Based on the evidence presented in this grievance, the carrier did not work a full day due to the carrier taking off to take care of personal business. Work was available for this carrier to perform for a full eight hours, but the carrier chose to be off. The file failed to substantiate that this or any other regular carrier has been told to report for part of the day when a regular carrier was to be called in on their non-scheduled day. We did agree during our Step 4 meeting that management would not solicit employees to work less than their guarantees rather than soliciting employees who would work their full guarantees. We agreed to consider this grievance closed with this understanding.

Dear Mr. Riley:

On November 9, 1978, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

During our Step 4 meeting, we mutually agreed to consider this grievance resolved based on the following: Management recognizes its obligation to follow the provisions of Article VIII, Section 8 of the National Agreement. Although no specific substantiation was provided which would demonstrate that management had attempted to circumvent the National Agreement, we agreed that management would not solicit employees to work less than their guarantees.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Overby:

This letter supersedes our decision dated January 25, 1982.

On December 9, 1981, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

It was mutually agreed that the following would represent full settlement of this case:

1. When a part-time flexible employee is notified prior to clocking out that he should return within 2 hours, this will be considered as a split shift and no new guarantee applies.

2. When a part-time flexible employee, prior to clocking out, is told to return after 2 hours, that employee must be given another minimum guarantee of 2 hours work or pay.

3. All part-time flexible employees who complete their assignment, clock out and leave the premises regardless of interval between shifts, are guaranteed 4 hours of work or pay if called back to work. This guarantee is applicable to any size office.

4. Using this criteria, the grievant is not entitled to any back pay.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Sincerely,

Howard R. Carter

TO ALL AFFECTED REPRESENTATIVES:

During the course of the 1987 Negotiations, the parties agreed to make sweeping changes in the provisions of Article 8 of the National Agreement between the USPS and the Mail Handlers Division of the Laborers' International Union of North America, AFL-CIO. Mindful of the confusion and the need to resort to interpretive arbitration that occurred when the 1984 language was put into effect, the parties further agreed to generate a joint letter of interpretation outlining the intent of the changes that were made in Article 8. This letter is precedent-setting in its attempts to resolve potential disputes prior to the date upon which the new language becomes effective. As you are aware, the changes in Article 8 are effective September 26, 1987, the beginning of the fourth calendar quarter for overtime purposes.

We will walk through the provisions of Article 8, Sections 8.4 and 8.5, and outline the parties' joint interpretation of the new contract language that appears.

The provisions of Section 8.4 have been altered to eliminate all reference to penalty overtime. As of September 26, 1987, penalty overtime will not be payable for any hours worked under Article 8 of the Mail Handlers National Agreement.

The opening sentence of Section 8.5 has been reworded, stressing that the first opportunity for all overtime goes to full-time regular Mail Handlers who have signed the overtime desired list (OTDL) subject to the "operational window" concept set forth in Section 8.5D. This represents a major change in the scheduling process and provides that management must under the 1987 contract assign overtime to available, qualified employees on the OTDL prior to using part-time flexibles or casuals on overtime.

Section 8.5A now clearly specifies that only full-time regular Mail Handlers are eligible to sign the OTDL. The rest of the language in this section remains unchanged.

The provisions of Section 8.5B remain unchanged.

Several changes appear in Section 8.5C.

1. The first sentence of the section once again stresses that overtime is to be first assigned to available, qualified full-time regular Mail Handlers who have signed the OTDL. Although not all inclusive, the following examples may be useful in understanding the intent of the parties:

(a) Twenty Mail Handlers are needed for two hours overtime, from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m., at the end of Tour II at the BMC. Only ten Mail Handlers have signed the OTDL and all are available and qualified for the instant work. Under this circumstance, management must assign the ten Mail Handlers on the OTDL and then may assign ten Mail Handlers not on the list. If management determines that an additional two hours of overtime is needed, from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m., for ten Mail Handlers, the ten Mail Handlers from the OTDL who are working must be assigned that additional overtime. This will not be considered an additional overtime opportunity within the rotation outlined in Section 8.5C.

(b) The GMF has multiple ending times on Tour II; e.g., 3 p.m. and 4 p.m. Twenty Mail Handlers are needed for two hours overtime at 3 p.m. Again, ten available and qualified Mail Handlers are on the OTDL and management selects an additional ten Mail Handlers not on the list. At 4 p.m., ten more qualified Mail Handlers on the OTDL become available at the end of their tour. These ten OTDL Mail Handlers would be kept for one hour of overtime, 4 p.m. to 5 p.m., and the ten Mail Handlers not on the OTDL will be released.

As the language in Section 8.5C indicates, employees assigned overtime under this provision still must possess the necessary skills.

2. The second sentence of this section notes the elimination of previous language requiring that Mail Handlers on light duty be passed over. Under the 1987 Agreement, Mail Handlers on light duty may sign the OTDL and be selected for overtime work within the normal rotation as long as the work needed falls within their medical restrictions. For example, light duty employees with restrictions of "no work beyond eight hours" would not be eligible for overtime before or after the tour; light duty employees with restrictions of "no lifting over five pounds" would normally not be eligible for overtime work on the outbound docks.

3. The new language captured in sentence 3 of this section reemphasizes the current practice of scheduling. The example given adequately expresses the intent of the parties. The waiver under Section 8.8 must be agreed to by Management, the Union and the employees.

4. Sentence 4 mandates that Mail Handlers who sign the OTDL may be required to work up to twelve hours per day, seven days per week. Obviously, the 60-hour limitation contained in the 1984 language has been removed; that language no longer applies to Mail Handlers, even though management may be scheduling other craft employees in accordance with a 60-hour limit.

5. Finally, the fifth sentence in Section 8.5C establishes a system for Mail Handlers on the OTDL to volunteer for work beyond twelve hours in a day. Selection of these volunteers is at the discretion of management, but such selection must be made on a non-discriminatory basis. No second OTDL will be established; selection will be made on a case-by-case basis. Once again, Mail Handlers who volunteer and are selected for work beyond twelve hours will not be considered to have exercised another opportunity within the OTDL rotation.

Several changes have been made in Section 8.5D to address selection for overtime work once the OTDL has been exhausted.

(1) In the first sentence, "available" is directed to what may be termed the "operational window" concept. For example, if management determines that the need exists for twenty Mail Handlers to work two hours overtime and only ten are available from the OTDL, management may assign other Mail Handlers as required to meet the two-hour operational requirement.

(2) The remainder of the first sentence outlines management's right to assign "other employees" to meet its needs in these circumstances. Other employees include part-time flexibles, casuals and regulars not on the OTDL. While the selection is at the discretion of management, the parties have agreed that every effort should be made to schedule part-time flexibles or casuals for such overtime work before scheduling regulars not on the OTDL.

(3) In accordance with the second sentence, when management determines that regulars not on the OTDL must work overtime, their scheduling will continue to be based on juniority rotation. This rotation will also be established on a quarterly basis, parallel with the use of the OTDL.

The provisions of Section 8.5E remain unchanged.

In Section 8.5F, the protections for non-OTDL regulars found in the 1981 National Agreement have been reinstituted and clarified. These protections are meant to assure that overtime is limited for non-OTDL regular Mail Handlers. The use of part-time flexibles and casuals prior to non-OTDL full-time regulars has been previously discussed.

Section 8.5G notes that these provisions begin with the fourth calendar quarter of 1987; i.e., September 26. Solicitations for regulars wishing to sign the OTDL should be made in keeping with past practice and in consideration of this date.

The Memorandum of Understanding on Improper By-pass Overtime (found after the general articles of the 1987 National Agreement) in Part 2, now includes part-time flexibles and casuals under the category "another employee."

The Memorandum of Understanding on Penalty Overtime Pay is deleted in its entirety.

We hope that these explanations will assist both parties in understanding the new language in Article 8. It must be understood that this document represents the National Level interpretation of this new language and is not subject to alteration by parties other than those at the National Level.

422.132 Creditable Service

The following provisions apply:

a. Postal Service. Except as provided in this section, credit for advancement for step increases may be earned only by career employees in pay status on the rolls of the Postal Service. For computing creditable service, the following applies:

(1) Service Week. In computing the required waiting period, each full service week beginning at 12:01 a.m. Saturday and ending at 12 midnight the following Friday is creditable.

(2) Leave Without Pay (LWOP). Periods of LWOP of less than 13 weeks for which no step deferment is made are included with paid service in computing the waiting period of service (see 422.133).

(3) Prior Service. Employees reinstated or reemployed to a career position within 52 weeks of separation are allowed credit (not in excess of 52 weeks) for prior service provided:

(a) An equivalent increase was not received at the time of reinstatement or reemployment.

(b) The prior service was not under a casual or temporary appointment.

b. Military Duty. An employee who returns to postal duty following a separation or leave for military duty receives credit for the period of military duty as if duty with the Postal Service had been continuous (see 517).

c. Injury Compensation. An employee on official absence due to an injury compensable under rules of the Office of Workers' Compensation Programs (OWCP) receives credit for the period of absence as if duty with the Postal Service had been continuous.

d. Union Officials. Employees on LWOP to devote full or part-time to a union signatory to a collective bargaining agreement with the Postal Service are to be credited with step increases as if they had been in a pay status (see 514).

422.133 Leave Without Pay

The following provisions apply:

a. When an employee has been on LWOP for 13 weeks or more during the waiting period for receipt of a periodic step increase and has not been on military furlough, on the rolls of the Office of Workers'

Compensation Programs, or on official union business, the scheduled date for the employee's next step increase is deferred as follows:

Total Weeks LWOP	Pay Periods Deferred
0 to less than 13	No deferment
13 to less than 26	7
26 to less than 40	13
40 to less than 52	20
More than 52	One pay period for each 2 weeks of LWOP

b. For periods of LWOP that encompass an entire pay period, the full charge of 80 hours is applied. For partial pay periods, absence from scheduled service on a day is counted as 1 calendar day. Only whole days of LWOP are counted. Fractional days on which the employee has work hours or paid leave and takes LWOP are not counted in calculating the total LWOP.

422.134 Simultaneous Personnel Actions

If an employee is eligible for a step increase in the assigned position and is being reassigned or promoted to another position on the same date:

a. The actions are effected simultaneously in a manner that provides maximum benefit to the employee.

b. If the assignment change involves an increase in compensation that is greater than the increase an employee could obtain by a step increase in the former position, the employee is given the step increase before compensation is adjusted to the appropriate step in the new position.

422.14 Higher Level Assignments

422.141 Definitions

A higher level assignment is a temporary assignment to a ranked higher grade position, whether or not such position has been authorized at the installation. The subcategories of such an assignment are:

a. Short-term temporary assignment — an assignment in which an employee has been on a temporary assignment to a higher level position for a period of 29 consecutive workdays or less at the time he or she takes any annual or sick leave. The temporary assignment must be resumed upon return to work. All short-term assignments are automatically canceled if replacements are required for employees temporarily assigned to higher level positions.

b. Long-term temporary assignment — an assignment in which an employee has been on temporary assignment to the higher level position for a period of 30 consecutive workdays or longer before he or she takes any annual or sick leave. The temporary assignment must be resumed upon return to work.

Dear Mr. Lingberg:

On October 14, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether there is a requirement for advance notice to employees whose step increases are withheld because of leave without pay usage.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that current instructions require written advance notice when an employee's step increase is to be withheld. Inasmuch as no advance notice was given in this instance, the grievant's step increase is to be reinstated retroactively to the due date.

Accordingly, this case is remanded to the parties at Step 3 for implementation of the above.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand and settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear John:

Our representatives met, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether a Level 4, Step O employee, who was detailed to a Level 5, Step N duty assignment was entitled to be advanced to Level 5, Step O after spending the requisite waiting period (24 weeks) at Step N.

The parties agree that once an employee who was detailed to Level 5, Step N spent 24 continuous weeks in the higher level assignment; the employee was entitled to be advanced to Level 5, Step O.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Dear John:

Recently, I met with Bill Flynn and Sam D'Ambrosio to discuss the above captioned case at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether a mail handler who was promoted to a higher level duty assignment (Level 5), and who had attained step O in that higher level, then bid to a lower level duty assignment (Level 4), should subsequently be paid level 5, Step O when he/she is temporarily detailed to a higher level duty assignment.

The parties agree that when an employee bids from Level 4, to Level 5 and attains Step O, then bids back to Level 4, and is subsequently detailed to a level 5 assignment, he/she must be paid at the level 5 Step O pay rate.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

CLASS ACTION
Washington DC 20260-4100

I recently met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above captioned grievance currently pending national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 420, Wage Administration Policy for Bargaining Unit Employees are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After reviewing this matter, we agree to resolve this grievance based on the following:

422.325 Reductions in Grade

b. Step and Next Step Date Assignment for Bargaining Unit to Bargaining Unit Reductions in Grade within or into the mail handler rate schedule (RSC M). Assignments are made as follows:

1. To Former Lower Grade. The employee is assigned to the step and next step date as if service had been uninterrupted in the lower grade since the last time held.
2. To New Lower Grade. The employee is assigned to the step and next step date in the lower grade as if all postal service had been in the lower grade.

The Postal Service will modify the ELM, Section 422.325 to incorporate the above principle in accordance with Article 19 of the collective bargaining agreement.

Any disputes on this issue will be referred to the National Administrative Committee.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

BETWEEN THE

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

AND THE

NATIONAL POSTAL MAIL HANDLERS UNION,

A DIVISION OF LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF

NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO

The United States Postal Service (USPS) and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union, a Division of Laborers' International Union of North America, AFL-CIO (Union) hereby agree to a full, final and binding resolution of national level grievance H7M-2F-C 45511 as well as any and all pending grievance matters in the dispute resolution system which specifically challenge the step placement or compensation levels of employees promoted from steps A, B, and C of the Mail Handler Salary Schedule (referred to herein as "affected employees") between January 19, 1985 and the date of this Memorandum of Understanding. Separate issues in any of these other pending grievances are not within the scope of this Memorandum and are to be handled in accordance with the usual grievance-arbitration contractual procedures.

USPS and the Union agree that promoted employees will continue to be placed in the grade level and step assigned in accordance with USPS's current practice with waiting time rules applied in accordance with current practice. As a consequence of the current promotion practice, some affected employees in some pay periods receive less compensation than if they had not been promoted and had remained in the former grade. To address this promotion pay anomaly, USPS and the Union agree to the following principle:

> No employee will, as a consequence of a promotion, at any time be compensated less than that employee would have earned if the employee had not been promoted but had, instead, merely advanced in step increments in that employee's grade as a result of fulfilling the waiting time requirements necessary for step increases. This includes affected employees who are or were promoted to a higher grade and subsequently reassigned to their former grade.

Affected employees will be paid in accordance with the following principle:

> For each pay period following the promotion the employee's basic salary will be compared to the basic salary the employee would have received for that pay period if the employee had not been promoted. For those periods when the latter amount is higher the difference will be paid to the employee in a one-time lump sum payment.

Affected employees, who are in the Mail Handler bargaining unit as of the date of this Memorandum and experienced a promotion pay anomaly during the 1984-87 or 1987-90 National Agreements shall be paid a lump sum payment as soon as practicable after administrative payroll audits are conducted on an individual basis. The Union will be kept advised of the progress of this work and any disagreements over individual lump sum payments will be worked through at the national level outside regular grievance channels unless the parties hereto agree differently. It is intended that these one-time lump sum payments will satisfy all employee entitlements which arise out of the employment relationship, including the 1984 and 1987 National Agreements due to the effects of the anomaly and this Memorandum of Settlement, as well as any possible FLSA payments; however, this document shall not be construed as constituting any waiver of possible individual rights under that statute.

Effective November 21, 1990, employees who have been promoted from Steps A, B, or C and who have been reassigned to their former grade will be placed in the step they would have been in, with credit toward their next step increase, as if all service had been in the original grade. However, such employees who are subsequently repromoted will be placed in the steps they would have attained, with credit toward their next step increase, as if they had remained continuously in the higher grade since the original promotion.

Award Summary:

The grievance is resolved on the basis of the following determination:

Section 512.313 of the ELM requires that former City Carrier Assistants who have completed ninety days of continuous employment without a break in service must complete a 90-day qualifying period following their conversion to career status before they may be credited with or may take annual leave.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

This grievance was filed by the NALC on February 14, 2014. This national level interpretive dispute originated in the Portland, Oregon Post Office, and involves the right of former City Carrier Assistants (CCAs) to use annual leave following their conversion to full-time career status. The grievants all were former CCAs who requested scheduled annual leave after they were converted to full-time career positions. The leave initially was approved by local management, but subsequently was converted to leave without pay. The Postal Service based its decision on Section 512.313(b)(1) of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM), which states that: "New employees are not credited with and may not take annual leave until they complete 90 days continuous employment under one or more appointments without a break in service." The parties settled the underlying grievance and agreed that the facts of the underlying grievance are not at issue in this arbitration. The question presented to the Arbitrator here is an interpretive one involving only the 90-day qualifying period requirement in ELM section 512.313.

Both the APWU and the NPMHU intervened in this arbitration. Each has a similar classification to CCAs, and their respective National Agreements include similar applicable provisions.

The CCA classification was created by the 2013 Interest Arbitration Award and replaced the previous noncareer work force in the letter carrier bargaining unit known as transitional employees (TEs). The Interest Arbitration Award explained that the CCA workforce "is comprised of noncareer, city letter carrier bargaining unit employees" who "shall be hired for terms of 360 calendar days and will have a break in service of five days between appointments." The Award also provided that the "phasing out of the transitional employee category will occur within 90 days of the effective date of this Agreement." The Award represented a significant benefit to the Postal Service, but also provided a path to career appointment for members of the new noncareer complement and converts the career letter carrier workforce to essentially one hundred percent full-time status.

NALC Vice President Lew Drass testified all career hiring before the Award was based on competitive examination and appointment from a hiring register, but that procedure has fundamentally changed since the Award. The Postal Service still administers a test for applicants, but the test is used to construct hiring registers for CCA positions. After the CCAs are appointed, they are given "relative standing" which is determined by original CCA appointment to the installation, adding time served as a city letter carrier transitional employee for appointments made after September 29, 2007 in any installation. The CCAs relative standing is then used to convert CCAs to available career positions. Drass described the conversion process from the employee's perspective as follows: "[Y]ou're a CCA on Friday, you go home as a noncareer. On Saturday you come back, and you're a full-time career."

512.313 Appointees

The following provisions concern appointees:

a. Rate of Leave Accrual. The rate of leave accrual for a new career employee (whether appointed, reinstated, or transferred) is determined promptly as soon as related facts are verified. It is based on creditable service, both civilian and military (see 512.2).

b. Ninety-Day Qualifying Period.

(1) Requirement. New employees are not credited with and may not take annual leave until they complete 90 days of continuous employment under one or more appointments without a break in service.

Exception: This requirement does not apply to (a) career (or career conditional) employees who have had a minimum of 90 days of continuous federal service prior to transferring, without a break in service, to a Postal Service career position (see 512.812 and 512.91) or (b) substitute rural carriers or RCAs who are in a leave-earning status and convert to a Postal Service career position without a break in service.

(2) Break in Service. A break in service of 1 or more workdays breaks the continuity of employment. Any further employment requires beginning a new 90-day period. (For substitute rural carriers and RCAs, see 512.552.)

The parties stipulated to the issue: Whether Section 512.313 of the ELM requires that former City Carrier Assistants who have completed ninety days of continuous employment without a break in service must complete a 90-day qualifying period following their conversion to career status before they may be credited with or may take annual leave?

NALC POSITION

The NALC argues that ELM 512.313 does not prohibit recently converted career employees from taking annual leave where they have completed 90-days of continuous service as CCAs. The wording of ELM 512.313 indicates an exception that fits the old hiring system for career employees. Before the 2013 Interest Award, individuals appointed from a hiring register based on a test score clearly were "new employees" and thus could not be credited with or use their annual leave until they had completed 90 days of service. However, the wording of ELM 512.313 does not fit former CCAs converted to career status under the current National Agreement. The NALC contends that these converted CCAs are not new employees and that they have all been continuously employed by the Postal Service at the time of their conversion. Moreover, the plain language of paragraph (b)(1) allows the employees' service as CCAs to count toward the 90-day requirement and does not limit qualifying service to service under the employee's current appointment; the 90 days may be satisfied by service under one or more appointments, so long as there is no break in service.

The NALC stresses that ELM 512.313(b)(1) does not include the word "career." The NALC argues that there is no evidence that the original purpose of the 90-day qualifying period requires that the present ELM language be read as if it refers exclusively to career appointments. The present ELM provision derives from regulations first promulgated by the old

Post Office Department to implement the Annual and Sick Leave Act of 1951. The pertinent regulation in the 1952 edition of the Post Office Manual says:

> New appointee.—Section 203(i) of the Annual and Sick Leave Act of 1951 provides that employees, including temporary rural carriers, shall be entitled to annual leave only after having been employed currently for a continuous period of 90 days under one or more appointments without a break in service.

The NALC maintains that the statement in the Manual that the term "employees" includes "temporary rural carriers" plainly shows that the 90-day qualifying period in its original incarnation applied equally to noncareer as well as career appointments. Additionally, the NALC contends that its exhibits show that the regulation was carried forward by the Postal Service and eventually incorporated into the ELM without any substantive revisions. Therefore, there is no reason to read the present ELM language as incorporating a different meaning than that of the original 1952 version which did not differentiate the application of the 90-day requirement between career and noncareer appointments.

The NALC points out that Section 512.313(b)(1) does not refer to 90 days of continuous career employment under one or more career appointments, but rather it requires 90 days of continuous employment so long as there is no break in service. The NALC asserts that since there is no break in service when a CCA is converted to career status, the employee's service before and after the conversion is continuous and should satisfy the literal language of the ELM provision. Furthermore, the NALC argues that ELM language is typically precise, thus the absence of the modifier "career' in Section 512.313(b)(1) signals that any postal employment will satisfy the 90-day requirement. The rule's original incarnation did not differentiate between career and noncareer, nor has the Postal Service sought to revise the language in succeeding editions of the ELM.

The NALC also disputes the Postal Service's argument under the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius. The language of ELM 512.313 was drafted long before the CCA classification and the contractual right to conversion was created in the 2013 Interest Award. Thus, the absence of any reference to former CCAs in the exceptions enumerated in the ELM is irrelevant to the interpretive question in this case. In fact, the NALC suggests that the ELM's reference to the two exceptions supports its position because it shows that there is no practical or other reason for requiring employees who have been employed by the Postal Service or the federal government for more than 90 days in a leave earning capacity to satisfy a new, arbitrary 90-day qualifying period in order to use annual leave.

Finally, the NALC stresses that the Postal Service failed to prove its claim that the previous category of noncareer employees in the letter craft, TEs, were also required to serve a 90-day qualifying period following their appointment to career positions. In any event, the comparison is of no significance because, unlike CCAs, TEs did not have a path to career employment. A TE seeking career employment was required to take an exam like any other member of the public at large. TEs could only be hired off a register, as new employees, based on their test score. The NALC contends that this process is not analogous to a CCA who is converted to career status during an uninterrupted course of postal employment. Moreover, a former TE hired as a career letter carrier typically would have been assigned to a part-time flexible position, like any other new hire, because the previous National Agreement did not provide for the phasing out of part-time positions in the letter carrier craft. A former TE would not have been fronted his full year's annual leave in advance, thus there would have been no cause for the NALC to complain about former TEs being required to satisfy a 90-day qualifying requirement.

NPMHU POSITION

The NPMHU supports the arguments made by the NALC. It explains that there is a bargaining unit position within the Mail Handler craft called the Mail Handler Assistant (MHA). Like CCAs, MHAs are noncareer bargaining unit employees who are hired for terms of 360 days with a break in service of five days between appointments. MHAs replaced some noncareer employees known as casuals (a position that did not entitle the employee to annual leave) and some career part-time flexible employees (who did earn annual leave). Moreover, the NPMHU points out that its National Agreement mandates, like the NALC National Agreement, that "[w]hen the Postal Service hires new mail handler full-time career employees, MHAs within the installation will be converted to full-time regular career status to fill such vacancies based on their relative standing in the installation, which is determined by their original MHA appointment date in that installation. Accordingly, the NPMHU contends that, like CCAs who are converted to career status, MHAs who have already worked for 90 days and who are converted to career status are not new employees and therefore, should be permitted to take annual leave.

The NPMHU argues that the plain language of the ELM and Section 512.313(b)(1)'s historical antecedent, the Annual and Sick Leave Act of 1951 and the pertinent regulation in the 1952 edition of the Postal Office Manual do not support the Postal Service's proposed interpretation. The NPMHU urges the Arbitrator to look to the rationale he applied in Postal Service and APWU Case No. I90C-1I-C 910325156, H7C-4S-C 29885 (Das, 2005), where he held that the historical precedent for a present term or condition of employment "provides a solid basis on which to conclude" that the parties intended to interpret the term as it had been. The NPMHU asserts that the same rationale if applied here would compel the Arbitrator to determine that the plain language of the ELM cannot be interpreted as requiring former MHAs converted to career status to wait 90 days before being credited or taking annual leave.

The NPMHU also points out that ELM 511.1 states that Postal Service policy is to administer the leave programs on an equitable basis for all employees. Interpreting ELM 512.313(b)(1) as not applying the 90-day qualifying period to career and noncareer employees who already have completed 90 days of continuous employment under one or more appointments without a break in service is compelled by this policy; the Postal Service has offered no rational basis for the distinction it is attempting to draw. See Postal Service and APWU Case No. Q90C-6Q-C 94042619 (Das, 1988).

APWU POSITION

The APWU supports the NALC's position in this case. It explains that the conversion mechanisms for the Postal Support Employees (PSEs), the CCA equivalent in the APWU bargaining unit, are slightly different, but the concept of the PSE career path is the same. Similar to CCAs, the hiring of career employees in the APWU crafts is accomplished through conversion of PSEs to career positions and gives the Postal Service a pipeline of experienced and trained postal employees to convert directly into career positions rather than appointing them as career hires off of a hiring register. Also, similar to CCAs, the PSE path to career is a requirement for achieving career employment unlike the general opportunity to apply for career vacancies that existed for casuals or TEs. Thus, CCAs and PSEs who are converted to career are neither new postal employees nor former temporary workers who had no expectation of career employment with the Postal Service.

The APWU argues that CCAs and PSEs are not fairly categorized as new employees under ELM 512.313(b)(1) and that the existing exceptions in this provision of the ELM -- former federal employees and RCAs -- illustrates the Unions' position. New career employees who are not new to federal service or are continuing in their postal service do not have to earn the right to use their annual leave. Additionally, the Postal Service cannot articulate any legitimate purpose for imposing an additional 90-day requirement on CCAs, PSEs and MHAs who already have fulfilled the 90-day requirement in the continuation of their postal employment. The APWU asserts that, like the existing exceptions to the ELM's rule, CCAs, PSEs, and MHAs, can acquire the requisite time during their tenure to satisfy both the requirement of and rationale behind ELM 512.313(b)(1) upon continuing their employment through conversion to career positions.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service argues that ELM 512.313(b) applies to new career employees and requires a new career city carrier to complete a 90-day qualifying period before being credited with or taking annual leave, even if the carrier previously worked as a noncareer CCA. Although the word "career" does not appear in ELM 512.313(b), the Postal Service stresses that it is clear that this subsection applies only to new career employees. Indeed, the only employees to whom ELM 512.313(b) could apply are career employees. Employees in the Postal Service fall into one of two categories: career and noncareer and only career employees are subject to ELM 510. According to the Postal Service, noncareer bargaining unit employees are subject to leave rules contained in the various National Agreements, rather than ELM 510.

Additionally, the Postal Service contends that the application of the interpretive doctrine of noscitur a soccis (a word is known by the company it keeps) shows that ELM 512.313(b) applies to career employees even though the word "career" does not appear. ELM 512.313 must be read as a whole. ELM 512.313(a), which immediately precedes the subsection on the 90-day qualifying period requirement, explicitly addresses the "rate of leave accrual for a new career employee." Therefore, the Postal Service argues that by reading ELM 512.313 holistically, one can reasonably infer that subsection (b), like subsection (a), is applicable to new career employees.

The Postal Service argues that CCAs who convert to career status are new career employees who are subject to the requirements in ELM 510 for purposes of annual leave usage. The NALC is conflating the distinct set of annual leave provisions that apply separately to noncareer CCAs and those that apply to career city carriers. The annual leave rules for career city letter carriers are found under Article 10 of the National Agreement, which incorporates ELM 510 into the National Agreement, while the annual leave rules for CCAs are found in the NALC National Agreement at Appendix B.3 and make no reference to ELM 510. It is only after a CCA is converted to a career city carrier that the annual leave rules in Article 10 and ELM 510 apply to these employees, making the former CCA a new employee, who is, for the first time, subject to ELM 510.

ELM 512.313(b) contains two exceptions to the 90-day qualifying period requirement, neither of which applies to newly converted CCAs. If, as the NALC argues, previous service as a noncareer postal employee can satisfy the 90-day qualifying period, the Postal Service also stresses there would have been no need to include an exception for RCAs in a leave-earning status.[1] The Postal Service further contends that another canon of contract interpretation, expressio unius est exclusio alterius (the express mention of one thing excludes all others), provides that when a text lists exceptions to a general rule, the general rule should be interpreted to include those items not covered by the stated exceptions.

[1] The Postal Service notes that an RCA who is in a leave earning capacity serves a 90-day qualifying period before they begin to earn leave. The exception exempts them from having to serve another qualifying period.

The Postal Service maintains that its position is consistent with the parties' established practice. TEs, the CCAs noncareer predecessors, were not subject to ELM 510, and thus did not have to complete a 90-day qualifying period requirement during their noncareer appointments to earn and use annual leave. Additionally, like converted CCAs, when TEs were appointed to career status, they were required to complete the 90-day qualifying period in ELM 512.313. The Postal Service asserts that when the CCAs replaced TEs in the latest National Agreement, the TEs were phased out and subsequently, the leave rules that now govern CCAs mirror those that once governed TEs. Except for a few non-substantive changes, the parties carried forward the noncareer leave rules verbatim, which explains why, like the TEs before them, CCAs earn annual leave immediately and are eligible to take that leave as soon as they earn it. Also, just like TEs, CCAs cannot carry annual leave over to their next CCA appointment and are paid out their accrued annual leave upon their conversion to career status.

The Postal Service argues that the NALC has not claimed that former TEs who later received career appointments were exempt from the 90-day qualifying period requirement, however, it incorrectly claims that former CCAs are exempt from that same 90-day requirement. Since the NALC cannot point to any change in the leave rules that would suggest such a policy shift, the Postal Service urges the arbitrator to presume that the parties intended to maintain the existing noncareer leave rules and policies. CCAs should be treated just like TEs were treated, rather than creating a new policy, as the NALC is requesting.

Finally, the Postal Service insists that its position is equitable because its requirements apply to all new career employees who do not qualify under one of the explicit exceptions. It distinguishes Postal Service and APWU Case No. Q90C-6Q-C 94042619 (Das, 1998), cited by the NPMHU in support of its argument that the Postal Service's position is inequitable. In that case, the Arbitrator found that the Postal Service violated ELM 511.1 when it extended administrative leave to some employees, but not others, during a national day of mourning for the late President Nixon. The Postal Service points out that the Arbitrator explained that in "the absence of any detailed provisions explicitly applying to situations such as the Nixon day of mourning," ELM 511.1 was "particularly significant." The Postal Service distinguishes this case because there is a detailed provision that explicitly applies—ELM 512.313(b). Additionally, the Postal Service points out that this case is purely an interpretive case about the facial meaning of a single provision of the leave system, rather than the application of its leave program to any particular set of facts.

FINDINGS

Under Article 10 of the NALC National Agreement, the applicable leave provisions of Subchapter 510 of the ELM are incorporated into the National Agreement. As written, the applicable provisions in Section 512.313 of the ELM, which govern annual leave entitlement for career letter carriers do not support the NALC's (and other Unions') position in this case.

Initially, I note that while the 90-day qualifying period in Section 512.313(b)(1) may derive from Postal regulations dating as far back as 1952, there have been changes over the years as reflected in NALC Exhibits 5-10. The 1978 version (ELM Issue 2) is very similar to the 1952 edition of the Postal Manual cited by the Unions. The 1982 version (Issue 7) includes a provision similar to the current 512.313(a), except that it references "a new employee," rather than "a new career employee." In the 1999 version (Issue 14) Section 512.313(a) does refer to "a new career employee" and substantively is equivalent to the current provision. Section 512.313(b) of the 1999 version -- which addresses the 90-day qualifying period -- includes the first exception now found in that provision -- which does not appear to have been included in prior ELM versions in the record. The second exception for "substitute rural carriers or RCAs who are in a leave-earning status and convert to a Postal Service career position without a break in service" does not appear in the 1999 version, but is included in its present format in the 2000 version (Issue 16). Under these circumstances, I am not persuaded that the historical antecedents provide much useful elucidation on the relatively narrow issue to be decided here.

It is clear from 512.313(a) that this section of the current ELM applies to annual leave for career employees. (The National Agreement includes separate provisions governing annual leave for CCAs.) The 90-day qualifying period in 512.313(b)(1), like the rest of this section, applies only to career employees. The provision that "new employees" may not use annual leave until they complete 90 days of continuous employment without a break in service logically applies to new career employees since they are the only "employees" whose annual leave is subject to this provision. The wording of 512.313(b)(1) contemplates a future act -- "until they complete 90 days of continuous employment." (Emphasis added.)

This conclusion is only strengthened by the express exception to the 90-day qualifying period for "substitute rural carriers or RCAs who are in a leave-earning status [which requires 90 days of service in that capacity] and convert to a Postal Service career position without a break in service." Under the NALC's reading of the general rule in 512.313(b)(1), there would be no need for such an exception. The analogy to a CCA who is in a leave-earning status -- at least one who has completed 90 days of service as a CCA -- and converts to a career position without a break in service hardly could be closer or more direct. The only difference I discern, but it is a mighty one, is that 512.313(b)(1) makes an exception for the substitute rural carrier or RCA, but not for the CCA.[2]

This is not a case like my 1998 Nixon Day of Mourning decision cited by the NPMHU in which I applied ELM 511.1. Here, unlike in that case, there are detailed ELM provisions addressing the issue at hand.

On the present record, it is not evident that from a policy or equity perspective there is any significant reason not to treat CCAs in a similar manner to substitute rural carriers or RCAs covered by the exception in 512.313(b)(1), but the 2013 Interest Arbitration Award -- which includes fairly detailed provisions relating to the newly created CCA bargaining unit position, including conversion to career status, does not provide for -- and the parties have not subsequently agreed to -- this result. Grievance arbitration is not the appropriate process for effecting the necessary change.

[2] While the evidentiary record is somewhat sparse in this regard, it appears that TSEs, who were replaced by CCAs, likely did have to serve a 90-day qualifying period under this provision upon becoming career employees. The NALC stresses that such TSEs were hired off a registry, rather than being entitled to conversion in the same manner as are CCAs, although it is not clear to me whether this involved a break in service. If not, their situation as "new employees" appears similar to a converted CCA. But I only point this out, and do not base my decision on any practice relating to TSEs.

Accordingly, I conclude that the Postal Service's position in this case must prevail under the terms of the parties' National Agreement. The same conclusion applies with respect to MHAs and PSEs represented, respectively, by the NPMHU and the APWU.

AWARD

The grievance is resolved on the basis of the following determination:

Section 512.313 of the ELM requires that former City Carrier Assistants who have completed ninety days of continuous employment without a break in service must complete a 90-day qualifying period following their conversion to career status before they may be credited with or may take annual leave.

Work Rules. All work rules revised by the 2019 National Agreement take effect on Saturday, April 25, 2020, unless the National Agreement specifies another date.

Wages. With regard to wage increases and new wage rates – which to this point include the November 2019 general wage increase and the COLA which was effective February 29, 2020 (paid on March 20, 2020) – these are implemented prospectively in Pay Period 10, which begins on April 25, 2020.

Night Differential. The new night differential rates begin in Pay Period 11, which begins on May 9, 2020.

MHA Overtime. The new rules on MHA overtime, providing overtime pay for hours over eight in a service day, begin on May 9, 2020.

MHA Conversions. The date for conversion of MHAs to career under the one-time conversion program for MHAs with 2.5 years of service is June 6, 2020.

Elimination of Casual Employees. The last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

MHA Relative Standing. The effective date for deeming all newly hired MHAs to be hired on a Saturday at the start of the pay period during which they begin work, solely for relative-standing-based-conversion to career, is May 9, 2020.

Starting Times. The effective date for measuring cumulative changes in starting time for a bid under revised Article 12.3B6 is the date of ratification, or April 7, 2020.

LMOUs. Because of the ongoing pandemic, the NPMHU and the Postal Service have agreed on a Memorandum of Understanding to delay the period during which the parties at each Installation will be authorized to conduct negotiations over the terms of their Local Memoranda of Understanding or LMOUs. In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in

May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing. Initialed copies of this written statement and copies of all proposals and counterproposals pertinent to the issue(s) in dispute shall be appealed within fifteen (15) days after October 31, 2020 to all of the following addresses:

   LR Service Center
   Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before tney may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

CLASS ACTION

I met recently with your representative, Kevin Fletcher, to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether Mail Handler Assistants (MHAs) may carry over accumulated annual leave upon conversion to a career position.

After full discussion of the issue, the parties agree that currently there are no contractual provisions requiring the Postal Service to allow MHAs to carry over accumulated annual leave upon conversion to a career position.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this grievance based on the above language.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

(10 days or 80 hours), credit for leave is reduced by the amount of leave earned by the employee in a pay period.

Notes:

(a) For rural carriers who are required to work 6 days a week, the equivalent of 1 pay period is 12 days or 96 hours.

(b) For J route carriers, the equivalent of 1 pay period is 11 days or 88 hours.

(2) When an employee has one or more periods of LWOP during the leave year, all hours in a nonpay status (during periods in which the employee earned annual leave) are totaled to reduce leave credits.

512.312 Part-Time Employees

The following provisions concern part-time employees:

a. Accrual and Crediting Chart. Part-time career employees other than rural carriers earn annual leave based on the number of hours in which they are in pay status (see Exhibit 512.312).

b. Biweekly Crediting. Leave accrues and is credited in whole hours at the end of each biweekly pay period. All hours in pay status that cannot be credited for leave purposes (see 512.312a) are dropped when:

(1) The leave year ends.

(2) The employee's status is changed from part-time to full-time.

(3) The employee is removed from the rolls for any cause.

Exceptions: The following are exceptions to the crediting rule in 512.312b.

(1) Part-time regular schedule employees including A–E Postmasters are credited with annual leave on a pro rata basis, according to their authorized daily schedules. Employees other than A–E Postmasters must wait until they have 1 year or more of career service to be credited at the beginning of the leave year with the annual leave that they will earn during the leave year. A–E Postmasters are credited at the beginning of the leave year with the annual leave that they earn during the leave year. Part-time regular employees are entitled to additional leave hours, based on their leave category, for each (1) 20, 13, or 10; or (2) 26, 17.33, or 13 hours of work in excess of the schedule (see Exhibit 512.312).

(2) Substitute rural carriers and rural carrier associates (RCAs) earn leave for time serving (a) a vacant route or (b) a route from which the rural carrier is on extended leave in excess of 90 days. RCAs also earn leave based on the number of hours worked serving an auxiliary route for a period in excess of 90 days. The leave category for substitute rural carriers is based on creditable service, and for RCAs it is based on category 4. The first day of the pay period following 90 days, the substitute or RCA is credited with accrued annual leave for the first 90 days.

(3) Auxiliary rural carriers, including substitute rural carriers in dual appointments, are credited with annual leave for actual service performed in accordance with their appropriate leave category. If auxiliary rural carriers are otherwise employed (e.g., as clerks in the Post Office), such additional service is also used in the computation of leave credit; otherwise, they are credited as instructed in 512.312a.

Accrual and Crediting Chart for Part-Time Career Employees

Table 1: Table 1 is valid only for:

1. Part-time career bargaining employees, and
2. Part-time career non-executive non-bargaining employees except for those listed under Table 2.

Leave Category	Years of Creditable Service	Maximum Leave per Year	Rate of Accrual	Hours in Pay Status	Hours of Leave Earned per Period
4	Less than 3 years	104 hours, or 13 days per 26-period leave year or 4 hours for each biweekly pay period.	1 hour for each unit of 20 hours pay in status.	20 40 60 80	1 2 3 4 (max.)
6	3 years but less than 15 years	160 hours, or 20 days per 26-period leave year or 6 hours for each full biweekly pay period.[1]	1 hour for each unit of 13 hours in pay status.	13 26 39 52 65 78	1 2 3 4 5 6 (max.)[1]
8	15 years or more	208 hours, or 26 days per 26-period leave year or 8 hours for each full biweekly pay period.	1 hour for each unit of 10 hours in pay status.	10 20 30 40 50 60 70 80	1 2 3 4 5 6 7 8 (max.)

[1] Except that the accrual for the last pay period of the calendar year may be 10 hours, provided the employee has the 130 creditable hours or more in a pay status in the leave year for leave purposes.

Recording Hours for Annual and Sick Leave

a. Units of hours in a pay status are converted into annual leave credits at the rate of 1 hour for each unit of 20, 13, or 10 hours in a pay status — up to a maximum of 4, 6, or 8 hours per biweekly pay period, depending on the employee's leave category.

b. Hours in a pay status in excess of these whole units are accumulated and carried forward as excess workhours. These excess (uncredited) workhours are added to hours in a pay status in the next period.

c. Whole units of creditable hours (20, 13, or 10) are then converted into leave hours at the unit rate — provided no more leave is credited to a part-time employee than could be earned in the same leave year by a full–time employee.

d. The maximum credit allowable for a particular leave category is calculated by multiplying the period number by the number of leave hours allowable per period.

Dear Mr. Raczor:

On January 30, 1980, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we concluded that at issue in this grievance is the note contained at the end of Exhibit E-3 of the P-11 Handbook.

We have mutually agreed that this note is to be interpreted to mean that if an employee had a period of casual or temporary employment prior to January 1, 1977, this time, prior to January 1, 1977, is credible towards computation of the leave computation date which is utilized to determine whether an employee is to earn 4, 6 or 8 hours of annual leave a pay period. Time worked as a casual or temporary from January 1, 1977 or later is not credible towards the leave computation date.

Accordingly, this grievance is remanded to Step 3 for application of the above agreed to interpretation.

Please sign the attached copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of the remanding of this case.

SUBJECT: Mail Handler Assistant

In accordance with the Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) Annual Leave Provisions Memorandum of Understanding, MHAs accrue annual leave which may be used for rest, recreation, emergency purposes, and illness or injury. Except for emergencies, annual leave for MHAs must be requested on PS Form 3971 and approved in advance by the appropriate supervisor.

An MHA may request annual leave for a minimum of one hour and up to the number of hours the MHA is scheduled to work, but no more than eight hours in a service day or 40 hours in a service week.

Re: T. Hall

H1C-4B-C 17039

Dear Mr. Freeman:

On October 5, 1983, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The grievance concerns whether management improperly charged 8 hours LWOP used by the grievant in the 1982 leave year to his 1983 leave year.

According to the file, the grievant used 8 hours LWOP on January 6, 1983, which was during the last pay period of the 1982 leave year. When the grievant received his pay check for pay period two of 1983, his pay stub showed 8 hours LWOP used.

We mutually concluded that the end of a leave year and the beginning of the 26 pay periods does not necessarily coincide (ref. 512.121, ELM). The grievant cannot determine the LWOP that will be charged to a leave year solely by viewing his pay stub. The pay stub will reflect whatever leave activity that takes place within a particular pay period. It does not control leave use allocations during a leave year. Therefore, leave taken by the grievant on January 6, 1982, will be charged to the 1982 leave year.

Accordingly, we consider this grievance, to the extent discussed above, to be resolved.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On April 3, 1984, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these grievances is whether management violated Article 10, Section 4.D., by refusing to honor approved leave of the grievants who transferred from the clerk craft to the carrier craft.

After further review of this matter, we agreed that there was no national interpretive issue fairly presented as to the meaning and intent of Article 10 of the National Agreement.

The parties at this level agree that employees who have annual leave approved are entitled to such leave except in emergency situations. Whether an emergency situation existed at the time when the leave would be used is a noninterpretive question and is suitable for regional determination.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgment of our agreement to remand these grievances.

Dear Mr. Freeman:

On January 15, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in this grievance is whether the grievant's annual leave was improperly cancelled.

After further review of this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented as to the meaning and intent of Article 10 of the National Agreement. As stated in two previously issued Step 4 settlements (B1C-3Q-C 21492 dated September 16, 1983, and H1C-3D-C 34008 dated October 5, 1984), we agreed that when a PTF has been previously granted annual leave, the annual leave will not be unilaterally changed to an off day, solely to make the PTF available for an extra day of work at straight time.

Accordingly, as agreed, this case is remanded to the parties at Step 3 for application of the above settlement to the fact circumstances of this case and appropriate resolution.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On August 26, 1981, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The question in this grievance is whether or not management violated Article XIX of the National Agreement by not allowing the employee involved to cancel scheduled annual leave. In our opinion, this issue does not fairly present an interpretive question.

The Union cites a violation of Part 516.332, Employee and Labor Relations Manual. This reference addresses the cancellation of annual leave and provides for placing the employee on court leave for the duration of court service. The file reflects that this requirement was accomplished.

Article XXX, 4, B, local agreement indicates that management's action was proper and no cited reference supports the relief requested by the Union. While not contractually obligated to, management should give reasonable consideration to requests for annual leave cancellation.

Accordingly, as we find no violation of the National agreement, this grievance is denied.

Dear Bill:

Recently, I met with your representative Richard Collins to discuss the aforementioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated Article 8, Section 5, of the National Agreement when it failed to offer overtime to an employee on his scheduled day off while on annual leave.

During our discussion, it was mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case.

After reviewing this matter it was determined that there is no violation of the National Agreement. Normally, employees who are absent are not required nor considered available to work overtime. However, if an employee on the Overtime Desired List (OTDL) so desires, the employee may advise his/her supervisor in writing of his/her availability to work a nonscheduled day that is in conjunction with or part of approved annual leave.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Dear Billy:

Recently, Joseph Amma and I met with Samuel D'Ambrosio, Arthur Vallone and yourself in pre-arbitration discussions of the aforementioned case pending arbitration at the National level.

The issue in this case is whether management is obligated to honor an employee's request pursuant to Article 10.5C for additional annual leave during the choice vacation period after the vacation list has been posted and the employee has been approved for the full leave entitlement outlined in Article 10.3 D1 and D2.

After full discussion of this issue, and taking into account additional information provided by the Union, the parties have agreed that the provisions of Article 10.5 C apply to requests for annual leave in full week increments made by employees after the initial sign-up period is completed and vacant weeks still exist on the vacation sign-up list.

This constitutes full and final settlement of all issues presented in this case.

Please sign and return one copy of this letter to indicate your agreement to settle this grievance and withdraw it from the pending arbitration list.

Sincerely,

513.42 Part-Time Employees

513.421 General

General provisions are as follows:

a. Absences due to illness are charged as sick leave on any day that an hourly rate employee is scheduled to work except national holidays.

Exception: If employees shown to be eligible in 434.422 elect to receive annual leave credit in lieu of holiday leave pay (see 512.65), sick leave may be charged to supplement work hours, up to the limit of their regular work schedule, on the holiday worked, provided the requirements of section 513.32 are met.

b. Except as provided in 513.82, paid sick leave may not exceed the number of hours that the employee would have been scheduled to work, up to:

(1) A maximum of 8 hours in any one day.

(2) 40 hours in any one week.

(3) 80 hours in any one pay period. If a dispute arises as to the number of hours a part-time flexible employee would have been scheduled to work, the schedule is considered to have been equal to the average hours worked by other part-time flexible employees in the same work location on the day in question.

c. Limitations in 513.421b apply to paid sick leave only and not to a combination of sick leave and workhours. However, part-time flexible employees who have been credited with 40 hours or more of paid service (work, leave, or a combination of work and leave) in a service week are not granted sick leave during the remainder of that service week. Absences, in such cases, are treated as nonduty time that is not chargeable to paid leave of any kind. (Sick leave is not intended to be used to supplement earnings of employees.)

513.422 Minimum Unit Charge

Minimum unit charges are as follows:

Employee Category	Minimum Unit Charge
All part-time nonexempt employees.	One-hundredth of an hour (0.01 hour).
Part-time exempt employees.	(See 519.7.)

513.5 Advanced Sick Leave

513.511 May Not Exceed Thirty Days

Sick leave not to exceed 30 days (240 hours) may be advanced in cases of an employee's serious disability or illness if there is reason to believe the employee will return to duty. Sick leave may be advanced whether or not the employee has an annual leave or donated leave balance.

