hired as career employees on the same day is based on service as an MHA; (2) MHAs who have successfully completed a 360-day term are not required to serve a probationary period when hired for a career appointment; (3) dues deduction authorization forms stay in effect, subject to a proviso; (4) time as an MHA is counted for determining FMLA eligibility; and (5) MHA time is counted for the lock-in period for transfers from one postal installation to another.

unreasonable. In particular, the NPMHU conceded at arbitration that in the rare case where a removal is pending at the time of conversion, the MHA is not going to get a career position unless that removal is overturned.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that, in the absence of specific contract language addressing the issue in this case, an arbitrator should apply the long-held principle of "just cause" to gauge the appropriateness of management's disciplinary actions. The concept of just cause has long been fundamental to contracts between the parties. As stated in Article 16.1 of the National Agreement, "a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause...."[4] Application of just cause necessarily must be highly fact-specific, and any deciding party must be able to consider the totality of the circumstances. See USPS and NALC, Case No. NC-NAT-16, 285 (Garrett 1979). The Postal Service insists that regional arbitrators are more than equipped to consider the facts and circumstances of each case and employee, and determine if consideration of that individual's MHA record is appropriate. Just cause, the Postal Service argues, demands that arbitrators have that flexibility. Automatically absolving an employee of their record taints not only the principle of just cause, but the purpose of progressive discipline.

The Postal Service maintains that the 2015 arbitration case can be distinguished from the present case because it dealt with the interpretation of very specific ELM handbook language -- not the absence of any language. A blanket application of the 2015 award misses the nuance that interpretation deserves.

The Postal Service also contends that the Union is attempting to gain rights through arbitration that it was unable to achieve in bargaining. In 2016, the NPMHU made a proposal to achieve what it is seeking in this arbitration -- expungement of records of an employee upon conversion from MHA to career. Postal Service negotiator Patrick Devine testified he had no recollection of hearing the Union state that it considered its proposal to be a clarification proposal as Lerner testified. Moreover, Devine testified that at the time he received the 2016 proposal he had not previously been aware of any Union position, including in a local grievance, that mail handlers already had expungement rights. The Postal Service stresses that if the Union previously had understood that MHA records were to be expunged upon conversion to career, there would have been no need to make the changes it proposed.

The Postal Service argues that adopting the Union's position would lead to unworkable and absurd results. It stresses that when a career vacancy opens up, management is required to convert an MHA based on their relative standing. It might be that, as in one of the underlying grievances, an MHA is converted when on the brink of being issued a Notice of Removal. In that case, it makes no sense that the employee start with a clean slate. The Postal Service asserts:

> If the newly converted employee continues to have attendance issues, management would have to start at square one in implementing progressive discipline. This would be true even though the employee had actual notice and opportunity -- during his time as an MHA -- to correct the offending behavior. That is to say, he already knew that such absences were unacceptable, and management had already attempted to deter him from such behavior with gradual discipline.
> Additionally, while employees who do not improve their attendance work their way through the disciplinary process for a second time, management may be forced to make on-the-spot adjustments to preserve operational integrity and function, possibly placing additional burdens on the employee's coworkers.

The Postal Service also points to certain positive vestiges of employment that carry over upon conversion to career. For example on-the-job training which is not repeated upon an MHA's conversion to career. Similarly, when individuals are converted, they bring their relative standing, vis-à-vis others converted at the same time. It argues this only emphasizes that newly converted career employees are not "brand new persons."

FINDINGS

Article 16 of the National Agreement addresses Discipline Procedure. It provides:

> Section 16.1 Statement of Principle
>

The parties' Contract Interpretation Manual further elaborates:

> Corrective Rather than Punitive
> The requirement that discipline be "corrective" rather than "punitive" is an essential element of the "just cause" principle. In short, it means that for most offenses management must issue discipline in a "progressive" fashion, issuing lesser discipline (e.g., a letter of warning) for a first offense...and a pattern of increasingly severe discipline for succeeding offenses (e.g., short suspension, long suspension, discharge)....

MHAs who convert to career status are hired as "new employees." ELM Section 421.41 includes the following description:

> a. Career appointment -- a new hire for an appointment without time limit requiring the completion of a probationary period that confers full employee benefits and privileges. The term applies to (a) new employees, (b) former employees who are being reinstated, (c) employees transferring from federal agencies, and (d) current Postal Service employees who choose to transfer to or from the rural carrier craft.

As the Union points out, MHAs who are hired as new career employees do not receive service credit for seniority or retirement purposes or, as determined in the 2015 arbitration, for eligibility to start taking annual leave upon being hired as a career employee.

In Article 12.1.E of the National Agreement, the parties expressly provided:

> MHAs who successfully complete at least one 360-day term will not serve a probationary period when hired for a career appointment, provided such career appointment directly follows an MHA appointment.

The parties also expressly agreed in an MOU Re: Relative Standing of Mail Handler Assistants and Subsequent Seniority Upon Conversion to Career Mail Handlers that:

> MHAs will be converted to career positions in the Mail Handler craft in precisely the same order as the relative standing list. If more than one MHA is converted to career status on the same date in the same installation, seniority ranking will be based on their position on the MHA relative standing list.

The parties notably did not provide for carryover of the disciplinary record acquired as an MHA when an MHA is converted and hired as a new career employee.

The evidence does not show that the Union's 2016 (or 2019) bargaining proposal on this matter was an acknowledgement that -- absent agreement on such proposal -- the Postal Service contractually could consider MHA discipline. In addition to the testimony of its General Counsel that he stated during bargaining that the Union's proposal was to clarify its understanding that the existing contract did not permit such consideration, the Union had asserted that position in the grievance process. And while the issue had not yet been elevated to the national level -- which the Postal Service chose to do in this case -- the Union's position was successfully presented in regional arbitration cases by both the NPMHU and the APWU. Where an existing contract is ambiguous or open to different interpretations and the parties appear not to agree, a party may seek to obtain agreement on an explicit provision consistent with its position as to the meaning of the existing contract without detracting from that position.

The Postal Service argues that it makes more sense and better comports with the concept of just cause to take into account an employee's entire discipline record including discipline previously imposed when in a noncareer position. The Postal Service seems to recognize that the situations are not entirely the same, by arguing that the deciding party -- such as a regional arbitrator -- should and can consider the appropriate weight to accord to discipline imposed while the individual was employed as an MHA. It also does not dispute that MHAs not only are subject to different working conditions -- particularly as regards scheduling -- but do not have the full scope of just cause protection afforded to career employees.[5]

From a policy perspective, arguably there may be some appeal to the Postal Service's position -- just as in the 2015 arbitration I noted that the Union's position to credit service as a CCA (or MHA) for leave-taking status did not seem unjustifiable as a policy matter. But, on balance, the record supports a finding that when the parties to the National Agreement wanted to include or carry over experience while an MHA after conversion to new career employee status they did so expressly, as they did for probationary period and relative standing.[6]

In conclusion, consistent with their status as new hires, former MHAs who are converted to career positions start afresh for disciplinary purposes.[7]

[5] It also is noteworthy that upon completion of each 360-day term the Postal Service is free not to reappoint an MHA to a new term without having to justify its decision, provided the decision is not pretextual.

[6] The Postal Service points out that employees who convert from MHA to career status, unlike other new hires, do not undergo on-the-job training although this is not spelled out in the contract. A decision by management not to provide redundant training, even if it could be subject to bargaining, hardly is comparable to the issue at hand, particularly as discipline of both career and MHA employees is addressed in some detail in the contract.

[7] The Union essentially has conceded that if an MHA is the subject of a notice of removal at the time the individual otherwise would be converted to a career position, that removal process -- including any challenge by the MHA -- is first to be completed.

AWARD

As set forth in the above Findings, discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may not be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status.

Dear Mr. Burrus:

This is in response to the issues you raised in your letter of December 18, 1987, and Step 4 grievance (E7C-NA-C 21, dated June 29, 1988) concerning the maintenance of employee disciplinary records, as well as the Step 4 grievance (H4C-5R-C 43882) challenging the management practice of including in past element listings of disciplinary actions the original action issued and the final action resulting from modification of the original action.

In full and final settlement of all disputes on these issues it is agreed that:

1. All records of totally overturned disciplinary actions will be removed from the supervisor's personnel records as well as from the employee's Official Personnel Folder.

2. If a disciplinary action has been modified, the original action may be modified by pen and ink changes so as to obscure the original disciplinary action in the employee's Official Personnel Folder and supervisor's personnel records, or the original action may be deleted from the records and the discipline record reissued as modified.

3. In the past element listings in disciplinary actions, only the final action resulting from a modified disciplinary action will be included, except when modification is the result of a "last chance" settlement, or if discipline is to be reduced to a lesser penalty after an intervening period of time and/or certain conditions are met.

Please indicate your agreement by signing and returning a copy of this letter.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Hutchins:

On December 14, 1988, a meeting was held with the NALC Director of City Delivery, Brian Farris, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is the extent to which prior discipline may be utilized under the terms of Article 16.10 of the National Agreement.

We agreed that a notice of discipline which is subsequently fully rescinded, whether by settlement, arbitration award, or independent management action, shall be deemed not to have been "initiated" for purposes of Article 16, Section 10, and may not be cited or considered in any subsequent disciplinary action.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Tunstall:

Recently we met in a prearbitration discussion of the above-referenced case.

The issue in this case is whether management violated the National Agreement by listing disciplinary actions over two years old as aggravating factors on a notice of proposed removal, even though the employee had received no discipline for a period of two years.

After reviewing this matter, the parties mutually agreed that, in accordance with Article 16, Section 10, "records of a disciplinary action against an employee shall not be considered in any subsequent disciplinary action if there has been no disciplinary action initiated against the employee for a period of two years."

Therefore, such records of disciplinary action should not be cited in a notice of proposed removal. However, the Postal Service is not precluded from introducing such prior disciplinary action for purposes of rebuttal or impeachment in the grievance procedure, in arbitration, or in other forums of appeal.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to close case H4C-5D-D 15115 and remove it from the pending national arbitration listing.

The issue in this grievance is whether outdated disciplinary action "cover sheets" should be removed from the supervisor's personnel records per section 314.53 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual.

It was mutually agreed to fully settle this case as follows:

"Cover letters" or notations concerning outdated disciplinary notices or decision letters, and the requested removal of such from the employee's official personnel folder will be removed from and not maintained in the supervisor's personnel records.

Re: Class Action - Mail Handlers
BMC, St. Louis, MO
H1M-4K-C 7453

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On several occasions, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether stewards designated by the Union are being denied the right to function on their assigned tours in accordance with provisions of Article 17, Section 2.A., of the National Agreement.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. There is no dispute between the parties as to the language set forth in the above-referenced section of the National Agreement which provides that the selection and appointment of stewards or chief stewards is the sole and exclusive function of the Union and that stewards will be certified to represent employees in specific work locations on their tours. Moreover, we concurred in the view that Article 17, Section 2.A., specifically provides that no more than one steward may be certified to represent employees in a particular work location and requires that the number of stewards shall be in accordance with the formula negotiated between our respective organizations.

With the foregoing in mind, we further agreed to remand this grievance to the parties at Step 3 for return to the local level. The parties at the local level should take the steps necessary to resolve this matter, bearing in mind the contractual right of the Union to appoint stewards to represent employees in specific work locations on their tours and the contractual provision prohibiting the certification of more than one steward to represent employees in a particular work location. Any arrangement as to the number of stewards must be in strict accordance with the formula set forth in Article 17, Section 2.A., of the National Agreement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

During our discussion, it was mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case.

Dear Mr. Riley:

On February 22, 1977 and subsequent dates, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

This letter will serve to clarify our letter of decision on the referenced grievance case dated April 14, 1977.

The policy statement of July 26, 1976, is in conformance with the formula contained in Article XVII, Section 2 of the National Agreement. Each steward will be certified to represent employees in a specific work location. If that steward is absent, an alternate may serve in his stead. All stewards need not be absent before an alternate is allowed to represent employees. In accordance with the above, this grievance is considered to be closed.

Dear Mr. Sombrotto:

On May 20, 1982, we met in a pre-arbitration discussion on the above-captioned case. The issue presented in this case involves whether a union member actively employed at a post office can be designated as the Union representative for a Step 2 meeting at another post office under the provisions set forth in Article 17, Section 2.D.

The specific language in question states:

> "At the option of a Union, representatives not on the employer's payroll shall be identified to perform the functions of a steward or chief steward, provided such representatives are certified in writing to the Employer at the regional level and providing such representatives act in lieu of stewards designated under the provisions of 2A or 2B above." (Underscoring added)

In full settlement of the interpretive dispute presented in this case, the parties mutually agree to the following:

1. A Union member actively employed in a post office may be designated as a Union representative to process a grievance at another post office.

2. Such employee must be certified in writing, to the Employer at the regional level.

3. An employee so certified will not be on the Employer's official time and will be compensated by the Union.

4. An employee so certified will act in lieu of the steward designated under Article 17, Section 2.A and 2.B. at the facility where the grievance was initiated.

Please sign the copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of this mutually agreed settlement.

and	Arbitration Cases Nos. MB-NAT-562 MB-NAT-936
NATIONAL POST OFFICE MAIL HANDLERS, WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS AND GROUP LEADERS DIVISION OF THE LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO	Inglewood, California
	ISSUED: January 19, 1977

BACKGROUND

This national level arbitration involves two grievances, which took form at the Inglewood, California, Post Office, wherein the Mail Handlers Union asserts that introduction of a new policy and procedure at Inglewood improperly restricts the rights of Union Stewards protected under Article XVII of the 1973 National Agreement and also violates Articles V and XIX. A hearing was held on September 8, 1976 and briefs thereafter filed as of November 18, 1976. 1

Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4, are particularly significant here. They read: 2

> "Section 3. Rights of Stewards. When it is necessary for a steward to leave his work area to investigate and adjust grievances, he shall request permission from his immediate supervisor and such request shall not be unreasonably denied. In the event his duties require he leave his work area and enter another area within the installation or post office, he must also receive permission from the supervisor from the other area he wishes to enter and such request shall not be unreasonably denied.

"The steward or chief steward may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance, and shall have the right to interview the aggrieved employee, supervisors, and witnesses during working hours. Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied.

"While serving as a steward or chief steward, an employee may not be involuntarily transferred to another shift or to another facility unless there is no job for which he is qualified on his shift or in his facility, provided that this paragraph shall not apply to rural carriers.

"Section 4. Payment of Stewards. The Employer will authorize payment only under the following conditions:

Grievances:

Steps 1 and 2--The aggrieved and one Union steward (only as permitted under the formula in Section 2A) for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer. The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance.

Meetings called by the Employer for information exchange and other conditions designated by the Employer concerning contract application.

"Employer authorized payment as outlined above will be granted at the applicable straight time rate, providing the time spent is a part of the steward's (only as provided for under the formula in Section 2A) regular work day."

(Underscoring added.)

Late in 1974 Inglewood Post Office supervision became concerned that some Union Stewards might be taking excessive time to investigate and adjust grievances. On September 9, 1974 Acting Director of Mail Processing Ford sent a memorandum to all Inglewood Mail Processing Supervisors stating, in relevant part: 3

"It is Management's responsibility to determine amount of 'reasonable time' to be allowed steward to investigate and/or prepare grievance (Oper 560). When such time is requested, require from steward a specific time limit and necessary information to justify that time involvement.

"If you are satisfied time request is justified, approved [sic] request (using Form 7020, in duplicate) with the understanding with steward that steward will return to work no later than end of time approved. This will eliminate need for supervisor's harassing stewards to leave lunch room--which practice is demeaning to steward, distasteful to supervisor, and a waste of supervisor's time--which must stop. If a steward doesn't return by prescribed time, deal with that as a disciplinary problem. If steward needs more time, it is his responsibility to request same, which starts process over.

"If agreement can't be reached on appropriate amount of time, refer matter to Tour Supt for resolution."

(Underscoring added.)

The Form 7020, to which reference is made in the second paragraph, above quoted, was developed by the Postal Service for general use throughout its operations. The Form is referenced specifically in Part 431 of Methods Handbook M-65, reading:

> "431 Form 7020, Authorized Absence from Workroom Floor, will be used to record authorized absences from assigned duties on the workroom floor, e.g., scheme examination, visits to the medical unit, etc. At the time Form 7020 is issued, record the personnel change on Form 2345 to the closest six minute interval. Upon the employees return, collect Form 7020 and record the change to the closest six minute interval on Form 2345. The leaving and returning times on Form 7020 must coincide with time entries on Form 2345."

Form 7020 includes the following: 4

Following issuance of Acting Director Ford's September 9, 1974 Memorandum, the Inglewood Post Office discontinued using Form 7020 to record time away from work by Stewards on Union business, in early 1975, and substituted a locally developed form entitled "Request for Official Time to Conduct Union Business." This reads as follows: 5

As a result of these developments the present grievances were filed directly in Step 4 on October 18, 1974 and February 26, 1975, as national level grievances. Local 303 of the Mail Handlers also filed unfair labor practice charges claiming violation of Sections 8-A-1 and 8-A-5 of the National Labor Relations Act. On March 18, 1975 the NLRB declined to issue a complaint pending completion of the present arbitration proceeding. 6

The Union now contends that the local policy enunciated in the September 9, 1974 Memorandum, and implemented through the new form introduced at Inglewood, violates not only Article XVII, Section 3 of the National Agreement, but also Article XIX, which provides: 7

> "Copies of all handbooks, manuals, and regulations of the Postal Service that contain sections that relate to wages, hours, and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement shall be furnished to the Unions on or before January 20, 1974. Nothing in any such handbook, manual, or regulation shall conflict with this Agreement. Those parts of any such handbook, manual, or regulation that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable and equitable.

"Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Unions at the national level at least 30 days prior to issuance. The parties shall meet concerning such changes, and if the Unions believe that the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), they may submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with Step 4 of the grievance-arbitration procedure within 30 days after receipt of the notice of proposed change."

The Union stresses that the September 9, 1974 Memorandum assumes that it is Management's responsibility to determine the "reasonable time" to investigate a grievance and seeks to limit a Steward, in advance, to a fixed amount of time for such activity. To require a prior determination of the amount of time to investigate a grievance, says the Union, is inconsistent with Article XVII, Section 3. It agrees that this Section requires the Steward to request permission to leave his work area, and gives the Supervisor the right to deny permission to leave the work area, but nowhere does it suggest that a Supervisor can impose a fixed time limit upon a Steward, requiring that the Steward return to work at some specific time. Violation of Article XIX also is seen, in that use of Form 7020 is specified for this purpose in Methods Handbook M-65, Part 431, but the Form in this respect has been replaced by an entirely new local form. In the Union view Article XIX requires the USPS to continue to use Form 7020 as provided in Methods Handbook M-65 until such time as notice is given to the Union of a proposed change, for negotiations pursuant to Article XIX. Although the Service claims that the new local form was necessary because of alleged abuse by Stewards at Inglewood, this is precisely the kind of problem which should be explored in the negotiations between the parties under Article XIX.

The Postal Service does not agree that the September 9, 1974 Memorandum at Inglewood asserts a Management right to determine the amount of time a Steward properly may spend on Union business. The Service concedes that one sentence may be so interpreted, if read out of context, but suggests that in context it should be construed to mean "that management must determine whether the amount of time that is requested for investigation or preparation of a grievance can be reasonably accommodated with the needs of the Postal Service." Such a reading of the Memorandum, says the Service, reveals that Inglewood supervision is not concerned with the total time spent investigating a grievance but only with the "impact of the time requested on operational needs." Under this analysis, the approval of a request for an hour to investigate a grievance does not establish that no more than an hour should be spent on the investigation, but only that the Steward can be spared only for an hour at the time he wishes to be absent from his work area. Any such a determination, so the argument runs, necessarily is without prejudice to further requests for time to investigate the same grievance. Thus the Service stresses that the last sentence in the second paragraph of the Memorandum reads: 8

"If steward needs more time, it is his responsibility to request same, which starts process over."

Insofar as the local Memorandum relates to the writing of a grievance, it is equally inoffensive, according to the Service. Here it quotes from Article XVII, Section 4: 9

> "The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance."
> (Underscoring added.)

Indeed, the Service does not now claim that the local Memorandum instructs supervisors to determine that the time requested to prepare a grievance constitutes the amount necessary to complete the task. It urges:

> "Instead, the Memorandum simply requires supervisors to balance a request for time to prepare a grievance against operational needs. Nothing in the 1973 National Agreement limits management's right to do so."

Given the right of the Service under Article XVII, Section 3, to determine the reasonableness of a Steward's request for permission to leave his work area, there is nothing in the Agreement to prohibit the Service from requiring a Steward to fill out a form including a blank space labeled "Approximate Time Requested." There was no impropriety in discontinuing use of Form 7020 for this purpose, says the Service, since Form 7020 was not designed for use in requesting authorization to leave a work area. Thus the Service suggests that Form 7020 is simply a record of the movement of an employee from one work area to another, where a request for such movement already has been authorized. (It stresses that Part 431 of the M-65 Handbook states that Form 7020 will be used to record authorized absences.) 10

Form 7020 has no value as a source of information for a Supervisor in determining the reasonableness of a request by a Steward for permission to leave his work area. The new local form thus is not a substitute for Form 7020, but actually is a supplementary form seeking information that Management is entitled to have. Since the Service is fully authorized under Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4, to determine the reasonableness of requests to leave the work area, it follows that to assess the reasonableness of such a request, the Supervisor must know how much time away from the work area is being requested and to require that this be provided on a form. 11

The two grievances here present separate but related issues: first, whether the local September 9, 1974 Memorandum is consistent with Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4; and, second, whether the local form instituted early in 1975 to effectuate the Memorandum conflicts with an established procedure under the M-65 Manual, and protected by Article XIX. 12

The September 9, 1974 Memorandum indicates on its face that it is Management's responsibility to determine what is a reasonable time to investigate or prepare a grievance. It includes no reference to Article XVII, Sections 3 or 4, nor does it state that a request by a Steward for time to investigate a grievance "shall not be unreasonably denied." The critical language quoted earlier in this Opinion from the September 9, 1974 Memorandum is preceded by an underlined assertion "B. Union Stewards taking too much time preparing Step 2A grievances." The Memorandum instructs a Supervisor that if you "are satisfied time request is justified" the request should be approved on condition that the Steward will return "no later than end of time approved." If the Steward does not return "by prescribed time," moreover, this is to be dealt with as a "disciplinary problem." Finally, the Memorandum advises that if agreement "can't be reached on appropriate amount of time" the matter should be referred to the Tour Superintendent. 13

Further light is shed upon the objective meaning of the September 9, 1974 Memorandum by reference to the form developed locally to implement it. This requires the Steward to (1) furnish in advance the names of other employees who may be interviewed, (2) indicate in advance what records may be needed, and (3) to identify (by number) any local telephone calls which may be made and the time to be involved in the call. It also includes a line captioned "If request is delayed beyond date of request, state reason. (Document on a Daily Basis why request cannot be granted.)" Lastly, the Form is routed to the Tour Superintendent. 14

These various restrictive provisions apparently were designed to combat abuses which were thought to have developed at Inglewood in taking excessive time for investigation and preparation of grievances. This surely is a proper Management objective, generally speaking, but the problem here is whether the Inglewood program is permissible under Articles XVII and XIX of the 1973 National Agreement. This is by no means only a local problem--if such a unilateral program is permissible at Inglewood, it is equally permissible throughout the entire Postal Service. 15

While the Postal Service brief includes an unusually skillful effort to depict the Memorandum as no more than an effort to require a Supervisor to determine whether a Steward "can be spared" from his job at the time he or she seeks permission to leave, there is nothing in the Memorandum itself which supports this narrow interpretation of its purpose. 16

The fact is that the Memorandum does not accurately state the substance of Article XVII, Section 3, particularly since it assumes that a Supervisor is entitled to determine in advance the amount of time necessary to investigate a grievance and requires the Steward to specify the time likely to be required and to provide detailed information in advance "to justify" such time requirement. The Memorandum implies that the decision as to whether any such request is "justified" lies within the discretion of the individual Supervisor, and provides no standards to guide the exercise of such discretion nor any reference to the controlling language of Article XVII, Section 3. 17

Thus it now should be made clear that Article XVII, Section 3, does not authorize the Service to determine in advance the amount of time which a Steward reasonably needs to investigate a grievance. Since the September 9, 1974 Memorandum is inaccurate in this and other significant respects, it should be withdrawn and given no effect. This is not to say, of course, that Management cannot (1) ask a Steward seeking permission to investigate, adjust, or write a grievance to estimate the length of time that the Steward anticipates he or she will be away from his or her work station; or (2) that a Supervisor cannot decline to release a Steward from duty during a period of time when his or her absence during such period will unnecessarily delay essential work; or (3) that a Supervisor, in advance, may not specify a time period during which the Steward's absence will unnecessarily delay essential work. Nor does this decision in any way bar the Service from taking necessary action, consistent with the Agreement, in any case where it can be established that a Steward has improperly obtained 18 permission to leave his or her work station under the guise of investigating or preparing a grievance.

The special form developed at Inglewood early in 1975 was designed to implement the September 9, 1974 Memorandum and hardly can be used except to effectuate that Memorandum. In addition, Part 431 of Methods Handbook M-65 states that Form 7020 will be used to record authorized absences from assigned duties, and the instructions on Form 7020 make it applicable to "time devoted to grievances." The local form at Inglewood in fact has been substituted for Form 7020 when Stewards seek to leave their work stations. 19

It is well settled by now that employee representation by a Union Steward or Grievance Committeeman constitutes a significant working condition, or condition of employment. Thus the matter here in issue falls within the scope of Article XIX. The development of a new form locally to deal with Stewards' absences from assigned duties on Union business--as a substitute for a national form embodied in an existing Manual (and thus in conflict with that Manual)--thus falls within the second paragraph of Article XIX. Since the procedure there set forth has not been invoked by the Postal Service, it would follow that the Inglewood form must be withdrawn. 20

The grievances are sustained as indicated in this Opinion. The September 9, 1974 Memorandum and the local form developed to implement that Memorandum must be withdrawn and given no effect. 21

Dear Mr. Riley:

On November 9, 1978, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

During our Step 4 meeting, we mutually agreed to consider this grievance resolved based on the following: If management must delay a steward from investigating or continuing to investigate a grievance, management should inform the steward involved of the reasons for the delay and should also inform the steward of when time should be available. Likewise, the steward has an obligation to request additional time and to state reasons why this additional time is needed. Requests for additional time to process grievances should be dealt with on an individual basis and not be unreasonably denied.

Please sign the attached copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of the agreed to settlement.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On February 17, 1982, you met with Margaret Oliver for a pre-arbitration discussion of the above-referenced case.

The issue raised in this case involved the grievant, a union steward, being asked how much time he would take to process a grievance.

During the discussion, it was mutually agreed to resolve this case based on an understanding that management may ask a steward who is seeking permission to investigate, adjust or write a grievance to estimate the length of time that the steward anticipates he or she will be away from the work station.

Please sign a copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve the case and withdraw it from pending arbitration.

Dear Mr. Connors:

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated Article 17 by allowing the union steward to meet with affected grievants for a specified amount of time only.

During our discussion, it was mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case:

> Employees should be permitted, under normal circumstances, to have a reasonable amount of time to consult with their steward. Reasonable time cannot be measured by a predetermined factor.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On April 12, 1984, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question raised in this grievance involved whether the grievants were granted ample time to discuss their grievance with a steward.

After further review of this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in the particulars evidenced in these cases. Normally, the steward determines how much time the grievant needs to be present during the processing of a grievance. However, the immediate supervisor may set a specified time to begin and end a period of grievance handling activity due to service needs. If additional time is necessary, the steward should discuss the need with the supervisor. Additional time may be granted in conjunction with the previously specified time or at a later time or date. The parties agree that any request for grievance handling time or denial of that request is subject to the rule of reason based upon local fact circumstances.

Our respective files indicate that the grievants' grievances were ultimately processed. Therefore, based upon the above understanding, we agreed to close these cases.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

This supersedes my letter dated April 7, 1986.

On March 14, 1986, we met with your representative, Judy Hoard, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether union stewards are entitled to conduct interviews at the steward's booth on the workroom floor.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that management may determine the location where Step 1 meetings or interviews are to be conducted. Dear Mr. Wilson:

On October 27, 1980, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The issue in this grievance is whether or not management violates the intent of Article XVII of the National Agreement in this instant grievance for not providing enclosed cubicles with floor to ceiling walls and doors for privacy and space within the cubicle for reference materials, writing tablets, prior cases and other materials to investigate and process grievances.

After reviewing the file, it is my opinion that this grievance should not be interpretive. We acknowledge that the place designated by management for grievance activity should be reasonably private (not necessarily completely out of eyesight) and reasonably free from excessive noise. Whether or not the cubicle arrangement set up by local management failed to accomplish this cannot be determined at this level. Space limitations will be a factor in determining cubicle size.

Accordingly, this grievance is denied.

Time limits for further processing of this grievance have been extended to begin on receipt of the decision.

and

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

APPEARANCES: Barbara S. Fredericks and Nancy Forden, Attys., for the Postal Service; Cohen, Weiss & Simon, by Bruce H. Simon, Esq., for NALC

DECISION

This grievance arose under and is governed by the 1978-1981 National Agreement (JX-1) between the above-named parties. The undersigned having been jointly appointed to serve as sole arbitrator, a hearing was held on 31 July 1980, in Washington, D. C. Both parties appeared and presented evidence and argument on the following agreed-upon issue (Tr. 10-11):

> May the Postal Service deny requests for investigation pursuant to Article XVII(3) of the 1978-1981 National Agreement by Shop Stewards requesting to leave the work area to investigate grievances or to investigate specific problems to determine whether to file a grievance and for access to documents, files, and other records necessary for processing the grievance or determining if a grievance exists; and for the right to interview grievants, supervisors and postal patron witnesses during working hours in connection with situations in which a letter carrier has made an initial determination in his judgment and in the exercise of his discretion that a particular customer would object to his lawn being crossed and where a supervisor has over-ridden that determination and issued an order that such lawn be crossed? If not, what shall be the remedy?

A verbatim transcript was made of the arbitration proceeding. Each side filed a post-hearing brief. Upon receipt of both briefs on 19 September 1980, the arbitrator officially closed the record.

On the basis of the entire record in this case, the arbitrator makes the following

AWARD

The Postal Service may not deny requests for investigation pursuant to Article XVII(3) of the 1978-1981 National Agreement by Shop Stewards requesting to leave the work area to investigate grievances or to investigate specific problems to determine whether to file a grievance and for access to documents, files, and other records necessary for processing the grievance or determining if a grievance exists; and for the right to interview grievants, supervisors and postal patron witnesses during working hours in connection with situations in which a letter carrier has made an initial determination in his judgment and in the exercise of his discretion that a particular customer would object to his lawn being crossed and where a supervisor has over-ridden that determination and issued an order that such lawn be crossed.

Such future requests in the precise circumstances set forth in the preceding paragraph must be honored by the Postal Service, as provided in Article XVII.

Case No. N8-NA-0219

I

This "lawn-crossing" dispute has a long history with which both parties are now so familiar, if not weary, that no useful purpose would be served by detailing the background facts at length. Suffice it to say that it has figured in at least five previous arbitrations, extending back as far as 1976: NC-C-178, 23 Dec. 1976; NC-E-6501-D, 8 December 1978; NC-C-7851, 3 May 1978; and NC-C-15708-D and NC-NAT-13212, 20 August 1979. The decisions in all of these cases were either written or approved by Arbitrator Sylvester Garrett; none disposes of the problem raised in the instant case.

The present grievance, filed by Vincent R. Sombrotto, President of NALC, charges that the Postal Service has violated Article XVII (Representation), Section 3 (Rights of Stewards) of the National Agreement (JX-1). That section reads in pertinent part:

> When it is necessary for a steward to leave his/her work area to investigate and adjust grievances or to investigate a specific problem to determine whether to file a grievance, the steward shall request permission from the immediate supervisor and such request shall not be unreasonably denied. In the event that the duties require the steward to leave the work area and enter another area within the installation or post office, the steward must receive permission from the supervisor from the other area he/she wishes to enter and such request shall not be unreasonably denied.
> The steward, chief steward or other Union representative properly certified in accordance with Section 2 above may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review documents, files, and other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists and shall have the right to interview the aggrieved employee(s), supervisors and witnesses during working hours. Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied. . . .

The Postal Service insists, however, that the real issue involved in the grievance is lawn-crossing, specifically addressed in Article XLI (Letter Carrier Craft), Section 3 (Miscellaneous Provisions), Paragraph N, which states in its entirety: "Letter carriers may cross lawns while making deliveries if customers do not object and there are no particular hazards to the carrier." (Underscoring added) As will appear shortly, there is truth to both contentions.

The Postal Service bases its present policy in respect of lawn-crossing by carriers on Article III (Management Rights) of the National Agreement, which, among other things, grants the "Employer. . .the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:"

A. To direct employees. . .in the performance of official duties; . . .

C. To. . .maintain the efficiency of the operations entrusted to it; [and]

D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted. . . .

The Postal Service also cites its obligation under the Postal Reorganization Act (39 U.S.C. §101(e)) to "give the highest consideration to the requirement for the most expeditious collection, transportation, and delivery of. . .mail." Furthermore, it accuses NALC of opposing and thwarting "the mandate" in Section 661.3 of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (PS Ex. 1) that "Employees must avoid any action, whether or not specifically prohibited by the Code [of Ethical Conduct], which might result in or create the appearance of. . .c. Impeding Postal Service efficiency or economy."

Finally, the Postal Service charges that NALC is trying to gain in arbitration what it failed to win in the 1978 negotiations, when, according to John S. Humphrey, Jr., General Manager, City Delivery Division of the Postal Service, NALC unsuccessfully sought to incorporate language in the National Agreement permitting letter carriers to make the initial determination whether or not to cross lawns, depending on "safety hazards or customer preference or whatever" (Tr. 70). No changes were made in Article XLI-3-N; instead, as Humphrey testified (Tr. 71):

Well, there was no language specifically addressed to that part of the article. In a Memorandum > of Understanding. . .[it was agreed] that during the inspection process, if there was some problem as to what constituted a safety hazard between the examiner and the Carrier or whether there were [other relevant] factors [in dispute]. . .a process [would be] set up to handle that particular case. And that was that the route inspection process would be discontinued or deferred or cancelled and that the Carrier would be instructed in the proper method of shortcutting and following the line of travel and then the route would be reinspected. And that's all the language that was involved in the negotiation.

NALC's response to this last contention of the Postal Service, in the words of its counsel at the arbitration hearing, is that "[t]his is not a case that deals with Management ordering all lawns to be crossed. . . .This is not an Article XLI case. It's an Article XVII case" (Tr. 59).

Technically, NALC is correct. The specific situation to which the instant grievance relates is one in which a carrier has determined that a particular patron objects to having his lawn crossed; the carrier's supervisor has overruled the carrier's determination and has ordered the lawn to be crossed; the carrier's steward has filed a grievance; and the supervisor has denied the steward's request to "investigate" the grievance "on the clock," which investigation involves leaving the work area and interviewing the patron at the latter's residence. In the broader sense, however, the grievance implicates the entire lawn-crossing policy of the Postal Service, and thus Article XLI-3-N.

Unfortunately, a reading of Articles XLI-3-N and III does not automatically dispose of the issue raised by NALC.

As counsel for NALC stated in his opening remarks at the arbitration hearing,"Article XLI-3-N. . .is magnificent in its ambiguity" (Tr. 12); a statement that carriers "may" cross lawns "if" customers do not object and there are no particular hazards is hardly a definitive declaration of policy. Similarly, the management rights of the Postal Service set forth in Article III are subject in part to "the provisions of this Agreement," including, of course, Article XVII.

A colloquy between the arbitrator and the Postal Service's only witness, Humphrey, is instructive. The latter agreed that in case of a dispute between a carrier and a supervisor over a patron's wishes in respect of lawn-crossing, the final decision would have to be made by the patron. The colloquy continued (Tr. 80):

> MR. AARON: Inasmuch as it is the customer who makes the final decision in these matters, how would the customers intent be ascertained?
>
> THE WITNESS: I think in that case it would have to be ascertained by contact with the customer.
>
> MR. AARON: And who would make the contact?
>
> THE WITNESS: From Management's standpoint, I think the manager would or the supervisor.
>
> MR. AARON: And would the Union have the right to make the contact?
>
> THE WITNESS: I don't know. . . .How would Article XVII apply in that case? That's what I would answer.

The Postal Service takes the position that if it has no "hard data" -- e.g., a communication by a patron objecting to having his lawn crossed, or a report by a carrier of some obvious physical barrier or hazardous condition that makes lawn-crossing infeasible--and is presented instead with a carrier's subjective conclusion that a lawn should not be crossed, the supervisor may properly order the carrier to cross the lawn. In that event, as Humphrey put it, "there is nothing to grieve about" (Tr. 79). That conclusion, however, seems to be contradicted by the following statement by Arbitrator Garrett in his most recent decision on the subject (NC-C-15708-D and NC-NAT-13212, p. 34):

> Where a Carrier does not use a shortcut which appears to be safe to the supervisor, and the supervisor concludes that there is no reason to believe that the customer might object, then the supervisor properly may order the Carrier to use that specific shortcut. The Carrier is obliged to comply with such a direct order, but may file a grievance protesting any apparent unreasonable supervisory action. . . .

It is true that the quoted statement referred specifically to procedures to be followed during a route check, but it seems equally applicable to the present case; and if the carrier may file a grievance against the supervisor's order, then it follows that Article XVII applies to the processing of that grievance. Accordingly, the specific issue presented in this case must be resolved in favor of the grievant.

It is at once apparent, however, that this decision could, and probably would, lead to increased expense for the Postal Service, impairment of its efficiency, and some exacerbation of its relations with its patrons, who, regardless of how they feel about having their lawns crossed, are very likely to resent the necessity of explaining their feelings to Postal Service personnel. I have decided, therefore, to make a rare exception to my practice of never giving unsolicited advice to the arbitrating parties, and to submit for their consideration a modest proposal which, if adopted, would make it unnecessary to implement the decision in this case.

II

Obviously, the subject of lawn-crossing is one of intense concern to the Postal Service and the NALC; but I can find nothing in the voluminous record in this case to suggest that it is of an intricacy commensurate with its interest. Both sides agree that lawns need not be crossed if (1) the patron objects, for any reason or no reason; (2) if there are barriers that render such crossing infeasible; or (3) if lawn-crossing is otherwise rendered hazardous for some reason. The existence of conditions (2) and (3) may be objectively verified without bothering the patron; ascertaining whether or not the patron objects to having his lawn crossed presents the only real problem. Both parties quite sensibly dislike involving the patron unnecessarily in their disputes; but, both agree that if there is disagreement over the patron's desires, the issue can ultimately be resolved only by the patron. The Postal Service insists, however, that carriers have no right to raise that issue unless the patron has first made known his objection to lawn-crossing.

My proposal is designed to remove any doubts about the patron's preference, without significantly increasing costs to the Postal Service, adversely affecting its efficiency, or involving the patron in disputes between the Postal Service and NALC. I propose that each patron be sent a simple form (return postage prepaid) in which he is asked to indicate if he objects to carriers crossing his lawn when they make mail deliveries. The patron should also be advised that if he does not so indicate his disapproval on the form, or if he fails to return the form, it will automatically be presumed that he has no objection to his lawn being crossed. I further propose an agreement between the parties that NALC will not communicate in any way with patrons about this matter, and that individual carriers will volunteer no statements or opinions about it to patrons.

Adoption of the foregoing proposals would, in my judgment, eliminate grievances arising from disagreements over a patron's preferences in respect of lawn-crossing. If, however, the proposals, or some variation thereof satisfactory to both sides, are not adopted, then the Postal Service must allow NALC stewards to investigate such grievances in the manner permitted by Article XVII.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE

AND THE

DIVISION OF THE LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO

The parties agree to recognize the following as nationally established policy regarding a steward's request to leave the work area while on-the-clock to interview a non-postal witness:

> In accordance with Article 17 of the 1981 National Agreement, a steward's request to leave his/her work area to investigate a grievance, shall not be unreasonably denied. Subsequent to determining that a non-postal witness possesses relevant information and/or knowledge directly related to the instant dispute under investigation, a steward may be allowed a reasonable amount of time on-the-clock, to interview such witness, even if the interview is conducted away from the postal facility. However, each request to interview witnesses off postal premises must be reasonable and viewed on a case by case basis. For example, it is not unreasonable for a supervisor and/or steward to telephone the prospective witness to ascertain availability and willingness to be interviewed and, if willing, to establish a convenient time and locale.

Dear Mr. Sombrotto:

In settlement of the above-described grievance, the parties agree to the following:

1. The Postal Service agrees that a steward who is processing and investigating a grievance shall not be unreasonably denied the opportunity to interview Postal Inspectors on appropriate occasions, e.g., with respect to any events actually observed by said Inspectors and upon which a disciplinary action was based.

2. The Postal Service and the NALC disagree as to whether in other circumstances such as those in the above-captioned case, the steward should be given the opportunity to interview the involved Inspector.

3. The parties agree that the above-captioned grievance will be withdrawn and that the disciplinary action taken against the employee in whose behalf the steward had requested an interview will also be withdrawn. Additionally, the employee in question will be granted the $25.00 assessed for the lost parcel. These withdrawals are non-precedential.

Statement of the Award: The grievance is denied.

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests the Postal Service's action in refusing to provide a steward with a supervisor's personal notes of discussions he'd had with a letter carrier. NALC insists that this refusal was a violation of the steward's right of discovery under Article XVII of the National Agreement. It asks that the Postal Service be required to disclose the "discussion records" for the carrier in question and "future grievants, when requested by an authorized Union representative in the investigation of possible grievances."

W. Barker is a letter carrier in the Sarasota, Florida post office. His absences became a source of concern to management in early 1980. His supervisor, E. Rainey, spoke to him on May 13 and July 24, 1980, about his attendance record. Rainey wrote down on a piece of paper, after each of these discussions, the date and subject matter covered. He retained these notes for his own use, probably in his desk or a file cabinet. He did not place these notes in Barker's personnel folder.

Rainey made another check on Barker's attendance several weeks later. He concluded that there had been no improvement. He therefore placed Barker on "restricted sick leave" on August 14, 1980. His letter to Barker stated that whenever he requests sick leave he must "submit a medical certificate for [sick] leave approval" and that his failure to do so "could result in [his] absence being charged to absent without leave." It added that his name would be removed from the "restricted sick leave" list when "a decided improvement in [his] sick leave record" had occurred.

The Employee & Labor Relations Manual (Section 513.371) describes the procedure which supervisors must follow in placing employees on "restricted sick leave". It reads in part:

> ".371 Reasons for Restriction. Supervisors ...who have evidence indicating that an employee is abusing sick leave privileges may place an employee on the restricted sick leave list. In addition, employees may be placed on the restricted sick leave list after their sick leave use has been reviewed on an individual basis and the following actions have been taken:

a. Establishment of an absence file as outlined in Handbook F-21...

b. Review of the absence file by the immediate supervisor and by higher levels of management.

c. Review of the quarterly listings, furnished by the PDC, of LWOP and sick leave used by employees...

d. Supervisor's discussion of absence record with the employee.

e. Review of the subsequent quarterly listing. If listing indicates no improvement, the supervisor is to discuss the matter with the employee to include advice that if next listing shows no improvement, employee will be placed on restricted sick leave." (Emphasis added)

Barker objected to being placed on "restricted sick leave." He apparently felt his absenteeism did not justify this action. He went to his steward, W. Vickers, with his complaint. Vickers made an investigation. He spoke with Supervisor Rainey who told him he'd had discussions with Barker on May 13 and July 24, 1980. He asked Rainey for his notes of these discussions. Rainey refused to provide them.

Rainey's refusal prompted the instant grievance which was filed by Steward Vickers on August 26, 1980. Vickers alleged that Rainey's refusal to allow him to examine the discussion notes was a violation of Article XVII, Section 3 (Representation - Rights of Stewards). That provision states:

"...The steward, chief steward or other Union representative properly certified in accordance with Section 2 above may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists and shall have the right to interview the aggrieved employee(s), supervisors and witnesses during working hours. Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied." (Emphasis added)

The other relevant provision of the National Agreement is Article XVI (Discipline Procedure):

> "...For minor offenses by an employee, management has a responsibility to discuss such matters with the employee. Discussions of this type shall be held in private between the employee and the supervisor. Such discussions are not considered discipline and are not grievable. Following such discussions, there is no prohibition against the supervisor and/or the employee making a personal notation of the date and subject matter for their own personal record(s). However, no notation or other information pertaining to such discussion shall be included in the employee's personnel folder. While such discussions may not be cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee, they may be, where relevant and timely, relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities." (Emphasis added)

It should be noted too that Barker filed a grievance on August 27, 1980. He alleged that he had been improperly placed on "restricted sick leave." His complaint was resolved in Step 2 of the grievance procedure with the understanding that he would "be removed from Restricted Sick ... list on October 15, 1980 provided he does not use any further sick leave by that date."

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

A steward has the right of discovery under Article XVII, Section 3. That right is expressed as follows: "The steward ...may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists..."

Steward Vickers made a "request" of Supervisor Rainey for certain papers. He asked Rainey for his personal notes of discussions he'd had with employee Barker about the latter's absences. Rainey refused. The Postal Sevice supported Rainey's refusal, arguing that he had no obligation to divulge his notes under the circumstances of this case. It insists Article XVII, Section 3 is not applicable here. NALC disagrees.

This dispute turns on two questions of contract interpretation. The first is whether a supervisor's "personal notations" of an Article XVI discussion with an employee constitute "documents, files and other records" within the meaning of Article XVII, Section 3. NALC says they do; the Postal Service says they do not. I shall assume, without deciding the point, that NALC's view is correct. Hence, because Rainey's "personal notations" were "...other records", they could be subject to the steward's discovery.

The second and crucial question is more difficult to describe. It involves the problem of whether the right of discovery under Article XVII, Section 3 is conditional or absolute. The Postal Service contends that the steward must show that the records he seeks are "necessary" to his investigation before he can insist upon his right of discovery. It believes that absent such a showing, Management may properly refuse to disclose the records sought. NALC, however, maintains that "once the process of discovery is triggered by the steward's determination that the materials are 'necessary' to his investigation and [by his] request [for] such materials, Management must make them available to the Union." It states that the decision as to what is "necessary" for the steward's investigation is a matter reserved by Article XVII to the discretion of the Union. It alleges that the steward, having thus invoked his right of discovery, has an absolute right to the records he wishes.

I

The answer to this disagreement is found in the second paragraph of Article XVII, Section 3. The first sentence in this paragraph establishes the right of discovery. A steward "may request...documents, files and other records necessary..." to a grievance investigation; he "shall", upon such request, "obtain access" to these materials. Notwithstanding this broad language, the right of discovery is not unlimited. The second sentence in the paragraph makes that perfectly clear. It reads: "Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied." The parties thus contemplated that not all steward requests would be granted. Some would be denied. And those denials would be justified so long as they were not "unreasonabl[e]." This second sentence undermines NALC's argument because it plainly implies that steward requests may be denied where there is a reasonable basis for the denial.

The parties made no attempt in the National Agreement to define what would be a reasonable basis for a denial. But they did suggest what they had in mind by the manner in which they described the right of discovery. The steward is given access to "...other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists."* His right is limited to what is "necessary." Hence, if he asks for materials which are unnecessary, Management would be within its rights in refusing to disclose such materials. Management would have a reasonable basis for its denial.

Necessity, of course, is not the only criterion. Any or all of the circumstances of this case might relate to the reasonableness of Management's action in denying the steward access to records.

For these reasons, my conclusion is that the right of discovery is not absolute. Management may deny a steward's request where its denial is not "unreasonabl[e]." Given this interpretation of Article XVII, Section 3, we are left only with a question of fact. Did the Postal Service have a reasonable basis for denying Steward Vickers' request for Supervisor Rainey's discussion notes? Or, to put the matter in terms of the contract language, was the Postal Service's denial of the steward's request "unreasonabl[e]" on the facts presented? In resolving this question, I have made no judgment about the burden of proof. I have not assumed that NALC must show the denial was "unreasonabl[e]" or that the Postal Service must show its denial was reasonable.

I I

Before dealing with this question of fact, some brief observations about a supervisor's discussion notes are in order.

This subject is covered by Article XVI. Management is expected to discuss an employee's "minor offenses" with him. Those discussions involve the employee and the supervisor, no one else. They are not considered discipline. However, the supervisor (the employee as well) is free to make "a personal notation of the date and subject matter" of the discussion for his "personal record." No such "personal notation" is to be placed in the employee's personnel folder. Nor is it to be "cited as an element of a prior adverse record in any subsequent disciplinary action against an employee."

* NALC reads this provision as if the word "necessary" were not present.

 This finding is not affected by the Article XVI bargaining history.

The "personal notation" nevertheless has some uses. According to Article XVI, it may be "relied upon to establish that employees have been made aware of their obligations and responsibilities." Suppose, for instance, that a supervisor and an employee discuss the latter's absenteeism and the supervisor prepares a "personal notation" of the discussion. Suppose too that the employee is later disciplined for absenteeism but denies ever being spoken to about his attendance record. Under these circumstances, the Postal Service could use the "personal notation" to prove that the employee had been made aware of his "obligations and responsibilities." Or, on a purely informal basis, the supervisor could always refer to a "personal notation" as a means of refreshing his recollection of the "subject matter" of a past discussion with an employee. It should be apparent, however, that the "personal notation" has a very limited usefulness.

I I I

With this background on "personal notations", I turn to the question of whether the Postal Service's denial of Steward Vickers' request for Supervisor Rainey's notes of discussions with Barker was "unreasonabl[e]".

The Employee & Labor Relations Manual describes two different procedures through which an employee can be placed on "restricted sick leave." Supervisor Rainey followed the lengthier procedure which demanded, among other things, discussing Barker's absence record with him, reviewing his record in the next quarterly listing, discussing his record with him again if there had been no improvement, and advising him at such time that he would be put on "restricted sick leave" if he showed no improvement on the next listing.

Rainey placed Barker on "restricted sick leave" on August 14, 1980. Barker grieved. His grievance was evidently written by the Chief Steward who made two arguments in Barker's behalf: (1) that "the Union does not know if the sup[ervisor] has discussed this with the grievant at least twice" and (2) that "the grievant's sick leave [record] has improved greatly since the end of May to Aug. 12, 1980."

Several points should be stressed. First, contrary to the statement in Barker's grievance, Steward Vickers knew that Rainey had two discussions with Barker about his absence record. Vickers had been told that by Rainey and apparently by Barker himself. There was never really a dispute on this matter. Hence, Vickers did not need Rainey's

"personal notations" to determine whether there had been the required number of discussions. Second, nothing in the evidence indicates that Vickers was denied Barker's absentee data. Barker's grievance specifically refers to the number of absences between December 1979 and August 1980 on a month-by-month basis. Clearly, the absentee data needed to determine whether there had been any improvement was available to Vickers at all times. Had Management refused to provide such data, Vickers could have obtained it through his right of discovery. Those absentee figures were the kind of Postal Service "...files and other records" contemplated by Article XVII, Section 3.

Third, neither Vickers nor NALC claimed that Rainey had failed to give Barker the required "advice" as to the consequences of his failure to improve. This was never an issue in this case. Presumably, Barker told Vickers he had been given such "advice." Vickers therefore did not need Rainey's "personal notations" to determine whether this phase of the "restricted sick leave" procedure had been followed. Fourth, nowhere is there any suggestion that Vickers and Barker had different accounts of their discussions. There was no credibility question. Vickers did not need Rainey's "personal notations" to resolve any doubts as to whom he should believe. Finally, Vickers had full access to Barker who had just as much knowledge of these discussions as Rainey.

Under these circumstances, my ruling must be that the Postal Service's denial of Steward Vickers' request was not "unreasonabl[e]" and that there has been no violation of Article XVII, Section 3. This finding has been influenced, to a large extent, by the fact that Vickers sought "personal notations" which were clearly not "necessary" to his "processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists."

IV

One other NALC claim requires a brief answer. It asserts that Steward Vickers asked another supervisor for his "personal notations" of his Article XVI discussions with employee Hanewinckel in late August 1980 and that he was given the supervisor's discussion notes. It compares this response with Supervisor Rainey's response and complains that "selective disclosure is inherently unfair and discriminatory."

One of the difficulties with this argument is that there is no real evidence with respect to the Hanewinckel situation.

Perhaps the number of discussions between the supervisor and Hanewinckel was in dispute; perhaps there was a credibility issue; perhaps Vickers' request was "necessary" to his investigation of that complaint. In short, the Hanewinckel case may be distinguishable from the present Barker case. But even if it were not, the mere fact that one supervisor grants a steward's request for discovery while another does not is hardly a sufficient basis for ruling that Management is guilty of "discriminatory" actions forbidden by the National Agreement.

The grievance is denied.

Privacy Act Systems of Records

Section A. Explanation

This appendix includes Section A. - relating to systems of records under the Privacy Act.

Section B. contains an overview of the Privacy Act and its protections.

Section C. is a complete index of Postal Service systems of records.

Section D. describes disclosures authorized by statute and the standard routine uses that apply to all systems of records.

Section E. contains the complete text of Postal Service systems of records.

Section B. Privacy Act Protections

The Privacy Act of 1974, 5 U.S.C. 552a, applies to Federal agencies, including the Postal Service. The Privacy Act provides protections for personal information that an agency maintains in a system of records. A system of records describes a file, database, or program from which information is retrieved about an individual by name or other personal identifier.

The Privacy Act establishes recordkeeping, access, and nondisclosure requirements for information maintained in a system of records. The Privacy Act requires agencies to publish a description of each system of records to provide full information on how personal information within the system of records is treated. This description includes how information is collected, used, disclosed, stored, and disposed of. It also includes how individuals can obtain access to, correct, and amend information about them that is included in the system of records.

The Privacy Act places limitations and requirements on how information from within a system of records can be disclosed, as described in Section D.

Section D. Authorized Disclosures and Routine Uses

Under the Privacy Act, information can only be disclosed from a system of records, internally or externally, under one of two conditions:

1. The individual has authorized the disclosure in writing.
2. The disclosure fits within one of twelve specified categories.

The following is a description of disclosures, including those authorized by the Privacy Act and USPS regulations and routine uses.

D.1. Disclosures Authorized by the Privacy Act

The Privacy Act authorizes disclosures in the following twelve circumstances:

1. To agency employees who need the information to perform their job.
2. As required by the Freedom of Information Act.
3. For routine uses for which the agency has provided proper notice.
4. To the Bureau of the Census for purposes related to census and survey activities.
5. To a recipient who provides advance written assurance that the information will only be used for statistical research or reporting, and the information provided does not identify individuals.
6. To the National Archives and Records Administration for historic preservation purposes.
7. To other domestic government agencies for a civil or criminal law enforcement activity if the activity is authorized by law. In such cases, the agency head must specify in writing both the law enforcement activity and the particular information needed.
8. To a person upon a showing of compelling circumstances affecting an individual's health or safety. The agency must send notice of the disclosure to the individual's last known address.
9. To Congress, or to the extent the matter is within their jurisdiction, to any of its committees or subcommittees.
10. To the Comptroller General in the performance of duties of the Government Accountability Office.
11. Pursuant to the order of a court of competent jurisdiction.
12. To a consumer reporting agency in order to collect claims owed to the Government.

The Privacy Act allows agencies to disclose information from a system of records if they establish a routine use describing the disclosure (see #3. above). Under the Privacy Act, routine uses are defined as disclosures that are compatible with the purpose for which the information was collected — in other words, disclosures that are appropriate and necessary for the efficient conduct of government business. Routine uses for each system of records are established by publishing them in a Federal Register notice that describes the system. They must also be disclosed in a notice given to an individual when information is collected directly from the individual. The Privacy Act also allows disclosures required by the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) (see #2 above). USPS regulations implementing the Privacy Act and FOIA are contained in 39 CFR Parts 261-268.

D.2. Standard Routine Uses

The following standard routine uses apply to USPS systems of records. In general, standard routine uses 1. through 9. apply to general systems — systems relating to employees, finance, investigations, litigation, and other systems not primarily related to USPS customers. General systems are listed in Section C, Part I. In general, standard routine uses 1. through 7., 10., and 11. apply to customer systems. These systems, which contain information related to USPS customers, are listed in Section C, Part II. The specific standard routine uses applicable to each system of records, as well as any special routine uses, are described in each system of records in E.

1. Disclosure Incident to Legal Proceedings. When the Postal Service is a party to or has an interest in litigation or other legal proceedings before a federal, state, local, or foreign adjudicative or administrative body or before an arbitrator, arguably relevant records may be disclosed before that body, and/or to the Department of Justice or other legal counsel representing the Postal Service or its employees, and to actual or potential parties or their representatives in connection with settlement discussions or discovery. Arguably relevant records may also be disclosed to former Postal Service employees or suppliers when reasonably necessary to elicit information related to actual or potential litigation. Arguably relevant records may be disclosed to a bar association or similar federal, state, or local licensing or regulatory authority that relate to possible disciplinary action.
2. Disclosure for Law Enforcement Purposes. For information derived from general systems, when the Postal Service becomes aware of a violation or potential violation of law, whether civil, criminal, or regulatory in nature, or in response to the appropriate agency's request on a reasonable belief that a violation has occurred, records may be referred to the appropriate agency, whether federal, state, local, or foreign, charged with enforcing or implementing the statute, rule, regulation, or relevant order. For records derived from customer systems, records may be disclosed to appropriate law enforcement agencies to investigate, prevent, or take action regarding suspected illegal activities against the Postal Service; and such customer records may only otherwise be disclosed to law enforcement agencies as required by law.
3. Disclosure to Congressional Office. Records about an individual may be disclosed to a congressional office in response to an inquiry from the congressional office made at the prompting of that individual.
4. Disclosure to Agents or Contractors. Records may be disclosed to entities or individuals under contract or agreement with the Postal Service when necessary to fulfill a Postal Service function, to provide Postal Service products or services to customers, or to provide the contractor with investigative or performance records about the contractor's employees.
5. Disclosure to Auditors. Records may be disclosed to government agencies and other entities authorized to perform audits, including financial and other audits, of the Postal Service and Postal Service activities.

6. Disclosure to Labor Organizations. As required by applicable law, records may be furnished to a labor organization when needed by that organization to perform its duties as the collective bargaining representative of Postal Service employees in an appropriate bargaining unit.
7. Disclosure to Government Agencies. Records may be disclosed to a federal, state, local, or foreign government agency when necessary in connection with decisions by the requesting agency or by the Postal Service regarding personnel matters, issuance of security clearances, letting of contracts, or decisions to issue licenses, grants, or other benefits. With respect to employee records, such matters include provision of parent locator services; enforcement of child support, tax, and debt obligations; and claims, investigations, and inspections related to occupational safety, injuries, illnesses, and accidents.
8. Disclosure to Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Records may be disclosed to an authorized investigator, administrative judge, or complaints examiner appointed by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission when requested in connection with the investigation of a formal complaint of discrimination filed against the Postal Service under 29 CFR Part 1614.
9. Disclosure to Merit Systems Protection Board or Office of the Special Counsel. Records may be disclosed to the Merit Systems Protection Board or Office of the Special Counsel for the purpose of litigation, including administrative proceedings, appeals, special studies, investigations of alleged or possible prohibited personnel practices, and such other functions as may be authorized by law.
10. Disclosure to Agencies and Entities for Financial Matters. Records may be disclosed to credit bureaus, government agencies, and service providers that perform identity verification and credit risk assessment services; to financial institutions or payees to facilitate or resolve issues with payment services; or to government or collection agencies for the purposes of debt collection or responding to challenges to such collection.
11. Disclosure for Customer Service Purposes. Records may be disclosed to entities if the disclosure is part of the service to the customer. This includes disclosures to addressees of mail to process inquiries and claims; entities to which the customer wants to provide identity verification; the State Department for passport processing; international posts or agents to facilitate or process international services, claims, or inquiries; and mailers of sexually oriented advertisements to provide a list of customers who do not want to receive them.

D.3. Exempted Systems of Records

Certain categories of records contained in the systems of records below are exempt from the following Privacy Act provisions: to release records; to maintain only relevant and necessary information; to establish notification, access, and contest procedures or publish them in a Federal Register notice; and to release an accounting of disclosures.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On February 28, 1984, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in this grievance is whether management violated Article 17 of the National Agreement by involuntarily transferring the grievant, a steward, upon his conversion to full-time regular status.

During our discussion, it was mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case:

> Under Article 17, Section 3, of the National Agreement, a certified steward "may not be involuntarily transferred to . . . another branch . . . unless . . ." As the grievant was a full-time regular employee upon his conversion, he should not have been transferred unless there was no job for which the employee was qualified on the grievant's tour, or in such station or branch, or post office. Accordingly, if the grievant is qualified for an assignment on GPO OM-Tour 2, he shall be returned to this tour. Management may, however, take whatever action is appropriate and necessary, e.g. excessing of the junior full-time employee, in order to provide the grievant with an assignment on GPO OM-Tour 2.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.,

The time limits were extended by mutual consent.

BACKGROUND

This case involves the Postal Service's refusal to pay a grievant for time spent traveling to and from the Step 2 meeting on his grievance. NALC insists this refusal was a violation of Article XVII, Section 4 of the 1978 National Agreement. It asks that the Postal Service compensate this grievant "for on-the-clock travel time to and from [this] Step 2 meeting..."

The essential facts are not in dispute. J. Roventini, a letter carrier, was employed in mid-1979 at the Ryder Station in Brooklyn, New York. He was disciplined. He filed a grievance protesting the disciplinary action. The Step 2 meeting on his grievance was held, pursuant to Postal Service practice in Brooklyn, at the Main Post Office. NALC wanted the grievant to be present. Because the Ryder Station is a substantial distance from the Main Post Office, Roventini spent two hours traveling to and from the Main Post Office to attend his Step 2 meeting. Those hours fell during his regular work day.

The Postal Service paid Roventini only for the time he actually spent at the Step 2 meeting. It refused to pay him for his two hours' travel time. That refusal prompted the instant grievance.

Article XVII, Section 4 is the relevant contract provision. It reads:

> "The Employer will authorize payment only upon the following conditions:
>
> - Steps 1 and 2 - The aggrieved and one Union steward (only as permitted under the formula in Section 2A) for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer. The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance. In addition, the Employer will compensate any witness for time required to attend a Step 2 meeting.
>
> - Meetings called by the Employer for information exchange and other conditions designated by the Employer concerning contract application.

"Employer authorized payment as outlined above will be granted at the applicable straight time rate, providing the time spent is a part of the employee's or steward's (only as provided for under the formula in Section 2A) regular work day." (Emphasis added)

The parties have entirely different interpretations of this language. The Postal Service insists "time actually spent in grievance handling..." simply does not include travel time. It believes this view is supported by bargaining history, by past practice, and by the terms of the witness compensation clause added to Article XVII, Section 4 in the 1978 negotiations.

NALC disagrees. It emphasizes that Brooklyn Management scheduled a Step 2 meeting at the Main Post Office for its own convenience and thereby required Roventini to spend two hours traveling to and from the grievance meeting. It claims his travel time "was thus devoted solely to the handling of his grievance." It urges his "sole purpose", whether traveling in connection with the Step 2 meeting or discussing his complaint with Management at this meeting, was to resolve his grievance. It contends therefore that all of this time must logically be characterized as "time actually spent in grievance handling." It says its broad view of this contract clause is justified not only by the plain meaning of its words but also by "common sense" and "equity."

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

A grievant can receive payment under Article XVII, Section 4 "only" if he satisfies certain express "conditions." He is paid for Steps 1 and 2 of his grievance "for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer", providing the "time spent" is part of his "regular work day."

The issue, simply stated, is whether the grievant's travel time to and from a Step 2 meeting constitutes "time actually spent in grievance handling..."

The key words in this contract clause, it seems to me, are "grievance handling." They encompass a broad range of grievance activity. They include "investigation", "meetings with the Employer", and other similar kinds of grievance action. But all of these activities, to be covered by Article XVII, Section 4, must have one essential characteristic. They must involve the "actual...handling..." of a grievance.

A grievant may occasionally have to travel to a Main Post Office to participate in his Step 2 meeting. That is what happened to Roventini. But such traveling cannot reasonably be said to involve the "actual...handling..." of a grievance. While the grievant is on a bus or train en route to the meeting, he is not engaged in the "actual... handling..." of his grievance. He is traveling, nothing more. His "grievance handling" begins only when he arrives at the meeting. It follows that he has not satisfied the express "conditions" of Article XVII, Section 4 and is not entitled to payment for his travel time.

This conclusion is consistent with the parties' negotiating history. Article XVII, Section 4 has had a provision for payment for "time actually spent in grievance handling..." since 1971. NALC (actually the Postal Labor Negotiating Committee) proposed adding the following language to the "grievance handling..." clause in the 1975 negotiations: "...including travel and transportation, investigation, preparation, and writing grievances" (Emphasis added). The Postal Service rejected this proposal. NALC proposed adding the following language to the "grievance handling..." clause in the 1978 negotiations: "The Employer shall also compensate Union representatives for time spent in and travelling to and from meetings called by the Employer..." (Emphasis added). Again the Postal Service rejected this proposal. Given this history, it would appear NALC recognized in 1975 and 1978 that "time actually spent in grievance handling..." did not include travel time.

Moreover, when the parties added a witness payment clause to Article XVII, Section 4 in the 1978 negotiations, they expressed the Postal Service's obligation in a much different way. They stated, "...the Employer will compensate any witnesses for the time required to attend a Step 2 meeting." Clearly, the "time required to attend..." includes travel time. The grievant payment clause, "time actually spent in grievance handling", says nothing whatever about "time required to attend..." meetings. It can hardly be interpreted to mean the same thing as the witness payment clause.

For these reasons, I find that the Postal Service was not obliged to pay Roventini for his travel time. There has been no violation of Article XVII, Section 4.

Dear Mr. Riley:

On November 28, 1978, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

Based on the facts presented and contained in the case file, we find no contractual violation. The National Agreement does not provide for the payment of a union steward who accompanies an employee to a medical facility for a fitness-for-duty examination. In the absence of a contractual violation, this grievance is denied.

Statement of the Award: Steward Romine should be paid for time spent in writing appeals to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's failure to pay him for such time was a violation of Article XVII, Section 4. He should be compensated for these hours.

BACKGROUND

These grievances protest the Postal Service's refusal to pay a Steward for time spent writing appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Union insists the Steward is entitled to be paid for such "grievance handling" pursuant to Article XVII, Section 4 of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

T. Romine is a Distribution Clerk in the Parkersburg, West Virginia post office. He is a Steward as well. Sometime in 1979, supervision gave him a number of adverse Step 2 decisions on grievances he had processed. He chose to appeal those grievances to Step 3. He asked his supervisor to be relieved during his tour because "I have to appeal a couple of adverse Step 2 decisions." The supervisor refused to let him do this paper work "on the clock", i.e., on Postal Service time.

Romine wrote the appeals to Step 3 on his own time. He then grieved, urging that he had a right to appeal grievances from Step 2 to Step 3 during regular working hours and that he should be paid for this appeal work. His claim is based on Article XVII, Section 4 which reads in part:

> "The Employer will authorize payment only under the following conditions:
>
> "Steps 1 and 2 - The aggrieved and one Union steward...for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer. The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance. In addition, the Employer will compensate any witnesses for time required to attend a Step 2 meeting.
>
> "Meetings called by the Employer for information exchange and other conditions designated by the Employer concerning contract application..." (Emphasis added)

A brief summary of the parties' main arguments would be useful. The Union insists that the Steward's preparation of appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 constituted a Step 2 "grievance handling" activity and that he hence should have been paid for his appeal work under Article XVII, Section 4. The Postal Service contends that pay is due only for certain specified "grievance handling" activities and that the Steward's appeal work was not an "investigation" or a "meeting with the Employer" or the "writ[ing of] a grievance." It alleges also that his appeal work was not a Step 2 activity but rather was the initial stage of Step 3. It believes the Steward's claim should be rejected on either of these grounds.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The problem in this case arises from the ambiguity in Article XVII, Section 4. That provision, to repeat, calls for payment to Stewards for time spent in "grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer [and] ...writ[ing] a grievance."

The Postal Service treats "including" as a word of strict limitation. Its position is that "grievance handling" covers only those tasks expressly "includ[ed]" in Article XVII, Section 4 and that the Steward's appeal from Step 2 to Step 3 is not one of them. Dictionary definitions provide no answer. For the term "including" can be used in more than one way. It is not necessarily a word of strict limitation. No one would deny that the whole is the sum of its parts. When one speaks of the whole "including" certain enumerated parts, the reference could be to all the parts. But it could just as well be to some of the parts. Thus, when the parties embraced the idea of paying for "grievance handling" which "includ[ed]" certain enumerated tasks, it is not clear whether they meant to cover only those listed tasks (as the Postal Service claims) or whether they meant to cover any task which fell within the rubric of "grievance handling" (as the Union claims).

The answer to this question must be found elsewhere. There are several considerations which favor the Union's position. First, if the Postal Service were correct, the parties need only have stated in Article XVII that Stewards would be paid for time spent in "investigation and meetings with the Employer [and]...writ[ing] a grievance." There would be no need whatever for the words "grievance handling." Those words would be mere surplusage.* However, the parties do not idly write into their Agreement words intended to have no effect. The very presence of the term "grievance handling" suggests that the parties had something more in mind than the three enumerated tasks.

Second, it is impossible to overlook the breadth of the term "grievance handling." It is much larger than any of the enumerated tasks. It encompasses "investigation", "meetings...", "writ[ing] a grievance", and more. Had the parties intended these three tasks to serve as a limit on payments to Stewards, they could easily have said so. They could have stated that payment was for time spent on the following kinds of "grievance handling" and then enumerated the three tasks. But the words they chose suggest that "grievance handling" is not circumscribed by these tasks.

Third, essentially the same issue was arbitrated under the 1971 National Agreement. There, a Steward sought pay for time spent appealing from Step 1 to Step 2A, i.e., for time spent reducing the grievance to writing. The Postal Service apparently took the same position as it does here. It urged that the Agreement called for payment for "grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer" and that writing a grievance was neither "investigation" nor a "meeting." Arbitrator Fisher held for the Union, explaining that the term "grievance handling" was broad enough to encompass writing a grievance. He asserted, "In the absence of any contractual language stating that the actual writing of a grievance does not constitute 'handling', it is held that such activity requires payment by the Employer." Notwithstanding this broad view of "grievance handling", the parties have continued to use the very same language in their National Agreements.

* The Union position, on the other hand, creates no surplusage. For the test then would be "grievance handling" and the three enumerated tasks would be the most prominent examples of what the parties meant by "grievance handling."

 This award is dated January 1973 and is referred to in the Union's arbitration files as Case No. 389.

For these reasons, I find that the word "including" in Article XVII, Section 4 is not a term of limitation. It follows that the payment for "grievance handling" is not limited to the three enumerated tasks. Steward Romine's action in appealing cases from Step 2 to Step 3 was plainly "grievance handling." He is therefore entitled to be paid for that time provided the appeals are truly Step 2 work. That question is discussed below.

In reaching this conclusion, I have fully considered another Postal Service claim. It emphasizes the following sentence which was added to Article XVII, Section 4 in the 1973 National Agreement: "The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance." It argues that express inclusion of this writing as a form of compensable "grievance handling" indicates that other kinds of writing (e.g., the appeal from Step 2 to Step 3) are not covered. This argument is not persuasive. The fact is that this sentence represents nothing more than the parties' adoption of Arbitrator Fisher's award. The parties also continued to use the term "grievance handling." By doing so, they appear to have adopted Arbitrator Fisher's rationale thatthis term was broad enough to include tasks other than those enumerated in Article XVII, Section 4.

One other crucial question must be resolved. Stewards are paid only for Step 1 and Step 2 "grievance handling." The Union maintains that preparation of the appeal from Step 2 to Step 3 is part of Step 2 and is hence covered by Article XVII, Section 4. The Postal Service says this appeal is a Step 3 activity.

Article XV, Section 2 describes the various steps of the grievance procedure. The final stage of Step 2 and the initial stage of Step 3 read as follows:

> Step 2 - "(h) The Union may appeal an adverse Step 2 decision to Step 3. Any such appeal must be made within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Employer's decision unless the parties' representatives agree to extend the time for appeal. Any appeal must include copies of (1) the standard grievance form, (2) the Employer's written Step 2 decision, and, if filed, (3) the Union corrections or additions to the Step 2 decision."

> Step 3 - "(a) Any appeal from an adverse decision in Step 2 shall be in writing to the Regional Director for Employee and Labor Relations, with a copy to the Employer's Step 2 representative, and shall specify the reasons for the appeal."

These provisions offer little assistance. It is more useful to examine the Steward's function and the actual mechanics of moving a grievance from Step 2 to Step 3. The Steward meets with the Postal Service representative; he makes a detailed statement of the facts and contract clauses on which he relies; he introduces evidence if appropriate; he argues his case. This is of course the Step 2 meeting. Later, he receives the Postal Service's decision. If it is adverse, the Union may choose to appeal the grievance to Step 3. In that event, the Steward has other tasks to perform. He corrects the facts and contentions in the Step 2 decision if necessary; he puts together the required documents; and he writes out the reasons for the appeal. It seems to me that this is also a Step 2 activity. For not until the appeal is perfected, not until these papers are filed with the Postal Service Regional Director, does the dispute actually reach Step 3. Anything which precedes that filing is a Step 2 activity. This view is, I think, consistent with the language of the grievance procedure itself.

Thus, Steward Romine's appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 involved Step 2 "grievance handling" and the time he spent on this paper work was compensable under Article XVII, Section 4.

There is one final Postal Service claim which deserves brief mention. It points to a Union proposal in the 1978 contract negotiations which would have extended Article XVII, Section 4 to all steps of the grievance procedure and would have required payment of Stewards for time spent in "grievance handling, including investigation, writing the grievance, and all meetings with the Employer including arbitration hearings." It notes the proposal was rejected. And it alleges that the terms of the proposal demonstrate that the Union itself "did not believe that any activities beyond those specifically listed in Article XVII were reimbursible..." In my opinion, it demonstrates no such thing. The main thrust of the above proposal was to have Stewards paid by the Postal Service whenever they met with Management no matter what step of the grievance procedure was involved. That has nothing to do with the issue before me in this case.

AWARD

Steward Romine should be paid for time spent in writing appeals to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's failure to pay him for such time was a violation of Article XVII, Section 4. He should be compensated for these hours.

Re: See Enclosed List

Dear Mr. Connors:

On January 22, 1986, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these grievances is whether union stewards are entitled to continue working into an overtime status for the sole purpose of processing grievances.

The parties at this level further agree, however, that a steward who is already working in an overtime status, is not precluded from processing grievances solely based on the fact that he/she is in an overtime status. In those situations, management will not unreasonably deny the steward time to perform union duties.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand these cases to the parties at Step B for further processing including arbitration, if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgement of agreement to remand these cases.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On February 24, 1984, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether an employee is entitled to overtime compensation for time spent at a grievance hearing outside of their regular work hours.

After further review of this matter, we agreed that there was no national interpretive issue fairly presented as to the meaning and intent of Article 17 of the National Agreement. This is a local dispute over the application of Article 17, Section 4 of the National Agreement. We agree that Article 17 contains no provisions for compensating employees whose attendance at grievance hearings extends beyond their normally scheduled work hours. The parties at Step 3 are to apply the above understanding in order to resolve this case.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to Step 3 for further consideration by the parties.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgment of our agreement to remand this grievance.

In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in

May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing.    Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

Casuals

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On December 6, 1984, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question raised in this grievance involved whether management officials violated Article 17 by being present when the union addressed new employees during orientaiton.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed to resolve this case based on our understanding that Article 17 does not preclude management officials from being present when the union addresses new employees during orientation.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of your agreement to resolve this case.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Anna:

On March 1, 1988, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether employees are permitted to fill out Standard Form 1187 (Authorization for Deduction of Union Dues) during employee orientation.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case:

> Completion of SF-1187 as identified in ELM 913.414 will be permitted during employee orientation in the areas designated by management.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

In the Matter of the Arbitration
between	OPINION AND DECISION
UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	OF
and	PANEL OF SEVEN ARBITRATORS
AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION

The undersigned panel of arbitrators are in accord with the conclusions contained in this Opinion and Decision. Collectively and individually we declare it to be our purpose to apply the principles and findings herein as provided in the Stipulation of the parties dated February 9, 1979. (The Stipulation, entitled "Agreement" but referred to herein as "Stipulation", is attached as Appendix A.)

I. THE AUTHORITY OF THE PANEL

On July 21, 1978, "alleged strike activities" by a number of employees of the Postal Service at the Bulk Mail Facility in Jersey City, New Jersey and at the North Jersey Facility gave rise to a series of summary terminations of the employee participants in the activities. The terminations were severally grieved by the respective labor organizations representing the affected employees and thereafter a number of these individual grievances reached hearing before one or another of the seven members constituting the panel of arbitrators designated by the parties to hear and determine such grievances arising in the Northeast Region. Some of these grievances have already resulted in consummated hearings before the given arbitrators who heard them; a great many others still await such hearings.

The Postal Service and the American Postal Workers Union ("APWU"), one of the two union protagonists of these individual grievances, mutually agreed (by their Stipulation cited above) to confer upon the members of the panel for the Northeast Region sitting en banc (initially five of their number but since amended to include all seven of its members) "to decide after consultation with each other, legal and factual questions underlying the pending arbitration cases in the Northeast Region which involve alleged strike activities".

The stipulation then goes on to provide:

> "2. The factual record to be placed before the Arbitrators will be agreed upon by the parties and will consist of specified portions of the testimony already adduced in APWU cases, together with agreed upon documents and additional stipulations, if any. If the parties are unable to agree upon the admissibility of any evidence, such disagreement will be resolved by the en banc panel of Arbitrators."

The factual record, as well as the main briefs of the parties, were supplied to the arbitrators on February 28, 1979. Counsel for the Union submitted additional material on March 8, and the Postal Service raised objections to this additional material on March 14. On April 3, the Union asked to submit a supplementary brief and other materials. To consider this request the parties met with the arbitrators on April 13, and by letter to the parties dated April 19, 1979, the arbitrators denied the Union's request to submit a supplemental brief and its further request that the arbitrators hold a hearing on the arguments in such supplemental brief. The arbitrators granted, however, the request of the parties to submit by April 26, 1979, such additional exhibits as were mutually agreeable between the parties. No additional material has been received pursuant to that deadline.

The stipulation then provides:

"5. The panel will issue a decision (or majority decision) on the underlying questions presented.

"6. After the Arbitrators have rendered a majority decision on underlying questions, each Arbitrator will separately apply the majority decision to the specific facts of the APWU cases which that Arbitrator has already heard, based upon the actual record in each specific case, and shall issue an award in each case."

While the stipulation preserves "the right of the Union to have a separate hearing on each grievant's case", that right is made subject to the express condition that the en banc panel decision on the underlying issues "is controlling on all issues decided therein, and that the Arbitrators shall apply the decision to each APWU case coming before them."

The stipulation does not define the "underlying issues" but they are delineated in the briefs of the parties submitted to the panel. By and large they present and argue the salient features of the overall dispute common to each of the grievances; the nature of the activities, in fact and law, upon which the Postal Service predicated the dismissals in question; and the manner and method it implemented these disciplinary actions.

II. THE FACTS

The record establishes that in the days preceding July 21, 1978, there was uncertainty as to whether the negotiators in Washington, D.C., would achieve agreement by the deadline hour of midnight on July 20. Postmaster General Bolger had issued a letter to all Postal Service employees expressing his concern that a strike might be called and calling attention to the penalty consequences of participation in a strike. On July 18, 19 and 20 several bulletins and flyers in considerable quantities were distributed on the premises of the New York Bulk and Foreign Mail Center and made available to employees. They contained statements such as > "If we have not ratified a contract . . . then no work";

> " . . . it looks like a strike midnight July 20";
>
> " . . . midnight July 20--No contract, no work--No extension, no sellouts";
> " . . . form picket line and strike preparation committee."

On July 20 a group calling itself "Good Contract Committee" issued a flyer to "All Tours" announcing a Rally and Informational Picket at the County Road Entrance to the facility for July 20 at 11:00 PM and for July 21 at 6:00 AM. It stated:

> "Our policy is, no contract, no work."

A tentative agreement (subject to ratification) was negotiated in Washington, D.C. at about 3:00 AM on the morning of July 21, 1978. This was widely reported in all of the media of communication: press, radio and television. Nevertheless, approximately 90% of the 3700 bargaining unit employees represented by two unions[1] did not report for work on July 21, 1978.

During the hours when Postal Service employees were scheduled to report for work (and for periods of time before those hours) there were large numbers of employees lining the public roads at the access roads to the facility and the entrances to the roads leading to the parking lots. Many of these employees chanted various strike slogans and shouted at cars on the public roads with a view to discouraging the cars and their passengers from entering the facility.

Others spent variable amounts of time walking in an oval picket line on the entrance way where employees' cars normally leave the public road to enter the premises of the facility. Many of those marching on the picket line carried signs which, in a variety of ways, made it clear that a strike was in progress, that the terms of employment offered by the Postal Service were unacceptable and that a contract was demanded that was not a "sell-out" but which included terms the picketers were demanding. Most of these picketers, as they moved on the line, chanted various conventional strike slogans in unison. As cars approached, indicating a purpose to enter the facility, picketers and others in a variety of ways sought to discourage the drivers from entering the facility and to persuade them to honor the picket line. So far as is evident, no illegal force or violence was resorted to. The area was also peopled by peace officers and Postal Service guards and inspectors. Television news cameramen were covering the event.

Observations by management personnel, as well as video tapes and still photographs made by Postal Inspectors, were used to identify employees in work stoppage activities. Postal Service management then checked work schedules to determine which of those identified were participating in activities during the periods they were scheduled to be at work.

According to the affidavit of Robert F. Condon, Director, Employee and Labor Relations, New York Bulk and Foreign Mail Center, letters of termination for non-preference eligible employees (and letters of proposed termination for preference eligible employees) were sent by the Postal Service to those "(a) positively identified as in the picket line or otherwise appeared to be participating in a work stoppage and (b) scheduled to be working at the NYB and FMC during the time of their participation in work stoppage activities."

The work stoppage ended on or about July 28, 1978. A number of grievances were filed protesting the terminations. Some were settled during the grievance procedure; others were appealed to arbitration and are accordingly before us.

III. CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES

Contentions of the U.S. Postal Service

The Postal Service contends that an unlawful strike occurred at the NYB and FMC and North Jersey facility in July 1978; since Title 5 USC 7311 prohibits strikes by employees of the U.S. Government and Title 18 USC 1918 establishes criminal penalties for such actions; and since Postal employees signed affidavits on hire pledging not to violate 5 USC 7311. It argues that the picketing and demonstrating at or near the time the grievants were scheduled to work is irrefutable evidence of engagement in a concerted stoppage of work and interruption of operations; that such activities were unprotected because engaged in for an illegal purpose; and that the evidence and prior arbitral hearings force the conclusion that a strike did in fact occur.

The Postal Service further contends that it complied with all procedural requirements of the contract; that its invocation of the "crime" provisions of Article XVI, Section 3 obviating the 30-day notice requirement, was appropriate because of the statutes involved, and was valid irrespective of whether criminal charges were or are brought. It also asserts the letters of removal were properly executed; and that the grievants were discharged for engaging in a strike rather than for commission of a crime.

The Postal Service cites a number of arbitration awards as sustaining the propriety of discharge for Postal employees who participate in strikes.

Finally, the Postal Service asserts that the termination penalty was appropriate; that the grievants' prior work records and the corrective discipline language of the contract are irrelevant in a situation where, as here, the applicable statute takes discretion from the arbitrator by barring the strikers from government employment; that its differential treatment as to termination, suspensions and letters of warning is justified by inadequate evidence to substantiate claims that all facility employees engaged in concerted activity; that it exercised its judgement as to proof in a most lenient fashion; and that the grievances should therefore be denied.

Contentions of the APWU

The American Postal Workers Union contends that there is no evidence to support the contention that a strike occurred; that there were spontaneous demonstrations due to lack of information as to the status of negotiations; that there was no mass picketing barring employees or trucks access to the facility, and that the demonstration does not establish the element of concerted action necessary to establish that a strike occurred.

It also contends that the Postal Service applied an impermissible statutory standard, rather than the contractual "just cause" standard in discharging the grievants; that only the statutory standard of an "unlawful work stoppage" in violation of federal law is referred to in the notices of removal; that there was no consideration given to the employees work record or extent of active involvement in the picketing, and that the grievances should be sustained.

It cites Article XVI of the parties' agreement requiring just cause for discipline or discharge, noting that that standard was not invoked following the 1970 or 1974 strikes, or the 1976 sickout at Seattle, and arguing that the arbitrator is not in effect a private criminal court, but has discretion as to the treatment of the grievances including the weight to be attached to the alleged statutory violation.

The Union further asserts that even if the arbitrators examine into the just cause of the discharges, it is clear that it applied vague, shifting and arbitrary guidelines suited to its own convenience; that there was disparate and therefore arbitary treatment of the grievants and that the discharges were punitive, rather than corrective.

It also asserts that the failure to provide all grievants 30 days' notice of proposed termination was improper; that there was no criminal action taken to support such a suspension of notice; and that no action to prosecute for criminal violations. The Union alleges that there was no reasonable cause to believe a crime had been committed, and that even if there is no reinstatement ordered, the grievants are entitled to 30 days' back pay in any event.

In view of the foregoing, the Union urges the greivants be reinstated with full back pay.

IV. DISCUSSION

A. Did a Strike Occur?

On the Postal Service's theory of the case, it had "just cause" to discharge these grievants because they had participated in a "strike" against the Government of the United States. The Union argues that no strike occurred in which the grievants had participated and what took place was a "spontaneous demonstration" under circumstances that furnished no ground for discharge. In our judgement, on the basis of the record as stipulated, including the publications and "flyers" issued prior to July 21, 1978, all of the elements of a "strike" were manifested on and after July 21, 1978, and we so find.

The contention that what took place as no more than a "spontaneous demonstration" occurring when "employees coming to work were unable to get information as to what was happening in contract negotiations" and that "the lack of reliable information from the union or management as to what if any progress had been made in the negotiations was clearly the triggering cause of the demonstration"[1] is wholly unconvincing.

The facility is in an urban area and the facts concerning the status of the negotiations were readily available to anyone who wanted to know them. It was not ignorance in respect of the terms of the negotiated agreement that "triggered" the activity described, but a determination to protest whatever it was that had been negotiated according to a programmed procedure designed to shut down operations. Regardless of the reasons, motivations and the nature and extent of participation of individuals who were "demonstrating" the conclusion that a "strike" occurred on July 21 at the facility is inevitable. Clearly, what was taking place was a general and widespread demonstration protesting whatever it may have been that the International Union and the Postal Service had agreed to or were agreeing to in Washington, a determination to characterize the negotiations as a "sell-out," and to create an impasse that would stop effective operations in the facility until the demands of the demonstrators were met. No one could deny that this was a "demonstration"; but it is equally clear that it was a "strike against an agency of the Government of the United States." The fact that the Union, as such, was not engaged in "demonstrating" or in violating the no-strike provision of the Agreement does not affect the finding that a strike was in progress. Similarly, the circumstance that there was dissatisfaction, by the demonstrators, with the conduct of their Union negotiators and that they did not resort to force or violence does not affect the validity of our finding that a "strike" took place, within the meaning of 5 USC 7311 (3), the Appointment Affidavit signed by all employees at the time of hiring, and the collective bargaining agreement.

We note that in the notices of removal, for reasons unexplained, the Postal Service (in Charge #1 of termination notices) characterized the events not as a "strike" but as a "work stoppage." A "work stoppage," depending on circumstances, may or may not furnish just cause for discharge. However the notices of removal also make pointed reference to violation of 5 USC 7311 (3); and in our opinion this reference is sufficient to make it clear that the terminations were based on the act of participating in a "strike" and not merely in a "work stoppage".

B. The Standards to Be Applied

One of the principal points of contention emerging from the briefs of the parties is the identification and the nature of the standard which governs the right and power of the Postal Service to discharge the grievants.

The "Notice of Charges - Removal - Crime" which had been served on each of the grievants recited that

> "Charge No. 1
> > "You are engaging in an unlawful work stoppage against the United States Postal Service. Specifically, you did not report to your assignment on July 21, 1978."[1]

There follows a statement that the grievant had engaged in activities in support of a work stoppage and had been observed participating in picketing. The Notice then states:

> "The foregoing conduct constitutes a violation of federal law set forth in Title 5 U.S. Code Section 7311(3) and Title 18 U.S. Code Section 1918(3) (Copies Attached)."[2]

5 USC §7311 provides, in part, that

> "an individual may not accept or hold a position in the Government of the United States . . . if he
> > "3) participates in a strike . . . against the Government of the United States . . . "[3]

---

[1]We have taken the circumstances in the Girone Case as typical.

[2]Emphasis supplied.

[3]There is no challenge made to the claim that all of the grievants held positions "in the Government of the United States" prior to their discharge.

18 USC §1918 provides, in part, that

"Whoever violates the provision of section 7311 of Title 5 that individual may not accept or hold a position in the Government of the United States . . . if he

> "3) participates in a strike . . . against the Government of the United States . . .

"shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than one year and a day, or both."

The Union contends in Part II of its Brief, that

a) "an impermissible statutory standard" rather than the contractual 'just cause' standard has been applied by the Service; (Brief page 9)

b) "the discharges were based wholly and exclusively on an alleged violation of statute"; (Brief page 11)

c) "no evaluation was made as to whether a particular employee picketed for a long time or a short time, whether the employee was a leader or a follower, whether he or she was aggressive or passive and similar matters"; (Brief pp. 12, 13)

d) "participation [was not] weighed against any other factors to determine whether 'just cause' under the contract existed"; (Brief page 13)

e) "Factors such as length of service, prior good record, prior commendations and special service, personal and family situation, military service record [and] supervisors' opinions were totally ignored"; (Brief page 13)

f) "All decisions of the arbitrator shall be limited to the terms and conditions of the Agreement . . . " and the standard being applied is found in a statute, not the agreement; (Brief pp. 13, 14; quoting from Article XV, Section 3 of the Agreement)

g) "the commission of a penal crime per se outside of the job is [not] just cause for discharge";[1]

[1]This particular quotation is taken from the arbitrator's opinion in the "Delora Carter Case" annexed to the Union's Brief as Exhibit App. D.

h) in enacting the cited statutes the Congress exhibited an intention that discharge from the Service might be based on "contractual procedures for dispute resolution" (Brief, p. 19);

i) no criminal charges have been brought against the grievants as a result of their alleged misconduct; and, finally (Brief, p. 20)

j) "If the Postal Service does rely on that statute [18 USC 1918] to sustain discharges it, in effect, asks the arbitrators to act as private criminal courts without the protection of the Bill of Rights normally afforded to criminal defendants in the areas of burden of proof, presumption of innocence, right to remain silent, etc. and of the whole panoply of procedures made available to defendants in criminal cases." (Emphasis supplied.)

What has been set forth above in "a)" through "j)" represents our effort, in the words used in the Union's brief to list the most important contentions raised by the Union in "II" of that brief. Discussion of each of these allegations and contentions at length and in detail would render this Decision over-long and delay its issuance. It seems more practicable to deal with them, initially, in a broad and general introductory manner; and then to summarize our views below in remarks which will be keyed to each of those contentions.

1. As we perceive the problems presented, we have no occasion to decide whether the grievants were guilty of a crime. We are not public officials empowered to exercise criminal jurisdiction. Our duty and function is to determine only whether, in having discharged the grievants, the Service had violated the collective agreement; that is to say, whether the Service did, indeed, have "just cause," under the Agreement, for their discharge.

2. In our analysis of the points raised by the Union on pages 9-20 of its brief, we place great importance on the provisions of 5 USC 7311. We find 18 USC 1918 (the "criminal statute") to be wholly supererogatory and to have no significance in these cases excepting as it may have relevance to the period of notice to which individual employees are entitled before removal.[1] To be sure, the notices of removal in these cases charged that the conduct described therein "constitutes a violation of federal law"--and in that connection, both statutes are cited and quoted in the Notices of Removal by the Postal Service. However, for the purposes of this portion of the decision we view the reference to the "criminal" statute (18 USC 1918) in the notices of removal as mere surplusage; and we consider 5 USC 7311 as being of critical importance in ascertaining whether under the contract, the conduct described constitutes "just cause" under the contract for discharge.

Conventionally, in the private industrial sector, arbitrators do not refer to a public statute to determine whether an employer had "just cause", under a collective agreement, to impose the discharge penalty. Even proof of conviction under a penal law may not constitute "just cause" for discharge in the absence of proof that the employee had breached his employment duties and responsibilities in other critical and significant respects. Here, however, we are faced with a unique situation which compels a radical departure from that arbitral practice and usage.

When carefully examined and considered, 5 USC 7311 will be seen to be an enactment which creates legal duties and prohibitions which are as binding on the parties to the Agreement and on employees of the Postal Service as they would be, had its provisions been expressed in the very terms of the Agreement. It establishes a rule of law applicable, not only to employees (who are forbidden from holding a "position" if they participate in a strike against the Government) but, also, to agencies of the Government (which may not have in their employ such persons who participate in a strike against the Government). This makes the situation we face here special and distinctive. It distinguishes it from the arbitration, generally, of discharge cases in the private sector. When the parties signed their Agreement and when employees accepted Postal Service employment, they did so in reference to a state of law created by 5 USC 7311.

The effect of the enactment of 5 USC 7311 is two-fold: a) to make it a job duty and a condition of continued employment that an employee refrain from participating in such a strike; and b) to make it a "violation of federal law" for the Postal Service to continue in a position of employment therein one who so participates in a strike.

When this is understood, it will be seen to follow that an employee who is found to have participated in such a strike has violated not only the federal law (with possible criminal consequences should 18 USC 1918 be invoked for prosecuting him) but he has violated also his job duties and responsibilites and the conditions of his continued employment in such a material respect as to require the Postal Service to discharge him. Congress having identified strike participation as activity precluding continuance in federal employment, the Postal Service is obliged by law to regard such participation (when found to have been engaged in) as "just cause" for discharge under the collective agreement.

The job duty of employees not to participate in a strike finds its provenance, not only in 5 USC 7311 but in the collective bargaining agreement itself and in the grievant's employment affidavit. Article XVIII Section 1 provides that "The Union in behalf of their members agree they will not call or sanction a strike or slowdown." [Emphasis supplied.] What the Union cannot do in behalf of their members, its members, surely, cannot do on their own initiative.

Moreover, each of the discharged grievants, on the occasion of his hiring, signed an "Appointment Affidavit" in which he swore that "I am not participating in any strike against the Government of the United States of any agency thereof, and I will not so participate while an employee of the United States Government or any agency thereof" [Underscoring supplied].

Thus, the circumstances furnishing "just cause" for discharge of these grievants are referable to and grounded upon, not only the statute 5 USC 7311, but, also, to the collective agreement itself and to the sworn affidavits of the grievants which state that they will not participate in a strike against the Postal Service. Participation in a strike against the Postal Service, as an agency of the Federal Government, by a Postal Service employee, constitutes such a crucial and critical offense against his employment duties and conditions that, standing alone, it furnishes just cause for discharge under the Agreement.

The Congress, surely, has power to legislate that persons found to have committed particular identified acts of misconduct (regardless of whether they are "crimes") shall not be permitted to continue in federal employment. The legality of the power to do so, with respect to employees who participate in a strike against the Postal Service has not been challenged.