513.512 Medical Document Required

Every request for advanced sick leave must be supported by medical documentation of the illness.

513.52 Administration

513.521 Installation Heads' Approval

Officials in charge of installations are authorized to approve these advances without reference to higher authority.

513.522 Forms Forwarded

PS Form 1221, Advanced Sick Leave Authorization, is completed and forwarded to the Eagan ASC when advanced sick leave is authorized.

513.531 Thirty-Day Maximum

Additional sick leave may be advanced even though liquidation of a previous advance has not been completed provided the advance at no time exceeds 30 days. Any advanced sick leave authorized is in addition to the sick leave that has been earned by the employee at the time the advance is authorized.

513.532 Liquidating Advanced Sick Leave

The liquidation of advanced sick leave is not to be confused with the substitution of annual leave for sick leave to avoid forfeiture of the annual leave. Advanced sick leave may be liquidated in the following manner:

a. Charging the sick leave against the sick leave earned by the employee as it is earned upon return to duty.

b. Charging the sick leave against an equivalent amount of annual leave at the employee's request provided the annual leave charge is made prior to the time such leave is forfeited because of the leave carryover limit.

513.61 Insufficient Sick Leave

If sick leave is approved but the employee does not have sufficient sick leave to cover the absence, the difference is charged to annual leave or to LWOP at the employee's option.

513.62 Insufficient Sick and Annual Leave

If sick leave is approved for employees who have no annual or sick leave to their credit, the absence may be charged as LWOP unless sick leave is advanced as outlined in 513.5. LWOP so charged cannot thereafter be converted to sick or annual leave.

513.63 Disapproved Sick Leave

If sick leave is disapproved, but the absence is nevertheless warranted, the supervisor may approve, at the employee's option, a charge to annual leave or a charge to LWOP.

513.64 Absence Without Leave

An absence that is disapproved is charged as LWOP and may be administratively considered as AWOL.

513.65 Annual Leave Changed to Sick Leave

If an employee becomes ill while on annual leave and the employee has a sick leave balance, the absence may be charged to sick leave.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On November 21, 1983, we met to discuss the above-captioned cases at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1981 National Agreement.

The question raised in these grievances is whether local management violated Article 10 and 19 of the National Agreement by implementing local tardiness and sick leave policies.

After further review of this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in the particulars evidenced in these cases. This issue is a matter of application rather than interpretation. A local Attendance Program cannot be inconsistent with ELM 510. Disciplinary action which results from a local policy must meet the just cause provision of Article 16. Accordingly, we agreed that the parties at Step 3 are to once again review these cases to ascertain if the local policy conforms with ELM regulations. If the parties are unable to settle this matter, the issue should be arbitrated at the regional level.

Accordingly, as we further agreed, these cases are hereby remanded to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Jordan:

On November 14, 1980, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure with regard to disputes between the parties at the national level.

The matters presented by you, as well as the applicable contractual provisions, have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

At issue in this case is whether the Cleveland, Ohio post office has adopted and enforced a policy whereby employees using sick leave in excess of three percent of their scheduled hours will be disciplined.

During our discussion, several points of agreement were reached. They are:

1. The USPS and the APWU agree that discipline for failure to maintain a satisfactory attendance record or "excessive absenteeism" must be determined on a case-by-case basis in light of all the relevant evidence and circumstances.

2. The USPS and the APWU agree that any rule setting a fixed amount or percentage of sick leave usage after which an employee will be, as a matter of course, automatically disciplined is inconsistent with the National Agreement and applicable handbooks and manuals.

3. The USPS will introduce no new rules and policies regarding discipline for failure to maintain a satisfactory attendance record or "excessive absenteeism" that are inconsistent with the National Agreement and applicable handbooks and manuals.

The above constitutes our national position on such matters. We do not agree that a three percent policy as stated in your grievance has been implemented in the Cleveland, Ohio post office.

The Union bases its argument on several factors. First, they feel that the content of several internal management memos clearly indicates that a three percent rule was implemented. In my review of the said documents, I do not find such clarity. Further, the authors of the documents say they had no intention of establishing a three percent rule for individual attendance. Their concern was a three percent reduction in the sick leave usage for the entire office.

Second, the Union has presented affidavits from several employees who attest that they were told by their supervisors and/or in step one grievance proceedings that they used more than three percent sick leave they would be disciplined. The supervisors referred to have all submitted statements stating that they did not tell employees that there was a three percent rule.

Third, the Union states that the number of disciplinary actions taken with regard to excessive sick leave usage substantially increased after the memos were written. Though numbers were quoted, no documentation was submitted. The Cleveland office has submitted substantial documentation that certainly indicates that if a three percent rule was the policy, it was not being enforced. The Cleveland staff surveyed the attendance records of over seventeen hundred employees. Over 559 employees in that number had used more than three percent of their sick leave during the period January 1980 to July 1980, but were not disciplined. These statistics certainly belie the extence of a three percent rule. Management acknowledges that there has been increased emphasis on attendance, but not based on a three percent rule.

Notwithstanding those listed items to which we can agree, it is our position that in light of the fact circumstances o this case, no policy to discipline employees who used mor than three percent of their sick leave existed in the Cleveland post office.

It is further our opinion, that no definitive dispute exists between the parties concerning the contractual provisions for the administration of discipline with regard to failure to maintain satisfactory attendance.

Sincerely,

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, TJ Branch, to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issues in this grievance are whether local management may implement a policy whereby employees are disciplined for using sick leave after a specified amount of absences and does leaving on overtime constitute an unscheduled absence.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Furthermore, the issue of whether local management may implement a policy whereby employees are disciplined for using sick leave after a specified amount of absences has been addressed in a step 4 decision A8-NA-0840 and is cited in the CIM Version 3 in Article 10 page 12. Provisions for an unscheduled absence are addressed in Employee Relations Manual, Section 511.4.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this grievance to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

Dear Mr. Freeman:

On August 16, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance involves management requiring employees to complete PS Forms 3971 at the Postal Source Data Site prior to obtaining their time badges following unexpected absences from duty.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination by application of Part 513.332 of the ELM as well as Part 333.3 of the F-21 Handbook to the fact circumstances.

The parties at this level agree that the completion of a Form 3971 "upon/after return to duty" means while the employee is on-the-clock.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for application of the above understanding to the fact circumstances.

Subject: Effect of Penalty Overtime Pay on Holiday Scheduling

Statement of the Issues: Whether Management may ignore the "pecking order" in holiday period scheduling, as established by Article 11, Section 6B or a Local Memorandum of Understanding, in order to avoid payment of penalty overtime pay under Article 8?

Whether Management may treat regular employees who have volunteered for holiday period work, pursuant to the holiday scheduling process, as having volunteered for up to twelve hours on whatever day(s) they are asked to work?

Contract Provisions Involved: Article 8, Sections 4 and 5; Article 11, Sections 1 through 6; and Article 30 of the July 21, 1984 National Agreement.

Appearances: For the Postal Service, J. K. Hellquist, General Manager, Labor Relations Division, Central Region; for APWU, Darryl J. Anderson, Attorney (O'Donnell Schwartz & Anderson); for NALC, Keith E. Secular, Attorney (Cohen Weiss & Simon) and Devon Lee Miller, Staff Attorney.

Statement of the Award: The grievances are granted. Management may not ignore the "pecking order" in holiday period scheduling under Article 11, Section 6 in order to avoid penalty overtime pay under Article 8. Management may not treat regular volunteers for holiday period work as having volunteered for up to twelve hours on whatever day(s) they are asked to work. The remedy for this violation, the question of who is entitled to back pay for Management's failure to honor rights under Articles 8 and 11, is remanded to the parties for their consideration. Should they be unable to resolve this matter, the back pay issue may be returned to the appropriate arbitration forum for a final decision.

BACKGROUND

These grievances involve interpretive questions with respect to Article 11, the holiday work and holiday scheduling language of the 1984 National Agreement. Article 11, Section 6B establishes a "pecking order" for scheduling employees during a holiday period. The Postal Service insists that if compliance with the "pecking order" would result in some employee receiving penalty overtime pay, Management is free to bypass that employee to avoid the penalty overtime pay. The Unions disagree. They urge that any failure to follow the "pecking order" is a violation of Section 6B.

Article 11 is the "holidays" clause. It states the holidays to which the employees are entitled (Section 1), the eligibility conditions for holiday pay (Section 2), and the payment made for a holiday (Section 3). It notes that when a holiday falls on an employee's scheduled non-workday, he takes his holiday on his "scheduled workday preceding the holiday" (Section 5B). That is referred to as his designated holiday. Because of this contract provision, a single holiday may embrace a two- or three-day period. For example, if the official holiday occurs on a Monday, anyone regularly scheduled that day will have Monday as a holiday. An employee whose scheduled off days are Sunday and Monday will have his designated holiday on Saturday; an employee whose off days were Monday and some later day would have his designated holiday on Sunday. These latter employees receive holiday pay for their designated holiday, not for the official holiday (Monday).

Article 11 also explains how employees are to be paid when they work on their holiday (Section 4) and how employees are to be scheduled for such holiday work (Section 6). In order to understand this dispute, these two provisions should be quoted at length:

> "Section 4. Holiday Work
> A. An employee required to work on a holiday other than Christmas shall be paid the base hourly straight time rate for each hour worked up to eight (8) hours in addition to the holiday to which the employee is entitled as above described.

B. An employee required to work Christmas shall be paid one and one-half (1½) times the base hourly straight time rate for each hour worked in addition to the holiday pay to which the employee is entitled as above described."

"Section 6. Holiday Schedule

A. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be posted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls.

B. As many full-time and part-time regular employees as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as their holiday. Such employees will not be required to work on a holiday or day designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so."

Some elaboration on the meaning of this contract language is necessary. Section 6A demands that a holiday work schedule be posted by a certain time. Section 6B establishes rules as to how the schedule is to be prepared. Its main purpose is to require that "full-time and part-time regulars" be given holidays off to the extent possible. It calls upon Management to "excuse" from holiday work "as many..." of them "as can be spared." It nevertheless recognizes that these regulars may sometimes be required to work on their holidays. But it says this cannot happen "unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible" including overtime and "unless all full-time and part-time regulars...who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so." Thus, all casuals, part-time flexibles and regular volunteers must be used for holiday work before Management can compel regular, non-volunteers to perform such work.

The precise order of choosing employees for holiday work, commonly referred to as the "pecking order", is left to the local parties. Article 30B, item 13 provides for local implementation with respect to "the method of selecting employees to work on a holiday." Of course, should the local parties fail to agree on a "pecking order", they would be bound by the terms of Article 11, Section 6B.

Section 4 deals with the applicable rate of pay for the employee who works his holiday (or designated holiday) pursuant to the "pecking order." Ordinarily, he receives straight time for such holiday work (Section 4A) in addition to holiday pay. But if he works on Christmas Day, he receives time and one-half for such holiday work (Section 4B) in addition to holiday pay.

Because holiday scheduling involves more than the calendar holiday, employees are sometimes called upon to work during the holiday period on one or two of their regularly scheduled off days. Suppose, for instance, that the calendar holiday falls on Monday and that a regular volunteer has his off days on Sunday and Monday and hence his designated holiday on Saturday. If he is asked to work on Sunday[1] (or Monday), he receives time and one-half for such work. The parties appear to disagree on the basis for this payment. The Unions insist this overtime premium is required by Article 8, Section 4B. The Postal Service insists that pay for work performed because of the holiday scheduling provision has nothing to do with Article 8 but rather is based on the terms of Article 11 and the March 4, 1974 Settlement Agreement. Paragraph 3d of this Settlement Agreement states:

> "d. A full time regular employee required to work on a holiday which falls on his regularly scheduled non-work day shall be paid at the normal overtime rate of one and one-half (1½) times his basic hourly straight time rate for work performed on such day..."[2]

1 If he is asked to work on Saturday, his designated holiday, he receives straight time for such work pursuant to Article 11, Section 4A.

2 This clause plainly does not refer to Saturday in the hypothetical example above. For Saturday, being the employee's designated holiday, is by definition a scheduled workday. Rather, it must refer to the official holiday on Monday which was a "scheduled non-work day" for this employee. In any event, this clause does not concern his pay for work performed on Sunday pursuant to the holiday schedule. For Sunday was neither a calendar holiday nor his designated holiday.

Article 8 is a critical part of this dispute as well. Prior to the 1984 National Agreement, it provided overtime pay for work performed "after eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day or forty (40) hours in any one service week" (Section 4B). It provided further for overtime pay for work outside the regularly scheduled work week, i.e., for work on the employee's non-scheduled days (Section 4B). It referred to a single overtime rate, time and one-half (Section 4A).

The 1984 national negotiations led to significant changes in Article 8. The most important one, for purposes of this case, was the establishment of "penalty overtime pay" of "two (2) times the base hourly straight time rate" (Section 4C). The manner in which this penalty premium was to be applied is set forth in Sections 4 and 5 of the 1984 National Agreement:

> "Section 4...D. Effective January 19, 1985, penalty overtime pay will be paid to full-time regular employees for any overtime work in contravention of the restrictions in Section 5.F.
> "Section 5...F. Effective January 19, 1985, excluding December, no full-time regular employee will be required to work overtime on more than four (4) of the employee's five (5) scheduled days in a service week or work over ten (10) hours on a regularly scheduled day, over eight (8) hours on a non-scheduled day, or over six (6) days in a service week."

In short, employees who work beyond these Section 5F restrictions are entitled to penalty overtime pay.

In the 1984 national negotiations, the Unions proposed several changes in Article 11. One was to "correct Article 11 to reflect the Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday." Another was to "increase...the premium paid for work on a holiday or designated holiday." The former proposal was submitted to the Kerr interest arbitration panel which held that the King birthday should be an additional holiday beginning in 1986. The latter proposal was evidently an attempt to raise any existing "premium" for holiday work. It was dropped by the Unions during negotiations and was never placed before the Kerr panel.

The Postal Service advised the Unions of its interpretation of Article 11 in mid-April 1985. It asserted that volunteering for holiday period work would be considered by Management as indicating a willingness to work up to twelve hours per day. It asserted further that a holiday schedule would continue to be based on the "pecking order" created by Article 11, Section 6B and local implementation but that Management was not obligated to follow the "pecking order" if, by doing so, it incurred penalty overtime pay. Both Unions objected to this interpretation. NALC grieved, alleging that "pecking orders, however established, must be followed by the Postal Service." Its position was that the "pecking order" could not be disregarded because of penalty overtime pay considerations. APWU grieved, taking the same position as NALC on the "pecking order" question. It urged that an employee's right to holiday period work pursuant to Article 11, Section 6B and local implementation could not be affected by any Article 8 changes in overtime compensation. It added too that employees scheduled for holiday work "are available to work the number of hours [eight] they would normally be available for if it were not a holiday schedule."

The original arbitration hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on December 19, 1985. The parties submitted only the question of whether the Unions' complaint was arbitrable under the terms of the 1984 National Agreement. I ruled on May 5, 1986, that "the grievances in this case are arbitrable." A hearing was held on the merits of the dispute on October 8, 1986. Post-hearing briefs were received by the arbitrator on December 6, 1986.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

Article 11, Section 6B is the key provision in this case. It deals with the holiday schedule for the holiday period, namely, the day on which the official holiday falls and the preceding day(s) on which many employees have their designated holiday. Its purpose was to insure, insofar as possible, that regulars would enjoy the holiday (or designated holiday) and be off work that day. It accomplished this purpose by creating a "pecking order." Thus, in preparing a holiday schedule, Management must use (1) "all casuals and part-time flexibles..." and (2) "all full-time and part-time regulars ...who wish to work on the holiday..." before turning to any regular who does not wish to work. The parties gave the regular non-volunteer a right, vis-a-vis others, to time off on his holiday (or designated holiday). That right can be disregarded, according to Section 6B, only if Management has scheduled all qualified people in groups (1) and (2) and requires still more manpower for the holiday (or designated holiday).

More important, the "pecking order" described here is a mandatory procedure. Management must use non-protected employees (i.e., casuals, part-time flexibles, and regular volunteers) before protected employees (i.e., regular non-volunteers) during the holiday period. There are no exceptions. Failure to honor these priorities (i.e., scheduling a regular non-volunteer while other qualified non-protected people are available) would plainly be a violation of Article 11, Section 6B.

The Postal Service nevertheless insists that the "pecking order" is not always mandatory under the 1984 National Agreement. It stresses that part of Article 11, Section 6B which says the priorities set forth in the "pecking order" are to be followed "even if the payment of overtime is required." It believes these words mean that the parties anticipated the "pecking order" would cost Management no more than the "overtime" rate in effect (i.e., time and one-half) at the time Section 6B was first written into the National Agreement. It urges that the parties negotiated a new "penalty overtime" rate (i.e., double time) in the 1984 National Agreement, that this was not the "overtime" rate contemplated by Article 11, Section 6, and that Management may therefore ignore the "pecking order" when necessary to avoid the payment of anything beyond such "overtime" rate. Its position is that the parties agreed the Section 6B scheduling procedure could result in "...the payment of overtime" but not "...the payment of penalty overtime."

This argument fails for several reasons. The object of the phrase in question ("even if the payment of overtime is required") obviously was to make clear that Management could not escape the mandatory scheduling procedure in Article 11, Section 6B on the ground that strict application of this procedure would call for "overtime" pay. The "pecking order" had to be followed even though it caused employees to be paid time and one-half. The "pecking order" had to be followed without regard to labor cost considerations.[3] Realistically viewed, this phrase simply serves to emphasize the unconditional nature of the Section 6B scheduling obligation. The Postal Service has never had an option in this matter. It had to honor the "pecking order" whenever it made up a holiday schedule. It presumably did so between 1973, when Section 6B came into being, and 1984. Now Management contends that this phrase, absent any change in the language of Section 6B, somehow places a new condition on what had always been an unconditional obligation. This claim is unconvincing, not only because it would alter the long-standing interpretation of Section 6B but also because it would expand the meaning of this phrase far beyond what the parties could possibly have intended.

To repeat, the phrase in question precludes any deviation from the "pecking order" because of "overtime." It is true that when Article 11, Section 6B was initially written, there was just one kind of "overtime" pay, namely, time and one-half. The parties established another kind of "overtime" pay, namely, double time, in the 1984 National Agreement and described it as "penalty overtime." Neither of these circumstances command a different conclusion in this case. For "penalty overtime" is still a form of "overtime" and double time is simply a new type of "overtime" rate. Moreover, these new arrangements have been included in the "overtime work" provisions of Article 8, Section 4. The parties' intent to make "overtime" (i.e., labor cost) considerations irrelevant in preparing a holiday schedule under Article 11, Section 6B strongly suggests that Management may not deviate from the "pecking order" because of "penalty overtime."

Neither party seems to have anticipated in the 1984 negotiations that the creation of "penalty overtime" in Article 8, Section 4 might have an impact on holiday scheduling under Article 11, Section 6B. There is no evidence that the negotiators discussed this interrelationship. The Postal Service maintains the Unions never advised Management at the time that the "pecking order" would have to be applied without regard to "penalty overtime" as well as "overtime." Had

3 The Postal Service can, of course, choose from among the part-time flexibles (or from among the regular volunteers, etc.) in order to limit its labor cost. That kind of choice would not conflict with the "pecking order."

it been so advised, it says it would have insisted on renegotiating Article 11, Section 6B. But the Unions can make the very same type of argument. They could properly assert the Postal Service never advised them at the time that deviation from the "pecking order" was prohibited with respect to "overtime" but not "penalty overtime." Had they been so advised, they presumably would also have insisted on renegotiating Article 11, Section 6B.

The difficulty here is the parties' silence on this issue in the 1984 negotiations. That silence, however, does not work to the Unions' disadvantage. For the holiday scheduling in Article 11, Section 6B, the "pecking order", has always been an unconditional obligation. Nothing in the Postal Service's argument convinces me that a sound basis exists for modifying that unconditional obligation.

The Postal Service resists these findings on other grounds as well. First, it states that pay for work performed pursuant to a holiday schedule is based not on Article 8 but rather on Article 11 and the March 4, 1974 Settlement Agreement. It seems to be asserting that there is no interrelationship between Articles 8 and 11. Second, it states that the Unions are seeking through this arbitration what they failed to achieve in the 1984 negotiations. It refers to the Unions' withdrawal in those negotiations of a proposal for "increasing the premium paid for work on a holiday or designated holiday" under Article 11.

The first claim has no merit whatever. It is true that pay for work on a holiday (or designated holiday) is governed by Article 11, Section 4. But the holiday schedule typically encompasses a two- or three-day period and calls for employees to work on a day(s) outside their regular schedule, a day(s) other than their holiday (or designated holiday). Payment for these days is not covered by Article 11. Payment for these days is covered by Article 8 and to a limited extent by the Settlement Agreement.[4] [4] See footnote 2 which explains that Paragraph 3d of the Settlement Agreement has a limited application to a holiday schedule. Note too that the purpose of Paragraph 3d, according to a lengthy April 1974 memorandum issued by Postal Service headquarters, was to show that an employee who "works on a calendar holiday" which is in fact "his sixth work day...is entitled only to the normal overtime rate for service performed that day..." (Emphasis added).

The Postal Service has recognized the applicability of the overtime pay provisions of Article 8 in these circumstances. An August 1973 telegraphic message was sent to facilities throughout the country by the then Senior Assistant Postmaster General for Employee & Labor Relations. The message dealt with misunderstandings as to the proper interpretation of Article 11, Section 6B. It described the priorities or "pecking order" for a holiday schedule and noted the fourth and fifth priorities in these words:

> . "4. All other full time and part time regular volunteers. In the case of such full time volunteers, if they are scheduled to work and it is what would otherwise be their non-scheduled work day, they will be guaranteed 8 hours at the overtime rate in accordance with Article VIII, Sections 1 and 4.
> "5. Full time and part time regulars who have not volunteered and who will be working on what would otherwise be their non-scheduled work day. In the case of such full time employees, they will be guaranteed 8 hours at the overtime rate in accordance with Article VIII, Sections 1 and 4." (Emphasis added)

Equally important, the Postal Service issued a January 1985 special postal bulletin (21495) which dealt with pay issues arising from the new "penalty overtime" provision. The bulletin addressed the situation where an "employee worked all seven days of the week which included a holiday." The calendar holiday fell on a Monday; the employee's regularly scheduled off days were Saturday and Sunday; the holiday schedule called for him to work these off days. The bulletin stated that "penalty overtime is paid for the 2nd non-scheduled workday, for hours worked on a 7th day (Sunday)" (Emphasis added). That was obviously a reference to Article 8, Section 4.

The Postal Service expressly acknowledged the applicability of "penalty overtime" to holiday scheduling in an April 1985 letter to the Unions. It stated its "position" in these words:

"For holiday scheduling purposes work hour limitations for the holiday period; i.e., the holiday and designated holidays, would be as follows:

- Penalty pay would be due for work in excess of 10 hours per day.

- Penalty pay would be due for overtime work on more than 4 of the employees 5 scheduled days.

- Penalty pay would be paid for work over 8 hours on a nonscheduled day.

- Penalty pay would be paid for work over 6 days in a service week." (Emphasis added)

These statements show that employees on a holiday schedule can, where appropriate, qualify for "penalty overtime" under Article 8, Sections 4 and 5. Indeed, the present dispute is before the arbitrator because the Postal Service has admittedly deviated from the "pecking order" of Article 11, Section 6B to avoid the payment of "penalty overtime." That action plainly implies that were Management required to follow the "pecking order" in such situations, it would have to pay "penalty overtime."

All of this illustrates, beyond question, that Article 8 does apply to certain portions of the Article 11, Section 6B holiday schedule. Articles 8 and 11 are interrelated.

The second claim is also not persuasive. In the 1984 negotiations, the Unions noted that "most employees are required to work on holidays" and proposed amending Article 11 so as to "increase...the premium paid for work on a holiday or designated holiday." This proposal was later withdrawn. The parties disagree on the significance, if any, to be attributed to this withdrawal.

The Unions' proposal had a narrow target. It was aimed at work performed by employees on their holiday (or designated holiday). It sought something more than the straight time pay authorized by Article 11, Section 4 for such work.[5] The present dispute, however, does not concern work on the employee's holiday (or designated holiday). The Unions do not challenge the pay formulation in Article 11, Section 4. Rather, their concern is with the employee required to work on a non-scheduled day[6] pursuant to the holiday scheduling procedure of Article 11, Section 6B. Their concern is with Management's obligation to follow the "pecking order" of Section 6B without regard to the "overtime" consequences. Such concerns were obviously not part of the Unions' negotiating proposal. Therefore, it cannot be said that the Unions' position in this case is an attempt to secure through arbitration what it failed to achieve through negotiations.

The final issue in this case concerns the Postal Service's view that any regular employee who volunteers for holiday period work may be treated as having volunteered for up to twelve hours on whatever day(s) he is asked to work. The Unions do not agree. They believe that such a regular volunteer is limited to just eight hours and that should Management need more than this eight hours' work, it must use the overtime desired list (ODL).

Article 11 does not address this issue. It deals with the scheduling of holiday period work but it says nothing of the number of hours for which a regular volunteer may be scheduled. However, Article 8, Section 5 offers some significant clues. It describes the procedures to be followed in scheduling "overtime work" for employees. Its general provisions must give way to the specific provisions for holiday scheduling in Article 11, Section 6. Hence, a regular volunteer may be scheduled for an eight-hour shift in the holiday period even though these hours constitute "overtime work" for him and even though he is not on the ODL. But because Article 11 does not speak of the length of a holiday period assignment and because anything beyond the initial eight hours must amount to "overtime work", it is appropriate to look at Article 8, Section 5.

Assume, for instance, that a regular full-time volunteer is working eight hours on a non-scheduled day pursuant to the holiday schedule. That would be "overtime work." But Article 8, Section 5F says "no full-time regular will be required to work...over eight...hours on a non-scheduled day..." Assume further that this regular volunteer is also working eight hours on his holiday (or designated holiday), one of his regularly scheduled days. He receives straight time for such holiday work in addition to his holiday pay. Only if he is asked to work beyond eight hours would overtime pay be applicable. But Article 8, Section 5G says "full-time employees not on the [ODL]...may be required to work overtime only if all available employees on the [ODL]...have worked up to twelve...hours in a day or sixty...hours in a service week..."[7] In short, the regular volunteer cannot work beyond the eight hours without supervision first exhausting the ODL. These Article 8 provisions, when read together with Article 11, strongly suggest that regular volunteers are contractually expected to work eight hours, nothing more. And it appears that regular volunteers were ordinarily scheduled for holiday period work in eight-hour blocks prior to the 1984 National Agreement.

5 Time and one-half pay is authorized for work on the Christmas holiday.

6 This non-scheduled day would, by definition, be a day other than his holiday (or designated holiday).

I find, accordingly, that the regular volunteer is volunteering for eight hours' work as urged by the Unions. That evidently was the accepted construction of Article 11, Section 6 prior to the 1984 National Agreement. There is no sound reason why the new "penalty overtime" provisions of Article 8 should prompt a different construction.

7 If the regular volunteer is also on the ODL, a different situation might well be presented.

AWARD

The grievances are granted. Management may not ignore the "pecking order" in holiday period scheduling under Article 11, Section 6 in order to avoid penalty overtime pay under Article 8. Management may not treat regular volunteers for holiday period work as having volunteered for up to twelve hours on whatever day(s) they are asked to work. The remedy for this violation, the question of who is entitled to back pay for Management's failure to honor rights under Articles 8 and 11, is remanded to the parties for their consideration. Should they be unable to resolve this matter, the back pay issue may be returned to the appropriate arbitration forum for a final decision.

Dear Mr. Hutchins:

On August 30, 1988, we met to discuss the above captioned grievance.

The issue in this grievance is whether a disabled veteran can be disciplined for using sick leave while receiving treatment at a VA hospital.

After reviewing this matter, it was mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is present in this case. The parties at this level agree that Executive Order 5396, dated July 3, 1930, does apply to the Postal Service and that absences meeting the requirements of that decree cannot be used as a basis for discipline.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Kaczor:

On January 16, 1980, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we concluded that at issue in this grievance is whether management must pay an employee for all time spent to undergo a Fitness-for-Duty exam at the employer's request; and whether charging such time to an employee's annual leave constitutes such payment.

After reveiwing the information provided, it is our position that time spent by an employee in waiting for and receiving such medical attention at the direction of the employer constitutes hours worked. Thus, the grievant in this case shall be carried in an official duty pay status for all time involved. In addition, any annual leave charged to the grievant shall be recredited to his balance.

Please sign the attached copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of the final disposition of this case.

Dear John:

Recently, I met with your representative, Dick Collins to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedures.

The issue in this grievance is whether the use of the "Deems Desirable Option" in the RMD/ERMS is in violation of the National Agreement, Chapter 510 of the ELM and various Step 4 agreements.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agree that if a supervisor determines that medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacitation is desirable for the protection of the Postal Service it must be made on a case by case basis, must be consistent with the provisions of ELM 513.361 and may not be arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to Step 3.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On May 10, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question raised in this grievance is whether the grievant properly submitted documentation to support her absence due to illness.

After further review of this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in the particulars evidenced in this case. Whether the grievant provided acceptable documentation in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 513.364 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) is a factual dispute. However, the parties at Step 4 agree that a naturopath is considered an "attending practitioner" under ELM 513.364.

Accordingly, as we further agreed, this case is hereby remanded to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, if necessary.

SUBJECT: Documentation Requirements

It has recently come to my attention that there is some confusion in the field concerning the substance of medical information needed by a supervisor to approve leave pursuant to Section 513.36 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual. The following restates the Postal Service's position.

When employees are required to submit medical documentation to support a request for approved leave, such documentation should be furnished by the employee's attending physician or other attending practitioner, with an explanation of the nature of the employee's illness or injury sufficient to indicate that the employee was or will be unable to perform his or her normal duties during the period of absence. Normally, statements such as "under my care" or "received treatment" are not acceptable evidence of incapacitation.

In order to return to duty when medical documentation is required, an employee must submit to the supervisor information from the appropriate medical source which includes:

1. Evidence of incapacitation for the period of absence.

2. Evidence of the ability to return to duty with or without limitations.

Medical information which includes a diagnosis and a medical prognosis is not necessary to approve leave. A health care provider can provide an explanation of medical facts sufficient to indicate that an employee is, or will be, incapacitated for duty without giving a specific diagnosis or medical prognosis. If medical documentation is received by an employee's supervisor that provides a diagnosis and a medical prognosis, it must be forwarded to the health unit or office of the contract medical provider and treated as a "restricted medical record" under Section 214.3 of Handbook EL-806.

In order to facilitate operational scheduling and planning, supervisors may request medical information relative to the duration of an absence, future absences, or an employee's future ability to perform the full duties of a position or duty assignment. Such information may be given to a supervisor by an employee or health care provider without divulging restricted medical information.

Dear Mr. Lingberg:

On December 7, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these grievances involves the review of medical certificates submitted by employees who returned to duty following extended absences due to illness.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is at dispute between the parties.

We agreed to remand these cases to the parties at Step 3 for application of a previous Step 4 settlement, Case No. H1C-4T-C 24220, which stated:

"We mutually agreed to full settlement of this issue as follows:

1. To avoid undue delay in returning an employee to duty, the on-duty medical officer, contract physician, or nurse should review and make a decision based upon the presented medical information the same day it is submitted.

Normally the employees will be returned to work on his/her next workday provided adequate medical documentation is submitted within sufficient time for review.

2. The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next workday shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedures on a case-by-case basis."

Accordingly, as agreed, these cases are remanded to Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary by the parties at that level.

I recently met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above-captioned grievances which are currently scheduled for national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 515, concerning the Family and Medical Leave, and Section 865, Return to Duty after Medical Absences are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree the Contract Interpretation Manual will be updated to clarify current ELM 515 language.

The current ELM 865 language does not negate management's obligation under the MOU: Return to Duty when returning an employee to duty after an absence for medical reasons.

The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

Washington, DC - Headquarters

Recently, you met with Postal Service representatives to discuss the above-captioned grievance, currently pending national level arbitration.

This grievance concerns the effect of the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) concerning "Paid Leave and LWOP" found on page 312 of the 1998 National Agreement.

The parties hereby reaffirm the attached Memorandum of Understanding dated November 13, 1991, which serves as the parties' further agreement on the use of paid leave and LWOP.

We further agree that:

1. As specified in ELM 513.61, if sick leave is approved, but the employee does not have sufficient sick leave to cover the absence, the difference is charged to annual leave or to LWOP at the employee's option.

2. Employees may use LWOP in lieu of sick or annual leave when an employee requests and is entitled to time off under ELM 515, Absences for Family Care or Serious Health Problem of Employee (policies to comply with the Family and Medical Leave Act).

3. In accordance with Article 10, Section 6, when an employee's absence is approved in accordance with normal leave approval procedures, the employee may utilize annual and sick leave in conjunction with leave without pay. As we have previously agreed, this would include an employee who wishes to continue eligibility for health and life insurance benefits, and/or those protections for which the employee may be eligible under Article 6 of the National Agreement.

With the above understandings, which shall apply to currently pending timely grievances and those filed in the future, we agreed to settle this grievance. Please sign below as acknowledgment of your agreement to resolve this grievance, removing it from the pending national arbitration listing.

c. LWOP is different from AWOL (absent without leave), which is a nonpay status due to a determination that no kind of leave can be granted either because (1) the employee did not obtain advance authorization or (2) the employee's request for leave was denied.

514.2 Policy

514.21 Restriction

LWOP in excess of 2 years is not approved unless specifically provided for in postal policy or regulations.

514.22 Administrative Discretion

Each request for LWOP is examined closely, and a decision is made based on the needs of the employee, the needs of the Postal Service, and the cost to the Postal Service. The granting of LWOP is a matter of administrative discretion and is not granted on the employee's demand except as provided in collective bargaining agreements or as follows:

a. A disabled veteran is entitled to LWOP, if necessary, for medical treatment.

b. A Reservist or a National Guardsman is entitled to LWOP, if necessary, to perform military training duties under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act of 1994 (USERRA), Public Law 103-353.

c. An employee who requests and is entitled to time off under 515, Absence for Family Care or Serious Health Condition of Employee, must be allowed up to a total of 12 workweeks of absence within a Postal Service leave year for one or more of the reasons listed in 515.41(a) through 515.41(e), and up to 26 workweeks of leave during a single 12-month period to care for covered service members with a serious injury or illness.

514.23 Condition

In granting approval for extended LWOP, the granting official should have reasonable expectation that the employee will return at the end of the approved period.

514.24 Leave Credit Adjustment

Employees who are on LWOP for a period, or periods, totaling 80 hours (normal number of workhours in 1 pay period) during a leave year have their leave credits reduced by the amount of leave earned in 1 pay period.

Exception: Employees who (1) are in leave category 6, (2) are not on LWOP for the entire year, and (3) whose accumulated LWOP reaches 80 hours in the last pay period in a leave year have their leave balance reduced by only 6 hours, even if they earn 10 hours during that pay period (see 512.3). Also, no adjustment is made to the leave computation date for periods of LWOP taken for active military service or while absent due to an illness or injury approved by OWCP.

517.22 Ineligible Employees

Permitted to be absent, but not eligible for paid military leave, are noncareer employees such as the following:

a. Casual employees.

b. Contract workers.

c. Noncareer rural carriers.

d. Temporary employees.

e. Transitional employees.

517.31 Approval

The employee is to complete a PS Form 3971 before the period of absence. Sufficient notice is required for making necessary arrangements for replacements. If the employee does not learn of the need for the absence until later, notice is to be given as soon possible. The official responsible for approving the attendance record also approves military leave.

517.32 Use of Mixed Leave

Normally the first days of a longer period of military duty are charged to military leave. If circumstances warrant it, any other scheduled workdays during the longer active duty period may be designated as military leave instead of the days at the beginning of the military duty.

517.33 Use of Leave Intermittently

Military leave may be taken intermittently.

517.34 Return From Duty

For paid military leave approval, upon return from military duty to the Postal Service, the employee furnishes a copy of military orders or other documentation properly endorsed by appropriate military authority to show the duty was actually performed.

517.4 Military Leave Allowances

517.41 General Allowance

Eligible full-time and part-time employees receive credit for paid military leave as follows:

a. Full-time employees other than D.C. National Guard — 15 calendar days (120 hours) each fiscal year.

b. Part-time employees other than D.C. National Guard — 1 hour of military leave for each 26 hours in pay status (including military LWOP) in the preceding fiscal year provided:

(1) Employee was in pay status a minimum of 1,040 hours in the preceding fiscal year.

Note: A part-time employee's time on military LWOP in one fiscal year counts toward meeting the 1,040 hours' requirement for the next fiscal year.

(2) Employee's pay for military leave does not exceed 80 hours.

c. D.C. National Guard — all days (no limit) of parade or encampment duty ordered under Title 49, District of Columbia Code.

An employee may carry over up to 1 year's allotted but unused (not to exceed 15 days) military leave from one fiscal year to the next.

517.42 Previous Service

Employees transferring to the Postal Service from other government agencies are entitled to credit for paid military leave purposes for government service performed prior to appointment as part-time employees. Any other creditable federal civilian service rendered during the prior fiscal year is also used in computing the required 1,040 hours. Creditable service is determined by requesting a transcript from the other agency detailing the number of hours in which the employee was in pay status.

517.43 Law Enforcement Allowance

517.431 State or Jurisdiction Duty

Eligible full-time and part-time employees who are members of the National Guard are granted additional paid military leave over and above the general allowance if they are ordered by appropriate authority to provide military aid to enforce the law of their contracted state or their chartered jurisdiction (e.g., the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, or a territory of the United States). See approval procedures in 517.3. The following provisions apply:

a. Evaluation of Circumstances.

(1) Qualifying Circumstances. Military aid is the kind of work characteristic of, or typically performed by, soldiers. Military aid to enforce the law means engagement in the suppression of riots, violent assembly, widespread looting, and civil disorder where the guardsman is ordered to perform state military duty under a state law that specifically confers law enforcement powers on the guardsman or under the authority of an executive order of the governor (or the highest authority of the jurisdiction) pursuant to state law that specifically confers on the governor the authority to confer law enforcement powers on activated guardsmen. Orders to provide assistance or support to law enforcement agencies do not constitute an order conferring law enforcement powers. The mere fact that national guardsmen in uniform perform a given function does not necessarily transform that function into military aid. The duty performed must be evaluated. Such additional military leave is granted only when an employee's military orders (or other official documentation from the employee's guard unit) specify that he or she was engaged in one or more of the activities and under the authority referenced above for the particular periods of military duty.

(2) Nonqualifying Circumstances. Additional military leave is not granted when military orders do not specify one or more of the duties and statutory requirements referenced in 517.431a1 above. For example, it is not granted when an employee's military orders simply indicate the employee was ordered to duty determines whether (but for the active duty) the employee fulfills the pay status requirement.

517.52 Minimum Units

Military leave may be taken in one-hundredths of an hour, except for regular rural carriers (designation 71) or substitute rural carriers (designation 72), who must take military leave in minimum units of 8 hours.

517.53 Continuance of Night Differential Pay

Employees regularly assigned in whole or in part to a night tour of duty are entitled to night differential pay when absent on military leave.

517.54 Absence Beyond the General Military Leave Allowance

517.541 Training Periods

Any absence beyond the general military leave allowance is charged to annual leave or LWOP regardless of the number of training periods in the fiscal year.

517.542 Choice of Annual Leave, Sick Leave, or LWOP

Eligible employees who volunteer or are ordered for a period of military training or for a period of active military duty beyond the general military leave allowance may use annual leave or LWOP, at their option. Sick leave can be used only if the employee is hospitalized, confined to quarters as directed by competent military medical authorities, or on convalescent leave due to military service.

517.61 Employee Alternatives

An employee who has official duty orders or official notices signed by appropriate military authority for weekly, biweekly, or monthly training meetings and who has a conflict with scheduled work requirements may choose one of four ways of meeting the military obligation:

a. Use military leave not in excess of the general military leave allowance.

b. Use annual leave.

c. Use LWOP.

d. Arrange a mutually agreeable trade of workdays and days off with another employee who is qualified to replace the absent employee. Such trades must be cleared with the responsible supervisor and must be in accordance with the terms of collective bargaining agreements.

517.62 Administrative Policy

517.621 Reassignments

The following provisions concern reassignments:

a. Arbitrary reassignments of other employees are not made to permit absences of employees for military duty. An employee having military drills or military training responsibility should attempt to bid on a work assignment (when the opportunity presents itself) that will not conflict with military duties.

517.22 Ineligible Employees

Permitted to be absent, but not eligible for paid military leave, are noncareer employees such as the following:

a. Casual employees.

b. Contract workers.

c. Noncareer rural carriers.

d. Temporary employees.

e. Transitional employees.

I. BACKGROUND

This grievance was presented on or about April 5, 1995 on behalf of Mr. Doug Wright, a Mail Handler employed at the Kalamazoo, Michigan Postal Facility of the United States Postal Service (hereafter referred to as the "Postal Service" or sometimes as the "USPS" or "Management"). The grievance was presented by Local 307 of the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (hereafter referred to as the "Union"). Subsequent to a denial of the grievance at Step One of the grievance procedure, the Union appealed it to Step Two on April 7, 1995. The Union set forth its reason for the appeal on the Standard Grievance Form as follows:

> On above date (3/24/95) the grievant received his paycheck and was not paid for his night differential or Sunday premium. The grievant was placed on administrative leave on 3/6/95, but has yet to be given disciplinary action. The grievant is losing 70 hours of night differential and 32 hours of Sunday premium per pay period. This is a significant loss of pay."

As a result, it was alleged that the Postal Service violated Articles 5 & 16 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement[1] and Section 519.1 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual ("ELM"). The Union requests, as a remedy, that the Postal Service cease and desist this violation as well as "pay and make whole at appropriate rates for night differential and Sunday premium from 3/6/95 until grievant's return to work." Thereafter, the parties met and discussed the Step Two Appeal on April 18, 1995. In it's response denying the grievance, the Postal Service representative set forth its position thusly:

> The grievant was placed on administrative leave on 3/6/96(sic) for his involvement in a possible altercation. The placement in Administrative Leave is continuing due to an ongoing investigation into the 3/6/95 incident.

[1] Agreement between National Postal Mailhandlers Union and United States Postal Service, November 20, 1990 – November 20, 1993, as supplemented by the '93 extension, (Hereafter referred to as "The Agreement.")

The grievant is not entitled to the night differential Sunday premium pay as outlined in Section 241 and 242 of the F-21, Time and Attendance handbook. Management is in compliance with the F-21 wherein it states:

The regulations pertaining to the "Definition of Premium Hours,"(241.1) as well as the "Definition of Sunday Premium" (242.1) were then set forth. The Union submitted Additions and Corrections to the Step Two denial on April 24, 1995 and noted, among other things in its response, that "As of 4/21/95, the MDO had not even spoken to the grievant personally to hear his testimony or to let him explain his side of the story. Management is causing the grievant financial loss by not having the investigation in a timely manner." Thereafter, the grievance was appealed to Step Three by the Union on April 26, 1995 using the same rationale, and, on the same basis as it did at Step Two. The grievance was next discussed at Step Three by the parties and the Postal Service denied the grievance for the reason that the grievant "is only entitled to night differential and Sunday premium for work hours." The Step Three decision goes on to state that inasmuch as the grievant "was in a non-duty status, he is not entitled to the premium hours requested." Thereafter, the Union initially appealed the matter to regular regional arbitration, but subsequently, by letter dated June 27, 1996, notified the Postal Service that it was withdrawing the grievance from regional arbitration and referred it to Step Four of the grievance procedure. The Union defined the nature of the interpretive issue as "should an employee who is on Administrative Leave and in a non-duty status be entitled to night differential and Sunday premium pay?" Thereafter, the parties met and discussed the grievance at the Fourth Step of their grievance procedure and the Postal Service representative agreed to remand the case to Step Three "for further processing or to be scheduled for arbitration, as appropriate." However, by letter dated October 15, 1998, the Union representative advised the Postal Service of a national settlement that required the Postal Service to pay Sunday premium to employees placed on administrative leave. A Fourth Step discussion was held on October 22, 1998, and the Postal Service on November 5, 1998 denied the request relative to night differential while on administrative leave. This Step Four denial, however, did not address the payment of Sunday premium. The case was then appealed to National level arbitration pursuant to the provisions of 15.2 "Step Four" of the parties' Agreement on November 24, 1998. Subsequently, the undersigned arbitrator was appointed to hear and decide the matter. Accordingly, a hearing was held on May 31, June 9, and July 6, 2000 in Washington, DC. On the initial hearing day, the American Postal Workers Union (APWU) requested and was granted permission to intervene in this matter. The parties, including the APWU, were afforded full opportunity to present evidence, both oral and written, to cross-examine the witnesses who were sworn, and to argue their respective positions. Following the July 6, 2000 hearing, the parties elected to file post-hearing briefs. A stenographic transcript of the hearings was taken and provided to the arbitrator. Thereafter, briefs were received from the parties and the APWU, on or before October 20, 2000, at which time the record was deemed closed.

II. POSTION OF THE PARTIES

A. Postal Service

The Postal Service contends that employees are not entitled to night shift differential while on administrative leave. They refer to the Agreement and the ELM noting that they contain specific provisions defining entitlement to night shift differential. They allude to Section 8.7.A of the Agreement and point out that it states, "between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. employees shall be paid additional compensation at the rate of ten percent (10%) of the base hourly straight time-rate for time worked." They accentuate the words "time worked" in this clause and also allude to Section 434.21 of the ELM noting that it states, "night differential is a premium which is paid to eligible employees for all work and paid training or travel time performed between 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m.," emphasizing the words, "all work" and "performed." They stress that this language has, except for minor modifications, remained unchanged since the issuance of the ELM in 1978 as well as predating the first ELM. Furthermore, any exceptions to the rule that night shift differential is to be paid for work performed are expressly contained in Chapter 430 of the ELM. These include five situations, i.e. court leave, military leave, continuation of pay ("COP") status, as well as the rescheduling of an employee to day work as a result of an on-the-job duty or compensable training where employees who are regularly scheduled to the night shift will receive "an equivalent amount of night time differential" even though they do not work. However, administrative leave is not mentioned in any of the provisions as an exception to the general policy of having to perform work during the night shift in order to be entitled to night shift differential.

Secondly, the Postal Service contends that the Payroll Department practice over the years supports the Postal Service's decision. The parties' Time and Attendance Manuals state what night differential is and when it is to be paid and this includes the words, "all work performed between 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m." The Postal Service referred to regional arbitration awards in support of its position and point out that regional arbitrators "have consistently recognized that employees are not entitled to night shift differential while on administrative leave."

The Postal Service alleges that the Union arguments are without merit and its interpretation of the ELM in Section 519.1 "is mistaken." They claim that the reference at Section 519.1, as interpreted by the Union regarding "without loss of pay," is erroneous inasmuch as the Postal Service argues that "pay" refers to the employee's daily or hourly basic rate of pay and not to any additional premiums that an employee might have otherwise earned while working. Notably, they point out that the night shift differential is additional compensation that is paid at a percentage of an employee's base hourly straight time rate, referring to 8.7.A of the Agreement. The Postal Service emphasizes that reference to base pay is consistent to the compensation afforded employees who are on other types of leave, such as annual or sick leave, inasmuch as they do not receive night differential while on sick leave, but, rather, receive their basic rate of pay. They allude to a decision by a regional arbitrator who rejected the Union's interpretation of "without loss of pay with respect to night differential."[2] That arbitrator concluded that night differential is not a part of the employee's regular pay and that Section 519.1 of the ELM guarantees an employee's regular pay and not its total compensation. The Postal Service furthermore contends that the pre-settlement agreement in Case No. HIM-4K-C25503 in 1985 in which the Postal Service agreed to give Sunday premium pay to a group of employees who had been on administrative leave is misplaced. They contend that said settlement was only for that case inasmuch as the agreement was a pre-arbitration settlement and provided in part that it was "in full settlement of this case." Additionally, their argument is that this pre-arbitration settlement was only to resolve the individual grievance at issue, referring to the testimony of the Senior Labor Relations official, Mr. Frank Dyer, who drafted and executed the agreement for the Postal Service. They point out that the Union failed to cite this settlement in a subsequent Step Four grievance that raised the identical issue that the Union now claims the 1985 pre-arbitration settlement controls. They contend that by not so raising it would suggest that the Union itself did not believe the 1985 pre-arbitration settlement agreement provided guidance in interpreting the ELM. The Postal Service also argues that the 1985 settlement is distinguishable from the instant case on the basis of the facts inasmuch as it involved an act of God since employees were forced to leave their facility in the middle of their work shift. However, in this case, the grievant was placed on leave while an investigation was conducted into his alleged misconduct. The Postal Service concludes that the grievance should be denied inasmuch as the record evidence strongly supports the conclusion that neither the ELM in Section 519.1 or any other section of the ELM provides a basis for providing night shift differential to employees on administrative leave.