Our general discussion of the appropriate standard to be applied in these cases should dispose of the contentions set forth by the Union in "II" of its brief and which we have separately listed above. However, to avoid misunderstanding and at the risk of repetition we shall address ourselves to each of those contentions in the following summary statements which correspond with the lettering identification thereof set forth above.

a) An "impermissible statutory standard" has not been substituted for the contractual standard of "just cause". We do not ground our decision on any of the provisions of the "criminal" statute (18 USC 1918). The governing statutory enactment, 5 USC 7311, establishes it as a job duty of employees and a condition of their continued employment that they refrain from participating in a strike against the Postal Service; and it prohibits the Postal Service from continuing the employment of those who engage in that activity. When employees so participate, they furnish just cause (under the provisions of the Agreement) to the Postal Service to discharge them. Similarly, such just cause may exist when there has been a violation of the cited no-strike provision of the collective agreement and the terms of the Appointment Affidavit signed by each of the grievants.

b) It is not correct to claim that "the discharges were based wholly and exclusively on an alleged violation of statute" (Emphasis added). The discharges were based, exclusively, on violations of a job duty and a condition of employment (non-participation in a strke) imposed by statutory enactment which the employer is under a legal duty to observe and enforce; and on the provisions of the collective agreement and the "Appointment Affidavit" signed by each of the grievants. The bypassing of the normal grievance procedures did not deprive any employee of his/her contractual or statutory right and was justified by the unique nature of the Corporation.

c), d) and e). The Union is correct in stating that the personnel service records of the grievants and other factors normally and conventionally taken into consideration in determining whether "just cause" for discharge exists, were not "evaluated" and "weighed" or were "ignored". However, there is nothing to prevent the parties from agreeing (or statutory law from prescribing) that a particular offense is of such magnitude, critical importance or significance, that, having been committed, regardless of other factors and considerations, the continued employment of the offender is proscribed.[1] This is the effect of 5 USC 7311, the no-strike provision of the Agreement[2] and the employees' "Appointment Affidavit". Considering the mission and function of the Postal Service as an agency of the Government of the United States and the national importance of its efficient operations in the public interest, surely it is within the powers of the Government to have singled out participation in a strike (by itself) as furnishing just cause for discharge without regard to mitigating factors such as are conventionally taken into consideration in determining the penalties for job misconduct or failure.

The contractual standard of just cause does not bar termination on first offense without regard to mitigating factors, even without regard to statutory mandate; for example, theft,

[1]We find no merit in the argument that there was a fatal defect in that the principles of "progressive discipline" were not observed in discharging striking employees. We support progressive discipline in industrial relations; but manifestly it has no more relevance to participation in a strike in the special circumstances described in this Decision than it would have in a case of proved sabotage, larceny of the mails or similar serious offenses the mere commission of which give "just cause for discharge."

[2]Article XVIII, Section 1.

physical attack on a supervisor. Leadership in an impermissable work stoppage falls within the same category.

f) The decision that just cause to discharge exists does not transgress, as argued by the Union, the contractual direction that "All decisions of the arbitrator shall be limited to the terms and conditions of the Agreement." The statutory prohibition against participating in a strike is an integral part of and is merged into the "terms and conditions of the Agreement." Moreover, the Agreement itself and the "Appointment Affidavit" demonstrate that participating in a strike is forbidden activity for a Postal Service employee.

The fact that the Postal Service failed to exercise its authority under law and the collective bargaining agreement to terminate employees during prior work stoppages does not deprive it of the right to do so in this instance. The statutory provisions of 5 USC 7311 (3) remain extant and the employees in this instance had been given specific warning of the consequence of striking through the letter from Postmaster General Bolger just prior to July 21.

g) The discharges were not grounded on "the commission of a penal crime per se outside of the job." The offenses charged, clearly, were violations of employment-related duties. The picketing took place, not at some distant point in a context having nothing to do with employment by the Postal Service, but on or near the premises of the employer during periods when scheduled work was to be performed.

h) This point requires no comment inasmuch as the arbitrators believe that the contractual criterion of "just cause" governs the disposition of these cases.

i) Obviously, none of the grievants have been convicted of the "crime" of violating 18 USC 1918. They have been discharged, however, for just cause, in having engaged in impermissible conduct. Conviction of commission of a crime is not a precondition for exercising the power of discharge when just cause exists.

j) The arbitrators are not acting as though they were "private criminal courts". They are not exercising criminal jurisdiction. They are deciding only whether the grievants have committed such a violation of their employment conditions as furnishes the Postal Service with reason to conclude that it had just cause under the Agreement for their discharge from employment. No penalties, such as are imposed by courts with criminal jurisdiction, are involved in the action grieved or in the decision of the arbitrators.

Finally, our attention has been drawn but without particularity, to alleged denial of protections furnished by the Bill of Rights to these grievants. The allegation is made, but not supported by argument in any manner that would enable us to discuss it profitably. These proceedings are not criminal and the Union has not indicated the particular respects in which the grievants have been denied Constitutional rights.

C. Contractual Just Cause Standard and Difference of Treatment

Disparity. It is well established that participation in a wildcat strike creates a contractual just cause for discipline up to and including termination. Employers frequently impose varying penalties for participation depending on the extent of involvement and degree of leadership. This brings us to a discussion of the guidelines applied.

The Postal Service was mandated by law (5 USC 7311) not to continue in its employ employees who had participated in a strike. Depending on the scope which might be accorded to "participation" several courses of action were open to it. It might have taken the broadest possible view that all who were identified as picketers or any others making common cause with them were participating to an extent warranting their dismissal for just cause. It might have embraced a number of narrower views.

The evidence presented to us establishes that the standard which the Postal Service did adopt is that set forth in the October 25, 1978 affidavit of Robert F. Condon, Director, Employee and Labor Relations, New York Bulk and Foreign Mail Center in Civil Action No. 78-1693. U.S. Postal Service v. Richard P. DiCorcia, et al., reading in part as follows:

> 9. Letters of termination were to be sent only to those non-preference eligible employees who were both (a) positively identified as in the picket line or otherwise appeared to be participating in a work stoppage and (b) scheduled to be working at the NYB and FMC during the time of their participation in work stoppage activities . . .

10. Letters of proposed termination were sent only to those preference eligible employees who were both (a) positively identified as in the picket line, or otherwise appeared to be participating in a work stoppage and (b) scheduled to be working at the NYB&FMC during the time of their participation in work stoppage activities . . .

11. Letters of termination or proposed termination were not to be sent to employees who simply did not come to work or who participated in work stoppage activities when they were not scheduled to be at work at the NYB&FMC.

Such a self-imposed restriction by the Postal Service of its authority to discharge for just cause appears to us to be rational and reasonable under the circumstances it confronted.

Adoption by the Postal Service of this restricted and confining standard in the identification of those "participants" who were to be discharged (rather than a broader standard that would have resulted in a vastly larger number of discharges than the 125 which are being arbitrated), was justified by a number of considerations. The Postal Service was faced by the need to avoid the almost unmanageable administrative burden of having to process hundreds or thousands of grievances through the grievance steps and arbitration; and the cost to the Postal Service in doing so and in meeting its "back-pay" liability to grievants (who, at long last, might be reinstated by arbitrators) would be enormous. If priority were given in the processing of the grievances of those discharged for participating in the strike (as, indeed was done), and the hearing of other grievances on the docket (unrelated to the strike) should have to be deferred, the effectiveness and utility of the dispute-resolution process provided for in the Agreement would be seriously damaged. "Justice delayed is justice denied."

Although the Panel might not have drawn the line precisely as it was done by the Postal Service (as described in the Condon Affidavit), we cannot say, under the circumstances, that the general formula used was so arbitrary and capricious as to entitle those who were discharged to claim that the criteria for discharge provided for in that affidavit are unlawful or unjust.

Since we do not yet have before us the facts as to "participation" in the largest number of Postal Worker cases in arbitration we are unable to say whether, in particular cases, the Postal Service may have misapplied its own formula or whether, regardless of the formula proclaimed, the facts, in particular cases, warrant a finding that a difference in treatment of "participants" was improper and unjust. Whether such a finding should be made is a question to be faced by individual members of this Panel sitting in arbitration of cases involving particular grievants. In this case, we emphasize, we decide only the propriety of the adoption and application of the general formula as described in the Condon Affidavit. Our group authority to decide is not perceived as extending beyond such action.

D. The Issue of the 30-Day Notice Requirement

Part IV of the APWU Brief is entitled "The failure to give all Grievants 30 days notice of proposed termination was a violation of contract and was not for just cause." It is argued under this point that the notices in these cases provide "Notice of Proposed Removal--Crime" and then there is reference, first to 5 USC 7311 and then to the criminal statute, 18 USC 1918; that "the alleged commission of a crime was a cause of discharge" (Brief, p. 25); that there has never been a criminal prosecution under 18 USC 1918; and that the Attorney General in a letter sent in September 1978 told the Postal Service no criminal prosecutions would be undertaken. The Union goes on to observe that inasmuch as no criminal prosecution was contemplated, each of the grievants was entitled, under the Agreement, to the 30-day notice of removal.[1]

The Union then contends that whether "there was such reasonable cause can be the subject of a separate inquiry" and that "in any such inquiry the 'just cause' standard of the contract applies" (Brief, p. 26) and there existed "no just cause for the lack of 30-day notice." Accordingly, it is said, if reinstate-

[1]Article XVI Section 3 guarantees that in the case of discharge all employees are entitled to be "on the job or on the clock at the option of the Employer for a period of thirty (30) days." It also provides that the thirty days advance notice of removal need not be given "When there is reasonable cause to believe an employee is guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed." (Emphasis supplied.)

ment is ordered or is not ordered, a grievant is entitled to back pay for 30 days.

We hold that if it is found that a grievant participated in a strike against the Postal Service in violation of the provisions of 5 USC 7311(3) the relationship of that statute to 18 USC 1918 entitles the Postal Service to the position that it had "reasonable cause to believe" that a grievant "was guilty of a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment can be imposed." Article XVI Section 3 does not provide that the thirty-day notice can be dispensed with only if a grievant had been prosecuted and convicted of a crime. The standard for the waiving of the thirty-day notice of removal could not be expressed with greater clarity. It only requires the Postal Service to be reasonable in its belief that a criminal statute had been violated and that if prosecuted, the grievant could be sentenced to imprisonment. We perceive no need to make any statement here beyond this.

V. The Claim that the Discharges Were Punitive Rather than Corrective

This claim[1] is based on Article XVI of the Agreement which states that discipline shall be "corrective in its nature rather than punitive." Manifestly, it refers to the kinds of misconduct in which reasonable ground exists to believe that counselling and penalties of an increasingly severe character will deter an employee from future failure in his employment responsibilities. A typical example of the situation in which corrective discipline must be imposed is failure to attend promptly and regularly for work as scheduled.

The claim can have no relevance to misconduct such as theft, deliberate physical assault, sabotage or similar misbehavior which (except perhaps in extraordinary cases which we cannot now envisage) give the employer reasonable and just cause to believe that in the future the grievant cannot be trusted to fulfill his employment duties and step-by-step corrective discipline is unlikely to be fruitful.

Similarly, step-by-step corrective discipline is clearly out of place in such a situation as this in which a) an employee is forbidden by law to "hold a position" if he participates in a strike; b) the agency is forbidden to permit him to "hold a position" if he so participates; c) the statutory provisions have become an integral and merged part of the job responsibilities of an employee and the conditions under which he may be employed; d) on the occasion of his employment the grievant had signed an affidavit swearing that he would not participate in a strike; and e) the employee's exclusive bargaining agent has agreed to a no-strike clause.

We affirm, strongly, the need and desirability of corrective discipline, wherever appropriate, in preference to punitive or retributive measures. We do not regard "participation in a strike" to be behavior which, in light of all of the circumstances related in this decision (including the warnings given by the Postmaster General) occasioned corrective discipline.

VI. Ruling on Additional Documentary Exhibits Offered for the Record

In Section 2 of their February 9, 1979, Consolidation Agreement, the parties recognized that they might not agree upon the admissability of certain evidence to be made available in their initial presentations, and declared that > "If the parties are unable to agree upon the admissibility of any evidence, such disagreement will be resolved by the en banc panel of arbitrators. "

That understanding is reflected in the "Stipulated Testimony and Exhibits for Submission to Arbitration Panel" at the conclusion of which are listed nine exhibits under the heading

> "Exhibits Offered by the Postal Service and Objected to by the APWU Submitted for Arbitrators' Determination as Per Paragraph 2 of the Consolidation Agreement."

We have received these exhibits and they have been found to be relevant to the extent that they are cited in the foregoing opinion.

There remains the question of an exhibit submitted on March 8, 1979 by the attorneys for the Union to the Panel of Arbitrators, for inclusion as a part of the record in this case, a portion of a document entitled "Contingency Planning Work Stoppage" dated May 1, 1977. The letter stated that the document had not previously been available to the Union. Counsel also stated that the document "has materiality" in the decision which the Panel is called upon to make.

On March 14, 1979, by letter, counsel for the Postal Service objected to acceptance by the Panel, of the proffered document on the ground that it was "violative of the letter and spirit of the parties' February 9, 1979 Agreement to consolidate specified cases."

The Panel has been empowered to act in respect of a record stipulated by the parties that does not include the proffered document. Accordingly, it would be inappropriate for us to expand the record with additional materials. We are acting under a specific agreement as to what material is to be introduced or considered for introduction. It is beyond our authority to alter that agreement to receive unilaterally offered documents that are alleged not to have been previously available to the Union.

Accordingly, we rule that the proffered document will not be accepted as a part of the stipulated record in this case.

APPENDIX A

AGREEMENT

1. The APWU and the Postal Service agree to request Arbitrators Zack, Seitz, Rubin, Kornblum and Weisenfeld to sit, en banc, to decide after consultation with each other, legal and factual questions underlying the pending arbitration cases in the Northeast Region which involve alleged strike activities. These arbitrators have informed the parties of their willingness to participate in such procedures.

2. The factual record to be placed before the Arbitrators will be agreed upon by the parties and will consist of specified portions of the testimony already adduced in APWU cases, together with agreed upon documents and additional stipulations, if any. If the parties are unable to agree upon the admissibility of any evidence, such disagreement will be resolved by the en banc panel of Arbitrators.

3. The parties will submit a main brief to the panel which will cover all submitted cases on February 12, 1979,

4. The parties will submit supplemental briefs relating to the specific facts of individual cases within seven days after receipt of transcripts in the specific cases, or on February 23, 1979, whichever is later.

5. The panel will issue a decision (or majority decision) on the underlying questions presented.

6. After the Arbitrators have rendered a majority decision on the underlying questions, each Arbitrator will separately apply the majority decision to the specific facts of the APWU cases which that Arbitrator has already heard, based upon the actual record in each specific case, and shall issue an award in each case.

7. The parties agree, and will stipulate in each pending Northeast Region case above that the panel decision is controlling on all issues decided therein, and that the Arbitrators shall apply the decision to each APWU case coming before them.

8. The parties will attempt to stipulate the facts, to the extent possible, in all pending cases, and will otherwise attempt to expedite the hearing and decision on all pending cases.

9. Subject to the foregoing provisions as to the binding effect of the panel decision, the right of the Union to have a separate hearing on each grievant's case is preserved.

10. Neither party waives any right to judicial review of the panel decision or of any award in any specific case, to the extent allowed by law. However, in order to expedite procedures, neither party will seek judicial review of the panel decision except insofar as it is embodied as part of an award in a particular case. Further, if either party seeks judicial review, both parties will cooperate fully to expedite such review.

Case No. H8C-3W-C 34408
(A8-S-2617)

AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION

Subject: Prohibition of Wearing of "No Contract — No Work" Buttons

Statement of the Issue: Whether the Postal Service's action in Miami, Florida in prohibiting employees from wearing "No Contract — No Work" buttons on postal premises was a violation of the National Agreement?

Contract Provisions Involved: Articles 3, 5, 16, 18 and 19 of the July 21, 1978 National Agreement.

Appearances: For the Postal Service, R. Andrew German, Senior Attorney, Office of Labor Law; for the APWU, Arthur M. Luby, Attorney (O'Donnell & Schwartz).

Statement of the Award: The grievance is denied.

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests a Management memorandum banning the wearing of "No Contract — No Work" buttons on the Miami, Florida Post Office premises. The APWU insists that this prohibition was a violation of the National Agreement.

The essential facts are not in dispute. In the 1974 APWU national convention, a resolution was adopted embracing the principle of "No Contract — No Work." The precise wording of the resolution was not introduced in evidence. The APWU's Assistant Director of the Clerk Craft views this slogan as "an expression that the membership supports the leadership of the organization." The APWU's National President views it as a means of "pull[ing] people together and mak[ing] sure that we were strong in dealing with Management." Thereafter, during periods when the APWU was engaged in contract negotiations with the Postal Service, APWU employees sometimes wore "No Contract — No Work" buttons during working hours on postal premises.

The 1978 National Agreement expired on July 20, 1981. The APWU and the Postal Service were then in the midst of negotiations. Some APWU employees in the Miami Post Office were wearing "No Contract — No Work" buttons on the premises. A. Bame, the then Acting Manager of Labor Relations, issued a memorandum on June 24, 1981, prohibiting the wearing of such buttons. The memorandum read:

> "Recently, reports have been received of the intention of some individuals to wear buttons with the slogan 'No Contract — No Work', or phrases of that nature.
>
> "The wearing of this type of button is considered to be unprotected activity and will not be allowed on Postal premises or property."

The work force complied with the memorandum. No one wore such a button after the prohibition was made known and no one was disciplined.

A grievance was filed on June 24, 1981, claiming that the prohibition was a violation of the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. At Step 3, the APWU added that the prohibition was also a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. And at Step 4, it appears to have added that the prohibition was contrary to Article 19 of the National Agreement in that it was not "fair, reasonable, and equitable." The Postal Service denies all of these allegations and urges, moreover, that some of them are not properly before the arbitrator.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

At the arbitration hearing, the APWU dropped its claim that the prohibition of "No Contract — No Work" buttons was a violation of the National Labor Relations Act. Hence, its challenge rests essentially on two provisions of the National Agreement. First, it relies on Article 19. Its argument is that this Postal Service prohibition is a "published regulation" which impacted "working conditions" and which was not "fair, reasonable, and equitable." Second, it relies on Article 5. Its argument is that this article requires the Postal Service to refrain from any action "inconsistent with its obligations under law." It believes the button prohibition is a violation of the First Amendment.

As for the first argument, I shall assume without deciding the point that the APWU claim properly falls within the scope of Article 19.* The prohibition must therefore be measured against the "fair, reasonable, and equitable" test.

Several points should be emphasized. Strikes by federal employees are expressly forbidden by statute. The relevant statute, 5 USC 7311 bars an individual from accepting or holding a position in the federal government if he "participates in a strike...against the Government of the United States..." This bar against strikes applies to Postal Service employees. The APWU does not challenge this view. Furthermore, the National Agreement expressly prohibits strikes although that bar presumably applies only to strikes during the life of the National Agreement.

The "No Contract — No Work" buttons were plainly a call for strike action in the event that a new National Agreement was not negotiated by July 21, 1981 (or in the event the old contract was not extended). The words on the button, in trade union parlance, have always meant that if no contract exists, no employee works. That is a pure and simple strike threat. It is so understood by employees and managers alike in almost every enterprise in this country.

The APWU takes a benign view of these words. Its witnesses see "No Contract — No Work" buttons as harmless slogans intended only to show worker solidarity and to demonstrate support for union leadership in the midst of negotiations. These may well be incidental effects of such buttons. But the larger effect is clearly to urge employees to strike in the absence of a new contract. The National APWU President testified in a June 1980 deposition concerning a wildcat strike at New Jersey postal facilities in July 1978. He indicated that earlier APWU "advocacy of no contract, no work" may have been partially responsible for this wildcat strike. And when asked about the meaning of this "No Contract — No Work" policy, he replied:

> "It means at the time the contract expires, which is, in this case, deadline, July 20th, midnight, that there is no work after that if there is no contract." (Emphasis added)

My conclusion must be that the wearing of a "No Contract — No Work" button on postal premises during the final weeks of contract negotiations was a call for illegal strike action in the event the deadline passed without a new contract. The prohibition of the wearing of such buttons, in these circumstances, was "fair, reasonable, and equitable." Management was within its rights in insisting that employees not urge illegal strike action in this fashion. There was no violation of Article 19.

As for the second argument, I shall assume without deciding the point that the First Amendment is incorporated into the National Agreement through Article 5. The prohibition must therefore be measured against the constitutional stricture that the state "shall make no law...abridging the freedom of speech..."

A number of observations seem appropriate. To begin with, the Postal Service's prohibition does not prevent employees from discussing among themselves their views with respect to the APWU no contract-no work resolution. Miami Management made no attempt to dictate permissible conversation among employees. Nor indeed were the employees prohibited from wearing "No Contract — No Work" buttons off postal premises. They could wear the buttons before and after working hours and on their off days. They had abundant opportunity to press their point of view at local union meetings, in local publications, in conversations with fellow employees at work, in get-togethers after work, and so on. The Postal Service's prohibition was simply limited to posted premises and working hours. This prohibition was reasonable given the fact that the buttons were a call for imminent illegal strike action.

Surely, Management would be free to bar buttons encouraging employees to engage in a slowdown or to disregard supervisory instructions. The bar against "No Contract — No Work" buttons is no different except that it is aimed at illegal strike activity rather than contractually impermissible activity. I do not believe employees' First Amendment rights were violated in these circumstances.

	:	ISSUED:
	:	January 19, 1977

BACKGROUND

This national level arbitration involves two grievances, which took form at the Inglewood, California, Post Office, wherein the Mail Handlers Union asserts that introduction of a new policy and procedure at Inglewood improperly restricts the rights of Union Stewards protected under Article XVII of the 1973 National Agreement and also violates Articles V and XIX. A hearing was held on September 8, 1976 and briefs thereafter filed as of November 18, 1976. 1

Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4, are particularly significant here. They read: 2

> "Section 3. Rights of Stewards. When it is necessary for a steward to leave his work area to investigate and adjust grievances, he shall request permission from his immediate supervisor and such request shall not be unreasonably denied. In the event his duties require he leave his work area and enter another area within the installation or post office, he must also receive permission from the supervisor from the other area he wishes to enter and such request shall not be unreasonably denied.

"The steward or chief steward may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance, and shall have the right to interview the aggrieved employee, supervisors, and witnesses during working hours. Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied.

"While serving as a steward or chief steward, an employee may not be involuntarily transferred to another shift or to another facility unless there is no job for which he is qualified on his shift or in his facility, provided that this paragraph shall not apply to rural carriers.

"Section 4. Payment of Stewards. The Employer will authorize payment only under the following conditions:

Grievances:

Steps 1 and 2--The aggrieved and one Union steward (only as permitted under the formula in Section 2A) for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer. The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance.

Meetings called by the Employer for information exchange and other conditions designated by the Employer concerning contract application.

"Employer authorized payment as outlined above will be granted at the applicable straight time rate, providing the time spent is a part of the steward's (only as provided for under the formula in Section 2A) regular work day."

(Underscoring added.)

Late in 1974 Inglewood Post Office supervision became concerned that some Union Stewards might be taking excessive time to investigate and adjust grievances. On September 9, 1974 Acting Director of Mail Processing Ford sent a memorandum to all Inglewood Mail Processing Supervisors stating, in relevant part: 3

"It is Management's responsibility to determine amount of 'reasonable time' to be allowed steward to investigate and/or prepare grievance (Oper 560). When such time is requested, require from steward a specific time limit and necessary information to justify that time involvement.

"If you are satisfied time request is justified, approved [sic] request (using Form 7020, in duplicate) with the understanding with steward that steward will return to work no later than end of time approved. This will eliminate need for supervisor's harassing stewards to leave lunch room--which practice is demeaning to steward, distasteful to supervisor, and a waste of supervisor's time--which must stop. If a steward doesn't return by prescribed time, deal with that as a disciplinary problem. If steward needs more time, it is his responsibility to request same, which starts process over.

"If agreement can't be reached on appropriate amount of time, refer matter to Tour Supt for resolution."

(Underscoring added.)

The Form 7020, to which reference is made in the second paragraph, above quoted, was developed by the Postal Service for general use throughout its operations. The Form is referenced specifically in Part 431 of Methods Handbook M-65, reading:

> "431 Form 7020, Authorized Absence from Workroom Floor, will be used to record authorized absences from assigned duties on the workroom floor, e.g., scheme examination, visits to the medical unit, etc. At the time Form 7020 is issued, record the personnel change on Form 2345 to the closest six minute interval. Upon the employees return, collect Form 7020 and record the change to the closest six minute interval on Form 2345. The leaving and returning times on Form 7020 must coincide with time entries on Form 2345."

Form 7020 includes the following:

(Underscoring added.)

Following issuance of Acting Director Ford's September 9, 1974 Memorandum, the Inglewood Post Office discontinued using Form 7020 to record time away from work by Stewards on Union business, in early 1975, and substituted a locally developed form entitled "Request for Official Time to Conduct Union Business." As a result of these developments the present grievances were filed directly in Step 4 on October 18, 1974 and February 26, 1975, as national level grievances. Local 303 of the Mail Handlers also filed unfair labor practice charges claiming violation of Sections 8-A-1 and 8-A-5 of the National Labor Relations Act. On March 18, 1975 the NLRB declined to issue a complaint pending completion of the present arbitration proceeding. 6

The Union now contends that the local policy enunciated in the September 9, 1974 Memorandum, and implemented through the new form introduced at Inglewood, violates not only Article XVII, Section 3 of the National Agreement, but also Article XIX, which provides: 7

> "Copies of all handbooks, manuals, and regulations of the Postal Service that contain sections that relate to wages, hours, and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement shall be furnished to the Unions on or before January 20, 1974. Nothing in any such handbook, manual, or regulation shall conflict with this Agreement. Those parts of any such handbook, manual, or regulation that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable and equitable.

"Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Unions at the national level at least 30 days prior to issuance. The parties shall meet concerning such changes, and if the Unions believe that the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), they may submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with Step 4 of the grievance-arbitration procedure within 30 days after receipt of the notice of proposed change."

(Underscoring added.)

The Union stresses that the September 9, 1974 Memorandum assumes that it is Management's responsibility to determine the "reasonable time" to investigate a grievance and seeks to limit a Steward, in advance, to a fixed amount of time for such activity. To require a prior determination of the amount of time to investigate a grievance, says the Union, is inconsistent with Article XVII, Section 3. It agrees that this Section requires the Steward to request permission to leave his work area, and gives the Supervisor the right to deny permission to leave the work area, but nowhere does it suggest that a Supervisor can impose a fixed time limit upon a Steward, requiring that the Steward return to work at some specific time. Violation of Article XIX also is seen, in that use of Form 7020 is specified for this purpose in Methods Handbook M-65, Part 431, but the Form in this respect has been replaced by an entirely new local form. In the Union view Article XIX requires the USPS to continue to use Form 7020 as provided in Methods Handbook M-65 until such time as notice is given to the Union of a proposed change, for negotiations pursuant to Article XIX. Although the Service claims that the new local form was necessary because of alleged abuse by Stewards at Inglewood, this is precisely the kind of problem which should be explored in the negotiations between the parties under Article XIX.

The Postal Service does not agree that the September 9, 1974 Memorandum at Inglewood asserts a Management right to determine the amount of time a Steward properly may spend on Union business. The Service concedes that one sentence may be so interpreted, if read out of context, but suggests that in context it should be construed to mean "that management must determine whether the amount of time that is requested for investigation or preparation of a grievance can be reasonably accommodated with the needs of the Postal Service." Such a reading of the Memorandum, says the Service, reveals that Inglewood supervision is not concerned with the total time spent investigating a grievance but only with the "impact of the time requested on operational needs." Under this analysis, the approval of a request for an hour to investigate a grievance does not establish that no more than an hour should be spent on the investigation, but only that the Steward can be spared only for an hour at the time he wishes to be absent from his work area. Any such a determination, so the argument runs, necessarily is without prejudice to further requests for time to investigate the same grievance. Thus the Service stresses that the last sentence in the second paragraph of the Memorandum reads: 8

"If steward needs more time, it is his responsibility to request same, which starts process over."

Insofar as the local Memorandum relates to the writing of a grievance, it is equally inoffensive, according to the Service. Here it quotes from Article XVII, Section 4: 9

> "The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance."
> (Underscoring added.)

Indeed, the Service does not now claim that the local Memorandum instructs supervisors to determine that the time requested to prepare a grievance constitutes the amount necessary to complete the task. It urges:

> "Instead, the Memorandum simply requires supervisors to balance a request for time to prepare a grievance against operational needs. Nothing in the 1973 National Agreement limits management's right to do so."

Given the right of the Service under Article XVII, Section 3, to determine the reasonableness of a Steward's request for permission to leave his work area, there is nothing in the Agreement to prohibit the Service from requiring a Steward to fill out a form including a blank space labeled "Approximate Time Requested." There was no impropriety in discontinuing use of Form 7020 for this purpose, says the Service, since Form 7020 was not designed for use in requesting authorization to leave a work area. Thus the Service suggests that Form 7020 is simply a record of the movement of an employee from one work area to another, where a request for such movement already has been authorized. (It stresses that Part 431 of the M-65 Handbook states that Form 7020 will be used to record authorized absences.) 10

Form 7020 has no value as a source of information for a Supervisor in determining the reasonableness of a request by a Steward for permission to leave his work area. The new local form thus is not a substitute for Form 7020, but actually is a supplementary form seeking information that Management is entitled to have. Since the Service is fully authorized under Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4, to determine the reasonableness of requests to leave the work area, it follows that to assess the reasonableness of such a request, the Supervisor must know how much time away from the work area is being requested and to require that this be provided on a form. 11

The two grievances here present separate but related issues: first, whether the local September 9, 1974 Memorandum is consistent with Article XVII, Sections 3 and 4; and, second, whether the local form instituted early in 1975 to effectuate the Memorandum conflicts with an established procedure under the M-65 Manual, and protected by Article XIX. 12

The September 9, 1974 Memorandum indicates on its face that it is Management's responsibility to determine what is a reasonable time to investigate or prepare a grievance. It includes no reference to Article XVII, Sections 3 or 4, nor does it state that a request by a Steward for time to investigate a grievance "shall not be unreasonably denied." The critical language quoted earlier in this Opinion from the September 9, 1974 Memorandum is preceded by an underlined assertion "B. Union Stewards taking too much time preparing Step 2A grievances." The Memorandum instructs a Supervisor that if you "are satisfied time request is justified" the request should be approved on condition that the Steward will return "no later than end of time approved." If the Steward does not return "by prescribed time," moreover, this is to be dealt with as a "disciplinary problem." Finally, the Memorandum advises that if agreement "can't be reached on appropriate amount of time" the matter should be referred to the Tour Superintendent. 13

Further light is shed upon the objective meaning of the September 9, 1974 Memorandum by reference to the form developed locally to implement it. This requires the Steward to (1) furnish in advance the names of other employees who may be interviewed, (2) indicate in advance what records may be needed, and (3) to identify (by number) any local telephone calls which may be made and the time to be involved in the call. It also includes a line captioned "If request is delayed beyond date of request, state reason. (Document on a Daily Basis why request cannot be granted.)" Lastly, the Form is routed to the Tour Superintendent. 14

These various restrictive provisions apparently were designed to combat abuses which were thought to have developed at Inglewood in taking excessive time for investigation and preparation of grievances. This surely is a proper Management objective, generally speaking, but the problem here is whether the Inglewood program is permissible under Articles XVII and XIX of the 1973 National Agreement. This is by no means only a local problem--if such a unilateral program is permissible at Inglewood, it is equally permissible throughout the entire Postal Service. 15

While the Postal Service brief includes an unusually skillful effort to depict the Memorandum as no more than an effort to require a Supervisor to determine whether a Steward "can be spared" from his job at the time he or she seeks permission to leave, there is nothing in the Memorandum itself which supports this narrow interpretation of its purpose. 16

The fact is that the Memorandum does not accurately state the substance of Article XVII, Section 3, particularly since it assumes that a Supervisor is entitled to determine in advance the amount of time necessary to investigate a grievance and requires the Steward to specify the time likely to be required and to provide detailed information in advance "to justify" such time requirement. The Memorandum implies that the decision as to whether any such request is "justified" lies within the discretion of the individual Supervisor, and provides no standards to guide the exercise of such discretion nor any reference to the controlling language of Article XVII, Section 3. 17

Thus it now should be made clear that Article XVII, Section 3, does not authorize the Service to determine in advance the amount of time which a Steward reasonably needs to investigate a grievance. Since the September 9, 1974 Memorandum is inaccurate in this and other significant respects, it should be withdrawn and given no effect. This is not to say, of course, that Management cannot (1) ask a Steward seeking permission to investigate, adjust, or write a grievance to estimate the length of time that the Steward anticipates he or she will be away from his or her work station; or (2) that a Supervisor cannot decline to release a Steward from duty during a period of time when his or her absence during such period will unnecessarily delay essential work; or (3) that a Supervisor, in advance, may not specify a time period during which the Steward's absence will unnecessarily delay essential work. Nor does this decision in any way bar the Service from taking necessary action, consistent with the Agreement, in any case where it can be established that a Steward has improperly obtained 18 permission to leave his or her work station under the guise of investigating or preparing a grievance.

The special form developed at Inglewood early in 1975 was designed to implement the September 9, 1974 Memorandum and hardly can be used except to effectuate that Memorandum. In addition, Part 431 of Methods Handbook M-65 states that Form 7020 will be used to record authorized absences from assigned duties, and the instructions on Form 7020 make it applicable to "time devoted to grievances." The local form at Inglewood in fact has been substituted for Form 7020 when Stewards seek to leave their work stations. 19

It is well settled by now that employee representation by a Union Steward or Grievance Committeeman constitutes a significant working condition, or condition of employment. Thus the matter here in issue falls within the scope of Article XIX. The development of a new form locally to deal with Stewards' absences from assigned duties on Union business--as a substitute for a national form embodied in an existing Manual (and thus in conflict with that Manual)--thus falls within the second paragraph of Article XIX. Since the procedure there set forth has not been invoked by the Postal Service, it would follow that the Inglewood form must be withdrawn. 20

The grievances are sustained as indicated in this Opinion. The September 9, 1974 Memorandum and the local form developed to implement that Memorandum must be withdrawn and given no effect. 21

Pursuant to the provisions of the current collective bargaining agreement between the above-captioned parties, this case was duly processed through to and presented in arbitration before the Undersigned. The hearing was held at the offices of the USPS in Washington, DC, on January 23, 1981. Thereafter, post-hearing briefs were submitted and exchanged.

THE ISSUE:

At the opening of this hearing, the parties stipulated that the issue could be defined as follows:

> "Whether Management at the Tacoma, Washington, Post Office properly prohibited the Union from posting a notice on the Union bulletin board listing the names of non-members. If not, shall Management be prohibited from preventing the Union from using the bulletin board in this fashion in the future?"

---

* At the opening of the hearing, Mr. John P. Richards, Director of Industrial Relations for the APWU, appeared for the purpose of noting that the APWU joins with and supports the position taken in this proceeding by the NALC.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

The parties stipulated at the opening of the hearing that many of the facts are not in dispute. They can be noted as follows:

During the period between November 17 and November 19, 1979, Management removed the notice at the Lakewood Station, and the notices also posted at other stations were removed pursuant to Management's instructions by sometime on or after November 19, 1979.

The decision to remove these notices was made by Mr. Roy Olson, the Director of Employee and Labor Relations for the Tacoma, Washington, Post Office.

Western Region Notice Dated November 11, 1975

Subject: Majority Union Bulletin Board Postings of Non-Members

To: District Managers
General Managers, Bulk Mail Centers

Some months ago, it was determined that the posting on union bulletin boards of non-members was neither illegal nor improper.

A reassessment of this position has been made and it is now determined that such postings constitute a potential source of operational disruptions.

In our view, the controlling considerations in this area must be our primary obligation to insure that postal operations are not disrupted and that postal employees not be subjected to undue pressures at postal installations in the course of their employment. In these circumstances, beginning immediately, majority unions shall not be permitted to display notices listing the names of non-members on bulletin boards provided under the National Agreement.

Please notify those offices under your jurisdiction of the above.

/s/ R. H. Stevens, Director
Office of Labor Relations

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

The Union contended that the removal of the above-quoted notice, which had been posted on November 11, 1979, was a violation of the provisions of Article XXII as well as a violation of the National Labor Relations Act proscribed by the opening provision of Article III of the Agreement.

The Union argued that the contents of the notice were suitable within the meaning of Article XXII. The Postal Authorities, according to the Union, cannot unilaterally decide upon the suitability of notices. Whether a notice is suitable must be decided upon the basis of some objective standard or criteria. The purpose of this notice, just as was the purpose of a similar one posted in 1976 without management objection, was to encourage membership in the Union.

The Union argued that the language of the notice was a "straight-forward exhortation" addressed to non-members to join the Union. As a result of the posting, a number of non-member employees did so. The Union has a contractually recognized right to solicit membership in the Union, pursuant to Article XXXI, in non-work areas of the Employer's premises. In this case, according to the Union, Tacoma Management had no evidence that the notice was a disuptive force on the work floor. Such a conclusion would have to be based upon mere assumption.

The Union also argued that it did not waive the right to grieve the action taken at Tacoma because it failed to raise a national grievance when the directive to management was issued in the Western Region in November of 1975. That internal memorandum did not have the force or effect of modifying the National Agreement. Merely acknowledging the existence of such a memorandum does not signify union acquiescence. Likewise, the Union contended that in 1975 and 1978 it had only attempted to get contractual language in Article XXII which would have permitted the Union to post items of a political nature on the bulletin board. The Union did not seek nor think it necessary to seek any change in the language of that provision to post items dealing with collective bargaining or other union business.

Finally, the Union argued that removing this notice violated the National Labor Relations Act and for that reason was in violation of Article III as well. The Union argued here that this type of notice was a manifestation of protected concerted activity. The Union referred to Old Dominion Br. No. 496, NALC, AFL-CIO v. Austin , 418 U.S. 264 (1974), where the U. S. Supreme Court held that the publication of a list of non-union members and branding them as "scabs" fell within the protection of Section 7 of the Statute. In the instant case, as in Austin, the Union argued that the Local Union was in the midst of an organizing campaign to get non-members to join. Unlike Austin, in the instant case, the Union did not employ any lurid language to describe the non-members or to incite its own members. The Union also cited a number of other NLRB decisioms wherein the employer was not permitted to censor materials appearing on bulletin boards provided by contractual arrangement.

The Union claimed that there was no evidence presented to establish how or why this notice could prove disruptive of postal operations at the facilities where it was posted. The Union conceded that if a direct link could be established between the contents of a notice and actual disruptions the employer could act to restore order and such action might be to order the removal of the offending notice.

Management contended that the notice was disruptive in that it had received reports of carriers arguing with shop stewards at various stations and there was an E.E.O.C. complaint filed.

Management further contended that the testimony and other evidence offered by the Union to support a claim that a similar notice was posted in 1976 and was not challenged by management did not have sufficient probative value to support such a claim.

The USPS pointed out that in 1975 a clear and unambiguous restriction on the Unions' right to post lists of non-members had promulgated. The Union did not choose to grieve that directive and the practice of prohibiting such postings has remained unchallenged thus rising to the status of a past practice .

Finally, the Postal Service contended that in bargaining during 1975 the Union sought to gain unilateral control over the decision on removing any notices from bulletin boards or literature from racks. The USPS successfully resisted such an attempt. In 1978, the Postal Service claimed that the Unions attempted to remove the word "suitable" and permit all notices regardless of content suitability to be posted. This effort also failed, and Management contended that the Union was required now to recognize nize that the Postal Service had the exclusi ve right to determine what constituted a suitable or unsuitable notice.

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

The Postal Service's principal contention was that the specific language of the Agreement gave management the right to prohibit the posting of what it considered to be unsuitable material. The Undersigned is in agreement that the language of the Agreement does not give the unions an unfettered right to post any material on the bulletin boards which they consider is suitable for such posting. That language reads, "...only suitable notices and literature may be posted or placed in literature racks." Management certainly, under this language, may challenge the contents of the proposed notices and literature on the grounds that such material is not suitable for publication in such fashion on post office premises and more particularly in work areas.

When management does prohibit a posting on union bulletin boards on the grounds that the material is unsuitable, it is required to establish that it has just cause for reaching such a conclusion. The decision on suitability must be bottomed upon factual evidence that the posting will prove or has proven to be a cause of disruption or dissension and thus has had or will have an adverse impact upon productivity or efficiency.

If the testimony and other documentation offered by Management did establish that this could be or was the consequence of such a posting, the Arbitrator would have to sustain management's right to prohibit such a posting. From within the four corners of the Agreement would come the authority for such a finding in the provisions of Article III dealing with management's exclusive right to maintain the efficiency of the operations. Resort to external law would not require that the unions be allowed to post inflamatory, prejudicial, or derogatory statements. It would be reasonable to assume that the results of such a posting would undermine management"s ability to direct the work force and the enterprise efficiently and productively. That would be the primary purpose of the prohibition and not to strip away the rights of employees to engage in certain protected concerted actions which are detailed under the provisions of Section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act.

To establish a reasonable basis for assuming that the results of publishing and posting the names of non-members would interfere with efficient postal operations, the Postal Service offered the following testimony:

Roy A. Olson, Management Sectional Center Director of Employee and Labor Relations at Tacoma stated that he denied the Union the right to post the notice here in controversy because of the contents of the letter issued in 1975 denying the unions the right to post the names of non-members. He also said he felt the notice was "disruptive" because, "We had several phone calls from letter carriers regarding how this notice could come down." He also claimed that there was one EEO complaint filed. He testified further that he had been advised that there were verbal confrontations between shop stewards and carriers at several units. Mr. Olson, on cross-examination, admitted that he personally did not witness any confrontations between stewards and letter carriers.

There was no additional evidence offered by the Postal Service to support the claim that the contents of the notice caused management any work shop floor problems.

Based upon the testimony from Mr. Olson, outlined above, the Undersigned had to find that Mr. Olson was prompted to remove the notice because he was advised of the existence of a 1975 letter which indicated such postings should be prohibited. That was his principal motivation. He only learned from others about so-called confrontations between stewards and letter carriers. He also learned of telephone calls from carriers about having the notice taken down. One EEO complaint was filed, and as Mr. Olson testified, it was later withdrawn in the informal stage after the notice came down. Mr. Olson did not testify about the long existing dispute between some members of the national workforce and the national unions about which organizations deserve to represent them and receive dues payments. Nothing in Mr. Olson's testimony supported a conclusion that the notices did, in fact, caused sufficient disruption or dissension so as to interfere with the orderly conduct of business, or that a failure to remove such notice would inevitably lead to such a result.

For the reasons set forth above, and after due deliberation, the Undersigned makes the following

A W A R D

The grievance filed by the NALC in Case No. N8-W- 0214 is sustained. Management is directed not to interfere with the posting of notices containing the names of non-members unless or until the Postal Service can prove that this material is unsuitable for posting because it has caused or will cause an adverse impact upon the ability of postal authorities to direct the work force and to manage its operations efficiently and productively.

Dear Mr. Richards:

On October 13, 1981, you met with Frank Dyer in pre-arbitration discussion of H8C-NA-C 49 and H8C-2B-C 9351. After a thorough discussion of the issue it was agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of the cases; in compliance with Arbitrator Gamser's Award of case N8-W-0214.

Management will not interfere with the posting of notices containing the names of non-members unless or until the Postal Service can prove that the material is unsuitable for posting because it has caused or will cause an adverse impact upon the ability of postal authorities to direct the work force and to manage its operations efficiently and productively.

Please sign the attached copy of this letter acknowledging your agreement with this settlement, withdrawing H8C-NA-C 49 and H8C-2B-C 9351 from the pending national arbitration listing.

Dear Mr. Sombrotto:

Recently, I met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these cases is whether a contractual violation occurred when management removed certain items from NALC bulletin boards in the Lynnwood Station and Marysville Post Office. The items were removed due to management's determination that the material in question, which consisted of an NALC Bulletin listing endorsements of political candidates, was inappropriate for display in a building owned or leased by the Postal Service.

Based on the particular facts and circumstances at issue, the grievances are sustained.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Sincerely,

Melissa J. Doniger

Dear Mr. Riley:

On October 11, 1977, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

Based on the evidence presented in this grievance, we find that local management will permit union officers to enter postal facilities as provided in Article XXXII of the National Agreement. In addition, the fact that mail volume in high on a particular day is not a legitimate reason to prevent union officials from entering a facility. However, the union representatives shall not interrupt the work of employees due to such visits as provided in the National Agreement.

Therefore, the issues raised are resolved and the grievance is closed.

Sincerely,

Michael J. Garrison

Dear Mr. Riley:

On March 28, 1978, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

Management will work with union officials in granting access to postal service facilities in accordance with the language of Article XXIII of the current National Agreement. To enhance effective labor-management relations, there should be no unreasonable delays in management granting a requesting union official access to a U. S. Postal Service facility. This grievance is resolved.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On June 8, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

We mutually agreed that there was no interpretive dispute between the parties at the National level as to the meaning and intent of Article 23 of the National Agreement as it relates to the rights of Union officials to enter postal installations.

Upon reasonable notice to the Employer, duly authorized representatives of the Unions shall be permitted to enter postal installations for the purpose of performing and engaging in official union duties and business related to the Collective Bargaining Agreement. Normally, reasonable notice would not be required in writing. A telephone call to an appropriate management official would be sufficient.

Accordingly, as further agreed, this case is hereby remanded to Step 3 for further processing, if necessary, by the parties at that level.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Sincerely,

Robert L. Eugene

The operation of powered industrial equipment that is powered by electric motor (battery) or internal combustion (flammable gasses) requires the operators to have an appropriately endorsed SF-46. This is the case regardless of whether the operator walks behind or rides on the equipment to guide it.

Level 4 mail handlers who operate the equipment referenced in standard position 2-21 and are required to have an appropriately endorsed SF-46, meet the core requirements for the position of mail handler equipment operators, PS-5. Therefore, they are entitled to higher level compensation for the period of such operations. Any grievances pending should be settled accordingly.

In the Matter of the Arbitration Between AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION (CLERK CRAFT DIVISION, LOS ANGELES) AFL-CIO -and- UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	Case No. AB-W-1520 OPINION AND AWARD

Appearances:

For the Union: Mr. Excel Hunter, President, Clerk Crafts Division, Los Angeles Local, APWU, AFL-CIO

Mr. Russel Robinson, Director of Industrial Relations, Los Angeles Local

For the Employer: Lawrence M. Evans, Esq., Labor Law Division, USPS, Washington, DC

Mr. Lawrence G. Handy, Employee Labor Relations Executive, Western Region, USPS

Background:

In compliance with Article XV, Section 2, Step 2(a) of the 1973-75 Collective Bargaining Agreement, Mr. Hunter, on December 26, 1973 directed a letter to Mr. James J. Symbol, District Manager/Officer in Charge of the Los Angeles Post Office. In that letter, Mr. Hunter stated that a grievance was being initiated on behalf of all Level 5 Clerical Employees, "who are presently performing Level 6 Postal Source Data Technician duties and responsibilities at both, Carrier and Finance Stations without remuneration of Level 6 pay." In his letter, Mr. Hunter, stated further that the provisions of Article XXV (I) of the Agreement were being misapplied. The relief requested was, "that the Los Angeles Postal Service amend its records to show all employees involved in a duty status of Level 6 retroactive to July 21, 1973 with appropriate remuneration."

The case was processed through the steps outlined in the grievance procedure provided for in Article XV. The Step 4 answer was provided by letter dated May 14, 1974. In that answer, the Postal Service stated: "Information in the file discloses that the two job descriptions vary. The time keeping duties at Stations are Level 5 duties and not duties which would warrant the higher level pay of a PSDS Technician. In our view there is no contractual violation. Therefore, the grievance is denied."

The case was then referred to arbitration by the APWU on June 6, 1974, and also certified at that time within the 60 day limit in accordance with the provisions of Article XV, Section 3.

Subsequently, by letter dated February 26, 1975, the case was referred to the undersigned for arbitration. Hearings were scheduled and held in Los Angeles, California, on May 13-14, 1975. At these hearings, both parties were given full opportunity to present testimony, other evidence and argument in support of their respective contentions. By agreement, after the hearings were concluded, the parties submitted and exchanged post-Hearing briefs in timely fashion. The arguments contained therein as well as the materials and evidence received at the hearings were fully weighed and considered in arriving at the Award below.