B. Union

The Union emphasizes that night shift differential must be paid during the periods of administrative leave inasmuch as such leave is defined in Section 519.1 as "absence from duty" authorized by appropriate Postal officials without annual or sick leave and without loss of pay. Thus, the Union argues that the ELM plainly protects employees from suffering a loss of pay while in such administrative leave and this would include night differntial pay if, in the event the employee would have been entitled to such pay had he or she continued to work on his or her regularly scheduled tour. The ELM at Section 511.1 specifically requires that the Postal Service's leave policy be applied in a fair and equitable manner. They point out that if there exists a dispute involving any interpretive ambiguity in the language of the ELM then it must be resolved in an equitable manner such as National Arbitrator, Shayam Das concluded in a decision of his.[3] The employee involved in the instant case lost approximately $150.00 per pay period and this had a potentially punitive dimension because of such loss of pay. The Union notes that employees on military leave, court leave, as well as others, are entitled to night differential under the ELM at Section 434.222. However, by denying employees on administrative leave the night differential, it gives rise to inherent inequities. The Union alluded to the 1985 settlement of a grievance in which the employees on administrative leave were given Sunday premium and, therefore, contends that this clearly demonstrates the parties' mutual understanding that the phrase "without loss of pay" requires the Postal Service to include Sunday premium as part of administrative leave. Moreover, they argue that the settlement of such a grievance at the National level, without any disclaimer of precedential effect, would constitute important evidence of the parties' mutual interpretation of their Agreement. They allude to a decision by National Arbitrator Collins for this contention.[4] The Union argues that this settlement does not contain any disclaimer or any indication that it was intended to be non-precedential and cites examples of Step Four agreements indicating how other National settlements state, in explicit terms, when they are intended not to be precedential. The Union also alluded to "quality of life" "quality of work life" coordinators who may be rescheduled to a different tour to serve in this position and note that a 1985 National level agreement provided them with night shift differential and/or Sunday pay if they would otherwise be entitled to it. Therefore, the parties' mutual understanding is that night differential is necessary to ensure that administrative leave is truly leave "without loss of pay."

The Union contends that the Postal Service's position simply does not withstand scrutiny with regard to their argument that night differential should be paid only for time worked or work performed except in certain circumstances that are enumerated in the ELM. They counter that night differential gets paid in a variety of circumstances where an employee is not on duty, including various circumstances that are not included in its own list of "exceptional circumstances." Section 434.222 which lists the circumstances does not, however, treat this list of exceptions as exclusive, nor does it specifically preclude or state that night differentials should not be paid during an administrative leave. They reason that all of the circumstances share a fundamental similarity, i.e. that "the absence from work is based on the decision by a Postal Service official or is otherwise due to some circumstance outside the employee's own control." Furthermore the Union notes that there are times that night differential is paid to employees in circumstances not specifically described in the ELM such as pay for "guaranteed time," as well as a component of back pay, pursuant to the ELM at Section 436.11. As to the Postal Service's contention of a practice, they note that the practice in the Federal government, both before and after passage of the Postal Reorganization Act is contrary to the Postal Service's position in this case. Thus, the Union concludes that the Postal Service never has limited the payment of night differential to the handful of circumstances specifically enumerated in the ELM at Section 434.222 or in the companion provisions of the F-21 Time and Attendance handbook. They argue that even if the arbitrator were to accept this management proposition, the administrative leave provision found in the ELM at Section 519.1 dictates such leave is without loss of pay and should be read to require payment of night differential while on administrative leave. The Postal Service easily could have drafted the ELM by including the terms leave without loss of base or basic pay rather than "without loss of pay." Thus, using the general term "pay" it can and should be read to include night differential.

As a final argument, the Union points out that for the first time during the arbitration hearing the Postal Service took the position that because it denied a grievance in 1986 on this issue at Step Four and the Union did not appeal it to arbitration that the Union then agreed to this decision. They contend this argument is totally without merit and allude to a decision by National Arbitrator Shayam Das, as well as Benjamin Aaron, for the proposition that a party in National arbitration is barred from introducing new arguments that are fundamentally different from its position in prior steps of the grievance procedure.[5] This was never raised in the earlier stage of the grievance process and, therefore, the Postal Service is barred from relying on such an argument at this late stage of the proceedings. However, more importantly, this Step Four decision does not preclude the Union from challenging management's position in this arbitration. The failure to appeal a grievance is not, per se, acquiescence to the disposition of the issue on the basis of management's final answer so as to bar the issue from arbitration in a subsequent case. Elkouri & Elkouri, How Arbitration Works, p. 293. (5th. Ed. 1997). Finally, they argue that the Postal Service cannot demonstrate that the Union acquiesced in the Postal Service's position, thus concluding that there was a binding past practice. Here the practice has not been clear and consistent in accordance with the rules for constituting such a binding past practice, nor has it been long-standing and repeated. The Union concludes that the employee who is placed on administrative leave is entitled to receive a night differential pay that he or she would otherwise have received had he remained on duty and, therefore, the grievance filed by the Union should be sustained.

C. Intervenor – American Postal Workers Union (APWU)

The APWU supports the Union's position in this matter. The APWU, as Intervenor, points out that it wishes to make clear the point that this case does not concern Article 16 or general arbitrable make-whole remedies with regard to the successful challenges to discipline and/or administrative leave. In those cases, the parties do not dispute that a make whole remedy includes night differential pay, as well as other payments and premiums including, but not limited, to Sunday premium pay and overtime. They assert, for clarification purposes, that the issue before the arbitrator is what the grievant should have been paid while on administrative leave irrespective of the Postal Service's justification or lack thereof for placing the grievant on administrative leave initially. To this extent they argue that because the standard that employees do not suffer a loss of pay while on administrative leave, as well as the Postal Service's past grievance to pay differentials and premiums to employees on administrative leave, in addition to fairness and equity to employees who are kept on administrative leave for long periods of time and/or indefinitely, that this contemplates a requirement that the Postal Service pay night differential while an employee is on administrative leave. They ask that the Union's grievance be sustained by the arbitrator and that the Postal Service be directed to pay night differential to employees on administrative leave.

VI. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

Article 8 Hours of Work

Section 8.7 Night Shift Differential

A. For time worked between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. employees shall be paid additional compensation at the rate of ten percent (10%) of the base hourly straight time rate.

Article 19 Handbooks and Manuals

Section 19.1

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours of working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21 Timekeeper's Instructions.

Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM)

430 Basic and Special Pay Provisions

432.21 Basic Rate

The basic rate is the amount of annual, daily, or hourly salary provided by the applicable salary schedule for an employee's assigned position – excluding TCOLA, overtime, out-of-schedule overtime, Sunday premium, holiday-worked pay, and night differential. Basic daily and hourly rates are determined by dividing the basic annual rate (BAR) as shown in the table below. See also 432.24.

434.21 Policy

Night differential is a premium which is paid to eligible employees for all work and paid training or travel performed between 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. The following applies:

a. Night differential is paid in addition to any other premiums earned by the employee (see 432.55).

b. In no case can the total night differential hours exceed the total hours for the tour.

c. Night differential does not apply if time between 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m. is due only to late clocking out or early clocking in (see 432.464).

519 ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE

519.1 Definition

Administrative leave is the absence from duty authorized by appropriate postal officials without charge to annual or sick leave and without loss of pay.

VI. OPINION

The issue to be decided in this matter is whether an employee placed on administrative leave is entitled to receive night differential that the employee would have otherwise received had he(she) been on duty. The facts in this grievance are essentially not in dispute. The grievant, a full time regular mail handler employed at the Kalamazoo, Michigan Processing and Distribution Center was placed on administrative leave pending an investigation concerning alleged misconduct on his part. Upon receiving his first paycheck he noticed that he had not received night shift differential or Sunday premium pay, but rather, he received his basic hourly rate of pay. As a result, a grievance was presented on his behalf by the Union on the basis that the Postal Service violated the Agreement because the grievant was not being paid the night shift differential and Sunday premium. Thereafter, the question of night differential payment as contested in the instant grievance was ultimately appealed by the Union to National Arbitration. (See part I supra.) Both parties, as well as the APWU, submitted detailed arguments in their written briefs, arguing that the Agreement, including the ELM provisions, support their respective positions. The Union and the intervening party, the APWU, allege that an employee placed on administrative leave, in accordance with Section 519 of the ELM is entitled to this leave without loss of pay; therefore, inasmuch as the grievant would have been on duty during the hours included as night differential, he should have received this entitlement. On the other hand, the USPS contends that an employee must work in order to receive night shift differential unless it is otherwise specifically excepted in the ELM. They point out that the exceptions, as set forth in the ELM, do not include night differential payment while on administrative leave. These positions constitute the basic foundation of the multiple and detailed arguments presented.

At the outset it is a generally accepted principle that the raison d'etre for including "shift differential pay" as part of a collective bargaining agreement is predicated on the basis of the particular hours of the shift (tour). Generally speaking, at least in the American labor climate and culture, most employees prefer a "day shift and/or tour" as their hours of work. However, many employers, including the Postal Service can not efficiently or effectively function solely during these "daylight" hours, which normally encompass a shift such as 8:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m., 7 to 3, 9 to 5 or 6:00 a.m. to 2:00 p.m. Many industries, including service industries and some governmental agencies find it necessary to operate 24 hours a day. Thus, because hours of work after 6:00 p.m. are generally less desirable then the aforementioned "daylight hours", employers have often times agreed to pay differentials and/or additional compensation for those employees working these night shift hours. The Postal Service is no exception and, its Policy/Rules, as set forth in the ELM, provides that "night differential is a premium which is paid to eligible employees for all work and paid training or travel time performed between 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m." Thus, the USPS reference for this additional compensation includes a twelve-hour window of time, which arguably generally entails the hours least desired by employees. However, be that as it may, and as the Union points out, employees often times bid into jobs that include scheduled shifts encompassing these scheduled hours because of the additional pay.

Also, this arbitrator is cognizant of the fact that some employees desire these "night" hours for personal and/or familial reasons.

In addressing the issue herein, suffice it to say that arbitrators are held to the direction and guidance of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Thus, the primary authority for the Postal Service's position stems from Article 8.7, which provides that ten percent (10%) of the base hourly straight time rate shall be paid "For time worked between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 6:00 a.m." Additionally, they allude to the ELM, which is incorporated into the agreement via Article 19, at Section 434.2 which, in defining night differential, states that it is to be paid for all work performed during the designated hours. Despite this, however, there are instances that are enumerated at Section 430 of the ELM that include Court Leave, Military Leave, Continuation of Pay (COP) status and the rescheduling of an employee to day work as a result of an on the job injury or compensable training, in which night differential is paid to employees. It is, however, significant that the aforesaid specifically enumerated situations are such that they are not within the control of supervision/management. It is likewise notable that payment of night differential for administrative leave, although not listed, is likewise not excluded. The ELM provides for certain "Events and Procedures for Granting Administrative Leave" by postal officials. These are set forth at Section 519 of the ELM and include Acts of God, Civil Disorder, State and Local Civil Defense Programs, Voting or Registering to Vote, Blood Donations, Funeral Services relative to veterans or relatives who died in a combat zone, Postmaster Organizations, Physical Exams for Entry Into the Armed Forces, Relocation Leave and First Aid Examination and Treatment for On the Job Injury or Illness. If any of these scenarios occur and, for example, a Postmaster authorizes administrative leave for an "Act of God" then the ELM requires that this be "without charge to annual or sick leave and without loss of pay." Therefore, because an employee who may fall into one of the above categories or, who may be placed on administrative leave for another reason, such as in the instant case, and has not actually performed work, the question/issue surfaces as to whether he should be paid the rate of pay that he or she would normally receive had the employee been on duty. It is my opinion that the intent of Section 519 of the ELM is clear in this regard, i.e., that an employee should be paid whatever the rate of pay he would have otherwise been paid had the employee not been placed on administrative leave. To read anything other than this into this clause so as to preclude an employee the rate of pay he would normally be paid on his regular tour of duty would mean that the clear and concise language of this clause would be disregarded. It would, in effect, also mean that when an employee is placed on administrative leave and in the event his tour of duty falls or fell within the designated night differential window of hours, then he would be on administrative leave with loss of pay.

Section 519.1 does not state that the employee shall be paid without loss of his base and/or regular pay, nor does it state without loss of his premium pay, but rather simply "without loss of pay." Thus, whatever his "pay" would have otherwise been had he been on duty must be considered his "pay" for purposes of this provision. It is interesting to note that a person who is scheduled for a tour of duty during night differential hours would most likely not be taking/afforded administrative leave within such hours in a number of those instances falling within the umbrella of reasons for authorizing such leave. These would include, for example, leave for registering to vote, attending a veteran's funeral or to donate blood, situations which normally occur or take place prior to 6:00 p.m. or after 6:00 a.m. In the instant case, the Postmaster took the initiative to place the grievant on administrative leave pending an investigation of his misconduct. Had the Postmaster instead issued disciplinary action at the outset and, if this action would have been ultimately overturned and the employee ordered to be made whole, it is undisputed that the employee would have received his night shift differential. However, by placing the employee on administrative leave would, if the Postal Service's position is to be accepted, be a method by which the investigation could be prolonged prior to the issuing of discipline, thereby precluding the payment of night shift differential during the prolonged investigation in the event the discipline was ultimately overturned.

The Postal Service's argument that the use of the phrase "for all work" and the word, "performed" strengthens their position, is well intentioned but misplaced. It is simply good grammatical structural phrasing of the sentence and/or writing of a basic contract clause to define a differential payment between certain hours of the day as being "for all work performed," rather than stating, "for all work". Secondly, the words could be included to preclude, in addition to further clarification set forth in the ELM, night differential payment for work performed that may be a part of an employee's daily tour but that does not fall within the designated hours. For example, an employee could conceivably work only a portion of his tour after 6:00 p.m. Thus, the parties may have intended by this choice of words that this employee would receive the night differential only for those hours worked after 6:00 p.m. A more compelling reason why this argument is misplaced, however, is as heretofore noted, that the administrative leave provisions mandate that an employee placed on such leave be placed there without loss of pay. The clear language, as well as equitable interpretation of this clause is that the employee must be paid the amount of pay that he otherwise would have received had he been on his regular scheduled tour of duty.

Finally, the Postal Service has argued that it has implemented the Administration Leave provision in this fashion for a number of years and it therefore constitutes a binding past practice and thus is illustrative of the intent of the parties. They point to a 1986 grievance in which they denied a grievance on this same issue at Step Four and emphasize that the Union did not appeal it further. However, in reviewing the grievance file, this type of argument was never included and/or raised in the Postal Service's arguments during the Steps of the grievance procedure prior to arbitration. A new argument presented for the initial time at this stage of the proceedings must be precluded. Such may perhaps appear harsh and/or unconventional, but nevertheless it is a standard evidentiary rule that has been upheld via National Postal Arbitration Awards and in numerous regional postal arbitration decisions. At any rate, this showing of an instance of denial of a night differential payment while on administrative leave is not, per se, albeit rendered at Step Four, sufficient to establish what is generally considered necessary to qualify as a binding past practice. The latter entails a consistent administration of a matter or a work method that can be shown to have been well known by both parties, and accepted by both parties for a long period of time. Such was not evidenced here.

AWARD

The grievance is granted. The grievant shall be paid night differential for the period he was on administrative leave. Furthermore, in the future, employees placed on administrative leave shall be paid night differential if they would have otherwise been eligible/entitled to such differential had they not been placed on administrative leave.

518.6 Provisions for Postmasters

For all full-time postmasters except those in EAS A–E offices, if a holiday falls on a Saturday that is a nonscheduled workday, the preceding Friday is designated as the postmaster's holiday. When necessary, additional workhour allowances are authorized for those post offices without a senior supervisor to provide relief coverage during the postmaster's absence on holiday leave (see 434.412).

519.1 Definition

Administrative leave is absence from duty authorized by appropriate postal officials without charge to annual or sick leave and without loss of pay.

519.2 Special Conditions

519.21 Acts of God

519.211 General

Acts of God involve community disasters such as fire, flood, or storms. The disaster situation must be general rather than personal in scope and impact. It must prevent groups of employees from working or reporting to work.

519.212 Authorizing Administrative Leave for Acts of God

The following provisions concern administrative leave for acts of God:

a. Postmasters and other installation heads have authority to approve administrative leave for up to 1 day.

b. District managers and Postal Career Executive Service (PCES) plant managers may authorize administrative leave beyond 1 day, but not to exceed a total of 3 days, for their installation and those reporting to it.

c. District managers and senior or lead plant managers may approve administrative leave for periods up to and in excess of 3 days for their installation and those reporting to it.

519.213 Determining the Cause of Absence

Postmasters and other appropriate postal officials determine whether absences from duty allegedly due to "acts of God" were, in fact, due to such cause or whether the employee or employees in question could, with reasonable diligence, have reported for duty.

519.214 Early Dismissal Due to Acts of God

When employees are dismissed from duty before the normal completion of their duty due to an act of God, the following applies:

a. Full-time employees are entitled to credit for hours worked plus enough administrative leave to complete their tour of duty. This combination of work and leave is not to exceed 8 hours in any one day.

b. Part-time regular employees are entitled to credit for hours worked plus enough administrative leave to complete their scheduled hours of duty. This combination of work and leave is not to exceed 8 hours in any one day.

518.6 Provisions for Postmasters

For all full-time postmasters except those in EAS A–E offices, if a holiday falls on a Saturday that is a nonscheduled workday, the preceding Friday is designated as the postmaster's holiday. When necessary, additional workhour allowances are authorized for those post offices without a senior supervisor to provide relief coverage during the postmaster's absence on holiday leave (see 434.412).

a. Full-time employees are entitled to credit for hours worked plus enough administrative leave to complete their tour of duty. This combination of work and leave is not to exceed 8 hours in any one day.

b. Part-time regular employees are entitled to credit for hours worked plus enough administrative leave to complete their scheduled hours of duty. This combination of work and leave is not to exceed 8 hours in any one day.

c. Part-time flexible employees are entitled to credit for hours worked plus enough administrative leave to complete their scheduled tour. The combination of straight time worked and administrative leave may not exceed 8 hours in a service day. If there is a question as to the scheduled workhours, the part-time flexible employee is entitled to the greater of the following:

(1) The number of hours the part-time flexible worked on the same service day in the previous service week.

(2) The number of hours the part-time flexible was scheduled to work.

(3) The guaranteed hours as provided in the applicable national agreement.

519.215 Employees Prevented From Reporting

Employees scheduled to report who are prevented from reporting or, who after reporting, are prevented from working by an act of God may be excused as follows:

a. Full-time and part-time regular employees receive administrative leave to cover their scheduled tour of duty not to exceed 8 hours.

b. Part-time flexible employees receive administrative leave, subject to the 8-hour limitation, for their scheduled workhours, as provided in 519.214c.

519.216 Employees on Annual Leave, Sick Leave, or LWOP

Employees on annual leave, sick leave, or LWOP remain in such status. They are not entitled to administrative leave.

519.217 Substitute Rural Carriers and Rural Carrier Associates

Substitute rural carriers and RCAs in a leave-earning status are treated the same as rural carriers:

a. If they are scheduled for duty and are unable to report to the postal installation, administrative leave is granted for the full day that the employees are scheduled to serve their routes. No equipment maintenance allowance is paid.

b. If employees are scheduled for duty and report to the postal installation but are unable to serve all or part of their routes through no fault of their own, they may be granted administrative leave for the remainder of the normal tour of duty for that day. Payment for equipment maintenance allowance is made, if appropriate, because employees are considered to be in duty status.

519.22 Civil Disorders

519.221 Decision to Curtail or Terminate Postal Operations

During times of civil disorders in communities, the postmaster or installation head determines whether conditions are such that postal operations are curtailed or terminated, taking into account the needs of the service, local conditions, and the welfare of postal employees.

515.64 Temporary Change in Duty Assignment

If an employee requests intermittent leave or a reduced work schedule that is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment, the Postal Service may assign the employee, with equivalent pay and benefits, temporarily to the duties of another position consistent with applicable collective bargaining agreements and regulations if such an assignment better accommodates the recurring periods of absence.

515.65 Fair Labor Standards Act Status

An employee exempt from the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) normally may not take leave in less than 1-day increments. However, leave taken for an FMLA-covered reason on an intermittent basis or by temporarily establishing a reduced work schedule can be taken in less than 1-day increments without affecting the employee's FLSA-exempt status.

515.7 Return to Position

Employees whose absence is covered by the FMLA are normally entitled to return to the positions they held when the absence began, or to equivalent positions with equivalent pay, benefits, working conditions, and other terms of employment if they are able to perform the essential functions of the positions. Returning employees are not entitled to any right, benefit, or position to which they would not have been entitled had they not been absent, or to intangible, unmeasurable aspects of the job such as the perceived loss of potential for future promotional opportunities. If an employee was hired for a specific term or only to perform work on a discrete project, then there is no further reinstatement obligation under this section if the employment term or project is over and the employment would not have otherwise continued.

515.8 Benefits

All benefits accrue to employees during an FMLA absence pursuant to the applicable provision of the ELM.

515.9 Family Leave Poster

All postal facilities, including stations and branches, are required to conspicuously display WHD Publication 1420, Employee Rights and Responsibilities Under the Family and Medical Leave Act. It must be posted, and remain posted, on bulletin boards where it can be seen readily by employees and applicants for employment.

516 Absences for Court-Related Service

516.11 Determining Nature of Court-Related Service

Installation heads ascertain the exact nature of court service and determine if the employee (a) is entitled to paid court leave, (b) must take annual leave or LWOP, or (c) is to serve in an official duty status. If a summons to witness service is not specific or clear, the installation head contacts appropriate authorities to determine the party on whose behalf the witness service is to be rendered. When the exact nature of court service is determined, records are annotated accordingly. (See Exhibit 516.11 for a summary of leave to be taken according to nature of service.)

516.12 Explanation of Terms

The following definitions apply for the purposes of 516.

a. Judicial proceedings — any actions, suits, or other proceedings of a judicial nature but not including administrative proceedings such as National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) hearings and hearings conducted in accordance with 650, Nonbargaining Disciplinary, Grievance, and Appeal Procedures.

b. Summons — an official request, invitation, or call, evidenced by an official writing from the court or authority responsible for the conduct of the judicial proceeding.

Court leave is the authorized absence from work status (without loss of or reduction in pay, leave to which otherwise entitled, credit for time or service, or performance rating) of an employee who is summoned in connection with a judicial proceeding, by a court or authority responsible for the conduct of that proceeding, to serve as a juror, as a witness in a nonofficial capacity on behalf of a state or local government, or as a witness in a nonofficial capacity on behalf of a private party in a judicial proceeding to which the Postal Service is a party or the real party in interest. The court or judicial proceeding may be located in the District of Columbia, a state, territory, or possession of Attendance, 232.23). Such request states that the schedule change is for the employee's personal convenience and is agreed to by the local union. Employees who exercise this option receive full compensation for the period of court service including any applicable night differential for the revised schedule.

Employees may retain any court allowance in the amount of $25 or less per day on days court leave is authorized. Employees must remit to their supervisor amounts received in excess of $25 per day. Employees who are eligible to receive such fees are not authorized to waive the fee.

516.42 Court Service Outside of Regular Working Hours or Regular Working Days

Employees who perform court service outside of their basic workweek (on scheduled days off) or outside of their scheduled tour of duty, for which no court leave is granted, may accept and retain the jury or witness fees or payment received incidental to such court service.

516.43 Holidays

Fees received for court service falling on a holiday within an employee's basic workweek may be retained by the employee provided the employee would have been excused from regular postal duties on the holiday.

516.44 Annual Leave or LWOP

Employees who are on annual leave and do not change, or are not eligible to change, the annual leave to court leave or who are on LWOP for court service may retain fees or payment received incidental to such service.

516.45 Recording and Reporting of Fees

Postmasters record and report fees in accordance with instructions in Handbook F-1, 793. Other installation heads forward collections of jury or witness fees to the disbursing officer, Eagan ASC. If court service is to be performed in a state court, the installation head determines the exact amount of compensation received from the state.

An employee is in an official duty status (as distinguished from a leave status and without regard to any entitlement to court leave) if assigned by the Postal Service or summoned by proper authority to:

a. Testify in a judicial proceeding or produce official postal records on behalf of the United States or the District of Columbia. (Such testimony may be in an official or nonofficial capacity.)

b. Testify in a judicial proceeding in an official capacity or produce official postal records on behalf of a party other than the United States or the District of Columbia.

Note: Official duty means that the testimony the witness provides concerns the witness's specialized knowledge of Postal Service facts, procedures, or methods gained by performing his or her job. For example, a postal supervisor would be in an official capacity if called to explain how the Postal Service processes a particular class of mail. A carrier would be in an official capacity if called to confirm a delivery he or she made. On the other hand, a carrier would not be in an official capacity as a witness to a car accident, even if a postal vehicle were involved, because observing car accidents is not part of a carrier's job.

516.52 Compensation

Employees who perform witness service in an official duty status are paid their regular salaries as Postal Service employees, including any applicable night differential and overtime pay. In addition, such employees collect the authorized fees and any allowances for travel and subsistence expenses and retain an amount equal to actual allowable expenses. All amounts collected over and above the amount of the employee's actual allowable expenses are remitted to the postal official in charge (see Handbook F-15, Travel and Relocation, 9-1.2).

516.6 Witness Service in a Nonofficial Capacity on Behalf of a Private Party

An employee who is summoned to testify in a nonofficial capacity (as a private individual) on behalf of a private party is not performing official duty. The employee's absence is charged to court leave if the testimony is given in a judicial proceeding to which the Postal Service is a party or the real party in interest. If the Postal Service is not a party or the real party in interest, the employee's absence is charged to annual leave or LWOP.

517.11 Postal Service Support

The Postal Service supports employee service in the Reserve or National Guard, and no action is permitted to discourage either voluntary or involuntary participation. The Postal Service allows employees to be absent:

a. To participate in drills or meetings scheduled by the National Guard or Reserve Units of the armed forces.

b. To attend usual summer training periods.

c. To perform any other active duty ordered by the National Guard and Reserve Units of the armed forces.

However, eligible employees are entitled to paid military leave only for such duty as and to the extent provided below.

517.12 Definition

Paid military leave is authorized absence from postal duties for hours the employee would have worked during his or her regular schedule, without loss of pay, time, or performance rating, granted to eligible employees who are members of the National Guard or reserve components of the armed forces.

Note: Non-workdays are not charged against the paid military leave allowed.

Dear Mr. Kaczor:

On July 25, 1979, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we concluded that at issue in this grievance is whether Postal Service employees are performing official duty when subpoenaed by the National Labor Relations Board to testify as witnesses in any compacity.

After reviewing the information available, it is our position that by virtue of P.L. 91-563 amended 5 U.S.C. 6322, and now addressed in the Employee and Relations Manual 515.41, such employees are performing official duty during the period with respect to which they are summoned to testify or produce official records on behalf of the United States. In this case the National Labor Relations Board is considered an agency of the United States, thus whether the testimony is favorable to the Postal Service, adverse to the Postal Service, or unrelated to the Postal Service, such testimony is considered as performing official duty.

By copy of this letter, the Postmaster is instructed to make the necessary pay adjustments.

Please sign the attached copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of the final disposition of this case.

OPINION AND AWARD

CASE NO. N8-NE-0088

APPEARANCES:

For the USPS - Wyneva Johnson, Esq.
Sherryl A. Cagnoli, Esq.

For the NALC - Cohen, Weiss & Simon
by: Keith E. Secular, Esq.

BACKGROUND:

On May 14, 1979, the President of the Philadelphia Local of the NALC filed a grievance in which he alleged that the Management of Philadelphia Post Office had changed the method of allowing employees to drop days in order to conform their work schedules to the days on which they were scheduled for jury duty. The Local Union alleged that the provisions of Section 516.334 of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual upon which the Employer relied to authorize such a change in practice had been misinterpreted and misapplied.

The grievance was processed through the requisites steps as provided for in the July 21, 1978-July 20, 1981, collective agreement and came on for arbitration before the Undersigned in Washington, DC. The parties were represented as indicated above. At the conclusion of the hearing, they decided to submit post-hearing briefs. These were received in timely fashion and the arguments contained therein fully considered.

THE ISSUE:

These parties were unable to agree upon a defintion of the matter to be decided in this proceeding. However, from the contentions raised it can be ascertained that the issue could be stated as follows:

> Shall a postal employee who is called to serve on jury duty or make a court appearance, covered by the provisions of Chapter 516 of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual, be permitted to change his or her work schedule to conform to the days on which this employee is required to so serve or appear. If so, what shall be the appropriate remedy for the unilateral termination of this practice by officials of the Philadelphia Post Office on or about July 8, 1978?

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

The Union argued that the provisions of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual dealing with this subject, specifically Section 516.334-a-(2) and c, as well as .342 of this Manual, very explicitly grant employees the right to temporarily change their schedule so that their scheduled days of work conformed to the days that the employee must report in court. The Union also argued that the practice had existed, in the Philadelphia Post Office for many years, to allow such changes in an employee's work schedule, and the Employer could not unilaterally change this past practice without union consent pursuant to the requirements of Article V of the Agreement as well as Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act as Amended.

The Postal Service also relied upon the provisions of Section 516.334-c of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual. It contended that this provision only allows an employee to change his or her hours of work to conform to the hours required for court service, and an employee may not change non-scheduled days to coincide with those that such employee must be present in court so that such days are treated as scheduled days of work. The Service also contended that the court leave provisions of the Manual and provisions for such leave in an earlier Manual as well as USPS rules and regulations which were based upon provisions of the Federal Personnel Manual, which applied to all government employees, have never provided for such an accomodation of the employees' work schedules and to so provide would be to contradict the entire concept of court leave and the purpose for which it was intended.

OPINION:

Because, as will be discussed below, the determination of the critical issue raised in this case may be made on the basis of the initial contentions of the Union, reference need only be made to the following provisions of the 1978 Agreement and the Manual:

Article VIII provides, in pertinent part:

ARTICLE VIII
HOURS OF WORK

Section 1. Work Week. The work week for full-time regulars shall be forty (40) hours per week, eight (8) hours per day within ten (10) consecutive hours, provided, however, that in all offices with more than 100 full-time employees in the bargaining units the normal work week for full-time regular employees will be forty hours per week, eight hours per day within nine (9) consecutive hours. Shorter work weeks, will, however, exist as needed for part-time regulars.

Section 2. Work Schedules

A. The employee's service week shall be a calendar week beginning at 12:01 a.m. Saturday and ending at 12 midnight the following Friday.

B. The employee's service day is the calendar day on which the majority of work is scheduled. Where the work schedule is distributed evenly over two calendar days, the service day is the calendar day on which such work schedule begins.

C. The employee's normal work week is five (5) service days, each consisting of eight (8) hours, within ten (10) consecutive hours, except as provided in Section 1 of this Article. As far as practicable the five days shall be consecutive days within the service week.

Article XIX provides:

ARTICLE XIX
HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21 Timekeeper's Instructions.

Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions will be furnished to the Unions at the national level at least thirty (30) days prior to issuance. At the request of the Unions, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Unions, after the meeting, believe that the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), they may then submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedure within thirty (30) days after receipt of the notice of proposed change. Copies of those parts of all new handbooks, manuals and regulations that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall be furnished to the Unions upon issuance.

The relevant Manual provisions, as contained in Subchapter 516, and as they apply in pertinent part, read as follows:

.31 Definition. Court leave is the authorized absence (without loss of or reduction in, pay, leave to which otherwise entitled, credit for time or service, or performance rating) of an employee from work status for jury duty or for attending judicial proceedings in non-official capacity as a witness on behalf of a state or local government...

.33 Granting Court Leave

.331 Pay Status Requirement. Court leave is granted only to eligible employees who, except for jury duty or service as a witness in a non-official capacity on behalf of a state or local government would be in work status or on annual leave. An employee on LWOP when called for such court service, although otherwise eligible for court leave, is not granted court leave, but may retain any fees or compensation received incident to court service.

* * *

.334 Accomodation of Employees Called for Court Service

a. Employee Options. Employees who are eligible for court leave and who have a conflict with court duty and work schedules have the following options:

(1) Work their postal tours of duty in addition to performing court service.

(2) Have their work schedules changed temporarily to conform to the hours of court service. (Employees who do not choose this option may not have their work schedule changed and are expected to report for postal duty upon completion of their court service.)

c. Temporary Change in Schedule. Employees who choose to have their work schedules changed temporarily to conform to court service hours submit, as soon as possible, a request for such schedule change in writing to the appropriate postal official at their installation. Such request states that the schedule change is for the employee's personal convenience and is agreed to by the local union. Employees who exercise this option receive full compensation for the period of court service, including any applicable night diferential.

.342 Court Service Outside of Regular Working Hours or Regular Working Days. Employees who perform court service outside of their basic work week (on scheduled days off) or outside of their scheduled tour of duty, for which no court leave is granted, may accept and retain the jury or witness fees. (If the employee's basic work week is Monday through Friday, the employee is placed on court leave for any absence while serving as a juror or witness in a non-official capacity on behalf of a state or local government during this period. The employee is entitled to retain fees received for court service on Saturday and/or Sunday. The same rule applies to employees assigned to other basic work weeks, whether the scheduled non-work days are fixed or rotating.)...

The testimony adduced during the course of this hearing substantiated the Union's contention that for some twenty two years, if not longer, at the Philadelphia Post Office, employees were permitted, when serving as a juror or otherwise entitled to court leave under the then current provisions of a postal manual, regulations or the Federal Personnel Manual, to change their work schedules so that their scheduled days of work coincided with their scheduled days of court service. For example, a carrier who normally worked a scheduled which required him to work on Saturday and to be off on a Wednesday could file a a PS Form 3189, or its predecessor form, requesting a temporary schedule change for personal convenience. Such a request would be granted and permit the employee to have a work schedule from Monday through Friday for the length of time the employee was off on court leave. Such a request was routinely and consistently granted by postal supervisors. Thus, the employee would be paid for five days during the week, without working at his postal service job, and that employee would turn over to the postal service the amount he received as a fee for being present at court as a juror or a witness. The Saturday that the employee would normally have worked was regarded temporarily as a non-scheduled day.

In late April of 1979, the President of the Philadelphia Local of the Letter Carriers, NALC Branch 157, learned from an employee, who had requested a temporary change in work schedule to conform to his days requred to attend at court, that management had refused the request that his schedule be so changed. The President of the Local protested this alleged unilateral change in policy without consulting with the Union. Management, according to the unrebutted testimony, conceded that there had been a change in policy in this regard at the Philadelphia Post Office.

A careful reading of Section 516.334-a-(2) appears to confirm that the Manual did provide for such a change. It provides "Employees who are eligible for court leave and who have a conflict with court duty and work schedules have the following options:... (2) Have their work schedules changed temporarily to conform to the hours of court service." (Underlining added by the writer)

The Manual uses the terms "work schedule" and "hours of service" to define the scope of the employee's right. Referring to how those terms are utilized in Article VIII, as quoted above, it should be noted that in Article VIII utilizes the term "hours of service" as a general heading below which are set forth separate subsections on days and hours of service over the course of a week and hours of work within individual days. Article VIII, Section 2 specifically utilizes the term "work schedule" so as to include both the concept of an employee's "service week in Subsection A, as well as the employee's "service day" which is referred to in Subsection B. As the Union pointed out, in earlier agreements, the contractual antecedents of Article VIII, dealing with Hours of Work, the term "work schedule" is defined so as to include both the employee's hours of work on a service day and his service days within a basic work week.

It should also be noted that the Form 3189, on which an employee in Philadelphia requested a change in schedule for personal convenience, when assigned court duties making that employee eligible for court leave, utilizes the concept of a change in an employee's "regular work schedule" so as to include both changes in beginning and ending times on a specified day as well as changes in scheduled days off.

The USPS argued that the use of the term "work schedule" in the current E&LR Manual as well as the one previously published clearly indicated that the parties were referring to the hours of work on a specific duty day. The Postal Service contended that an employee was entitled to change duty hours so as to avoid the need to serve eight hours in court and then spend additional hours on a postal duty tour, if those latter hours happened to fall outside the hours the employee was scheduled to be in court.

If one were to argue that the language of the Manual, as it was drafted and promulgated by the Postal Service, may have been ambiguous on this point, and management's intention had to be to restrict changes to hours in each service day on which an employee was scheduled to work as well as be present in court, then such ambiguity must be resolved in the Union's favor and support its position on the appropriate interpretation of intent. In the first place, management drafted the language employed in the Manual, and under accepted rules for the interpretation of written documents any ambiguity must be resolved against the writer. More importantly, the unrebutted testimony in this record, as noted earlier, and a management concession on the record established that with such language or very similar language in former Manual provisions, postal regulations, and the Federal Personnel Manual when applicable to postal employees, the Postal Service in Philadelphia at least interpreted that language to permit employees to change their weekly work days to conform to the days in court. Such a consistent application and interpretation of the provisions dealing with the accomodation of employees called for court service indicated most clearly that the Philadelphia Post Office, at least, was in accord with the Union's position as to the intent of the language with which we are here concerned.

Having found that these parties in Philadelphia had agreed that the language in the E&LR Manual permitted employees to change their days off so as to have their temporary work schedule coincide with their days in court and their non-scheduled days coincide with the days in the week on which they were not required to be in court, the Undersigned must conclude that the provisions of Article XIX are applicable to this situation. Management was bound to continue in effect the implementation of the language of Subchapter 516.334-a-(2) of the E&LR Manual than in effect. Management did not have the right to make any unilateral change in the consistent past practice giving evidence of the accepted interpretation of those provisions of the Manual without following the procedure outlined in the second paragraph of Article XIX in order to effectuate such a change.

Although Management did argue that the Local Union in Philadelphia was furnished with notice of such an intended change in practice, in addition to the fact that the Union claimed not to having received such notice or having it called to its attention when this grievance was being processed, it obviously was not the type of notice served upon the National Union as provided for, under appropriate circumstances, in Article XIX.

For the reasons set forth above, it must be ultimately concluded, based upon the record made in this proceeding, that the postal employees in the Philadelphia Post Office were previously entitled and continued to be entitled to make a temporary change in their weekly work schedule to coincide their duty days with the days they were assigned to be on court leave. The Union sought to broaden such a conclusion to make it applicable to all employees of the Postal Service wherever they happened to be located. Evidence to demonstrate a consistent past practice of so interpretating the provisions of the E&LR Manual and the similar provisions covering court leave in earlier manuals, regulations and the Federal Personnel Manual was not sufficiently conclusive, as it was presented by the Union, to support the Union's position in this regard. The substantiation of the Union's claims in this regard must be established in other proceedings initiated at appropriate postal installations.

As to the remedy sought by the Union at the Philadelphia Post Office, it must be found that since Local Management unilaterally and improperly altered its previous practice, it must be directed that the Philadelphia Post Office return to its former practice of permitting employees to change their work schedules to coincide with the days they are required to be in court where court leave is to be granted under the provisions of the E&LR Manual.

Therefore, after due deliberation, the Undersigned makes the following

A W A R D

1. The Philadelphia Post Office must revert to its previous practice of permitting employees to make temporary changes in their work schedules so their days off shall coincide with the days of the week that such employees are not required to be in court under such circumstances which make them eligible for court leave pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 516 of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual currently in effect.

2. As to other postal installations, where it is established in an appropriate proceeding that the management of the installation consistently interpretated the provisions of the E&LR Manual and the related provisions of any earlier manual, regulation, or the Federal Personnel Manual, in the same manner as did management in Philadelphia, then, in that event, management must continue such practice or revert to such practice until and unless a change in the provisions of the E&LR Manual is made pursuant to the procedure outlined in Article XIX of the National Agreement.

Court leave is granted to full-time and part-time regular employees. Certain part-time flexible employees are granted court leave as provided and governed by applicable collective bargaining agreements. Other employees are ineligible for court leave and must use either annual leave or LWOP to cover the period of absence from postal duties for court service but may retain any fees or compensation received incident to such court service.

Court leave is granted only to eligible employees who would be in work status or on annual leave except for jury duty or service as a witness in a nonofficial capacity on behalf of a state or local government, or service as a witness in a nonofficial capacity on behalf of a private party in a judicial proceeding to which the Postal Service is a party or the real party in interest. An employee on LWOP, when called for such court service, although otherwise eligible for court leave, is not granted court leave but may retain any fees or compensation received incident to court service.

The following provisions concern the recording of court leave:

a. Employees Other Than Rural Carriers. PS Form 1224, Court Duty Leave — Statement of Service, is prepared at the time an employee is authorized court leave. Instructions for preparing PS Form 1224 appear in Handbook F-1, Post Office Accounting Procedures, 823; in Handbook F-21, Time and Attendance, 353.3; and in Handbook F-22, PSDS Time and Attendance, 353.3.

b. Rural Carriers. When a rural carrier is on court leave, the postmaster records it as "Other" leave on PS Form 1314, Regular Rural Carrier Time Certificate, and describes the court service performed on the reverse side of the form. (See Handbook F-1, 445.5 for recording and reporting fees.)

516.31 Employee on Annual Leave

If an eligible employee while on annual leave is summoned for court service that qualifies for court leave or official duty (see 516.11), the employee's annual leave is canceled and the employee is placed on court leave or official duty for the duration of such court service. Employees who are not entitled to court leave or official duty must use annual leave or LWOP for the period of absence from duty for such court service.

516.32 Combination of Court Leave and Postal Duty

The following provisions concern combinations of court service and postal duty:

a. Employees Who Report for Court Service and Are Excused Early. If an employee reports for court service and is excused by the court for the balance of the day, or performs court service for only part of that day, the employee is entitled to full compensation for the day in question.

Dear John:

As you know, on June 26 the Supreme Court ruled that Section 3 of the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) is unconstitutional.

As a result of that ruling, the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) has decided to extend marriage-based federal benefits under its supervision and control to federal employees, annuitants, and their same-sex spouses who have legally married in a jurisdiction that permitted same-sex marriages, regardless of where they currently live or work. This change in OPM policy is deemed a qualifying life event which allows employees and annuitants 60 days, from June 26 through August 26, 2013, to make changes to their benefits.

Regarding internal regulations, the Postal Service will recognize same-sex spouses who have legally married in a jurisdiction that permitted same-sex marriages, regardless of where they currently live or work, for purposes of family member definitions under our relocation and leave programs.

For the purposes of applying the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA), all legally married same-sex couples who are otherwise eligible for FMLA protected leave can now take such leave for a qualifying FMLA reason, regardless of where they live or work. With regard to a same-sex spouse who resides in a State that does not recognize same-sex marriage, the right to this leave is on an interim basis only, pending guidance from the Department of Labor.

We have enclosed a document that provides a more detailed explanation and processing requirements related to this ruling.

Sincerely,

Alan B. Moore

This is in response to your November 22 correspondence regarding whether steward's duty time should be counted as time worked toward the 1,250 hours eligibility requirement for FMLA.

After additional research we agree with your interpretation that authorized steward time, during the course of a regular schedule, is credited towards the required 1,250 hours for FMLA eligibility.

Dear Billy:

I recently met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether an employee's eligibility for intermittent FMLA leave for the same underlying covered condition need be established only the occasion of the first absence in each leave year or on the occasion of each subsequent absence.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Determination of this issue is based on the fact circumstances involved and the provision of Publication 71, Section II as discussed in the correspondence to the Managers, Human Resources (Area) dated November 14, 2000 (copy attached).

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to regional level arbitration in keeping with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

LABOR RELATIONS

November 14, 2000

MANAGERS, HUMAN RESOURCES (AREA)

SUBJECT: Family Medical Leave Act - Eligibility

Based on the recently issued Department of Labor (DOL) Opinion Letter, the USPS is amending its position on FMLA eligibility. The DOL Opinion Letter addresses the question of eligibility for intermittent or reduced schedule leave for a serious health condition.

First, DOL has not endorsed lifetime eligibility. Instead, there is a one-year limitation placed upon eligibility for a given condition. The 1250-work hour eligibility test is applied only once, at the beginning of a series of intermittent absences, if all absences are for the same FMLA-qualifying condition during the same 12-month leave year. The employee remains eligible throughout that leave year even if subsequent absences bring the employee below the 1250-work hour requirement.

The employer defines the FMLA leave year. In the Postal Service, FMLA leave is calculated on the basis of the postal leave year.

Example: If an employee meets the 1250 work hour requirement for Multiple Sclerosis (MS), in May 2000, the employee is eligible for FMLA protection for absences due to the MS throughout the remainder of the 2000 postal leave year. The employee would not have to establish eligibility again for absences due to the MS condition in the 2000 leave year, even if the employee falls below the 1250 work hour requirement in December 2000. However, in January 2001, when the new postal leave year begins, the employee will have to meet the 1250 work hour requirement to be eligible for FMLA protection of MS related absences which occur in the 2001 leave year.

It is important to note that if this same employee has a different serious health condition (e.g., hospitalization for and recovery from a hysterectomy) during the 2000 leave year, the employee must meet the 1250 work hour eligibility test at the commencement of the leave for the second condition. If the employee does so, they are eligible for FMLA protection of absences for both conditions. Consequently, the leave for hospitalization is protected and leave for the MS condition continues to be protected for the remainder of the 2000 leave year, or until the 12 week entitlement has been exhausted.

However, if the employee is unable to meet the 1250 work hour requirement for the second condition in the 2000 leave year, the employee is NOT entitled to FMLA protection for their hospitalization and recovery, but absences in the 2000 leave year for the MS condition continue to be protected. Therefore, it is possible for this employee to be eligible for FMLA protection of one qualifying condition (MS), but not for the second and different condition. The 1250 work hour eligibility requirement must be re-calculated at the commencement of each subsequent and separate condition for which the employee needs leave, in order to determine eligibility for each condition in each leave year.

The United States Postal Service is in the process of revising Publication 71 to reflect this change. Once we have met our Article 19 obligations with the unions, the revised Publication 71 will be issued.

Cases pending adjudication on this issue that do not reflect this amended position should be resolved.

Dear Bill:

This is in response to your January 12, 2000 letter regarding the interpretation of Postal policy concerning recertification of FMLA conditions.

The request arises because you have been informed that "local managers are interpreting the Family and Medical Leave Act to require that employees must recertify FMLA conditions each FMLA leave year. This means that employees who certified during calendar year 1999 who suffer from the same serious health condition are being required to recertify in the year 2000."

Pursuant to Public Law 103-3, 29 U.S.C. 2613(3), SUBSEQUENT RECERTIFICATION. –"The employer may require that the eligible employee obtain subsequent recertifications on a reasonable basis."

Therefore, we are in agreement that employees should not be required to automatically provide recertification for a serious health condition simply because the leave year has ended and a new leave year has begun. Managers should refer to 29 CFR Part 825.308 for the circumstances and the time frame under which recertifications may be required.

Dear Billy:

Recently, I met with your representative, Dallas Jones to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether LWOP hours converted to paid hours as a result of a grievance settlement or arbitration decision returning an employee to duty are counted towards the 1250 hours eligibility criteria for Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA).

After discussing this issue, the parties agree that: When an employee is awarded back pay accompanied by equitable remedies)i.e. full back pay with seniority and benefits, or a "make whole" remedy), the hours an employee would have worked if not for the action which resulted in back pay period, are counted as work hours for the 1250 work hour eligibility requirement under the Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA).

Accordingly, we agree to remand this case to the parties and Step 3 for application of this principle in this case.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgement of agreement to remand this case.

I recently met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above-captioned grievances which are currently scheduled for national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 515, concerning the Family and Medical Leave, and Section 865, Return to Duty after Medical Absences are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree the Contract Interpretation Manual will be updated to clarify current ELM 515 language.

The current ELM 865 language does not negate management's obligation under the MOU: Return to Duty when returning an employee to duty after an absence for medical reasons.

The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve these cases thereby removing them from the national arbitration list.

CLASS ACTION
Washington, DC 20001-9998

Dear Mr. Hegarty:

We recently met in pre-arbitration discussion concerning the above referenced grievance. The issue is whether Publication 71, "Notice for Employees Requesting Leave for Conditions Covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act", violates the National Agreement by requiring "supporting documentation" for an absence of three days or less in order for an employee's absence to be protected under the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA).