The Issue:

The parties could not mutually agree upon a definition of the matter in issue. However, from the presentation of the Union and the contentions of the Postal Service, it is apparent that in issue is whether certain Distribution and Window Clerks and Distribution, Window and Mark-up Clerks at the Los Angeles Installation's Carrier Stations are being paid at the appropriate level for the work which they are performing. The Union alleged that they were classified in the Job Titles set forth above, which are paid at Level 5, whereas the work they were called upon to perform is contained in the job description of a Postal Source Data System Technician, PS-6. If this is so, then the Union claimed on their behalf, that this was a violation of Article XXV (1) and (4), and that these employees who were improperly compensated should be properly compensated for the work performed retroactively.

Thus, the issue may be posed as whether the Clerks at certain Carrier Stations at the Los Angeles Post Office have been properly compensated for the work they have performed pursuant to the pertinent provisions of Article XXV, and if they have not, what should the appropriate remedy be?

Contentions of the Union:

The Union contended that through its witnesses it had established that the designated Distribution and Window Clerks, PS-5, at Carrier Stations performed and continue to perform the basic duties and responsibilities of Postal Source Data System Technicians, PS-6.

The Union argued that the Employer, through its subsequent actions after the filing of this grievance, substantiated the Union contention above.

Finally, the Union asserted that the arguments advanced by the Employer, during the processing of the grievance, were effectively disproven.

Contentions of the Employer:

The Employer contended that, under Article XXV of the 1973 National Agreement, these Distribution and Window Clerks at the Carrier Stations are not entitled to higher level pay for performing the duties of a ranked higher level position unless such employees perform the significant and fundamentally essential duties of the higher level position.

According to the Employer, the duties and responsibilities of Level 6 Postal Source Data Technicians extend far beyond the duties performed by the Level 5 Clerks in the Los Angeles Post Office's Stations.

The Employer also claimed that the records maintained by Clerks for the Attendance, Time and Leave Program (ATAL) and for the Work Load Recording System(WLRS) were Level 5 functions recognized as such in pertinent job descriptions. In addition the WLRS functions are substantially and significantly dissimilar from the duties and responsibilities of a Level 6 Postal Source Data Technician in the maintenance of that System.

Opinion:

The pertinent provisions of Article XXV read as follows:

ARTICLE XXV-HIGHER LEVEL ASSIGNMENTS

1. Higher level work is defined as an assignment to a ranked higher level position, whether or not such position has been authorized at the installation.

4. Any employee detailed to higher level work shall be given a written management order, stating beginning and approximate termination, and directing the employee to perform the duties of the higher level position. Such written order shall be accepted as authorization for the higher level pay. The failure of management to give a written order is not grounds for denial of higher level pay if the employee was otherwise directed to perform the duties.

What the Union is contending in this case, when related to these contractual requirements, is that certain lower rated Distribution and Window Clerks, PS-5, at Carrier Stations, have been directed or assigned to the position of Postal Source Data System Technicians, PS-6, a higher level position. These aggrieved Clerks were not officially and formally detailed to the higher level position, but in fact these employees were directed to perform the duties of the higher level position and thus should be paid accordingly.

What the Union sought to establish through the testimony of its witnesses and the production of certain documentary evidence is that at the Carrier Stations in the Los Angeles Post Office certain designated Clerks perform essentially the same functions as do Post Source Data System Technicians at Control Stations and certain Carrier Stations where such Technicians are now assigned. The Union did not contend, significantly, that the Clerks in contention at the Carrier Stations are performing duties found in a Data Collection Site which are performed at such an installation by these Technicians.

The Union argued that if the aggrieved Clerks are doing the same work as the Technicians at Control Stations and certain Carrier Stations then these Clerks should be paid at the higher level in conformity with the requirements of Sections 1 and 4 of Article XXV quoted above. The Union asserted that not only does the language of these provisions support this claim, but that such entitlement was provided in an Award issued by Arbitrator J. Fred Holly in a case arising at the Macon, Georgia Post Office.

As stated, in the contentions of the Employer, the Postal Service sought to establish through the testimony of its witnesses and certain documentary evidence which it introduced that these Clerks were not directed to perform nor were they assigned duties and responsibilities which could equate their performance with that required of the Technicians who were classified and paid at Level 6.

The Postal Service contended that a decision issued by Arbitrator Sylvester Garrett in a case involving work jurisdiction and two of the National Unions support the Employer's claim that, although there is some overlapping between the job duties and description for the Level 5 Clerk and the Level 6 Technician, such overlapping does not require that the employees at the lower pay level be raised and paid at the higher level.

In effect, the case presented by the Union here raises the question of whether these Clerks, who now have to perform certain record keeping and reporting duties in connection with the ATAL program and WLRS system, are properly classified as Clerks or whether they should be classified as Technicians and paid accordingly. Is the work now being performed by these Clerks "higher level" work than that called for in their present job description, and if so, is that "higher level" work that of a Technician classified and paid at Level 6?

The Union spokesmen presented a very thorough case. The witnesses and the documents submitted clearly established that since the advent of the ATAL Program and the WLRS System the aggrieved Clerks have been assigned certain duties in connection with data collection for those programs that was not required of them previously. The nature of these new duties did in fact overlap certain of the functions and duties of the Technician assigned to data collection, integration, analysis and dissemination in connection with this same Program and this same System.

The testimony of the present incumbents at various Carrier Stations regarding the work they are required to perform in connection with ATAL and WLRS was carefully examined as was the testimony of those witnesses who were trained, classified and performed as Level 6 Technicians. The Level 5 Carrier Station employees, this testimony revealed, performed one comparable function in connection with the collection of data employed in the ATAL Program. These same employees also performed one data collection chore in connection with the WLRS System that might be considered in some ways comparable to the function and responsibility of the Technician in that same System.

The Postal Source Data Technician, in addition to the attendance, time and leave records collected in connection with the ATAL Program and recording and reporting mail under the WLRS System, both of which duties are performed to some extent by the Distribution and Window Clerks, has duties and responsibilities assigned that extend far beyond the duties performed by the Level 5 Clerks at the Carrier Stations under review. The undisputed testimony in this record revealed that a trained and qualified Technician has the responsibility for collecting data in connection with a cost ascertainment program which has nothing to do with the ATAL or WLRS data gathering functions. The Postal Source Data Technicians and Data Collection Technicians perform in an interrelated and interchangeable way in connection with the operation of the Postal Source Data System, which again is unrelated to either the ATAL or the WLRS statistical gathering operations to which a Clerk may be assigned. The Technicians at the data collection sites operate various types of statistical gathering equipment which is not the responsibility of the Clerk at the Carrier Station such as the concentrators, high speed printers, and the alphanumeric device. The Postal Source Data Technicians know how to operate all this equipment and how to deal with a break down of such equipment

In point of fact the work of the Postal Source Data Technician is concerned with a number of employees' master records concerning work related facts about employees and about inventory, repair and replacement of equipment which are in no way within the province or responsibility of the Clerk at the Carrier Station. Most significantly, with regard to the higher level of skill required of the Technician, the testimony pointed out that only these trained Technicians were permitted to "fine tune" volume adjustments dealing with mail volume and to deal with operational and analysis reports which are not even prepared or seen at the Carrier Station.

It is true, as the Union pointed out, within the current job description of the Distribution and Window Clerk or the Distribution, Window and Markup Clerk there is no provision for requiring these employees to collect and collate data with regard to the ATAL and WLRS Program and System. Many of the Clerks do spend a major portion of their work day on such projects. These Programs and Systems are also the major part of the work responsibility of certain Technicians who are part of the Postal Service Data Collection System whether they were at Data Collection Centers, Control Centers or, on occasion, are assigned to Carrier Stations.

However, an examination of the job descriptions for the Distribution and Window Clerk, PS-5, or the Distribution, Window and Markup Clerk, at the same level, indicates clearly that, even with the addition of the duties described by Union witnesses, in connection with ATAL and WLRS reporting and in further addition of certain "accounting duties" described by these same witnesses, the work performed by these Clerks still falls within the ambit of Key Positions 11, 12 and 13 which all relate to Level 5. These augmented duties do not require slotting within the perimeters of Key Positions 14, 15 and 16 which carry with them a Level 6 pay entitlement.

This exercise in slotting, or this classification problem raised by the Union, justifies the conclusion in the paragraph above because an examination of the function and purpose of the job duties and responsibilities of these clerks must be distinguished from those of the Postal Source Data System Technician as they relate to the mission of the entire organization. The degree of supervision required for these respective classifications must be considered and distinguished. The complexities of the duties as well as the skills and knowledge requirements are certainly and clearly distinguishable. The degree of discretion in carrying out assigned duties must also be weighed. Finally, the responsibility for checking the work of others and adjusting based upon judgmental decisions is also a consideration.

Taking all of these considerations into account, and basing an evaluation of same on the testimony adduced during the course of this hearing, it cannot be held that the Clerk positions under review even with the additional responsibilities and duties assigned in connection with the new Systems and Programs is improperly slotted in Level 5.

Viewing the Union's case in relation to the contractual requirement to pay at the higher level, if the employee is detailed to higher level work, the conclusion must be reached in view of the findings above that the work assigned to the Clerks at the Carrier Stations cannot be regarded as higher level work or equated fully with the work of the Technician.

This view is buttressed by the holdings in the two arbitration Awards cited by the parties. In the case relied upon by the Union, Arbitrator Dolly found in favor of the grievant because as he held, if the incumbent were present on the weekend when the grievant was his substitute the higher level incumbent would not have performed any duties that the grievant did not perform on that weekend. In the instant case, this record supports the conclusion that the Technician performs many duties over and above those required by the designated Clerks who are in the aggrieved class.

There are two significant provisions in the Award of Arbitrator Garrett which relate directly to the issue presented in this case.

In the first of these he addressed himself to the contention raised by the Union herein regarding the failure of the Clerk's job description to encompass all the duties required of them. On this point he stated: 1/

> Job descriptions normally are intended only to reflect the significant requirements, duties, responsibilities, and working conditions of various jobs in such manner as to provide adequate factual basis to determine appropriate rates of pay for the jobs in question. Position (or job) descriptions in large enterprises, moreover, inevitably include general statements describing functions and responsibilities which either overlap or are closely similar to functions included in other position or job descriptions.

That is true here. There are certain essential clerical tasks and data collection assignments that are similar in both the actual and written job descriptions for the Clerks and the Technicians with whom they are compared by the Union. However, there are, as stated above, disparate key or core elements in each of these classifications which must be recognized. There has been no requirement placed upon the Clerk to perform many of the distinguishing higher level duties and responsibilities of this Level 6 Classification.

In this connection Arbitrator Garrett wrote:

> Determination of an appropriate level of compensation for a given Position (as a whole) normally involves considering those of its elements which require the highest levels of responsibility, skill, training and the like. All duties performed under a given position description normally do not call for the highest level of all of those factors which are considered in slotting a position in the pay scale. Thus, in practice, it is by no means unusual in large enterprises, with inter-related work functions, to find incumbents of two or more different positions at times performing similar or even identical individual work assignments or duties at different rates of pay. In the Postal Service, as matters now stand, each employee is paid for the position which such employee fills, and not for each separate duty which he or she may perform within scope of that position, at one time or another.

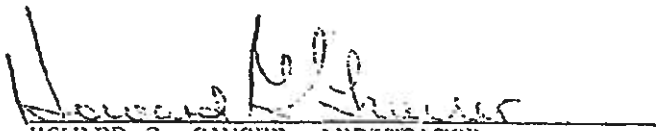
1/Opinion and Award issued April 2, 1975 in connection with Grievances AC-NAT-5753, A-NAT-2964, and A-NAT-5759.

Once again, in the instant case, an examination of the full scope of the duties assigned and performed by the Clerks involved as contrasted with the duties which the PSDS technician may be and is required to be able to perform establishes that the technician is in fact held to a higher level of responsibility, skill, training and the like which call for a Level 6 compensation slotting. The clerks are performing, according to the description of the job duties offered by the witnesses, what might be called time and attendance work predominantly. Others are performing time and attendance work for a portion of their work day and various other clerical duties relating to accounting and maintenance of necessary forms. That work is most closely related to that performed by specialized clerks slotted at Level 5. The highest level of skill involved in any of these miscellaneous tasks does not bring the job content up to Level 6.

For all these reasons, the evidence adduced by the Union in this proceeding with regard to the work required of the Clerks at the Carrier Stations, on whose behalf this grievance was brought, did not establish that they were required to perform or were performing the work of the Postal Source Data System Technician, PS-6; and this grievance requesting that these aggrieved clerks be compensated at Level 6 must be denied.

A W A R D

The grievance filed in Case No. AB-W-1520, alleging a violation of Article XXV (1) and (4) of the 1973-75 National Agreement is hereby denied.



HOWARD G. GAMSER, ARBITRATOR

Washington, DC
October 28, 1975

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	CASE NO. AC-NAT-6743
and
AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO	Issued: May 25, 1977

BACKGROUND

This national level grievance involves interpretation and application of Article XXV, Sections 1, 2, and 4 of the July 21, 1973 National Agreement, reading: 1

> "1. Higher level work is defined as an assignment to a ranked higher level position, whether or not such position has been authorized at the installation.
>
> "2. An employee, except a rural carrier, who is detailed to higher level work shall be paid at the higher level for time actually spent on such job. An employee's higher level rate shall be determined as if he were promoted to the position. An employee temporarily assigned or detailed to a lower level position shall be paid at his own rate.

. . . . . .

"4. Any employee detailed to higher level work shall be given a written management order, stating beginning and approximate termination, and directing the employee to perform the duties of the higher level position. Such written order shall be accepted as authorization for the higher level pay. The failure of management to give a written order is not grounds for denial of higher level pay if the employee was otherwise directed to perform the duties."

(Underscoring added.)

In the late 1960's the Post Office Department developed a statistical sampling program to collect data covering various types of mail volume, including service and other mail characteristics for use at all levels of management. The program, titled "Origin-Destination Information System" (ODIS), began to operate in April of 1970. 2

With the advent of postal reorganization and establishment of the USPS, ODIS was embraced as a convenient tool for measuring success in achieving newly devised service standards. About 12,000 first and second class post offices now participate in the nationwide program, which is largely computerized. Raw data collection in the 12,000 installations is accomplished by use of Form 1300, to which data are transcribed by an individual employee completing the Form for each particular delivery unit involved in a given sample. The Form 1300 in each instance is completed in accordance with a "Header Sheet," normally prepared by 3 accounting or supervisory personnel, which shows the date of the test, the unit to be tested, the criteria for selection of sample pieces to be tested, and the test identification number. Under "Instructions for Data Collection Employees" each Header Sheet, among other things, cautions that no test may be conducted unless the tester has available the "Data Collection Procedures, Methods Handbook M-61" and the "Revised Data Collection Procedures."

ODIS is described in Methods Handbook M-60 as well as in the M-61. The M-60 Handbook primarily is for use by post office officials, whereas the M-61 Handbook was prepared in much simpler form for easy use by employees completing Forms 1300 in the some 12,000 postal installations involved in the program, recognizing the difficulty of providing advance personal instruction to such a large number of persons. The M-61 advises that the Header Sheet for each sample is to be prepared by "accounting personnel." It then includes detailed instructions for dealing with substantially all of the questions likely to be encountered by the Data Collection Employee. 4

The M-60 Handbook states in Section 335: 5

"335 Data Collection Employee

335.1 Must be thoroughly familiar with the instructions and forms involved in collecting data pertaining to origin-destination and service analysis, as well as the classes and subclasses of mail.

"335.2 Complies with the analysis and recording instructions carefully and without deviation.

"335.3 Collects all required data and records it correctly on appropriate forms.

"335.4 Refers to his supervisor any matters not covered by instructions or which require resolution. Raises questions on matters requiring clarification."

Section 553 further provides that, after Forms 1300 have been completed and returned to the accounting section, accounting personnel shall:

"553 Thoroughly review Forms 1300 for completeness and correctness. In addition:

a. Check to see if the number of Forms 1300 is the same as the number recorded in Item 8 of the corresponding header sheet.

b. Check to see if the data collection employee indicated having Handbook M-61 in his possession during the test by the recording of the handbook serial number in Item 9 of Form 1300-HH and HR.

"c. Check to see that the identification information has been correctly entered on each Form 1300 used. Special care should be taken to insure the accuracy of the test identification number on each Form 1300.

d. Check to see that each column has been completed in accordance with instructions.

e. Review the forms to see that a number 2 pencil was used, and that the shape of the numbers entered conforms to the special rules for printing and that entries do not extend into the blue areas of Form 1300 (Refer to the Data Collection Procedures Handbook, M-61)."

On or before September 5, 1969, a Standard Position of Data Collection Technician was established in Level 6 with the following position description: 6

"BASIC FUNCTION. Collects and analyzes a variety of statistical data on selected operating and financial activities in the post office in order to serve management needs for these data and performs in relief assignment for postal source data technicians are required.

"DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES. Performs A and B as assigned in accordance with the requirements of the post office:

(A) Collects and analyzes management data under any number of data collection systems such as cost ascertainment, national service index, and ZIP Code usage. Participates in data collection activities related to one-time special studies, requiring the proper interpretation of complex written instructions. This involves identification of sampling units and updating the lists as required, and recognition of various categories of mail for which characteristics are being measured. Audits report forms prepared by others to insure consistency between revenue, pieces and weight for each mail category. Makes adjustments for obvious errors. Computes and enters on forms total revenue, pieces and weight for each mail category. Makes record of errors for use in quality measurement and control.

(B) Performs in relief capacity for postal source data technicians in operating the PSDS equipment in the data collection site in the post office and/or controlling the weighing activities at a weighing station in the PSDS system in the post office.

(C) Performs other related duties as necessary.

"ORGANIZATIONAL RELATIONSHIPS. Is under the administrative and technical supervision of the director, office of finance (or chief accountant) or other designated supervisor."

In larger postal installations throughout the U.S. incumbents of the Data Collection Technician position (as well as incumbents of the Level 6 position of Postal Source Data Technician) normally have been assigned significant duties under the ODIS program, and this typically has included the completion of Forms 1300. In the many thousands of smaller installations throughout the country involved in ODIS, however, no Data Collection (or Source Data) Technician positions have been authorized. Management apparently has contemplated from the beginning of ODIS that such data collection (completing Forms 1300) would be assigned to Level 5 Clerks in all such smaller installations. The present case essentially involves a claim that, when so assigned to complete Forms 1300, Level 5 Clerks in effect are assigned to the Data Collection Technician position and thus are entitled to Level 6 pay for all such work. 7

Form 1300 requires the following information as to each piece of mail in the sample to be tested: 8

A. Postmark Date - month and day if legible, or an indication that it cannot be read. 9

B. Postmark of Origin - whether local, non-local, foreign, or illegible. (If non-local, indication of the first three digits of the Zip Code of origin is required or, if unknown, then a specification of Post Office and State or foreign country. 10

C. Mail Class - whether first class, air mail, priority mail, parcel post, other fourth, or third class. 11

D. Mail Type - whether letter, card, SPR (small parcels and rolls), flat, parcel, or catalog. 12

E. Indicia - whether stamp, meter, permit, or government. 13

F. ZIP in mailing address - whether correct, incorrect, or not shown. (Where incorrect, the ZIP shown in the address is listed.) 14

While the completion of these entries would not appear to present serious difficulty for a qualified and properly trained Level 5 Clerk, there are many complexities and distinctions which may have to be understood in order to complete Form 1300 accurately, and accuracy is essential. The M-61 Manual consists of 43 pages of descriptive material and instructions in large type which are designed to deal with substantially all such problems likely to be encountered in completing the Form. Two audio-visual workbooks (7D-23C and 7-D-24D) also have been prepared for use in self-instruction with three separate film strips. The M-60 Manual also provides that a data collection employee may refer to his or her supervisor on all matters requiring clarification. (For whatever reason, the M-61 Manual does not so advise the employee.) 15

There is no evidence that any problem arose as to possible application of Article XXV to completing Forms 1300 under the July 21, 1971 National Agreement. Some time in 1974, however, a grievance was filed at the Springfield, Massachusetts Post Office, apparently seeking Level 6 pay for Level 5 Clerks assigned to some ODIS duties. The precise facts involved in that grievance (including the actual duties performed by the Springfield grievants) are not revealed in the present record, which shows only that the grievance was 16 granted at the Regional Level. Under date of October 9, 1974 the Director of the Office of Labor Relations for the Northeast Region wrote to the Postmaster at Springfield explaining the Regional decision as follows:

> "Upon further review prior to arbitration it was determined in view of the fact the Springfield Post Office has not authorized Data Collection Technicians, SP2-506, Level 6, those Level 5 employees performing the attached duties would be entitled to higher level pay for time actually spent on such assignment.
>
> "Our determination in awarding those employees who have properly filed grievances for higher level pay is based on Article XXV, Higher Level Assignment, as contained in the 1973 National Agreement."
>
> (Underscoring added.)

Attached to this explanatory letter was copy of the Level 6 Data Collection Technician position description. 17

Sixteen days after the above letter was written, Grievance V-74-7232 (74-3378) was filed by Chief Steward Gillotti in Danbury, Connecticut, seeking Level 6 pay for all Level 5 Clerks while assigned to conduct ODIS tests in Danbury. The Danbury grievance recited that it was based 18 on a "similar grievance filed by the Springfield, Mass. local which was resolved in a pre-arbitration decision granting higher level pay for ODIS duties." This grievance ultimately was designated as AB-5271 and was denied by USPS at all levels on the ground that there was no showing that the Danbury Level 5 Clerks actually were performing at Level 6 while doing ODIS work.

Grievance AB-5271 is one of many hundreds of similar grievances now on file. Along with four other grievances it has been included in the present national level grievance as a representative case to illustrate the problem involved. Other such representative grievances are: AB-7593 (Iowa City, Iowa), AB-8709 (Marblehead, Massachusetts), AB-5620 (Greenwich, Connecticut), and AB-6244 (Meriden, Connecticut). 19

Chief Steward Gillotti was one of the first Clerks assigned to ODIS work in Danbury, apparently some time in 1972. Originally, he not only completed the Form 1300 but also prepared Header Sheets for various tests on the basis of computer print-outs provided by Management. This latter function seems to have been taken over by accounting personnel around 1974 (in accordance with the M-60 and 61 Handbooks), and is not within the scope of the present case.

The first individual assigned to complete Forms 1300 in Iowa City, was a Level 5 Clerk, Eugene Sorge, who also is APWU Steward there. Sorge was assigned ODIS duties some time in 1972 and studied both the M-60 and M-61 Handbooks on the clock and at home, in order to master the details of the work and pass a test in completing Form 1300. On a number of occasions, starting in 1973, his work was checked 21 by an individual from Des Moines who apparently was a Data Collection Technician (there is no direct evidence on this point).

It appears that Data Collection Technician positions typically are authorized and filled in larger postal installations throughout the country. A group, or "cadre," of Level 5 Clerks also typically may be designated as back-up personnel for the Level 6 Technicians in such larger installations--members of the "cadre" in at least some installations, have been paid at Level 6 when assigned to replace or fill in for a Level 6 Technician. There is no indication that Level 6 Technician positions are authorized for any smaller postal installations, where the Service assigns Level 5 Clerks to complete Forms 1300 as part of their work assignments as Clerk. The Standard Position description for Distribution Clerk lists, among various other potential duties of the job: "Maintains records of mails." 22

The June 6, 1976 letter of AFWU President Filbey, which initiated the present national level grievance, noted that a large number of local grievances already had been filed "on the issue of higher level pay for employees who are performing all or part of the ODIS function" and asserted that any employee engaged in such work should be paid at Level 6 "for any and all time spent on ODIS" (underscoring added). 23

1. APWU

The APWU brief asserts that the recording of data on mail volume under the ODIS program is performed "throughout" the Postal Service by Data Collection Technicians at Level 6. Under Article XXV, Section 1, of the National Agreement, an employee assigned to a "ranked higher level position" is performing "higher level work" even if the higher level position has not been authorized for inclusion in the complement of employees at the specific postal installation involved. Thus when a Level 5 Clerk in a smaller post office "conducts an ODIS test" he or she is doing the work of a Level 6 Technician and should receive Level 6 pay. 24

The Union holds, therefore, that the broad issue stated in President Filbey's letter initiating this grievance, must be resolved in its favor once it is found that "ODIS is part of the duties and responsibilities of a Data Collection Technician." Even if ODIS sampling were examined solely in terms of the level of skill required by the specific work involved, however, the Union deems the ODIS test to constitute a "representative function" of the Level 6 Data Collection Technician job. Form 1300 is the heart of the ODIS program. The APWU urges that its preparation "requires thorough familiarity with complex instructions and forms as well as classes and subclasses of mail" and that an "extensive training program, both on and off the job" is essential to assure proper completion of Forms 1300. Each employee assigned to complete a Form 1300 is provided with copies of the M-60 and M-61 Handbooks. It asserts that the "skip sample interval" is determined by the data collection employee and depends on the number of pieces of all mail that the sampling unit is expected to receive on the day of the test. It also claims that a test Clerk at times may be required to estimate mail volume.

The APWU brief analyzes in some detail a June 7, 1973 decision of Arbitrator Holly in an APWU case from Macon, on which it relies here as a valuable precedent. It also strives to distinguish an October 28, 1975 decision of Arbitrator Gamser in an APWU case from Los Angeles, cited by the Postal Service, where a grievance under Article XXV, Sections 1 and 4, was denied. While disagreeing with the decision, the APWU here relies heavily on evidence and argument presented by USPS in the Gamser case, which might be construed to indicate that in that proceeding the Service had characterized ODIS work as a significant and representative function of the Postal Service Data Technician job (also in Level 6). It further urges that a number of its exhibits (which are USPS documents) reveal that the completion of Forms 1300 is a "basic duty and responsibility of the Data Collection Technician" and cites testimony of a Data Collection Technician to support the same proposition. 26

Since Data Collection Technicians also are used in the Revenue, Pieces and Weight Program (RPW), the Union notes Section 425 of the F-35 Handbook, stating: 27

"425 DATA COLLECTION TECHNICIAN

Is responsible for:

a. Being thoroughly familiar with all the instructions and forms involved in the collection of data pertaining to pieces, revenue and weight, as well as the classes and sub-classes of mail.

"b. Following the analysis and recording instructions carefully and without deviation, unless specifically instructed otherwise by his superior or higher designated authority.

c. Collecting all required data carefully and recording it neatly on the appropriate forms. Extending, editing and reviewing completed test forms of other data collection employees.

d. Bringing to the attention of his supervisor any matters not covered by instructions or which require resolution. Raises questions on matters requiring clarification."

According to the APWU, this statement is "virtually identical" with a statement concerning ODIS in the M-60 Handbook, Section 335:

"335 DATA COLLECTION EMPLOYEE

335.1 Must be thoroughly familiar with the instructions and forms involved in collecting data pertaining to origin-destination and service analysis, as well as the classes and sub-classes of mail.

335.2 Complies with the analysis and recording instructions carefully and without deviation.

"335.3 Collects all required data and records it correctly on appropriate forms.

335.4 Refers to his supervisor any matters not covered by instructions or which require resolution. Raises questions on matters requiring clarification."

The Union also suggests that the Service plans to use mail processing employees, as needed, in all of its testing programs. It notes that Fiscal Handbook F-35, .evenue and Cost Analysis System (RPW) provides in Chapter 4, Para. 426: 28

"426. MAIL PROCESSING EMPLOYEES

At post offices where no data collection technicians or other finance employees are authorized to collect data at the sampling site mail processing employees will assume responsibility for collecting data. Where assigned finance employees are authorized, mail processing employees may be requested as needed to supplement the staff of finance employees in the collection of data and will be returned to mail processing duties upon completion of data collection duties."

Since a similar policy is indicated in the Postal Bulletin 21024 (February 20, 1975), the APWU infers that the Service intends to act on the basis that the skills required of the Data Collection Technician do not vary from one information collecting system to another. 29

As the Union sees it, the level of skill required of the employee who records the basic data in the ODIS system is fairly representative of the level of skill required of Technicians who record data in the RPW and In-Office Cost programs. The Service itself holds that the preparation of forms associated with RPW and In-Office Cost is a level 6 skill. Thus the Union concludes that preparation of Form 1300 is comparable in every material respect to the RPW and In-Office Cost forms, so as to require Level 6 pay. 30

In his opening remarks, USPS Counsel asserted that Data Collection Technicians received Level 6 pay because of "numerous and complex" duties and responsibilities and also because they are required to make "judgmental decisions" and much of their work is "unreviewable." The APWU stresses this latter claim and notes that USPS Counsel, as well as its job classification expert in the Los Angeles hearing before Arbitrator Gamser, had asserted that Postal Source Data Technicians received Level 6 pay, in part, because their reporting of mail volume was unreviewable and was used in making management decisions. 31

Taking these USPS assertions at face value, the Union now stresses that data entered on a Form 1300 cannot be reviewed for accuracy later. Such data also may be significant in subsequent formulation of important management decisions as to design of facilities, manpower planning, and rate negotiations. 32

The APWU further claims that the February 20, 1975 Postal Bulletin (21024) "classifies" ODIS data collection duties as Level 6, and that ODIS testing thus was assigned to the Level 6 Data Collection Technician as a "basic duty." It argues that USPS classification experts must have "concluded that ODIS is a level 6 skill" and had to be "classified as such." Postal Bulletin 21024, says the Union, "accomplished this task" by "effectively amending the Data Collection Technician Standard Position Description." Here the APWU greatly stresses assertions made in the Los Angeles case by USPS representatives to the effect that ODIS was an important part of the duties of Postal Source Data Technicians in Level 6. The Union believes that the Service now should be held bound by such representations so as to sustain the present grievance. 33

Finally, the APWU notes that Level 6 Data Collection Technicians are authorized for larger postal installations and regularly prepare Forms 1300 as part of their work. In many such installations, moreover, Level 5 Clerks are used to supplement the Data Collection Technicians, and receive Level 6 pay. This is illustrated in the following Operating Instruction at the Charlotte, North Carolina, Post Office in regard to Clerks assigned to ODIS work: 34

> "B. Data Collection Cadres will distribute mail in their normal assignment except when assigned to data collection work.
> 1. Data Collection Cadres assigned to assist a regular Data Collection Technician will be under the latter's directions.

"2. Data Collection Cadres assigned to replace a regular Data Collection Technician will work in data collection without direct supervision. They will be paid higher level 06 for all time used in any data collection work."

Union evidence confirms that a similar policy is in effect at the MSC facility in Prince Georges County, Maryland, and other larger installations. Given these facts, the Union brief concludes: 35

"The payment of level 6 pay to Level 5 clerks performing the ODIS test at larger postal facilities is significant because at these installations, management is acutely aware that ODIS work is an integral part of the duties and responsibilities of Level 6 Data Collection Technicians. Management at the small post offices, where there are no Data Collection Technician positions, has greater difficulty identifying ODIS work with the higher level position. Of course, an employee is entitled to higher level pay irrespective of whether the higher level position is authorized at the installation. (Art. XXV, Sec. 1). The performance of the ODIS test requires Level 6 pay wherever the work is done."

(Underscoring added.)

2. USPS

The Service emphasizes that employees assigned to Level 6 positions do not always perform duties which, if viewed in isolation from other duties and responsibilities of the given position, would warrant payment of Level 6. It quotes the following passages from the April 2, 1975 decision of the Impartial Chairman in the Mail Handler-APWU Jurisdictional dispute: 36

> "... In the Postal Service, as matters now stand, each employee is paid for the position which such employee fills, and not for each separate duty which he or she may perform within the scope of that position, at one time or another.
>
> "Thus, in practice, it is by no means unusual in large enterprises, with interrelated work functions, to find incumbents of two or more different positions at times performing similar or even identical individual work assignments or duties at different rates of pay.
>
> . . . . . .
> "Determination of an appropriate level of compensation for a given position (as a whole) normally involves considering > those of its elements which require the highest levels of responsibility, skill, training, and the like. All duties performed under a given position description normally do not call for the highest level of all of those factors which are considered in slotting a position in the pay scale."

37 The Service stresses that its rates of pay are established on the basis of the highest level of skill required of the various positions, not on secondary functions. Thus, it says:

> "... in order for a lower rated employee to successfully lay claim to higher level pay, he must perform at least one duty of that higher position that requires the higher level of skill."

38 The Service further asserts that this analysis was upheld by Arbitrator Gamser in the Los Angeles case where Level 5 Clerks sought Level 6 Technician pay because they were directed to perform data collection or recording functions, primarily under the Attendance Time and Leave Program (ATAL), but also under the Work Load Recording System (WLR). In that case the AFWU argued that the Clerks so assigned were performing the same work as Postal Source Data Technicians which is a Level 6 position.

The Data Collection Technician was placed in Level 6, says the Service, only because an incumbent may be responsible for performing a wide variety of statistical functions, such as the Revenue, Pieces and Weight program (RPW), completing Forms 2600 to measure in-office costs, and various functions under the USPS probability sampling system and other tests requiring a high degree of judgment. In contrast, says the Service, all that is required in completing a Form 1300 is to record what the individual sees on each piece of mail in the sample selected. For this purpose it is necessary only to recognize "gross" pieces of mail, whereas a Data Collection Technician must be familiar with 135 classes and sub-classes of mail to conduct a RPW test. 39

In addition, the Level 5 Clerk completing a Form 1300 clearly has no responsibility for the performance of others. In contrast, the Data Collection Technician may be responsible for reviewing, editing, and extending test forms completed by other data collection employees. It requires only a brief period to train a Level 5 Clerk to complete a Form 1300, says the Service, while it may take six months to train a Data Collection Technician adequately. 40

Finally, the Service stresses the testimony of its job classification expert that the completion of Forms 1300 entails skills and responsibilities well within the scope of the Level 5 Clerk position, and notes that the APWU presented no countervailing expert testimony. 41

This case involves a technical but fundamentally important question under Article XXV of the 1973 National Agreement: What is the meaning of the phrase "assignment to a ranked higher level position"? 42

Although the existing USPS position description and classification system initially was developed by the Post Office Department during the mid-1950's, no relevant practice developed prior to the advent of conventional collective bargaining in the Postal Service in 1971, which could be helpful in answering this question. Until 1971 the concept of an "assignment" to a higher level position for pay purposes apparently had a quite different meaning than is true today. Article XIV of the 1968 Agreement (between the Post Office Department and the seven craft organizations then in existence) is revealing in this respect, since it was the forerunner of the present Article XXV. The old Article XIV required higher level pay only when an employee was "detailed" to a higher level position in writing. In no event, moreover, was such a "detail" possible unless the higher level position actually was included in the authorized complement of the specific postal installation. 43

Thus Article XIV spelled out the following limitations which make clear that the present issue could not have arisen under the 1968 Agreement: 44

"C. Conditions for Use of Paragraphs A and B above:

1. The phrase 'to a position having a salary level higher than his own' shall mean to a position which has been established, approved as to job content, ranked, and approved for use by an authorized postal official higher in the organization structure than the supervisor of the work unit in which the position is located. The term established means the position is part of the permanent complement of its installation or has been added to the complement for 'higher-level purposes only.'

. . . . . .

6. Any employee detailed to perform the work of a higher level position shall be given a written management order which directs the employee to perform the work of the higher level position. The fact that the employee was directed in writing to perform the work of a higher level position will be accepted as evidence that the employee performed all the required duties of the assigned position. When local management decides that a non-supervisory position must be 'covered' and an employee is detailed for that purpose, the position > will not be segmented in scope for the sole purpose of avoiding a higher level pay opportunity. The duration or nature of the detail may be changed or terminated at any time by management by issuance of an amending written order."

> (Underscoring added.)

In their 1971 negotiations the parties modified the above quoted limitations in an apparent effort to embrace policies commonly found in collective bargaining agreements covering major industrial enterprises in the private sector: they specifically defined "higher level work" as an "assignment" to a ranked higher level position "whether or not such position has been authorized at the installation." Then in their 1973 negotiations they added the sentence to Article XXV, Section 4 which states: "The failure of management to give a written order is not grounds for denial of higher level pay if the employee was otherwise directed to perform the duties." 45

Thus the stage was set for the present interpretive problem. While the term "assignment" now apparently has a broader meaning than the term "detail," whatever difference there may be in the scope of these terms presents no problem for present purposes: there is no suggestion here that Level 5 Clerks have not in fact been assigned the specific duty of completing Forms 1300 under the ODIS Program since 1972. Since Level 6 Technicians also perform precisely this duty 46 under their higher level position descriptions, to a significant extent, the Union reasons that the assignment to complete Forms 1300 constitutes an "assignment" to the higher level "position."

This argument requires careful consideration of what constitutes a "position" for purposes of applying Article XXV, in view of the somewhat unusual--if not unique--nature of the position description and pay structure in the Postal Service. Identification of higher level production jobs in large industrial establishments, for purposes of assignments and wage payment, usually presents no serious difficulty. In such situations most of the jobs typically involve specific work locations or "work stations" for which employees are scheduled (often as members of defined crews), to attend, operate, service, or maintain some specific piece of equipment or some portion of a major producing unit. When a lower rated employee in such a bargaining unit is directed to move into such an assignment temporarily, it normally is as a replacement for a scheduled employee and the applicable rate of pay for the specific job thus is clear. An important exception to this, in the generality of heavy industry, typically exists in respect to so-called "trade or craft" jobs, or as to highly skilled maintenance or technical positions. Jobs in these categories frequently may perform a wide variety of functions at different times and are not confined to single work locations or areas. In filling jobs in these categories, the employer typically is concerned with the highest levels of skill and responsibility that may be required by the job at times, even though not required in much, or even most, of the work routinely performed by an incumbent. Employees assigned to such jobs, therefore, usually are paid at a level primarily determined on the basis of the highest level skills involved at any one given time. When employees on such jobs are performing only more routine and less demanding functions, they nonetheless remain available, as needed, for the higher level duties and responsibilities of their job. When employees on lower rated jobs are assigned to work with incumbents of such highly skilled jobs, or to perform duties which they also perform, it may be extremely difficult to decide, in any given instance, whether such employee should receive the higher rate.

The job structure in the Postal Service, for the 48 ost part, is markedly different from that in most large ndustrial bargaining units in the private sector. Here the great bulk of the work force of hundreds of thousands of employees, working in many thousands of postal installations, is covered by a relatively limited number of Key or Standard Position Descriptions. These Descriptions were developed in a civil service environment, as the result of an Act of Congress, and without any collective bargaining. Some employees assigned to such Positions may never be required to perform certain duties clearly covered in the given description. As bargaining evolved in the Postal Service initially, moreover, it was on a "craft" basis with the essential outlines of the respective "crafts" largely determined by the so-called "Key" Position Descriptions established by the Congress. Position Descriptions also were based on an assumption that proper testing might be utilized, in advance, to determine whether individual employees were qualified for assignment to any given Key Position.

In one major earlier decision, the Impartial Chair- 49 man was exposed to some of the salient characteristics of USPS Position Descriptions and rates of pay. The Mail

Handlers Union in Cases AW-NAT-5753, etc. (The Mail Handler-APWU Jurisdictional Dispute, decided April 2, 1975) claimed jurisdiction over work specifically covered by the Mail Handler Position Description, but also long and typically performed by Clerks in many locations, including installations where both crafts were employed. The Opinion in that case included the following paragraphs:

> "... The Mail Handlers appear to assume that jurisdictional work claims are relatively easy to deal with by applying general language appearing in established Key and Standard Position descriptions. This view is unrealistic. Job descriptions normally are intended only to reflect the significant requirements, duties, responsibilities, and working conditions of various jobs in such manner as to provide adequate factual bases to determine appropriate rates of pay for the jobs in question. Position (or job) descriptions in large enterprises, moreover, inevitably include general statements describing functions and responsibilities which either overlap or are closely similar to functions included in other position or job descriptions. The evidence here confirms that Postal Service operations in no way provide an exception to this generalization. Indeed, the Position Descriptions of both Key Position 8 and Key Position 12 actually include some identical duties, as: (1) operating cancelling machines, (2) facing mail, and (3) opening and dumping sacks. It also is clear that separate Standard Positions for Sack Sorting Machine Operator exist at Levels 4, 5, and 6, with some having Mail Handler incumbents and others Clerk incumbents. Finally, there are no incumbents at all of the Mail Handler Position in a great number of Post Offices, so that typical Mail Handler duties in such locations long have been performed by employees working under other Position Descriptions, and specifically by Clerks.

"Thus the only possible conclusion on this record is that Mail Handlers and Clerks often perform the same or similar work functions, throughout the far-flung operations of the Postal Service, and that such functions long have been deemed to fall within the broad language used in the descriptions of both Key Position 8 and Key Position 12. While the Mail Handlers place great weight upon a single item in Key Position 8 which refers to occasional distribution of parcel post (without use of a scheme), there thus can be no doubt that this kind of distribution of parcel post long has been performed by Clerks as well as Mail Handlers.

. . . . . .

"Here the Mail Handlers argue that the Postal Service has done violence to 'its own congressionally imposed equal pay regulations' in awarding parcel sorting work to Clerks. It emphasizes that in the various Post Offices throughout the country Distribution Clerks and Mail Handlers may perform some identical duties, occasionally side by side. Since most Mail Handlers are paid at Level 4 and most Clerks at Level 5, the Mail Handlers characterize this situation as a clear violation of the 'equal pay for equal work' principle. The proper remedy, say the Mail Handlers, is to award all 'simple, non-scheme separation of parcels' to the Mail Handlers.

"This argument rests upon an erroneous assumption as to the intent of the above-quoted excerpts from the Postal Service Compensation Act of 1955 and Section 451 of the Postal Manual. These provisions both, on their face, deal with the ranking (or classifying) of positions. In no way do they purport to indicate that individual employees working at different pay levels, under different position descriptions, should receive the same rate of pay for performing those individual aspects of their respective positions which are identical or otherwise overlap. Determination of an appropriate level of compensation for a given Position (as a whole) normally involves considering those of its elements which require the highest levels of responsibility, skill, training and the like. All duties performed under a given position description normally do not call for the highest level of all of those > factors which are considered in slotting a position in the pay scale. Thus, in practice, it is by no means unusual in large enterprises, with inter-related work functions, to find incumbents of two or more different positions at times performing similar or even identical individual work assignments or duties at different rates of pay. In the Postal Service, as matters now stand, each employee is paid for the position which such employee fills, and not for each separate duty which he or she may perform within the scope of that position, at one time or another."

Nothing in the present record indicates that the basic principles enunciated in these paragraphs from the Opinion in the APWU-Mail Handler Jurisdictional Dispute are not fully applicable here. In short, the assignment of an employee to perform some particular duty which also is performed by a higher level position, does not necessarily constitute assignment to such higher level position for purposes of Article XXV. The initial argument of the APWU in the present case--that assignment to complete Forms 1300 in itself constitutes assignment to the Level 6 Data Collection Technician position--thus must be rejected out of hand. 50

The remaining critical issue is whether the duty of completing Forms 1300--as such--requires Level 6 pay because it is a representative duty of the Level 6 Technician 51 position in the sense of requiring skills and responsibilities which fairly reflect essential requirements of the Level 6 Data Collection Technician.

This inquiry properly starts with the described Duties and Responsibilities of the Data Collection Technician: 52

"DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES. Performs A and B as assigned in accordance with the requirements of the post office:

(A) Collects and analyzes management data under any number of data collection systems such as cost ascertainment, national service index, and ZIP Code usage. Participates in data collection activities related to one-time special studies, requiring the proper interpretation of complex written instructions. This involves identification of sampling units and updating the lists as required, and recognition of various categories of mail for which characteristics are being measured. Audits report forms prepared by others to insure consistency between revenue, pieces and weight for each mail category. Makes adjustments for obvious errors. Computes and enters on forms total revenue, pieces and weight for each mail category. Makes record of errors for use in quality measurement and control.

"(B) Performs in relief capacity for postal source data technicians in operating the PSDS equipment in the data collection site in the post office and/or controlling the weighing activities at a weighing station in the PSDS system in the post office.

(C) Performs other related duties as necessary."

From the face of this Description some Data Collection Technician duties obviously are more demanding and significant than others for the purpose of rating or classifying the position. A requirement to "collect" data clearly is less demanding than a requirement to analyze such data. An incumbent may work in "any number of data collection systems" and some such systems are substantially more demanding than others. One such more demanding system is "cost ascertainment" which is specified in the Position Description, whereas ODIS is not. An incumbent also may be required to audit report forms prepared by others "to insure consistency" between revenue, pieces, and weight for each mail category. This also may entail an important responsibility of making adjustments for obvious errors. 53

A Data Collection Technician also must be able to "measure" characteristics of all of the various categories of mail and compute total revenue, pieces, and weight for each mail category. Participation in special "one-time" studies also may be necessary, requiring interpretation of complex written instructions. 54

There can be no question that the analyzing, auditing, computing and correcting responsibilities detailed in the Data Collection Technician description, coupled with its reference to "any number of data collection systems," contemplate levels of skill and responsibility well above those involved in merely completing Forms 1300. The Key Position Description for Clerk, moreover, includes: "Maintains records of mail" as a miscellaneous duty which may be required. The APWU here (through testimony of a Clerk with 25 years of service) seeks to depict this duty as involving only "reporting the number of feet of mail in the Clerk's mail case and signing for certified and insured mail." This characterization hardly can be accepted in the face of (1) the reasonable meaning of the Description itself, and (2) extensive evidence (largely from the Union's own testimony) in the Los Angeles hearing before Arbitrator Gamser showing that Clerks long have performed significant recording duties. Thus it would appear that the recording of data on a Form 1300 properly is encompassed in the Level 5 Clerk job unless the other evidence in this record affirmatively establishes that this specific duty requires skills and responsibilities which make it a representative function of the Data Collection Technician position for classification purposes, even though not calling for the highest level of skill and responsibility of the Technician. 55

Numerous Union arguments bear on this question. Initially the Union emphasizes that (1) ODIS is treated in detail in two separate Handbooks (the M-60 and the M-61) and that (2) audio-visual programs, with two explanatory work books, have been developed for ODIS training purposes. (In some instances, special two-day training programs also 56 have been provided for both Level 5 Clerks and Level 6 Data Collection Technicians.) The APWU urges that in order to complete Forms 1300 Clerks (1) must become thoroughly familiar with both the M-60 and M-61 Handbooks, and (2) must determine skip intervals for sampling in accordance with Section 522.2a and .2b of the M-60 Handbook. The fact is, however, that the M-60 Handbook was prepared primarily for use by USPS officials, whereas the M-61 is in much simpler form and intended for use by data collection personnel. Even though one Union witness was told in 1972 to study the -60, when ODIS was initiated at Iowa City, this one incident provides no basis to find that all Clerks who may be assigned to completing Forms 1300 actually are required to be fully familiar with the contents of the M-60.

Nor can it be found that the Clerk who records data on Forms 1300 also is responsible for determining the sample skip interval (on the basis of volume expected to be received by the sampling unit on the day of the test). Under the M-60 (Section 521) this clearly is a responsibility of "accounting personnel" who prepare the Form 1300 "Header Sheets" which then (Section 523) are given to the "data collection employees" along with a supply of Forms 1300 and a copy of the M-61 Handbook. The M-61 itself states flatly that "A Header Sheet for each sample is completed by the accounting personnel." Even though at least one Clerk in Danbury prepared Header Sheets in 1973 and early 1974, the evidence shows that this practice was discontinued there, and properly so. 5

While obviously some training is essential to qualify a Clerk to complete Forms 1300 adequately, the M-61 Handbook appears to be relatively easy for a qualified Clerk to understand and absorb. Moreover, a Clerk completing a Form 1300 is entitled--under Section 335 of the M-60 Handbook--to seek clarification from his or her supervisor on any matter not covered by the M-61 Handbook instructions; or otherwise requiring clarification. 58

Since the basic function of the Level 5 Distribution Clerk (Key Position 12) requires separation of mail in accordance with established schemes, and the development of requisite "scheme knowledge" requires intensive study, there is nothing in the present record to warrant a finding that the training required to complete Forms 1300 is more demanding than that contemplated for a Level 5 position. 59

The APWU nonetheless places heavy reliance on statements by USPS representatives during the Los Angeles hearing before Arbitrator Howard Gamser. In that case Los Angeles Level 5 Clerks claimed, unsuccessfully, that they were being assigned to perform the work of Postal Source Data Technicians in Level 6 because they were involved in time-keeping under the ATAL (Attendance, Time, and Leave) Program, and recording under the WLR (Work Load Recording) System, in a number of Carrier stations. The Union now stresses that USPS counsel had asserted, in the hearing before Arbitrator Gamser, that many decisions by Postal Source Data Technicians were "unreviewable" and subsequently were used in formulating Management decisions. USPS Senior Job Analyst Galloway also testified in the Los Angeles case that the decisions of a 60

Postal Service Data Technician as to volume under the RPW Program were unreviewable since "he is the only one that can make that decision of what volume should hit."