After reviewing this matter, we agree that no national interpretive issue is presented. The parties agree to resolve the issue presented based on the following understanding:

The parties agree that the Postal Service may require an employee's leave to be supported by an FMLA medical certification, unless waived by management, in order for the absence to be protected. When an employee uses leave due to a condition already supported by an FMLA certification, the employee is not required to provide another certification in order for the absence to be FMLA protected.

We further agree that the documentation requirements for leave for an absence of three days or less are found in Section 513.361 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual which states in pertinent part that:

> For periods of absence of 3 days or less, supervisors may accept the employee's statement explaining the absence. Medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or need to care for a family member is required only when the employee is on restricted sick leave (see 513.39) or when the supervisor deems documentation desirable for the protection of the interests of the Postal Service.

See Management Instruction EL-860-2000-7, Fitness for Duty Examinations, for the specific procedures for fitness-for-duty examinations.

864.32 Purpose

The purpose of the Postal Service fitness-for-duty examination is to ascertain whether or not the employee is medically capable of meeting the requirements of his or her job.

864.33 Requesting Examination

Management can order fitness-for-duty examinations at any time and repeat them, as necessary, to safeguard the employee or coworker. Specific reasons for the fitness-for-duty should be stated by the requesting official.

In cases of occupational injury or illness, the district injury compensation control office may request an examination in the course of monitoring an injury compensation case (see 545.44).

864.34 Tests and Consultation

A specific medical test or consultation may be required in the judgment of the examining physician before rendering a decision on fitness for duty. The indications are documented as part of the report.

865 Return to Duty After Absence for Medical Reasons

865.1 Clearance Required: All Bargaining Unit Employees and Those Non-bargaining Unit Employees Returning From Non-FMLA Absences

The decision to clear an employee to return to work rests with management. Management can require employees who have been absent due to an illness, injury, outpatient medical procedure (surgical), or hospitalization to submit documentation (as set forth in 865.3) in order to clear their return to work when management has a reasonable belief, based upon reliable and objective information, that:

a. The employee may not be able to perform the essential functions of his/her position; or

b. The employee may pose a direct threat to the health or safety of him/herself or others due to that medical condition.

In making the decision whether to require documentation in order to clear the employee's return to work, management must consider the following in order to make an individualized assessment:

a. The essential functions of the employee's job,

b. The nature of the medical condition or procedure involved, and

c. Any other reliable and objective information.

When management is considering requesting return-to-work documentation, management should also seek guidance from the following regarding the return-to-work decision:

a. Occupational health nurse administrator,

b. Occupational health nurse, and/or

c. Postal Service physician.

After consideration of the medical information, the employee's working conditions, and any other pertinent information, management is to make the decision to clear the employee's return. Medical personnel consult with management but do not have authority to clear the employee to return to duty.

In cases of occupational illness or injury, the employee will be returned to work upon certification from the treating physician, and the medical report will be reviewed by a Postal Service physician as soon as possible thereafter.

865.2 Non-bargaining Unit Employees Returning After FMLA Absence

To return to work from an FMLA-covered absence because of their own incapacitation, non-bargaining unit employees must provide a statement from their health care provider that they are able to return to work.This statement should also address the employee's ability to perform the essential functions of his or her position, with or without limitations (see 515.54). When employees take intermittent or reduced schedule leave, management can request a return-to-work clearance for such absences up to once every 30 days if reasonable safety concerns exist regarding the employee's ability to perform his or her duties due to the medical condition in issue.

865.3 Documentation Required

Medical clearances pursuant to 865.1 must be detailed medical documentation and not simply a statement that an employee may return to work.

a. There must be sufficient information to make a determination that the employee can perform the essential functions of his/her job, and do so without posing a significant risk of substantial harm to oneself or others.

b. The documentation must note whether there are any medical restrictions or limitations on the employee's ability to perform his/her job, and any symptoms that could create a job hazard for the employee or other employees.

c. The occupational health nurse administrator, occupational health nurse, or Postal Service physician evaluates the medical report and, when required, assists placing employees in jobs where they can perform effectively and safely.

865.4 Assignments

Installation heads may temporarily assign any employee returning to duty to a modified work assignment during the employee's rehabilitation/recovery period consistent with operational needs and obligations under any applicable collective bargaining agreement or federal law.

865.5 Fitness-for-Duty Examinations

If, after review of the documentation required in 865.3, the Postal Service physician questions whether an employee can perform the essential functions of his/her position, or whether he/she poses a direct threat to the health or safety of him/herself or others, the physician may require the employee to undergo a fitness-for-duty examination.

866.1 General

In the event of a medical emergency, immediate and appropriate medical care must be provided. A medical emergency is an injury or sudden and unexpected onset of a condition requiring immediate medical care. Some problems are considered emergencies because, if not treated promptly, they might become more serious (for example: animal bites, eye injuries, deep cuts, broken bones, etc.). Others are emergencies because they are potentially life-threatening (for example: heart attacks, strokes, weapon wounds, the sudden inability to breathe, etc.). In the event there is doubt as to the urgent nature of the emergency, it should be handled as an emergency (ELM 545.41). In the event of a medical emergency, ensure immediate medical care is provided for the employee.

866.2 Requirement

All health services professionals must be prepared to respond to emergencies and to provide medical assistance, as required, and consistent with local policy and protocol.

866.3 Emergency Procedures

The recommended procedures for handling medical emergencies on postal premises are as follows:

a. Immediately contact 911.

b. After a 911 call is initiated or attempted, the Postal Police and any onsite health services professional should be immediately notified. This notification should include specific information as to where the ill/injured employee is located (floor, unit, column, or room number, etc.) and the nature of the illness or injury, if known.

c. Notify onsite management.

C) If at the end of the six (6) month period, the employee is still unable to perform the duties of the bid-for position, management may request that the employee provide new medical certification indicating that the employee will be able to perform the duties of the bid-for position within the second six (6) months after the bid. If the employee fails to provide such new certification, the bid shall be disallowed and the assignment shall be reposted for bidding. Under such circumstances, the employee shall not be eligible to rebid the next posting of that assignment.

D) If at the end of one (1) year from the submission of the bid the employee has not been able to perform the duties of the bid-for position, the employee must relinquish the assignment, and shall not be eligible to re-bid the next posting of that assignment.

E) It is still incumbent upon the employee to follow procedures in Article 12.3.C to request notices to be sent to a specific location when absent. All other provisions relevant to the bidding process will also apply.

II. Higher Level Pay

Employees who bid to a higher level assignment pursuant to the procedures described in the preamble and Part I, Bidding, above, will not receive higher level pay until they are physically able to, and actually perform work in the bid-for higher level position.

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

RETURN TO DUTY

The parties affirm their understanding concerning the review of medical certificates submitted by employees who return to duty following extended absences due to illness.

We mutually agree to the following:

1. To avoid undue delay in returning an employee to duty, the on-duty medical officer, contract physician, or nurse should review and make a decision based upon the presented medical information the same day it is submitted.

2. Normally, the employee will be returned to work on his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation, provided that adequate medical documentation is submitted within sufficient time for review and that a decision is made to return the employee to duty.

3. The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

John F. Hegarty
National President
National Postal Mail Handlers Union, AFL-CIO
1101 Connecticut Avenue, NW, Suite 500
Washington, DC 20036-4304

Dear Mr. Hegarty:

During negotiations over the terms of the 2006 National Agreement between the National Postal Mail Handlers Union and the U.S. Postal Service, the parties reached the following understandings with regard to the changes made to Article 15.3D and Article 15.4D2.

1. Any dispute initiated by the Employer at the National level under Article 15.3D shall not include any issue that previously has been appealed by the Union to the National arbitration docket.

2. If the parties are unable to resolve a dispute initiated by the Employer at the National level under Article 15.3D, then the Union has the option to accept the Employer's position on that issue or appeal the issue to National arbitration within existing contractual time limits. The Employer has no right to appeal any dispute or issue to National arbitration.

3. If either the Employer or the Union, or both, do not opt to elect priority scheduling to the top of the National arbitration docket for up to two cases in any given calendar year, then those available arbitration hearing dates will revert to the dates subject to the preexisting scheduling standards — i.e., cases on the docket will be scheduled for arbitration in the order in which appealed, unless otherwise agreed to by the parties.

4. Cases on the National arbitration docket will be scheduled for arbitration with no less than one hundred and fifty (150) days notice to both parties measured from the date of scheduling to the date of the initial arbitration hearing, unless the parties mutually agree to expedite a particular hearing date.

5. Any local grievances filed on the specific interpretive issues pending on the National arbitration docket shall, upon mutual

I recently met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above-captioned grievances which are currently scheduled for national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 515, concerning the Family and Medical Leave, and Section 865, Return to Duty after Medical Absences are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree the Contract Interpretation Manual will be updated to clarify current ELM 515 language.

The current ELM 865 language does not negate management's obligation under the MOU: Return to Duty when returning an employee to duty after an absence for medical reasons.

The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve these cases thereby removing them from the national arbitration list.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

The following questions and answers dealing with the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM), Section 515, Absence for Family Care or Illness of Employee, will be incorporated into the next version of the Contract Interpretation Manual and, if relevant, should be used immediately as guidance.

Clarifications for the Contract Interpretation Manual

Question: Is it mandatory for an employee to provide FMLA documentation within 15 days of the receipt of the request?

Answer: Yes, unless it is not practicable under the particular facts and circumstances.

Question: In order to qualify as a serious health condition, under the provisions of ELM 515.2.i.(2)(a), does the employee have to have treatment two or more times by a health care provider within 30 days of the first day of incapacity?

Answer: Yes, unless extenuating circumstances prevent the employee from a follow-up visit occurring within 30 days of the first day of incapacity.

Question: Are employees always required to submit complete and sufficient medical certification to establish a serious health condition as defined under the FMLA?

Answer: Yes, but this responsibility is not triggered until the employee receives a request for certification from the Postal Service.

Dear Mr. Young:

Recently, we met to discuss the above-referenced case, currently pending national arbitration.

After reviewing this matter, it was mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is presented in this case. We further agreed that the provisions of ELM Section 515, "Absence for Family Care or Serious Health Condition of Employee" are enforceable through the grievance arbitration procedure. Whether or not the provisions of ELM 515 are applicable and timely raised in this case is a fact question suitable for regional resolution or arbitration.

Accordingly, it was agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing or to be rescheduled for arbitration, as appropriate.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case, removing it from the national arbitration listing.

Dear Bill:

This is in response to your July 30 correspondence concerning a system to address disputes arising out of the Family and Medical Leave Act and the Privacy Act. After our last discussion, we agreed to send you a written summary of our understanding regarding your concerns.

You indicated that there is a problem in the field with managers who insist on retention and review of records containing a prognosis or diagnosis. The National Medical Director for the Postal Service, Dr. David Reid, III, addressed the documentation requirements for approval of leave in a memorandum dated June 22, 1995. As noted by Dr. Reid, medical information received by an employee's supervisor that provides a diagnosis and a medical prognosis must be forwarded to the health unit or office of the contract medical provider and treated as a "restricted medical record" under Section 214.3 of Handbook EL-806. This application is consistent with the documentation requirements under the FMLA. Therefore, to address your concerns we can reissue the memorandum and review specific complaints on a case by case basis.

In response to your questions regarding those issues needing agreement or disagreement as to the basic principle, we submit the following as our understanding of our final discussion:

> Issue: Whether or not supervisors/postmasters/managers may maintain files containing medical records including prognosis or diagnosis.
> Answer: Management may maintain WH380, union FMLA forms, or other certifications from health care providers that do not contain restricted medical information. Documents containing diagnosis or prognosis must be returned to the employee, destroyed, or forwarded to the medical unit.

Should you have any further questions concerning these issues, you may call Connie Rodriguez at (202) 268-3823.

BACKGROUND

On July 6, 2010 the Postal Service sent an Article 19 notice to its unions informing them that it intended to revise certain regulations in Section 510 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) concerning the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA), as amended. Among those revisions was a new requirement in ELM 515.52 that employees use only the Department of Labor (DOL) WH-380 forms when they seek to have their absences protected by the FMLA.

On October 4, 2010 the APWU filed an Article 19 appeal to arbitration protesting, in part, the proposed change to ELM 515.52. The Union submitted its 15-day statement of issues and facts on October 19, 2010. The Postal Service submitted its 15-day statement on October 18, 2010. As an initial matter, the Postal Service asserted that the Union's Article 19 appeal was procedurally defective because the Union had not first requested and attended a meeting concerning the proposed ELM changes.

On October 27, 2010, the APWU initiated a Step 4 national dispute under Article 15, in which it stated:

> It is the APWU's position, consistent with the Collective Bargaining Agreement, applicable Department of Labor (DOL) regulations, the parties' established accepted past practice (for over 15 years), and the mutual understanding and agreement between the parties at the national level, that: (1) employees are not required to use a specific format or form for FMLA certification; (2) employees may use APWU forms for FMLA certification, or any other format or forms that contain the information required under 29 CFR 825.306; and (3) the submission of FMLA certification using DOL WH-380 forms is optional.

The Postal Service and the APWU agreed to combine the Union's Article 19 appeal and its Article 15 grievance in a single arbitration proceeding. The NALC and the NPMHU are intervenors in this proceeding.

At arbitration, the Postal Service argued that the Article 19 appeal should be dismissed based on the APWU's failure to follow the requirement of Article 19. The Postal Service further maintained that the APWU cannot escape its failure to follow Article 19 by filing a subsequent Article 15 grievance, and that grievance, accordingly, should be denied. On the merits, the Postal Service insisted that the challenged change to the ELM did not violate Article 19 or any other provision of the National Agreement. The Postal Service agreed not to seek bifurcation, with the understanding that the Arbitrator initially would rule on the arbitrability issue.

The FMLA first was enacted in 1993. Section 103(b), 29 USC §2613(b), sets forth the following certification provision:

> (b) SUFFICIENT CERTIFICATION.--Certification provided under subsection (a) shall be sufficient if it states
> (1) the date on which the serious health condition commenced;
> (2) the probable duration of the condition;
> (5) in the case of certification for intermittent leave, or leave on a reduced leave schedule, for planned medical treatment, the dates on which such treatment is expected to be given and the duration of such treatment;
> (7) in the case of certification for intermittent leave, or leave on a reduced leave schedule, under section 102(a)(1)(C), a > statement that the employee's intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule is necessary for the care of the son, daughter, parent, or spouse who has a serious health condition, or will assist in their recovery, and the expected duration and schedule of the intermittent leave or reduced leave schedule.

> (b) DOL has developed two optional forms (Form WH-380E and Form WH-380F, as revised) for use in obtaining medical certification, including second and third opinions, from health care providers that meets FMLA's certification requirements.... These optional forms reflect certification requirements so as to permit the health care provider to furnish appropriate medical information. Form WH-380E and WH-380F, as revised, or another form containing the same basic information, may be used by the employer; however, no information may be required beyond that specified in §§825.306, 825.307, and 825.308. In all instances the information on the form must relate only to the serious health condition for which the current need for leave exists.

The DOL Preamble to §825.306 (73 Fed. Reg. No. 222 [Nov. 17, 2008], at 68013) states:

> Current §825.306 addresses how much information an employer can obtain in the medical certification to substantiate the existence of a serious health condition (of the employee or a family member) and the employee's need for leave due to the condition. This section also explains that the Department provides an optional form (Form WH-380) for use in the medical certification process; other forms may be used, but they may only seek information related to the condition for which leave is sought, and no additional information beyond that contained in the WH-380 may be required....

In 1995, Headquarters Labor Relations managers sent memos to Human Resources Area Managers regarding documentation for FMLA requests. In one memo, Manager Anthony Vegliante stated:

> The attached APWU Forms 1 through 5, dated June 26, 1995 provide supporting documentation for leave requests covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA). These forms have been reviewed by the appropriate Headquarters functional areas and are acceptable for usage by managers to approve or disapprove FML leave requests.
> The Postal Service does not require a specific format for FML documentation. Information provided by the employee is acceptable as long as it is in compliance with Publication 71, Notice for Employees Requesting Leave for Conditions Covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act IV, Section IV.

In another memo, Acting Manager Patricia Heath stated:

> The DOL WH-380 form does not require medical information that directly violates the employee's right to privacy. However, we realize health care providers may give more detail than requested on the form (i.e., prognosis and diagnosis) and that employees may not want to provide this information to their immediate supervisors. Therefore, to address the union's concern, the Postal Service reviewed and approved APWU and NALC FMLA forms that, when properly filled out by the health care providers, provide enough information is provided [sic] to certify that the absence qualifies as a covered condition under the FMLA.

In 2000, the APWU initiated a Step 4 dispute over the implementation of Resource Management Database (RMD) software. In that case, the APWU asserted: "We believe that the Postal Service has implemented a new policy of requiring employees to only use a WH-380 form, a policy that is also contrary to an agreement between the parties concerning the use of such forms." The parties entered into a pre-arbitration settlement of that case on March 28, 2003, which states in part:

> Optional FMLA Forms: There is no required form or format for information submitted by an employee in support of an absence for a condition which may be protected under the Family and > Medical Leave Act. Although the Postal Service sends employees the Department of Labor Form, WH-380, the APWU forms or any form or format which contains the required information (i.e. information such as that required on a current WH-380) is acceptable.

In June 2007, the parties included the RMD pre-arbitration settlement in the provisions of the USPS-APWU Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) relating to Article 10, as well as the following statement:

> Documentation to substantiate FMLA is acceptable in any format, including a form created by the union, as long as it provides the information as required by the FMLA.

The October 2004 USPS-NPMHU Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM) also includes an equivalent provision to that in the 2003 USPS-APWU RMD settlement, citing that settlement as the source.

In revised regulations that took effect in January 2009, the DOL changed some of the FMLA certification requirements and modified its WH-380 forms. The APWU updated its FMLA certification forms and provided them to the Postal Service. The parties then engaged in a series of correspondence, in which the Postal Service raised concerns regarding the APWU's revised forms and expressed its view that they were not equivalent to the revised WH-380. The Postal Service did not, however, state that it would not accept certifications on APWU forms. Its position at that time was expressed as follows in a July 8, 2009 email from a Headquarters Labor Relations manager to Area managers:

> DOL Forms WH-380E and WH-380F are the preferred "Certification(s) of Health Care Provider." When properly completed, these forms provide all information necessary to determine if leave qualifies for FMLA. However, if you receive certification in any other form including forms provided by the unions, you cannot refuse the form. Accepting the union form does not indicate you accept the certification as complete. You must carefully examine the form received to ensure that it provides complete information, sufficient to establish a serious > health condition. If one or more necessary entries are missing or incomplete, or if the certification is insufficient, you must notify the employee that the certification is incomplete or insufficient and give them the opportunity to cure the deficiency. You must specify in writing the additional information that is needed to make the certification complete and sufficient (WH-382, Designation Notice).

On July 6, 2010, the Postal Service issued its Article 19 notice that triggered the present disputes. The ELM change requiring that employees use only the WH-380 forms subsequently went into effect after the 60-day period provided for in Article 19.

Linda DeCarlo, Director of Health and Safety for the Postal Service, testified that it receives close to 250,000 leave requests for FMLA protection per year. After enactment of the FMLA in 1993, initially decisions as to whether to designate leave as FMLA protected leave were made by employee supervisors. That responsibility later was transferred to FMLA coordinators assigned at each Postal Service district office. DeCarlo said the Postal Service currently is in the process of centralizing decision making at a single location.

DeCarlo explained that the main reason for the ELM change in dispute was that mandatory use of the WH-380 was better for the employee. In addition, use of a uniform form allows the Postal Service to streamline its operation, which enhances its ability to issue timely decisions.

On cross-examination, DeCarlo said that if an employee brought in a statement from their physician that contained all the information required by the FMLA but not on a WH-380, the employee would be required to return to the doctor to have the information copied onto the WH-380. If that required additional payment, the employee would be responsible for it.

Margaret Adams, a Resource Management Specialist for the Postal Service, testified regarding a survey she conducted in late November 2010. She asked all the FMLA Coordinators to pull from their files any 50 FMLA certifications submitted on union forms and to determine the number of these forms which resulted in a cure or clarification request because

Adams acknowledged that no equivalent survey was conducted regarding FMLA certifications submitted on WH-380 forms. Based on her visits to various District FMLA offices, quarterly telecons and other discussions with individual FMLA coordinators, she believed that use of the WH-380, especially in its new format (since 2009) has made a big difference. She estimated that less than 20 percent, and possibly many fewer, of the WH-380 forms result in a cure or clarification request.

Greg Bell, Executive Vice President of the APWU since November 2010, previously served as the Union's Director of Industrial Relations and oversaw FMLA issues. After the DOL's revised regulations took effect in 2009, he had discussions and corresponded with Postal Service Labor Relations managers regarding the APWU's revised FMLA certification forms. He testified that when that dialogue ended at the end of March 2010, the Postal Service had not asserted that the APWU forms would not be accepted or that the Postal Service would only accept WH-380s. In the ongoing correspondence, he added, he typically reiterated the Union's position regarding the optional aspect of the WH-380 and the Postal Service's obligation to specify any deficiencies in the information submitted by an employee on whatever form they used. He also noted that whenever the APWU headquarters heard from the field that an FMLA coordinator was not accepting APWU forms, the Union contacted the Postal Service and those issues were resolved.

Bell also testified that if the Union receives an Article 19 notice of an ELM change that it determines is a clear violation of the National Agreement, it typically exercises its discretion to file a Step 4 grievance under Article 15. He cited, as one of many such examples, a Step 4 dispute initiated in 2000 protesting a revision to ELM 510 as a violation of Article 10.

Relevant provisions of the National Agreement include the following:

ARTICLE 5
PROHIBITION OF UNILATERAL ACTION

ARTICLE 15
GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 1. Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Section 4. Grievance Procedure-General

D. It is agreed that in the event of dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated at the Step 4 level by either party. Such a dispute shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to be decided and the contention of either party....

HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable....

Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Union at the national level at least sixty (60) days prior to issuance. The Employer shall furnish the Union with the following information about each proposed change: a narrative explanation of the purpose and impact on employees and any documentation concerning the proposed change from the manager(s) who requested the change addressing its purpose and effect. Proposed changes will be furnished to the Union by hard copy or, if available, by electronic file. At the request of the Union, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Union requests a meeting concerning proposed changes, the meeting will be attended by manager(s) who are knowledgeable about the purpose of the proposed change and its impact on employees. If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), it may then submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedure within ninety (90) days after receipt of the notice of proposed change. Within fifteen (15) days after the issue has been submitted to arbitration, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the precise issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues....

An MOU regarding the JCIM, included at page 328 of the National Agreement, states, in part: "The parties will be bound by these joint interpretations and grievances will not be filed asserting a position contrary to a joint interpretation." The preamble to the 2007 JCIM states:

> The 2007 APWU/USPS Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) update is provided as a resource for the administration of the National Agreement. Jointly prepared by the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, and the United States Postal Service, this manual provides a mutually agreed to explanation on how to apply the contract to the issues addressed.
> When a dispute arises, the parties should first go to the JCIM to determine if the issue in dispute is addressed. If it is, the parties are required to resolve the dispute in accordance with this manual.
> The JCIM will continue to be updated with additional material as we continue to narrow our differences and expand our joint understanding of the National Agreement. We encourage you to use the JCIM to ensure contract compliance and to foster more professional working relationships.

EMPLOYER POSITION

Arbitrability

The Postal Service initially contends that the Union's Article 19 appeal should be dismissed because the Union did not request, much less attend, an Article 19 meeting before filing the appeal. Under Article 19, the Postal Service maintains, the Union can only file an appeal to arbitration after it has requested a meeting, attended a meeting and determined that it is not satisfied with the result of the meeting.

The Postal Service insists that an Article 19 meeting is not a mere technicality. It points out that it was the APWU that insisted on the language that requires "manager(s) who are knowledgeable about the purpose of the proposed change" to attend the meeting. In this case, the Postal Service asserts, an Article 19 meeting would have given the APWU the opportunity to discuss an argument it first raised at the arbitration hearing that the Postal Service violated

Article 10 when it made the protested change to the ELM. The Postal Service had never heard this argument before, and this is the very type of harm that an Article 19 meeting should prevent. The Postal Service cites Case No. H7C-NA-C 10 (Snow, 1989) in support of its position.

The Postal Service further argues that the APWU should not be allowed to escape its failure to follow Article 19 by raising a new dispute under Article 15. Otherwise, the requirements of Article 19 would be rendered meaningless because a union could always take such action. The Postal Service acknowledges that in Case No. HOC-3N-C 416 (1994) Arbitrator Snow allowed the Union to raise an argument in an Article 15 case that the Postal Service's interpretation of an ELM regulation violated language in the National Agreement, even though the ELM language had never been challenged. In the instant case, however, the National Agreement does not address requests for FMLA certification. That is a matter entirely dealt with by the Postal Service in its manuals and handbooks.

Merits

The Postal Service contends that the ELM change does not violate Article 19 or any other part of the National Agreement.

The Postal Service asserts that the APWU's claim, that the new policy requiring use of only the WH-380 forms violated Article 10.2.A, should be dismissed because it was raised for the first time at arbitration. The APWU's brief passing reference to violation of Article 10 in its Article 15 15-day statement of issues and facts did not reference what part of Article 10 allegedly had been violated or why Article 10 had been violated and was insufficient to put the Postal Service on notice that it was raising this issue.

Even assuming, however, that the APWU had properly raised this argument, the Postal Service maintains that Article 10.2.A does not apply to all changes in ELM Subchapter 510, but only those that relate directly to wages, hours and working conditions. The new policy requiring employees to use only the WH-380 was not a change directly relating to wages, hours or working conditions, even though it was contained in a larger Article 19 notice that included some changes to wages, hours and working conditions. The new policy had no effect on wages paid to employees or hours that they worked. In addition, it had no effect on working conditions, as a WH-380 is filled out by the treating physician. The new policy does not change the burdens on the employee who seeks FMLA protection. Prior to the new policy, employees submitting an APWU form had to do just as much.

The Postal Service also rejects the APWU's argument that the change violates Article 5 because it allegedly violates the FMLA. To the contrary, the FMLA and its implementing regulations allow such a requirement. The DOL's regulations specifically empower employers, not employees, to decide what forms employees must use when they seek FMLA protection for their leave, so long as those forms do not ask for more information than what is printed on the WH-380. By choosing to require use of the WH-380, the Postal Service clearly is complying with the law. The Postal Service cites a federal district court decision in Miedema v. Facility Concession Services, 2011 WL 1363793 (S.D. Texas, April 11, 2001). It further asserts that federal courts have held that employers have the right to institute rules to carry out their responsibilities under the FMLA, so long as those rules do not infringe upon substantive rights or discourage use of the FMLA.

The Postal Service contends that the March 28, 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement relied on by the Union merely recited the then-current policy of allowing use of the APWU's forms and other forms deemed by the Postal Service to be equivalent to the DOL forms. The settlement did not give the APWU anything new, and the Postal Service did not waive its rights to make future changes that are fair, reasonable, and equitable under Article 19. See: Case No. Q98C-4Q-C 02013900 (Das, 2006). Likewise, the JCIM language also cited by the Union gave an accurate interpretation of the policy as it existed in June 2007, when this part of the JCIM was published. Obviously, the JCIM will need to be updated to reflect the new policy.

Finally, the Postal Service contends that the new policy requiring employees to use only the WH-380 form when they seek for their leave to be protected by the FMLA easily meets the test of being fair, reasonable, and equitable.

The WH-380 form is generated not by the Postal Service, but by the agency (DOL) entrusted with administering FMLA. As postal witness Adams testified, WH-380 forms require cure or clarification less than 20 percent of the time, whereas the Postal Service's survey indicates that union forms require cure or clarification more than 50 percent of the time. Decreasing the frequency of occasions when it is necessary to return forms to employees for cure or clarification should benefit employees, as they should have less need to spend time and money returning to their physicians, and will not have their FMLA entitlements delayed as often.

Mandatory use of the WH-380 also should save processing time for the Postal Service. As it moves to centralize its FMLA function, there are obvious benefits in using one standard form to cover the approximately 250,000 leave requests for FMLA protection that come in per year. Moreover, as Arbitrator Dennis Nolan pointed out, in a case where the same postal unions were challenging form letters that the Postal Service was using in FMLA-covered situations, the WH-380 is a "safe harbor" for employers. See: NALC Case No. Q98N-4Q-C 01167325 (2008).

UNION POSITION

Abitrability

The Union insists its Article 19 grievance is arbitrable. Under Article 19, only the Union, not the employer, has a right to request an Article 19 meeting. This is because the purpose of the meeting is to require the employer to inform the Union of the purpose and intended effect of the proposed change so the Union can determine whether there is a dispute and make an informed decision about whether to appeal to arbitration. It would be anomalous to give preclusive effect to the lack of a meeting when the employer has no right to request, much less to demand, a meeting, particularly when the parties -- as in this case -- have been engaged in an ongoing dialogue about the subject of the protested ELM change.

The Union notes that under Article 19 if it delays in requesting a meeting or does not request a meeting the Article 19 process is not slowed down. The employer has a right to implement the proposed ELM change 60 days after notice has been provided and the Union must appeal within 90 days of receiving such notice. Moreover, even if there was a requirement that the Union request a meeting, the employer should be required to show that it has been prejudiced by the lack of a meeting, which it has not done in this case.

The Union argues that it would be particularly anomalous to find a strict requirement for an Article 19 meeting under the circumstances of this case. The parties' discussions and agreements about the use of the WH-380 began soon after the passage of the FMLA in 1993. Those discussions led to the 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement that required the employer to continue to accept and process FMLA certifications that did not use the WH-380. That settlement was then made part of the parties' JCIM. Moreover, as testified to by Union witness Bell, the requirement that the Postal Service accept and process forms other than WH-380 was routinely enforced by the Union and complied with by the Postal Service. After publication of the amended WH-380 forms in January 2009, the APWU amended its forms as well, and a lengthy correspondence then ensued in which the Postal Service and the Union debated whether the APWU forms were "equivalent" to the WH-380 forms. In each of the Union's letters in this correspondence the Union reminded the Postal Service that it could not require employees to use the WH-380 form.

In other words, the Union stresses, the Postal Service was perfectly well aware of the APWU's position on the issue, and a meeting to "discuss" the matter further would have been a mere formality that would not have served the purpose of Article 19 meetings or expediting the Article 19 process.

To the extent the Postal Service relies on Arbitrator Snow's decision in Case No. H7C-NA-C 10, the Union disagrees with his dictum that the failure of the Union to demand a meeting as if an Article 19 notice had been provided is material to the arbitrability of the Union's appeal to arbitration in that case.

The Union insists that the Postal Service was not prejudiced by a lack of an Article 19 meeting in this case. In its 15-day statement under Article 19, the Union argued that the proposed changes were not fair, reasonable, and equitable and that they violated Articles 5, 10 and 19 of the National Agreement. In light of the long history of the parties on this issue it simply is not credible that Postal Service representatives were unaware of the fact that the APWU regularly files Article 10.2 grievances when the employer attempts to amend part 510 of the ELM. The JCIM provisions that specify that the employer will not require use of the WH-380 form both reference Article 10.

The Union also asserts that its Article 15 grievance is arbitrable. The employer seems to be arguing that because the Union also has the right to challenge the employer's new policy under Article 19, the Union's Article 15 grievance and arbitration rights are cut off. This contention is contrary to the language of Article 15 and completely unsupported by the language of Article 19. The purpose of Article 19 is not to permit the employer to change the contract. The fundamental purpose of Article 19 is to permit the employer to modify its handbooks and manuals and to permit the Union to challenge those modifications on the ground that they are not fair, reasonable, and equitable. The authors of Article 19 also provided, that the manuals "shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement." This oblique statement gives the Union the right to challenge proposed handbook and manual provisions under Article 19 on the ground that they conflict with the National Agreement. But it says nothing about cutting off the right of the Union to file an Article 15 grievance challenging the violation of the National Agreement.

Article 10.2, the Union argues, unequivocally prohibits the employer from making changes in ELM subpart 510 that affect wages, hours, or working conditions. Thus a prohibited amendment of Subchapter 510 is not just "inconsistent" with the National Agreement, it is not permitted to be made part of the ELM. Article 10.2 can only be given its intended meaning if, when prohibited amendments of Subchapter 510 are attempted, the Union has a right to challenge those amendments, not just using Article 19 procedures, but also by filing an Article 15 grievance to enforce Article 10.2. As Bell testified, this is the Union's regular practice.

Merits

The Union contends that its Article 15 grievance must be sustained because the Postal Service has violated the 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement agreement, the JCIM, the parties' MOU concerning the JCIM, and Articles 5 and 10 of the National Agreement.

The Union notes that although the RMD settlement agreement, like the MS-47 settlement agreement at issue in Case No. Q98C-4Q-C 02013900 (Das, 2006), does not provide that the employer never can change its FMLA handbook on the subject of the WH-380, the parties' agreement did not stop with the settlement. They also placed that settlement in the JCIM, which is binding and permanent unless changed. By placing the RMD settlement in the JCIM, the parties also placed it under the aegis of the MOU on the effect of the JCIM.

The JCIM makes clear, the Union asserts, that documentation to substantiate FMLA is acceptable in any format, including a form created by the Union, as long as it provides the information required by the FMLA. Under the preamble to the JCIM and the parties' MOU, the provisions of the JCIM are binding on both parties.

The Union asserts that the FMLA and related DOL regulations make clear that the use of form WH-380 is intended to provide a "safe harbor" for employers that permits them to enforce the certification requirements of the law without violating FMLA and HIPAA provisions that prohibit the employer from demanding too much information or irrelevant information. The FMLA, however, does not permit the employer to require use of the WH-380 forms. Both the law and the DOL's explanatory information accompanying its regulations make clear that the Postal Service's requirement that employees use the WH-380 forms is inconsistent with the FMLA. Accordingly, the Postal Service's actions violated Article 5 of the National Agreement.

The Union also contends that the requirement that FMLA leave certifications be provided on a WH-380 form imposes a change in working conditions through a modification of ELM Subchapter 510 in violation of Article 10.2. Before July 6, 2010, the ELM permitted employees to use a WH-380 form or equivalent documentation. The consequence of failing to use the WH-380 form since the protested ELM change is that FMLA protection for the leave in question is lost. At a minimum, this permits the employer to impose discipline for absences that are not the employee's fault and that would, but for the requirement that this specific form be used, be protected by the FMLA. It also hardly could be said that the right to submit FMLA qualifying information to the employer in a non-standard format is protected by federal law and regulations, but is not a significant working condition. At a minimum, many employees will suffer inconvenience and may incur substantial expense, if they do not have a WH-380 form for their medical provider to complete.

The Union contends that the disputed ELM change deprives employees of rights protected under the FMLA and its regulations, rescinds a settlement agreement that is incorporated into the JCIM, and violates the proscription of Article 10.2. As such, the change is not fair, reasonable, and equitable. In addition, required use of WH-380 forms means that employees who use any other form or who use no form, but provide all the necessary information for certification under the FMLA, nonetheless will have their request for FMLA leave rejected. To correct that problem they will have to spend their time and likely incur additional expense to obtain the protection of the statute. The required use of the WH-380 provides employees less choice and therefore less protection. The Union also stresses that the employer's evidence in support of its contention that the APWU's form too often must be returned for cure or clarification does not address the critical question "more often than what?" because the employer did not bother to "survey" the experience in using the WH-380, the revised APWU form, or a medical provider's narrative.

As remedy, the Union seeks an order directing the Postal Service to cease and desist from requiring employees to submit FMLA medical certifications using only the WH-380 forms.

FINDINGS

Arbitrability

After receiving notice of the proposed changes to ELM 510, the APWU filed a timely appeal to arbitration and subsequently provided a timely 15-day statement. The Union did not, however, request a meeting -- and no meeting was held -- prior to its arbitration appeal.

The wording of Article 19 does contemplate that such a meeting will take place. It states: "If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement..., it may then submit the issue to arbitration...." Moreover, the requirement that each party provide a statement of the "precise issues involved and the facts giving rise to such issues" strongly suggests that the parties assumed there would have been some prior discussion of those issues. There is no requirement, however, that the Union present its position at this meeting -- to be attended by manager(s) who are knowledgeable about "the purpose of the proposed change and its impact on employees" -- in advance of its decision to appeal to arbitration and submission of its 15-day statement.

In this particular case, the record leaves little doubt that the Union's position in opposition to the mandatory use of the WH-380 forms, including its reliance on Article 10, was or should have been known to the Postal Service at the time the Union submitted its Article 19 appeal to arbitration. Article 10 was cited by the Union in its 15-day statement in the RMD grievance which led to the 2003 pre-arbitration settlement that later formed the basis for the provisions in the 2007 JCIM which are identified as relating to Article 10. The Union's position regarding optional use of the WH-380 also was reiterated in the correspondence that preceded the Postal Service's Article 19 notice. Thus, it is difficult to see how the Postal Service was prejudiced by the lack of a meeting in this case. (Article 10 also is cited in the Union's 15-day statement in its Article 19 appeal.)[1]

Ultimately, however, it is not necessary to rule on the issue of whether the Union's failure to request or attend a meeting precluded it from filing an Article 19 appeal challenging the ELM change in dispute. The Union also filed an Article 15 grievance asserting that the ELM change violated the National Agreement, including Articles 5, 10 and 19, and that it "is contrary to applicable regulations and law, and mutual understanding between the parties."

The Postal Service argues that if the Union's Article 19 appeal is precluded by its failure to properly follow the procedures in Article 19, then the Union should not be permitted to avoid the consequences of its failure by raising a new dispute under Article 15. In the Postal Service's view that would render the requirements of Article 19 meaningless. The Postal Service has cited no arbitral authority in support of this position. In Case No. HOC-3N-C 418 (Snow, 1994), the Postal Service argued that as a result of the Union's failure to object to rules promulgated under Article 19 fourteen years earlier, the Union forfeited its right to challenge the rules through "rights" arbitration. Arbitrator Snow noted: "It is not certain whether the parties ever intended Article 19 to have the sort of preclusive effect now asserted by the Employer." But he concluded there was no need in that case to resolve that "difficult question." In an earlier 1980 decision, Case No. N8-NA-0003, Arbitrator Gamser denied a grievance filed more than a year after the Postal Service gave Article XIX notice of changes in certain Handbooks. In the interim the parties had negotiated a new contract which readopted Article XIX without change, and Gamser concluded that by doing so the Unions agreed under Article XIX to continue in effect the terms of those Handbooks. In dictum he stated:

> If the Unions believed that the changes in the payroll computation contemplated by this Section [of the F-22 and F-21 Handbooks] were in conflict with the terms of the then existing National Agreement, particularly Article VIII-4-B, then a grievance should have been raised and processed to a resolution. If the contention of the Unions was that this change was neither fair, reasonable, nor equitable, a right to grieve also existed under the terms of Article XIX.

No broad pronouncements on the issue raised by the Postal Service are needed here. Even if the Union's Article 19 appeal in this case was deemed faulty, there can be no reasonable claim that the APWU acquiesced in the protested ELM change. Its timely Article 19 appeal, even if defective, certainly put the Postal Service on notice as to the Union's position that the change violated the National Agreement, and the Union filed its Article 15 grievance within days after the Postal Service asserted its claim that the Union's Article 19 appeal was procedurally defective. On these particular facts, I am not persuaded that the Union should be barred from pursuing its Article 15 grievance, at least with respect to allegations that the change violated Articles 5 and 10 of the National Agreement. There is no necessity in this case to determine whether the Union -- having been given proper notice of the change -- could only raise a challenge that the change violates Article 19 because it is not fair, reasonable, and equitable in an Article 19 appeal, and not an Article 15 grievance.

Merits (Article 15 Grievance)

The issue here is not whether any of the Unions' forms -- which the Postal Service previously accepted if they contained the required information -- are valid, but whether the Postal Service may exclude any certification that is not on a WH-380, even if it satisfies the certification requirements set forth in Section 103(b) of the FMLA.

Article 10.2.A of the National Agreement provides that:

> A. The leave regulations in Subchapter 510 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual, insofar as such regulations establish wages, hours and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement, shall remain in effect for the life of this Agreement.

The Postal Service maintains that the Union's Article 10 claim should be dismissed because it was raised for the first time at arbitration. The Postal Service, however, agreed to waive "any arguments it may have had regarding the lack of a Step 4 meeting, exchange of 15-day statements...." Moreover, as previously noted, the Union's reliance on Article 10 was or should have been known to the Postal Service at the time the Union submitted its Article 19 appeal to arbitration, and was included in its Article 19 15-day statement.

The Postal Service further argues that Article 10.2.A does not apply because the provisions of Subchapter 510 of the ELM that were changed do not "establish wages, hours and working conditions." That argument is not persuasive.

In its 15-day statement in the RMD grievance, the Union asserted the applicability of the provision in Article 10.2.A as part of its contentions. In the 2003 pre-arbitration settlement of that grievance the parties agreed that: "There is no required form or format for information submitted by an employee in support of an [FMLA protected] absence...." The parties subsequently included this agreement in the provisions of their JCIM relating to Article 10. As the JCIM Preamble makes clear: "this manual provides a mutually agreed to explanation on how to apply the contract to the issues addressed." (Emphasis added.) The Postal Service stresses that the form submitted by an employee is filled out by the health care provider, and argues that the new policy does not change the burdens on the employee who seeks FMLA protection. But, as a Headquarters Labor Relations manager recognized in 1995 -- shortly after the FMLA was enacted -- employees and their Unions have privacy concerns that may influence an employee's choice of form on which to submit an FMLA certification. Although the WH-380 provides the Postal Service a "safe harbor" -- so it cannot legally be challenged for privacy violation -- that does not negate an employee's interest in what information is provided by their health care provider, and, hence, what form is used. Moreover, the Postal Service's insistence that only WH-380 forms be used could have a negative effect on when, if not whether, FMLA leave is approved, cause additional inconvenience and expense to the employee, and possibly subject an employee to discipline for an unauthorized absence, even if the employee submits certification that meets the statutory requirements. In short, the ELM 510 provision that was changed established a working condition and, hence, was not subject to unilateral change by the Postal Service under Article 10.2.A.

Significantly, there has been no change in the FMLA or the related DOL regulations that would necessitate mandatory use of the WH-380. On the contrary, under current DOL regulations, use of the WH-380 by an employer is optional. Because unilaterally changing ELM 510 to mandate use of previously optional WH-380 forms violated Article 10.2.A of the National

Agreement and the JCIM, there is no need here to decide whether the Postal Service's action in requiring use of the WH-380 also violated the FMLA, as the Union contends.[2]

Accordingly, the Postal Service is directed to cease and desist from requiring employees to submit FMLA medical certifications using only the WH-380 forms.

Dear John:

On several occasions our representatives met to discuss whether the Resource Management Database (RMD) or its web-based counterpart, enterprise Resource Management System (eRMS) violates the National Agreement.

As a result of these discussions the parties have mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is presented. Additionally, the parties mutually agree to the following understanding:

The eRMS will be the web-based version of RMD, located on the Postal Service intranet. The eRMS will have the same functional characteristics as RMD.

The RMD/eRMS is a computer program. It does not constitute a new rule, regulation or policy, nor does it change or modify existing leave and attendance rules and regulations. Local policies, developed pursuant to these programs, shall not be implemented if they are in conflict with the National Agreement or with applicable manuals and handbooks.

When requested in accordance with Article 17.3 and 31.3, relevant RMD/eRMS records will be provided to the Union Representative.

The RMD/eRMS was developed to automate leave management, provide a centralized database for leave related data and ensure compliance with various leave rules and regulations, including the FMLA, the Sick Leave for Dependant Care Memorandum of Understanding and the American with Disabilities Act. The RMD/eRMS records may be used by both parties to support/dispute contentions raised in attendance-related actions.

When requested, the locally set business rule, which triggers a supervisor's review of an employee's leave record, will be shared with the NPMHU Local President or his/her designee.

It remains management's responsibility to consider only those elements of past record in disciplinary actions that comply with Article 16.10 of the National Agreement. The RMD/eRMS may track all current discipline; however, it must reflect the final settlement/decision reached in the Article 15 - Grievance-Arbitration Procedure.

An employee's written request to have discipline removed from their record, pursuant to Article 16.10 of the National Agreement, shall also serve as the request to remove the record of discipline from RMD/eRMS.

Supervisor notes of discussions pursuant to Article 16.2 are not to be entered in the "supervisor's notes" section of RMD/eRMS.

RMD/eRMS users must comply with the Privacy Act, as well as handbooks, manuals and published regulations relating to leave and attendance.

RMD/eRMS security meets or exceeds security requirements mandated by AS-818.

It is understood that no function performed by RMD/eRMS now or in the future may violate the NPMHU National Agreement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgement of agreement to settle this case.

Award Summary

The three issues raised in this case are resolved as follows:

Nature of Illness

In applying ELM 513.332 in the context of the RMD process, ACS's may ask questions necessary to make FMLA determinations and to determine whether the absence is due to an on-the-job injury or for a condition which requires ELM 865 return-to-work procedures, in a manner consistent with the Findings in this decision, but may not otherwise require employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury.

FMLA Second and Third Opinion Process

The Postal Service's current process for initiating FMLA review by a third health care provider, at issue in this case, is not consistent with the FMLA or with ELM 515.1 and 515.54, and implementation of that process violates Articles 5 and 10.2.A of the National Agreement. The Postal Service is directed to rescind that process.

FMLA Paid Leave Documentation

The Unions' contention that the protested Postal Service paid leave documentation policy is improper and impermissible under the National Agreement is rejected.

BACKGROUND

In September 2000, the APWU initiated a national level dispute regarding implementation of certain aspects of the Postal Service's Resource Management Database (RMD) and its web-based counterpart, eRMS.[1] In an agreement dated March 28, 2003 the parties were able to resolve their disputes over some, but not all, of the issues raised by the APWU. This settlement agreement, in relevant part, states:

> This dispute involves the implementation of the Postal Service Resource Management Database (RMD), its web-based enterprise Resource Management System (eRMS), and the application of current leave-related rules and policies, including the Family and Medical Leave Act.
> After discussing this matter, the parties agreed to the following mutual understanding and settlement of this case:
>
> - Pursuant to Article 10 of the National Agreement, leave regulations in Subchapter 510 of the Employee Labor Relations Manual (ELM), which establish wages, hours and working conditions of covered employees, shall remain in effect for the life of the National Agreement. The formulation of local leave programs are subject to local implementation procedures, in accordance with Article 30 of the National Agreement.
>
> - The purpose of RMD/eRMS is to provide a uniform automated process for recording data relative to existing leave rules and regulations. RMD/eRMS (or similar system of records) may not alter or change existing rules, regulations, the National Agreement, law, local memorandums or understanding and agreements, or grievance-arbitration settlements and awards.

- Pursuant to part 513.332 of the ELM, employees must notify appropriate postal authorities of their illness or injury and expected duration of absence as soon as possible....

- Pursuant to part 513.361 of the ELM, when an employee requests sick leave for absences of 3 days or less, "medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or need to care for a family member is only required when an employee is on restricted sick leave (see 513.39) or when the supervisor deems documentation desirable for the protection of the interests of the Postal Service." A supervisor's determination that medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacitation is desirable for the protection of the interest of the Postal Service must be made on a case by case basis and may not be arbitrary, capricious, or unreasonable.

- Pursuant to part 513.362 of the ELM, when an employee requests sick leave for absences in excess of 3 days (scheduled work days), employees are required to submit medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work for themselves or of need to care for a family member, and if requested, > substantiation of the family relationship. Medical documentation from the employee's attending physician or other attending practitioner should provide an explanation of the nature of the employee's illness or injury sufficient to indicate to management that the employee was (or will be) unable to perform his or her normal duties for the period of absence. Supervisors may accept substantiation other than medical documentation if they believe it supports approval of the sick leave request.

> The parties agreed to continue discussions related to management requesting the nature of the illness when an employee calls in; FMLA second/third opinion procedures; medical documentation requirements to substitute paid leave for unpaid intermittent FMLA leave. In the event no agreement is reached within fifteen (15) days from the date of this settlement, the Union may initiate a dispute at the national level....

By letter dated April 23, 2003, the APWU initiated the present national level dispute over the three remaining issues. This dispute subsequently was appealed to arbitration, where the NALC and the NPMHU intervened in support of the APWU's position on the three issues.

Nature of Illness

ELM 17, July 2002, provides as follows in ELM 513.332:

Unexpected Illness or Injury

An exception to the advance approval requirement is made for unexpected illness or injuries; however, in these situations the employee must notify appropriate postal authorities of their illness or injury and expected duration of absence as soon as possible. When sufficient information is provided to the supervisor to determine that the absence is to be covered by FMLA, the supervisor completes Form 3971 and mails it to the employee's address of record along with a Publication 71.

When the supervisor is not provided enough information in advance to determine whether or not the absence is covered by FMLA, the employee must submit a request for sick leave on Form 3971 and applicable medical or other certification upon returning to duty and explain the reason for the emergency to his or her supervisor. Employees may be required to submit acceptable evidence of incapacity to work as outlined in the provisions of 513.36, Documentation Requirements, or noted on the reverse of Form 3971 or Publication 71, as applicable.

The supervisor approves or disapproves the leave request.....

Prior to RMD, call-ins sometimes were taken by the employee's supervisor and sometimes by other individuals, including bargaining unit employees. With the implementation of RMD (at most facilities), the call-ins are taken by designated "Attendance Control Supervisors" (ACS's), who input information previously handwritten on Form 3971 (Request for or Notification of Absence) into a computer system. Most recently, the Postal Service has begun to implement an Interactive Voice Recognition (IVR) system as part of the RMD program. IVR is a computerized speech application system that is replacing ACS's taking employees' calls for absences due to nonjob-related illness and injury. In late 2003, the APWU was provided with the proposed IVR script (APWU Exhibit 23).

The Postal Service maintains that prior to RMD, supervisors routinely asked employees the nature of their illness/injury when they called in absent. It presented testimony by headquarters Labor Relations Specialist Sandra Savoie in support of this contention. She testified to her experience in Dayton, Ohio both as a clerk and local APWU official from 1978 to 1988, and as a Postal Service labor relations official at various locations since 1988. After the APWU raised this issue in connection with implementation of RMD, Savoie testified, she queried the field and was told that supervision considers it very important and necessary that it be able to get this information, and also that it has been asked for "forever".

Although the IVR script does not ask employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury in so many words, Savoie said, it asks a series of questions -- capable of a yes/no response -- designed to provide supervision with equivalent information. She pointed out that a computer can be programmed to ask the same questions every time it receives a call-in, while it is more difficult to "program" a live person to do that. At the end of the IVR message, she noted, employees are told: "Upon your return to work, you may be required to explain your unscheduled absence."

APWU Director of Industrial Relations Greg Bell testified that when the Postal Service notified the Union of its plans to implement RMD, nothing was said about this including asking employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury when they call in absent. Bell said this had not previously been a problem, but the Union subsequently began to receive many complaints from the field that this now was being done.

Bell stated that during his employment as a clerk and local APWU official in the Philadelphia office starting in 1970, employees were not required to describe the nature of their illness/injury when they called in absent. Such information was provided, pursuant to ELM 513.364, only when medical documentation was required. This practice was reflected in the minutes of a January 2003 Philadelphia BMC labor-management meeting which states: "The parties agreed the nature of the illness should not be requested when employee calls in." (APWU Exhibit 20.) Bell also presented an April 2000 Step 3 settlement of a San Antonio office grievance to the same effect. (APWU Exhibit 21.) He added that, contrary to the Postal Service's claim that the policy always has been to request information about the nature of an employee's illness/injury when they call in absent, "I'm aware of that not being a policy in many, if not most facilities nationwide."

Union Position

The Unions contend that asking employees to describe the nature of the illness/injury for which they are calling in absent violates the National Agreement because it is neither permitted by, nor consistent with the leave provisions of the ELM. Article 10.2 of the National Agreement requires that those leave regulations remain in effect for the life of the National Agreement.

Since before implementation of RMD, ELM 513.332 has required employees who have an unexpected illness/injury to call in and "notify appropriate postal authorities as soon as possible as to their illness or injury and expected duration of absence".[2] As explained by APWU witness Bell, the supervisor or clerk who received the call prior to RMD manually completed appropriate parts of a Form 3971 (Request for or Notification of

[2] The APWU cites ELM 15, December 1999, which was in effect when the APWU initiated a national level dispute over certain aspects of the RMD. The Postal Service cites ELM 17, July 2002, in effect when the APWU initiated the present dispute over the three remaining issues from the earlier dispute which the parties were unable to settle. There is a slight difference in wording between the two versions of ELM 513.332. In ELM 15 employees are required to provide notice "as to their illness or injury", while ELM 17 states "of their illness or injury". The parties agree that this difference in wording does not signify any substantive difference. Unless otherwise stated, references to the ELM in this opinion are to ELM 17.

Absence). Upon return to duty, the employee completed additional parts of Form 3971, thereby requesting leave for the absence. A supervisor then completed the form by approving or disapproving the leave request.

For certain types of absences, such as those in excess of three days or those taken by employees on restricted sick leave, the Postal Service requires the employee to supply medical documentation, typically upon the employee's return to work. ELM 513.364 states that this documentation "should provide an explanation of the nature of the employee's illness or injury". The Unions stress this is the only provision in the ELM that refers to a requirement that a description of the nature of an employee's illness/injury be provided. The Unions contend that if the intent had been to require an employee to explain the nature of the illness/injury when calling in to report an absence, it would have been simple to write such a requirement into ELM 513.332, as was done in ELM 513.364.

The Unions point out that Form 3971 not only does not call for information regarding the nature of the illness/injury to be recorded when a call-in is received, but states in the "Remarks" section: "Do not enter medical information." The Unions also point out that when the Postal Service implemented RMD, it did not expressly require the ACS who takes the call and inputs information regarding the absence into the RMD system to inquire about the nature of the illness/injury. The RMD system continues to use a computerized version of Form 3971, and there was no written requirement that ACS's ask for or employees provide such an explanation. Nonetheless, with the implementation of RMD, the APWU began to receive numerous complaints that employees were being asked to describe the nature of their illness/injury. When the APWU raised this issue, the Postal Service defended its policy of making such an inquiry.

The Unions assert that the Postal Service has provided no basis for this policy except to suggest it reflects past practice. The Unions insist, however, that the record does not support the existence of such a past practice, and that, in any event, a purported past practice cannot reverse the clear language in the ELM and other Postal Service documents that clearly do not authorize the Postal Service to inquire about the nature of an employee's illness/injury when an employee calls in absent.

The Unions also dispute the Postal Service's assertion that it is necessary to make such an intrusive inquiry at the time an employee calls in absent. Neither determinations about whether an absence is FMLA-protected, nor the need for a return-to-duty exam can or should be made based on what employees report when they call in absent. Instead, the system needs only to flag an employee to receive further follow-up information on the FMLA or an instruction to be cleared by the employee's doctor to return to work. Both outcomes are achieved, without requiring employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury, by asking whether the absence falls within the general categories prompting FMLA information or return-to-duty exams pursuant to ELM 865.2. The Postal Service implicitly has acknowledged that less intrusive questions can serve these needs in its implementation of the IVR system and in the script it provided for use by the ACS's operating the RMD system, which the APWU obtained from the Los Angeles office (APWU Exhibit 8). Determinations as to whether a fitness-for-duty exam is required in accordance with ELM 513.38 typically are made when the employee is back at work. The Postal Service does not need to know or make a decision concerning a fitness-for-duty exam when an employee calls in absent. Notably, the IVR system makes no such inquiry.

Intervenor NALC stresses that ELM 513.332 -- the meaning of which is the crux of this case -- provides that the employee's obligation is to "notify appropriate postal authorities of their illness or injury...." (Emphasis added.) Unlike an employee's immediate supervisor, ACS's taking call-ins under the RMD system cannot be characterized as "appropriate postal authorities" for purposes of receiving information as to the nature of an employee's illness. They have no authority to make decisions for which the nature of illness information may be relevant, such as whether the employee is entitled to sick leave, whether a fitness-for-duty exam is warranted or whether the employee's condition is covered by FMLA. Moreover, Intervenor NPMHU points out, the information provided by the absent employee, without the underlying medical diagnosis, would be insufficient to permit the ACS to make such determinations, and asking the nature of the illness during the initial call to an ACS impermissibly intrudes on employee privacy.

Employer Position

The Postal Service contends that it is necessary and appropriate for the Postal Service to inquire as to the nature of an employee's illness or injury during call-ins reporting an unexpected absence. Such inquiry is necessary to enforcement of Postal Service policies, including FMLA, which require certain determinations to be made prior to the employee's return to work.

The Postal Service is required to make a determination as to whether the condition is covered under the FMLA, for which it needs to know the reasons for the absence, as the APWU has acknowledged in item 21 of the Joint APWU and USPS Family and Medical Leave Act Questions and Answers. The Postal Service also cites the February 2003 USPS-NALC Joint Contract Administration Manual (JCAM) on this point.

The Postal Service maintains that the nature of the illness/injury inquiry is crucial to its ability to timely schedule an employee for a fitness-for-duty examination, ELM 513.38, and to enforce the return to work provisions in ELM 865. ELM 513.38 provides:

> When the reason for an employee's sick leave is of such a nature as to raise justifiable doubt concerning the employee's ability to satisfactorily and/or safely perform duties, a fitness-for-duty medical examination is requested through appropriate authority. A complete report of the facts, medical and otherwise, should support the request.

ELM 865.2 provides:

> Employees returning to duty after an absence for communicable or contagious diseases, mental and nervous conditions, diabetes, cardiovascular diseases, or seizure disorders or following hospitalization must submit a physician's statement doing one of the following:
>
> a. Stating unequivocally that the employee is fit for full duties without hazard to him- or herself or others.
>
> b. Indicating the restrictions that should be considered for accommodation before return to duty.

The Memorandum of Understanding on Sick Leave for Dependent Care, included in Appendix B of the National Agreement, states:

> The parties agree that, during the term of the 2000 National Agreement, sick leave may be used by an employee to give care or otherwise attend to a family member having an illness, injury or other condition which, if an employee had such condition, would justify the use of sick leave by that employee....

The Postal Service stresses that without knowing the nature of the condition for which sick leave is requested, it has no basis for making a determination as to whether the employee's request falls within this MOU's coverage.

The Postal Service asserts that with the implementation of the IVR system, it continues to obtain the same information previously obtained by asking employees about the nature of their illness/injury, albeit in a different format.

The Postal Service argues that the plain language of ELM 513.332 supports its position that such an inquiry is permitted. That provision states that an employee "must notify appropriate postal authorities....of their illness of injury," which the Postal Service reasonably interprets to mean more than a mere statement that an employee is ill or injured. While ELM 513.364 specifies that when medical documentation is required to be submitted to the Postal Service it "should provide an explanation of the nature of the employee's illness or injury", that does not mean that such an inquiry may not be made during the call-in. On the contrary, if the Postal Service was precluded from making such an inquiry, a supervisor would not have the information needed to apply that portion of ELM 513.364 which states: "Supervisors may accept substantiation other than medical documentation if they believe it supports approval of the sick leave request." Likewise, clearly a supervisor needs more information than just a simple statement that the employee is "ill" in order to decide whether to require medical documentation for absences of three days or less "for the protection of the Postal Service" pursuant to ELM 513.361.

The Postal Service stresses that the practice of inquiring as to the nature of an employee's illness/injury has existed for decades and was not initiated in the context of RMD. This was established by the testimony of Postal Service witness Savoie, and is confirmed by numerous regional arbitration awards which show that the Postal Service routinely asked for and was often provided with "nature of illness/injury" information. Union evidence of agreements in two offices (Philadelphia and San Antonio) that employees would not be asked the nature of their illness when they call in does not contradict the existence of the practice, but rather confirms that it existed at those offices before the local parties agreed otherwise.

FMLA Second and Third Opinion Process

The Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) includes the following provisions, at 29 USC §2613(c) and (d):

> (c) Second opinion
>
> In any case in which the employer has reason to doubt the validity of the certification provided [by the employee's health care provider to support a request for FMLA leave]... the employer may require, at the expense of the employer, that the eligible employee obtain the opinion of a second health care provider designated or approved by the employer....

* * *

(d) Resolution of conflicting opinions

(1) In general

> In any case in which the second opinion described in subsection (c) of this section differs from the opinion in the original certification..., the employer may require, at the expense of the employer, that the employee obtain the opinion of a third health care provider designated or approved jointly by the employer and the employee....

(2) Finality

> The opinion of the third health care provider...shall be considered to be final and shall be binding on the employer and the employee.

Regulations issued by the United States Department of Labor (DOL) under the FMLA further provide, at 29 CFR §825.307(c):

> ...The third health care provider must be designated or approved jointly by the employer and the employee. The employer and the employee must each act in good faith to attempt to reach agreement on whom to select for the third opinion provider. If the employer does not attempt in good faith to reach agreement, the employer will be bound by the first certification. If the employee does not attempt in good faith to reach agreement, the employee will be bound by the second certification. For example, an employee who refuses to agree to see a doctor in the specialty in question may be > failing to act in good faith. On the other hand, an employer that refuses to agree to any doctor on a list of specialists in the appropriate field provided by the employee and whom the employee has not previously consulted may be failing to act in good faith.

In conjunction with implementation of RMD, the Postal Service developed a series of sample or form letters to be utilized in the field to facilitate consistency and compliance with the FMLA nationwide. (These letters were discussed with the APWU and revisions were made based on APWU input, but they are not negotiated letters.) One of these letters, which are to be used even where RMD is not implemented, is a letter sent to an employee after the Postal Service has obtained a second medical opinion which differs from the initial certification provided by the employee's health care provider. This sample letter reads, in relevant part, as follows:

> In reference to your request for FMLA Leave protection, the USPS medical unit has received the results of the 2nd opinion medical evaluation from Dr. «Name».
> As explained in the attached letter from the USPS medical unit, Dr. «Name» has determined that the condition for which leave is requested does not warrant FMLA protected leave. If you accept the result of this 2nd opinion evaluation, then this decision will stand.
> If you do not accept these results, you must notify me «name» @ «Phone Number» within 5 calendar days of receiving this letter, and a 3rd opinion appointment will be scheduled.

> You should leave a message, if «name» is not in the office, to ensure that you have made contact within 5 days. A health care provider for the third opinion will be jointly agreed upon by you and the Postal Service.
> If the employee has not contacted me within the 5 days, the 2nd opinion will go on record as the final decision.

The Postal Service notes that some offices have elected to provide employees more than five days to respond, and that, in any event, employees can request additional time in which to do so.

Union Position

The Unions contend that by placing the responsibility on the employee to demand a third doctor's opinion, the Postal Service has abrogated the responsibilities the FMLA expressly places on the employer and nullified the purpose of the third doctor's opinion option. The FMLA expressly provides that only the employer can require a third doctor's opinion. The Unions' objection to the process established by the Postal Service is that it not only puts the responsibility for deciding whether to get a third doctor's opinion on the employee, but it creates a new default rule under which an employee who does not take the initiative to request a third doctor's opinion is deemed to have affirmatively accepted the Postal Service's second doctor's opinion as final. This is not only inconsistent with the FMLA, the Unions stress, it is patently unfair.

The Unions point out that while the employer is not required under the FMLA to request a third medical opinion, it is the employer's option whether to do so. If the employer chooses not to seek a third opinion, the employee is not bound by the second opinion. The employer in that situation may not be legally required to accept the employee's request for FMLA leave, as a number of courts have held, but, if the employer does not do so, the question of whether the absence was FMLA-covered falls to the ultimate factfinder, either in arbitration or litigation.

In practice, Intervenor NPMHU asserts, the FMLA puts the ball in the employer's court to weigh the potential difficulties of disproving the employee's medical certification in arbitration or at trial against both the expense of the third doctor's exam and the risk the third doctor will side with the employee. The Postal Service, however, is attempting to have it both ways by avoiding the risk and expense of a third opinion, while foreclosing the employee's opportunity to challenge the Postal Service's denial through arbitration or a lawsuit. This is not what the FMLA or National Agreement contemplate. Intervenor NPMHU contends that the Postal Service's policy is unfair, in violation of ELM 511.1, and impermissibly limits employees' FMLA rights in violation of ELM 515.1 and the FMLA.

The Unions also reject the Postal Service's assertion that its process is consistent with the FMLA because the Postal Service considers an employee's failure to demand a third doctor's opinion within a certain time period to be an act of noncooperation binding the employee to the second opinion. The FMLA regulations state that if an employee fails to attempt in good faith to reach agreement on whom to select for the third opinion provider, the employee will be bound by the first certification. Those regulations make no reference to an employee's failure to cooperate in initiating the third doctor's opinion process because the law and regulations do not give employees a responsibility or duty to make that decision.[3]

The Unions contend that Article 5 of the National Agreement prohibits the Postal Service from taking any action affecting terms and conditions of employment that would violate the National Agreement or otherwise be inconsistent with the Postal Service's obligations under law. Because the third doctor's opinion process concerns the conditions under which a postal employee is granted or denied the protection of the FMLA, the propriety of that process, which was unilaterally established by the Postal Service, is properly reviewable by the Arbitrator. The Unions insist that the Arbitrator is fully empowered to interpret the FMLA and its regulations in addressing this issue, citing the decision of Arbitrator Nolan in USPS and NALC and NPMHU, Case No. Q98N-4Q-C 010190839 (2002).

[3] Intervenor NPMHU further argues that the Postal Service's requirement that an employee respond in five days is inconsistent with the much more lenient "good faith negotiation" requirement which is all that federal law allows.

Employer Position

The Postal Service contends that neither FMLA regulations, nor the ELM provisions implementing the FMLA, contain a clearly delineated process regarding how the third opinion health care provider is to be selected. The Postal Service insists that the process it established in conjunction with the RMD process is fair, reasonable and consistent with the FMLA, specifically, with Section 825.307 of the applicable DOL regulations. That provision requires that if the employer requires the employee to obtain a third medical opinion, "the third health care provider must be designated or approved jointly by the employer and the employee". The regulation does not specify the process which will bring the parties together to select a third opinion health care provider.

Under the process established by the Postal Service, employees are informed that they can accept the second opinion or can call within the specified time-frame to arrange for a jointly agreed-upon health care provider to provide a third opinion. If the employee does not call within the designated period, the Postal Service infers that the employee has elected to forego the third opinion and agrees instead to abide by the second opinion. Put another way, the Postal Service asserts, the employee's election not to call is considered a failure to cooperate, pursuant to Section 825.307(c) of the DOL regulations, and the second opinion becomes binding. Contrary to the Unions' allegation that the process improperly shifts responsibility for demanding a third opinion from the employer to the employee, this process gives an employee the option of asking for a third opinion or accepting the second opinion.

The Postal Service asserts that in establishing this process it took into account that a third medical exam intrudes on employees' time (as it is off the clock) and necessarily forces them to relinquish some privacy interests by subjecting them to examination by an additional health care provider. Allowing employees to elect whether or not they want a third opinion, the Postal Service argues, is a good compromise because employees still can get the benefit of what the statute intended -- the right to a third and final tiebreaker -- but they also get the right to say "no" to a third exam if they are willing to live with the results of the second opinion, which in many cases may not be very different from the first opinion.

The Postal Service also maintains that the arbitrator lacks the authority to decide the dispute concerning second and third opinions because at its essence it is a dispute about the meaning and intent of FMLA provisions and DOL regulations and not the collective bargaining agreement. In support of this position, it cites decisions by Arbitrator Bloch in USPS v Federation of Postal Police Officers, Case No. FPSP-Nat-81-006 (1983), Arbitrator Nolan in USPS and NALC and NPMHU, Case No. Q98N-4Q-C010190839 (2002), and Arbitrator Allen in USPS v. APWU, Case No. E98C-4E-C 00235731 (2003).

Subchapter 513 of the ELM covers sick leave. ELM 513.362 provides as follows:

> For absences in excess of 3 days, employees are required to submit medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or of need to care for a family member and, if requested, substantiation of the family relationship.

At issue is the Postal Service's policy of requiring medical documentation under ELM 513.362 in situations where an employee, who has previously provided FMLA certification of a serious health condition indicating the need for intermittent leave, requests paid leave for an absence which falls between the certification and a recertification. The FMLA limits the circumstances, including frequency, under which the employer can require recertification for purposes of FMLA protected leave. The Postal Service, however, requires an employee to provide medical documentation for all absences in excess of three days, if the employee requests paid leave, even if no such documentation could be required for FMLA leave.

The APWU claims it was not aware of this policy until after the Postal Service began to implement RMD. APWU Industrial Relations Director Bell stated that, to his recollection, this was not an issue in contention in 1993 when the FMLA went into effect. He also pointed out that the documentation requirements in ELM 513.362 apply not only to an employee requesting paid sick leave, but also to an employee requesting annual leave or leave without pay under the applicable ELM provisions governing such leaves. The purpose of the documentation, he stressed, is to substantiate the employee's incapacity for work. The APWU insists this is unjustified in cases where the employee already has provided FMLA certification of the need for intermittent leave, which necessarily establishes the employee's incapacity for work.

Postal Service Labor Relations Specialist Savoie insisted that the documentation requirements for paid leave -- sick leave or annual leave in lieu of sick leave -- have not changed, and are the same as before the FMLA. The Postal Service, however, does not require documentation for leave without pay if the leave is protected under FMLA.

Union Position

The Unions contend the Postal Service's policy of requiring medical documentation, in addition to an approved FMLA medical certification identifying a need for intermittent leave, when an employee seeks to substitute paid sick leave for unpaid FMLA leave for an absence of four days or more is improper and impermissible under the National Agreement.

Employer Position

The Postal Service asserts that paid leave is beyond the mandate of the FMLA, and that the statute and DOL regulations make clear that an employee seeking to substitute paid leave for unpaid protected FMLA leave must meet the employer's normal requirements for paid leave.

The Postal Service acknowledges that information contained on a FMLA medical certification may also meet the Postal Service's paid sick leave documentation requirements. This occurs, however, only with regard to the particular absence triggering certification or recertification that contains information about incapacity during the current absence sufficient to justify paid leave. For absences not triggering a request for certification or recertification, the Postal Service may separately request sick leave documentation consistent with its regulations.

FINDINGS

Nature of Illness

The term "nature of the employee's illness or injury" appears only in ELM 513.364, which provides that when employees are required to submit medical documentation:

> The documentation should provide an explanation of the nature of the employee's illness or injury sufficient to indicate to management that the employee was (or will be) unable to perform his or her normal duties for the period of absence....

In cases where employees have called in absent due to unexpected illness or injury (ELM 513.332), the purpose of this medical documentation (or other acceptable evidence) is to substantiate the employee's incapacity to work when that is required pursuant to ELM 513.361 (three days or less), 513.362 (over three days) or 513.363 (extended periods).

ELM 513.332, which is the key provision in this dispute, provides that, in case of unexpected illness or injury: "the employee must notify appropriate postal authorities of their illness or injury and expected duration of absence as soon as possible." The words "of their illness or injury" are ambiguous, when read by themselves. It is reasonable, however, to conclude that they do not mean the same thing as "the nature of the employee's illness or injury" found in ELM 513.364. If they did, presumably the same wording would have been used. The distinction, moreover, is not limited to wording, the information to be provided by an employee calling in absent pursuant to ELM 513.332 serves different purposes than the information provided pursuant to ELM 513.364.

Call-ins pursuant to ELM 513.332 are not made to substantiate incapacity to work during the absence. The ACS taking the employee's call as part of the RMD process is not making a determination whether to approve or disapprove of leave for the absence. Nor is the supervisor who ultimately will make that determination going to do so on the basis of whatever the employee may or may not have told the ACS regarding the nature of her or his illness/injury. Leaving aside for the moment FMLA leave, ELM 513.332 is quite clear:

> ...the employee must submit a request for sick leave on Form 3971 and applicable medical or other certification upon returning to duty and explain the reason for the emergency to his or her supervisor. Employees may be required to submit acceptable evidence of incapacity to work as outlined in the provisions of 513.36, Documentation Requirements, or noted on the reverse of Form 3971 or Publication 71, as applicable.
> The supervisor approves or disapproves the leave request....

The primary purpose of the call-in is to notify the Postal Service as soon as possible that the employee is going to be absent. For that, a simple statement that "I am sick/injured" might be sufficient. But the call-in, as the Unions acknowledge, serves other purposes, and the Postal Service is entitled to more than that. This case is not about whether the employee is only required to say "I am sick/injured".

Another major purpose of the call-in is to determine whether the absence is (or may be) covered by FMLA, in which case -- as stated in ELM 513.332 -- the supervisor completes Form 3971 and mails it (or FMLA Certification of Health Care Provider Form WH-380) to the employee along with Publication 71, which explains an employee's FMLA rights and obligations. (This applies whether the absence is due to the condition of the employee or a family member.) As stated in item 21 of the Joint APWU and USPS FMLA Qs and As:

> ...an employee must explain the reasons for the absence and give enough information to allow the employer to determine that the leave qualifies for FMLA protection. If the employee fails to explain the reasons, the leave may not be protected under the FMLA.

Similarly, the USPS-NALC JCAM states (at page 10-15):

> Management is within its rights to ask employees about the circumstances of their condition in order to determine whether absences may be protected under the FMLA and/or whether absences are for a condition which requires the ELM 865 return to work procedures.

In order to make the necessary FMLA determination, the ACS need not ask the employee to describe his or her symptoms or to otherwise describe the specific nature of the illness. Indeed, as also stated in the USPS-NALC JCAM: "Other than pregnancy, the circumstances determine whether a [health] condition is serious, not the diagnosis." So, asking the employee questions like "What's the nature of your illness?" or "What's wrong with you?" does not really facilitate a FMLA determination. In addition to asking the employee directly whether the leave request is for a new or existing FMLA condition -- or "Is this leave FMLA?" (see ACS/RMD script obtained by APWU from the Los Angeles office) -- which the employee may well be able to answer, the ACS can ask other questions that tie directly into the FMLA. A good example is in the IVR script, where the IVR "voice" asks:

> Say yes if your leave is because you or your family member has one of the following FMLA conditions: pregnancy, birth or placement of a child, overnight hospitalization, incapacity over three days with visits to a health care provider, a condition that without treatment would incapacitate over three days or incapacity from a long term condition with multiple treatments. Is your leave related to one of these conditions, Yes or No?

Employees who answer affirmatively, are then told they will be mailed Publication 71 and the necessary FMLA certification form to be completed by their health care provider.

Information obtained when an employee calls in absent due to illness/injury is needed for two other purposes. One is to determine whether the absence is due to an on-the-job injury, which can be asked directly. Another, which is recognized in the USPS-NALC JCAM, is to determine whether the absence is for a condition which requires return-to-work certification under ELM 865. This also can be done without asking employees to specifically describe the nature of their condition, as shown by the following portion of the IVR script:

> All right one last question. Is your absence due to hospitalization, mental or nervous condition, diabetes or seizure disorders, cardiovascular diseases, communicable or contagious disease, or for more than 21 days? Please say "yes" or "no".

> YES: In order to return to work, you must provide a detailed medical report, sufficient to make a determination that you can return to work without hazard to self or others, and indicating any restrictions per local procedures.
> NO:

For all of these legitimate purposes, the Postal Service says it obtains equivalent information through the IVR system as when employees are asked to describe the nature of their illness to an ACS. Actually, the IVR script may provide more pertinent information. The IVR script, in any event, shows that the Postal Service's needs can be met less intrusively without asking for the nature of the illness. So does the ACS/RMD script from the Los Angeles office, which does not include asking the nature of the employee's illness/injury.[4] This conclusion is further supported by local agreements in Philadelphia and San Antonio that employees should not be asked the nature of their illness when they call in.[5]

[4] The record does not indicate whether this ACS/RMD script was promulgated locally or by Postal Service headquarters. Postal Service witness Savoie testified that in implementing RMD headquarters did not "roll out anything that said ask the nature of the illness."

[5] I do not agree with the Postal Service that the existence of these agreements confirms that a contrary practice previously existed at those locations.

The Postal Service claims it needs to ask employees for the nature of their illness/injury when they call in to be able to timely schedule an employee for a fitness-for-duty exam under ELM 513.38, which states:

> When the reason for an employee's sick leave is of such a nature as to raise justifiable doubt concerning the employee's ability to satisfactorily and/or safely perform duties, a fitness-for-duty medical examination is requested through appropriate authority. A complete report of the facts, medical and otherwise, should support the request.

The Postal Service gave as an example an employee who calls in and says he hurt his back. For safety purposes, it says, it needs to know the employee is fit for duty before his return to work. Yet, keeping in mind that employees off work for more than three days have to provide medical documentation upon return to work (or have an FMLA certification), it seems doubtful, and there is no evidence, that supervisors request fitness-for-duty exams based on what the employee tells an ACS when he or she calls in, rather than on the basis of medical documentation, the explanation provided by the employee on return to work or other sources of information.

The Postal Service also claims that, if it is precluded from making such an inquiry, a supervisor would not have the information needed to apply that portion of ELM 513.364 which states: "Supervisors may accept substantiation other than medical documentation if they believe it supports approval of the sick leave [in excess of three days] request." Yet, there is nothing in the record to show that such determinations are made on the basis of what employees tell an ACS on a call-in regarding the nature of their illness/injury.

Furthermore, as already noted, the ability of the Postal Service to satisfactorily administer the leave provisions of the ELM in offices such as Philadelphia and San Antonio, or using the IVR system, without asking the nature of their illness/injury when employees call in absent, is telling with respect to the Postal Services' claimed needs to request that information.

Finally, the Postal Service maintains that it needs to have employees describe the nature of their illness/injury in order to decide whether to require medical documentation for absences of three days or less under ELM 513.361, which provides:

> For periods of absence of 3 days or less, supervisors may accept the employee's statement explaining the absence. Medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or need to care for a family member is required only when the employee is on restricted sick leave (see 513.39) or when the supervisor deems documentation desirable for the protection of the interests of the Postal Service. Substantiation of the family relationship must be provided if requested.

Under this provision, medical documentation can be required for absences of three days or less only when the employee is on restricted sick leave or to protect the interests of the Postal Service. The latter, insofar as the record in this case shows, applies where the supervisor who is to approve/disapprove the requested leave has some reason to suspect the employee is not really incapacitated from working, as where the employee was denied requested annual leave or has a pattern of asking for sick leave on the days after holidays. In their March 28, 2003 settlement agreement, the APWU and the Postal Service agreed that a supervisor's decision to require documentation or other evidence pursuant to ELM 513.361 "must be made on a case by case basis and may not be arbitrary, capricious or unreasonable".

It is far from clear on this record that any description of the nature of illness/injury provided by an employee to an ACS in the RMD process actually is passed on to the supervisor who makes determinations under ELM 513.361, let alone used as the basis for requesting medical documentation. Form 3971 specifically directs that medical information not be entered thereon. In the RMD process, the ACS essentially enters the same information that previously was handwritten on a Form 3971 into a computer data system, which generates a Form 3971 to be completed by the employee and the supervisor who approves or disapproves the requested leave on the employee's return to work.[6]

[6] While this case is not about which "supervisor" can make a decision to require medical documentation under ELM 513.361, the evidence in this record does not indicate that any supervisor is doing so on the basis of employees' descriptions of the nature of their illness/injury when they call in to an ACS as part of

The evidence as to pre-RMD application of ELM 513.332 consists of testimony by Postal Service witness Savoie and APWU witness Bell and a dozen or so regional arbitration awards, which the Postal Service asserts support its position that a consistent practice of inquiring into the nature of an employee's illness/injury on a call-in has existed for decades. Not only is this evidence limited in scope, it is far from conclusive. At best, it shows that in some offices employees either volunteered or were asked to describe the nature of their illness/injury, particularly when the call was taken by their direct supervisor. In some other locations such as Philadelphia, this was not done.[7] the RMD process. Whether the supervisor who does make that decision under ELM 513.361 can question absent employees about the nature of their illness/injury in appropriate circumstances, as part of that decision making, is not an issue within the scope of this case.

[7] One of the arbitration decisions cited by the Postal Service, USPS and APWU, Case No. I-90-1I-C 95039549 (Fletcher, 1996), quotes 1992 "Call-In Procedure" instructions previously in effect in the Des Moines Post Office, that the grievance sought to have reinstated. Wholly unrelated to the issue in that case, those instructions stated: "In cases where the employee calls in claiming illness, normally the general nature of the illness is provided if requested by the supervisor." The Postal Service cited another decision, USPS and APWU, Case No. 9501904 et al (McAllister, 1996), for its determination that leave regulations issued by the Pittsburgh Post Office in 1995 appropriately required detailed information on a call-in. A paragraph on reporting absences in those regulations stated: "Additionally, you will be asked if the absence is in any way related to an on-the-job injury or if you believe the absence is covered in any way by the Family Medical Leave Act." Notably, the regulations quoted in the decision do not otherwise appear to provide for asking employees the nature of their illness/injury.

Taking into account the substantial employee privacy interests stressed by the Unions and the clear distinction between the wording of ELM 513.332 and 513.364, the information regarding an employee's illness/injury which the Postal Service properly can require an employee to provide when calling in absent -- beyond "I am ill/injured" -- should not exceed the established administrative needs of the Postal Service, as discussed above.

Accordingly, I conclude that in applying ELM 513.332 in the context of the RMD process, ACS's may ask questions necessary to make FMLA determinations and to determine whether the absence is due to an on-the-job injury or for a condition which requires ELM 865 return-to-work procedures, in a manner consistent with these Findings, but may not otherwise require employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury.

FMLA Second and Third Opinion Process

Article 10.2.A of the National Agreement provides as follows:

> The leave regulations in Subchapter 510 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual, insofar as such regulations establish wages, hours and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement, shall remain in effect for the life of this Agreement.

Article 5 of the National Agreement states:

> The Employer will not take any actions affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law.

ELM 515.1 states: "Section 515 provides policies to comply with the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA)." ELM 515.54 addresses "Additional Medical Opinions", in relevant part, as follows:

> Additional Medical Opinions
>
> A second medical opinion by a health care provider who is designated and paid for by the Postal Service may be required. A health care provider selected for the second opinion may not be employed by the Postal Service on a regular basis. In case of a difference between the original and second opinion, a third opinion by a health care provider may be required. The third health care provider is jointly designated or approved by management and the employee, and the third opinion is final....

In conjunction with implementation of RMD, but separate and apart from that process, the Postal Service established its current policy and process with respect to third medical opinions. There is no evidence that prior to development of the sample letter (quoted earlier in this opinion), the Postal Service had any sort of policy requiring employees to notify the Postal Service if they do not accept the second opinion and want a third opinion. Postal Service witness Savoie testified that headquarters was trying to establish some sort of process, where none had existed before, to help its FMLA administrators comply with existing FMLA regulations.

In these circumstances, I conclude that, as an Arbitrator under the National Agreement, I have the authority to determine whether the recently adopted Postal Service process is consistent with applicable ELM leave provisions, and, in doing so, to consider applicable provisions of the FMLA which the ELM provisions are expressly intended to comply with.[6]

ELM 515.54 specifically provides that: "In the case of a difference between the original and second opinion, a third

[6] As Arbitrator Nolan stated in a recent decision cited by both the Postal Service and the Unions, USPS and NALC and NPMHU, Case No. Q98N-4Q-C 010190839 (2002):

> One obvious exception to the general rule [that the arbitrator's function is to interpret and apply the contract and not the law] is that parties who incorporate external law in their contract, either expressly or by paraphrase, necessarily expect their arbitrators to interpret and apply the incorporated law. That may sometimes require examination of implementing regulations and relevant judicial precedent.
> The Postal Service's fall-back position, that an arbitrator may "apply" but may not "interpret" a law, relies on an impossible distinction. More often than not, it is necessary to interpret the law precisely in order to apply it; to put it simply, before one can apply a law, one must know what the law means.

opinion may be required." (Emphasis added.) The most, if not only, sensible reading of these words -- even without reference to the FMLA -- is that the Postal Service may require a third opinion. Moreover, this provision clearly is meant to comply with the provisions of the FMLA, as stated in ELM 515.1.

While the FMLA does not spell out a specific process for selecting the third opinion provider, it expressly places responsibility on the employer to determine whether to require that the employee obtain a third opinion. If the employer chooses to do so, the third opinion is controlling.

The Postal Service's current process, as reflected in the sample letter provided for use in the field, clearly departs from and is inconsistent with the statutory scheme. It requires the employee, rather than the employer, to make the decision whether to obtain a third opinion.

The Postal Service's current process makes the second opinion the final decision if the employee fails within a set time period to notify the Postal Service that he or she does not accept the second opinion. The Postal Service claims this is consistent with Section 825.307(a) of the DOL regulations.[9] [9] As part of its arbitrability argument, the Postal Service points out that some DOL regulations have come under fire as invalid extensions of the FMLA. But it does not assert that this part of the regulations has been challenged in court, and in this instance it is the Postal Service which is citing the regulations in support of its action.

There is no justifiable basis, however, for equating an employee's failure to affirmatively reject a second opinion as a failure by the employee to "act in good faith to attempt to reach agreement on whom to select for the third opinion provider", which is the only basis under the DOL regulations for making the second opinion binding on the employee.

Accordingly, I conclude that the Postal Service's current process for initiating FMLA review by a third health care provider is not consistent with the FMLA or with ELM 515.1 and 515.54, and that implementation of that process violates Articles 5 and 10.2.A of the National Agreement.

FMLA Paid Leave Documentation

Prior to the FMLA, ELM 513.362 required that employees requesting paid sick leave for an absence in excess of three days submit "medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work". This requirement also applied, under applicable ELM provisions, if an employee requested annual leave in lieu of sick leave or leave without pay (LWOP). The documentation had to cover the specific period of absence, whether or not due to a recurring condition.

The ELM provisions applicable to paid and unpaid leave, other than unpaid FMLA leave, have not changed. The FMLA, however, provides for medical certification of a serious health condition indicating the need for intermittent leave in the future, and this permits an eligible employee to use FMLA leave when, and if, that occurs. The FMLA limits the circumstances, including frequency, under which the employer can request recertification. Thus, if an employee who is absent in excess of three days attributes the absence to the previously certified condition, the Postal Service may not (subject to certain exceptions) require additional documentation as a condition to granting unpaid FMLA leave.[10] The Postal Service has conformed to the requirements of the FMLA by not requiring such documentation for LWOP that is protected under the FMLA.

The Postal Service continues, however, to require compliance with the documentation requirements in ELM 513.362 if the employee seeks to substitute paid sick leave (or annual leave in lieu of sick leave) for unpaid FMLA leave. This is not inconsistent with the FMLA. Section 825.207 of the DOL regulations provides:

> (c) ...Substitution of paid sick/medical leave may be elected to the extent the circumstances meet the employer's usual requirements for the use of sick/medical leave. An employer is not required to allow substitution of paid sick or medical leave for unpaid FMLA leave "in any situation" where the employer's uniform policy would not normally allow such paid leave.
> (h) When an employee or employer elects to substitute paid leave (of any type) for

> unpaid FMLA leave under circumstances permitted by these regulations, and the employer's procedural requirements for taking that kind of leave are less stringent than the requirements of FMLA (e.g., notice or certification requirements), only the less stringent requirements may be imposed. An employee who complies with an employer's less stringent leave plan requirements in such cases may not have leave for an FMLA purpose delayed or denied on the grounds that the employee has not complied with stricter requirements of FMLA. However, where accrued paid vacation or personal leave is substituted for unpaid FMLA leave for a serious health condition, an employee may be required to comply with any less stringent medical certification requirements of the employer's sick leave program.

The Unions argue that: (i) the Postal Service concedes that FMLA certifications require more information than the Postal Service requires under ELM 513.362, so that the former must satisfy the latter; (ii) the Postal Service has articulated no reason why the FMLA certification does not suffice to satisfy ELM 513.362; (iii) the Postal Service cannot require both FMLA certification and ELM documentation for absences in excess of three days; and (iv) the Postal Service's policy is inequitable in imposing different documentation requirements on two employees with identical conditions and approved FMLA certifications just because the length or pay status of leave they use is different.

Contrary to the Unions' position, the Postal Service has articulated a reason for requiring documentation under ELM 513.362 even where an employee has provided an approved FMLA certification indicating a need for intermittent leave. If the absence exceeds three days, the Postal Service seeks medical documentation that the employee actually was incapacitated from working on those specific days. Even if the earlier FMLA certification includes more information about the employee's condition and its incapacitating effect, it establishes only a need for intermittent leave in the future. It does not, and cannot, by itself certify that any particular subsequent absence actually is attributable to that condition, rather than to some other reason which may not justify granting the requested leave.

The FMLA requires the employer, subject to certain exceptions, to accept certification of the need for intermittent leave as sufficient documentation for unpaid FMLA leave. The Postal Service has complied with the FMLA in that respect. The FMLA, however, does not require the employer to accept that certification for paid leave, if -- as is the case here -- the employer's uniform policy requires different documentation for paid leave.

As I read Section 825.207 of the DOL regulations, the fact that an employee already may have provided acceptable FMLA certification that would entitle the employee to unpaid FMLA leave does not preclude the employer from requiring an employee who elects to substitute paid leave to comply with the employer's own medical certification requirements, whether they are more or less stringent than the FMLA requirements.

It is true, as the Unions assert, that two postal employees with identical conditions and approved FMLA certifications may be subject to different requirements depending on the length of their absence or their pay status during the absence. The Unions claim this is inequitable, but postal employees long have been subject to different medical documentation requirements depending on whether their absence is or is not in excess of three days, and that has not been -- and cannot be -- deemed inequitable. As to pay status, as the APWU itself pointed out, the ELM -- absent the FMLA -- imposes the documentation requirements in 513.362 on employees requesting leave without pay as well as those requesting paid leave. The FMLA precludes the Postal Service from imposing its own leave requirements that are above and beyond those in the FMLA for unpaid FMLA leave. The FMLA, however, specifically permits the Postal Service to continue to impose its own different requirements for paid leave. While the Unions can seek agreement to change those requirements, they do not violate the law, the National Agreement or existing postal regulations.

The documents presented by the APWU to supports its claim that the Postal Service's current requirement contradicts the policy it expressed to the APWU when the FMLA was first implemented (APWU Exhibits 12, 13 and 14) do not address the requirements for paid leave when the employee seeks to substitute paid leave for unpaid FMLA leave. The evidence also does not establish that the Postal Service has varied or changed the manner in which ELM 513.362 has been applied in those circumstances.

In sum, the Unions' contention that the protested Postal Service paid leave documentation policy is improper and impermissible under the National Agreement must be rejected.

AWARD

The three issues raised in this case are resolved as follows:

Nature of Illness

In applying ELM 513.332 in the context of the RMD process, ACS's may ask questions necessary to make FMLA determinations and to determine whether the absence is due to an on-the-job injury or for a condition which requires ELM 865 return-to-work procedures, in a manner consistent with the Findings in this decision, but may not otherwise require employees to describe the nature of their illness/injury.

FMLA Second and Third Opinion Process

The Postal Service's current process for initiating FMLA review by a third health care provider, at issue in this case, is not consistent with the FMLA or with ELM 515.1 and 515.54, and implementation of that process violates Articles 5 and 10.2.A of the National Agreement. The Postal Service is directed to rescind that process.

FMLA Paid Leave Documentation

The Unions' contention that the protested Postal Service paid leave documentation policy is improper and impermissible under the National Agreement is rejected.

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, TJ Branch, to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether arbitrators have the authority to interpret and apply statutory law, including the Family and Medical Leave Act.

After full discussion the parties agree to remand the grievance to Step 3 for further discussion to include Arbitrator Nolan's award in grievance Q98N-4Q-C 01090839 dated April 28, 2002. If the parties are unable to resolve the grievance the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures will apply.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

OPINION

I. Statement of the Case

The NALC filed this Article 19 appeal on February 8, 2001 to challenge certain revisions made by USPS to Publication 71. The parties could not resolve the dispute in the grievance process, so the NALC demanded arbitration. The National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) eventually intervened. The first scheduled hearing date, in Washington, DC on October 5, 2001, was devoted to arguments about arbitrability. All parties appeared and had full opportunity to testify, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to present all pertinent evidence. Because the arguments on the arbitrability dispute were too complex to resolve from the bench, all parties filed lengthy post-hearing briefs, the last of which arrived on April 10, 2002.

The Postal Service claimed that the NALC had not raised the issue of whether the revisions conflicted with ELM 513.36 in the earlier steps of the grievance procedure. It therefore argued that the NALC could not do so at the arbitration hearing. The NALC disputed that assertion. Unlike the other arbitrability objections, which are purely interpretive matters, this raised a factual dispute. After some discussion on how best to proceed, the parties agreed that the Postal Service, as the objecting party, could request a second hearing to receive evidence about the arguments raised below (Tr. 99). In due course, the Postal Service notified me that there would be no hearing but neither the Employer nor NALC explained why. Each now blames the other and seeks to profit from the lack of evidence in the record. The Postal Service's brief asserts (at page 16) that the NALC "canceled the hearing" and concludes that the Employer's objection is therefore unrebutted and "establishes a procedural defect in the Union's Article 19 appeal." The NALC's brief asserts (page 2) that the Postal Service "abandoned its claim that the NALC failed to raise" the alleged conflict.

II. Statement of the Facts

Late in 2000, the Postal Service informed postal unions and others that it proposed to revise Publication 71, Notice for Employees Requesting Leave for Conditions Covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act. After some discussions with unions and the Department of Labor's Wage and Hour Division, it issued the final version on February 6, 2001. Two days later, the NALC filed this Article 19 appeal. That appeal concisely states the NALC's objections by alleging that Publication 71 revisions dealing with an employee's documentation of the reason for an absence conflict with Articles 5 and 19 of the National Agreement, with EL-311, Personnel Operations, and with the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) itself.

Because this phase of the arbitration deals only with arbitrability, it is unnecessary to discuss the NALC's objections in detail. Briefly, though, the NALC alleges that the new version of Publication 71 could result in denial of leave when an employee fails to provide specified documentation while ELM 513.36 requires documentation for short-term absences "only when the employee is on restricted sick leave or when the supervisor deems documentation desirable for the protection of the interests of the Postal Service." In practice, it argues, that provision has long allowed employees to take leave of three days or less for a medical condition without having to provide documentation unless the Postal Service has a reasonable factual basis for questioning the employee's absence. It proffers that evidence in a hearing on the merits would show that the Postal Service has reversed that practice since it issued the revised Publication 71 and now requires documentation for short-term absences even where there is no reason to doubt the employee's reason for requesting leave.

III. The Issue

Is this Article 19 appeal arbitrable?

IV. Pertinent Authorities

1998-2001 AGREEMENT

ARTICLE 3
MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations: . . . .

ARTICLE 5
PROHIBITION OF UNILATERAL ACTION

The Employer will not take any actions affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law.

ARTICLE 10
LEAVE

Section 5. Sick Leave

The Employer agrees to continue the administration of the present sick leave program, which shall include the following specific items:

A. Credit employees with sick leave as earned.

B. Charge to annual leave or leave without pay (at employee's option) approved absence for which employee has insufficient sick leave.

C. Employee becoming ill while on annual leave may have leave charged to sick leave upon request.

D. For periods of absence of three (3) days or less, a supervisor may accept an employee's certification as reason for an absence.

ARTICLE 19
HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. . . .

Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions will be furnished to the Union at the national level at least sixty (60) days prior to issuance. At the request of the Union, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), it may then submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedure within sixty (60) days after receipt of the notice of proposed change. . . .

EMPLOYEE AND LABOR RELATIONS MANUAL (2000)

513.36 Sick Leave Documentation Requirements

513.361 Three Days or Less

For periods of absence of 3 days or less, supervisors may accept the employee's statement explaining the absence. Medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or need to care for a family member is required only when the employee is on restricted sick leave (see 513.39) or when the supervisor deems documentation desirable for the protection of the interests of the Postal Service. Substantiation of the family relationship must be provided if requested.

513.362 Over Three Days

For absences in excess of 3 days, employees are required to submit medical documentation or other acceptable evidence of incapacity for work or of need to care for a family member and, if requested, substantiation of the family relationship.

515 Absence for Family Care or Serious Health Condition of Employee

515.1 Purpose of 515. This section provides policies to comply with the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993. Nothing in this section is intended to limit employees' rights or benefits available under other current policies (see 511, 512, 513, 514), or collective bargaining agreements. . . .

515.55 Employee Incapacitation. An employee requesting time off under this section because of his or her own incapacitation must satisfy the documentation requirements for sick leave in 513.31 through 513.38 or for leave without pay in 514.4. If absence exceeds 21 calendar days, evidence of ability to return to work with or without limitations must be submitted. If additional medical opinions are required, they are administered as described in 515.54.

PUBLICATION 71 (2001 Revision)

IV. Documentation on Request for Absence

Supporting documentation is required for your absence request to receive final approval. Documentation requirements may be waived in specific cases by your supervisor. However, failure to provide requested documentation could result in a denial of FMLA-protected leave.

V. The Parties' Positions on Arbitrability

A. The Postal Service

1. The Postal Service's first argument against arbitrability is that the Article 19 appeal is procedurally flawed.

(a) According to the Employer, Publication 71 is not a handbook, manual, or regulation as Article 19 uses those terms. It is, rather, only a document required by the FMLA to provide individual notice to employees of the FMLA's provisions. It is, in other words, part of the FMLA statutory framework, not of the collective bargaining framework. The Postal Service relies an award by Arbitrator Howard Gamser, H8C-NA-C 61 (December 27, 1982). In that decisions, the arbitrator found that a document issued by the Postal Service (EL-501) was not a handbook, manual, or regulation because it did not attempt to alter the ELM's leave regulations. Publication 71 stands in the same situation.