The APWU now seeks to capitalize on these statements in the Los Angeles case by stressing that data entered on a Form 1300 also is unreviewable, and ultimately may be relied upon in making Management decisions. It buttresses this argument by noting that Acting Director of Finance (Los Angeles) Porras had indicated in the Los Angeles hearing that the data collection function of Postal Source Data Technicians, under ODIS, was an important responsibility of that position. Thus the APWU now suggests that the USPS "should be bound by their representation before Arbitrator Gamser that conducting an ODIS test is a Level 6 skill." 61

This line of argument assumes, contrary to the present evidence, that the completion of Forms 1300 represents the entire responsibility of Postal Source Data Technicians and Data Collection Technicians under the ODIS Program. It also overlooks the fact that the USPS representatives in Los Angeles had stressed that the Postal Source Data Technicians there made judgmental decisions which were unreviewable. Such judgments are required, for example, under the RPW Program and entail considerably more knowledge and responsibility than required for making entries on Form 1300. The bare fact that the making of entries may be unreviewable hardly is controlling where the entries do not in themselves require a significant degree of responsible judgment.

Even though one USPS witness in Los Angeles may have seemed to urge that ODIS was an important part of the work of Postal Source Data Technicians, there is no reason to believe that this testimony referred only to the limited function of recording data on Forms 1300 (rather than to responsibility for the entire ODIS function). 63

A related Union claim is based on an interpretation of three APWU exhibits (a job posting in the Prince Georges County MSC, a posting in Charleston, W.Va., and a Charlotte, N.C. management directive). These, the Union says, identify he ODIS "sampling and recording function" as "the basic duty and responsibility" of the Data Collection Technician position. Since the present case deals primarily with the completion of Forms 1300, however, the Union sees too much in these exhibits. Indeed, the Charleston posting states, in relevant part: "Will travel throughout the Sectional Center to take ODIS tests and perform any other duties of a Data Collection nature at associate offices in the SCF as required" (underscoring added). The Union's own evidence makes clear that the "other duties" include cost ascertainment and WLR functions at Charleston. The Prince Georges MSC posting sets forth the entire Data Collection Technician Position Description and states that the job collects and analyzes a variety of statistical data. It simply lists "ODIS Section" as the "Principal Assignment Area." 64

The Union's reliance on these exhibits again seems to reflect its basic failure to distinguish between the potential duties of a Data Collection Technician (including preparation of Header Sheets) under the ODIS Program as a whole, and the more limited function of completing Forms 65

1300. This is particularly apparent when it is noted that the Charlotte directive spells out the following as the "Responsibility" of the Data Collection Technician incumbents at that location:

"E. Responsibility

All Technicians are responsible for all data collection counts made on their tour. This includes:

1. RPW/ODIS- Makes all counts in every test during his tour. Inserts temporary headers at all holdouts affected by each test when a test begins on his tour, and removes these headers when a test ends on his tour. Keeps all managers, whose sections are affected by any RPW/ODIS test, informed of progress in those tests and cooperates with supervision in expediting distribution and dispatch consistent with proper data collection procedures.

2. In-Office Costs (PS Form 2600)- makes all readings required in this system on his tour and coordinates readings with affected supervisors.

"3. Special Tests - conducts all such counts on his tour and insures that affected supervisors are aware of these tests.

4. In all cases, technicians must keep affected supervisors informed of any data collection activity in his or her section, and cooperates with all employees whose duties may be affected by any test. In the event of a disagreement between any mail processing employee and a data collection technician, the technician will:

a. Report the problem to the Tour Superintendent immediately and abide by his decision in the matter; and

b. Report all such events to the Data Collection Officer no later than the next business day."

An APWU witness from the Prince Georges MSC confirmed that the Technicians there performed duties going well beyond the completion of Forms 1300. She estimated she spent 4 or 5 hours per tour "doing ODIS work" but stated that the rest of her time was devoted to preparing Header Sheets (including determination of appropriate skip intervals), to completing Forms 2600 (Work Load Sampling), and to other types of data collection, including the Revenue, Piece, and Weight (RPW) Program. 66

The failure to distinguish between the limited nature of completing Forms 1300, and the more demanding work of the Data Collection Technician position, seems to pervade the APWU presentation, including its reliance on the February 20, 1975 Postal Bulletin 21024 and a repeated assertion that both Level 5 Clerks and Level 6 Technicians "perform the ODIS function in its entirety." 67

It is only fair to state, however, that confusion in this area is fully understandable in view of the cryptic nature of the Regional level ruling sustaining the Springfield grievance as to ODIS work. This ruling does not suggest any distinction between the completion of Forms 1300 and other aspects of the ODIS Program. Knowledge of this settlement spread quickly to APWU officers in other Post Offices and no clarifying statement of detailed USPS policy on the matter was made available. The resultant flood of grievances was expectable. 68

Since the present national level grievance seeks Level 6 pay for employees who are performing "all or part of the ODIS function," it seems essential now to lay out some basic rules for application of Article XXV in this area. The Charlotte, N.C. management directive, cited by the Union, provides an excellent starting point for this purpose. In addition to detailing the duties of Level 6 Technicians, it provides for Data Collection Cadres of Level 5 Clerks who are available to replace or fill in for Technicians, and who receive Level 6 pay for such hours of work. Under "Operating Instructions" the directive states: 69

"Data Collection Technicians will be responsible to the Data Collection Officer in the Finance Section of this office. This applies to all technicians and data collection cadres for all hours used in data collection work.

A. Data Collection Technicians will be required to work in Division of Mails only during such periods as there are no data collection duties to fulfill.

1. Data Collection Technicians will work without direct supervision in their data collection activities.

2. Data Collection Technicians with no data collection duties will report to the Tour Superintendent for mail processing assignments.

B. Data Collection Cadres will distribute mail in their normal assignment except when assigned to data collection work. -

1. Data Collection Cadres assigned to assist a regular Data Collection Technician will be under the latter's directions.

2. Data Collection Cadres assigned to replace a regular Data Collection Technician will work in data collection without direct supervision. They will be paid higher level 06 for all time used in any data collection work."

As this directive recognizes, whenever a Level 5 Clerk is assigned by Management at any time--even if only for part of a tour--to replace a Level 6 Data Collection Technician in performing required duties within the scope of the Technician Position Description (including ODIS), such Clerk is entitled to Level 6 pay under Article XXV, Sections 1 and 2. The June 7, 1973 ruling of Arbitrator Fred Holly in the Macon, Georgia, case, cited here by the APWU, seems fully in accord with this proposition. 70

The same principle also applies in any instance 71
here a Clerk is assigned to augment the normal force of Technicians (without replacing any specific Technician) as long as the Clerk is expected to handle all Technician duties which may be required on that tour.

Where a Clerk merely assists a Data Collection Technician (and works under the Technician's direction), however, there is no warrant for payment of the Level 6 rate to the Clerk. In such situation the Clerk properly may be viewed as serving essentially in a training capacity, and not actually responsible for proper performance of Level 6 Technician duties. While the Charlotte directive is not entirely clear on this precise point, Paragraph B, as above quoted, seems by implication to recognize this distinction.

Finally, a Level 5 Clerk who is assigned only to 73
the limited function of completing Forms 1300, in accordance with previously prepared Header Sheets, is not entitled to Level 6 pay under Article XXV.

AWARD

1. The grievance is denied insofar as it seeks Level 6 pay under Article XXV for all Level 5 Clerks who are assigned to complete Forms 1300, but who are not responsible for performing any other more significant duties of a Data Collection Technician. 74

2. In all instances where Level 5 Clerks (1) replace or substitute for Data Collection Technicians, or (2) are assigned to handle all Data Collection Technician duties which may arise during the hours of such assignment, such Clerks are entitled to Level 6 pay under Article XXV. 75

422.142 Written Management Order

Any employee, except one of those covered in 432.2, who is temporarily assigned to higher level work is given PS Form 1723, Assignment Order, stating beginning and approximate termination and directing the employee to perform the duties of the higher level position. The written order is accepted as authorization for higher grade pay. The failure of management to give a written order is not grounds for denial of higher level pay if the employee was otherwise directed to perform the duties of the higher level position.

422.143 Rate of Pay

Rates are as follows:

a. Part-time Flexible Employees. A part-time flexible employee remains a part-time flexible employee while temporarily assigned to a higher level position. The employee neither has nor acquires a regular work schedule and is paid at the part-time flexible hourly rate for the higher level position.

b. Regular Employees. Rules for pay for temporary higher level work depend on the factors below:

(1) Assignment in PS Schedule. A PS employee who is temporarily assigned to higher level work in the PS schedule is paid at the higher level for time actually spent on such job. The employee's higher level rate is determined as if he or she had been promoted to the position. (See promotion rules in 422.123.)

(2) Assignment to Other Schedule. The rate of pay for service in a higher grade position in other than the PS Schedule is determined in accordance with promotion rules for the salary schedule in which the higher level position is placed. (See rules for assignment to a different salary schedule in 410.)

(3) Service in Several Positions. If higher level service is performed in more than one position in a pay period, the appropriate rate for each wage level is determined and paid in accordance with the actual time worked at each level.

(4) Annual and Sick Leave Pay. Leave pay for employees temporarily assigned to a higher level position depends on the term of the assignment as follows:

(a) Short-term Temporary Assignments (see 422.141a). These employees, except those covered by 422.8, are entitled to approved annual and sick leave paid at the higher level rate for a period not to exceed 3 days for each occurrence, provided that they are not replaced while on leave and that they resume the assignment upon returning to work.

(b) Long-term Temporary Assignments (see 422.141b). These employees are entitled to approved annual and sick leave paid at the higher level rate for the full period of leave provided that they resume the assignment upon returning to work.

422.142 Written Management Order

In the Matter of the Arbitration between

Case No. A8-W-~~251~~

AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO

and

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

OPINION AND AWARD

Appearances:

For the Union - Gerald "Andy" Anderson, Executive Aide
John A. Morgen, President, Clerk Craft

For the Employer - Howard J. Kaufman, Esq.
R. B. Hubbell, Labor Relations Executive

Background:

Pursuant to the provisions of the July 21, 1978 collective bargaining agreement between the above-captioned parties, this case was brought on for arbitration on March 20, 1981. The parties agreed that the procedural steps required to advance the case as a national level grievance to arbitration had been followed and the case was before the Undersigned for final and binding decision. By agreement, post-heraing briefs were filed. These were received in timely fashion and their contents duly considered.

Statement of the Case:

Many of the operative facts in this case are not in dispute. The matter in issue is exemplified by an unassigned regular clerical employee who is assigned on a daily basis, sometimes for as little as thirty minutes a day to as many as eight hours per day for a thirty day period, to work at Level 6 although she was regularly classified as a Level 5 clerk. That employee then goes on forty-two hours of leave. When she returns, that employee was again assigned on a daily basis, sometimes for thirty minutes a day and sometimes for as long as eight hours per day as a Level 6 LSM Machine Operator. During the time that she worked at the Level 6 job, she was paid at Level 6. When she returned to her regular duties as a Level 5 Distribution Clerk, she was paid at Level 5.

Contentions of the Parties:

The Union contended that this employee should have received Level 6 pay for the forty-two hours she was on annual leave. The Postal Service paid her at Level 5 for her annual leave hours. The appropriate pay for the period of her annual leave is the subject in dispute in this proceeding.

The Union placed its reliance upon the wording and requirements of Section 5 of Article XXV of the Agreement which deals with leave pay for employees detailed to a higher level position. The Union pointed to the language of paragraph 3 of that Section, which reads as follows:

> "Long term shall mean an employee has been on an assignment or detail to a higher level position for a period of 30 consecutive workdays or longer at the time the leave is taken and such assignment or detail to the higher level position is resumed upon return to work."

The Union pointed to the fact that the USPS conceded that for a period of over thirty days prior to going on annual leave, the Grievant had been assigned higher level work for at least part of each of these days. The USPS also agreed that she resumed working at least part of each day following her return from leave at the higher level job.

The Union also argued that the contract language is clear and spells out to what leave pay an employee is entitled when that employee is detailed to a higher level assignment on either a long term or short term basis. The Union says that the Postal Service's reliance upon the definition of workday found in Article VIII of the Agreement is misplaced since this case was processed through the steps of the grievance procedure as an Article XXV violation.

The Union contended that a reading of the language of the Agreement in Article XXV, as the Postal Service would have it, could result in an employee detailed for a short term to a higher level assignment being paid at the higher level while on leave while an employee on a long term assignment would not receive such a payment.

The Union argued that a reading of the full text of Article XXV would reveal that details under the Article do not have to be for full workdays. They can be for shorter periods in a workday. In this case, according to the Union, the Grievant met all the conditions laid down in Section 5 of Article XXV, and the Grievant deserved to be paid at the Level 6 rate for the period of annual leave.

The Postal Service took the position that the Grievant was not entitled to Level 6 pay because Section 5 of Article XXV requires an unbroken higher level assignment of consecutive eight hour workdays for thirty consecutive days or longer. The USPS believed that an employee could not receive Level 6 pay for an entire period of annual leave when that same employee only worked a part of the previous thirty or more workdays at the higher level.

The Service argued that Article VIII, Section 1 of the Agreement defines the work week for full time regular employees as "forty (40) hours per week, eight (8) hours per day..." For that reason, the interpretation of the word "workday" as used in Article XXV had to be the same and consistent by referring to an eight hour day.

The Service also argued that each time that the Grievant returned to her regular Level 5 duties as a Distribution Clerk, her detail or assignment at the higher level was broken. She did not have "30 consecutive workdays" in a higher level assignment at the time her leave was granted. The Union's own exhibit showed that on only an occasional day, prior to her leave, did the employee work 8 hours at the Level 6 job. It was the same upon her return.

Management also referred to the requirements of Section 4 of Article XXV, wherein a detail of five working days in a week or longer must be given to the senior qualified and eligible employee in the immediate work area. The Union never pressed to have the disputed assignment open for bids to the senior qualified employee in the area. The USPS contended when employees are assigned on a long term basis it is contemplated they will be used on a sporadic basis over a long period of time. When employees are detailed on a long term basis, it is contemplated that they are to have an uninterrupted term of eight hour days for at least thirty days-an unbroken assignment.

This is not a case, according to Management, of a mixed assignment where the "core" functions of a job determine the pay level. That is the type of issue dealt with in the F-21 Handbook to which the Union made reference in presenting this case.

Opinion of the Arbitrator:

These parties appear to agree that this case is not concerned with the question of whether this grievant was improperly assigned and should have always been considered a Level 6 employee because of the amount of time that she spent as an operator of a Multi-Position Letter Sorting Machine, a Level 6 classification. That would be an issue addressed in another fashion and to which reference to certain provisions of the Employee and Labor Relations' Manual would be appropriate.

A resolution of the matter in issue does require reference to the specific language of the Agreement. The Union contended that such language was clear and unambiguous and supported its claim. Management also appeared to place primary reliance for its position on the wording of Article XXV and Article VIII.

Article XXV in its entirety is found below:

ARTICLE XXV

HIGHER LEVEL ASSIGNMENTS

"1. Higher level work is defined as an assignment to a ranked higher level position, whether or not such posotion has been authorized at the installation.

"2. An employee who is detailed to higher level work shall be paid at the higher level for time actually spent on such job. An employee's higher level rate shall be determined as if promoted to the position. An employee temporarily assigned or detailed to a lower level position shall be paid at the employee's own rate.

"3. Any employee detailed to higher level work shall be given a written management order, stating beginning and approximate termination, and directing the employee to perform the duties of the higher level position. Such order shall be accepted as authorization for the higher level pay. The failure of management to give a written order is not grounds for denial of higher level pay if the employee was otherwise directed to perform the duties.

"4. Detailing of employees to higher level bargaining unit work in each craft shall be from those eligible, qualified and available employees in each craft in the immediate work area in which the temporarily vacant higher level position exists. However, for details of an anticipated duration of one week (five working days within seven calendar days) or longer to those higher level craft positions enumerated in the craft Articles of this Agreement as being permanently filled on the basis of promotion of the senior qualified employee, the senior, qualified, eligible, available employee in the immediate work area in which the temporarily vacant higher level position exists shall be selected.

"5. Leave pay for employees detailed to a higher level position will be administered in accordance with the following:

"Employees working short term on a higher level assignment or detail will be entitled to approved sick and annual paid leave at the higher level rate for a period not to exceed three days.

"Short term shall mean an employee has been on an assignment or detail to a higher level for a period of 29 consecutive work days or less at the time leave is taken and such assignment or detail to the higher level position is resumed upon return to work. All short term assignments or details will be automatically cancelled if replacements are required for absent detailed employees.

"Long term shall mean an employee has been on an assignment or detail to a higher level position for a period of 30 consecutive workdays or longer at the time leave is taken and such assignment or detail to the higher level position is resumed upon return to work.

"Terminal leave payments resulting from death will be paid at the higher level for all employees who are assigned or detailed to higher level assignments on their last workday."

Reference must also be made to Article VIII. In Section 1 of the Article, the work week is defined. That Section provides:

> Section 1. Work Week. The work week for full-time regulars shall be forty (40) hours per week, eight (8) hours per day within ten (10) consecutive hours, provided, however, that in all offices with more than 100 full-time employees in the bargaining units the normal work week for full-time regular employees will be forty hours per week, eight hours per day within nine (9) consecutive hours. Shorter work weeks will, however, exist as needed for part-time regulars.

What the Union is claiming in this case is that if an employee works as little as one hour or less on thirty consecutive work days, at a higher level position, prior to going on leave, and then returns to the same pattern of daily employment, that employee is entitled to receive leave pay at the rate of the higher level position. In effect, the Union is arguing that this employee has been "assigned or on detail" to this higher level position for a period of thirty days or longer before going on leave. The reading of the other Sections of Article XXV, more specifically Section 4 will establish that "detailing" for periods of five working days or longer requires the incumbents to be chosen on the basis of seniority and the other qualifications set out in this Section. Since there is no evidence in this record that the Grievant on whose behalf this case was brought was so selected, it cannot be argued that she had been detailed to the higher level position for a long term.

This Grievant was "assigned" on a daily basis, for varying periods of time, to fill in on the higher level job. No vacancy was created when she vacated the job to go on annual leave. Another employee was used to fill-in, and when that other employee did so, he or she was paid at Level 6. When the Grievant in this case did return from annual leave, she returned to her Level 5 Distribution

Clerk job, and for a portion of the day upon which she returned she was paid at Level 5 and for another portion of the day, when she was assigned to the LSM operation she was paid at Level 6.

Although the Union asserted that this case was brought as an alleged violation of Article XXV and the parties did address their arguments to the provisions of that portion of the contract, it is well accepted, in the interpretation of written instruments, that reference to other provisions of the same agreement may shed some light on the meaning of the provision under consideration.

In Section 1 of Article VIII, a work day is clearly defined. It is eight hours per day within ten consecutive hours in offices with less than 100 full-time employees and eight hours per day within nine consecutive hours in larger offices. In a work day, so defined, this Grievant did not work for a full work day at Level 6 on the vast majority of the thirty or more work days prior to her annual leave nor on the day of her return.

There is no question that this Grievant was paid at the higher level rate for the actual time she was assigned to perform the higher level job. If that Grievant had worked for 29 consecutive work days or less at the time of her annual leave, she would only have been entitled to be paid 3 days at the higher level, even if she had worked 8 hours at the higher level on each of those 29 or less days and had returned to a full 8 hour assignment at the higher level. The fact that it was not regarded as a "long term" assignment dictated that only a portion of the annual leave would be paid at the higher level. To qualify for a full annual leave payment at the higher level, that same employee would have had to put in 30 consecutive days or more on the higher level job just prior to taking the leave and then return to the same full time status on this higher level job at the completion of her leave. That is the definition of the "long term" higher level assignment to be found in Article XXV.

For the reasons set forth above, the Undersigned is required to conclude that this grievance cannot be sustained.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

PTFs IN 200 MAN YEAR FACILITIES SUBJECT TO EXCESSING

If one or more employees in a 200 man year facility are subject to excessing outside the installation, the parties at the Regional/Area may enter into an agreement which allows employees to remain in the installation as part-time flexibles (PTFs). The exact number of employees to remain in the installation as PTFs will be determined by the Employer based on the operational need to perform the remaining mail handler work in the facility. If no employees elect to remain as PTFs in the facility, the Employer may hire additional mail handler assistant employees (MHAs) who will not be counted against any cap limitation provided the work remains part-time.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

LIGHT DUTY BIDDING

It is agreed that the following procedures will be used in situations in which an employee covered by the Mail Handlers' National Agreement, as a result of illness or injury, is temporarily unable to work his or her normal assignment, and is working another assignment on a light duty or limited duty basis or is receiving Continuation of Pay (COP) or compensation as a result of being injured on the job, sick leave, or annual leave or Leave Without Pay (LWOP) in lieu of sick leave.

I. Bidding

A) An employee who is temporarily disabled will be allowed to bid for and be awarded a mail handler bid assignment in accordance with Article 12.3.E, or, where applicable, in accordance with the provisions of a local memorandum of understanding, provided that the employee will be able to assume the position within six (6) months from the time at which the bid is submitted.

B) Management may, at the time of submission of the bid or at any time thereafter, request that the employee provide medical certification indicating that the employee will be able to perform the duties of the bid-for position within six (6) months of the bid. If the employee fails to provide such certification, the bid shall be disallowed, and, if the assignment was awarded, it shall be reposted for bidding. Under such circumstances, the employee shall not be eligible to re-bid the next posting of that assignment.

C) If at the end of the six (6) month period, the employee is still unable to perform the duties of the bid-for position, management may request that the employee provide new medical certification indicating that the employee will be able to perform the duties of the bid-for position within the second six (6) months after the bid. If the employee fails to provide such new certification, the bid shall be disallowed and the assignment shall be reposted for bidding. Under such circumstances, the employee shall not be eligible to rebid the next posting of that assignment.

D) If at the end of one (1) year from the submission of the bid the employee has not been able to perform the duties of the bid-for position, the employee must relinquish the assignment, and shall not be eligible to re-bid the next posting of that assignment.

E) It is still incumbent upon the employee to follow procedures in Article 12.3.C to request notices to be sent to a specific location when absent. All other provisions relevant to the bidding process will also apply.

II. Higher Level Pay

Employees who bid to a higher level assignment pursuant to the procedures described in the preamble and Part I, Bidding, above, will not receive higher level pay until they are physically able to, and actually perform work in the bid-for higher level position.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

RETURN TO DUTY

The parties affirm their understanding concerning the review of medical certificates submitted by employees who return to duty following extended absences due to illness.

We mutually agree to the following:

1. To avoid undue delay in returning an employee to duty, the on-duty medical officer, contract physician, or nurse should review and make a decision based upon the presented medical information the same day it is submitted.

2. Normally, the employee will be returned to work on his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation, provided that adequate medical documentation is submitted within sufficient time for review and that a decision is made to return the employee to duty.

3. The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated

4. The apron is nonreimbursable, although some offices may choose to provide retail service employees with aprons to protect their uniforms when working away from the retail counter. These aprons are not to be worn while working at the retail counter or in the lobby.
5. Footwear is reimbursable after the employee has completed at least 2 years of eligibility in the retail uniform program.

935.1 When Allowances Take Effect

935.11 Anniversary Date

Allowances take effect on the earliest date an employee is required to wear the uniform following completion of the 90-day probationary period. This date is known as the employee's anniversary date.

935.12 Transfers

When employees who have been receiving allowances in one uniformed category transfer or are reappointed to a different uniformed category within the allowance year, they start a new anniversary date, provided they are eligible in the new category on the date of assignment (see 935.251).

935.2 Adjustment for Certain Absences During Allowance Year

935.21 Absences From Uniform Category of 90 Days to 1 Year

935.211 Policy

Employees temporarily assigned to light duty assignments, OWCP absences, extended sick leave, or higher level detail for a period of 89 days or more that does not require wearing a uniform have their uniform allowance suspended for the time they are on this assignment. When such is the case, the following provisions apply:

a. A request for a personnel action to terminate the uniform allowance is submitted to the personnel office. The personnel office generates PS Form 50, Notification of Personnel Action, using Nature of Action (NOA) 903, Uniform Certification/Disallowance, to document the termination of allowance. (See Handbook EL-301, Guidelines for Processing Personnel Actions, for PS Form 50 processing instructions.)

b. Invoices showing purchase dates during the time an employee is in a nonuniform category may not be accepted for payment.

c. If the detail is terminated in less than a year after the last anniversary date, the allowance is redetermined by the postmaster as described in 935.23, and the employee retains the former anniversary date.

935.212 Suspension Instructions

A statement is inserted on the PS Form 50, NOA 903, Uniform Certification/ Disallowance, that the uniform allowance is suspended for the period of the detail. When the detail is terminated and the employee is reassigned to a position that makes him or her again eligible for a uniform allowance, if the employee's eligibility has been suspended for one year or more, a new PS Form 50, NOA 903, establishing the employee's eligibility is prepared. If the suspension is for less than a year, a PS Form 8006, Uniform Allowance Code

Re: Q90M-4Q-C95048706
Class Action
Washington, DC 20260-4100

Dear John:

Recently, I met with Bill Flynn and Sam D'Ambrosio to discuss the above-captioned case that is currently pending national-level arbitration.

The issue in this grievance involves revisions to ELM Sec. 450 Recovery of Postal Debts and Sec. 460 Collection of Postal Debts.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case.

There is no dispute between the parties that a money demand from current employees must be consistent with Article 28 of the National Agreement, Section 460 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual, and any applicable law. The parties agree if a grievance is initiated and advanced through the grievance-arbitration procedure or a petition has been filed pursuant to the Debt Collection Act, regardless of the amount and type of debt, collection of the debt will be delayed until disposition of the grievance and/or petition has (have) been had, either through settlement or exhaustion of contractual and/or administrative remedies. No more than 15 percent of an employee's disposable pay or 20 percent of the employee's biweekly gross pay whichever is lower, may be deducted each pay period to satisfy a postal debt, unless the parties agree, in writing, to a different amount.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case, thereby removing it from the pending arbitration list.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to two collective bargaining agreements between the parties effective from July 21, 1997 through November 20, 1990 and from June 12, 1991 through November 10, 1994. Hearings in this matter took place on March 15, 1994 and April 15, 1997 in a conference room of Postal Headquarters located in Washington, D.C. The first hearing addressed the issue of arbitrability, and the arbitrator found the matter to be arbitrable at the national level. The second hearing examined the merits of the case. Mr. Lee W. Jackson, an attorney with the law firm of O'Donnell, Schwartz & Anderson in Washington, D.C., represented the American Postal Workers Union. Mr. Kevin B. Rachel, Labor Relations Counsel, and Ms. Marta Erceg, Labor Relations Attorney, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. Keith E. Secular, attorney with the law firm of Cohen, Weiss & Simon in New York City, represented the National Association of Letter Carriers. Mr. Francis R. A. Sheed, with assistance from Mr. Bruce R. Lerner, attorneys with the law firm of Bredhoff & Kaiser in Washington, D.C., represented the National Postal Mail Handlers Union.

The hearings proceeded in an orderly mannner. The parties had a full opportunity to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. A reporter from Diversified Reporting Services, Inc., recorded the hearing and submitted a transcript in the second hearing of 219 pages. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties.

The parties stipulated that the matter properly had been submitted to arbitration and that there were no further issues of substantive or procedural arbitrability to be resolved. They elected to submit the matter on the basis of evidence presented at the hearing as well as post-hearing briefs. The arbitrator officially closed the hearing on August 4, 1997 after receipt of the final post-hearing brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

Did the Employer violate the parties' National Agreement by issuing OF-346 licenses which extended driving privileges to bargaining unit employees holding positions which do not mandate such driving duties? If so, what shall the remedy be?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 3 - MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted.

ARTICLE 19 - HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21 Timekeeper's Instructions.

ARTICLE 39 - MOTOR VEHICLE CRAFT

Section 3. Special Provisions

E. All motor vehicle craft positions listed in the P-1 Handbook, designated to the motor vehicle craft, shall be under the jurisdiction of the Motor Vehicle Division of the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO.

F. When filling details to bargaining unit work in the Motor Vehicle Craft, the Employer shall give first consideration to the assignment of available and qualified motor vehicle craft employees from the immediate work area in which the detail exists.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the parties submitted five consolidated grievances that address driving privileges. In March of 1994, the arbitrator concluded that the dispute is arbitrable at the national level. On April 15, 1997, the parties submitted the merits of the case to the arbitrator.

In these grievances, the American Postal Workers Union challenges the Employer's practice of issuing OF-346 drivers' licenses to employees whose jobs do not expressly include driving duties. The issue is quite narrow, and the American Postal Workers Union emphasized that it is not raising a jurisdictional claim with regard to driving duties per se. It is not the duties themselves that elicited a challenge from the American Postal Workers Union. What the APWU challenges is the right of the Employer to authorize particular workers to drive particular vehicles. All parties to the proceeding agreed to the narrow definition of the issue before the arbitrator.

The American Postal Workers Union initially filed the five grievances in 1990 and 1991. Each grievance arose in a different location when the Employer issued OF-346 drivers' licenses with vehicle endorsements to employees whose Position Descriptions did not require them to drive the particular vehicle endorsed by the license. At that point in time, an employee was required to have an OF-346 driver's license with appropriate endorsement in order to drive a vehicle on the job. The Employer granted endorsements for specific vehicles on the basis of training, experience, and/or other licenses already held.

Since the Union filed the grievances, the Employer discontinued using the OF-346 driver's licenses. Management replaced it with a simpler certification process. Management also abolished enabling handbook regulations in EL-827 and replaced them with Handbook TD-087. The new handbook does not contain parallel language about surrendering one's driver's license or certificate. The arbitrator did not receive a copy of the replacement handbook.

The American Postal Workers Union filed the first of the five grievances on June 12, 1990 in Manchester, New Hampshire. (See Case No. H7V-1K-C 31669). In this case, the Manchester Area Local of the APWU filed a class action grievance contending that Mail Handlers held OF-346 licenses with endorsements to drive two-ton and five-ton trucks, despite the absence of driving duties in their Position Descriptions. Management had issued 17 Mail Handlers such licenses based on a call for volunteers. (See Tr. 133.) Although the facility in Manchester,

New Hampshire employed no motor vehicle operators, it did employ approximately 18 mechanics and support personnel within the Motor Vehicle Craft. (See Tr. 135.) The APWU requested that management require Mail Handlers to surrender OF-346 licenses or endorsements for individuals without driving duties on their bid assignments and that the Employer comply with Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook in regard to driver selection, training, testing, and licensing. The Employer denied the grievance and argued that an absence of driving duties did not preclude management from issuing driving licenses to Mail Handlers.

The APWU filed the second grievance in July of 1990 with regard to a complaint in Hackensack, New Jersey. (See Case No. H7V-1N-C 33344.) The complaint was that Mail Handlers had been issued OF-346 licenses to drive five-ton or larger vehicles. Specifically mentioned in this particular grievance was the fact that Mail Handlers were assigned work (transporting mail) which allegedly should have been offered to Motor Vehicle Craft employees. (See APWU Exhibit No. 5, p. 7.) Management denied this grievance as well and relied on managerial discretion, an absence of contractual limitations on issuing driver's licenses, and on the fact that the Motor Vehicle Craft held no exclusive right to "driving" work. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 5, p. 2.)

The Union filed a third grievance on February 14, 1991 in Bangor, Maine. (See Case No. H7V-1K-C 37022.) As in the other cases, the issue remained whether the Employer had authority to issue OF-346 licenses to Mail Handlers who have no driving duties. The Employer denied the grievance and asserted that management had complied with the parties' agreement as well as the fact that the grievance allegedly was untimely. The practice of having Mail Handlers shuttle mail to an annex had been in effect since 1985.

The Union filed the fourth grievance on March 13, 1991 in West Palm Beach, Florida. (See Case No. H7V-3S-C 40533.) The issue again was whether Mail Handlers had a right to hold OF-346 driver's licenses with endorsements to drive five-ton and seven-ton vehicles. Mail Handlers in this locale apparently drove seven-ton trucks on a reasonably regular basis. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 2, pp. 11 and 20.) The Employer denied the grievance.

The final grievance in the group consolidated for arbiration arose in Atlanta, Georgia on August 26, 1991. (See Case No. H0V-3E-C 3100.) The issue in this case focused on the operation of five-ton, seven-ton, and nine-ton vehicles by employees who had no driving duties in their job descriptions, including Clerks, Mail Handlers, and Letter Carriers. At Step 3 of the grievance procedure, the Union argued that "all MVS work should be assigned to MVS employees who are not being used to the maximum extent possible prior to such outside assignments." (See APWU's Exhibit No. 4, p. 11.) As with the four prior cases, the Employer denied the grievance; and the parties consolidated all five denials for consideration in arbitration at the national level.

The five grievances before the arbitrator all involve the right of the Employer to issue licenses and endorsements that allow Mail Handlers and Letter Carriers to drive five-ton trucks or larger. The respective employees held positions that did not include driving duties in either the Standard Position Descriptions or specific local bid assignments. Position Descriptions for Mail Handlers made no reference to driving duties, other than operating a fork lift; and job requirements did not include driving experience or licensing. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 11.) The Position Description for City Carrier includes delivering mail "on foot or by vehicle." (See APWU's Exhibit No. 12.) But a Carrier is required to have a valid driver's license and must pass the road test to be issued the appropriate driver's license.

Workers in the Motor Vehicle Service include two groups of employees, namely, Vehicle Maintenance workers and Postal Vehicle Service workers. Workers within Postal Vehicle Service include the positions of Motor Vehicle Operators and Tractor Trailer Operators. In contrast to the absence of driving duties for Mail Handlers, Position Descriptions for Motor Vehicle Operators and Tractor-Trailer Operators are specifically and predominantly concerned with operating a mail truck to transport mail in bulk. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 10.) Requirements for such positions include one year of experience driving five-ton vehicles, a valid and appropriate driver's license, and certain minimum physical abilities. In addition, employees must be able to pass a road test and, otherwise, to qualify for the appropriate governmental driver's license.

Evidence submitted to the arbitrator showed that management often assigned driving duties involving five-ton vehicles and larger to employees outside of the motor vehicle craft. Situations in which this might occur include circumstances such as (1) a Letter Carrier needing to use a larger vehicle to deliver substantial quantities of mail to one facility, such as the official mail messenger service in Washington, D.C.; (2) an employee in a unit with no motor vehicle service employees regularly transporting mail or equipment to an airport for other facilities; and (3) a Mail Handler or other employee filling in for Motor Vehicle Service employees who are unavailable. (See Tr. 182, 192, 207.) Specific duties for a worker might range from a brief trip across a parking lot to an assignment of driving for a full eight-hour day on the road. (See Tr. 181.) These facts provided the context for the dispute which proceeded to arbitration when the parties failed to resolve their differences.

V. ANALYSIS

A. Boundaries of the Dispute

1. The American Postal Workers Union

The American Postal Workers Union asserts that the Employer violated the parties' agreement by extending driving privileges to employees who are not required to drive. Such conduct allegedly violated Articles 19 and 39 of the parties' National Agreement in addition to a number of manuals and handbooks.

It is the belief of the American Postal Workers Union that "the extension of driving privileges to a bargaining unit employee for a particular postal vehicle is controlled by the postion that the . . . employee holds." (See APWU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 15.) According to the APWU, a worker's "position" is defined by both the official Position Description as well as the local bid assignment posted for a specific position. The APWU argues that Article 19, which incorporates relevant handbooks and manuals, has been violated. Such administrative regulations allegedly deny management the right to issue a driver's license to people whose job assignment does not include driving. Moreover, the APWU argues that a violation of a handbook, manual, or published regulation "constitutes a violation of the National Agreement itself." (See APWU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 16.)

The APWU relied on its interpretation of numerous provisions in the Employee and Labor Relations Manual in support of its contention that the absence of driving duties in a Position Description prohibits the Employer from granting driving privileges to an employee. The purpose of a Position Description is:

> To describe three components of a position: (a) the primary assignment or basic function; (b) the tasks and skills involved in carrying out the primary assignment, and (c) the organizational relationship. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 9.)

Accordingly, the Union reasons that a Position Description which fails to include either driving duties as a primary assignment or as a task or skill involved in carrying out the primary assignment means that management should not grant driving privileges to a person holding such a position.

The American Postal Workers Union argues that the positions of both Mail Handler as well as Letter Carrier include limited driving duties. The driving duties of Letter Carriers allegedly are limited to two-ton, long-life vehicles. Duties of Mail Handlers allegedly are limited to forklift trucks. The APWU contracted such duties with those of a Level 5 Motor Vehicle Operator whose primary function is transporting quantities of mail by truck and whose Qualification Standards include significant experience and training on five-ton trucks. (In testimony from Mr. LaFauci, National Business Agent for the Motor Vehicle Division in the northeast region, the APWU does not contest the authority of Letter Carriers to drive five-ton and larger vehicles for the purpose of delivering mail but, rather, object to their involvement in transporting mail in bulk. (See Tr. 126.)

It is the belief of the American Postal Workers Union that Manual EL-303 supports a conclusion that the Employer violated the parties' agreement in this case. Manual EL-303 lists qualifications necessary for positions under discussion in this case, and the Manual also makes provision for local exceptions to national standards. Under Section 142 of EL-303, management may add typing or driving requirements when filling a vacant position, if such action is "reasonably related to the efficient performance of the duties of the job" and if such work is "expected to be performed on a regular basis." (See APWU's Exhibit No. 13.) The APWU contends that Section 142 of EL-303 is the only way for management to add driving requirements to a position, and the APWU believes that such additions are strictly limited by requirements of EL-303. In particular, Section 142.5 of EL-303 states that "local officials may not modify or delete . . . existing requirements contained in official Qualification Standards," and Section 151 of EL-303 states that "no additions, deletions, or modifications (to Qualification Standards) are permitted." (See APWU's Exhibit No. 13.)

It is the contention of the APWU that the Employer did not comply with these administrative regulations because (1) no vacancies were filled; (2) driving five-ton vehicles was not "reasonably related to the efficient performance" of the jobs at issue; and (3) the driving duties were not "expected to be performed on a regular basis." According to the APWU, the Employer did not add driving duties to positions at issue in this case, and management allegedly could not have done so under Sections 142.1, 142.5, and 151 of the EL-303 Handbook.

The APWU, therefore, concludes that it was not possible for the positions of employees who received the disputed OF-346 licenses for five-ton vehicles legitimately to have included driving duties.

The APWU maintains that, by requiring certain employees to "obtain OF-346 licenses to drive vehicles not required by either their Standard Position Descriptions or their bid positions, also violated Section 142.5 and 151 of the EL-303." (See APWU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 21.) As support for its conclusion, the APWU offers a case in which the Employer and the APWU agreed that adding a driving requirement to a position must comply with Section 142 of the EL-303 Handbook. (See Case No. H4T-4L-C 28093.) In addition, the APWU relies on another case in which the parties agreed that "there is no provision for the addition of an item by local management to an established Position Description." (See Case No. H1C-5B-C 6155.)

The APWU also finds support for its position in Chapter 7 of the Postal Operations Manual. Chapter 7 of the Postal Operations Manual is entitled "Fleet Management" and covers policies and procedures for postal vehicles. The APWU relies on the definition of motor vehicle service in Section 714 of the POM, the driver categories described in Section 721 of the POM, and licensing regulations in Section 22 (drivers must be licensed). The APWU uses these provisions to buttress its conclusion that employees in nondriving positions must not be granted driving privileges by management.

In support of its theory of the case, the APWU also relies on the EL-827 Handbook. The APWU argues that provisions in Section 120 with regard to "incidental drivers" operating only personal or passenger vehicles, when added to the training requirements as well as the definition of an OF-346 license, all give support to a conclusion that authorization to drive five-ton trucks and larger may be given only to employees whose job duties include such driving. The APWU anchors its argument with Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook, a provision calling for the surrender of OF-346 licensing. It is the contention of the American Postal Workers Union that Section 444 requires the Employer to revoke the OF-346 license of employees who do not hold driving positions. The regulation lists as an occasion for such a revocation circumstances such as a transfer to a different MSC, or separation, a change to a nondriving position, or expiration of the license. The APWU, accordingly, theorizes that, when the Employer issues an OF-346 license to an employee in a nondriving position, it violates the EL-827 Manual, as well as (a) the position description, (b) the EL-303 Handbook, (c) the POM, and (d) the collective bargaining agreement as an entire document.

It is the belief of the American Postal Workers Union that three recent regional arbitration awards covering the same general issue now being considered at the national level provide an important source of guidance in this proceeding. They are the Germano Award, the Marx Award, and the Franklin Award. (See Case Nos. N7V-1E-C 31646; N7V-1N-C 32924; and NOV-1W-C 1576).

With regard to claims made by the Employer as well as the Intervenors, the American Postal Workers Union takes a defensive position. In response to the suggestion that the APWU has no standing to challenge the Employer's action because the licenses in question were issued to employees represented by other unions, the APWU asserts that its bargaining unit members, indeed, do have a stake in the outcome of the issue. According to the APWU, craft identity of its members is a distinct and significant interest; and that interest allegedly is threatened by the Employer's action. The APWU maintains that, in fact, more than craft identity is at stake in these cases. Work itself allegedly is being lost. The APWU maintains that, "to the extent that postal management licenses a Mail Handler or Letter Carrier to drive five- and seven-ton trucks, and thereafter employs them to perform that work, that much less work . . . will be performed by Motor Vehicle Craft employees within the AWPU's bargaining unit." (See APWU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 27.) The APWU also relies on a Gamser Award in 1980 and a Collins Award in 1986 as providing support for its contention that a remedy need not be directed at members of a party's bargaining unit in order for that party to have standing to pursue a case at the national level.

A further defense by the American Postal Workers Union focuses on the status of the EL-827 Manual and the OF-346 license procedure. Despite the fact that the Employer appeared to discontinue the license and to replace the manual in 1984, the APWU contends that both continue to exist, as evidenced by references to them in other documents issued after 1994. If, merely for the sake of argument, the APWU were to concede that the EL-827 Manual and OF-346 licenses are obsolete, the Union continues to maintain that the issue remains active by virtue of the similar policies in the replacement manual as well as the new certification procedure. In fact, the American Postal Workers Union asserts that its suggested remedy (of revoking the licenses of employees in nondriving positions) easily could be revised to include surrender of vehicle certification. Accordingly, the APWU concludes that the issue is far from moot and should be resolved in its favor.

2. The Employer

The Employer raises several procedural and substantive challenges to claims of the American Postal Workers Union. First, the Employer argues that the APWU does not have standing to challenge the Employer's actions with regard to members of other bargaining units. It is the Employer's contention that Article 19 rights undermine the standing of the APWU to pursue this case. As management sees it, Article 19 limits the incorporation of manuals and handbooks to "employees covered by this agreement;" and, accordingly, the APWU allegedly does not have standing to enforce such manuals and handbooks against employees covered by agreement with other unions.

More specifically, the Employer maintains that its decision to grant driving privileges to Mail Handlers and other employees has no direct effect on members of the APWU bargaining unit and that the Employer's theory finds support in the APWU's insistence that the dispute before the arbitrator is not concerned with jurisdictional issues. A contention that the Employer's action has a direct effect on APWU bargaining unit members would undermine the position of the APWU as to the jurisdictional issue, in the view of the Employer. It is the belief of the Employer that the APWU is using a "back door attempt" to claim more driving work without mounting a jurisdictional challenge. (See Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 8.) If the APWU is claiming that the Employer's decision authorizing Mail Handlers and Letter Carriers to drive five-ton trucks takes away work from its members, this allegedly is a jurisdictional dispute and, as such, must be resolved at the bargaining table, according to the Employer. If, however, the APWU is not claiming any injury due to a loss of work, the APWU lacks standing to pursue the matter, according to the Employer.

A second defense of the Employer takes issue with the APWU's characterization of Position Descriptions as a source of control over an employee's work assignment. The Employer asserts that "Job Descriptions are not determinative of the work that employees may perform," and management finds support for this position in a 1975 decision by Arbitrator Garrett involving a jurisdictional dispute between the Mail Handlers Union and the APWU. (See Case No. AW-NAT-5753.) Arbitrator Garrett described as "unrealistic" an assertion that Position Descriptions can be used to determine jurisdictional claims. (See p. 50.) The Employer finds confirmation of its view in a later decision by Arbitrator Dobranski which allegedly asserts that Position Descriptions are not intended to restrict duties that an employee can perform. (See Case No. H4C-1K-C 33597.) The Employer concludes that employees may not be denied driving duties merely because such duties are not specifically listed in a Position Description. Management believes that this error in the APWU's theory of the case fatally flaws the Union's entire argument.

Third, the Employer argues that the grievances are moot. They allegedly are moot because, on January 27, 1994, management abolished the EL-827 Handbook and the OF-346 license at issue in this case. The Employer discounts the APWU's argument that proof of the continuing viability of the El-827 Handbook is found in a reference to the handbook in Article 29 of the latest agreement between the parties. The reference to the EL-827 Handbook in Article 29 of the 1994-98 agreement allegedly is obsolete and is explained by the fact that the parties did not renegotiate Article 29 in the last round of negotiation. It allegedly would produce an absurd result to infer an intention to retain the EL-827 Handbook from this clerical irrelevancy.

Management finds proof that the EL-827 Handbook and the

OF-346 license have been abolished in testimony from Mr. Jones of the Office of Safety and Risk Management. He asserted that his office no longer administers the EL-827 Handbook or issues Of-346 licenses. The Employer contends that the parties already have discussed and settled the issue of replacing the EL-827 Handbook with the TD-087 Handbook. The Employer further contends that, even though the Handbook was in effect at the time the APWU filed its grievances, the fact that the remedy it seeks is prospective in application only undermines the Union's case and would serve no purpose.

Even if the APWU's challenge is not moot and the Union has standing to pursue the matter, the Employer still contends that its action did not violate the parties' agreement. The Employer asserts that the purpose of Section 444 in the EL-827 Handbook was not to compel management to revoke OF-346 licenses but, rather, to allow management to exercise its discretion as to whether an employee should be licensed. It is the Employer's contention that evidence of intent and practice are pivotal to a correct interpretation of Section 444, especially in view of the ambiguity of language in the provision. It is the conclusion of the Employer that Section 444 should be interpreted as granting flexibility to management rather than limiting its discretionary authority.

Fifth, the Employer argues that provisions of the EL-303 Handbook relied on by the APWU fail to support the Union's theory of the case and, in fact, damage it. According to the Employer, provisions in Section 142 of the EL-303 Handbook (covering proper procedures for adding requirements to a position) support management's contention that the Employer retains the discretion to add driving duties to a position, as long as management meets the "reasonableness and efficiency" requirement. Moreover, the Employer contends that Section 142 deals only with job requirements and does not address permission to perform a particular function. Accordingly, the Employer believes the provision is not directly relevant to grievances before the arbitrator.

Finally, the Employer argues that the position of the American Postal Workers Union is contrary to a past practice of the parties as well as to "operational realities of the industry." (See Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 16.) Evidence submitted to the arbitrator allegedly proved the existence of a long-standing past practice according to which Mail Handlers, Letter Carriers, and others have operated five-ton and larger vehicles for over 30 years. The Employer contends that this type of practice is crucial to its operation, especially in facilities where PVS employees may not be available. It is the belief of the Employer that at least five arbitration decisions between 1970 and 1987 support its view that management may either permit or require Mail Handlers and Letter Carriers to drive large vehicles. Management concludes that not only does the evidence prove the existence of the past practice but also that its continuation is vital to the efficiency of the Postal Service.