(b) The Postal Service made no substantive "change" to Publication 71 2001. It simply reorganized and repeated certain language. To support an Article 19 appeal there must be a significant change in one of the listed types of documents. Contrary to the Unions' assertions, an alleged change in Postal Service practice is insufficient to justify an Article 19 appeal.

(c) The main issue raised at the hearing by the NALC, an alleged conflict between Publication 71 and ELM 513.361, was not raised in previous proceedings. The NALC's cancellation of a planned hearing to receive evidence of prior discussions demonstrates its inability to prove that the parties had discussed the issue below.

(d) Finally, the appeal is time barred. Article 19 allows a union to demand arbitration within 60 days of receiving notice of a proposed changed. Here, both Publication 71 and the ELM provisions had been in effect at least since 1994, yet the Union did not file its appeal until early in 2001.

2. The Postal Service's second argument is that the core of the Union's case would require interpretation of the FMLA and its implementing regulations. That, it claims, is beyond the authority of an arbitrator. Relying on a 1983 decision by Arbitrator Richard Bloch, the Postal Service asserts that an arbitrator may only interpret collective bargaining agreements. Responding to the Unions' anticipated arguments that the Agreement's provisions are closely related to those of the statutes and that arbitrators routinely resolve FMLA disputes, it draws a distinction between interpreting a statute and applying it. Arbitrators may do the latter but not the former. Another postal union, the APWU, has sued the Postal Service over its changes in Publication 71. That suit demonstrates that the dispute is a legal one that belongs in court.

B. The NALC

1. The NALC begins by addressing the Postal Service's argument that an arbitrator may not interpret statutes and regulations. Even if this case turned on construction of the FMLA, it argues, it would still be arbitrable. The Agreement itself (Article 5) obliges the Employer not to take any actions affecting terms or employment that are "inconsistent with its obligations under law." Similarly, Article 3 on management rights limits the Employer to actions that are "consistent with applicable laws and regulations." Postal Service arbitrators have consistently interpreted laws, including the FMLA, when necessary to resolve grievances. Moreover, the Postal Service itself admitted that authority in settling at the national level Case No. F94N-4F-C 96032816 (P. Whitley). A settlement agreement in May of 1998 provided that "pursuant to Article 3, grievances are properly brought when management's actions are inconsistent with applicable laws and regulations."

2. The NALC then turns to the argument that Publication 71 is not a handbook, manual, or regulation within the meaning of Article 19. Even by a simple dictionary definition it is a "regulation" because it is "an authoritative rule dealing with details or procedure." The "details or procedures" at issue govern documentation requirements under ELM 515. ELM 515 does not itself set out documentation requirements; rather, it refers the employee back to the notice that is Publication 71. Form letters later issued by the Postal Service make this clear. They expressly direct the employee seeking leave to provide documentation pursuant to Section IV of Publication 71.

3. Third, the NALC argues that the changes in the 2001 version of Publication 71 were material modifications. In particular, the earlier version of the publication simply said that documentation was required before a leave request could receive final approval; the revision emphasizes that leave requests are governed by Publication 71's documentation requirements rather than by those of the ELM. That shift in emphasis is confirmed by the Postal Services' new practice of distributing Publication 71 as the official statement concerning necessary documentation and by the Employer's new insistence on documentation even for short-term absences.

C. The NPMHU

Many of the NPMHU's arguments track those of the NALC and thus need not be repeated. It emphasizes the regulatory nature of Publication 71's documentation section by noting that it includes repeated mandates — that is, it requires employees to provide certain carefully detailed information. The publication is not merely a "derivative" document because no other Postal Service document contains those requirements. As a "rule or order that directs employee behavior," Publication 71 is a "regulation" under any reasonable meaning of that word. In the case decided by Arbitrator Gamser on which the Postal Service relies, the Employer disclaimed any intent to alter existing regulations or to change employee behavior. Here, in contrast, the Postal Service declined to make such a statement.

The NPMHU's other main point is that Postal Service arbitrators may interpret laws and regulations when necessary to resolve grievances. It notes that the issue in this case is not whether Publication 71 violates the FMLA but whether it conflicts with the ELM. Even if interpretation of the FMLA were required, an arbitrator can do so because the Agreement incorporates statutory or decisional law.

VI. Discussion

Although the issue in this proceeding is extremely narrow, the parties take it very seriously. Their submissions on arbitrability alone occupy 100 pages of a hearing transcript, three and a half inches worth of exhibits, 62 pages of briefs, plus assorted attached arbitration awards. Careful digestion of this mass of material reveals five disputed questions, which I will address in turn.

A. Is Publication 71 a handbook, manual, or regulation?

Article 19 permits the NALC to challenge changes in "handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service." Both Unions rely on the last of those terms, asserting that Publication 71's documentation section is a "regulation." The Agreement does not define that term, so we have to assume the parties intended it to have its normal meaning as a general rule intended to direct behavior.

The Postal Service describes Publication 71 as simply "a document required by the FMLA to satisfy the individual notice requirements of that statute." It may indeed be that, but a notification required by a statute can also function as a general rule to direct employee behavior. The two, in short, are not mutually exclusive. Whether a notice serves that second function obviously depends on the facts of the case.

In this regard, the Employer's reliance on the Gamser award is misplaced. The EL-501 at issue in that case was simply a guide for supervisors, not for bargaining unit employees. Even though it looked like a handbook, was submitted to the Union as if it were a handbook, bore a handbook number, and was referred to by the Employer as a handbook, the Postal Service's cover letter specifically disclaimed any attempt to "alter existing Postal Service regulations." After noting the Postal Service's ambiguity as to whether EL-501 was an "authority" for interpreting the Agreement, Arbitrator Gamser said that the Employer could not have it both ways. Either EL-501 was an "internal management communication to supervisory and managerial personnel, outside the bargaining unit" or it was a separate "authority" on which management could rely. He relied on the Employer's disclaimer and directed it to "promulgate an official document" stating that EL-501 was not to be regarded "as a handbook having the force and effect of such a document issued pursuant to Article 19."

Publication 71, in contrast, did not come with a disclaimer of regulator force. In fact, the Postal Service expressly declined at the arbitration hearing to stipulate that the document was not intended to change existing rules. Moreover, Publication 71 goes to employees rather than just to their supervisors. It thus cannot be a simple "internal management communication." Finally, Publication 71 contains specific directions that employees must follow in order to obtain FMLA leave.

In sum, Publication 71 clearly meets the normal definition of a regulation and is therefore subject to an Article 19 appeal.

B. Did the 2001 Revision of Publication 71 Amount to a Material Change in that Document?

Article 19 permits appeals of "proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions." In the absence of any special contractual definition, "changes" must be given its normal meaning. We can safely assume that the parties used that word to apply to material changes; reissuance of an old document with a new typeface, correction of typographical errors, or changes in organization that have no practical effect would not give the Union an occasion for revisiting dormant complaints.

As to whether the 2001 revision constituted a material change, the evidence is limited. There were some wording changes but none of them flagrantly modifies an existing rule. To some extent, however, the Postal Service's objection begs the critical question. Even a small change in wording might have large practical consequences. If the union challenging a revision makes a plausible argument that the new words affect terms of employment, then the question of whether it is correct goes to the merits of the dispute, not to its arbitrability. To put it differently, the "change" hurdle in Article 19 is a very low one.

The heart of the NALC's objection involves one sentence the Postal Service added in 2001 to the beginning of Section IV of Publication 71: "However, failure to provide requested documentation could result in a denial of FMLA-protected leave" (emphasis in the original). On one hand, that sentence is extremely similar to language contained in both the 1997 and 2001 introductory paragraphs: "Failure to provide such notice or documentation could result in denial of leave or other protections afforded under the Act." Putting old language in a different place or repeating it in two or more places normally would not amount to a material change. On the other hand, in rare cases location or frequency of wording may matter especially if (as here) the new words differ from the old ones.

The 2001 changes in Publication 71 initially seem minor and may well have no practical effect. Nevertheless, they are just important enough that the Unions should have the opportunity to demonstrate their impact in a hearing on the merits.

C. Is the Grievance Timely?

The Postal Service's timeliness objection piggybacks on its assertion that the 2001 version of Publication 71 merely carried forward the changes made in 1994 and 1997. If it did so, then obviously an appeal in 2001 would be far too late. Having found that the Unions cleared the "change" hurdle, I must also find that the challenge to the changes is timely. That the Unions may not have shown daylight when clearing that hurdle does not affect the timeliness of their jump.

D. Did the NALC Raise the Claim of a Conflict Between the Revised Publication 71 and ELM 513.36 Earlier in the Grievance Procedure?

I assume simply for the sake of argument that a union processing an Article 19 appeal must raise all issues before reaching the arbitration step. The next question is which party bears the burden of proof on that point once the Employer raises an arbitrability objection. Must the Postal Service must prove the Union's failure to raise the issue earlier, or must the Union prove that it did so? That somewhat abstract question is critical here because the record contains no evidence on either side of the issue. The allocation of the burden of proof will therefore decide the matter.

An arbitrability objection is a form of affirmative defense. Accordingly, the party raising the objection must prove its assertion. That is true whether the arbitrability dispute is substantive or (as here) procedural. A party claiming that the Agreement does not apply to the grievance must show that it does not. A party claiming that the grievance is untimely must show that it was filed after the appropriate deadline. Similarly, a party claiming that a particular issue had not been raised earlier must show that was the case. The Postal Service failed to do so. The record contains only a bare assertion contained in its counsel's opening statement.

By failing to present any evidence on the parties' earlier discussions, the Postal Service waived its opportunity to prevail on this basis. Whether or not the Union previously discussed the alleged conflict with ELM 513.36, it is not barred from doing so now.

E. May an Arbitrator Interpret a Statute and Its Implementing Regulations?

Before the middle 1960s, it was rare for a party to raise a legal issue in labor arbitration. Parties understandably assumed that the purpose of arbitration was solely to interpret or apply the collective bargaining agreement. Certain language in Supreme Court opinions seemed to support that understanding. Once Congress began to regulate employment relationships more carefully, though, the separation of "legal" and "contractual" questions became harder to maintain. Scholars, arbitrators, and advocates began a long-lasting debate about whether labor arbitrators could or should apply external law when resolving contractual grievances.[1]

To the extent that those debates produced a consensus, it was that arbitrators could not rely solely on the dictates of external law. More generally, most arbitrators shied away from legal questions if they could solve the case at hand in some other way. Many added comments to the effect that an arbitrator's proper role was simply to interpret the applicable contract. Usually, though, they reserved the possibility that external law might be applicable in an appropriate case.

Writing while those debates were fresh in mind, distinguished Postal Service arbitrators (who were, not incidentally, often leading members of the National Academy of Arbitrators) followed that pattern. In a 1982 APWU case (H8C-4A-C-11834), Arbitrator Ben Aaron wrote that "the arbitrator's function is to interpret and apply the Agreement." In "the circumstances of this case," he said, "there is not necessity to look to the external law." The clear implication of his last statement was that in some other cases there might be such a necessity. Similarly, in a 1983 Federation of Postal Police Officers case (FPSP-NAT-81-006), Arbitrator Richard Bloch held that "a claim premised solely upon the Fair Labor Standards Act would be outside the Arbitrator's jurisdiction." His addition of the adverb "solely" indicates that an arbitrator might have jurisdiction over a "mixed" case involving both statutory and contractual issues.

As the years passed and arbitrators more frequently faced legal issues, it became apparent that there were some undeniable holes in the wall of separation between "law" and "contract." One obvious exception to the general rule is that parties who incorporate external law in their contract, either expressly or by paraphrase, necessarily expect their arbitrators to interpret and apply the incorporated law. That may sometimes require examination of implementing regulations and relevant judicial precedent.

[1] See, for example, Bernard Meltzer, Ruminations About Ideology, Law, and Labor Arbitration, 20 PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS 1 (1967); Robert G. Howlett, The Arbitrator, the NLRB, and the Courts, 20 PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS 67 (1967); Richard Mittenthal, The Role of Law in Arbitration, 21 PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS 42 (1968); Michael I. Sovern, When Should Arbitrators Follow Federal Law?, 23 PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS 29 (1970); and Theodore J. St. Antoine, Judicial Review of Labor Arbitration Awards: A Second Look at Enterprise Wheel and Its Progeny, 30 PROCEEDINGS OF THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF ARBITRATORS 29 (1977).

A second exception may be less obvious but is firmly established as a canon of contract interpretation. It is reasonable to assume that parties intend their agreements to be legal and legally enforceable. Given two interpretations of a disputed term, then, an arbitrator should adopt the one that is consistent with applicable law rather than the one that would be illegal. That exercise, too, might require examination of implementing regulations and relevant judicial precedent. A good example is a 1987 APWU case (H1C-NA-C 101) cited by the Postal Service on a different point. Arbitrator Dan Collins carefully examined the Rehabilitation Act, cases interpreting that Act, and the position of the EEOC regarding its meaning when deciding an Article 19 challenge. He concluded that the Postal Service did not violate Article 19, but reached that conclusion only after interpreting and applying external legal authority.

All of this is a roundabout way of reaching the Postal Service's objection that, because one NALC argument might require interpretation of the FMLA, the grievance is not arbitrable. In fact, neither Union's brief advanced the argument anticipated by the Postal Service. The mere possibility that the Unions might raise a legal issue in a hearing on the merits hardly suffices to bar them from arbitration. Nor does a pending suit on Publication 71 brought by the APWU demonstrate that court is the only place in which the FMLA may be of use. As the Supreme Court once held, it is quite possible to use the same legal arguments in different forums, arbitral and judicial. Alexander v. Gardner-Denver Co., 415 U.S. 36 (1974).

The Postal Service's fall-back position, that an arbitrator may "apply" but may not "interpret" a law, relies on an impossible distinction. More often than not, it is necessary to interpret the law precisely in order to apply it; to put it simply, before one can apply a law, one must know what the law means.

I find that the presence or possibility of an argument involving external law does not make a case inarbitrable.

AWARD

For the reasons stated, none of the Postal Service's arbitrability objections is meritorious. The dispute is therefore arbitrable.

Gentlemen:

On February 9, 1988, David Cybulski and Charles Dudek met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether an employee who is on extended absence and wishes to continue eligibility for health and life insurance benefits, and those protections for which an employee may be eligible under Article 6 of the National Agreement may use sick leave and/or annual leave in conjunction with leave without pay (LWOP) prior to exhausting his/her leave balance.

During our discussions, we mutually agreed that an employee in the above circumstances may use sick leave and/or annual leave in conjunction with LWOP prior to exhausting his/her respective leave balance. In addition, this settlement does not limit management's prerogative to grant leave requests at its discretion according to normal leave approval procedures. Furthermore, the Employer is not obligated to approve such leave for the last hour of the employee's scheduled workday prior to and/or the first hour of the employee's scheduled workday after a holiday.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

DATED

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE
UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE
AND THE
NATIONAL POSTAL MAIL HANDLERS UNION
A DIVISION OF
LABORERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO

The undersigned parties negotiated a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) entitled "LWOP In Lieu of SL/AL" that allows an employee to request Leave Without Pay (LWOP) prior to exhausting annual or sick leave. The following serves as a guide for administering these newly negotiated MOU provisions.

The basic intent in this MOU is that an employee need not exhaust annual or sick leave prior to requesting LWOP. One example of the term "need not exhaust" is where an employee requests maternity or paternity leave and was previously required by local management to exhaust their sick or annual leave prior to receiving LWOP. An employee now has the option of requesting LWOP in lieu of sick or annual leave when they reach the point where they may "exhaust" their leave benefits.

It was not the intent of this MOU to increase leave usage (i.e., approved time off). Moreover, it was not the intent that every or all instances of approved leave be changed to LWOP thus allowing the employee to accumulate a leave balance which would create a "use or lose" situation. Furthermore, the employer is not obligated to approve such leave for the last hour of the employee's scheduled workday prior to and/or the first hour of the employee's scheduled workday after a holiday.

This MOU does not impact Local Memoranda of Understanding regarding procedures for prescheduling annual leave for choice or nonchoice vacation periods. It also was not intended to provide employees the opportunity to preschedule LWOP in lieu of annual leave for choice or nonchoice periods or increase leave usage. An employee may at a later date request to change the prescheduled annual leave to LWOP, subject to supervisor approval in accordance with normal leave approval procedures. However, this option is available to an employee only if they are at the point of exhausting their annual leave balance and the employee must provide evidence of such to their supervisor at the time of the leave request (e.g., pay stub).

There is no priority between incidental requests for annual leave or LWOP when several employees are simultaneously requesting such leave. The normal established local practice prevails, i.e., whether leave requests are approved in order of seniority or on a first come first serve basis or other local procedure. This memorandum of understanding has no effect on any existing leave approval policies or any other leave provisions contained in the Employee and Labor Relations Manual or other applicable manuals and handbooks.

Contract Year:	2006 - 2011
Type of Grievance:	Contract Interpretation

Award Summary:

The grievance is denied as set forth in the above Findings.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

The issue in this case is whether full-time regular mailer handler employees have the right to receive administrative leave in minimum 8-hour increments while donating blood platelets. The grievance was initially filed in 2010 on behalf of a mail handler in North Reading, Massachusetts where a supervisor refused to grant Grievant a full, 8-hour day of leave to donate blood platelets.

The Postal Service first began providing paid leave for whole blood donations in 1953. The blood donation policy was memorialized in the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) in 1978 and remained unchanged in subsequent editions. In July 2002, the Postal Service included a separate provision, Section 519.42, in the seventeenth edition of the ELM. This provision authorizes management to grant administrative leave to employees who donate bone marrow, stem cells, blood platelets, and organs.

The relevant provision of ELM Section 519.42 (hereinafter sometimes referred to as "the platelet provision") states:

> The maximum administrative leave that can be granted per leave year to cover qualification and donation is limited to the following:
>
> a. To a full-time career employee:
> (1) For bone marrow, 3 days.
> (2) For stem cells, 3 days.
> (3) For blood platelets, 3 days.
> (4) For organs, 14 days.

In 2006, during bargaining for their successor National Agreement, the APWU and the Postal Service negotiated a Memorandum of Understanding to increase the maximum leave from "3 days" to "7 days" for bone marrow, stem cell, and blood platelet donations and from "14 days" to "30 days" for organ donations. Later in 2006, the NPMHU asked for "the AWPU agreement" and the parties added a Memorandum of Understanding (the platelet MOU) concerning bone marrow, stem cell, blood platelet, and organ donation to the collective bargaining agreement. This platelet MOU states, in relevant part:

The parties agree the maximum administrative leave that can be granted per leave year to cover qualification and donation is limited to the following:

a. A full-time or part-time career employee is limited to:
   (1) for bone marrow, up to 7 days;
   (2) for stem cells, up to 7 days;
   (3) for blood platelets, up to 7 days;
   (4) for organs, up to 30 days.

The whole blood donation provision in ELM Section 510.25, which dates from 1978, reads as follows:

.25 Blood Donations

.251 Policy. All postal employees are urged to cooperate fully with the public blood donation programs for the health and security of their community. The time necessary includes the time required for travel and the time required by the medical facility to process the blood donation.

.252 Time Allowed

a. General Allowance. Postal employees may be excused for that period of time deemed reasonably necessary to cover any absence from regular tours of duty to make voluntary blood donations, without remuneration to the Red Cross, or the community, or other nonprofit blood bank. This regulation does not apply to those employees who participate in this program on their own time, off duty.

b. Additional Time. In the case of employees in occupations for which the blood bank recommends additional time off following the blood donation, the time necessary includes the additional time recommended by the blood bank. Every effort should be made to have blood donations for such employees scheduled near the end of their tour of duty.

.253 Restrictions.

The following provisions concern restrictions on time allowed for blood donations:

a. The time allowed may in no instance exceed 8 hours. A full day's administrative leave may only be granted when there are unusual circumstances such as in rural areas where considerable travel may be involved. It is not intended that a full day's administrative leave be granted any employee for donating blood when the blood bank or facility is nearby.

b. Administrative leave for blood donation may be granted during a regular tour of the employee's basic work week, but only on the date of the blood donation. It is not granted to employees on suspension or in any nonpay status.

UNION POSITION

The Union argues that the way the Postal Service incorporated donation of blood platelets into a new provision of the ELM, rather than adding it to the existing whole blood provision, shows that administrative leave for blood platelets was not intended to be treated the same as administrative leave for whole blood. The Union cites to the language in ELM Section 519.42 where leave time for donation is expressed in "days", not hourly increments, and argues that paid leave should be granted in days.

The Union points out that the federal government has a long history of encouraging federal employees to make medical donations by providing some kind of paid leave to cover donation time. The Union cites the discretion federal agencies have to set rules and regulations for providing paid leave for employees. For example, Army regulations provide authorized leave time for the time it takes to travel to and from blood donation centers and to give blood, as well as four hours of excused absence on the day of donation for recuperation purposes. Additionally, the Union contends that by amending Title 5 of the U.S. Code, which governs the terms and conditions of federal employment, in 1994 to provide paid leave for bone marrow and organ donations, and by passing the Organ Donor Leave Act in 1999, the federal government recognized that a key factor when encouraging medical donations was to ensure that employees had a sufficient amount of time to cover donation and recovery.[1]

[1] The Union notes that 5 U.S.C. §6327 provides for a specified number of "days" of leave for the covered medical donations, and 5 U.S.C. §6129 defines "day" as 8 hours.

The Union contends that despite the federal government's steps to encourage medical donations, the Postal Service initially explicitly prohibited administrative leave for bone marrow, stem cell, blood platelet, and organ donation. However, soon after this prohibition was included in the ELM, the Postal Service reversed its stance and decided to permit leave for such donations.

The Union argues that although the platelet provision, as augmented by the platelet MOU, provides for up to 7 days of leave for the donation of blood platelets, the Postal Service has refused to grant Grievant a full, 8-hour day of leave. The Union stresses that this practice serves to curtail the amount of leave provided to employees and limits their ability to give medical donations. The Union asks the arbitrator to include in his decision the Postal Service admission at the hearing that each day of the 7 days of leave referred to in the blood platelet donation MOU represents an 8-hour day, resulting in a 56-hour annual maximum of administrative leave for such donations. The Union explains that this admission is significant because some managers have been misapplying the provision to limit a day of leave to one donation, even where the amount of leave granted for the donation is less than 8 hours, which has reduced 7 days of leave to less than the 56-hour equivalent.

The Union argues that incorporating blood platelet donations in the creation of a new ELM provision with bone marrow, stem cell and organ donations -- all of which require at least one day -- shows that the Postal Service intended to treat blood platelet donations differently than donations of whole blood. The Postal Service notably did not add blood platelets to the already existing provision regarding whole blood donations. The Union contends that this shows that the Postal Service did not intend to limit each blood platelet donation to hourly increments of administrative leave, like it does with whole blood donations.

The Union interprets the plain language of the blood platelet provision to mean that the Postal Service took a completely different approach to blood platelet donations than to whole blood donations. For example, the Postal Service enumerated no discretionary standards or other factors, like it has in the whole blood provision, concerning the grant of administrative leave for blood platelet donation. The only unit of measure for blood platelets is a certain number of days per leave year. The Union argues that the new donation policy was intended to provide for leave in days which is reflected in the types of medical procedures included in the policy, all of which it maintains require at least one day of leave.

The Union asserts that the Postal Service's arguments are unpersuasive and do not prove that it intended administrative leave for blood platelet donations to be granted only in hour-long increments. The Union questions the credibility of Postal Service witness Phillis Walden because she incorrectly said that blood platelets can be donated several times a week, while -- as the Postal Service acknowledges -- documents submitted from Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center state that you can donate platelets only once a week. The Union argues that if the Postal Service actually intended to establish discretionary, hour-long increments for the donation of platelets, then it could have placed blood platelets in the whole blood donation section.

The Union also insists that even if the language of the platelet MOU is based on an identically worded MOU between the APWU and the Postal Service, it does not follow that the APWU's understanding of those terms control their meaning for the NPMHU. The Union argues that there is well-established precedent that identical language in two National Agreements may have different meanings.[2] The Union asserts that there is no evidence in the current dispute that the Union had a similar understanding of the blood platelet provision as the Postal Service purports that it had with the APWU. Additionally, bargaining unit members in the NPMHU and the APWU perform distinctly different job duties and the contexts in which employees from each union operate are vastly different. The Union stresses that mail handler craft work involves lifting heavy loads, operating heavy machinery, and engaging in other strenuous activities.

[2] The Union cites Arbitrator Byars' 2008 award in an APWU case, No. Q98C-4Q-C 00062970, interpreting the APWU's agreement regarding the annual leave exchange option for PTF employees. The Union relies upon Byars' decision that even when contract language is identical, it does not necessarily follow that the unions were aware of or agreed to the identical application under their contract. Although one union and the Postal Service may have negotiated with a certain understanding, the contractual language may not convey such an understanding. As a consequence, the Union argues that the contract language controls and

The Union also argues that the practical realities of blood platelet donations necessitate that administrative leave be provided in one-day increments. Employees working in the mail handler craft require one day to make a blood platelet donation because of the time it takes to make the donation, to recuperate from the procedure and to travel to and from the donation center.

The apheresis process used for blood platelet donation, which is the same procedure used for stem cell donations, takes 2 to 2 1/2 hours to complete. The donation procedure for whole blood only takes 8 to 10 minutes, yet 4 hours is a common amount of leave time granted for blood donations. The Union points out that recuperation time for whole blood and blood platelet donation also is different. The Union asserts that whole blood donors are advised to drink fluids and limit exercise after making the donation, while blood platelet donors are advised to avoid heavy lifting or strenuous exercise that day. The Union argues that blood platelet donations necessitate at least one day of administrative leave for NPMHU members due to the strenuous nature of their work.

The Union notes that giving employees sufficient time for recuperation is a necessary part of a sound medical donation procedure and encourages employees to make a donation for the public good, which the platelet provision and MOU were intended to do. Limiting the amount of leave for blood platelet donors discourages, rather than encourages employee donations.

The Union also points out that blood platelet donation facilities are not as numerous as whole blood facilities. Therefore, employees donating blood platelets require a full day of administrative leave because they will, on average, have to travel a greater distance to the donation site.

not the undisclosed intent of the other union during separate negotiations over a separate contract.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Postal Service asserts that the platelet MOU language is clear that a supervisor is not required to grant 8 hours of administrative leave to an employee for each leave request. The Postal Service points out that the MOU language does not state a minimum amount of leave that a supervisor must grant. The Postal Service argues that the MOU contains clear, restrictive language that establishes a maximum amount of leave an employee may take during a leave year. More importantly, the Postal Service points out that the MOU does not contain any language that explicitly establishes a minimum amount of administrative leave that a supervisor must grant.

The Postal Service contends that its interpretation is consistent with the tenets of contract construction. The use of words establishing a maximum, and the absence of words establishing a minimum, is significant because the terms of the agreement are chosen in an effort to indicate intent. Essentially, the Postal Service argues that if the parties had intended to establish an 8-hour minimum, they would have included specific language to that effect in the MOU.

The Postal Service offered examples of employees who requested and were granted less than 8 hours of administrative leave for platelet donation as support for its argument that it has a past practice of granting less than 8 hours for donating platelets. Conversely, the Postal Service asserts that the Union offered no evidence or argument that there is a practice of granting a minimum of 8 hours for platelet donation.

The Postal Service argues that when it added the platelet provision to the ELM in 2002 it did not intend for leave to be taken in 8-hour increments for blood platelet donations. The Postal Service intended to grant employees' administrative leave consistent with the ELM's provision in which it states that administrative leave is a paid "absence from duty." Therefore, employees may receive paid leave for the number of hours that they are donating blood platelets, whether it is 3 hours or 6 hours. The Postal Service states that the process for donating blood platelets typically takes 1 ½ to 3 hours. The Postal Service disagrees with the Union position that employees should get an automatic 8 hours of paid leave because that would give most employees additional hours beyond time needed to donate.

Phillis Walden, then a compensation specialist for the Postal Service, drafted the blood platelet ELM provision and was involved in taking steps to comply with Article 19 of the CBA.[3] Walden testified that the original 3-day maximum of administrative leave for platelet donations indicated a twenty-four hour aggregate maximum of leave per year. The blood platelet provision intentionally did not provide a minimum amount of time that must be granted.

The Postal Service argues that the updated platelet MOU that was signed in 2006 increased the maximum days from 3 to 7, but does not state a minimum amount of leave that supervisors must grant employees for donating platelets. The Postal Service points out that the NPMHU asked for the APWU agreement regarding blood platelets, accordingly, the parties did not negotiate over the MOU. The Postal Service asserts that supervisors currently grant administrative leave for blood platelet donations for the amount of time an employee needs to donate, which historically has ranged from approximately 1 ½ to 4 hours.

Allen Mohl, Manager of NPMHU Contract Administration for the Postal Service, testified that during the grievance process the parties reached out to the APWU to determine how it interprets its own MOU. A representative from APWU explained that the APWU understood the intent of the leave was to cover whatever time was necessary for the donation, rather than a guaranteed minimum. Although the Postal Service recognizes that the APWU's interpretation of its MOU is not controlling, it argues that it is highly persuasive and important because the MOUs are almost identical. Additionally, the NMPHU had the opportunity to clarify the meaning of the word "days" within its MOU in 2006.

The Postal Service points out that even the Union concedes that §§ 6129 and 6327 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, cited by the Union, do not apply to the Postal Service. The [3] Article 19 of the CBA states that the Postal Service must give the Union notice of any changes to handbooks, manuals, and published regulations that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions sixty days prior to issuance.

Postal Service argues that those provisions are irrelevant to this dispute. Furthermore, even if the statutes were controlling, the sections, read together, do not show that a reference to "days" means that leave must be taken and granted in 8-hour increments. There is no evidence that either section of the Code referenced by the Union was aimed at or intended to create an 8-hour minimum for granted leave. Accordingly, the Union's argument should be rejected.

The Postal Service contends that the Union incorrectly argues that because the administrative leave maximum of 7 days for donating blood platelets and stem cells appear in the same ELM provision, the intent of the provision was to grant a minimum of a full day of administrative leave for donating platelets. Additionally, the Union incorrectly asserts that because both stem cells and blood platelets are donated using the apheresis process, the procedures are similar. The Postal Service argues that the Union's assertions are incorrect because the total time necessary to donate stem cells is much greater than the time required to donate platelets. Therefore, the Postal Service argues that it is reasonable to expect employees to take leave for donating platelets in any increment of 0.01 hours, as employees do for whole blood donations, and not in one eight-hour increment.

The Postal Service has authorized paid leave for whole blood donations for over sixty years and the ELM provision related to blood donation has appeared virtually unchanged in every edition of the ELM for over thirty-five years. The Postal Service argues that its decision to add four additional types of donations -- bone marrow, stem cell, blood platelet, and organ -- in a separate provision of the ELM in 2002 did not signify the sort of difference the Union is alleging with respect to how administrative leave was to be granted. Additionally, the Postal Service asserts that its interpretation of the platelet MOU encourages employees to donate blood platelets more often than if leave was required to be granted in minimum 8-hour increments.

FINDINGS

The wording of ELM Section 519.42, the platelet provision, differs from that in ELM Section 510.25 which covers whole blood donations. The latter does not specify the maximum administrative leave that can be granted per year, but does state that leave for a particular blood donation may not exceed 8 hours and that a full day of leave is to be granted only in unusual circumstances. The blood donation provision also specifically states that the allowed time should include the time needed to complete the donation procedure and to travel to and from the donation site. It also provides for inclusion of any recommended recuperation period based on occupation, but adds that: "Every effort should be made to have blood donations for such employees scheduled near the end of their tour of duty." These provisions in ELM 510.25 date back to 1978, and predecessor blood donation provisions had been included in postal regulations since the 1950s. When leave for additional types of medical donations was added in Section 519.42 of the ELM in 2002 -- sometime after provisions for granting leave to federal employees who made bone marrow and organ donations were included in Title 5 of the U.S. Code -- the Postal Service included such leave in a separate provision of the ELM. The platelet provision added in 2002 did not spell out the various components to be factored into the leave time to be granted for these donations as in ELM Section 510.25, but imposed annual maximums.

There is no question that some of the donations covered by the platelet provision in ELM Section 519.42, unlike whole blood donations, may require a minimum of one or more days of leave, but that has not been shown to be the case for donation of blood platelets.[4] The meaning of ELM Section 519.42 must be determined on the basis of the language used therein. I am not persuaded that by expressing the maximum amount of administrative leave to be granted for various donations in terms of "days" this provision of the ELM was intended by the Postal Service to establish that leave thereunder was to be granted in minimum 8-hour segments.[5] There also is no reason to believe that the wording of ELM Section 519.42, which applies across the Postal Service, was influenced by the strenuous nature of mail handler work -- which is not to say that a particular mail handler could not justifiably request leave that reflects the need for greater recuperative time than if that employee was performing more sedentary work, as also might be done for donating whole blood.

The Postal Service does not dispute that the maximum number of days of leave provided for in ELM 519.42, and subsequently in the platelet MOU, corresponds to the specified number of days multiplied by 8 hours. The expansion of the number of days of maximum annual administrative leave provided for in the platelet MOU does not change the meaning of "days" as established in the original 2002 ELM platelet provision. The parties simply agreed to adopt "the APWU agreement" increasing the number of days without further discussion. While the meaning of the NPMHU's platelet MOU is not necessarily controlled by how the APWU provisions have been interpreted or applied, the latter does not provide support for the Union's position in this case.

There is limited evidence in the record regarding how leave for blood platelet donations has been administered in the mail handler craft. The record in the underlying grievance includes an acknowledgement by the plant manager that: "Requests for blood platelet donations for the most part have been previously approved for eight (8) hours of administrative leave...." He added that he had reconsidered the matter in light of the position taken by the Postal Service at the National level. The Postal Service introduced evidence of

[5] The parties agree that the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 6129 and 6327, which preceded the Postal Service's adoption of the platelet provision in the ELM, do not apply to the Postal Service. Even if the use of "days" in ELM Section 519.42 may have been influenced by the wording of the statute, the definition of "day" as 8 hours in § 6129 does not equate to a minimum 8-hour requirement. The statute, like ELM Section 519.42, establishes maximum leave limits in terms of "days", and its definition of a "day" as being 8 hours, as the Union acknowledges, simply may reflect the fact that there are different federal work schedules -- some people work more or less hours or alternate schedules. It has not been shown to establish an 8-hour minimum for administrative leave for federal employees.

several mail handlers at other locations requesting and being granted leave of four hours or less. At best, the record shows a mixed practice and is of no real assistance in deciding the interpretive issue in this case.

If the Postal Service had wanted to designate a minimum amount of administrative leave it presumably would have specified that in ELM 519.42 in 2002 or the parties could have done so in the 2006 platelet MOU. Both clearly specify a maximum amount of administrative leave for the covered medical donations. Notably absent from the ELM provision and the platelet MOU is any reference to a minimum amount of administrative leave for such donations.

In sum, the Union has not established that the provisions in ELM Section 519.42 or the platelet MOU grant employees the right to a minimum 8 hours of administrative leave for each occasion on which they donate blood platelets, where that is not reasonably necessary in order to cover, in any particular case, the time needed to travel to and from the donation site, complete the donation procedure, and provide any necessary recuperative time.

I recently met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above-captioned grievances which are currently scheduled for national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 515, concerning the Family and Medical Leave, and Section 865, Return to Duty after Medical Absences are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree the Contract Interpretation Manual will be updated to clarify current ELM 515 language.

The current ELM 865 language does not negate management's obligation under the MOU: Return to Duty when returning an employee to duty after an absence for medical reasons.

The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve these cases thereby removing them from the national arbitration list.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

BACKGROUND

On July 6, 2010 the Postal Service sent an Article 19 notice to its unions informing them that it intended to revise certain regulations in Section 510 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) concerning the Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993 (FMLA), as amended. Among those revisions was a new requirement in ELM 515.52 that employees use only the Department of Labor (DOL) WH-380 forms when they seek to have their absences protected by the FMLA.

On October 4, 2010 the APWU filed an Article 19 appeal to arbitration protesting, in part, the proposed change to ELM 515.52. The Union submitted its 15-day statement of issues and facts on October 19, 2010. The Postal Service submitted its 15-day statement on October 18, 2010. As an initial matter, the Postal Service asserted that the Union's Article 19 appeal was procedurally defective because the Union had not first requested and attended a meeting concerning the proposed ELM changes.

On October 27, 2010, the APWU initiated a Step 4 national dispute under Article 15, in which it stated:

> It is the APWU's position, consistent with the Collective Bargaining Agreement, applicable Department of Labor (DOL) regulations, the parties' established accepted past practice (for over 15 years), and the mutual understanding and agreement between the parties at the national level, that: (1) employees are not required to use a specific format or form for FMLA certification; (2) employees may use APWU forms for FMLA certification, or any other format or forms that contain the information required under 29 CFR 825.306; and (3) the submission of FMLA certification using DOL WH-380 forms is optional.

The Postal Service and the APWU agreed to combine the Union's Article 19 appeal and its Article 15 grievance in a single arbitration proceeding. The NALC and the NPMHU are intervenors in this proceeding.

At arbitration, the Postal Service argued that the Article 19 appeal should be dismissed based on the APWU's failure to follow the requirement of Article 19. The Postal Service further maintained that the APWU cannot escape its failure to follow Article 19 by filing a subsequent Article 15 grievance, and that grievance, accordingly, should be denied. On the merits, the Postal Service insisted that the challenged change to the ELM did not violate Article 19 or any other provision of the National Agreement. The Postal Service agreed not to seek bifurcation, with the understanding that the Arbitrator initially would rule on the arbitrability issue.

The FMLA first was enacted in 1993. Section 103(b), 29 USC §2613(b), sets forth the following certification provision:

> (b) SUFFICIENT CERTIFICATION.--Certification provided under subsection (a) shall be sufficient if it states
> (1) the date on which the serious health condition commenced;
> (2) the probable duration of the condition;
> (5) in the case of certification for intermittent leave, or leave on a reduced leave schedule, for planned medical treatment, the dates on which such treatment is expected to be given and the duration of such treatment;
> (7) in the case of certification for intermittent leave, or leave on a reduced leave schedule, under section 102(a)(1)(C), a > statement that the employee's intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule is necessary for the care of the son, daughter, parent, or spouse who has a serious health condition, or will assist in their recovery, and the expected duration and schedule of the intermittent leave or reduced leave schedule.

> (b) DOL has developed two optional forms (Form WH-380E and Form WH-380F, as revised) for use in obtaining medical certification, including second and third opinions, from health care providers that meets FMLA's certification requirements.... These optional forms reflect certification requirements so as to permit the health care provider to furnish appropriate medical information. Form WH-380E and WH-380F, as revised, or another form containing the same basic information, may be used by the employer; however, no information may be required beyond that specified in §§825.306, 825.307, and 825.308. In all instances the information on the form must relate only to the serious health condition for which the current need for leave exists.

The DOL Preamble to §825.306 (73 Fed. Reg. No. 222 [Nov. 17, 2008], at 68013) states:

> Current §825.306 addresses how much information an employer can obtain in the medical certification to substantiate the existence of a serious health condition (of the employee or a family member) and the employee's need for leave due to the condition. This section also explains that the Department provides an optional form (Form WH-380) for use in the medical certification process; other forms may be used, but they may only seek information related to the condition for which leave is sought, and no additional information beyond that contained in the WH-380 may be required....

In 1995, Headquarters Labor Relations managers sent memos to Human Resources Area Managers regarding documentation for FMLA requests. In one memo, Manager Anthony Vegliante stated:

> The attached APWU Forms 1 through 5, dated June 26, 1995 provide supporting documentation for leave requests covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA). These forms have been reviewed by the appropriate Headquarters functional areas and are acceptable for usage by managers to approve or disapprove FML leave requests.
> The Postal Service does not require a specific format for FML documentation. Information provided by the employee is acceptable as long as it is in compliance with Publication 71, Notice for Employees Requesting Leave for Conditions Covered by the Family and Medical Leave Act IV, Section IV.

In another memo, Acting Manager Patricia Heath stated:

> The DOL WH-380 form does not require medical information that directly violates the employee's right to privacy. However, we realize health care providers may give more detail than requested on the form (i.e., prognosis and diagnosis) and that employees may not want to provide this information to their immediate supervisors. Therefore, to address the union's concern, the Postal Service reviewed and approved APWU and NALC FMLA forms that, when properly filled out by the health care providers, provide enough information is provided [sic] to certify that the absence qualifies as a covered condition under the FMLA.

In 2000, the APWU initiated a Step 4 dispute over the implementation of Resource Management Database (RMD) software. In that case, the APWU asserted: "We believe that the Postal Service has implemented a new policy of requiring employees to only use a WH-380 form, a policy that is also contrary to an agreement between the parties concerning the use of such forms." The parties entered into a pre-arbitration settlement of that case on March 28, 2003, which states in part:

> Optional FMLA Forms: There is no required form or format for information submitted by an employee in support of an absence for a condition which may be protected under the Family and > Medical Leave Act. Although the Postal Service sends employees the Department of Labor Form, WH-380, the APWU forms or any form or format which contains the required information (i.e. information such as that required on a current WH-380) is acceptable.

In June 2007, the parties included the RMD pre-arbitration settlement in the provisions of the USPS-APWU Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) relating to Article 10, as well as the following statement:

> Documentation to substantiate FMLA is acceptable in any format, including a form created by the union, as long as it provides the information as required by the FMLA.

The October 2004 USPS-NPMHU Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM) also includes an equivalent provision to that in the 2003 USPS-APWU RMD settlement, citing that settlement as the source.

In revised regulations that took effect in January 2009, the DOL changed some of the FMLA certification requirements and modified its WH-380 forms. The APWU updated its FMLA certification forms and provided them to the Postal Service. The parties then engaged in a series of correspondence, in which the Postal Service raised concerns regarding the APWU's revised forms and expressed its view that they were not equivalent to the revised WH-380. The Postal Service did not, however, state that it would not accept certifications on APWU forms. Its position at that time was expressed as follows in a July 8, 2009 email from a Headquarters Labor Relations manager to Area managers:

> DOL Forms WH-380E and WH-380F are the preferred "Certification(s) of Health Care Provider." When properly completed, these forms provide all information necessary to determine if leave qualifies for FMLA. However, if you receive certification in any other form including forms provided by the unions, you cannot refuse the form. Accepting the union form does not indicate you accept the certification as complete. You must carefully examine the form received to ensure that it provides complete information, sufficient to establish a serious > health condition. If one or more necessary entries are missing or incomplete, or if the certification is insufficient, you must notify the employee that the certification is incomplete or insufficient and give them the opportunity to cure the deficiency. You must specify in writing the additional information that is needed to make the certification complete and sufficient (WH-382, Designation Notice).

On July 6, 2010, the Postal Service issued its Article 19 notice that triggered the present disputes. The ELM change requiring that employees use only the WH-380 forms subsequently went into effect after the 60-day period provided for in Article 19.

Linda DeCarlo, Director of Health and Safety for the Postal Service, testified that it receives close to 250,000 leave requests for FMLA protection per year. After enactment of the FMLA in 1993, initially decisions as to whether to designate leave as FMLA protected leave were made by employee supervisors. That responsibility later was transferred to FMLA coordinators assigned at each Postal Service district office. DeCarlo said the Postal Service currently is in the process of centralizing decision making at a single location.

DeCarlo explained that the main reason for the ELM change in dispute was that mandatory use of the WH-380 was better for the employee. In addition, use of a uniform form allows the Postal Service to streamline its operation, which enhances its ability to issue timely decisions.

On cross-examination, DeCarlo said that if an employee brought in a statement from their physician that contained all the information required by the FMLA but not on a WH-380, the employee would be required to return to the doctor to have the information copied onto the WH-380. If that required additional payment, the employee would be responsible for it.

Margaret Adams, a Resource Management Specialist for the Postal Service, testified regarding a survey she conducted in late November 2010. She asked all the FMLA Coordinators to pull from their files any 50 FMLA certifications submitted on union forms and to determine the number of these forms which resulted in a cure or clarification request because

Adams acknowledged that no equivalent survey was conducted regarding FMLA certifications submitted on WH-380 forms. Based on her visits to various District FMLA offices, quarterly telecons and other discussions with individual FMLA coordinators, she believed that use of the WH-380, especially in its new format (since 2009) has made a big difference. She estimated that less than 20 percent, and possibly many fewer, of the WH-380 forms result in a cure or clarification request.

Greg Bell, Executive Vice President of the APWU since November 2010, previously served as the Union's Director of Industrial Relations and oversaw FMLA issues. After the DOL's revised regulations took effect in 2009, he had discussions and corresponded with Postal Service Labor Relations managers regarding the APWU's revised FMLA certification forms. He testified that when that dialogue ended at the end of March 2010, the Postal Service had not asserted that the APWU forms would not be accepted or that the Postal Service would only accept WH-380s. In the ongoing correspondence, he added, he typically reiterated the Union's position regarding the optional aspect of the WH-380 and the Postal Service's obligation to specify any deficiencies in the information submitted by an employee on whatever form they used. He also noted that whenever the APWU headquarters heard from the field that an FMLA coordinator was not accepting APWU forms, the Union contacted the Postal Service and those issues were resolved.

Bell also testified that if the Union receives an Article 19 notice of an ELM change that it determines is a clear violation of the National Agreement, it typically exercises its discretion to file a Step 4 grievance under Article 15. He cited, as one of many such examples, a Step 4 dispute initiated in 2000 protesting a revision to ELM 510 as a violation of Article 10.

Relevant provisions of the National Agreement include the following:

ARTICLE 5
PROHIBITION OF UNILATERAL ACTION

ARTICLE 15
GRIEVANCE-ARBITRATION PROCEDURE

Section 1. Definition

A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Union which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement.

Section 4. Grievance Procedure-General

D. It is agreed that in the event of dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated at the Step 4 level by either party. Such a dispute shall be initiated in writing and must specify in detail the facts giving rise to the dispute, the precise interpretive issues to be decided and the contention of either party....

HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable....

Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Union at the national level at least sixty (60) days prior to issuance. The Employer shall furnish the Union with the following information about each proposed change: a narrative explanation of the purpose and impact on employees and any documentation concerning the proposed change from the manager(s) who requested the change addressing its purpose and effect. Proposed changes will be furnished to the Union by hard copy or, if available, by electronic file. At the request of the Union, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Union requests a meeting concerning proposed changes, the meeting will be attended by manager(s) who are knowledgeable about the purpose of the proposed change and its impact on employees. If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), it may then submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedure within ninety (90) days after receipt of the notice of proposed change. Within fifteen (15) days after the issue has been submitted to arbitration, each party shall provide the other with a statement in writing of its understanding of the precise issues involved, and the facts giving rise to such issues....

An MOU regarding the JCIM, included at page 328 of the National Agreement, states, in part: "The parties will be bound by these joint interpretations and grievances will not be filed asserting a position contrary to a joint interpretation." The preamble to the 2007 JCIM states:

> The 2007 APWU/USPS Joint Contract Interpretation Manual (JCIM) update is provided as a resource for the administration of the National Agreement. Jointly prepared by the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO, and the United States Postal Service, this manual provides a mutually agreed to explanation on how to apply the contract to the issues addressed.
> When a dispute arises, the parties should first go to the JCIM to determine if the issue in dispute is addressed. If it is, the parties are required to resolve the dispute in accordance with this manual.
> The JCIM will continue to be updated with additional material as we continue to narrow our differences and expand our joint understanding of the National Agreement. We encourage you to use the JCIM to ensure contract compliance and to foster more professional working relationships.

Arbitrability

The Postal Service initially contends that the Union's Article 19 appeal should be dismissed because the Union did not request, much less attend, an Article 19 meeting before filing the appeal. Under Article 19, the Postal Service maintains, the Union can only file an appeal to arbitration after it has requested a meeting, attended a meeting and determined that it is not satisfied with the result of the meeting.

The Postal Service insists that an Article 19 meeting is not a mere technicality. It points out that it was the APWU that insisted on the language that requires "manager(s) who are knowledgeable about the purpose of the proposed change" to attend the meeting. In this case, the Postal Service asserts, an Article 19 meeting would have given the APWU the opportunity to discuss an argument it first raised at the arbitration hearing that the Postal Service violated

Article 10 when it made the protested change to the ELM. The Postal Service had never heard this argument before, and this is the very type of harm that an Article 19 meeting should prevent. The Postal Service cites Case No. H7C-NA-C 10 (Snow, 1989) in support of its position.