3. The National Association of Letter Carriers

The National Association of Letter Carriers argues that the dispute is moot. The dispute allegedly is moot because abolition of OF-346 licenses renders meaningless the requested remedy of revoking the disputed licenses. The NALC sees a narrowly defined issue in the case (whether Letter Carriers and Mail Handlers were properly issued licenses), and the narrow issue requires an equally narrow consideration of the "mootness" issue, according to the NALC.

Even if the dispute is not moot, the NALC argues that the grievances should be denied on the merits. It is the belief of the NALC that reliance on Position Descriptions to limit work assignments is contrary to precedent established in this industry through prior arbitration decisions. According to the NALC, arbitral precedent has concluded that "work assignment disputes are to be determined on the basis of established local practice." (See NALC's Post-hearing Brief, p. 3.)

According to the NALC's theory of the case, conduct of parties is crucial in this dispute as evidence of contractual intent. It also allegedly provided important evidence for resolving disputes in arbitration cases on which the parties relied in this case. According to the NALC, no evidence received by the arbitrator undermined the vitality of the course of conduct followed by the parties for many years. In the view of the NALC, no evidence established an exclusive right of employees in the APWU bargaining unit to perform such work. Accordingly, the NALC argues that the case should be dismissed as moot or denied on the merits.

4. National Postal Mail Handlers Union

The National Postal Mail Handlers Union argues that the dispute in this case should not be approached as merely a technical question about who gets to drive but, rather, that it really is a disguised jurisdictional dispute. It is the belief of the NPMHU that only workers who are not in the APWU bargaining unit will be affected by the outcome of the case. Hence, the APWU allegedly has no standing to pursue the dispute. Licensing Mail Handlers and Letter Carriers is not covered by the APWU's agreement with the Employer, and the APWU has no right to interfere, according to the National Postal Mail Handlers Union. The NPMHU contends that Article 19 in the parties' agreement incorporates handbooks and manuals into an agreement only as they apply to relevant employees and, thus, do not apply to nonmembers of a bargaining unit.

The NPMHU also asserts the "mootness" argument based on the theory that the EL-827 Handbook is no longer enforced and OF-346 licenses are no longer issued. It is the position of the NPMHU that the remedy sought by the American Postal Workers Union (revocation of licenses) would have "no practical significance" because management has implemented a new procedure. (See NPMHU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 6.)

On the merits the NPMHU argues that the EL-827 Handbook did not require management to list particular driving duties on a Position Description or job posting before the Employer could issue an OF-346 license. Rather than focus on the surrender of licenses in Section 444, the NPMHU argues that relevant provisions in Section 420 regarding the issuance of licenses should be scrutinized. It is the belief of the NPMHU that Section 420 does not include any requirement that an employee's Position Description list driving duties. Section 420 lists a number of prerequisites, but there allegedly is no requirement that an employee's position must include driving duties. (See NPMHU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 7.)

The NPMHU also argues that Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook did not list a "change of duties" as a reason to revoke an OF-346 license. Using the "surrender" provision in the regulation to make an argument for a licensing requirement is logically convoluted, in the opinion of the NPMHU. "It is not reasonable to believe that such a significant limitation on the issuance of licenses would have been addressed in such a backhanded, and indeed obscure manner" by placing such a requirement in the "surrender" provision, according to the NPMHU. (See NPMHU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 10.)

It is the belief of the NPMHU that the American Postal Workers Union incorrectly defines the term "nondriving position" as it is used in Section 444. Rather than a "driving position" being one in which driving is required, the NPMHU asserts that a "driving position" is "any postal position in which an employee is either required or allowed to drive." (See NPMHU's Post-hearing Brief, p. 11.) A nondriving position, then, would be one in which an employee is neither required nor allowed to drive, according to the NPMHU; and the fact that the "surrender" provision was dropped completely when the TD-087 Handbook replaced the EL-827 Handbook implies that no licensing requirements were included in it, according to the NPMHU.

As the NPMHU sees it, many of the arguments by the APWU based on materials other than the EL-827 Handbook have more to do with the right to drive than they do with the right to be licensed. As such, such arguments allegedly raise jurisdictional issues and are not applicable to the narrow issue presented in this case. Even if applicable, they allegedly lack merit.

The NPMHU argues that Position Descriptions do not limit tasks to which employees may be assigned. According to the NPMHU, the purpose of provisions in the EL-303 Handbook for adding driving requirements to a job is to insure that applicants will not be required to meet unnecessary qualification standards. The purpose is not to prevent the Employer from allowing an employee to drive or to prevent management from making necessary work assignments, according to the NPMHU. In conclusion, the NPMHU believes that, even if the arbitrator reaches the jurisdictional issue inherent in the dispute, the grievances should be denied on the merits of the case.

B. The Issue of Mootness

Each party argued about the impact of mootness in this case. A moot question is one in which no controversy continues to exist or one in which a question has ceased to be significant because of changed circumstances. The changed circumstance in this case is the fact that the EL-827 Handbook and OF-346 licenses are no longer valid. But this fact does not necessarily support a conclusion that the controversy is settled or a mere abstraction. The basic outline of the question before the arbitrator is still to be found in the documents that replace the supplanted procedures. The issue before the arbitrator is far from settled and more than a hypothetical question.

The suggestion, however, that the dispute remains viable as a consequence of a stray reference to an abolished document in the 1994-98 agreement failed to be persuasive. The EL-827 Handbook continues to be listed in only one collective bargaining agreement with the Employer. The reference is not to be found in the agreement with the National Association of Letter Carriers or the National Postal Mail Handlers Union. Even if one were to accept the argument of the American Postal Workers Union in this regard, it would apply only to workers covered by the agreement.

Arguments made by the Employer, the National Association of Letter Carriers, and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union fail to be convincing on the issue of mootness. The issue advanced by the American Postal Workers Union arises in the context of a justiciable controversy, and the conduct challenged by the American Postal Workers Union has far more than theoretical impact. Although the arbitrator did not receive a copy of the TD-087 Manual, it is clear from the record of the case that there is more at issue than a mere difference of opinion and that the revocation of OF-346 licenses and the replacement of certificates has a considerable effect on the American Postal Workers Union.

The issue of standing is less easily unraveled. The Employer argued that the American Postal Workers Union is without standing to pursue the grievances in this case. "Standing" is not a concept customarily applied in arbitration proceedings, although the concept has been applied from time to time to deny strangers access to the grievance procedure. For example, arbitrators have denied interest groups that were not a party to a collective bargaining agreement any access to the contractual grievance procedure. (See, e.g., Hotel Employers Association of San Francisco, 47 LA 873 (1966).) Likewise, retirees have been denied access to the grievance procedure if they sought to compel arbitration of a dispute not involving their employment status which arose after their retirement. (See, e.g., Van Dyne-Crotty, Inc., 46 LA 338 (1966).) To have standing in an arbitration proceeding, it is necessary to show that (1) there is no special reason to deny standing to a party; (2) conduct challenged by a party, in fact, has caused injury to the party; and (3) the interest a party seeks to protect is within that party's penumbra of duties as an exclusive representative of a group of employees.

No one advanced any special reason for denying standing to the American Postal Workers Union in this case. Whether the APWU has an injury in fact is enmeshed in unraveling whether the dispute is really a jurisdictional matter. A "jurisdictional dispute" is one in which there are two or more competing claims to particular work. If it is clear that "the only existing dispute is between the Employer . . . and the other unions, there is no jurisdictional dispute." (See Developing Labor Law 1374 (1992).)

The American Postal Workers Union walked a thin line with regard to the issue of standing. It asserted what it contended is enough of a stake in the dispute to have standing but not too much of a stake to result in a jurisdictional dispute with other unions involved in the proceeding. Doubts in such matters should be resolved in favor of a finding of standing, and the dispute in this case seems to fall within the APWU's penumbra of duties as an exclusive bargaining representative. The issue of licensing drivers has potentially damaging implications for members of the APWU bargaining unit. Hence, the American Postal Workers Union has standing to assert its interest in the dispute.

C. Narrowness of the Issue

On one hand, the American Postal Workers Union argued that the issue in the case is restricted to examining circumstances in which the Employer is permitted to issue an OF-346 license. On the other hand, arguments of the APWU generally focused on the Employer's ability to require certain employees to be licensed. Issuing a license is not synonymous with requiring an employee to drive. At most, issuing a license is permitting an employee to drive. Arguments based on qualification standards and on local options for driving in the EL-303 Handbook as well as the description of motor vehicle service in the Postal Operations Manual fall into this category and fail to provide much guidance. For example, the APWU argued that the Employer did not comply with "local option" provisions in the EL-303 Handbook for adding driving requirements. But whether duties so added by management met conditions in the handbook provision is material only to the Employer's decision to add requirements to a position and not to a decision to authorize a license without requiring it. Furthermore, credible evidence established that the EL-303 Handbook provisions were intended, not as a curb on the Employer's right to assign work, but as a limitation on the Employer's ability to burden applicants with unnecessary qualifications.

Evidence submitted by the American Postal Workers Union failed to establish whether Mail Handlers and Letter Carriers in the five grievances had been required to drive, despite the absence of driving duties in their Job Descriptions or bid assignments. It is clear that in the "Manchester" grievance, licensing was solicited by the Employer and was voluntary on the part of Mail Handlers. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 1.) Whether the Employer could require the workers to qualify for a driver's license is not the issue before the arbitrator. The focus of the dispute is on whether the Employer had a right to issue licenses to such workers. The APWU argued eloquently against the requirement of such driving qualifications and duties, but the case it made was considerably less persuasive against the authorization of such licensing.

Arguments advanced by the American Postal Workers Union based on the EL-827 Handbook "surrender" provisions as well as the treatment in the Employee and Labor Relations Manual of Position Descriptions are more directly relevant to the issue of licensing. Verbiage in these documents is subject to more than one interpretation. Such ambiguity opens the door to examining extrinsic evidence in an effort to understand the meaning of the provision, and this conclusion implicates standard rules of contract interpretation.

The parties struck a bargain according to which they gave the Employer an exclusive right "to determine the method, means, and personnel by which [postal] operations are to be conducted." (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 5.) Such a right must be exercised pursuant to any limitation in the parties' agreement and must be consistent with applicable laws and regulations. This contractual language may not be ignored or treated as though it is merely grandiloquence. It is an assumption of the common law of the shop that no part of the parties' agreement is superfluous. (See Restatement (Second) of Contracts, §203, 92 (1981).)

Does Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook, as incorporated by Article 19 of the parties' agreement, restrict the Employer's right to issue OF-346 licenses? Section 444 governs the surrender of Of-346 licenses. Its language is ambiguous as to the extent of the Employer's discretion in effecting such surrender. The provision appears on its face to grant local management the ability to control the licensing of transferring employees. Evidence in the parties' relationship allows a contract reader to move beyong reliance on mere appearances. The doctrine of past practice long has been used by arbitrators as an interpretive aid to resolve contractual ambiguity.

In his seminal research on past practice, Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal espoused the use of past practice as a source of meaning from which to draw the essence of a collective bargaining agreement. He implicitly recognized the imperfect nature of words and concluded that it is logical to use conduct of the parties regularly repeated in response to a given set of circumstances as a means of clarifying ambiguous contractual verbiage. (See Mittenthal, "Past Practice and the Administration of Collective Bargaining Agreements," in Arbitration and Public Policy Proc., Fourteenth Annual Meeting, National Academy of Arbitrators 30 (1961).) Courts have given an approving nod to the Mittenthal analysis. (See SFIC Properties, 103 F.3d 926 (9th Cir. 1996).) The heart of the Mittenthal analysis has remained unchanged for over three and a half decades. (See Sylvester Garrett, "Contract Interpretation," in Arbitration 1985: Law and Practice, Proceedings of the Thirty-eighth Meeting of the National Academy of Arbitrators 1, 140 (1986).)

A review of the parties' past practice reveals that Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook has not been used to limit the ability of the Employer to authorize Mail Handlers, Letter Carriers, and other non-MVS employees to drive large vehicles. Issuing licenses to such employees has been common practice in many, if not most, postal installations for many years. Mr. Eddy, Transportation Specialist at Postal Headquarters in the Logistic Department of Motor Operations, testified that ignoring the past practice of the parties would have a "disastrous effect" on the efficiency of the operation, either because licensed drivers would be unavailable for necessary duties or because it would be inordinately costly to change the practice. (See Tr. 184-85.) The well-established past practice makes clear that Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook does not require management to revoke the licenses of "nondriving" employees.

The American Postal Workers Union failed to be persuasive in its contention that Position Descriptions and qualification standards limit a Mail Handler's or Letter Carrier's work authorization. The APWU's theory of the case suggested that merely because a worker's duty is not listed or because an individual is not "required" to qualify to drive, an otherwise qualified person must be prevented from being allowed to drive at all. A balance must be struck in a case of this sort between extremes. On one hand, it is important not to overly circumscribe management's discretion in a way that negatively affects efficiency and the productive operation of the Postal Service. On the other hand, management must not be left with such unbridled discretion that it is able to threaten certain jobs by abuse of its discretion.

A significant difference between driving duties about which the APWU complained in the five grievances and such duties listed in the Position Description for a Motor Vehicle Operator is that one can best be described as a minor, irregular task, while the other constitutes the primary function of a position. It clearly makes sense to list major duties and to require employees to be qualified in order to perform such duties. At the same time, it would not be sensible to require every Mail Handler and Letter Carrier to qualify to perform a minor duty that might never be needed by most employees in the classification. Absent express contractual limitations, management possesses the discretion to dictate when such a duty might be needed and whether enough qualified employees are available, should such a contingency arise. Managerial discretion, however, is not unlimited. It is tempered by the contractual intent of the parties, as evidenced by their past practice. There are additional limitations on opportunistic behavior inherent in the doctrine of good faith.

D. Not a Jurisdictional Issue

The parties agreed on the narrow issue before the arbitrator that focused on the Employer's right to license certain employees. At the same time, all acknowledged either tacitly or openly that the dispute also may involve jurisdictional implications with regard to management's authority to extend driving privileges. The dispute at this point in time, however, is not ripe for consideration as a jurisdictional conflict. There are not competing claims to the work at this point. Neither the National Association of Letter Carriers nor the National Postal Mail Handlers Union advanced arguments in this proceeding with regard to the contractual right of employees they represent to drive five-ton or larger vehicles. Such jurisdictional issues do not need to be addressed in order to resolve the narrow issue with regard to the Employer's right to license and have not been the focus of this review.

It, however, seems clear that the possibility of such a dispute overshadows these five grievances. Resolution of such a dispute might well depend on the materiality and significance of driving assignments. These no doubt would vary from facility to facility. The arbitrator did not receive significant evidence on this issue. As a consequence, the result in this case is not intended to presage the appropriate determination in a jurisdictional challenge, should it proceed to arbitration at this level.

E. Conflicting Regional Decisions

The American Postal Workers Union advanced three regional arbitration decisions in support of its theory of the case. In the Germano Award, an arbitrator concluded that the ability of the Employer to license Mail Handlers to drive five-ton or seven-ton vehicles, even if not required to do so and even if the driving were limited to emergencies, was denied by Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook. (See APWU's Exhibit No.6.) Only Section 444 stood in the way of the Employer's discretion according to Arbitrator Germano. Arbitrator Germano reasoned that, if the Employer were to add incidental driving duties to a position, only passenger vehicles could be authorized. He reasoned that the labor contract's overall lack of clarity with regard to this issue meant that clear and specific language in Section 444 of the EL-827 Handbook must be given priority. Accordingly, he sustained the grievance and ordered the licenses to be surrendered.

In the Marx Award, the grievance focused on the retention of an OF-346 driving license by employees in the classifications of Mail Handler, Electronics Technician, Tool and Parts Clerk, General Mechanics, and Custodians. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 7.) Arbitrator Marx concluded that employees in the Custodian classification would be permitted to retain their driving licenses but that Mail Handlers would be required to surrender theirs. He based his conclusion on a finding that driving is not required in a Mail Handlers job classification and is not essential to performance of the work.

In the Franklin Award, the issue focused specifically on the Employer's authority to issue a driving license to Mail Handlers. The grievance was based on instances in which a Mail Handler transported mail to a branch station in a two-ton vehicle under emergency circumstances. Arbitrator Franklin concluded that driving duties of Mail Handlers were limited by the Position Description to driving forklift trucks only. She also concluded that, because the disputed work was infrequent and unexpected, the Employer failed to meet criteria for "local options" that permitted management to add driving duties. The arbitrator reasoned that, if driving is required in a position, the Employer should add the requirement by using proper procedures to do so. If such work is not required, the arbitrator found that the Employer should not issue a driving license. She granted the grievance and ordered the Employer to limit Mail Handler licenses to forklift trucks or passenger vehicle endosements only. Curiously, the order did not require Mail Handlers to surrender licenses already granted by management.

Although all three arbitrators essentially agreed with the APWU's understanding of its rights in this matter, the three arbitration decisions were premised on different criteria. Arbitrators Marx and Franklin placed more emphasis on job requirements. For Arbitrator Germano, the issue turned solely on the language of the "surrender" provision in the EL-827 Handbook. There was no indication that Arbitrator Germano was presented with an alternative interpretation of the provision and, accordingly, found the language to be clear and unambiguous. His assumption, however, that the provision could be interpreted only one way led to an erroneous conclusion.

Since the provision is no less ambiguous than the rest of the language covering this subject, it is appropriate to use past practice as an interpretive aid. Such an analysis leads to an opposite conclusion from that of Arbitrator Germano. Arbitrator Germano correctly distinguished between a license being required and a license being allowed. It is reasonable to believe that he would have allowed licensing for voluntary and energency situations had it not been for a misplaced reliance on the EL- 827 Handbook "surrender" provision.

The flaw in the result reached by Arbitrators Marx and Franklin results from a misplaced reliance on Position Descriptions. As discussed earlier in the analysis, Position Descriptions must not be relied on woodenly and rigidly to limit managerial discretion in terms of work assignments, unless such Position Descriptions have come into existence through a deliberative process of good faith bargaining. Arbitrators Max and Franklin erred in equating "required" with "allowed." Absent clear contractual guidance to the contrary, to restrict the Employer to assigning work only where it also has authority to require it constitutes an unreasonable burden on the efficient operation of the Postal Service and, hence, is inconsistent with Article 3 of the parties' agreement. As a result, the three regional arbitration decisions on which the APWU relies failed to provide a persuasive source of guidance in this case.

F. Conclusion

The Employer is not required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement to revoke driving privileges of employees who are not required to drive solely on the basis of their position or job descriptions. Neither is management prevented by the parties' collective bargaining agreement from granting driving privileges to employees who, otherwise, are qualified to drive and meet internal requirements. The APWU failed to be persuasive in its theory to the contrary.

Past practice has been an important source of guidance in understanding the intent of ambiguous language in this case. It should also be useful in charting future action. Recognizing the potential for abusing the ability to license drivers and to assign driving duties, it is important to stress that this decision should not be construed as giving management unlimited discretion in this area. Where management can show a local past practice of licensing Mail Handlers, Letter Carriers, and others to drive five-ton and larger vehicles, such conduct continues to be permissible within the bounds of good faith.

If it can be shown that local management has not conducted its operation in such a manner, the Employer is limited to its prior course of conduct, unless the parties negotiate a different approach or an appropriate arbitration decision produces a different configuration. For example, some evidence suggested that in the Marx Award in 1991, the Employer agreed that Mail Handlers should not be licensed. (See APWU's Exhibit No. 7, p. 3.) The point is that local past practice must control, unless the parties negotiate a different result.

BACKGROUND

This dispute was prompted by Postal Management's action in declaring certain Local Memoranda of Understanding (LMOU) null and void. Management took this action because these particular LMOU were negotiated outside the 30-day period of local implementation set forth in Article 30-B of the National Agreement. NALC insists Management's behavior was improper. It believes that nothing in the National Agreement bars local parties from changing their LMOU whenever they wish to do so and that Management should not be permitted to nullify such changes on the ground that they occurred after the local implementation period.

NALC Branch #57 represents carriers in several Rhode Island communities. It has negotiated separate LMOU for Bristol, Barrington, and Warren. When the 1987 National Agreement was executed, the local parties in these communities had a 30-day period commencing October 1, 1987, to negotiate changes in their then existing LMOU. Negotiations took place in all three locations. New LMOU emerged within the 30-day period of local implementation. They were made effective as of October 1, 1987. They stated that each LMOU "shall continue in effect until such time as it is mutually agreed to negotiate a new agreement."

Some years later in early 1991 these local parties again entered negotiations. Substantial changes were made in their LMOU. I shall use Bristol as an example. Under Article 3 (Hours of Work, Overtime), a provision concerning overtime charges for those sick or on an extended leave of absence was deleted. Under Article 4 (Leave), the leave calendar was to be placed in circulation no later than January 15 (previously February 1) and requests for leave were deemed to be approved if supervision does not notify the carrier within 48 hours (previously 72 hours) of receipt of the request. A clause prohibiting the charging of certain time away from work against choice vacation periods was enlarged to include non-choice vacation periods as well. A new provision was added to cover the carrier who had either voluntarily passed up his leave selection or failed to make his selection in a timely manner. Other language in this Article was simplified or clarified.

Under Article 5 (Posting), the posting of a carrier assignment had previously been required in certain circumstances. Now such an assignment may or may not be posted at the carrier's discretion. When a vacancy occurs, it must be posted within five days (previously seven days). And a new provision was added requiring that successful bidders for vacant assignments accept the non-workdays accompanying such assignment. Under Article 8 (Safety and Health Committee), a new provision called for equal representation on the committee with meetings to be held no less than once a month. Another new provision involved Management's commitment to meet with a NALC representative during emergencies and hazardous conditions to help determine guidelines for curtailment or termination of operations and to notify carriers of any such action. Still another new provision declared that mail delivery after dark is a safety hazard and will not be allowed.

Under Article 9 (Local Policy on Discipline), a new provision required Management to make every effort to schedule PTF carriers in advance and noted that such PTFs need not remain near their phones awaiting an assignment. Under Article 10 (Representation...), new provisions called for the Branch President to be notified of all personnel actions and granted Branch representatives the right to use post office telephones for official NALC business. Under Article 13 (Training a New Carrier), a new provision gave a carrier 30 days within which to familiarize himself with a new route and to become proficient. Under Article 14 (Inspection of Personnel Jacket), a NALC representative previously had the right to inspect a carrier's personnel jacket if accompanied by the carrier. New language permitted this inspection without the presence of the carrier provided the carrier gave his representative permission in writing to make the inspection. Under Article 20 (Seniority PTF Carriers), a rotating schedule for Sunday and holiday collections by PTFs had been maintained and posted. A new provision called for separate and distinct Sunday and holiday schedules. Under Article 21, new provisions were added with regard to employee lockers, choice of winter or summer apparel, and availability of a separate NALC bulletin board and an area for carrier literature.

This Bristol LMOU became effective February 28, 1991. Similar changes were made in the negotiation of new LMOU for Barrington and Warren in January 1991.

When Division Labor Relations became aware of these new LMOU, it concluded that the local parties had no right to enter into negotiations and execute these LMOU. It directed the Postmasters of the three communities in question to advise Branch #57 that the new LMOU were "null and void" because they were in violation of Article 30 of the 1987 National Agreement. The Postmasters sent letters to that effect to Branch #57. The result was the three grievances now before the arbitrator.

The relevant terms of Article 30 (Local Implementation) read as follows:

> A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1987 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.
>
> B. There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation to commence October 1, 1987 on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1987 National Agreement:
>
> [Items 1 through 22]
>
>
> C. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period. However, where there is no agreement and the matter is not referred to arbitration, the provisions of the former local memorandum of understanding shall apply, unless inconsistent with or in conflict with the 1987 National Agreement.
>
> E. When installations are consolidated or when a new installation is established, the parties shall conduct a thirty (30) day period of local implementation, pursuant to Section B. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The 30-day local implementation period under the 1987 National Agreement began on October 1, 1987. The local parties negotiated LMOU during that period. The next 30-day implementation period occurred under the 1990 National Agreement. It did not begin until October 1, 1991. The local parties, however, negotiated new LMOU in January-February 1991, some eight months before the latter implementation period. The issue, simply stated, is whether the local parties had the right under Article 30 to negotiate these new LMOU without regard to the local implementation period.

NALC answers the issue in the affirmative. It acknowledges that local parties are required, on request, to negotiate LMOU during the implementation period. But it argues that nothing in Article 30 bars the parties from choosing to negotiate at other times if they wish. Nor, it says, does Article 30 justify voiding any new LMOU negotiated outside the implementation period. It believes this position is supported by the past behavior of many local parties throughout the country, by a need for this kind of bargaining flexibility, and by a number of prior national level arbitration awards.

The Postal Service answers the issue in the negative. It contends that Article 30, in clear and unambiguous terms, prohibits local parties from negotiating new LMOU after the contractual implementation period. It states that there is just one 30-day implementation period and that local parties may not negotiate LMOU changes after that period. It concedes that certain minor adjustments in language, resulting from grievance settlements and other such happenings, may legitimately prompt changes in LMOU at some later time. It maintains, however, that the kind of substantial, widespread changes in LMOU which occurred here constitute a complete disregard of the restrictions imposed by Article 30. It urges that these restrictions, given the circumstances of this case, justify its action in voiding the LMOU in question.

The national parties plainly intended to insure the continuity and stability of LMOU through Article 30. They provided in 30-A that LMOU "shall remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." They recognized that LMOU could be "changed by mutual agreement" but only where such "mutual agreement" was reached "pursuant to the local implementation procedure..." And, as 30-B states, the "local implementation procedure" refers to a carefully defined 30-day period beginning on a date certain, typically 60 days after the execution of a new National Agreement. There is just one such implementation period listed in Article 30 of the 1987 National Agreement, namely, "a 30-day period...to commence October 1, 1987..." Any change in LMOU must take place during this 30-day period. To allow local parties to make later changes through "mutual agreement" would mean that "presently effective" LMOU had not, contrary to 30-A, "remain[ed] in effect during the term of this Agreement."

These findings can be readily applied to the facts of this case. At the time the 1987 National Agreement was executed, there were "presently effective" LMOU at the three Rhode Island post offices involved in this dispute. Those LMOU, according to 30-A, were to "remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." unless changed during the 30-day local implementation period which began on October 1, 1987. Changes were "mutually agree[d]" upon during this implementation period. The resultant LMOU, again according to 30-A, "shall remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." But they did not. They were substantially revised by the negotiation of new LMOU in early 1991 while the terms of the 1987 National Agreement still governed the relationship between the national parties. The next implementation period under the successor National Agreement did not occur until October 1, 1991, some eight months after the January-February 1991 changes. The continuity the national parties had bargained for was ignored by the local parties' premature negotiation of new LMOU. The local parties acted contrary to the restrictions found in 30-A.

It could be argued that the continuity contemplated by 30-A ("shall remain in effect...") concerns only the time between the execution of the National Agreement (here July 21, 1987) and the start of the local implementation period (October 1, 1987) and that local parties are free thereafter to change LMOU through "mutual agreement" whenever they wish. But that would be a strained and unrealistic interpretation. It is difficult to believe that the national parties meant the promised continuity to apply to such a brief time span. Indeed, LMOU are to "remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." This promise is not just for a part of the contract "term" (a matter of months) but rather for the entire contract "term" (a matter of years). This would be perfectly clear where there is no "mutual agreement" during the implementation period and "presently effective" LMOU are simply carried forward from one National Agreement to the next. The fact that LMOU are revised during the implementation period is no reason to treat them any differently, that is, no reason to deny revised LMOU the continuity assured by 30-A.

No doubt some local parties have over the years made changes in their LMOU through "mutual agreement" outside the implementation period. They have done so without higher postal authority declaring the changes null and void under 30-A. None of this, however, is necessarily inconsistent with the interpretation I have given 30-A. To the extent to which such changes were relatively minor, in character or scope, one could properly say that the affected LMOU had essentially "remain[ed] in effect..." and no 30-A violation had occurred. It is only when the changes are substantial, in character or scope, that the affected LMOU cannot be regarded as having "remain[ed] in effect..."

As for the present case, I have already described the extensive changes made in the Bristol LMOU in February 1991. Articles 3, 4, 5, 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 20 and 21 of that LMOU were impacted. Some provisions were altered; others were discontinued; and still others were added. The changes dealt with a wide variety of subject matter. Several time periods were shortened or lengthened. It is obvious that the Bristol local parties did much more than a mere amendment or two. They engaged in a full-scale negotiation of their LMOU. They did not allow the prior LMOU, the one negotiated in October 1987, to "remain in effect during the term of this [1987 National] Agreement..." They did exactly what 30-A sought to prevent. Given this violation of the 30-A restrictions, the Postal Service was within its rights in nullifying the February 1991 LMOU.

This same article-by-article analysis of the Barrington and Warren LMOU shows the same kind of widespread changes. These early 1991 LMOU, like the situation in Bristol, were the product of a full-scale negotiation. The local parties did not allow their prior LMOU, the ones negotiated in October 1987, to "remain in effect during the term of this [1987 National] Agreement..." They did exactly what 30-A sought to prevent and the Postal Service was within its rights in declaring such LMOU null and void.

NALC emphasizes that there is nothing to prevent the national parties from renegotiating the National Agreement midterm if they wish to do so. It notes that this is true even though the National Agreement contains a "Duration" clause stating that its terms "shall remain in full force and effect to and including..." a specified future date. It believes the local parties have this very same freedom to renegotiate midterm if they wish to do so.

The difficulty with this argument is that the national parties and local parties do not have the same standing. The national parties may amend the National Agreement any time they wish provided their action is the product of "mutual agreement." However, the national parties placed strict limitations on local parties through 30-A. They stated that LMOU "shall remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." and that LMOU could be altered through "mutual agreement" only where such "mutual agreement" occurred pursuant to the implementation procedure. These restrictions could of course be waived by the national parties. But there was no such waiver here. Hence, the local parties were bound to honor 30-A and live with their October 1987 LMOU until the next implementation period when LMOU could once again be negotiated.

NALC relies heavily upon a national arbitration award issued in September 1981 in Case No. N8-W-0406. There, Helena, Montana Management refused to follow a LMOU clause requiring cases for a particular route to be "...re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only." The Postal Service asserted that the Helena local parties had authority to negotiate only on the 22 items enumerated in 30-B, that they had no authority to negotiate on other subject matter, that they had nevertheless done so in agreeing to this re-labeling clause, and that this clause should therefore be deemed unenforceable. I gave the following explanation for rejecting the Postal Service's position:

> This argument rests on a single sentence in Article XXX-B, "There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation...on the 22 specific items enumerated below..." These words simply state that the local parties are to negotiate on these 22 items. A familiar rule of contract construction provides, "To express one thing is to exclude another." The Postal Service apparently relies on this rule in asserting that the local parties are not to negotiate anything other than these 22 items. Its position is that the local parties in Helena had no authority to negotiate the clause on re-labeling and that this clause must therefore be deemed null and void.

This point of view is not persuasive. To begin with, it must be remembered that the local parties had in the past routinely negotiated local memoranda on subject matter nowhere mentioned in the National Agreement. No one claims these memoranda were, for that reason, invalid. However, so many local issues were deadlocked in the 1971 negotiations that the procedure for resolving such impasses was overwhelmed and hence unworkable. This problem prompted the introduction of XXX-B in the 1973 National Agreement. Clearly, the concern of the national parties was not the subject matter of the local memoranda but rather the number of impasses. It is true that XXX-B served to limit the subjects on which the local parties were required to negotiate. But that obviously was done in order to limit the number of potential impasses in the future.

Given this tradition of broad local memoranda and the limited objectives of XXX-B, it would take clear contract language to prohibit the local parties from negotiating a clause on a subject outside the 22 listed items. No such language, no such prohibition, can be found in XXX-B. The Postal Service believes this provision describes what the local parties are authorized to negotiate. But it is equally plausible to argue, as NALC does, that this provision describes what the local parties are required to negotiate. This interpretation is, I think, more consistent with the parties' history as well as collective bargaining reality. The rule of construction noted earlier, when applied to this view of XXX-B, would indicate only that the local parties are not required to negotiate on any subject outside the 22 listed items. Thus, the local parties are free if they wish to expand their negotiating agenda to include subjects nowhere mentioned in XXX-B. That is exactly what happened in Helena when the local parties agreed to a re-labeling clause in the 1975 negotiations. They had the authority to negotiate such a clause.

NALC believes my argument on this award is clearly applicable to the present case. It contends that just as 30-B did not prohibit local parties from negotiating on subject matter outside the 22 items, so too 30-A does not prohibit local parties from negotiating LMOU outside the implementation period if they choose to do so. It maintains, referring to the prior award, that 30-B merely describes when local parties "are required" to negotiate LMOU, namely, the implementation period, and that although they "are not required" to negotiate at other times, they may do so if they wish.

The present case, however, is clearly distinguishable from N8-W-0406. The decisive language here is in 30-A, not 30-B. And 30-A states that LMOU "shall remain in effect during the term of this [National] Agreement..." and can be changed only through "mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure." This is a clear commitment to continuity. There was no comparable restriction with respect to the subject matter of LMOU. Article 30-B simply said, "There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation...on the 22 specific items..." Nowhere in 30-A or 30-B is there any suggestion that local parties were prohibited from agreeing to cover subject matter outside the 22 items. The purpose of these provisions, the contract language chosen to express that purpose, and the factual background of these cases prevent N8-W-0406 from being considered a controlling precedent.[1]

One final comment seems appropriate. It is understandable why these Rhode Island local parties acted as they did. The 1987 National Agreement was to expire on November 20, 1990. But because the national parties were unable to negotiate successfully a new Agreement and had to go through interest arbitration, the Agreement was extended until this arbitration was completed and a new Agreement was in place. That did not happen until June 1991. The implementation period would ordinarily have begun on February 1, 1991, but was delayed by the interest arbitration until October 1, 1991. The local parties, apparently impatient with this long delay, chose to negotiate new LMOU in January and February 1991. It is also understandable why local parties may choose to revise a LMOU after the implementation period. Such changes allow unexpected problems to be resolved in a mutually agreeable manner, particularly where the language of the LMOU becomes over the years a hindrance to fair treatment of carriers or an unnecessary burden to efficient postal operations.

[1] Regional Arbitrator Roumell held in Case No. C1C-4G-C 17430 that "there is nothing in Article 30 that would prevent the local [Postal] Service to enter into Memoranda of Understanding even outside the local implementation period...". That award, however, made no attempt at any detailed analysis of this issue. Roumell drew this conclusion without any real explanation.

For all the reasons expressed in this opinion, there has been no violation of the National Agreement.

BACKGROUND

This grievance involves the scope of the Postal Service's newly won right to invoke the impasse arbitration procedures of Article 30 (Local Implementation) of the 1990 National Agreement. The parties agree that the Postal Service may resort to interest arbitration to challenge an existing provision of a Local Memorandum of Understanding (LMOU) which deals with subject matter within the 22 enumerated items in Article 30B. The Postal Service insists it is entitled to make this same challenge against an existing provision of a LMOU which is outside the 22 enumerated items. The Unions disagree.

Since the mid-1960s, the parties have encouraged the execution of LMOUs. Those agreements included a wide variety of clauses. Some served to implement the general provisions of the National Agreement; others dealt with subject matter not covered by the National Agreement. The parties specifically contemplated LMOUs which went beyond the terms of the National Agreement. For instance, Article 7, Section 13(c) of the 1968 National Agreement prohibited local clauses which "repeat, reword, paraphrase or conflict with the National Agreement..." but added that "this is not to be interpreted to mean that local negotiations are to be restricted to only those options provided in articles in the National Agreement..."

This history was not ignored in the 1971 National Agreement, the first contract following the Postal Reorganization Act and the creation of the collective bargaining process now in effect. Article 30 stated that "it was impractical to set forth in the Agreement all detailed matters relating to local conditions..." and that therefore "further negotiations regarding local conditions will be required with respect to local installations, post offices, and facilities." It went on to say that "any agreement reached shall be incorporated in memoranda of understanding." It provided that no such LMOU "shall be inconsistent or in conflict with this Agreement..."; it provided for arbitration of impasses reached in local negotiations. And arbitration could then be invoked either by the Unions or the Postal Service.

The 1971 local negotiations resulted in a huge number of impasses. More than 100,000 of them were appealed to arbitration. Obviously, the parties were unable to dispose of this volume of disputes. This difficulty prompted changes in the 1973 National Agreement. The parties decided to limit the number of impasses by restricting "local implementation" to

"22 specific items enumerated below..." Thus, the local negotiators were required to deal with any or all of these 22 items but were not required to discuss anything else. The parties provided for arbitration of impasses where the appeal to arbitration was timely and was authorized by the National Union President. This impasse arbitration process could not be invoked by the Postal Service.

The language of the 1973 National Agreement, specifically, Article 30, was carried forward into the 1975, 1978, 1981, 1984 and 1987 National Agreements. It should be quoted at length:

> A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1987 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.
>
> B. There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation to commence October 1, 1987 on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1987 National Agreement.
>
> > [1 through 22 dealing with such subjects as wash-up periods, local leave program, vacation scheduling, scope of "overtime desired" lists, light duty assignments, local implementation of the National Agreement language on seniority and posting, and so on]
>
> C. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period. However, where there is no agreement and the matter is not referred to arbitration, the provisions of the former local memorandum shall apply, unless inconsistent or in conflict with the 1987 National Agreement.

D. An alleged violation of the terms of a memorandum of understanding shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure.[1]

Also a National Memorandum of Understanding with respect to "procedures" to be applied is the "implementation of Article 30" has been in effect for a good many years.

The Postal Service was dissatisfied with some aspects of Article 30. It believed it was unfair for the Unions alone to have access to impasse arbitration over the terms of a LMOU. It noted that the Unions could seek changes in a LMOU through arbitration while Management could do no more than oppose such changes. It urged that simple justice required that Management be given equal access to arbitration under the "local implementation" procedure of Article 30. Its proposals in the 1990 national negotiations reflected this objective. The Unions, on the other hand, claimed no revision in Article 30 was necessary and resisted Management's demand for equal access.

The 1990 negotiations failed and the parties appointed an interest arbitration board (Board) to resolve their differences. One of the many issues before the Board was Article 30. The Postal Service argued, as it had in negotiations, that equal access to impasse arbitration should be granted. Its initial proposal to the Board stated:

> Local Implementation. In order to establish a "level playing field" with respect to those items subject to local implementation, the Postal Service proposes that Article 30 be amended to provide that both the Union as well as the Postal Service could submit disputed proposals to final and binding arbitration. Currently, only the Union can request arbitration which, in effect, "chills" local implementation discussions.

The Board's award summarized the parties' positions as follows:

> Union Position - The Joint Bargaining Committee argues against any change in the status quo and contends that Article 30 and the accompanying implementing Memorandum of Understanding should not be changed.

---

[1] This quoted language is taken from the 1987 National Agreement.

> USPS Position - The Postal Service seeks to amend Article 30 and the accompanying implementing Memorandum of Understanding to permit [local] issues remaining in dispute to be appealed to impasse arbitration by management, a right currently enjoyed only by the Unions.

The Board ruled in the Postal Service's favor. New language was added to Article 30A, stating that "presently effective" LMOUs could be changed not only by "mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure..." but also -

> ...as a result of an arbitration award or settlement arising from either party's impasse of an item from the presently effective [LMOU]...

New language was added to Article 30C, stating that proposals remaining in dispute "may be submitted to final and binding arbitration" not only by one of the national Union Presidents but also by "the Assistant Postmaster General, Labor Relations." And, finally, a new Article 30F was written to establish a different burden of proof on the Postal Service with respect to certain proposals it submits to impasse arbitration:

> F. Where the Postal Service, pursuant to Section C, submits a proposal remaining in dispute to arbitration, which proposal seeks to change a presently-effective [LMOU], the Postal Service shall have the burden of establishing that continuation of the existing provision would represent an unreasonable burden to the USPS.[2]

The parties agree that the Postal Service, like the Unions, can now invoke impasse arbitration over any subject matter within the 22 items listed in Article 30B. The Postal Service, however, believes it may also invoke arbitration on subject matter presently in a LMOU but beyond the scope of these 22 items. The Unions disagree. It was this disagreement which prompted the present grievance.

APWU initially filed a motion asking that I recuse myself because I served as Chairman of the Board which made these changes in Article 30. Its position was that I should not be called upon to interpret the very provision which I played a part in creating. Both the Postal Service and NALC opposed the motion. In an award dated December 23, 1992, I denied APWU's motion. The parties now request a decision on the merits.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The Postal Service relies heavily on the new language in Article 30A and F. It stresses that paragraph A recognizes that a presently existing LMOU may be "changed...as a result of an arbitration award...arising from either party's impasse of an item from the presently effective...[LMOU]." It stresses that paragraph F similarly speaks of Management making a proposal to "change a presently-effective...[LMOU]" and Management later, following Union rejection of the proposal, having the right to "submit...[such] a proposal... to arbitration." Its position is that these Article 30 revisions meant that Management thereafter would be able to take to impasse arbitration any LMOU provision regardless of whether or not its subject matter is covered by the 22 items set forth in 30B. Moreover, it insists its concern that Management be allowed to impasse LMOU clauses outside the 22 items was made clear to the Unions "in the Postal Service proposals and at the bargaining table prior to interest arbitration."

The Unions approach the problem quite differently. They argue that the right to place a local issue in impasse arbitration is found in Article 30C, not 30A or 30F. They contend that this right deals with "all proposals remaining in dispute" at the end of the "local implementation period", that this quoted language from 30C plainly refers to local proposals regarding the 22 items listed in 30B, and that the parties thus meant to limit impasse arbitration to subject matter within the scope of these 22 items. They urge, accordingly, that Management should not be permitted to appeal to impasse arbitration any current LMOU clause whose content is outside the 22 items. Furthermore, they assert that the record upon which the Board based its award "does not contain any indication that the Postal Service was seeking to expand the scope of impasse arbitration to matters outside the 22 items.". They believe the Board meant to give Management the "same access to impasse arbitration that the Unions enjoyed [prior to 1990] -- no less, but no more." They emphasize that the Unions were limited in impasse arbitration to these 22 items in the past and that this limitation should apply to the Postal Service as well.

The Postal Service's interpretation is not without appeal. LMOUs were never frozen. According to Article 30A, they could be changed in a number of ways prior to 1990. A LMOU clause "inconsistent or in conflict with the...National Agreement" was not enforceable and hence could in effect be ignored. A LMOU clause could be revised (or eliminated) through "mutual agreement" during the local implementation period. A LMOU clause could be revised (or eliminated), absent mutual agreement, through the "local implementation procedure", namely, through "final and binding arbitration." These possibilities had existed for years at the time the Board began its deliberations on the terms of the 1990 National Agreement.

The Board established another way of changing LMOUs. Its award stated that a LMOU clause could be modified (or eliminated) "as a result of an arbitration award...arising from either party's impasse of an item from the presently effective...[LMOU]." These words were not mere surplusage. They were written in recognition of the fact that a new device for changing a LMOU had been created. The parties disagree as to the nature of the new device. The Unions insist that it is procedural, that it merely grants Management equal access to local impasse arbitration. The Postal Service insists it is substantive as well as procedural. It urges that the new language serves not only to provide Management with equal access but also to permit Management to place "an item", that is, any item, from a "presently effective" LMOU before the impasse arbitrator.

The Postal Service position, at first blush, seems plausible. But it must be remembered that the purpose of Article 30A is simply to guarantee the continuity of LMOUs subject only to whatever changes may be justified by "inconsistenc[y]...", "mutual agreement", or "final and binding arbitration." Article 30A does not authorize the parties to take a local issue dispute to impasse arbitration. That authorization is found in Article 30C, "All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration..." A close reading of Article 30 as a whole makes clear that 30C is referring to "all proposals..." under the local implementation procedure, that is, "all proposals..." under 30B with respect to the 22 specific items mentioned therein. Accordingly, 30C limits the submission to impasse arbitration to these 22 items.

Had the Board intended to ignore these limits and expand the impasse arbitration agenda to other than the 22 items, it surely would have changed the language of 30C. Its failure to do so suggests that the Board never meant to expand the impasse arbitration agenda.

This conclusion is reinforced by the terms of Article 30F, "Where the Postal Service, pursuant to Section C, submits a proposal remaining in dispute to arbitration..." (Emphasis added). The underscored words reveal, as I have already noted, that it is 30C which authorizes a submission to interest arbitration. It follows that the scope of that arbitration must be determined by 30C, not by 30A. And when 30C speaks of "all proposals remaining in dispute...", it is plainly referring to proposals made by the parties under the local implementation procedure described in 30B, proposals concerning the 22 items set forth in 30B.

Whatever doubt remains should be dispelled by the purpose of the Article 30 revision. The Postal Service's initial proposal to the Board on Article 30 stated:

> ...In order to establish a "level playing field" with respect to those items subject to local implementation, the Postal Service proposes that Article 30 be amended to provide that both the Union as well as the Postal Service could submit disputed proposals to final and binding arbitration... (Emphasis added)

The "level playing field" was obviously an appeal for equal access, nothing more. Nowhere does this Postal Service statement to the Board suggest that the "playing field" not only be leveled but enlarged as well. Indeed, the Postal Service sought equal access only "with respect to those items subject to local implementation." These words refer to the 22 specific items in Article 30B, the permissible impasse arbitration agenda.

Later, in the proceeding before the Board, the Postal Service offered a position paper explaining its Article 30 proposal. The position paper urged that the parties be put on "equal footing", that they meet on "equal terms", that Management be an "equal party" with an "equal chance" to resolve problems. Although the position paper discussed "old provisions" of LMOUs which Management should be allowed to submit to impasse arbitration, all of those "old provisions" dealt with subject matter set forth in the 22 items for local implementation. Nowhere did the position paper request that the 22 items be expanded, that the impasse arbitration agenda be enlarged.

Finally, the Board's award summarized the Postal Service request as follows:

> ...to permit [local] issues remaining in dispute to be appealed to impasse arbitration by management, a right currently enjoyed only by the Unions. (Emphasis added)

The Board's concern was whether to provide Management with the same right of access to impasse arbitration as was then "...enjoyed by the Unions." Equal access was the issue. Nothing in the Board's words suggest that it believed the Postal Service was seeking to add to the 22 specific items in Article 30B or otherwise expand the impasse arbitration agenda.

Indeed, the Postal Service concedes that it has no right to submit to impasse arbitration a new LMOU clause whose subject matter is outside the 22 items. It insists, however, that it now may go to impasse arbitration over an old (that is, an existing) LMOU clause outside the 22 items. This distinction may have been raised during the negotiations which preceded the 1990 interest arbitration but it certainly was not raised in the arguments made to the Board.

For these reasons, my ruling is that the Article 30 changes simply provide the Postal Service with equal access. The Postal Service's access to impasse arbitration should be neither greater nor smaller than the Unions' access under prior National Agreements. Because the Unions were not entitled before 1990 to go to impasse arbitration on subject matter outside the 22 items, the Postal Service does not have that right either.

Dear Andrea:

I am writing concerning the language contained in Article 30.3A of the 2000 National Agreement between the NPMHU and the Postal Service.

Although this provision states that a request for arbitration of an impasse item remaining in dispute may be submitted "within ten (10) days of the end of the local implementation period," this language is inconsistent with the procedures contained in the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) Re: Article 30 — Local Implementation Procedures, paragraph 4 of which establishes a fixed date by which unresolved impasse items may be appealed to arbitration.

In order to clarify these seemingly contradictory provisions, this letter is to confirm that the parties agree that the language of the MOU is controlling for purposes of determining the date by which appeals to arbitration of unresolved impasse items must be accomplished.

Please contact me if you have any questions in this regard. Also, please sign below to indicate the Postal Service's agreement with this letter.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE and NATIONAL POST OFFICE MAIL HANDLERS, WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS AND GROUP LEADERS DIVISION OF THE LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO	IMPASSED LOCAL NEGOTIATIONS IN RESPECT TO APPLICATION OF SENIORITY IN WORK ASSIGNMENTS ISSUED: October 28, 1974

NATURE OF THE CASE

This case involves an interest arbitration under Article XXX--Local Implementation, of the July 21, 1973 Agreement between the United States Postal Service and American Postal Workers Union; National Association of Letter Carriers, National Post Office Mail Handlers, Watchmen, Messengers and Group Leaders Division of Laborers' International Union of North America; and National Rural Letter Carriers Association. It is brought by the Mail Handlers Union to obtain final resolution of various issues which arose in local negotiations after execution of the July 21, 1973 National Agreement. 1

In a July 5, 1974 joint letter the matter was scheduled for hearing on the basis that impasses concerning "day-to-day" application of seniority existed in 10 separate locations. At the hearing, however, it was indicated that either 14 or 15 separate locations were involved. The post-hearing 2

Union brief indicates that there are 12 locations in which a local impasse exists as to "day-to-day" application of seniority. Among the local installations seemingly involved are Syracuse, New York; Springfield, Missouri; Kansas City, Missouri; Trenton, New Jersey; Orlando, Florida; Memphis, Tennessee; Louisville, Kentucky; Toledo, Ohio; Springfield, Ohio; Cincinnati, Ohio; Atlanta, Georgia; and St. Louis, Missouri.

All of the local impasses concerning "day-to-day" seniority, in any event, were combined by the parties for purposes of hearing the present case. The hearing was held in Washington, D.C., on August 6 and 7, 1974 and both parties filed briefs as of October 2, 1974. 3

There is no need to detail here all of the original local Union proposals. Their general nature seems adequately ...lected in two. At Kansas City the Union simply requested ...at seniority should provide "the basis for selecting Mail Handlers for a temporary change of work assignment." A more detailed proposal was presented at Louisville (also at Toledo and Springfield, Ohio, in identical form), as follows: 4

> "1. Proposal - Reassignment out of bid assignment will be by junior employee.
>
> "2. Reassignment back into bid assignment will be by seniority.
>
> "3. Part-time flexible employees will have reporting assignments but will be utilized to meet the needs of the Service. The first excess of each part-time flexible each day from the reporting assignment shall be by juniority.

"4. Employees who work on straight or over-time beyond the cut-off (end of tour) time are juniority.

"5. Employees who are called in for over-time on their off day are junior.

"6. Employees reporting for duty six (6) or more minutes late forfeit seniority when workload is assigned by mail handler present. Seniority is regained for next open unassigned job."

Insofar as here relevant, Article XXX of the 1973 National Agreement states:

"ARTICLE XXX--LOCAL IMPLEMENTATION

"A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1973 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.

"B. There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation to commence 45 days after the effective date of this Agreement, on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement:

. . . . . .

"21. Those other items which are subject to local negotiations as provided in the craft provisions of this Agreement.

"22. Local implementation of this Agreement relating to seniority, reassignments and posting.

"C. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period. However, where there is no agreement and the matter is not referred to arbitration, the provisions of the former local memorandum of understanding shall apply, unless inconsistent with or in conflict with the 1973 National Agreement."

In each of the involved local negotiations the Postal Service representatives took the position that the "day-to-day" seniority proposals were not negotiable because, if they were granted, the result would be inconsistent with the 1973 National Agreement. For this purpose the Postal Service relied largely on the proviso in Article XXX declaring that "no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement." 6

After the disputed local proposals had been transmitted to the Mail Handlers National Office, for authorization to arbitrate pursuant to Article XXX, Paragraph C, settlement efforts took place at the National level upon the initiative of the Postal Service. During these negotiations the Postal Service ultimately indicated a willingness to consider the following as a basis for settlement of all of the local impasses: 7

"LOCAL IMPLEMENTATION SENIORITY

"1. In order to meet the responsibility of Article XLII, Section 1(c), a Union Shop Steward, designated by the Union pursuant to Article XVII, shall be recognized as the Union's representative on a day-to-day basis in matters pertaining to the administration of seniority.

"2. In all matters where a dispute arises regarding seniority, the supervisor will, when possible and consistent with the requirements of the service, discuss such disputes with the designated Union Steward prior to implementing the decision. When such disputes cannot be satisfactorily resolved, the employer's discussion (sic) will be implemented and the matter will be subject to the grievance procedure.

"3. When, for any reason, consistent with qualification requirements, it becomes necessary to move an employee, the employer will follow the guidelines set forth below in working such assignments.

a. Non-craft employees performing mailhandler craft duties.

b. Members of any other craft performing mailhandler duties.

c. Part-time mailhandlers.

d. Full-time mailhandlers."

The Union then submitted a counter-proposal including Paragraphs 1 and 2 as above quoted but with Paragraph 3 reading:

"3. When it is necessary to move an employee from his bid assignment, or assigned section for any reason, seniority shall be applied as follows:

1. Non-craft employees performing mailhandler craft duties

2. Members of any other craft performing mailhandler duties

3. Part-time mailhandlers

"4. Full-time mailhandlers by juniority

"Return to their bid assignment or section shall be by seniority."

The Postal Service rejected this proposal and the matter then was carried into arbitration. At the hearing the Union suggested that its last proposal for settlement at the National level should be deemed to constitute the impassed local issue for each location involved, but recognized that each local issue, as originally submitted, properly might constitute the impassed local issue for the given location. The Postal Service replied that none of the impassed local issues on "day-to-day" seniority was arbitrable since each embodied proposals inconsistent with the National Agreement. It requested that the Impartial Chairman refuse to consider any of the local proposals. 9

Under these unique circumstances, and in view of the long range importance of this jurisdictional argument, the Impartial Chairman indicated that the present decision would deal principally with the jurisdictional issue without prejudice to possible full substantive presentations later, if necessary. The Mail Handlers did, moreover, present substantial evidence as to the merits, in support of its view that the substantive issues were arbitrable. 10

CONTRACT SECTIONS INVOLVED

In addition to Article XXX, as set forth above, the following provisions of the July 21, 1973 Agreement have been noted in the arguments of the parties: 11

"ARTICLE III-MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

"The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

"A. To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;

"B. To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees;

"C. To maintain the efficiency of the operation entrusted to it;

"D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

"E. To prescribe a uniform dress to be worn by letter carriers and other designated employees; and

"F. To take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out its mission in emergency situations, i.e., an unforeseen circumstance or a combination of circumstances which calls for immediate action in a situation which is not expected to be of a recurring nature.

"C. During exceptionally heavy workload periods for one occupational group, employees in an occupational group experiencing a light workload period may be assigned to work in the same wage level, commensurate with their capabilities, to the heavy workload area for such time as management determines necessary.

BACKGROUND EVIDENCE

Because the flow of mail in most postal installations fluctuates widely from hour to hour over any representative period, it usually is essential to move employees on given jobs from one work area or function to another during any single work tour. Over the years, Mail Handler Union officials have come to believe that supervisors sometimes tend to deal with employees "as numbers" in making such within-tour work assignments rather than giving due weight to individual craft status and relative length of service. The Union believes, moreover, there are significant instances of individual favoritism as well as "craft" discrimination (such as using Clerks or others to perform Mail Handler duties). Union evidence indicates that over some years the Postal Unions have attempted to limit Management flexibility in assigning of rk, in order to reduce the possibility of such abuses. It ints to Article I, Section 1; Article II; Article VII; Article VIII, Section 5; Article X; Article XI; Article XII; Article XXV; Article XXXIII, and Appendix A of the 1973 National Agreement, as well as to Article XLIII (dealing specifically with the Mail Handler craft) as reflecting collectively bargained efforts to deal with such problems. The Union thus regards the presently disputed local proposals as additional efforts to deal more effectively with this general problem. 12

During local negotiations under the 1971 National Agreement there were a number of Mail Handler local impasses on similar "day-to-day" seniority proposals which reached the National level for further negotiations under Article XXX of the 1971 Agreement. Mail Handler witnesses testified that they were told by the Postal Service in the course of such 13 negotiations (early in 1973) that the local proposals were not negotiable, in part, because Section C of the Mail Handlers 1971 Supplemental Agreement on Seniority included as its first sentence: "The installation head is responsible for the day-to-day administration of seniority." While not accepting this Postal Service claim of unfettered discretion in day-to-day seniority administration, the Mail Handlers did not press the 1971 impasse issues into arbitration upon the advice of counsel. Instead they decided to deal directly with the problem in the impending negotiations for a new 1973 Agreement. Accordingly the Mail Handlers offered a craft proposal in the 1973 negotiations which included the following relevant paragraphs:

"SENIORITY

. . . . . .

"B. Coverage

"These rules apply to the regular work force when a guide is needed for filling vacant assignments and for other purposes. No employee, solely by reason of this Agreement, shall be displaced from an assignment he gained in accord with former rules.

"Seniority shall be the governing factor in all matters not covered in this agreement or supplements (such as movement of employees from one section to another, filling vacancies of higher level positions within a section, granting annual leave on a day-by-day basis, etc.)

"An employee shall be able to exercise his seniority rights to any position that is to be covered by a supplemental work force employee.

"C. Responsibility

"The Installation Head and the Union are responsible for the day-to-day administration of seniority. Installation heads will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation. The seniority list shall be corrected and brought up to date every three (3) months. The application of this general Agreement on Seniority will be open to local negotiations at the installation level."

(Underscoring added.)

In the ensuing 1973 craft negotiations, Postal Service representatives rejected most of Section B of this proposal, and particularly the second paragraph. Ultimately it was dropped. At the same time Section C was adopted as follows: 14

> "The installation head and the Union are responsible for the day-to-day administration of seniority. Installation heads will post a seniority list of mail handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation. The seniority list shall be corrected and brought up to date quarterly. The application of this general Section on Seniority will be open to local negotiations at the installation level in accordance with the local implementation provisions of the National Agreement."
>
> (Underscoring added.)

The foregoing Section C is part of Section 1 of Article XLIII, dealing with Mail Handler craft seniority and quoted earlier in this Opinion. Insofar as here relevant, this revised Section C differed from the 1971 Section C (applicable to the Mail Handler craft) to the extent indicated by the words underlined above. 15

The Union now urges that insertion of the words "and the Union" in the first sentence of Section 1-C, together with the provision for local negotiations to implement "application 16 of this general Section on Seniority," leave no doubt that the Union is entitled to bargain locally concerning "day-to-day seniority." Postal Service negotiators testified, however, that they left the 1973 bargaining table fully satisfied that the Mail Handlers had not succeeded in obtaining any right to bargain locally concerning "day-to-day seniority." The Union also presented evidence that in 1973 local seniority agreements in fact were negotiated in a substantial number of locations, applying "day-to-day seniority" and that some such local agreements had been in effect for years.

THE JURISDICTIONAL ARGUMENTS

While it is unnecessary here to set forth all of the 17 parties' skillful and comprehensive arguments, some detail may be useful in sharpening the issues to be decided.

1. Postal Service

The Service emphasizes that Article III of the 18
National Agreement spells out its exclusive right, "subject to the provisions of this Agreement," to direct the work force in the performance of official duties, to transfer and assign employees, and to determine the methods and personnel by which operations are to be conducted. It also stresses that Article VII, Sections 2-B and 2-C, deal specifically with day-to-day situations when there is insufficient work for employees' regular scheduled assignments and where exceptionally heavy workload periods for given occupational groups may require assignment of additional employees. These paragraphs leave no doubt that the Service may assign employees to other work "in the same wage level," and contain no suggestion that seniority is to be applied in determining which employees should be assigned and reassigned within their tours. Article XXX of the National Agreement limits local implementation negotiations to 22 subjects listed in its Paragraph B and states that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with, or vary the terms of, the 1973 National Agreement. Since nothing in the National Agreement requires an application of seniority to limit Management discretion in assigning and reassigning employees to deal with day-to-day fluctuations in workload, the Service holds the disputed Union proposals to be in conflict with the National Agreement.

The Service flatly denies the Mail Handlers' claim 19 that Article XLIII, Section 1 (covering the Mail Handlers craft) brings the issues under Item 21 of Article XXX, Paragraph B. The addition of the words "and the Union" to the last sentence of Article XLIII, Section 1-C in 1973 in no way indicates that local Unions may negotiate to establish new policies for administration of seniority. The Service holds that the three new words in this sentence mean only that the Union shares, with the installation head, the basic responsibility for administration of already established seniority provisions, on a day-to-day basis, through its representational role on behalf of the employees. The last sentence of Section 1-C, it notes, simply states that the application of "this general Section on Seniority" will be open to local negotiations in accordance with "the local implementation provisions of the National Agreement." Even if the local proposals here had been agreed upon, it follows, in the Postal Service view, that they arguably would be unenforceable as a matter of contract right.

The Service places great weight upon the October 1, 1973 decision of this Arbitrator in an APWU case involving a New York City "Seniority Impasse." There the local seniority proposal would have required that "within tour" temporary work assignments of Clerks, to meet varying work loads at various defined work locations (including assignments from one work floor to another), be made on the basis of moving junior employees first so that senior Clerks would remain on their usual assignments or their normal work locations. 20

In denying the APWU grievance in that case, the Arbitrator held that this local proposal did not represent "an implementation of any identifiable provision embodied in Article XII of the 1971 National Agreement (including the 1968 provisions incorporated therein)." Under the language of Article XII, Section 3-A of the 1971 Agreement, the Arbitrator therefore found the local proposal to be inconsistent with Article XII. 21

The evidence as to the 1973 craft negotiations with the Mail Handlers leaves no doubt, in the Postal Service view, that the addition of the words "and the Union" to the first sentence of Article XLIII, Section 1-C did not mean that the Union thereby became entitled to seek day-to-day application of seniority through local negotiations. Its witness who participated in the negotiations denied that there were any discussions which might have supported such an interpretation. 22

The Service also denies ever waiving its position that within-tour movement of Mail Handlers by inverse seniority was not appropriate for local negotiation under Article XXX. Its effort to settle the local impasses by further negotiation 23 at the National level in 1974 is said to have represented only a good faith effort to solve the problems short of arbitration.

2. The Union

The Mail Handlers emphasize that Item 21 in Article XXX, Paragraph B, contemplates negotiations at the local installation level of "items which are subject to local negotiation as provided in the craft provisions of this Agreement." Article XLIII, Section 1-C, is such a craft provision and its last sentence states that "The application of this general Section on Seniority will be open to local negotiations at the installation level in accordance with the local implementation provisions of the National Agreement." In the Mail Handlers' view, the first sentence of Article XLIII, Section 1-C, confers upon the Union, full responsibility for "day-to-day administration of seniority," jointly with the installation head. It thus deems this to authorize a local Union to seek to establish, through negotiations, that seniority will be observed in "day-to-day" movement of employees from one work assignment to another. 24

In support of this critical interpretation of Article XLIII, Section 1-C, the Mail Handlers urge that during negotiations on impassed local seniority issues under the 1971 National Agreement, at the National level, Postal Service officials asserted that "day-to-day seniority" was non-negotiable in part because the first sentence of Section C of the 1971 supplement on seniority broadly stated that "The installation head is responsible for the day-to-day administration 25 of seniority." Since the Postal Service later agreed to insert the three words "and the Union" following the words "Installation head" in this portion of the Mail Handler craft agreement in 1973, the Union deems this to establish that local Unions thereafter would have equal responsibility with the installation head. It emphasizes the recollection of its negotiators that they had withdrawn a proposed sentence in Article XLIII which clearly would have required applying seniority in day-to-day work assignments because they believed that the insertion of the three above quoted words in Section 1-C would authorize local negotiations on this subject. Even if there were a misunderstanding between the parties' negotiators on this point, the Union feels that the blame for any such misunderstanding must be placed upon the Postal Service negotiators. It rejects the Postal Service suggestion that the new words "and the Union" were intended simply to recognize that the Union in fact was responsible for day-to-day administration of the seniority provisions in performing its role in processing of grievances as representative of the employees. The Union thus concludes that the reasonable interpretation of Article XLIII, Section 1-C is that "it grants Management and labor equal voice in the application of day-to-day seniority and provides for local negotiation to finally determine that application."

Apart from this interpretive argument, the Mail Handlers urge that the Service is estopped from claiming that day-to-day seniority is not negotiable under Article XXX. It sees an estoppel in the fact that in the 12 cities here involved, the Postal Service actually did negotiate without questioning the negotiability of day-to-day seniority. It also emphasizes that there are many Postal installations in which similar local provisions in fact have been negotiated over the years, including 1973. Indeed, Postal Service representatives actually negotiated on the impassed issues here in dispute at the National level without ever asserting that the matter was not negotiable.

The Mail Handlers do not believe that the October 1, 1973 decision of this Arbitrator in the APWU case really applies in the present circumstances since the facts and contractual context of the two cases are different. It emphasizes that the earlier APWU Opinion placed considerable weight on Article XII, Section 3-A of the 1971 National Agreement, whereas the comparable provision in the 1973 Agreement is Article XXX, Paragraph B, Item 22. Here, however, the Union does not rely upon Item 22, but rather upon Item 21, covering local negotiations as to "those other items which are subject to local negotiation as provided in the craft provisions of this Agreement." In short, the Union places its weight essentially on the language of Article XLIII, Section 1-C, as outlined above, to substantiate its belief that the present case must be distinguished from the 1973 APWU decision. Even if Article VII, Sections 2-B and -C were deemed to confirm Management's right to assign employees as required in the ordinary course of operations, these provisions do not state what criteria should be applied in making such movements of personnel. Thus the Mail Handlers deem these paragraphs merely to state that employees, whoever they may be, may be reassigned to other work areas in given circumstances, and leave open the question of which workers are so to be assigned.

FINDINGS

1. The Earlier APWU Decision

This case involves a problem of major importance to all parties to the 1973 National Agreement, largely because key language in the present Article XXX differs from that in Article XXX of the 1971 National Agreement. That difference is critical in determining the jurisdictional issue here, as will appear below. There is no doubt that decision of the present case may be of long-range significance to all parties to the National Agreement, in respect to the scope of permissible local negotiations under Article XXX. The October 1, 1973 decision of this Arbitrator in the APWU case nonetheless provides significant background for present purposes. 28

In the APWU case the local proposal, under the 1971 Agreement, in essence would have required that "within-tour" temporary work assignments, to meet varying workloads of Clerks at various defined work locations (including assignments from one work floor to another), be made by moving junior employees first. Article XXX of the 1971 National Agreement provided for local negotiations to implement the National Agreement, but--unlike the present Article XXX--it included a sentence stating, "No such negotiations or memoranda of understanding shall be inconsistent with or in conflict with this Agreement, nor deprive any employee of any rights or benefits provided for under this Agreement." (Underscoring added.) In reliance on this language the New York City Postal Service representatives refused to negotiate in response to the local APWU proposal. Subsequent efforts by the APWU to induce the Postal Service to negotiate on the matter were unsuccessful and the case then was presented in arbitration under Article XV of the 1971 National Agreement, to determine whether the Postal Service was entitled to refuse to negotiate in response to such a local proposal. 29

In the APWU case the Postal Service particularly stressed Articles III and VII, Section 2-B and -C of the 1971 National Agreement. These provisions were not changed when the 1973 National Agreement was negotiated. Article XII, Section 3-A of the 1971 National Agreement also included a provision that: 30

> "A. The parties recognize that it is impractical to set forth in this Agreement all the matters relating to local implementation of the above seniority provisions of this Agreement, and that, in some cases, it may be necessary for the local parties to incorporate local implementation in memoranda of understanding. Such understandings, however, shall neither conflict with this Agreement, nor deprive an employee of any rights or benefits provided for under this Agreement. Such local memoranda of understanding shall be subject to the grievance and arbitration procedure."

In the APWU case the Union asserted that an application of seniority to control within-tour work assignments clearly represented an implementation of the seniority provisions in the National Agreement. It stressed that there had been numerous local agreements to this effect in various locations under the 1968 Agreement and even earlier, and held that nothing in Articles III or VII actually prohibited applying seniority in making within-tour work assignments. 31

The findings in the APWU case include the following 32 paragraphs which seem particularly relevant here:

> "The extent to which local parties are authorized to negotiate their own agreements in the context of a bargaining relationship governed by a single master, national, or basic agreement--covering multitudinous operations in many different locations--is a matter of first rank importance to all concerned. A master agreement hardly can treat all of the myriad local problems in adequate detail and where local implementations are not authorized expressly they nonetheless seem inevitably to arise in practice. Seasoned negotiators usually are inclined to recognize, in any event, that local agreements or practices should not be permitted to vary or subvert basic terms of the master agreement, since this would tend to defeat a principal purpose of bargaining on this basis rather than in smaller units. Thus it is not uncommon for master agreements to recognize that local agreements and practices are permissible only to the extent not inconsistent with the master agreement.
> "The negotiators of the 1971 Postal Service National Agreement seemingly embraced this general approach as sound when they wrote the 'Local Implementation' provisions, in what now appears as Article XXX in the APWU printed version of the 1971 National Agreement. This being the first national agreement negotiated under the Postal Reorganization Act, moreover, the precise language which the negotiators used in treating the subject should have been a matter of considerable significance to all representatives of all parties.

"In the present case, of course, there actually are two key provisions governing 'local implementation,' under the 1971 National Agreement, both of which must be given proper application. The later and more comprehensive provision (Article XXX) provides at least the procedural context in which the present seniority issue arose and in which it must be decided. The Arbitrator finds, however, that decision of the substantive seniority issue in this case must be based primarily upon the scope of local seniority implementation, as defined in Article XII, Section 3-A, giving due regard to the context in which this provision was adopted. Thus the present Opinion does not seek to determine or define the full scope or range of permissible local agreements (on matters other than seniority) under Article XXX since, at least arguably, there might be more flexibility delegated to the local parties thereunder in dealing with matters other than those governed by Article XII, Section 3-A.

"Sound decision of the present case requires that the revised local Union proposal be viewed as an entity. Had the parties undertaken detailed discussion of each item in the seven-point proposal, some possibly might have been modified or withdrawn. This did not happen and neither party now suggests that such detailed discussion should have taken place, was contractually required, or in fact could have produced any meaningful compromise consistent both with the National Agreement and the objective of the local proposal. Notably, too, Article XXX states that local 'negotiations' shall not be 'inconsistent or in conflict with' the 1971 National Agreement. This somewhat unusual provision seemingly authorizes a refusal to negotiate with respect to a local demand 'inconsistent' with the 1971 National Agreement, even though full negotiation might result in modifications which would eliminate the conflict. (It is unnecessary to elaborate on this here, since not an issue under the presentations.)

"The essential thrust of all items in the disputed local proposal, in any event, is that 'seniority' must control in making assignments of Clerks during scheduled tours of duty, with 'junior' employees assigned first to work areas or details other than those for which originally scheduled, or to which originally assigned on the tour. Since this proposal is put forward as an application of seniority under Article XII of the 1971 National Agreement, Article XII,

> Section 2, constitutes a first point of reference. Insofar as relevant, this incorporates into the 1971 National Agreement certain clearly defined pre-existing agreements, as follows:
>
> ' ... Article XII (Reassignments), Article XIII (Assignment of Ill or Injured Regular and Substitute Employees), Article XXII (Posting), and the Supplemental Agreements on Seniority, as stated in the Agreement between the United States Post Office Department and the seven (7) national exclusive unions, contained in POD Publication 53, dated March 9, 1968 ...'"

Against the background of these general observations, 33
the Opinion in the APWU case then analyzed the argument that the Local Union proposals constituted an application or implementation of seniority under Article XII of the 1971 Agreement as follows:

> "While the Union suggests that the disputed local proposal represents a local 'detail of seniority,' and thus is a conventional application of seniority principles, there is no support for this assumption. Instead, it is unusual for length of service to be the controlling factor which Management must observe in all instances of temporary work assignments during a given tour or shift, among employees who are filling the same job or who have bid successfully for the same 'duty assignment.' The Union points to no language in any of the 1968 Agreement seniority provisions (incorporated by Article XII, Section 2) which truly may be said to be 'implemented' by the disputed local proposal. While that proposal may constitute an effort to apply seniority principles, it seeks to do so on a subject not treated in, or relevant to, these seniority provisions.

"The Arbitrator also can find nothing in Article XII of the 1971 Agreement which limits the exercise of Management discretion under Article III in making and changing temporary work assignments within scheduled tours of duty, to meet fluctuations in workload and like operating contingencies, among employees regularly assigned to fill the same job or duty assignment. The fact that supervisors often, or nearly invariably, in practice may tend to assign junior employees to other duties or areas first does not establish that this always is feasible, even if it represents a generally sound practice. Perhaps it should be noted also that Article VII, Section 2-B and -C include language which seems to contemplate that certain types of work assignments 'on any particular > day' may be made in Management discretion, consistent with the employees' knowledge, experience, and capabilities.

> "To inject a rigid requirement that seniority always be observed (in reverse) in making within tour work assignments among Clerks filling the same job or duty assignment, thus hardly would seem to 'implement' any specific seniority provision incorporated by Article XII, Section 2 of the 1971 National Agreement. Article XII, Section 3-A, in so many words, authorizes only 'local implementation of the above seniority provisions of this Agreement.'"

This specific holding in the APWU case seems directly relevant to the interpretation and application of Item 22 in Paragraph B of the 1973 Article XXX. Accordingly it cannot be found that the disputed local proposals here represent an "implementation" of the seniority provisions of the National Agreement. 34

2. The Meaning of Article XLIII, Section 1-C

The Mail Handlers seek to distinguish the earlier APWU decision on the ground that the local seniority proposals here involve only an application of the seniority provisions 35 of Article XLIII, which accordingly may be carried into arbitration under Article XXX, Paragraph B, Item 21, of the 1973 National Agreement as an item "subject to local negotiations as provided in the craft provisions of this Agreement."

The validity of this key argument turns upon the meaning of Article XLIII, Section 1-C, and particularly the three words "and the Union" added to its first sentence in the 1973 negotiations. 36

While the Union first urges that Section 1-C, on its face, "explicitly" authorizes local negotiations concerning "day-to-day seniority questions," this clearly is not the case. More realistically, the Mail Handlers' brief places greater weight upon various statements attributed to Postal Service negotiators in 1973, which are said to establish that the intended consequence of adding the words "and the Union" was to authorize local negotiations concerning "day-to-day" seniority. Thus it claims that in March or April of 1973 Postal Service representatives had rebuffed its effort to negotiate locally on day-to-day seniority (under the 1971 Agreement) essentially because the first sentence of Section 1-C in its 1971 Craft Agreement made the installation head solely responsible for seniority administration. The Union then refers to the 1973 negotiations concerning Article XLIII, Section 1-C (which commenced shortly thereafter), as follows: 37

"The record discloses that the issue was of vital importance to the parties and thoroughly negotiated. The Postal Service steadfastly refused to grant a provision establishing the control of temporary transfers by day-to-day seniority. One of the employer arguments in those negotiations was that the Mail Handler seniority proposal contained inconsistent provisions. Whereas, proposed Section B would have provided for day-to-day seniority as the governing factor in the temporary transfer of personnel, proposed Section C provided for the local negotiation of the same issue. While the Mail Handlers may have desired a national level commitment to the use of day-to-day seniority, it was unable to achieve this demand, withdrew its proposed language in subsection B, and does not now claim that the National Agreement binds the Postal Service to the use of day-to-day seniority in all local post offices. However, the trade-off for the withdrawal by the Mail Handlers of the proposed language in Section B, was the continuation of the language in Section C which allowed for local negotiation of the same issue. In order to avoid the inconsistency of arguing for 'two bites of the apple' by demanding both B and C, the Mail Handlers withdrew the desired claim for broader rights in Section B for the more limited ones contained in C."

(Underscoring added.)

Not surprisingly the Postal Service negotiator does not have the same impression concerning what was said and accomplished in the 1973 negotiations and was totally unaware of the claimed "trade-off." The Service spokesman in these meetings denied that there ever had been any suggestion, by anybody, that addition of the words "and the Union" to Section 1-C would mean anything more than that the Union locally would "have an equal authority to see that the seniority provisions are properly administered." At this precise time, indeed, the APWU Local Seniority Impasse was moving into arbitration under the 1971 National Agreement and the Postal Service scarcely would have granted such a major concession on this very point in the Mail Handler negotiations. 38

This witness also emphasized that the Union simultaneously had sought to eliminate the word "normally" from [illegible] now appears as the first sentence in Article XLIII, Section 2-E-3. While flatly rejecting this proposal, the Postal Service did agree to add a second sentence to this provision, so that it now reads: 39

> "Normally, an employee shall work the duty assignment for which he has been designated the successful bidder. However, when an employee is moved off his duty assignment, he shall not be replaced by another employee."

In the Postal Service view, this paragraph, as revised in the 1973 negotiations, plainly recognizes that Management may move employees off their duty assignments temporarily with the sole restriction that such employee not be replaced by another employee.

In all truth, however, it is not fruitful now to try 40 to reconstruct the 1973 craft negotiations to determine specifically what the various participants may have said or argued, and the inferences which might have been drawn from such claimed statements or arguments. As most seasoned negotiators in major collective bargaining relationships fully understand, such an undertaking usually is impossible to accomplish and also can be a source of irritation and frustration likely to impede future negotiations. No one individual participant in a complicated negotiation really can claim to have either a complete, or fully accurate, recollection of what was said by all participants. The frailties of human perception, comprehension, and memory are too obvious to require elaboration here. There is no way to avoid a certain amount of unconscious editing, bias, and wishful thinking which color subsequent recollections of earlier arms' length negotiations.

Given the seriously conflicting testimony as to what 41 was said and implied in the 1973 negotiations, therefore, the Impartial Chairman is forced to rely primarily upon the actual language adopted by the parties. That language, moreover, must be evaluated in the bargaining context known to both parties when it was negotiated.

Reading the first sentence of Article XLIII, Section 42
1-C in this light leaves no doubt that it refers to the administration of seniority on a day-to-day basis. It does not say that the installation head and the Union are jointly responsible for "day-to-day seniority." The key word is "administration." This necessarily pre-supposes the existence of established policies and procedures to be administered. Standing alone, this sentence does not authorize a Local Union and installation head to negotiate entirely new seniority policies and procedures, beyond those already established or authorized in the 1973 National Agreement, or elsewhere in Article XLIII itself.

The validity of this interpretation is supported by the following key factors: 43

(1) When the 1973 Mail Handler negotiations took place, the APWU impasse on the same subject was being carried into arbitration; 44

(2) Article III of the National Agreement confirms the Postal Service's "exclusive right" to assign employees as required to conduct its operations, subject to the provisions of the National Agreement;

(3) Nothing in Article XII of the 1971 National Agreement contemplated any limitation upon the right to assign employees to deal with work fluctuations within scheduled tours; 46

(4) Articles VII, Section 2-B and -C in both the 1971 and 1973 National Agreements limit the right to assign employees to available work, in response to fluctuations in workload, by requiring that such assignments be "in the same wage level" but suggest no seniority limitation; 47

(5) The Postal Service refused to accept, and the Mail Handlers dropped proposed language which specifically would have established day-to-day seniority as the criterion in making work assignments; 48

(6) The parties in 1973 did not modify an existing provision as to the Mail Handler craft that: "Normally, an employee shall work the duty assignment for which he has been designated the successful bidder." Instead, they added to this provision a sentence reading: "However, when an employee is moved off his duty assignment, he shall not be replaced by another employee." (Article XLIII, Section 2-E-3). 49

Under all of the evidence, therefore, there is no sound basis to find that the 1973 negotiators for either party understood--or should have understood--that the ambiguous inclusion of the words "and the Union" in the first sentence of Article XLIII, Section 1-C was intended to authorize local Unions to negotiate seniority restrictions upon temporary assignments of employees in response to fluctuations in workload. 50

3. Proper Application of Article XXX

An alternative Union argument holds that the Postal Service now is estopped, because its representatives negotiated on day-to-day seniority at both local and National levels, from arguing that such an issue is not negotiable under Article XXX. No useful purpose can be served by considering this argument, however, since the reasonable meaning of Article XXX, in light of the realities of the collective bargaining process, precludes a flat refusal to negotiate on such a matter. 51

Here it is important to emphasize that the present Article XXX differs materially from its predecessor in the 1971 National Agreement. The earlier Article XXX declared that no local "negotiations" were permissible if they were in conflict with the National Agreement. It was specifically on this basis that the Postal Service had refused to negotiate in the APWU local seniority impasse case, and that case then came before the Arbitrator, as a rights dispute under Article XV of the 1971 National Agreement, solely to determine whether the Postal Service was obliged to negotiate. 52

It is common knowledge that many initial proposals in collective bargaining are unsound, impractical, and sometimes even frivolous or unlawful, yet such proposals may sometimes be so modified through negotiations as to eliminate objectionable features. A local proposal which may seem to seek a result in conflict with the National Agreement--but which nonetheless seeks to deal with a genuine problem within the scope of Article XXX--accordingly still may provide a basis for good faith negotiation. In any such negotiation, of course, either party may and should resist agreement upon any compromise or alternate solution which would conflict with the National Agreement. 53

Nothing in the present Article XXX authorizes a refusal to negotiate concerning a local proposal, on one of the subjects delineated in Paragraph B thereof. When the local and National Postal Service representatives in fact did enter into negotiations concerning the present impassed local issues, therefore, there could have been no estoppel. The Postal Service representatives simply were complying with the reasonable intent of Article XXX. 54

It follows that the present impasses are both negotiable and arbitrable under Article XXX, within the clear limitation that any ultimate settlement or award must not be "inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement." 55

4. Disposition of the Case

The Union's estoppel argument seems to run not only to jurisdiction (i.e., negotiability and arbitrability) but also to the substantive merit of its ultimate proposal for settlement at the National level. Because the Postal Service d suggested a basis for settling the impassed issues in ional level negotiations, the Mail Handler brief contends: 56

> "Given that the Postal Service concedes that the Union may bargain to restrict the temporary transfer of personnel by use of craft and duty status designations, it is not tenable to draw the line ... when the concept of seniority is introduced. Once the employer has agreed to restrict its prerogative by any means whatsoever, the negotiation of other standards, including day-to-day seniority is merely an element within the negotiations ..."

The Impartial Chairman cannot embrace this reasoning, in view of the plain limitation in Article XXX that "no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement." This important proviso cannot be rendered inoperative under an estoppel or waiver theory at the local level. There is, moreover, no evidence here which would support a finding of estoppel or waiver at the National level. At no time did any Service representative in the National level negotiations on these impasses indicate any willingness to agree that reverse seniority would be applied in making day-to-day work assignments. The whole thrust of the Postal Service participation in these negotiations was to find some compromise solution, in response to the local proposals, which would not inconsistent with the National Agreement. 57

Under all of the evidence, therefore, it is held that the final Union proposal to settle the disputed local issues does not constitute a proper disposition of the impasses. Under Article III of the National Agreement, the Postal Service enjoys the freedom to assign employees to various duties and work stations, subject only to the restrictions which are specified in the National Agreement. Nothing in the National Agreement contemplates any seniority restriction upon the making of within-tour assignments in response to workload fluctuations. To the extent that the Union proposal would require that reverse seniority be applied whenever it becomes necessary to move an employee from his bid assignment or assigned section, it thus is inconsistent with the National Agreement.

This is not to say, however, that some meaningful settlement of the disputed local issues is not possible. The Postal Service already has suggested a settlement designed to deal with some of the basic problems envisioned by the Union, and has not claimed that this possible solution would be improper under Article XXX. The present record is inadequate to warrant expressing an opinion as to whether such possible settlement would represent proper final disposition of the impassed local issues. 59

This case came to arbitration primarily because the parties needed clarification of several difficult interpretive issues, particularly under Articles XXX and XLIII. Now that these matters have been clarified, within the limitations of the present record, the parties should have a further opportunity to bargain realistically concerning the impassed issues. It seems probable that final settlement thus can be achieved and further resort to arbitration avoided. The Award here is shaped to enhance this possibility. 60

AWARD

1. The impassed local seniority issues in this case are both negotiable and arbitrable under Article XXX of the 1973 National Agreement. 61

2. As stated in this Opinion, no negotiated settlement or arbitration Award under Article XXX may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement. 62

3. The parties shall have a period of 60 days following this Award--or longer if they so agree--in which to negotiate full settlement in light of this Opinion. 63

4. Failing full settlement, any remaining impassed local issue may be returned to arbitration for final disposition under Article XXX. 64

Statement of the Award: The grievance is granted. The Helena postal facility should reimburse the Regular Carrier or T-6 for re-labeling work improperly assigned to others in April 1980.

BACKGROUND

This grievance from Helena, Montana involves the Postal Service's refusal to honor a clause in a Local Memorandum of Understanding which requires cases for a particular route to be "...re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only." NALC insists that this refusal is a violation of Article XXX of the 1978 National Agreement. The Postal Service argues, however, that this clause is unenforceable (1) because its subject matter does not fall within the 22 items enumerated for local negotiations in Article XXX, Section B and (2) because its terms are inconsistent or in conflict with Articles III and XIII. NALC disagrees with both of these propositions.

Since the mid-1960s, the parties have encouraged the execution of local agreements. Those local agreements included a variety of clauses. Some served to implement the general provisions of the National Agreement; others dealt with subject matter not covered by the National Agreement. The parties specifically contemplated local ageements which went beyond the terms of the National Agreement. For example, Article VII, Section 13(c) of the 1968 National Agreement prohibited local clauses which "repeat, reword, paraphrase or conflict with the National Agreement..." but added that "this is not to be interpreted to mean that local negotiations shall be restricted to only those options provided in articles in the National Agreement..."

This history was not ignored in the 1971 National Agreement, the first contract following the Postal Reorganization Act and the creation of the collective bargaining process now in effect. Article XXX stated that it was "impractical to set forth in the Agreement all detailed matters relating to local conditions..." and that therefore "further negotiations regarding local conditions will be required with respect to local installations, post offices, and facilities." It went on to say that "any agreement reached shall be incorporated in memoranda of understanding." It provided that no such memoranda "shall be inconsistent or in conflict with this Agreement..."; it provided for arbitration of impasses reached in local negotiations.

The 1971 local negotiations resulted in a huge number of impasses. More than 100,000 of them were appealed to arbitration. Obviously, the parties were unable to dispose of this volume of disputes. This difficulty prompted changes in the 1973 National Agreement. The parties decided to limit the number of impasses by restricting "local implementation" to "22 specific items enumerated below..." Thus, the local negotiators could deal with any or all of these 22 items but were not required to discuss anything else. The parties provided for arbitration of impasses where the appeal to arbitration was timely and was authorized by the National Union President.

The language of the 1973 National Agreement, specifically, Article XXX, has been carried forward into the 1975 and 1978 National Agreements. It is crucial to the resolution of this grievance and must be quoted at length:

> "A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.
>
> "B. There shall be a 30-day period of local implemention to commence October 1, 1978 on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1978 National Agreement:
>
>
> "C. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period. However, where there is no agreement and the matter is not referred to arbitration, the provisions of the former local memorandum of understanding shall apply, unless inconsistent with or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement.
> "D. An alleged violation of the terms of a memorandum of understanding shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure."*

* This quotation is taken from the 1978 National Agreement. The language of the 1973 and 1975 National Agreements is identical except for the year 1973 or 1975, respectively, instead of 1978.

Given this background, the facts which prompted the instant dispute should be considered. Route cases are labeled so as to allow a Letter Carrier to case mail in a proper delivery sequence. Re-labeling is periodically required, perhaps two hours' work on each carrier route once a year, because of route changes (e.g., new addresses). In the 1975 local negotiations in Helena, Montana, the parties agreed to a Memorandum of Understanding which included the following clause in Article XLI, Section 3:

> "U. Routes will be re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only."

This clause does not fall within any of the 22 items enumerated in Article XXX-B. It was nevertheless applied by Management throughout the life of the 1975 National Agreement. It was not mentioned during the 1978 local negotiations and it appeared again, unchanged, in the 1978 Memorandum of Understanding. No claim was made by Management in those negotiations that the clause was inconsistent or in conflict with the National Agreement.

Helena Management used a part-time Flexible Carrier and a limited duty Regular Carrier to remove and replace [illegible]ls on route cases on April 14, 1980. This was contrary [illegible] the terms of the 1978 Memorandum of Understanding. NALC Branch 220 grieved on April 28, 1980, alleging a violation of the Memorandum and seeking back pay for the Regular Carriers who would have performed this re-labeling had Management complied with Article XLI, Section 3U of the Memorandum.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

This case concerns the enforceability of that portion of the 1978 Helena Memorandum of Understanding which deals with the assignment of re-labeling work. Two principal questions are before the arbitrator. The first is whether this Helena clause is rendered unenforceable by reason of the fact that its subject matter is outside the scope of the 22 items enumerated for local negotiations in Article XXX-B. The second is whether this Helena clause is inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement and hence unenforceable under Article XXX-A and -B. The Postal Service believes both questions call for an affirmative answer. NALC disagrees.

I - Enforceability - Subject Matter

The Postal Service argues that Article XXX-B limits the permissible scope of local negotiations. It insists that local parties have the authority to negotiate only on those 22 items enumerated in XXX-B. It urges that they have no authority to negotiate on other subject matter and that should they nevertheless do so, any agreement they reach would be unenforceable. It asserts that these principles require that the Helena clause on re-labeling be declared unenforceable inasmuch as it does not fall within the 22 enumerated items.

This argument rests on a single sentence in Article XXX-B, "There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation...on the 22 specific items enumerated below..." These words simply state that the local parties are to negotiate on these 22 items. A familiar rule of contract construction provides, "To express one thing is to exclude another." The Postal Service apparently relies on this rule in asserting that the local parties are not to negotiate anything other than these 22 items. Its position is that the local parties in Helena had no authority to negotiate the clause on re-labeling and that this clause must therefore be deemed null and void.

This point of view is not persuasive. To begin with, it must be remembered that the local parties had in the past routinely negotiated local memoranda on subject matter nowhere mentioned in the National Agreement. No one claims these memoranda were, for that reason, invalid. However, so many local issues were deadlocked in the 1971 negotiations that the procedure for resolving such impasses was overwhelmed and hence unworkable. This problem prompted the introduction of XXX-B in the 1973 National Agreement. Clearly, the concern of the national parties was not the subject matter of the local memoranda* but rather the number of impasses. It is true that XXX-B served to limit the subjects on which the local parties were required to negotiate. But that obviously was done in order to limit the number of potential impasses in the future.

Given this tradition of broad local memoranda and the limited objectives of XXX-B, it would take clear contract language to prohibit the local parties from negotiating a clause on a subject outside the 22 listed items. No such language, no such prohibition, can be found in XXX-B. The Postal Service believes this provision describes what the local parties are authorized to negotiate. But it is equally plausible to argue, as NALC does, that this provision describes what the local parties are required to negotiate.* This interpretation is, I think, more consistent with the parties' history as well as collective bargaining reality. The rule of construction noted earlier, when applied to this view of XXX-B, would indicate only that the local parties are not required to negotiate on any subject outside the 22 listed items. Thus, the local parties are free if they wish to expand their negotiating agenda to include subjects nowhere mentioned in XXX-B. That is exactly what happened in Helena when the local parties agreed to a re-labeling clause in the 1975 negotiations. They had the authority to negotiate such a clause.

Two other points deserve brief mention. First, the Postal Service concedes that any pre-1973 local memoranda on subjects outside the 22 listed items would be valid and binding notwithstanding XXX-B. It says only post-1973 memoranda are affected by the XXX-B constraints. If this distinction were correct, then the validity of many local clauses would depend not on their subject matter but rather on the date they happen to have been negotiated. The same clause might be valid if executed in the 1971 negotiations but invalid if executed in the 1973 negotiations. That would be a strange result. Second, the Postal Service cites several awards which have interpreted XXX-B in a manner consistent with its position. All but one of those awards were impasse arbitrations. They were not grievance arbitrations; they were not heard

* And Article XXX-B and -C together indicate that the parties are free to arbitrate what they are required to, but cannot successfully negotiate.

 Multi-facility (or multi-employer) collective bargaining contracts always permit local agreements so long as they are not in conflict with the master contract. That phenomenon is a result of the need for mutually acceptable arrangements for matters not covered by the master contract.

 The one exception, Case No. AC-N-14034, was a grievance arbitration at the national level. But the arbitrator's opinion did not really deal with the issue before me in the present case.

at the national level; they do not appear to have involved a full airing of this XXX-B issue. In another award at the national level (Case No. A8-N-0036), Arbitrator Aaron stated, "...it can scarcely be contended that management is precluded by Article XXX, Section B, from agreeing to negotiate locally about any particular matter." Under these circumstances, I do not consider myself bound by the Postal Service citations.

For these reasons, my conclusion is that the Helena Local Memorandum clause on re-labeling was enforceable even though it covered a subject outside the 22 enumerated items in XXX-B.

II - Enforceability - Continuity of Memoranda

The Helena clause in question was initially agreed to in the 1975 local negotiations. It was incorporated in the 1975 Local Memorandum. No mention was made of this clause in the 1978 negotiations and the parties carried it forward into the 1978 Memorandum.

That clause is enforceable under Article XXX-A, "Presently effective local memoranda of understanding...shall remain in effect during the term of this [1978 National] Agreement." It was in effect in April 1980 when Management ignored its terms and assigned re-labeling work to someone other than "the Regular Carrier or T-6...." According to XXX-D, such "an alleged violation of the terms of a memorandum of understanding shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure."

III - Enforceability - Conflict with National Agreement

Article XXX-A provides that only those "presently effective local memoranda" which are "not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement..." The Postal Service asserts that the Helena clause on re-labeling is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Articles III and XIII of the 1978 National Agreement and is hence unenforceable. NALC disagrees.

Article III (Management Rights) states in part:

> "The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

A. To direct employees...in the performance of official duties;

B. To...assign...employees in positions within the Postal Service;

C. To maintain the efficiency of the operations...;

D. To determine the methods, means and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted..."

This contract language grants the Postal Service an "exclusive right" to "direct" the work force and "assign" work. Its broad discretion in these areas is "subject" to the provisions of the 1978 National Agreement. Neither party has cited any portion of the National Agreement which would limit that discretion in relation to the facts of this case. The M-39 Manual, Part 121.21, says that one of the Carrier's office duties is to "relabel cases if local management so desires..." These words merely indicate that Carriers are to perform re-labeling work only when Management asks them to do so.

The Helena clause on re-labeling work is part of a Local Memorandum of Understanding. It is not a provision of the 1978 National Agreement:* It states, "Route...[cases] will be re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only." The issue raised by the parties is whether this clause, this restriction on Helena Management's right of assignment, is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article III of the National Agreement.

The Postal Service's argument is not without appeal. It correctly observes that this local clause prohibits Helena Management from assigning re-labeling work to anyone other than the Regular Carrier or T-6. It insists that Management's "exclusive right" to "assign" is thereby limited, that the broad discretion granted by Article III is reduced by the Helena clause. In its opinion, therefore, the prohibition in this local clause is "inconsistent or in conflict with" its Article III rights. It says this inconsistency should prevent this clause from being treated, under XXX-A, as a * Local memoranda are enforceable through the terms of the National Agreement. But that surely does not make any such memorandum a provision of the National Agreement.

"presently effective local memoranda:..."

The difficulty with this argument is that it assumes Helena Management had no "right" to agree to such a clause. That is not true. One who holds an "exclusive right" has a wide variety of options. Thus, Helena Management had many alternatives with respect to the assignment of the disputed work. It was free to assign the re-labeling to any of its Carriers. It was free to assign the re-labeling to a special group of employees, the Regular Carrier or T-6 only. It was free indeed to reduce this latter arrangement (i.e., use of the Regular Carrier or T-6 only) to writing through a Local Memorandum. Each of these approaches represents a legitimate exercise of Management's "exclusive right" of assignment. It had a right to do whatever it wished to do.

In short, the "exclusive right" in Article III did not prevent Helena Management from contracting with the Local NALC Branch to limit the assignment of particular work to particular employees. That was simply one of the options available to it. Because this Helena clause was hence within Management's powers, it can hardly be considered "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article III rights. That being so, this local clause is not rendered unenforceable by XXX-A or -B. Helena Management was bound by this clause. When it assign[illegible]-labeling to employees other than the Regular Carrier or T-6 on April 14, 1980, it violated that clause. Such a violation is subject to correction through the terms of XXX-D.