The Postal Service further argues that the APWU should not be allowed to escape its failure to follow Article 19 by raising a new dispute under Article 15. Otherwise, the requirements of Article 19 would be rendered meaningless because a union could always take such action. The Postal Service acknowledges that in Case No. HOC-3N-C 416 (1994) Arbitrator Snow allowed the Union to raise an argument in an Article 15 case that the Postal Service's interpretation of an ELM regulation violated language in the National Agreement, even though the ELM language had never been challenged. In the instant case, however, the National Agreement does not address requests for FMLA certification. That is a matter entirely dealt with by the Postal Service in its manuals and handbooks.

The Postal Service contends that the ELM change does not violate Article 19 or any other part of the National Agreement.

The Postal Service asserts that the APWU's claim, that the new policy requiring use of only the WH-380 forms violated Article 10.2.A, should be dismissed because it was raised for the first time at arbitration. The APWU's brief passing reference to violation of Article 10 in its Article 15 15-day statement of issues and facts did not reference what part of Article 10 allegedly had been violated or why Article 10 had been violated and was insufficient to put the Postal Service on notice that it was raising this issue.

Even assuming, however, that the APWU had properly raised this argument, the Postal Service maintains that Article 10.2.A does not apply to all changes in ELM Subchapter 510, but only those that relate directly to wages, hours and working conditions. The new policy requiring employees to use only the WH-380 was not a change directly relating to wages, hours or working conditions, even though it was contained in a larger Article 19 notice that included some changes to wages, hours and working conditions. The new policy had no effect on wages paid to employees or hours that they worked. In addition, it had no effect on working conditions, as a WH-380 is filled out by the treating physician. The new policy does not change the burdens on the employee who seeks FMLA protection. Prior to the new policy, employees submitting an APWU form had to do just as much.

The Postal Service also rejects the APWU's argument that the change violates Article 5 because it allegedly violates the FMLA. To the contrary, the FMLA and its implementing regulations allow such a requirement. The DOL's regulations specifically empower employers, not employees, to decide what forms employees must use when they seek FMLA protection for their leave, so long as those forms do not ask for more information than what is printed on the WH-380. By choosing to require use of the WH-380, the Postal Service clearly is complying with the law. The Postal Service cites a federal district court decision in Miedema v. Facility Concession Services, 2011 WL 1363793 (S.D. Texas, April 11, 2001). It further asserts that federal courts have held that employers have the right to institute rules to carry out their responsibilities under the FMLA, so long as those rules do not infringe upon substantive rights or discourage use of the FMLA.

The Postal Service contends that the March 28, 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement relied on by the Union merely recited the then-current policy of allowing use of the APWU's forms and other forms deemed by the Postal Service to be equivalent to the DOL forms. The settlement did not give the APWU anything new, and the Postal Service did not waive its rights to make future changes that are fair, reasonable, and equitable under Article 19. See: Case No. Q98C-4Q-C 02013900 (Das, 2006). Likewise, the JCIM language also cited by the Union gave an accurate interpretation of the policy as it existed in June 2007, when this part of the JCIM was published. Obviously, the JCIM will need to be updated to reflect the new policy.

Finally, the Postal Service contends that the new policy requiring employees to use only the WH-380 form when they seek for their leave to be protected by the FMLA easily meets the test of being fair, reasonable, and equitable.

The WH-380 form is generated not by the Postal Service, but by the agency (DOL) entrusted with administering FMLA. As postal witness Adams testified, WH-380 forms require cure or clarification less than 20 percent of the time, whereas the Postal Service's survey indicates that union forms require cure or clarification more than 50 percent of the time. Decreasing the frequency of occasions when it is necessary to return forms to employees for cure or clarification should benefit employees, as they should have less need to spend time and money returning to their physicians, and will not have their FMLA entitlements delayed as often.

Mandatory use of the WH-380 also should save processing time for the Postal Service. As it moves to centralize its FMLA function, there are obvious benefits in using one standard form to cover the approximately 250,000 leave requests for FMLA protection that come in per year. Moreover, as Arbitrator Dennis Nolan pointed out, in a case where the same postal unions were challenging form letters that the Postal Service was using in FMLA-covered situations, the WH-380 is a "safe harbor" for employers. See: NALC Case No. Q98N-4Q-C 01167325 (2008).

Abitrability

The Union insists its Article 19 grievance is arbitrable. Under Article 19, only the Union, not the employer, has a right to request an Article 19 meeting. This is because the purpose of the meeting is to require the employer to inform the Union of the purpose and intended effect of the proposed change so the Union can determine whether there is a dispute and make an informed decision about whether to appeal to arbitration. It would be anomalous to give preclusive effect to the lack of a meeting when the employer has no right to request, much less to demand, a meeting, particularly when the parties -- as in this case -- have been engaged in an ongoing dialogue about the subject of the protested ELM change.

The Union notes that under Article 19 if it delays in requesting a meeting or does not request a meeting the Article 19 process is not slowed down. The employer has a right to implement the proposed ELM change 60 days after notice has been provided and the Union must appeal within 90 days of receiving such notice. Moreover, even if there was a requirement that the Union request a meeting, the employer should be required to show that it has been prejudiced by the lack of a meeting, which it has not done in this case.

The Union argues that it would be particularly anomalous to find a strict requirement for an Article 19 meeting under the circumstances of this case. The parties' discussions and agreements about the use of the WH-380 began soon after the passage of the FMLA in 1993. Those discussions led to the 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement that required the employer to continue to accept and process FMLA certifications that did not use the WH-380. That settlement was then made part of the parties' JCIM. Moreover, as testified to by Union witness Bell, the requirement that the Postal Service accept and process forms other than WH-380 was routinely enforced by the Union and complied with by the Postal Service. After publication of the amended WH-380 forms in January 2009, the APWU amended its forms as well, and a lengthy correspondence then ensued in which the Postal Service and the Union debated whether the APWU forms were "equivalent" to the WH-380 forms. In each of the Union's letters in this correspondence the Union reminded the Postal Service that it could not require employees to use the WH-380 form.

In other words, the Union stresses, the Postal Service was perfectly well aware of the APWU's position on the issue, and a meeting to "discuss" the matter further would have been a mere formality that would not have served the purpose of Article 19 meetings or expediting the Article 19 process.

To the extent the Postal Service relies on Arbitrator Snow's decision in Case No. H7C-NA-C 10, the Union disagrees with his dictum that the failure of the Union to demand a meeting as if an Article 19 notice had been provided is material to the arbitrability of the Union's appeal to arbitration in that case.

The Union insists that the Postal Service was not prejudiced by a lack of an Article 19 meeting in this case. In its 15-day statement under Article 19, the Union argued that the proposed changes were not fair, reasonable, and equitable and that they violated Articles 5, 10 and 19 of the National Agreement. In light of the long history of the parties on this issue it simply is not credible that Postal Service representatives were unaware of the fact that the APWU regularly files Article 10.2 grievances when the employer attempts to amend part 510 of the ELM. The JCIM provisions that specify that the employer will not require use of the WH-380 form both reference Article 10.

The Union also asserts that its Article 15 grievance is arbitrable. The employer seems to be arguing that because the Union also has the right to challenge the employer's new policy under Article 19, the Union's Article 15 grievance and arbitration rights are cut off. This contention is contrary to the language of Article 15 and completely unsupported by the language of Article 19. The purpose of Article 19 is not to permit the employer to change the contract. The fundamental purpose of Article 19 is to permit the employer to modify its handbooks and manuals and to permit the Union to challenge those modifications on the ground that they are not fair, reasonable, and equitable. The authors of Article 19 also provided, that the manuals "shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement." This oblique statement gives the Union the right to challenge proposed handbook and manual provisions under Article 19 on the ground that they conflict with the National Agreement. But it says nothing about cutting off the right of the Union to file an Article 15 grievance challenging the violation of the National Agreement.

Article 10.2, the Union argues, unequivocally prohibits the employer from making changes in ELM subpart 510 that affect wages, hours, or working conditions. Thus a prohibited amendment of Subchapter 510 is not just "inconsistent" with the National Agreement, it is not permitted to be made part of the ELM. Article 10.2 can only be given its intended meaning if, when prohibited amendments of Subchapter 510 are attempted, the Union has a right to challenge those amendments, not just using Article 19 procedures, but also by filing an Article 15 grievance to enforce Article 10.2. As Bell testified, this is the Union's regular practice.

Merits

The Union contends that its Article 15 grievance must be sustained because the Postal Service has violated the 2003 RMD pre-arbitration settlement agreement, the JCIM, the parties' MOU concerning the JCIM, and Articles 5 and 10 of the National Agreement.

The Union notes that although the RMD settlement agreement, like the MS-47 settlement agreement at issue in Case No. Q98C-4Q-C 02013900 (Das, 2006), does not provide that the employer never can change its FMLA handbook on the subject of the WH-380, the parties' agreement did not stop with the settlement. They also placed that settlement in the JCIM, which is binding and permanent unless changed. By placing the RMD settlement in the JCIM, the parties also placed it under the aegis of the MOU on the effect of the JCIM.

The JCIM makes clear, the Union asserts, that documentation to substantiate FMLA is acceptable in any format, including a form created by the Union, as long as it provides the information required by the FMLA. Under the preamble to the JCIM and the parties' MOU, the provisions of the JCIM are binding on both parties.

The Union asserts that the FMLA and related DOL regulations make clear that the use of form WH-380 is intended to provide a "safe harbor" for employers that permits them to enforce the certification requirements of the law without violating FMLA and HIPAA provisions that prohibit the employer from demanding too much information or irrelevant information. The FMLA, however, does not permit the employer to require use of the WH-380 forms. Both the law and the DOL's explanatory information accompanying its regulations make clear that the Postal Service's requirement that employees use the WH-380 forms is inconsistent with the FMLA. Accordingly, the Postal Service's actions violated Article 5 of the National Agreement.

The Union also contends that the requirement that FMLA leave certifications be provided on a WH-380 form imposes a change in working conditions through a modification of ELM Subchapter 510 in violation of Article 10.2. Before July 6, 2010, the ELM permitted employees to use a WH-380 form or equivalent documentation. The consequence of failing to use the WH-380 form since the protested ELM change is that FMLA protection for the leave in question is lost. At a minimum, this permits the employer to impose discipline for absences that are not the employee's fault and that would, but for the requirement that this specific form be used, be protected by the FMLA. It also hardly could be said that the right to submit FMLA qualifying information to the employer in a non-standard format is protected by federal law and regulations, but is not a significant working condition. At a minimum, many employees will suffer inconvenience and may incur substantial expense, if they do not have a WH-380 form for their medical provider to complete.

The Union contends that the disputed ELM change deprives employees of rights protected under the FMLA and its regulations, rescinds a settlement agreement that is incorporated into the JCIM, and violates the proscription of Article 10.2. As such, the change is not fair, reasonable, and equitable. In addition, required use of WH-380 forms means that employees who use any other form or who use no form, but provide all the necessary information for certification under the FMLA, nonetheless will have their request for FMLA leave rejected. To correct that problem they will have to spend their time and likely incur additional expense to obtain the protection of the statute. The required use of the WH-380 provides employees less choice and therefore less protection. The Union also stresses that the employer's evidence in support of its contention that the APWU's form too often must be returned for cure or clarification does not address the critical question "more often than what?" because the employer did not bother to "survey" the experience in using the WH-380, the revised APWU form, or a medical provider's narrative.

As remedy, the Union seeks an order directing the Postal Service to cease and desist from requiring employees to submit FMLA medical certifications using only the WH-380 forms.

FINDINGS

Arbitrability

After receiving notice of the proposed changes to ELM 510, the APWU filed a timely appeal to arbitration and subsequently provided a timely 15-day statement. The Union did not, however, request a meeting -- and no meeting was held -- prior to its arbitration appeal.

The wording of Article 19 does contemplate that such a meeting will take place. It states: "If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement..., it may then submit the issue to arbitration...." Moreover, the requirement that each party provide a statement of the "precise issues involved and the facts giving rise to such issues" strongly suggests that the parties assumed there would have been some prior discussion of those issues. There is no requirement, however, that the Union present its position at this meeting -- to be attended by manager(s) who are knowledgeable about "the purpose of the proposed change and its impact on employees" -- in advance of its decision to appeal to arbitration and submission of its 15-day statement.

In this particular case, the record leaves little doubt that the Union's position in opposition to the mandatory use of the WH-380 forms, including its reliance on Article 10, was or should have been known to the Postal Service at the time the Union submitted its Article 19 appeal to arbitration. Article 10 was cited by the Union in its 15-day statement in the RMD grievance which led to the 2003 pre-arbitration settlement that later formed the basis for the provisions in the 2007 JCIM which are identified as relating to Article 10. The Union's position regarding optional use of the WH-380 also was reiterated in the correspondence that preceded the Postal Service's Article 19 notice. Thus, it is difficult to see how the Postal Service was prejudiced by the lack of a meeting in this case. (Article 10 also is cited in the Union's 15-day statement in its Article 19 appeal.)[1]

Ultimately, however, it is not necessary to rule on the issue of whether the Union's failure to request or attend a meeting precluded it from filing an Article 19 appeal challenging the ELM change in dispute. The Union also filed an Article 15 grievance asserting that the ELM change violated the National Agreement, including Articles 5, 10 and 19, and that it "is contrary to applicable regulations and law, and mutual understanding between the parties."

The Postal Service argues that if the Union's Article 19 appeal is precluded by its failure to properly follow the procedures in Article 19, then the Union should not be permitted to avoid the consequences of its failure by raising a new dispute under Article 15. In the Postal Service's view that would render the requirements of Article 19 meaningless. The Postal Service has cited no arbitral authority in support of this position. In Case No. HOC-3N-C 418 (Snow, 1994), the Postal Service argued that as a result of the Union's failure to object to rules promulgated under Article 19 fourteen years earlier, the Union forfeited its right to challenge the rules through "rights" arbitration. Arbitrator Snow noted: "It is not certain whether the parties ever intended Article 19 to have the sort of preclusive effect now asserted by the Employer." But he concluded there was no need in that case to resolve that "difficult question." In an earlier 1980 decision, Case No. N8-NA-0003, Arbitrator Gamser denied a grievance filed more than a year after the Postal Service gave Article XIX notice of changes in certain Handbooks. In the interim the parties had negotiated a new contract which readopted Article XIX without change, and Gamser concluded that by doing so the Unions agreed under Article XIX to continue in effect the terms of those Handbooks. In dictum he stated:

> If the Unions believed that the changes in the payroll computation contemplated by this Section [of the F-22 and F-21 Handbooks] were in conflict with the terms of the then existing National Agreement, particularly Article VIII-4-B, then a grievance should have been raised and processed to a resolution. If the contention of the Unions was that this change was neither fair, reasonable, nor equitable, a right to grieve also existed under the terms of Article XIX.

No broad pronouncements on the issue raised by the Postal Service are needed here. Even if the Union's Article 19 appeal in this case was deemed faulty, there can be no reasonable claim that the APWU acquiesced in the protested ELM change. Its timely Article 19 appeal, even if defective, certainly put the Postal Service on notice as to the Union's position that the change violated the National Agreement, and the Union filed its Article 15 grievance within days after the Postal Service asserted its claim that the Union's Article 19 appeal was procedurally defective. On these particular facts, I am not persuaded that the Union should be barred from pursuing its Article 15 grievance, at least with respect to allegations that the change violated Articles 5 and 10 of the National Agreement. There is no necessity in this case to determine whether the Union -- having been given proper notice of the change -- could only raise a challenge that the change violates Article 19 because it is not fair, reasonable, and equitable in an Article 19 appeal, and not an Article 15 grievance.

Merits (Article 15 Grievance)

The issue here is not whether any of the Unions' forms -- which the Postal Service previously accepted if they contained the required information -- are valid, but whether the Postal Service may exclude any certification that is not on a WH-380, even if it satisfies the certification requirements set forth in Section 103(b) of the FMLA.

Article 10.2.A of the National Agreement provides that:

> A. The leave regulations in Subchapter 510 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual, insofar as such regulations establish wages, hours and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement, shall remain in effect for the life of this Agreement.

The Postal Service maintains that the Union's Article 10 claim should be dismissed because it was raised for the first time at arbitration. The Postal Service, however, agreed to waive "any arguments it may have had regarding the lack of a Step 4 meeting, exchange of 15-day statements...." Moreover, as previously noted, the Union's reliance on Article 10 was or should have been known to the Postal Service at the time the Union submitted its Article 19 appeal to arbitration, and was included in its Article 19 15-day statement.

The Postal Service further argues that Article 10.2.A does not apply because the provisions of Subchapter 510 of the ELM that were changed do not "establish wages, hours and working conditions." That argument is not persuasive.

In its 15-day statement in the RMD grievance, the Union asserted the applicability of the provision in Article 10.2.A as part of its contentions. In the 2003 pre-arbitration settlement of that grievance the parties agreed that: "There is no required form or format for information submitted by an employee in support of an [FMLA protected] absence...." The parties subsequently included this agreement in the provisions of their JCIM relating to Article 10. As the JCIM Preamble makes clear: "this manual provides a mutually agreed to explanation on how to apply the contract to the issues addressed." (Emphasis added.) The Postal Service stresses that the form submitted by an employee is filled out by the health care provider, and argues that the new policy does not change the burdens on the employee who seeks FMLA protection. But, as a Headquarters Labor Relations manager recognized in 1995 -- shortly after the FMLA was enacted -- employees and their Unions have privacy concerns that may influence an employee's choice of form on which to submit an FMLA certification. Although the WH-380 provides the Postal Service a "safe harbor" -- so it cannot legally be challenged for privacy violation -- that does not negate an employee's interest in what information is provided by their health care provider, and, hence, what form is used. Moreover, the Postal Service's insistence that only WH-380 forms be used could have a negative effect on when, if not whether, FMLA leave is approved, cause additional inconvenience and expense to the employee, and possibly subject an employee to discipline for an unauthorized absence, even if the employee submits certification that meets the statutory requirements. In short, the ELM 510 provision that was changed established a working condition and, hence, was not subject to unilateral change by the Postal Service under Article 10.2.A.

Significantly, there has been no change in the FMLA or the related DOL regulations that would necessitate mandatory use of the WH-380. On the contrary, under current DOL regulations, use of the WH-380 by an employer is optional. Because unilaterally changing ELM 510 to mandate use of previously optional WH-380 forms violated Article 10.2.A of the National

Agreement and the JCIM, there is no need here to decide whether the Postal Service's action in requiring use of the WH-380 also violated the FMLA, as the Union contends.[2]

Accordingly, the Postal Service is directed to cease and desist from requiring employees to submit FMLA medical certifications using only the WH-380 forms.

AWARD

The issues raised in these two cases are resolved as set forth in the above Findings.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

Subpart A—Coverage Under the Family and Medical Leave Act

Back to Top

§825.100 The Family and Medical Leave Act.

(a) The Family and Medical Leave Act of 1993, as amended, (FMLA or Act) allows eligible employees of a covered employer to take job-protected, unpaid leave, or to substitute appropriate paid leave if the employee has earned or accrued it, for up to a total of 12 workweeks in any 12 months (see §825.200(b)) because of the birth of a child and to care for the newborn child, because of the placement of a child with the employee for adoption or foster care, because the employee is needed to care for a family member (child, spouse, or parent) with a serious health condition, because the employee's own serious health condition makes the employee unable to perform the functions of his or her job, or because of any qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent is a military member on active duty or call to covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty). In addition, eligible employees of a covered employer may take job-protected, unpaid leave, or substitute appropriate paid leave if the employee has earned or accrued it, for up to a total of 26 workweeks in a single 12-month period to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness. In certain cases, FMLA leave may be taken on an intermittent basis rather than all at once, or the employee may work a part-time schedule.

(b) An employee on FMLA leave is also entitled to have health benefits maintained while on leave as if the employee had continued to work instead of taking the leave. If an employee was paying all or part of the premium payments prior to leave, the employee would continue to pay his or her share during the leave period. The employer may recover its share only if the employee does not return to work for a reason other than the serious health condition of the employee or the employee's covered family member, the serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, or another reason beyond the employee's control.

(c) An employee generally has a right to return to the same position or an equivalent position with equivalent pay, benefits, and working conditions at the conclusion of the leave. The taking of FMLA leave cannot result in the loss of any benefit that accrued prior to the start of the leave.

(d) The employer generally has a right to advance notice from the employee. In addition, the employer may require an employee to submit certification to substantiate that the leave is due to the serious health condition of the employee or the employee's covered family member, due to the serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, or because of a qualifying exigency. Failure to comply with these requirements may result in a delay in the start of FMLA leave. Pursuant to a uniformly applied policy, the employer may also require that an employee present a certification of fitness to return to work when the absence was caused by the employee's serious health condition (see §§825.312 and 825.313). The employer may delay restoring the employee to employment without such certificate relating to the health condition which caused the employee's absence.

(a) FMLA is intended to allow employees to balance their work and family life by taking reasonable unpaid leave for medical reasons, for the birth or adoption of a child, for the care of a child, spouse, or parent who has a serious health condition, for the care of a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness, or because of a qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent is a military member on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status. The Act is intended to balance the demands of the workplace with the needs of families, to promote the stability and economic security of families, and to promote national interests in preserving family integrity. It was intended that the Act accomplish these purposes in a manner that accommodates the legitimate interests of employers, and in a manner consistent with the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in minimizing the potential for employment discrimination on the basis of sex, while promoting equal employment opportunity for men and women.

(b) The FMLA was predicated on two fundamental concerns—the needs of the American workforce, and the development of high-performance organizations. Increasingly, America's children and elderly are dependent upon family members who must spend long hours at work. When a family emergency arises, requiring workers to attend to seriously-ill children or parents, or to newly-born or adopted infants, or even to their own serious illness, workers need reassurance that they will not be asked to choose between continuing their employment, and meeting their personal and family obligations or tending to vital needs at home.

(c) The FMLA is both intended and expected to benefit employers as well as their employees. A direct correlation exists between stability in the family and productivity in the workplace. FMLA will encourage the development of high-performance organizations. When workers can count on durable links to their workplace they are able to make their own full commitments to their jobs. The record of hearings on family and medical leave indicate the powerful productive advantages of stable workplace relationships, and the comparatively small costs of guaranteeing that those relationships will not be dissolved while workers attend to pressing family health obligations or their own serious illness.

(ii) Continues over an extended period of time (including recurring episodes of a single underlying condition); and

The employee or family member must be under the continuing supervision of, but need not be receiving active treatment by, a health care provider. Examples include Alzheimer's, a severe stroke, or the terminal stages of a disease.

(5) Conditions requiring multiple treatments. Any period of absence to receive multiple treatments (including any period of recovery therefrom) by a health care provider or by a provider of health care services under orders of, or on referral by, a health care provider, for:

(ii) A condition that would likely result in a period of incapacity of more than three consecutive full calendar days in the absence of medical intervention or treatment, such as cancer (chemotherapy, radiation, etc.), severe arthritis (physical therapy), kidney disease (dialysis).

(6) Absences attributable to incapacity under paragraphs (2) or (3) of this definition qualify for FMLA leave even though the employee or the covered family member does not receive treatment from a health care provider during the absence, and even if the absence does not last more than three consecutive full calendar days. For example, an employee with asthma may be unable to report for work due to the onset of an asthma attack or because the employee's health care provider has advised the employee to stay home when the pollen count exceeds a certain level. An employee who is pregnant may be unable to report to work because of severe morning sickness.

(i) The break in service is occasioned by the fulfillment of the employee's Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA), 38 U.S.C. 4301, et seq., covered service obligation (the period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service must be also counted in determining whether the employee has been employed for at least 12 months by the employer, but this section does not provide any greater entitlement to the employee than would be available under the USERRA; or

(2) Who, on the date on which any FMLA leave is to commence, has met the hours of service requirement by having been employed for at least 1,250 hours of service with such employer during the previous 12-month period, or for an airline flight crew employee, in the previous 12 months, having worked or been paid for not less than 60 percent of the applicable total monthly guarantee and having worked or been paid for not less than 504 hours, not counting personal commute time, or vacation, medical or sick leave (see §825.801(b)), except that:

(i) An employee returning from fulfilling his or her USERRA-covered service obligation shall be credited with the hours of service that would have been performed but for the period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service in determining whether the employee met the hours of service requirement (accordingly, a person reemployed following absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service has the hours that would have been worked for the employer (or, for an airline flight crew employee, would have been worked for or paid by the employer) added to any hours actually worked (or, for an airline flight crew employee, actually worked or paid) during the previous 12-month period to meet the hours of service requirement); and

(ii) To determine the hours that would have been worked (or, for an airline flight crew employee, would have been worked or paid) during the period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service, the employee's pre-service work schedule can generally be used for calculations; and

(3) Who is employed in any State of the United States, the District of Columbia or any Territories or possession of the United States.

Son or daughter on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status means the employee's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or a child for whom the employee stood in loco parentis, who is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and who is of any age. See also §825.126(a)(5).

Spouse, as defined in the statute, means a husband or wife. For purposes of this definition, husband or wife refers to the other person with whom an individual entered into marriage as defined or recognized under state law for purposes of marriage in the State in which the marriage was entered into or, in the case of a marriage entered into outside of any State, if the marriage is valid in the place where entered into and could have been entered into in at least one State. This definition includes an individual in a same-sex or common law marriage that either:

(1) Was entered into in a State that recognizes such marriages; or

(2) If entered into outside of any State, is valid in the place where entered into and could have been entered into in at least one State.

State means any State of the United States or the District of Columbia or any Territory or possession of the United States.

Teacher (or employee employed in an instructional capacity, or instructional employee) means an employee employed principally in an instructional capacity by an educational agency or school whose principal function is to teach and instruct students in a class, a small group, or an individual setting, and includes athletic coaches, driving instructors, and special education assistants such as signers for the hearing impaired. The term does not include teacher assistants or aides who do not have as their principal function actual teaching or instructing, nor auxiliary personnel such as counselors, psychologists, curriculum specialists, cafeteria workers, maintenance workers, bus drivers, or other primarily noninstructional employees.

TRICARE is the health care program serving active duty servicemembers, National Guard and Reserve members, retirees, their families, survivors, and certain former spouses worldwide.

(a) An employer covered by FMLA is any person engaged in commerce or in any industry or activity affecting commerce, who employs 50 or more employees for each working day during each of 20 or more calendar workweeks in the current or preceding calendar year. Employers covered by FMLA also include any person acting, directly or indirectly, in the interest of a covered employer to any of the employees of the employer, any successor in interest of a covered employer, and any public agency. Public agencies are covered employers without regard to the number of employees employed. Public as well as private elementary and secondary schools are also covered employers without regard to the number of employees employed. See §825.600.

(b) The terms commerce and industry affecting commerce are defined in accordance with section 501(1) and (3) of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (LMRA) (29 U.S.C. 142(1) and (3)), as set forth in the definitions at §825.102 of this part. For purposes of the FMLA, employers who meet the 50-employee coverage test are deemed to be engaged in commerce or in an industry or activity affecting commerce.

(c) Normally the legal entity which employs the employee is the employer under FMLA. Applying this principle, a corporation is a single employer rather than its separate establishments or divisions.

(1) Where one corporation has an ownership interest in another corporation, it is a separate employer unless it meets the joint employment test discussed in §825.106, or the integrated employer test contained in paragraph (c)(2) of this section.

(2) Separate entities will be deemed to be parts of a single employer for purposes of FMLA if they meet the integrated employer test. Where this test is met, the employees of all entities making up the integrated employer will be counted in determining employer coverage and employee eligibility. A determination of whether or not separate entities are an integrated employer is not determined by the application of any single criterion, but rather the entire relationship is to be reviewed in its totality. Factors considered in determining whether two or more entities are an integrated employer include:

(i) Common management;

(ii) Interrelation between operations;

(iii) Centralized control of labor relations; and

(iv) Degree of common ownership/financial control.

(d) An employer includes any person who acts directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer to any of the employer's employees. The definition of employer in section 3(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA), 29 U.S.C. 203(d), similarly includes any person acting directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer in relation to an employee. As under the FLSA, individuals such as corporate officers "acting in the interest of an employer" are individually liable for any violations of the requirements of FMLA.

§825.105 Counting employees for determining coverage.

(a) The definition of employ for purposes of FMLA is taken from the Fair Labor Standards Act, §3(g), 29 U.S.C. 203(g). The courts have made it clear that the employment relationship under the FLSA is broader than the traditional common law concept of master and servant. The difference between the employment relationship under the FLSA and that under the common law arises from the fact that the term "employ" as defined in the Act includes "to suffer or permit to work." The courts have indicated that, while "to permit" requires a more positive action than "to suffer," both terms imply much less positive action than required by the common law. Mere knowledge by an employer of work done for the employer by another is sufficient to create the employment relationship under the Act. The courts have said that there is no definition that solves all problems as to the limitations of the employer-employee relationship under the Act; and that determination of the relation cannot be based on isolated factors or upon a single characteristic or technical concepts, but depends "upon the circumstances of the whole activity" including the underlying "economic reality." In general an employee, as distinguished from an independent contractor who is engaged in a business of his/her own, is one who "follows the usual path of an employee" and is dependent on the business which he/she serves.

(b) Any employee whose name appears on the employer's payroll will be considered employed each working day of the calendar week, and must be counted whether or not any compensation is received for the week. However, the FMLA applies only to employees who are employed within any State of the United States, the District of Columbia or any Territory or possession of the United States. Employees who are employed outside these areas are not counted for purposes of determining employer coverage or employee eligibility.

(c) Employees on paid or unpaid leave, including FMLA leave, leaves of absence, disciplinary suspension, etc., are counted as long as the employer has a reasonable expectation that the employee will later return to active employment. If there is no employer/employee relationship (as when an employee is laid off, whether temporarily or permanently) such individual is not counted. Part-time employees, like full-time employees, are considered to be employed each working day of the calendar week, as long as they are maintained on the payroll.

(d) An employee who does not begin to work for an employer until after the first working day of a calendar week, or who terminates employment before the last working day of a calendar week, is not considered employed on each working day of that calendar week.

(e) A private employer is covered if it maintained 50 or more employees on the payroll during 20 or more calendar workweeks (not necessarily consecutive workweeks) in either the current or the preceding calendar year.

(f) Once a private employer meets the 50 employees/20 workweeks threshold, the employer remains covered until it reaches a future point where it no longer has employed 50 employees for 20 (nonconsecutive) workweeks in the current and preceding calendar year. For example, if an employer who met the 50 employees/20 workweeks test in the calendar year as of September 1, 2008, subsequently dropped below 50 employees before the end of 2008 and continued to employ fewer than 50 employees in all workweeks throughout calendar year 2009, the employer would continue to be covered throughout calendar year 2009 because it met the coverage criteria for 20 workweeks of the preceding (i.e., 2008) calendar year.

§825.106 Joint employer coverage.

(a) Where two or more businesses exercise some control over the work or working conditions of the employee, the businesses may be joint employers under FMLA. Joint employers may be separate and distinct entities with separate owners, managers, and facilities. Where the employee performs work which simultaneously benefits two or more employers, or works for two or more employers at different times during the workweek, a joint employment relationship generally will be considered to exist in situations such as:

(1) Where there is an arrangement between employers to share an employee's services or to interchange employees;

(2) Where one employer acts directly or indirectly in the interest of the other employer in relation to the employee; or,

(3) Where the employers are not completely disassociated with respect to the employee's employment and may be deemed to share control of the employee, directly or indirectly, because one employer controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with the other employer.

(b)(1) A determination of whether or not a joint employment relationship exists is not determined by the application of any single criterion, but rather the entire relationship is to be viewed in its totality. For example, joint employment will ordinarily be found to exist when a temporary placement agency supplies employees to a second employer.

(2) A type of company that is often called a Professional Employer Organization (PEO) contracts with client employers to perform administrative functions such as payroll, benefits, regulatory paperwork, and updating employment policies. The determination of whether a PEO is a joint employer also turns on the economic realities of the situation and must be based upon all the facts and circumstances. A PEO does not enter into a joint employment relationship with the employees of its client companies when it merely performs such administrative functions. On the other hand, if in a particular fact situation, a PEO has the right to hire, fire, assign, or direct and control the client's employees, or benefits from the work that the employees perform, such rights may lead to a determination that the PEO would be a joint employer with the client employer, depending upon all the facts and circumstances.

(c) In joint employment relationships, only the primary employer is responsible for giving required notices to its employees, providing FMLA leave, and maintenance of health benefits. Factors considered in determining which is the primary employer include authority/responsibility to hire and fire, assign/place the employee, make payroll, and provide employment benefits. For employees of temporary placement agencies, for example, the placement agency most commonly would be the primary employer. Where a PEO is a joint employer, the client employer most commonly would be the primary employer.

(d) Employees jointly employed by two employers must be counted by both employers, whether or not maintained on one of the employer's payroll, in determining employer coverage and employee eligibility. For example, an employer who jointly employs 15 workers from a temporary placement agency and 40 permanent workers is covered by FMLA. (A special rule applies to employees jointly employed who physically work at a facility of the secondary employer for a period of at least one year. See §825.111(a)(3).) An employee on leave who is working for a secondary employer is considered employed by the secondary employer, and must be counted for coverage and eligibility purposes, as long as the employer has a reasonable expectation that that employee will return to employment with that employer. In those cases in which a PEO is determined to be a joint employer of a client employer's employees, the client employer would only be required to count employees of the PEO (or employees of other clients of the PEO) if the client employer jointly employed those employees.

(e) Job restoration is the primary responsibility of the primary employer. The secondary employer is responsible for accepting the employee returning from FMLA leave in place of the replacement employee if the secondary employer continues to utilize an employee from the temporary placement agency, and the agency chooses to place the employee with the secondary employer. A secondary employer is also responsible for compliance with the prohibited acts provisions with respect to its jointly employed employees, whether or not the secondary employer is covered by FMLA. See §825.220(a). The prohibited acts include prohibitions against interfering with an employee's attempt to exercise rights under the Act, or discharging or discriminating against an employee for opposing a practice which is unlawful under FMLA. A covered secondary employer will be responsible for compliance with all the provisions of the FMLA with respect to its regular, permanent workforce.

§825.107 Successor in interest coverage.

(a) For purposes of FMLA, in determining whether an employer is covered because it is a "successor in interest" to a covered employer, the factors used under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act and the Vietnam Era Veterans' Adjustment Act will be considered. However, unlike Title VII, whether the successor has notice of the employee's claim is not a consideration. Notice may be relevant, however, in determining successor liability for violations of the predecessor. The factors to be considered include:

(1) Substantial continuity of the same business operations;

(2) Use of the same plant;

(3) Continuity of the work force;

(4) Similarity of jobs and working conditions;

(5) Similarity of supervisory personnel;

(6) Similarity in machinery, equipment, and production methods;

(7) Similarity of products or services; and

(8) The ability of the predecessor to provide relief.

(b) A determination of whether or not a successor in interest exists is not determined by the application of any single criterion, but rather the entire circumstances are to be viewed in their totality.

(c) When an employer is a successor in interest, employees' entitlements are the same as if the employment by the predecessor and successor were continuous employment by a single employer. For example, the successor, whether or not it meets FMLA coverage criteria, must grant leave for eligible employees who had provided appropriate notice to the predecessor, or continue leave begun while employed by the predecessor, including maintenance of group health benefits during the leave and job restoration at the conclusion of the leave. A successor which meets FMLA's coverage criteria must count periods of employment and hours of service with the predecessor for purposes of determining employee eligibility for FMLA leave.

§825.108 Public agency coverage.

(a) An employer under FMLA includes any public agency, as defined in section 3(x) of the Fair Labor Standards Act, 29 U.S.C. 203(x). Section 3(x) of the FLSA defines public agency as the government of the United States; the government of a State or political subdivision of a State; or an agency of the United States, a State, or a political subdivision of a State, or any interstate governmental agency. State is further defined in Section 3(c) of the FLSA to include any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States.

(b) The determination of whether an entity is a public agency, as distinguished from a private employer, is determined by whether the agency has taxing authority, or whether the chief administrative officer or board, etc., is elected by the voters-at-large or their appointment is subject to approval by an elected official.

(c)(1) A State or a political subdivision of a State constitutes a single public agency and, therefore, a single employer for purposes of determining employee eligibility. For example, a State is a single employer; a county is a single employer; a city or town is a single employer. Whether two agencies of the same State or local government constitute the same public agency can only be determined on a case-by-case basis. One factor that would support a conclusion that two agencies are separate is whether they are treated separately for statistical purposes in the Census of Governments issued by the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce.

(2) The Census Bureau takes a census of governments at five-year intervals. Volume I, Government Organization, contains the official counts of the number of State and local governments. It includes tabulations of governments by State, type of government, size, and county location. Also produced is a universe list of governmental units, classified according to type of government. Copies of Volume I, Government Organization, and subsequent volumes are available from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, DC 20402, U.S. Department of Commerce District Offices, or can be found in Regional and selective depository libraries, or online at http://www.census.gov /govs/www/index.html. For a list of all depository libraries, write to the Government Printing Office, 710 N. Capitol St. NW., Washington, DC 20402.

(d) All public agencies are covered by the FMLA regardless of the number of employees; they are not subject to the coverage threshold of 50 employees carried on the payroll each day for 20 or more weeks in a year. However, employees of public agencies must meet all of the requirements of eligibility, including the requirement that the employer (e.g., State) employ 50 employees at the worksite or within 75 miles.

(a) Most employees of the government of the United States, if they are covered by the FMLA, are covered under Title

II of the FMLA (incorporated in Title V, Chapter 63, Subchapter 5 of the United States Code) which is administered by the U.S. Office of Personnel Management (OPM). OPM has separate regulations at 5 CFR Part 630, Subpart L. Employees of the Government Printing Office are covered by Title II. While employees of the Government Accountability Office and the Library of Congress are covered by Title I of the FMLA, the Comptroller General of the United States and the Librarian of Congress, respectively, have responsibility for the administration of the FMLA with respect to these employees. Other legislative branch employees, such as employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, are covered by the Congressional Accountability Act of 1995, 2 U.S.C. 1301.

(b) The Federal Executive Branch employees within the jurisdiction of these regulations include:

(1) Employees of the Postal Service;

(2) Employees of the Postal Regulatory Commission;

(3) A part-time employee who does not have an established regular tour of duty during the administrative workweek; and,

(4) An employee serving under an intermittent appointment or temporary appointment with a time limitation of one year or less.

(c) Employees of other Federal executive agencies are also covered by these regulations if they are not covered by Title II of FMLA.

(d) Employees of the judicial branch of the United States are covered by these regulations only if they are employed in a unit which has employees in the competitive service. For example, employees of the U.S. Tax Court are covered by these regulations.

(e) For employees covered by these regulations, the U.S. Government constitutes a single employer for purposes of determining employee eligibility. These employees must meet all of the requirements for eligibility, including the requirement that the Federal Government employ 50 employees at the worksite or within 75 miles.

§825.110 Eligible employee.

(a) An eligible employee is an employee of a covered employer who:

(1) Has been employed by the employer for at least 12 months, and

(2) Has been employed for at least 1,250 hours of service during the 12-month period immediately preceding the commencement of the leave (see §825.801 for special hours of service requirements for airline flight crew employees), and

(3) Is employed at a worksite where 50 or more employees are employed by the employer within 75 miles of that worksite. See §825.105(b) regarding employees who work outside the U.S.

(b) The 12 months an employee must have been employed by the employer need not be consecutive months, provided

(1) Subject to the exceptions provided in paragraph (b)(2) of this section, employment periods prior to a break in service of seven years or more need not be counted in determining whether the employee has been employed by the employer for at least 12 months.

(2) Employment periods preceding a break in service of more than seven years must be counted in determining whether the employee has been employed by the employer for at least 12 months where:

(i) The employee's break in service is occasioned by the fulfillment of his or her Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA), 38 U.S.C. 4301, et seq., covered service obligation. The period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service must be also counted in determining whether the employee has been employed for at least 12 months by the employer. However, this section does not provide any greater entitlement to the employee than would be available under the USERRA; or

(3) If an employee is maintained on the payroll for any part of a week, including any periods of paid or unpaid leave

(sick, vacation) during which other benefits or compensation are provided by the employer (e.g., workers' compensation, group health plan benefits, etc.), the week counts as a week of employment. For purposes of determining whether intermittent/occasional/casual employment qualifies as at least 12 months, 52 weeks is deemed to be equal to 12 months.

(4) Nothing in this section prevents employers from considering employment prior to a continuous break in service of more than seven years when determining whether an employee has met the 12-month employment requirement. However, if an employer chooses to recognize such prior employment, the employer must do so uniformly, with respect to all employees with similar breaks in service.

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (c)(2) of this section and in §825.801 containing the special hours of service requirement for airline flight crew employees, whether an employee has worked the minimum 1,250 hours of service is determined according to the principles established under the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) for determining compensable hours of work. See 29 CFR part 785. The determining factor is the number of hours an employee has worked for the employer within the meaning of the FLSA. The determination is not limited by methods of recordkeeping, or by compensation agreements that do not accurately reflect all of the hours an employee has worked for or been in service to the employer. Any accurate accounting of actual hours worked under FLSA's principles may be used.

(2) An employee returning from USERRA-covered service shall be credited with the hours of service that would have been performed but for the period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service in determining the employee's eligibility for FMLA-qualifying leave. Accordingly, a person reemployed following USERRA-covered service has the hours that would have been worked for the employer added to any hours actually worked during the previous 12-month period to meet the hours of service requirement. In order to determine the hours that would have been worked during the period of absence from work due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service, the employee's pre-service work schedule can generally be used for calculations. See §825.801(c) for special rules applicable to airline flight crew employees.

(3) In the event an employer does not maintain an accurate record of hours worked by an employee, including for employees who are exempt from FLSA's requirement that a record be kept of their hours worked (e.g., bona fide executive, administrative, and professional employees as defined in FLSA Regulations, 29 CFR part 541), the employer has the burden of showing that the employee has not worked the requisite hours. An employer must be able to clearly demonstrate, for example, that full-time teachers (see §825.102 for definition) of an elementary or secondary school system, or institution of higher education, or other educational establishment or institution (who often work outside the classroom or at their homes) did not work 1,250 hours during the previous 12 months in order to claim that the teachers are not eligible for FMLA leave. See §825.801(d) for special rules applicable to airline flight crew employees.

(d) The determination of whether an employee meets the hours of service requirement and has been employed by the employer for a total of at least 12 months must be made as of the date the FMLA leave is to start. An employee may be on non-FMLA leave at the time he or she meets the 12-month eligibility requirement, and in that event, any portion of the leave taken for an FMLA-qualifying reason after the employee meets the eligibility requirement would be FMLA leave. See §825.300(b) for rules governing the content of the eligibility notice given to employees.

(e) Whether 50 employees are employed within 75 miles to ascertain an employee's eligibility for FMLA benefits is determined when the employee gives notice of the need for leave. Whether the leave is to be taken at one time or on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule basis, once an employee is determined eligible in response to that notice of the need for leave, the employee's eligibility is not affected by any subsequent change in the number of employees employed at or within 75 miles of the employee's worksite, for that specific notice of the need for leave. Similarly, an employer may not terminate employee leave that has already started if the employee count drops below 50. For example, if an employer employs 60 employees in August, but expects that the number of employees will drop to 40 in December, the employer must grant FMLA benefits to an otherwise eligible employee who gives notice of the need for leave in August for a period of leave to begin in December.

§825.111 Determining whether 50 employees are employed within 75 miles.

(a) Generally, a worksite can refer to either a single location or a group of contiguous locations. Structures which form a campus or industrial park, or separate facilities in proximity with one another, may be considered a single site of employment. On the other hand, there may be several single sites of employment within a single building, such as an office building, if separate employers conduct activities within the building. For example, an office building with 50 different businesses as tenants will contain 50 sites of employment. The offices of each employer will be considered separate sites of employment for purposes of FMLA. An employee's worksite under FMLA will ordinarily be the site the employee reports to or, if none, from which the employee's work is assigned.

(1) Separate buildings or areas which are not directly connected or in immediate proximity are a single worksite if they are in reasonable geographic proximity, are used for the same purpose, and share the same staff and equipment. For example, if an employer manages a number of warehouses in a metropolitan area but regularly shifts or rotates the same employees from one building to another, the multiple warehouses would be a single worksite.

(2) For employees with no fixed worksite, e.g., construction workers, transportation workers (e.g., truck drivers, seamen, pilots), salespersons, etc., the worksite is the site to which they are assigned as their home base, from which their work is assigned, or to which they report. For example, if a construction company headquartered in New Jersey opened a construction site in Ohio, and set up a mobile trailer on the construction site as the company's on-site office, the construction site in Ohio would be the worksite for any employees hired locally who report to the mobile trailer/company office daily for work assignments, etc. If that construction company also sent personnel such as job superintendents, foremen, engineers, an office manager, etc., from New Jersey to the job site in Ohio, those workers sent from New Jersey continue to have the headquarters in New Jersey as their worksite. The workers who have New Jersey as their worksite would not be counted in determining eligibility of employees whose home base is the Ohio worksite, but would be counted in determining eligibility of employees whose home base is New Jersey. For transportation employees, their worksite is the terminal to which they are assigned, report for work, depart, and return after completion of a work assignment. For example, an airline pilot may work for an airline with headquarters in New York, but the pilot regularly reports for duty and originates or begins flights from the company's facilities located in an airport in Chicago and returns to Chicago at the completion of one or more flights to go off duty. The pilot's worksite is the facility in Chicago. An employee's personal residence is not a worksite in the case of employees, such as salespersons, who travel a sales territory and who generally leave to work and return from work to their personal residence, or employees who work at home, as under the concept of flexiplace or telecommuting. Rather, their worksite is the office to which they report and from which assignments are made.

(3) For purposes of determining that employee's eligibility, when an employee is jointly employed by two or more employers (see §825.106), the employee's worksite is the primary employer's office from which the employee is assigned or reports, unless the employee has physically worked for at least one year at a facility of a secondary employer, in which case the employee's worksite is that location. The employee is also counted by the secondary employer to determine eligibility for the secondary employer's full-time or permanent employees.

(b) The 75-mile distance is measured by surface miles, using surface transportation over public streets, roads, highways and waterways, by the shortest route from the facility where the employee needing leave is employed. Absent available surface transportation between worksites, the distance is measured by using the most frequently utilized mode of transportation (e.g., airline miles).

(c) The determination of how many employees are employed within 75 miles of the worksite of an employee is based on the number of employees maintained on the payroll. Employees of educational institutions who are employed permanently or who are under contract are maintained on the payroll during any portion of the year when school is not in session. See §825.105(c).

§825.112 Qualifying reasons for leave, general rule.

(a) Circumstances qualifying for leave. Employers covered by FMLA are required to grant leave to eligible employees:

(1) For birth of a son or daughter, and to care for the newborn child (see §825.120);

(2) For placement with the employee of a son or daughter for adoption or foster care (see §825.121);

(3) To care for the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent with a serious health condition (see §§825.113 and 825.122);

(4) Because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the functions of the employee's job (see §§825.113 and 825.123);

(5) Because of any qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent is a military member on covered active duty (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty status (see §§825.122 and 825.126); and

(6) To care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness if the employee is the spouse, son, daughter, parent, or next of kin of the covered servicemember. See §§825.122 and 825.127.

(b) Equal application. The right to take leave under FMLA applies equally to male and female employees. A father, as well as a mother, can take family leave for the birth, placement for adoption, or foster care of a child.

(c) Active employee. In situations where the employer/employee relationship has been interrupted, such as an employee who has been on layoff, the employee must be recalled or otherwise be re-employed before being eligible for FMLA leave. Under such circumstances, an eligible employee is immediately entitled to further FMLA leave for a qualifying reason.

(a) For purposes of FMLA, serious health condition entitling an employee to FMLA leave means an illness, injury, impairment or physical or mental condition that involves inpatient care as defined in §825.114 or continuing treatment by a health care provider as defined in §825.115.

(b) The term incapacity means inability to work, attend school or perform other regular daily activities due to the serious health condition, treatment therefore, or recovery therefrom.

(c) The term treatment includes (but is not limited to) examinations to determine if a serious health condition exists and evaluations of the condition. Treatment does not include routine physical examinations, eye examinations, or dental examinations. A regimen of continuing treatment includes, for example, a course of prescription medication (e.g., an antibiotic) or therapy requiring special equipment to resolve or alleviate the health condition (e.g., oxygen). A regimen of continuing treatment that includes the taking of over-the-counter medications such as aspirin, antihistamines, or salves; or bed-rest, drinking fluids, exercise, and other similar activities that can be initiated without a visit to a health care provider, is not, by itself, sufficient to constitute a regimen of continuing treatment for purposes of FMLA leave.