In reaching this conclusion, I have examined awards by Arbitrators Krimsly and Balicer cited by the Postal Service. Both appear to have been the result of impasse arbitrations. The Balicer award involves other provisions of the National Agreement besides Article III and seems to be distinguishable from the present case. The Krimsly award is based, at least in part, on the faulty premise that local parties cannot negotiate assignment restrictions because that is not one of the 22 local implementation items in XXX-B. I have already ruled otherwise in Part I of this opinion.

There remains the Postal Service's claim that the local clause in question is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article XIII which concerns "assignment of ill or injured regular work force employees." The difficulty here is the lateness of this argument. Article XV describes in great detail what is expected of the parties in the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's Step 2 decision must make a "full statement" of its "understanding of...the contractual provisions involved." Its Step 3 decision must include "a statement of any additional...contentions not previously set forth..." Its Step 4 decision must contain "an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor." In this case, the Postal Service made no mention of Article XIII in Steps 2, 3 and 4. Its reliance on this contract provision did not surface until the arbitration hearing itself. Under such circumstances, it would be inappropriate to consider this belated Article XIII claim.*

For these reasons, I find that the Helena clause on re-labeling is valid and enforceable and that Helena Management violated this clause in April 1980 by using employees other than the Regular Carrier or T-6 to perform the re-labeling work.

AWARD

The grievance is granted. The Helena postal facility should reimburse the Regular Carrier or T-6 for re-labeling work improperly assigned to others in April 1980.

Re: APWU Local

H8C-5K-C 14259

Dear Mr. Baldwin:

On April 8, 1981, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The parties mutually agree that the disclosure provisions set forth in Articles XV, XVII and XXXI, National Agreement intend that any and all information upon which the parties rely to support their position in a grievance is to be exchanged between the representatives to assure that every effort is made to resolve the grievance at the lowest possible level. Accordingly, provided managements' file contains the supervisors request for disciplinary action of M. G. Edwards (Local APWU 851080) same should be made available to the Union.

Time limits were extended by mutual agreement.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Sincerely,

Howard R. Carter

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests the Postal Service's refusal to provide APWU with the minutes of certain Employee Involvement/ Quality of Work Life (EI/QWL) meetings held jointly by the Postal Service and the Mail Handlers. APWU insists that this denial of information was a violation of Article 17, Section 3 and Article 31, Section 2 of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees. NALC has intervened in support of one phase of APWU's position. The Mail Handlers have intervened in support of the Postal Service's position.

The EI/QWL concept was introduced in postal facilities in September-October 1982. Three of the four major unions - NALC, Mail Handlers, and Rural Letter Carriers - agreed to participate in the process. APWU is not a participant. The purpose of the program, broadly stated, is to "improve...the working life..." of employees and "enhance the effectiveness of the Postal Service." Management and each of the three unions above have established joint committees at local, regional and national levels to implement the EI/QWL concept. The committees attempt to identify and solve problems which affect the employees' work and the quality of their work life with the object of achieving greater job satisfaction and smoother operations. The committees, however, are "not intended to be a substitute for collective bargaining or the grievance procedure." And "no agreement or understanding reached as a result of the QWL process may negate or interfere with the National Agreement..."[1]

The Philadelphia Bulk Mail Center (BMC), Business Annex, has a 045 operation (non-preference letter distribution) and a 075 operation (non-preference flat secondary distribution). APWU clerks had been responsible for sorting this mail into cases by zip code and scheme knowledge, removing the sorted mail, bundling or banding it, and placing it in the appropriate receptacle, either a sack or an all-purpose container (APC). The latter task was part of the so-called dispatch function. These arrangements had evidently been in effect for some years.

M. Gallagher, the then President of APWU Local 7048, was told by a Mail Handler in September 1986 that this particular dispatch function had been discussed in EI/QWL meetings

[1] The quotations in this paragraph are taken from the October 15, 1982 Understanding (Statement of Principles & Committee Responsibilities) signed by the Postal Service and the Mail Handlers.

involving Management and the Mail Handlers and changes in this function were being considered by Management. Gallagher heard that the dispatch area was to be redesigned and that this would likely mean a "change in jurisdiction", namely, a re-assignment of dispatch work from APWU employees to Mail Handler employees. He therefore submitted the following request to Management on September 18:

> ...We request that the following documents...be made available to us in order to properly identify whether or not a grievance does exist and, if so, their relevancy to the grievance:
> 1. Request copies of all the minutes of all Employee Involvement/Quality of Work Life meetings ...

He apparently made clear that he was referring to Management-Mail Handler minutes.

Gallagher's request was passed along to the appropriate department. He spoke with W. Traugott, the then Acting Employee & Labor Relations officer in the EMC. He claims that Traugott advised him "he would provide that information as soon as he could get it" and that Traugott expressed no reservations about satisfying APWU's request. However, he was later informed that Traugott was having difficulty getting the minutes because P. Brown, the Coordinator for the local EI/QWL group, was not sure these minutes could be given to APWU. And he was still later informed that his request had to be referred to the national EI/QWL group for an answer. APWU became impatient with the delay and filed a grievance (CG-426) on November 1. It cited Articles 17 and 31 and complained of Management's failure to "provide the Union an opportunity to review the minutes of all...[EI/QWL] meetings."

In the meantime, evidently in late October, Management redesigned this dispatch function. APWU employees continued to distribute the mail, casing and bundling, at the 045 and 075 operations. But they now put the bundles in a utility cart. The cart was moved to a dispatch area by Mail Handler employees who then placed the bundles in APCs. These employees matched the "labels", perhaps this refers to zip codes, on the bundles with the "labels" on the APCs. They did not require scheme knowledge for this task. APWU believed that dispatch work had been improperly transferred from APWU jurisdiction to Mail Handler jurisdiction. It filed a grievance (CG-424) on October 24 and complained that the duties in question were "clearly clerical distribution activities" which were part of APWU's jurisdiction.

As for the grievance now before the arbitrator, the grievance protesting the failure to provide the EI-QWL minutes, Management's Step 1 representative was a Supervisor of Mails. She referred the grievance to Step 2 because "information is not available to me on QWL meetings." At Step 2, only Gallagher and Traugott were present. There is a difference of opinion as to what was said. Gallagher alleges he told Traugott that the dispatch change had an impact upon the APWU bargaining unit and was a by-product of EI/QWL discussions and that the minutes of those discussions were hence "relevant." He insists that Traugott did not raise the question of "relevancy" and that Traugott simply said he would give the minutes to the APWU if he had them but he had been unable to obtain them. Traugott, however, alleges that Gallagher offered no explanation as to why he wanted the minutes. Nor, according to Traugott, did he ask Gallagher for an explanation.

The Step 2 answer, prepared on November 20 by someone on Traugott's staff, read in part:

> A review of the facts indicates that the APWU Local 7048 has no contractual right to access to the minutes of the quality of work life meeting. The record indicates that the APWU declined during contract negotiations to participate in the QWL process. Therefore, their elimination from the program was by choice. Management has no obligation (and since another craft union is a primary participant), and no right to make this information available to the APWU.

Gallagher sought to correct Management's Step 2 answer on November 29. He advised Traugott in writing that he had "clearly indicated" at the Step 2 hearing that APWU had "sufficient reason to question discussions...in QWL meetings as we...suspect that on occasion our bargaining unit positions are the topic."

Traugott formally replied on December 2, 1986, to Gallagher's September request for information. He noted on the request form that the request was "denied" because he had been "unable to secure copies of minutes from QWL Committee." The Postal Service-Mail Handlers committee decided at the national level on February 3, 1987, that the minutes of any committee meeting could not be released without the consent of both such parties.

The grievance was heard in Step 3 on March 2, 1987. Management denied the grievance on the ground that APWU "has not established the relevancy of their request to review the records in question." An appeal to regional arbitration followed but the Postal Service took the position that a "national interpretive issue" was involved. Hence, a Step 4 meeting was held on March 22, 1988. Management again denied the grievance, emphasizing the following points:

> Whether an APWU bargaining-unit position is discussed during an EI-QWL meeting is immaterial. No action has been taken as a result of such meetings which would affect any positions within the APWU crafts. The APWU has chosen not to participate in the EI/QWL process, therefore, the information from EI/QWL meetings would not be necessary for the enforcement, administration, or interpretation of the National Agreement.
>
> In addition, because the Union has not claimed that any action has been taken which affected an APWU craft position, the minutes would not even be necessary to determine whether a grievance exists.

APWU found this answer unsatisfactory and appealed the case to national level arbitration on May 12, 1988.

Meanwhile, the other grievance (CG-424) concerning the merits of the work jurisdiction issue was moving through the grievance procedure. It reached regional arbitration in April 1989. Arbitrator Condon held that the Postal Service did not violate Regional Instruction 399 "when it assigned Mail Handlers to perform functions in the PA 045 & 075 areas." His ruling, in short, was that the dispatch function once performed by APWU employees could properly be reassigned to Mail Handler employees under the peculiar circumstances of that case.

The relevant provisions of the 1984 National Agreement read in part:

Article 17, Section 3

> The steward, chief steward or other Union representative properly certified in accordance with Section 2 above may request and shall obtain access through the appropriate supervisor to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists and shall have the right to interview the aggrieved employee(s), supervisors and witnesses during working hours. Such requests shall not be unreasonably denied. (Emphasis added)

Article 31, Section 2

The Employer will make available for inspection by the Unions all relevant information necessary for collective bargaining or the enforcement, administration or interpretation of this Agreement, including information necessary to determine whether to file or to continue the processing of a grievance under this Agreement. Upon the request of the Union, the Employer will furnish such information, provided, however, that the Employer may require the Union to reimburse the USPS for any costs reasonably incurred in obtaining the information. (Emphasis added)

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The APWU contends it had a right to the minutes of EI/QWL meetings held jointly by Management and the Mail Handlers at the Philadelphia BMC. It asserts that its representatives are responsible for filing and processing grievances, that they meet this responsibility in part by obtaining from Management "relevant information..." and "necessary" records or other documents, and that the minutes in question contained such "relevant" and "necessary" materials. It urges, accordingly, that Management's refusal to provide such minutes was a violation of Article 17, Section 3 and Article 31, Section 2. It alleges that it had reason to believe the minutes referred to a possible rearrangement of certain dispatch work, a rearrangement which could and later did result in the reassignment of work from APWU employees to Mail Handler employees. It claims that the minutes promised to reveal what was, from its standpoint, an improper intrusion on APWU's work jurisdiction. NALC supports one phase of APWU's position.

The Postal Service completely disagrees with APWU's analysis of the case. It argues, for the following reasons, that Management committed no violation of the National Agreement. First, it says APWU has failed to show that the requested minutes were "necessary" records or contained "relevant information." It stresses that EI/QWL committees do not engage in collective bargaining and cannot "negate or interfere" with the terms of the National Agreement. It maintains that because these committees therefore cannot discuss any subject which could impact APWU contract rights, the minutes could not possibly be "relevant."

Second, the Postal Service urges that only Management actions, not Management thoughts or discussions, can produce a legitimate grievance. It emphasizes that EI/QWL committees can merely recommend, that the APWU could have no grievance until Management acted on such recommendation, that APWU's request for information in September 1986 occurred before any rearrangement of the dispatch function (i.e., before any alleged intrusion on APWU's work jurisdiction), and that the request was hence inappropriate. Third, it maintains that the minutes in question were the joint property of Management and the Mail Handlers, that such minutes could be turned over to APWU only with the consent of both parties on the committee, and that no such joint consent was given. The Mail Handlers support the Postal Service position.

I - The Right to Information

The National Agreement plainly provides APWU with a means of acquiring from Management information it may need in filing or processing grievances. Article 17, Section 3 gives Union representatives the right to "obtain access...to review the documents, files and other records necessary for processing a grievance or determining if a grievance exists..." The Union representative must first "request" such information. Not all "requests" need be granted but Section 3 states that a request "shall not be unreasonably denied." Thus, when a request is made and denied and a grievance is filed protesting the denial, the issue is whether the denial was "unreasonable." The answer to that question is likely to turn on whether the information sought was "necessary..."

Similarly, Article 31, Section 2 gives Union representatives the right to "inspect...all relevant information necessary for...enforcement, administration or interpretation of this Agreement, including information necessary to determine whether to file or to continue the processing of a grievance..." The Union representative must first "request" such information and Management then "will furnish" it. Management may of course refuse to furnish information if it is not "relevant" or if it has nothing to do with "enforcement, administration or interpretation" of the Agreement. These latter words relate in large part to the Union's responsibility with respect to the filing and processing of grievances.

Article 31, Section 2 has been the subject of two national level arbitration awards. The first, Case No. H4N-NA-C 17, by Arbitrator Bernstein is dated August 1988. There, NALC had requested individual employee data which it alleged was "necessary for both collective bargaining and contract administration." Its request sought a list of city carriers by name and by sex, date of birth (i.e., age), minority code, handicap code, and veteran's preference code. It insisted that this information was needed on an "ongoing" basis and asked that it be furnished "quarterly." The Postal Service rejected the request and NALC grieved.

The arbitrator denied the grievance. He explained that Article 31, Section 2 of the 1981 National Agreement required Management to furnish "on a regular, ongoing basis" nothing more than the following employee information: "name, full address, and social security number; craft designation; health benefits enrollment code number; post office name, finance number and class." He held that NALC was asking for further data "on a regular ongoing basis" and was therefore improperly "attempt[ing] to expand the scope of..." Article 31, Section 2 through arbitration. His ruling stressed that NALC had couched its request in an inappropriate manner, that it had sought information it could not have "on a regular, ongoing basis." But the arbitrator went on to say, by way of dicta, that if NALC requested this same information "on an infrequent basis", its request would have been justified and Management would have had to provide such information.

The second award, Case No. H7N-NA-C 34, by Arbitrator Mittenthal is dated November 1989. There, several months after the Bernstein award, NALC had requested the same data Bernstein had said it was entitled to on an "infrequent" or "occasional" basis. It sought certain additional information as well. I held, following the principles expressed in the Bernstein award, that NALC was entitled to all such information other than the individual minority code.

What is significant in this case was the Postal Service argument that NALC failed to show that the information requested was "relevant or necessary for collective bargaining and/or contract administration" My decision noted that NALC had explained in Step 4 that this information was to be used for "telephone surveys" of its members. Those surveys, according to the Bernstein award, were to be conducted among "specific subgroups of the bargaining unit - women, blacks, veterans, etc. - to ascertain their particularized needs and desires so that they can properly be represented in the Union's bargaining proposals." On the basis of NALC's claim that such information was "necessary" for collective bargaining, Bernstein had held and I expressly agreed:

> ...This is a sufficient showing to comply with the [Article 31, Section 2] mandate that the data sought must be "relevant information necessary for collective bargaining."

> ...[T]he arbitrator [cannot be made] the judge of the Union's bargaining needs. The decision as to what data is needed to prepare the Union's bargaining proposals is one that only the Union can make. If it asserts that it needs this data for that purpose, and there is no reason to conclude that the assertion is not truthful, that is enough to satisfy the mandate of [Article 31, Section 2]...

These findings should be kept in mind in evaluating the "relevancy" arguments made in the instant case.

II - Relevancy of Requested Information

The parties disagree as to whether the minutes APWU requested were "relevant" or "necessary" within the meaning of Articles 17 and 31. APWU says these minutes were "relevant" and "necessary." The Postal Service says they were not.

To place this disagreement in sharper focus, certain facts bear repeating. An APWU representative was informally advised that Management and the Mail Handlers, at their EI/QWL meetings, had discussed the rearrangement of a dispatch function in the BMC and perhaps a reassignment of work which might result from such a rearrangement. APWU believed that such discussions may have impinged on its work jurisdiction in violation of the National Agreement. It hence asked for the minutes of these meetings. Management refused to provide this information. APWU grieved. The Postal Service does not deny that such discussions took place at EI/QWL meetings. It claims, however, that the minutes of these meetings would not be "relevant" or "necessary." Neither APWU nor the arbitrator has seen the minutes in question.

Perhaps the minutes contained nothing which could arguably be the basis for the filing of a grievance. In that event, APWU's request would not be "relevant." But perhaps the minutes did contain material which could arguably support the filing of a grievance. Suppose, for instance, that EI/QWL discussions went beyond their permissible limits and suggested some kind of bargain over work jurisdiction.[2] APWU could then understandably believe that a violation of Article 1 or some other provision of the National Agreement may have occurred. In that event, its request would be "relevant."

[2] This is pure supposition and should not be read to suggest what actually happened at any EI/QWL meeting.

APWU was plainly at a disadvantage in this situation. Because it had not seen the minutes, because it had not been informed as to precisely what the minutes said, APWU was confronted by special difficulties in establishing the "relevancy" of its request. However, APWU had good reason to believe that EI/QWL discussions between Management and the Mail Handlers involved a possible new work flow through the BMC. It knew that such a change might well have an adverse impact on APWU's work jurisdiction. It knew too that work jurisdiction issues are grievable under the National Agreement. Given these circumstances, where APWU asserts it needs EI/QWL minutes for purposes of contract administration and there is no reason to conclude this assertion is not truthful, that is enough to demonstrate "relevancy." APWU has a right under Article 17 to "review...records necessary for ...determining if a grievance exists..."; APWU has a right under Article 31 to "relevant information...necessary to determine whether to file a grievance..."

No doubt some type of investigation precedes the submission of a grievance. Information is developed and a decision is made by APWU as to whether or not a grievance is warranted. If there seems to be no merit in a particular complaint, presumably no grievance would be filed. It is for the APWU alone to "determin[e]...if a grievance exists...", t "determine whether to file...a grievance..." If the information it seeks has any "relevancy" to that determination, however slight, its request for this information should be granted. Assume for the moment that the EI/QWL minutes were not "relevant" to the work jurisdiction grievance filed five weeks after APWU initially requested these minutes. That assumption cannot control the disposition of the present case. Whether a piece of information is "relevant" to the merits of a given claim is one thing; whether such information is "relevant" to APWU's determination to pursue (or not pursue) that claim through the filing of a grievance is quite another. The latter question allows "relevancy" a far broader reach and should have permitted the APWU, for the reasons already expressed, to receive the appropriate EI/QWL minutes. The Postal Service view that APWU's request for these minutes was a mere "fishing expedition" is not persuasive.

III - Other Postal Service Defenses

The Postal Service emphasizes that APWU requested the minutes in September 1986 and that any EI/QWL meetings preceding this request would have involved mere discussions, maybe recommendations, but certainly no Management action. It contends that there could be no legitimate grievance until Management acted, until Management actually rearranged the dispatch function and perhaps reassigned work. It believes that APWU's request for the minutes therefore could not have been "relevant" and was properly denied.

This argument has in part already been answered. Surely, the restrictions on permissible subject matter for EI/QWL groups could be ignored in a given meeting and work jurisdiction could become a matter of group discussion and perhaps even tacit agreement. That may not be what happened. But the only way APWU could discover what was actually said in these meetings was to examine the minutes. Management refused to allow APWU to do so. It thus prevented APWU from making an informed and measured "determin[ation]" as to whether "a grievance exists" or whether "to file...a grievance." That was improper under Articles 17 and 31.

Even if Management was correct in rejecting APWU's request in September 1986, the fact is that a grievance was filed on October 24, 1986, protesting an alleged incursion on APWU's work jurisdiction. The APWU request for the minutes was still pending as of October 24.[3] By then, however, Management had rearranged the dispatch function and perhaps reassigned work. Management had acted but nevertheless continued to refuse APWU's request for the minutes. What the minutes contained I do not know. They could possibly have revealed the kind of considerations which prompted the reassignment of the dispatch function; they could possibly have revealed some conflict between what Management told the Mail Handlers and what Management later told APWU in processing the work jurisdiction grievance; and so on. They could very well have proven "relevant" to APWU's case on the merits. APWU had a right under Article 17 to "review... records necessary for processing a grievance..."; APWU had a right under Article 31 to "relevant information...necessary to determine whether...to continue the processing of a grievance ..." These rights were simply not honored.

The Postal Service alleges further that APWU's request was for "all" the minutes of "all" EI/QWL meetings of Management and the Mail Handlers at the BMC. It maintains that this request was too broad, too unfocused, and that hence its denial was not unreasonable.

[3] Management did not formally reject APWU's request until it issued its Step 2 answer to the present grievance on November 20, 1986.

The difficulty with this argument is that it would have been a simple matter for Management to insist that APWU make its request more specific. Management's representative in Step 2, for example, admitted he did not ask why APWU wanted the minutes. The APWU representative, I believe, would have provided the specifics if asked. Indeed, he claims he told Management in Step 2 what APWU's concerns were. He submitted a written correction to Management's Step 2 answer in which he stated that "we clearly indicated in our Step 2 hearing..." that APWU has reason to believe that "our bargaining unit positions are the topic..." of EI/QWL meetings. Surely, the Management and APWU representatives should have known by Step 2 - and most likely did - that APWU's request concerned information relating to the work jurisdiction grievance which had been filed in late October 1986, several weeks earlier.

The Postal Service asserts finally that the minutes were the joint property of Management and the Mail Handlers. It says these minutes cannot be released to APWU, or anyone else, without the consent of the parties to this particular EI/QWL arrangement. It stresses that such mutual consent had not been given.

This argument is not convincing. APWU has a right to obtain from Management information which satisfies the "relevancy" or "necessary" test in Articles 17 and 31. As explained in Part II, its request for the minutes in this case did satisfy these tests. Nothing in either article suggests that the parties meant to exclude EI/QWL minutes from the "documents, files and other records" which are subject to the discovery procedure. True, Article 17, Section 3 states that "requests shall not be unreasonably denied" and thus infers that a request can properly be denied for good reason. It may be that some matters discussed at EI/QWL meetings are so confidential or personal that Management would have good reason to deny disclosure. But I am not convinced, on the evidence before me, that an administrative decision not to release any minutes without the joint consent of Management and the Mail Handlers constituted good reason for refusing APWU's request. The minutes sought by APWU were potentially "relevant" and "necessary" to the work jurisdiction issue raised by APWU and should therefore have been provided.

IV - Summary

My ruling must be that the Postal Service violated Articles 17 and 31 by refusing to grant APWU's request for EI/QWL minutes, specifically, those portions of the minutes which related in any way to the rearrangement of the dispatch function and the possible reassignment of work due to such rearrangement. The denial of this request was not reasonable.

As for the remedy, Management must now provide APWU with the information it sought. Of course this disclosure will occur far too late. Arbitrator Condon has already decided the merits of the work jurisdiction grievance in favor of the Postal Service. Should the information revealed in the minutes suggest that the Condon award was in error, should such information suggest that Condon may have ruled differently had he been privy to these minutes, APWU should be free to bring the grievance back to regional arbitration. Condon could then reconsider the matter and determine whether he would have decided the merits of the dispute differently had he possessed this additional piece of information.

AWARD

The Postal Service violated APWU's rights under Article 17, Section 3 and Article 31, Section 2. The remedy for this violation is provided in the foregoing opinion.

Dear Mr. Connors:

On February 10, 1988, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management properly denied the union's request for information under the provisions of the National Agreement.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Articles 17 and 31 of the National Agreement. The union agreed that they will be required to reimburse the USPS for any costs reasonably incurred in gathering requested information, in accordance with the schedule of fees outlined in Section 352.6 of the Administrative Support Manual. Management should provide the union an estimate and may require payment in advance. With this in mind, requests for information should not be denied solely due to compliance being burdensome and/or time consuming.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Re: Article XXXIII
M-NAT-17

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On February 14, 1974, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned national level grievance.

The matters presented during this discussion have been given careful consideration. As indicated, the intent of concern was with the position of the US Postal Service with respect to promotional opportunities for mail handler employees.

As stated in the 1973 National Agreement, the US Postal Service is committed to the principal of promotions from within, with emphasis upon career advancement opportunities. The language in Article XXXIII sets forth the ground rules to be followed when promotional opportunities to a craft position exist. As acknowledged, any breach of these provisions would be grievable under Article XV of the 1973 National Agreement.

Sincerely,

William E. Henry, Jr.

722 Postal Employee Development Centers — Organization and Operations

722.1 Purpose

Postal Employee Development Centers (PEDCs) are field units, located in districts, that provide area-wide training and development support services on a continuing basis for all Postal Service employees. The primary mission of the PEDCs is to contribute to and foster improved employee job performance. The PEDCs also provide guidance to help employees pursue career and self-development goals.

722.2 PEDC Network Operating Procedures

722.21 Geographic Area of Responsibility

A PEDC's geographic area of responsibility consists of all Postal Service facilities in a performance cluster, as determined by the Manager, Human Resources (District).

Managers, Human Resources, ensure that all field Postal Service facilities within a geographic area are the responsibility of a specific PEDC. This includes Postal Service facilities with unique purposes, such as Headquarters field units.

Each PEDC must ensure that all employees within its geographic area of responsibility receive required training and developmental opportunities.

722.22 PEDC Reporting Relationships

PEDC reporting relationships are as follows:

a. One area staff member serves as a liaison with headquarters staff for the Manager, Learning Development & Diversity (MLDD). This staff member interacts periodically with ERM staff.

b. The MLDD reports functionally and administratively to the Manager, Human Resources (District).

c. The Human Resources specialist assigned to the training function at the district level reports functionally and administratively to the MLDD.

722.23 Facilities

The following guidelines apply to allocation of facility space for PEDCs:

a. Managers, Human Resources (District), are authorized to establish and abolish PEDCs and to determine the number and location of PEDCs within their districts.

b. Changes in the PEDC network must be communicated to Headquarters so that records and distribution lists can be revised in a timely manner.

c. Handbook AS-504, Space Requirements, specifies the space allocations for PEDC activities.

711.41 Job Training

711.411 Description

Job Training is training required by management to: (a) qualify an employee for presently assigned duties; (b) improve an employee's performance of assigned duties; (c) prepare an employee for a future assignment subject to selection procedures.

Job Training is always compensable for Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) nonexempt employees. Salaried exempt employees continue to receive their salary while attending Job Training.

711.412 Conditions

To be categorized as Job Training, all of the following conditions apply:

a. Management requires attendance at the training.

b. The training is directly related to the performance of the employee's current job or specific future assignment subject to satisfactory completion of the training and/or a job examination.

c. Refusal to attend the training, or less than satisfactory performance in the training, may jeopardize the employee's present position or make the employee ineligible for qualification or promotion to a specific position or duty.

711.413 Examples

Specific examples of Job Training are:

a. Postal orientation for a new employee.

b. A Postal Employee Development Center (PEDC) course in electricity and mechanics for a mail processing equipment mechanic (MPE).

c. A driver training program for a motor vehicle operator.

d. A PEDC financial transaction course for a Sales and Services Associate (SSA).

e. A NCED Networking course for an electronics technician.

f. A SSA training program for a distribution clerk who is the senior bidder for a SSA position.

g. A Postmaster course taken in preparation for a specific officer-in-charge (OIC) assignment.

h. Scheme training for an employee in the deferment period established by Article 37 of the USPS-APWU National Agreement when the employee qualifies for and accepts the preferred assignment.

711.42 Self-Development Training

711.421 Description

Self-Development Training is that which is taken in order to attain self-determined goals or career objectives but is not directly related to the employee's current job. This training is noncompensable for FLSA nonexempt employees and must be approved by management in advance if postal resources are to be used. Before approving such training, management should take into account the provisions of 713.1 and 713.2.

Dear Mr. Adams:

On November 14 you met with Frank Dyer in prearbitration discussion of H8C-4B-C 29625/A8-C 2460, Battle Creek, Michigan. The question in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement by not compensating employees for time spent outside their normal schedule completing an inservice examination.

It was mutually agreed to full settlement of this case as follows:

1. Inservice examinations are to be conducted on a no-gain-no-loss basis.

2. Management will not intentionally schedule inservice examinations in order to avoid any payment applicable under the no-gain-no-loss principle.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter acknowledging your agreement with this settlement, withdrawing H8C-4B-C 29625/A8-C 2460 from the pending national arbitration listing.

Dear Mr. Wevodau:

On February 19, 1986, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is entitlement to compensation for time spent outside of the grievant's regular schedule in an interview.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed to settle this case as follows:

1. Any job interviews conducted are to be on a no gain-no loss basis.

2. Management will not intentionally schedule interviews in order to avoid any payment applicable under the no gain-no loss principle.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

H14-5L-C 20301

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On September 13, 1984, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance involved an allegation that local management is instituting new work and/or time standards.

After further review of this matter, we agreed that there was no national interpretive issue fairly presented as to the meaning and intent of Articles 3 and 34 of the National Agreement. This is a local dispute over the application of Article 3 of the National Agreement. We further agreed that management may establish goals and objectives for employees in a specific work unit. However, as provided by Article 34, 2.B the employer agrees that before changing any current or instituting any new work measurement systems or work time standards, it will notify the union as far in advance as practicable, but not less than 15-days in advance.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to Step 3 for further consideration by the parties.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgment of our agreement to remand this grievance.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

CLASS ACTION
GREENSBORO NC 27495

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On October 25, 1994, I met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement by using average van unloading times as a criterion for measuring employees' performance.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. The parties further agree that Article 34 embodies the mutual recognition of the principles of a fair day's work for a fair day's pay. Further, the parties agree that discipline cannot be imposed on one mail handler solely because they fail to perform at the same level as another.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

941.31 Job Security

Participation in EAP is voluntary and will not jeopardize the employee's job security or promotional opportunities.

Participation in EAP does not shield an employee from discipline or from prosecution for criminal activities.

941.33 Confidentiality

Inquiries regarding participation in EAP counseling are confidential, pursuant to the provisions of 944.4. EAP records may not be placed in an employee's official personnel folder (OPF).

emotional stress, and marital problems as well as substance abuse, dependence, or other addictions.

942.22 Referrals to EAP

942.221 Management Referrals

If a supervisor or manager observes any of the patterns listed in 942.21 or has some other reason to believe that the EAP could provide needed assistance to an employee, he or she may refer the employee to the EAP. Since participation is voluntary, the employee has the option to refuse the referral and cannot be disciplined for noncompliance.

Exception: If an employee has signed a Last Chance or Settlement Agreement that requires EAP participation, the employee can be disciplined for noncompliance under the terms of the agreement.

942.222 Referrals From Others

Fellow employees, union representatives, management association representatives, medical personnel, family members, or judicial and social service agencies may refer employees to the EAP. However, if any of these suggest or recommend that the employee seek EAP assistance, participation is always voluntary.

942.223 Self-Referrals

Employees who want help with any personal problem or concern are encouraged to seek assistance directly by personally contacting the EAP.

942.224 EAP Response

The following requirements apply:

a. EAP counselors must accept all referrals.

b. Face-to-face or telephone interview appointments must be available within a reasonable period from the time the request is made by the employee or family member.

c. Face-to-face and telephone appointments for urgent situations must be made consistent with need, regardless of the counselor's regularly scheduled hours.

d. Crisis counseling must be available by telephone 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

942.23 Problem Evaluation

EAP counseling staff provides assessment services and arranges counseling for employees or family members or refers them to appropriate treatment resources.

942.3 Recovery Counseling and Resources

942.31 EAP Counseling Sites

EAP sites are staffed by EAP professionals trained to provide assessment, short-term counseling, and referral services to individuals who seek their assistance. Postal Service EAP sites are not equipped to provide detoxification or drug rehabilitation assistance, but they can make referrals to outside programs and treatment facilities for these problems. To provide convenient, ready access to EAP counseling services for all Postal Service

941.34 Reasonable Access

The contractor providing counseling must endeavor to provide confidential counseling facilities within a reasonable driving distance from the employee's work site or home, in accordance with the following guidelines:

a. The Postal Service will provide office space and furnishings for those sites that require counselors to be in postal locations.

b. Providing ready accessibility to face-to-face EAP counseling is desirable, but may not always be possible. Counselors may offer telephone counseling or request that the employee travel to the counselor's office.

c. Reasonable hours and days, including coverage of all three tours, will be set by mutual agreement between the EAP consultant and the Human Resources manager.

d. Counselors may adjust their schedules to respond to crisis situations and to meet other needs, such as providing information sessions and visiting facilities.

941.35 Scheduling

The following guidelines apply to scheduling and whether EAP sessions take place on or off the clock:

a. An employee's first visit to EAP is on the clock, whether the visit is initiated by management, the union representative, or the employee (unless the employee prefers to visit the EAP unit on his or her own time).

b. Subsequent consultations are on the employee's own time.

c. If a reasonable period of time has elapsed since a management referral or a previously disclosed self-referral, the manager or supervisor may, on a case-by-case basis, approve an additional on-the-clock session.

d. To receive pay for an on-the-clock session, the employee must authorize the EAP provider to disclose his or her attendance to management.

942 Program Elements

942.1 Education

EAP counselors and subcontract counselors must provide information, training, or both periodically for all Postal Service employees to inform them about EAP services and the kinds of personal problems that can affect job performance or conduct.

942.2 Problem Identification, Referrals, and Evaluation

942.21 Patterns of Behavior and Work Performance Problems

Certain patterns of behavior and/or work performance can be indicative of problems affecting an employee. Deterioration in attendance, appearance, conduct, ability, or any combination of these factors may signal that the employee is experiencing a personal problem that may affect his or her job performance. These problems may include depression, anxiety, gambling,

944.4 Disclosure

944.41 General

944.411 Usual Recipients

Information identifying substance abuse program participants, whether or not such information is recorded, may be disclosed as follows:

a. To medical personnel to the extent necessary to meet a bona fide medical emergency involving the EAP participant.

b. To qualified personnel, with the express written authorization of the vice president of Employee Resource Management, for purposes of conducting scientific research or program audits or evaluation. However, under no circumstances may any personally identifiable information be disclosed in the resulting evaluation, research, or audit reports.

c. To a court, under the following circumstances:

(1) When authorized by a court order upon showing of good cause, such as when necessary to protect against an existing threat to life or threat of bodily injury, or in connection with the investigation or prosecution of a crime.

(2) In litigation or an administrative proceeding when authorized by the trier of fact, when the EAP participant offers testimony or other evidence pertaining to the content of his or her EAP participation. Counsel should be contacted for assistance in evaluating the court order and in determining the extent to which information must be released.

d. To any person when the EAP participant gives prior written consent to disclose information. This consent specifies the nature and scope of the topics to be released, to whom information is to be released, the purpose of the disclosure, and the date on which the consent terminates.

e. To a person in any situation in which the EAP counselor has a duty to warn.

f. To an expert, consultant, or other individual who is under contract to the Postal Service to fulfill an agency function, but only to the extent necessary to fulfill that function, and in accordance with the Privacy Act restrictions of 39 CFR 266.6.

944.412 Limitation of Disclosure

In all cases cited in 944.411, only information that is absolutely necessary to satisfy the recipient's business or medical need is to be disclosed.

944.42 Criminal Activity

944.421 EAP Records

EAP counseling records or personnel may not be used to initiate or substantiate any criminal charges against an EAP participant or to conduct any investigation of a participant, except as authorized by a court order for good cause.

613 Credit Unions

613.1 Authority

Employee credit unions in the Postal Service, as in all federal departments or agencies, are chartered according to the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1753–1754). That Act gives the power to direct and control the Federal Employees Credit Union Program to the National Credit Union Administration, an independent agency in the executive branch of the government. Credit unions may also be chartered under state laws and are generally supervised by the banking department of the state involved. The address of the National Credit Union Administration follows:

NATIONAL CREDIT UNION ADMINISTRATION
1775 DUKE STREET
ALEXANDRIA VA 22314-3428

613.2 Space Allowance

The Postal Service will authorize, if available, a suitable location (other than workroom floor space) for credit unions in postal buildings. If the area is accessible through the workroom only, membership in the credit union is restricted to Postal Service employees (active and retired). Other federal employees in the same building may not join unless the credit union is situated so that it is unnecessary to enter the postal workroom. Credit union business cannot be conducted from any post office service window.

613.3 Employees With Credit Union Duties

Postal personnel who are employees, officers, officials, or board members of employee credit unions are not entitled to Postal Service compensation for credit union duties. They have the option of annual leave or leave without pay (up to 8 hours daily) to perform credit union activities — provided they can be spared from their regular duties.

614 Food Services

614.1 Policy

The Postal Service provides food services, including provision of snacks and beverages, that cannot be conveniently obtained at reasonable prices from commercial sources and that are required for the health, comfort, or efficiency of postal employees while on duty. The Randolph-Sheppard Act, as amended in 1974, dealing with the operation of vending facilities by a blind vendor, applies to the Postal Service.

614.2 Operation

614.21 Responsibility

Food service facilities in central lunchrooms and in satellite work areas — manual, vended, or a combination — are under the control of the installation head. This responsibility may not be delegated to any employee committee.

437.6 Action by Eagan Accounting Service Center

The Eagan ASC waives the claim if it can determine from a review of the file that all of the following conditions are met:

a. The overpayment occurred through administration error of the Postal Service. Excluded from consideration for waiver of collection are overpayments resulting from errors in time keeping, keypunching, machine processing of time cards or time credit, coding, and any typographical errors that are adjusted routinely in the process of current operations.

b. Everyone having an interest in obtaining a waiver acted reasonably under the circumstances, without any indication of fraud, misrepresentation, fault, or lack of good faith.

c. Collection of the claim would be against equity and good conscience and would not be in the best interest of the Postal Service.

437.7 Appeal of Disallowed Request

437.71 Appeal Procedure

When a request for waiver has been partially or completely denied, the applicant may submit a written appeal to the Eagan ASC within 15 days of receipt of the determination. The appeal letter should clearly indicate that the employee is appealing the disallowance of the waiver request and explain in detail the reasons why the employee believes the claim should be waived.

437.72 Final Decision

The Eagan ASC then forwards the appeal, with the entire case file, to the applicable area Finance manager for area employees or to the manager of National Accounting at Headquarters for Headquarters and area office employees for a final decision. The area Finance manager or manager of National Accounting advises the employee concerned and the Eagan ASC of his or her final decision. If necessary, the Eagan ASC adjusts its records.

438 Pay During Travel or Training

438.1 Pay During Travel

438.11 Definitions

Definitions relevant to pay during travel or training include the following:

a. Travel time — time spent by an employee moving from one location to another during which no productive work is performed and excluding the normal mealtime if it occurs during the period of travel.

b. Local commuting area — the suburban area immediately surrounding the employee's official duty station and within a radius of 50 miles.

438.12 Commuting To and From Work

438.121 Regular Commuting

Commuting time before or after the regular workday between an employee's home and official duty station or any other location within the local commuting area is a normal incident of employment and is not compensable. It is not compensable regardless of whether the employee works at the same location all day or commutes home after the workday from a location different from the one where the workday started.

438.122 Commuting to a Different Worksite

Commuting time to and from work is not compensable when an employee is called back to work after the completion of the regular workday. However, such commuting time is compensable if the employee is called back to work at a location other than his or her regular work site.

438.123 Commuting With a Break in Duty Status

When an employee is employed to work on a permanent basis at more than one location in the same service day, the time spent commuting between the locations is not compensable travel time, provided there is a break in duty status between the work performed in the different locations. A break in duty status occurs when an employee is completely relieved from duty for a period of at least 1 hour that may be used for the employee's own purposes. This 1-hour or greater period must be in addition to the actual time spent in travel and the normal meal period, if the normal meal period occurs during the time interval between the work at the different locations. (See 438.132 for travel time between job locations when there is no break in duty status.)

438.13 Types of Compensable Travel Time

438.131 General

The determination of whether travel time is compensable or not depends upon (a) the kind of travel involved, (b) when the travel takes place, and (c) the eligibility of the employee (see Exhibit 438.13). The three situations that may involve compensable travel time are described below.

438.132 Travel From Job Site to Job Site

The following applies to travel from job site to job site:

a. Rule. Time spent at any time during a service day by an eligible employee in travel from one job site to another without a break in duty status within a local commuting area is compensable. (See 438.123, which makes the travel time noncompensable as commuting time when there is a break in duty status between the work performed in different locations.)

b. Eligibility. This type of travel time is compensable for all employees during their established hours of service on a scheduled workday. At all other times, this type of travel time is compensable only for FLSA-nonexempt employees who are entitled to receive overtime pay.

437.6 Action by Eagan Accounting Service Center

The Eagan ASC waives the claim if it can determine from a review of the file that all of the following conditions are met:

a. The overpayment occurred through administration error of the Postal Service. Excluded from consideration for waiver of collection are overpayments resulting from errors in time keeping, keypunching, machine processing of time cards or time credit, coding, and any typographical errors that are adjusted routinely in the process of current operations.

b. Everyone having an interest in obtaining a waiver acted reasonably under the circumstances, without any indication of fraud, misrepresentation, fault, or lack of good faith.

c. Collection of the claim would be against equity and good conscience and would not be in the best interest of the Postal Service.

437.7 Appeal of Disallowed Request

437.71 Appeal Procedure

When a request for waiver has been partially or completely denied, the applicant may submit a written appeal to the Eagan ASC within 15 days of receipt of the determination. The appeal letter should clearly indicate that the employee is appealing the disallowance of the waiver request and explain in detail the reasons why the employee believes the claim should be waived.

437.72 Final Decision

The Eagan ASC then forwards the appeal, with the entire case file, to the applicable area Finance manager for area employees or to the manager of National Accounting at Headquarters for Headquarters and area office employees for a final decision. The area Finance manager or manager of National Accounting advises the employee concerned and the Eagan ASC of his or her final decision. If necessary, the Eagan ASC adjusts its records.

438 Pay During Travel or Training

438.1 Pay During Travel

438.11 Definitions

Definitions relevant to pay during travel or training include the following:

b. Local commuting area — the suburban area immediately surrounding the employee's official duty station and within a radius of 50 miles.

438.121 Regular Commuting

Commuting time before or after the regular workday between an employee's home and official duty station or any other location within the local commuting area is a normal incident of employment and is not compensable. It is not compensable regardless of whether the employee works at the same location all day or commutes home after the workday from a location different from the one where the workday started.

Commuting time to and from work is not compensable when an employee is called back to work after the completion of the regular workday. However, such commuting time is compensable if the employee is called back to work at a location other than his or her regular work site.

438.123 Commuting With a Break in Duty Status

When an employee is employed to work on a permanent basis at more than one location in the same service day, the time spent commuting between the locations is not compensable travel time, provided there is a break in duty status between the work performed in the different locations. A break in duty status occurs when an employee is completely relieved from duty for a period of at least 1 hour that may be used for the employee's own purposes. This 1-hour or greater period must be in addition to the actual time spent in travel and the normal meal period, if the normal meal period occurs during the time interval between the work at the different locations. (See 438.132 for travel time between job locations when there is no break in duty status.)

438.13 Types of Compensable Travel Time

438.131 General

The determination of whether travel time is compensable or not depends upon (a) the kind of travel involved, (b) when the travel takes place, and (c) the eligibility of the employee (see Exhibit 438.13). The three situations that may involve compensable travel time are described below.

438.132 Travel From Job Site to Job Site

438.122 Commuting to a Different Worksite

Commuting time to and from work is not compensable when an employee is called back to work after the completion of the regular workday. However, such commuting time is compensable if the employee is called back to work at a location other than his or her regular work site.

438.123 Commuting With a Break in Duty Status

When an employee is employed to work on a permanent basis at more than one location in the same service day, the time spent commuting between the locations is not compensable travel time, provided there is a break in duty status between the work performed in the different locations. A break in duty status occurs when an employee is completely relieved from duty for a period of at least 1 hour that may be used for the employee's own purposes. This 1-hour or greater period must be in addition to the actual time spent in travel and the normal meal period, if the normal meal period occurs during the time interval between the work at the different locations. (See 438.132 for travel time between job locations when there is no break in duty status.)

438.13 Types of Compensable Travel Time

438.131 General

The determination of whether travel time is compensable or not depends upon (a) the kind of travel involved, (b) when the travel takes place, and (c) the eligibility of the employee (see Exhibit 438.13). The three situations that may involve compensable travel time are described below.

438.132 Travel From Job Site to Job Site

The following applies to travel from job site to job site:

a. Rule. Time spent at any time during a service day by an eligible employee in travel from one job site to another without a break in duty status within a local commuting area is compensable. (See 438.123, which makes the travel time noncompensable as commuting time when there is a break in duty status between the work performed in different locations.)

b. Eligibility. This type of travel time is compensable for all employees during their established hours of service on a scheduled workday. At all other times, this type of travel time is compensable only for FLSA-nonexempt employees who are entitled to receive overtime pay.

b. Eligibility. This type of travel time is compensable for all employees on their scheduled workdays. On nonscheduled days, this type of travel time is compensable only for nonexempt employees.

c. Intermediate Travel Home. Employees who are on an extended assignment away from home may be given the opportunity during the assignment to return home for personal convenience. Although the cost of the round trip is a reimbursable travel expense, the travel time involved is not compensable when it falls outside of the scheduled service week given to the employee during the temporary assignment.

d. Scheduling of Travel. Travel away from home overnight is to be scheduled by management on a reasonable basis without a purpose either to avoid compensation for the travel time or to make the travel time compensable.

438.14 Special Travel Provisions

438.141 Use of Private Automobile for Personal Convenience

If an eligible employee who is traveling under the provisions of 438.132, 438.133, or 438.134 is offered public transportation but uses a personally owned conveyance for personal convenience, only the lesser of the time spent actually driving or those creditable hours that would have been spent in travel by public transportation are compensated.

438.142 Required Use of an Automobile

All time spent actually driving an automobile while traveling away from home overnight because no public transportation is available is compensable travel time for an eligible employee whether the time occurs within or outside of the employee's established hours of service.

438.143 Work Performed While Traveling

Any time spent by an eligible employee in actual work that is required or suffered or permitted to be performed while traveling is compensable.

438.15 Compensation Provisions

Provisions concerning compensation are as follows:

a. Compensable travel time is counted as worktime for pay purposes and is included in hours worked in excess of 8 hours in a day, 40 hours in a week, or on a nonscheduled day for a full-time employee, for the determination of overtime for eligible employees (see 433 and 434.1).

b. Out-of-schedule premium, nonbargaining rescheduling premium, and guaranteed time are not payable to employees while traveling away from home overnight.

c. Night differential is paid to eligible employees during those hours of compensable travel between 6:00 P.M. and 6:00 A.M. on either a scheduled or nonscheduled day.

d. Sunday premium is paid to eligible employees for paid travel time during a scheduled tour that includes any part of a Sunday.

438.16 Effect on Other Travel Reimbursement

The rules stated in 438.1, Pay During Travel, do not affect the entitlement of employees to other types of reimbursement under applicable regulations, such as reimbursement of certain travel expenses and per diem.

5-5 Arranging to Use Your Privately Owned Vehicle (POV)

A privately owned vehicle (POV) may be either an automobile, a motorcycle, or an airplane.

5-5.1 Determining When to Use

5-5.1.1 Circumstances That May Justify Use of Your POV

You may receive approval to use your POV in the following circumstances:

a. It will be advantageous to the Postal Service.

b. You are on specific assignments, such as investigation and route examinations, customer service travel, and postal systems reviews.

c. You are participating in civil defense tests and activities. Employees traveling for civil defense purposes to and from emergency locations are considered to be on official business and acting within the scope of their employment.

You may also receive approval to use your POV for personal convenience. However, you must submit a cost comparison with your travel voucher. See 5-1.4 for information on performing a cost comparison.

5-5.1.2 Criteria That the Approving Official Will Use

The approving official's decision will be based on, but not limited to, the following criteria:

a. Whether commercial air, train, or bus service is suitable.

b. Whether Postal Service or GSA vehicles are available.

c. Whether using your POV would reduce the overall cost of travel, such as by saving on per diem or local transportation expenses.

d. Whether using your POV would save time, either travel time or overall work time.

e. Whether your POV would be used extensively in the vicinity of the temporary duty station.

f. Whether the vehicle is required for civil defense travel.

5-5.2 Allowable Expenses When Using Your POV

5-5.2.1 For Your Car or Motorcycle

The allowable expenses for using your car or motorcycle vary according to whether you are using it because no Postal Service or GSA vehicle is available or because it is more convenient for you to do so.