(d) Conditions for which cosmetic treatments are administered (such as most treatments for acne or plastic surgery) are not serious health conditions unless inpatient hospital care is required or unless complications develop. Ordinarily, unless complications arise, the common cold, the flu, ear aches, upset stomach, minor ulcers, headaches other than migraine, routine dental or orthodontia problems, periodontal disease, etc., are examples of conditions that do not meet the definition of a serious health condition and do not qualify for FMLA leave. Restorative dental or plastic surgery after an injury or removal of cancerous growths are serious health conditions provided all the other conditions of this regulation are met. Mental illness or allergies may be serious health conditions, but only if all the conditions of this section are met.

Inpatient care means an overnight stay in a hospital, hospice, or residential medical care facility, including any period of incapacity as defined in §825.113(b), or any subsequent treatment in connection with such inpatient care.

§825.115 Continuing treatment.

A serious health condition involving continuing treatment by a health care provider includes any one or more of the following:

(a) Incapacity and treatment. A period of incapacity of more than three consecutive, full calendar days, and any subsequent treatment or period of incapacity relating to the same condition, that also involves:

(1) Treatment two or more times, within 30 days of the first day of incapacity, unless extenuating circumstances exist, by a health care provider, by a nurse under direct supervision of a health care provider, or by a provider of health care services (e.g., physical therapist) under orders of, or on referral by, a health care provider; or

(2) Treatment by a health care provider on at least one occasion, which results in a regimen of continuing treatment under the supervision of the health care provider.

(3) The requirement in paragraphs (a)(1) and (2) of this section for treatment by a health care provider means an in-person visit to a health care provider. The first (or only) in-person treatment visit must take place within seven days of the first day of incapacity.

(4) Whether additional treatment visits or a regimen of continuing treatment is necessary within the 30-day period shall be determined by the health care provider.

(5) The term extenuating circumstances in paragraph (a)(1) of this section means circumstances beyond the employee's control that prevent the follow-up visit from occurring as planned by the health care provider. Whether a given set of circumstances are extenuating depends on the facts. For example, extenuating circumstances exist if a health care provider determines that a second in-person visit is needed within the 30-day period, but the health care provider does not have any available appointments during that time period.

(b) Pregnancy or prenatal care. Any period of incapacity due to pregnancy, or for prenatal care. See also §825.120.

(c) Chronic conditions. Any period of incapacity or treatment for such incapacity due to a chronic serious health condition. A chronic serious health condition is one which:

(1) Requires periodic visits (defined as at least twice a year) for treatment by a health care provider, or by a nurse under direct supervision of a health care provider;

(2) Continues over an extended period of time (including recurring episodes of a single underlying condition); and

(3) May cause episodic rather than a continuing period of incapacity (e.g., asthma, diabetes, epilepsy, etc.).

(d) Permanent or long-term conditions. A period of incapacity which is permanent or long-term due to a condition for which treatment may not be effective. The employee or family member must be under the continuing supervision of, but need not be receiving active treatment by, a health care provider. Examples include Alzheimer's, a severe stroke, or the terminal stages of a disease.

(e) Conditions requiring multiple treatments. Any period of absence to receive multiple treatments (including any period of recovery therefrom) by a health care provider or by a provider of health care services under orders of, or on referral by, a health care provider, for:

(1) Restorative surgery after an accident or other injury; or

(2) A condition that would likely result in a period of incapacity of more than three consecutive, full calendar days in the absence of medical intervention or treatment, such as cancer (chemotherapy, radiation, etc.), severe arthritis (physical therapy), or kidney disease (dialysis).

(f) Absences attributable to incapacity under paragraph (b) or (c) of this section qualify for FMLA leave even though the employee or the covered family member does not receive treatment from a health care provider during the absence, and even if the absence does not last more than three consecutive, full calendar days. For example, an employee with asthma may be unable to report for work due to the onset of an asthma attack or because the employee's health care provider has advised the employee to stay home when the pollen count exceeds a certain level. An employee who is pregnant may be unable to report to work because of severe morning sickness.

(a) Substance abuse may be a serious health condition if the conditions of §§825.113 through 825.115 are met. However, FMLA leave may only be taken for treatment for substance abuse by a health care provider or by a provider of health care services on referral by a health care provider. On the other hand, absence because of the employee's use of the substance, rather than for treatment, does not qualify for FMLA leave.

(b) Treatment for substance abuse does not prevent an employer from taking employment action against an employee. The employer may not take action against the employee because the employee has exercised his or her right to take FMLA leave for treatment. However, if the employer has an established policy, applied in a non-discriminatory manner that has been communicated to all employees, that provides under certain circumstances an employee may be terminated for substance abuse, pursuant to that policy the employee may be terminated whether or not the employee is presently taking FMLA leave. An employee may also take FMLA leave to care for a covered family member who is receiving treatment for substance abuse. The employer may not take action against an employee who is providing care for a covered family member receiving treatment for substance abuse.

§825.120 Leave for pregnancy or birth.

(a) General rules. Eligible employees are entitled to FMLA leave for pregnancy or birth of a child as follows:

(1) Both parents are entitled to FMLA leave for the birth of their child.

(2) Both parents are entitled to FMLA leave to be with the healthy newborn child (i.e., bonding time) during the 12-month period beginning on the date of birth. An employee's entitlement to FMLA leave for a birth expires at the end of the 12-month period beginning on the date of the birth. If state law allows, or the employer permits, bonding leave to be taken beyond this period, such leave will not qualify as FMLA leave. See §825.701 regarding non-FMLA leave which may be available under applicable State laws. Under this section, both parents are entitled to FMLA leave even if the newborn does not have a serious health condition.

(3) Spouses who are eligible for FMLA leave and are employed by the same covered employer may be limited to a combined total of 12 weeks of leave during any 12-month period if the leave is taken for birth of the employee's son or daughter or to care for the child after birth, for placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care or to care for the child after placement, or to care for the employee's parent with a serious health condition. This limitation on the total weeks of leave applies to leave taken for the reasons specified as long as the spouses are employed by the same employer. It would apply, for example, even though the spouses are employed at two different worksites of an employer located more than 75 miles from each other, or by two different operating divisions of the same company. On the other hand, if one spouse is ineligible for FMLA leave, the other spouse would be entitled to a full 12 weeks of FMLA leave. Where spouses both use a portion of the total 12-week FMLA leave entitlement for either the birth of a child, for placement for adoption or foster care, or to care for a parent, the spouses would each be entitled to the difference between the amount he or she has taken individually and 12 weeks for FMLA leave for other purposes. For example, if each spouse took six weeks of leave to care for a healthy, newborn child, each could use an additional six weeks due to his or her own serious health condition or to care for a child with a serious health condition. Note, too, that many state pregnancy disability laws specify a period of disability either before or after the birth of a child; such periods would also be considered FMLA leave for a serious health condition of the birth mother, and would not be subject to the combined limit.

(4) The expectant mother is entitled to FMLA leave for incapacity due to pregnancy, for prenatal care, or for her own serious health condition following the birth of the child. An expectant mother may take FMLA leave before the birth of the child for prenatal care or if her condition makes her unable to work. The mother is entitled to leave for incapacity due to pregnancy even though she does not receive treatment from a health care provider during the absence, and even if the absence does not last for more than three consecutive calendar days. The expectant mother is entitled to leave for incapacity due to pregnancy even though she does not receive treatment from a health care provider during the absence, and even if the absence does not last for more than three consecutive calendar days.

(5) A spouse is entitled to FMLA leave if needed to care for a pregnant spouse who is incapacitated or if needed to care for her during her prenatal care, or if needed to care for her following the birth of a child if she has a serious health condition. See §825.124.

(6) Both parents are entitled to FMLA leave if needed to care for a child with a serious health condition if the requirements of §§825.113 through 825.115 and 825.122(d) are met. Thus, spouses may each take 12 weeks of FMLA leave if needed to care for their newborn child with a serious health condition, even if both are employed by the same employer, provided they have not exhausted their entitlements during the applicable 12-month FMLA leave period.

(b) Intermittent and reduced schedule leave. An eligible employee may use intermittent or reduced schedule leave after the birth to be with a healthy newborn child only if the employer agrees. For example, an employer and employee may agree to a part-time work schedule after the birth. If the employer agrees to permit intermittent or reduced schedule leave for the birth of a child, the employer may require the employee to transfer temporarily, during the period the intermittent or reduced leave schedule is required, to an available alternative position for which the employee is qualified and which better accommodates recurring periods of leave than does the employee's regular position. Transfer to an alternative position may require compliance with any applicable collective bargaining agreement, Federal law (such as the Americans with Disabilities Act), and State law. Transfer to an alternative position may include altering an existing job to better accommodate the employee's need for intermittent or reduced leave. The employer's agreement is not required for intermittent leave required by the serious health condition of the expectant mother or newborn child. See §§825.202—825.205 for general rules governing the use of intermittent and reduced schedule leave. See §825.121 for rules governing leave for adoption or foster care. See §825.601 for special rules applicable to instructional employees of schools. See §825.802 for special rules applicable to airline flight crew employees.

§825.121 Leave for adoption or foster care.

(a) General rules. Eligible employees are entitled to FMLA leave for placement with the employee of a son or daughter for adoption or foster care as follows:

(1) Employees may take FMLA leave before the actual placement or adoption of a child if an absence from work is required for the placement for adoption or foster care to proceed. For example, the employee may be required to attend counseling sessions, appear in court, consult with his or her attorney or the doctor(s) representing the birth parent, submit to a physical examination, or travel to another country to complete an adoption. The source of an adopted child (e.g., whether from a licensed placement agency or otherwise) is not a factor in determining eligibility for leave for this purpose.

(2) An employee's entitlement to leave for adoption or foster care expires at the end of the 12-month period beginning on the date of the placement. If state law allows, or the employer permits, leave for adoption or foster care to be taken beyond this period, such leave will not qualify as FMLA leave. See §825.701 regarding non-FMLA leave which may be available under applicable State laws. Under this section, the employee is entitled to FMLA leave even if the adopted or foster child does not have a serious health condition.

(3) Spouses who are eligible for FMLA leave and are employed by the same covered employer may be limited to a combined total of 12 weeks of leave during any 12-month period if the leave is taken for the placement of the employee's son or daughter or to care for the child after placement, for the birth of the employee's son or daughter or to care for the child after birth, or to care for the employee's parent with a serious health condition. This limitation on the total weeks of leave applies to leave taken for the reasons specified as long as the spouses are employed by the same employer. It would apply, for example, even though the spouses are employed at two different worksites of an employer located more than 75 miles from each other, or by two different operating divisions of the same company. On the other hand, if one spouse is ineligible for FMLA leave, the other spouse would be entitled to a full 12 weeks of FMLA leave. Where spouses both use a portion of the total 12-week FMLA leave entitlement for either the birth of a child, for placement for adoption or foster care, or to care for a parent, the spouses would each be entitled to the difference between the amount he or she has taken individually and 12 weeks for FMLA leave for other purposes. For example, if each spouse took six weeks of leave to care for a healthy, newly placed child, each could use an additional six weeks due to his or her own serious health condition or to care for a child with a serious health condition.

(4) An eligible employee is entitled to FMLA leave in order to care for an adopted or foster child with a serious health condition if the requirements of §§825.113 through 825.115 and 825.122(d) are met. Thus, spouses may each take 12 weeks of FMLA leave if needed to care for an adopted or foster child with a serious health condition, even if both are employed by the same employer, provided they have not exhausted their entitlements during the applicable 12-month FMLA leave period.

(b) Use of intermittent and reduced schedule leave. An eligible employee may use intermittent or reduced schedule leave after the placement of a healthy child for adoption or foster care only if the employer agrees. Thus, for example, the employer and employee may agree to a part-time work schedule after the placement for bonding purposes. If the employer agrees to permit intermittent or reduced schedule leave for the placement for adoption or foster care, the employer may require the employee to transfer temporarily, during the period the intermittent or reduced leave schedule is required, to an available alternative position for which the employee is qualified and which better accommodates recurring periods of leave than does the employee's regular position. Transfer to an alternative position may require compliance with any applicable collective bargaining agreement, federal law (such as the Americans with Disabilities Act), and State law. Transfer to an alternative position may include altering an existing job to better accommodate the employee's need for intermittent or reduced leave. The employer's agreement is not required for intermittent leave required by the serious health condition of the adopted or foster child. See §§825.202-825.205 for general rules governing the use of intermittent and reduced schedule leave. See §825.120 for general rules governing leave for pregnancy and birth of a child. See §825.601 for special rules applicable to instructional employees of schools. See §825.802 for special rules applicable to airline flight crew employees.

§825.122 Definitions of covered servicemember, spouse, parent, son or daughter, next of kin of a covered servicemember, adoption, foster care, son or daughter on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, son or daughter of a covered servicemember, and parent of a covered servicemember.

(a) Covered servicemember means: (1) A current member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, who is undergoing medical treatment, recuperation or therapy, is otherwise in outpatient status, or is otherwise on the temporary disability retired list, for a serious injury or illness; or

(2) A covered veteran who is undergoing medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy for a serious injury or illness. Covered veteran means an individual who was a member of the Armed Forces (including a member of the National Guard or Reserves), and was discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable at any time during the five-year period prior to the first date the eligible employee takes FMLA leave to care for the covered veteran. See §825.127(b)(2).

(b) Spouse, as defined in the statute, means a husband or wife. For purposes of this definition, husband or wife refers to the other person with whom an individual entered into marriage as defined or recognized under state law for purposes of marriage in the State in which the marriage was entered into or, in the case of a marriage entered into outside of any State, if the marriage is valid in the place where entered into and could have been entered into in at least one State. This definition includes an individual in a same-sex or common law marriage that either:

(1) Was entered into in a State that recognizes such marriages; or

(2) If entered into outside of any State, is valid in the place where entered into and could have been entered into in at least one State.

(c) Parent. Parent means a biological, adoptive, step or foster father or mother, or any other individual who stood in loco parentis to the employee when the employee was a son or daughter as defined in paragraph (d) of this section. This term does not include parents "in law."

(d) Son or daughter. For purposes of FMLA leave taken for birth or adoption, or to care for a family member with a serious health condition, son or daughter means a biological, adopted, or foster child, a stepchild, a legal ward, or a child of a person standing in loco parentis, who is either under age 18, or age 18 or older and "incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability" at the time that FMLA leave is to commence.

(1) Incapable of self-care means that the individual requires active assistance or supervision to provide daily self-care in three or more of the activities of daily living (ADLs) or instrumental activities of daily living (IADLs). Activities of daily living include adaptive activities such as caring appropriately for one's grooming and hygiene, bathing, dressing and eating. Instrumental activities of daily living include cooking, cleaning, shopping, taking public transportation, paying bills, maintaining a residence, using telephones and directories, using a post office, etc.

(2) Physical or mental disability means a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more of the major life activities of an individual. Regulations at 29 CFR 1630.2(h), (i), and (j), issued by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), 42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq., define these terms.

(3) Persons who are "in loco parentis" include those with day-to-day responsibilities to care for and financially support a child, or, in the case of an employee, who had such responsibility for the employee when the employee was a child. A biological or legal relationship is not necessary.

(e) Next of kin of a covered servicemember means the nearest blood relative other than the covered servicemember's spouse, parent, son, or daughter, in the following order of priority: blood relatives who have been granted legal custody of the covered servicemember by court decree or statutory provisions, brothers and sisters, grandparents, aunts and uncles, and first cousins, unless the covered servicemember has specifically designated in writing another blood relative as his or her nearest blood relative for purposes of military caregiver leave under the FMLA. When no such designation is made, and there are multiple family members with the same level of relationship to the covered servicemember, all such family members shall be considered the covered servicemember's next of kin and may take FMLA leave to provide care to the covered servicemember, either consecutively or simultaneously. When such designation has been made, the designated individual shall be deemed to be the covered servicemember's only next of kin. See §825.127(d)(3).

(f) Adoption means legally and permanently assuming the responsibility of raising a child as one's own. The source of an adopted child (e.g., whether from a licensed placement agency or otherwise) is not a factor in determining eligibility for FMLA leave. See §825.121 for rules governing leave for adoption.

(g) Foster care means 24-hour care for children in substitution for, and away from, their parents or guardian. Such placement is made by or with the agreement of the State as a result of a voluntary agreement between the parent or guardian that the child be removed from the home, or pursuant to a judicial determination of the necessity for foster care, and involves agreement between the State and foster family that the foster family will take care of the child. Although foster care may be with relatives of the child, State action is involved in the removal of the child from parental custody. See §825.121 for rules governing leave for foster care.

(h) Son or daughter on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status means the employee's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or a child for whom the employee stood in loco parentis, who is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and who is of any age. See §825.126(a)(5).

(i) Son or daughter of a covered servicemember means the covered servicemember's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or a child for whom the covered servicemember stood in loco parentis, and who is of any age. See §825.127(d)(1).

(j) Parent of a covered servicemember means a covered servicemember's biological, adoptive, step or foster father or mother, or any other individual who stood in loco parentis to the covered servicemember. This term does not include parents "in law." See §825.127(d)(2).

(k) Documenting relationships. For purposes of confirmation of family relationship, the employer may require the employee giving notice of the need for leave to provide reasonable documentation or statement of family relationship. This documentation may take the form of a simple statement from the employee, or a child's birth certificate, a court document, etc. The employer is entitled to examine documentation such as a birth certificate, etc., but the employee is entitled to the return of the official document submitted for this purpose.

(a) Definition. An employee is unable to perform the functions of the position where the health care provider finds that the employee is unable to work at all or is unable to perform any one of the essential functions of the employee's position within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), as amended, 42 U.S.C. 12101 et seq., and the regulations at 29 CFR 1630.2(n). An employee who must be absent from work to receive medical treatment for a serious health condition is considered to be unable to perform the essential functions of the position during the absence for treatment.

(b) Statement of functions. An employer has the option, in requiring certification from a health care provider, to provide a statement of the essential functions of the employee's position for the health care provider to review. A sufficient medical certification must specify what functions of the employee's position the employee is unable to perform so that the employer can then determine whether the employee is unable to perform one or more essential functions of the employee's position. For purposes of FMLA, the essential functions of the employee's position are to be determined with reference to the position the employee held at the time notice is given or leave commenced, whichever is earlier. See §825.306.

(a) The medical certification provision that an employee is needed to care for a family member or covered servicemember encompasses both physical and psychological care. It includes situations where, for example, because of a serious health condition, the family member is unable to care for his or her own basic medical, hygienic, or nutritional needs or safety, or is unable to transport himself or herself to the doctor. The term also includes providing psychological comfort and reassurance which would be beneficial to a child, spouse or parent with a serious health condition who is receiving inpatient or home care.

(b) The term also includes situations where the employee may be needed to substitute for others who normally care for the family member or covered servicemember, or to make arrangements for changes in care, such as transfer to a nursing home. The employee need not be the only individual or family member available to care for the family member or covered servicemember.

(c) An employee's intermittent leave or a reduced leave schedule necessary to care for a family member or covered servicemember includes not only a situation where the condition of the family member or covered servicemember itself is intermittent, but also where the employee is only needed intermittently—such as where other care is normally available, or care responsibilities are shared with another member of the family or a third party. See §§825.202-825.205 for rules governing the use of intermittent or reduced schedule leave.

(a) The Act defines health care provider as:

(1) A doctor of medicine or osteopathy who is authorized to practice medicine or surgery (as appropriate) by the State in which the doctor practices; or

(2) Any other person determined by the Secretary to be capable of providing health care services.

(b) Others capable of providing health care services include only:

(1) Podiatrists, dentists, clinical psychologists, optometrists, and chiropractors (limited to treatment consisting of manual manipulation of the spine to correct a subluxation as demonstrated by X-ray to exist) authorized to practice in the State and performing within the scope of their practice as defined under State law;

(2) Nurse practitioners, nurse-midwives, clinical social workers and physician assistants who are authorized to practice under State law and who are performing within the scope of their practice as defined under State law;

(3) Christian Science Practitioners listed with the First Church of Christ, Scientist in Boston, Massachusetts. Where an employee or family member is receiving treatment from a Christian Science practitioner, an employee may not object to any requirement from an employer that the employee or family member submit to examination (though not treatment) to obtain a second or third certification from a health care provider other than a Christian Science practitioner except as otherwise provided under applicable State or local law or collective bargaining agreement;

(4) Any health care provider from whom an employer or the employer's group health plan's benefits manager will accept certification of the existence of a serious health condition to substantiate a claim for benefits; and

(5) A health care provider listed above who practices in a country other than the United States, who is authorized to practice in accordance with the law of that country, and who is performing within the scope of his or her practice as defined under such law.

(c) The phrase authorized to practice in the State as used in this section means that the provider must be authorized to diagnose and treat physical or mental health conditions.

§825.126 Leave because of a qualifying exigency.

(a) Eligible employees may take FMLA leave for a qualifying exigency while the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent (the military member or member) is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty).

(1) Covered active duty or call to covered active duty status in the case of a member of the Regular Armed Forces means duty during the deployment of the member with the Armed Forces to a foreign country. The active duty orders of a member of the Regular components of the Armed Forces will generally specify if the member is deployed to a foreign country.

(2) Covered active duty or call to covered active duty status in the case of a member of the Reserve components of the Armed Forces means duty during the deployment of the member with the Armed Forces to a foreign country under a Federal call or order to active duty in support of a contingency operation pursuant to: Section 688 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes ordering to active duty retired members of the Regular Armed Forces and members of the retired Reserve who retired after completing at least 20 years of active service; Section 12301(a) of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes ordering all reserve component members to active duty in the case of war or national emergency; Section 12302 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes ordering any unit or unassigned member of the Ready Reserve to active duty; Section 12304 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes ordering any unit or unassigned member of the Selected Reserve and certain members of the Individual Ready Reserve to active duty; Section 12305 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes the suspension of promotion, retirement or separation rules for certain Reserve components; Section 12406 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes calling the National Guard into Federal service in certain circumstances; chapter 15 of Title 10 of the United States Code, which authorizes calling the National Guard and state military into Federal service in the case of insurrections and national emergencies; or any other provision of law during a war or during a national emergency declared by the President or Congress so long as it is in support of a contingency operation. See 10 U.S.C. 101(a)(13)(B).

(i) For purposes of covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, the Reserve components of the Armed Forces include the Army National Guard of the United States, Army Reserve, Navy Reserve, Marine Corps Reserve, Air National Guard of the United States, Air Force Reserve and Coast Guard Reserve, and retired members of the Regular Armed Forces or Reserves who are called up in support of a contingency operation pursuant to one of the provisions of law identified in paragraph (a)(2).

(ii) The active duty orders of a member of the Reserve components will generally specify if the military member is serving in support of a contingency operation by citation to the relevant section of Title 10 of the United States Code and/or by reference to the specific name of the contingency operation and will specify that the deployment is to a foreign country.

(3) Deployment of the member with the Armed Forces to a foreign country means deployment to areas outside of the United States, the District of Columbia, or any Territory or possession of the United States, including international waters.

(4) A call to covered active duty for purposes of leave taken because of a qualifying exigency refers to a Federal call to active duty. State calls to active duty are not covered unless under order of the President of the United States pursuant to one of the provisions of law identified in paragraph (a)(2) of this section.

(5) Son or daughter on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status means the employee's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or a child for whom the employee stood in loco parentis, who is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and who is of any age.

(b) An eligible employee may take FMLA leave for one or more of the following qualifying exigencies:

(1) Short-notice deployment. (i) To address any issue that arises from the fact that the military member is notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty seven or less calendar days prior to the date of deployment;

(ii) Leave taken for this purpose can be used for a period of seven calendar days beginning on the date the military member is notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty;

(2) Military events and related activities. (i) To attend any official ceremony, program, or event sponsored by the military that is related to the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member; and

(ii) To attend family support or assistance programs and informational briefings sponsored or promoted by the military, military service organizations, or the American Red Cross that are related to the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member;

(3) Childcare and school activities. For the purposes of leave for childcare and school activities listed in (i) through (iv) of this paragraph, a child of the military member must be the military member's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or child for whom the military member stands in loco parentis, who is either under 18 years of age or 18 years of age or older and incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability at the time that FMLA leave is to commence. As with all instances of qualifying exigency leave, the military member must be the spouse, son, daughter, or parent of the employee requesting qualifying exigency leave.

(i) To arrange for alternative childcare for a child of the military member when the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member necessitates a change in the existing childcare arrangement;

(ii) To provide childcare for a child of the military member on an urgent, immediate need basis (but not on a routine, regular, or everyday basis) when the need to provide such care arises from the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member;

(iii) To enroll in or transfer to a new school or day care facility a child of the military member when enrollment or transfer is necessitated by the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member; and

(iv) To attend meetings with staff at a school or a daycare facility, such as meetings with school officials regarding disciplinary measures, parent-teacher conferences, or meetings with school counselors, for a child of the military member, when such meetings are necessary due to circumstances arising from the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member;

(4) Financial and legal arrangements. (i) To make or update financial or legal arrangements to address the military member's absence while on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, such as preparing and executing financial and healthcare powers of attorney, transferring bank account signature authority, enrolling in the Defense Enrollment Eligibility Reporting System (DEERS), obtaining military identification cards, or preparing or updating a will or living trust; and

(ii) To act as the military member's representative before a federal, state, or local agency for purposes of obtaining, arranging, or appealing military service benefits while the military member is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and for a period of 90 days following the termination of the military member's covered active duty status;

(5) Counseling. To attend counseling provided by someone other than a health care provider, for oneself, for the military member, or for the biological, adopted, or foster child, a stepchild, or a legal ward of the military member, or a child for whom the military member stands in loco parentis, who is either under age 18, or age 18 or older and incapable of self-care because of a mental or physical disability at the time that FMLA leave is to commence, provided that the need for counseling arises from the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member;

(6) Rest and Recuperation. (i) To spend time with the military member who is on short-term, temporary, Rest and Recuperation leave during the period of deployment;

(ii) Leave taken for this purpose can be used for a period of 15 calendar days beginning on the date the military member commences each instance of Rest and Recuperation leave;

(7) Post-deployment activities. (i) To attend arrival ceremonies, reintegration briefings and events, and any other official ceremony or program sponsored by the military for a period of 90 days following the termination of the military member's covered active duty status; and

(ii) To address issues that arise from the death of the military member while on covered active duty status, such as meeting and recovering the body of the military member, making funeral arrangements, and attending funeral services;

(8) Parental care. For purposes of leave for parental care listed in (i) through (iv) of this paragraph, the parent of the military member must be incapable of self-care and must be the military member's biological, adoptive, step, or foster father or mother, or any other individual who stood in loco parentis to the military member when the member was under 18 years of age. A parent who is incapable of self-care means that the parent requires active assistance or supervision to provide daily self-care in three or more of the activities of daily living or instrumental activities of daily living. Activities of daily living include adaptive activities such as caring appropriately for one's grooming and hygiene, bathing, dressing, and eating. Instrumental activities of daily living include cooking, cleaning, shopping, taking public transportation, paying bills, maintaining a residence, using telephones and directories, using a post office, etc. As with all instances of qualifying exigency leave, the military member must be the spouse, son, daughter, or parent of the employee requesting qualifying exigency leave.

(i) To arrange for alternative care for a parent of the military member when the parent is incapable of self-care and the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member necessitates a change in the existing care arrangement for the parent;

(ii) To provide care for a parent of the military member on an urgent, immediate need basis (but not on a routine, regular, or everyday basis) when the parent is incapable of self-care and the need to provide such care arises from the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member;

(iii) To admit to or transfer to a care facility a parent of the military member when admittance or transfer is necessitated by the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member; and

(iv) To attend meetings with staff at a care facility, such as meetings with hospice or social service providers for a parent of the military member, when such meetings are necessary due to circumstances arising from the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status of the military member but not for routine or regular meetings;

(9) Additional activities. To address other events which arise out of the military member's covered active duty or call to covered active duty status provided that the employer and employee agree that such leave shall qualify as an exigency, and agree to both the timing and duration of such leave.

§825.127 Leave to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness (military caregiver leave).

(a) Eligible employees are entitled to FMLA leave to care for a covered servicemember with a serious illness or injury.

(b) Covered servicemember means:

(2) A covered veteran who is undergoing medical treatment, recuperation or therapy for a serious injury or illness. Covered veteran means an individual who was a member of the Armed Forces (including a member of the National Guard or Reserves), and was discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable at any time during the five-year period prior to the first date the eligible employee takes FMLA leave to care for the covered veteran. An eligible employee must commence leave to care for a covered veteran within five years of the veteran's active duty service, but the single 12-month period described in paragraph (e)(1) of this section may extend beyond the five-year period.

(i) For an individual who was a member of the Armed Forces (including a member of the National Guard or Reserves) and who was discharged or released under conditions other than dishonorable prior to the effective date of this Final Rule, the period between October 28, 2009 and the effective date of this Final Rule shall not count towards the determination of the five-year period for covered veteran status.

(c) A serious injury or illness means:

(1) In the case of a current member of the Armed Forces, including a member of the National Guard or Reserves, means an injury or illness that was incurred by the covered servicemember in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces or that existed before the beginning of the member's active duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces, and that may render the member medically unfit to perform the duties of the member's office, grade, rank or rating; and,

(2) In the case of a covered veteran, means an injury or illness that was incurred by the member in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces (or existed before the beginning of the member's active duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty in the Armed Forces) and manifested itself before or after the member became a veteran, and is:

(i) a continuation of a serious injury or illness that was incurred or aggravated when the covered veteran was a member of the Armed Forces and rendered the servicemember unable to perform the duties of the servicemember's office, grade, rank, or rating; or

(ii) a physical or mental condition for which the covered veteran has received a U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs Service-Related Disability Rating (VASRD) of 50 percent or greater, and such VASRD rating is based, in whole or in part, on the condition precipitating the need for military caregiver leave; or

(iii) a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs the covered veteran's ability to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation by reason of a disability or disabilities related to military service, or would do so absent treatment; or

(iv) an injury, including a psychological injury, on the basis of which the covered veteran has been enrolled in the Department of Veterans Affairs Program of Comprehensive Assistance for Family Caregivers.

(d) In order to care for a covered servicemember, an eligible employee must be the spouse, son, daughter, or parent, or next of kin of a covered servicemember.

(1) Son or daughter of a covered servicemember means the covered servicemember's biological, adopted, or foster child, stepchild, legal ward, or a child for whom the covered servicemember stood in loco parentis, and who is of any age.

(2) Parent of a covered servicemember means a covered servicemember's biological, adoptive, step or foster father or mother, or any other individual who stood in loco parentis to the covered servicemember. This term does not include parents "in law."

(3) Next of kin of a covered servicemember means the nearest blood relative, other than the covered servicemember's spouse, parent, son, or daughter, in the following order of priority: blood relatives who have been granted legal custody of the servicemember by court decree or statutory provisions, brothers and sisters, grandparents, aunts and uncles, and first cousins, unless the covered servicemember has specifically designated in writing another blood relative as his or her nearest blood relative for purposes of military caregiver leave under the FMLA. When no such designation is made, and there are multiple family members with the same level of relationship to the covered servicemember, all such family members shall be considered the covered servicemember's next of kin and may take FMLA leave to provide care to the covered servicemember, either consecutively or simultaneously. When such designation has been made, the designated individual shall be deemed to be the covered servicemember's only next of kin. For example, if a covered servicemember has three siblings and has not designated a blood relative to provide care, all three siblings would be considered the covered servicemember's next of kin. Alternatively, where a covered servicemember has a sibling(s) and designates a cousin as his or her next of kin for FMLA purposes, then only the designated cousin is eligible as the covered servicemember's next of kin. An employer is permitted to require an employee to provide confirmation of covered family relationship to the covered servicemember pursuant to §825.122(k).

(e) An eligible employee is entitled to 26 workweeks of leave to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness during a single 12-month period.

(1) The single 12-month period described in paragraph (e) of this section begins on the first day the eligible employee takes FMLA leave to care for a covered servicemember and ends 12 months after that date, regardless of the method used by the employer to determine the employee's 12 workweeks of leave entitlement for other FMLA-qualifying reasons. If an eligible employee does not take all of his or her 26 workweeks of leave entitlement to care for a covered servicemember during this single 12-month period, the remaining part of his or her 26 workweeks of leave entitlement to care for the covered servicemember is forfeited.

(2) The leave entitlement described in paragraph (e) of this section is to be applied on a per-covered-servicemember, per-injury basis such that an eligible employee may be entitled to take more than one period of 26 workweeks of leave if the leave is to care for different covered servicemembers or to care for the same servicemember with a subsequent serious injury or illness, except that no more than 26 workweeks of leave may be taken within any single 12-month period. An eligible employee may take more than one period of 26 workweeks of leave to care for a covered servicemember with more than one serious injury or illness only when the serious injury or illness is a subsequent serious injury or illness. When an eligible employee takes leave to care for more than one covered servicemember or for a subsequent serious injury or illness of the same covered servicemember, and the single 12-month periods corresponding to the different military caregiver leave entitlements overlap, the employee is limited to taking no more than 26 workweeks of leave in each single 12-month period.

(3) An eligible employee is entitled to a combined total of 26 workweeks of leave for any FMLA-qualifying reason during the single 12-month period described in paragraph (e) of this section, provided that the employee is entitled to no more than 12 workweeks of leave for one or more of the following: because of the birth of a son or daughter of the employee and in order to care for such son or daughter; because of the placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care; in order to care for the spouse, son, daughter, or parent with a serious health condition; because of the employee's own serious health condition; or because of a qualifying exigency. Thus, for example, an eligible employee may, during the single 12-month period, take 16 workweeks of FMLA leave to care for a covered servicemember and 10 workweeks of FMLA leave to care for a newborn child. However, the employee may not take more than 12 weeks of FMLA leave to care for the newborn child during the single 12-month period, even if the employee takes fewer than 14 workweeks of FMLA leave to care for a covered servicemember.

(4) In all circumstances, including for leave taken to care for a covered servicemember, the employer is responsible for designating leave, paid or unpaid, as FMLA-qualifying, and for giving notice of the designation to the employee as provided in §825.300. In the case of leave that qualifies as both leave to care for a covered servicemember and leave to care for a family member with a serious health condition during the single 12-month period described in paragraph (e) of this section, the employer must designate such leave as leave to care for a covered servicemember in the first instance. Leave that qualifies as both leave to care for a covered servicemember and leave taken to care for a family member with a serious health condition during the single 12-month period described in paragraph (e) of this section must not be designated and counted as both leave to care for a covered servicemember and leave to care for a family member with a serious health condition. As is the case with leave taken for other qualifying reasons, employers may retroactively designate leave as leave to care for a covered servicemember pursuant to §825.301(d).

(f) Spouses who are eligible for FMLA leave and are employed by the same covered employer may be limited to a combined total of 26 workweeks of leave during the single 12-month period described in paragraph (e) of this section if the leave is taken for birth of the employee's son or daughter or to care for the child after birth, for placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care, or to care for the child after placement, to care for the employee's parent with a serious health condition, or to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness. This limitation on the total weeks of leave applies to leave taken for the reasons specified as long as the spouses are employed by the same employer. It would apply, for example, even though the spouses are employed at two different worksites of an employer located more than 75 miles from each other, or by two different operating divisions of the same company. On the other hand, if one spouse is ineligible for FMLA leave, the other spouse would be entitled to a full 26 workweeks of FMLA leave.

Subpart B—Employee Leave Entitlements Under the Family and Medical Leave Act

§825.200 Amount of leave.

(a) Except in the case of leave to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness, an eligible employee's FMLA leave entitlement is limited to a total of 12 workweeks of leave during any 12-month period for any one, or more, of the following reasons:

(1) The birth of the employee's son or daughter, and to care for the newborn child;

(2) The placement with the employee of a son or daughter for adoption or foster care, and to care for the newly placed child;

(3) To care for the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent with a serious health condition;

(4) Because of a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform one or more of the essential functions of his or her job; and,

(5) Because of any qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent is a military member on covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty).

(b) An employer is permitted to choose any one of the following methods for determining the 12-month period in which the 12 weeks of leave entitlement described in paragraph (a) of this section occurs:

(1) The calendar year;

(2) Any fixed 12-month leave year, such as a fiscal year, a year required by State law, or a year starting on an employee's anniversary date;

(3) The 12-month period measured forward from the date any employee's first FMLA leave under paragraph (a) begins; or,

(4) A "rolling" 12-month period measured backward from the date an employee uses any FMLA leave as described in paragraph (a).

(c) Under methods in paragraphs (b)(1) and (b)(2) of this section an employee would be entitled to up to 12 weeks of FMLA leave at any time in the fixed 12-month period selected. An employee could, therefore, take 12 weeks of leave at the end of the year and 12 weeks at the beginning of the following year. Under the method in paragraph (b)(3) of this section, an employee would be entitled to 12 weeks of leave during the year beginning on the first date FMLA leave is taken; the next 12-month period would begin the first time FMLA leave is taken after completion of any previous 12-month period. Under the method in paragraph (b)(4) of this section, the "rolling" 12-month period, each time an employee takes FMLA leave the remaining leave entitlement would be any balance of the 12 weeks which has not been used during the immediately preceding 12 months. For example, if an employee has taken eight weeks of leave during the past 12 months, an additional four weeks of leave could be taken. If an employee used four weeks beginning February 1, 2008, four weeks beginning June 1, 2008, and four weeks beginning December 1, 2008, the employee would not be entitled to any additional leave until February 1, 2009. However, beginning on February 1, 2009, the employee would again be eligible to take FMLA leave, recouping the right to take the leave in the same manner and amounts in which it was used in the previous year. Thus, the employee would recoup (and be entitled to use) one additional day of FMLA leave each day for four weeks, commencing February 1, 2009. The employee would also begin to recoup additional days beginning on June 1, 2009, and additional days beginning on December 1, 2009. Accordingly, employers using the rolling 12-month period may need to calculate whether the employee is entitled to take FMLA leave each time that leave is requested, and employees taking FMLA leave on such a basis may fall in and out of FMLA protection based on their FMLA usage in the prior 12 months. For example, in the example above, if the employee needs six weeks of leave for a serious health condition commencing February 1, 2009, only the first four weeks of the leave would be FMLA protected.

(d)(1) Employers will be allowed to choose any one of the alternatives in paragraph (b) of this section for the leave entitlements described in paragraph (a) of this section provided the alternative chosen is applied consistently and uniformly to all employees. An employer wishing to change to another alternative is required to give at least 60 days notice to all employees, and the transition must take place in such a way that the employees retain the full benefit of 12 weeks of leave under whichever method affords the greatest benefit to the employee. Under no circumstances may a new method be implemented in order to avoid the Act's leave requirements.

(2) An exception to this required uniformity would apply in the case of a multi-State employer who has eligible employees in a State which has a family and medical leave statute. The State may require a single method of determining the period during which use of the leave entitlement is measured. This method may conflict with the method chosen by the employer to determine any 12 months for purposes of the Federal statute. The employer may comply with the State provision for all employees employed within that State, and uniformly use another method provided by this regulation for the leave entitlements described in paragraph (a) for all other employees.

(e) If an employer fails to select one of the options in paragraph (b) of this section for measuring the 12-month period for the leave entitlements described in paragraph (a), the option that provides the most beneficial outcome for the employee will be used. The employer may subsequently select an option only by providing the 60-day notice to all employees of the option the employer intends to implement. During the running of the 60-day period any other employee who needs FMLA leave may use the option providing the most beneficial outcome to that employee. At the conclusion of the 60-day period the employer may implement the selected option.

(f) An eligible employee's FMLA leave entitlement is limited to a total of 26 workweeks of leave during a single 12-month period to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness. An employer shall determine the single 12-month period in which the 26-weeks-of-leave-entitlement described in this paragraph occurs using the 12-month period measured forward from the date an employee's first FMLA leave to care for the covered servicemember begins. See §825.127(e)(1).

(g) During the single 12-month period described in paragraph (f), an eligible employee's FMLA leave entitlement is limited to a combined total of 26 workweeks of FMLA leave for any qualifying reason. See §825.127(e)(3).

(h) For purposes of determining the amount of leave used by an employee, the fact that a holiday may occur within the week taken as FMLA leave has no effect; the week is counted as a week of FMLA leave. However, if an employee is using FMLA leave in increments of less than one week, the holiday will not count against the employee's FMLA entitlement unless the employee was otherwise scheduled and expected to work during the holiday. Similarly, if for some reason the employer's business activity has temporarily ceased and employees generally are not expected to report for work for one or more weeks (e.g., a school closing two weeks for the Christmas/New Year holiday or the summer vacation or an employer closing the plant for retooling or repairs), the days the employer's activities have ceased do not count against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. Methods for determining an employee's 12-week leave entitlement are also described in §825.205. See §825.802 for special calculation of leave rules applicable to airline flight crew employees.

§825.201 Leave to care for a parent.

(a) General rule. An eligible employee is entitled to FMLA leave if needed to care for the employee's parent with a serious health condition. Care for parents-in-law is not covered by the FMLA. See §825.122(c) for definition of parent.

(b) Same employer limitation. Spouses who are eligible for FMLA leave and are employed by the same covered employer may be limited to a combined total of 12 weeks of leave during any 12-month period if the leave is taken to care for the employee's parent with a serious health condition, for the birth of the employee's son or daughter or to care for the child after the birth, or for placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care or to care for the child after placement. This limitation on the total weeks of leave applies to leave taken for the reasons specified as long as the spouses are employed by the same employer. It would apply, for example, even though the spouses are employed at accommodation is not possible in the employee's present position, or an accommodation in the employee's present position would cause an undue hardship. The examples in the following paragraphs of this section demonstrate how the two laws would interact with respect to a qualified individual with a disability.

(2) A qualified individual with a disability who is also an eligible employee entitled to FMLA leave requests 10 weeks of medical leave as a reasonable accommodation, which the employer grants because it is not an undue hardship. The employer advises the employee that the 10 weeks of leave is also being designated as FMLA leave and will count towards the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. This designation does not prevent the parties from also treating the leave as a reasonable accommodation and reinstating the employee into the same job, as required by the ADA, rather than an equivalent position under FMLA, if that is the greater right available to the employee. At the same time, the employee would be entitled under FMLA to have the employer maintain group health plan coverage during the leave, as that requirement provides the greater right to the employee.

(3) If the same employee needed to work part-time (a reduced leave schedule) after returning to his or her same job, the employee would still be entitled under FMLA to have group health plan coverage maintained for the remainder of the two-week equivalent of FMLA leave entitlement, notwithstanding an employer policy that part-time employees do not receive health insurance. This employee would be entitled under the ADA to reasonable accommodations to enable the employee to perform the essential functions of the part-time position. In addition, because the employee is working a part-time schedule as a reasonable accommodation, the FMLA's provision for temporary assignment to a different alternative position would not apply. Once the employee has exhausted his or her remaining FMLA leave entitlement while working the reduced (part-time) schedule, if the employee is a qualified individual with a disability, and if the employee is unable to return to the same full-time position at that time, the employee might continue to work part-time as a reasonable accommodation, barring undue hardship; the employee would then be entitled to only those employment benefits ordinarily provided by the employer to part-time employees.

(4) At the end of the FMLA leave entitlement, an employer is required under FMLA to reinstate the employee in the same or an equivalent position, with equivalent pay and benefits, to that which the employee held when leave commenced. The employer's FMLA obligations would be satisfied if the employer offered the employee an equivalent full-time position. If the employee were unable to perform the essential functions of that equivalent position even with reasonable accommodation, because of a disability, the ADA may require the employer to make a reasonable accommodation at that time by allowing the employee to work part-time or by reassigning the employee to a vacant position, barring undue hardship.

(d)(1) If FMLA entitles an employee to leave, an employer may not, in lieu of FMLA leave entitlement, require an employee to take a job with a reasonable accommodation. However, ADA may require that an employer offer an employee the opportunity to take such a position. An employer may not change the essential functions of the job in order to deny FMLA leave. See §825.220(b).

(2) An employee may be on a workers' compensation absence due to an on-the-job injury or illness which also qualifies as a serious health condition under FMLA. The workers' compensation absence and FMLA leave may run concurrently (subject to proper notice and designation by the employer). At some point the health care provider providing medical care pursuant to the workers' compensation injury may certify the employee is able to return to work in a light duty position. If the employer offers such a position, the employee is permitted but not required to accept the position. See §825.220(d). As a result, the employee may no longer qualify for payments from the workers' compensation benefit plan, but the employee is entitled to continue on unpaid FMLA leave either until the employee is able to return to the same or equivalent job the employee left or until the 12-week FMLA leave entitlement is exhausted. See §825.207(e). If the employee returning from the workers' compensation injury is a qualified individual with a disability, he or she will have rights under the ADA.

(e) If an employer requires certifications of an employee's fitness for duty to return to work, as permitted by FMLA under a uniform policy, it must comply with the ADA requirement that a fitness for duty physical be job-related and consistent with business necessity.

(f) Under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended by the Pregnancy Discrimination Act, an employer should provide the same benefits for women who are pregnant as the employer provides to other employees with short-term disabilities. Because Title VII does not require employees to be employed for a certain period of time to be protected, an employee employed for less than 12 months by the employer (and, therefore, not an eligible employee under FMLA) may not be denied maternity leave if the employer normally provides short-term disability benefits to employees with the same tenure who are experiencing other short-term disabilities.

(g) Under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA), 38 U.S.C. 4301, et seq., veterans are entitled to receive all rights and benefits of employment that they would have obtained if they had been continuously employed. Therefore, under USERRA, a returning servicemember would be eligible for FMLA leave if the months and hours that he or she would have worked (or, for airline flight crew employees, would have worked or been paid) for the civilian employer during the period of absence due to or necessitated by USERRA-covered service, combined with the months employed and the hours actually worked (or, for airline flight crew employees, actually worked or paid),

MANAGERS, HUMAN RESOURCES (AREA)

SUBJECT: Military Leave - Family Medical Leave Act - Eligibility

Based on a recently issued Department of Labor (DOL) Memorandum, the USPS is amending its position on how an authorized absence to perform military service is counted when determining eligibility for leave under the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA). The DOL memorandum clarifies its position on the rights of returning uniformed service members to family and medical leave under the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (USERRA).

Under the FMLA, employees must have worked for the employer for at least 12 months and must have worked at least 1250 hours for that employer during the 12 month period prior to the start of the leave. Under USERRA, employees who are reemployed are entitled to certain rights and benefits that they would have attained had they been continuously employed. DOL has determined that the months and hours that employees would have worked, but for their military service, should be combined with the months employed and the hours actually worked to determine if they meet the FMLA 12 month employment and 1250 work hour eligibility requirement.

Therefore, the Postal Service will credit the period of military service as follows:

1) Each month served performing military service counts as a month actively employed by the employer for the purpose of determining the 12 months of employment requirement. The 12 months of employment do not have to be consecutive to meet this FMLA requirement.

2) The hours that would have been worked for the employer, based on the employees work schedule prior to the military service, are added to any hours actually worked during the previous 12 month period to determine if the employee meets the 1250 work hour requirement. The hours the employee would have worked will be calculated in the same manner as back pay calculation, found in Section 436 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM).

As a reminder, once an employee meets the 1250 work hour eligibility test, the employee remains eligible for all absences that are for the same FMLA qualifying condition during the same postal leave year.

duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty) and that may render the member medically unfit to perform the duties of the member's office, grade, rank, or rating. c. To care for the employee's spouse, son or daughter, or parent who has a serious health condition.

d. For a serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform the employee's job.

e. Because of a qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that the employee's spouse, son, daughter, or parent is a military member on covered active duty (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty) in the Armed Forces.

Eligible employees who are the spouse, son, daughter, parent, or next of kin of a covered service member must be allowed up to 26 workweeks of leave during a single 12-month period to care for a covered service member with a serious injury or illness (as defined in 515.2(j)). The single 12-month period begins the first day the employee takes FMLA leave for this purpose and ends 12 months after that date. During this single 12-month period, the employee's entitlement is limited to a combined total of 26 workweeks of FMLA leave for any qualifying reason.

515.42 Leave Type

Absences that qualify as FMLA leave may be charged as annual leave, sick leave, continuation of pay, or leave without pay, or a combination of these. Leave is charged consistent with current leave policies and applicable collective bargaining agreements.

515.43 Authorized Hours

Eligible employees, including eligible non-career employees, are entitled to 12 workweeks of FMLA-protected absences per leave year for conditions in 515.41(a) through 515.41(e). Eligible employees who take FMLA-protected leave to care for a covered service member who has incurred a serious injury or illness as defined in 515.2 are entitled to a total of 26 workweeks during a single 12-month period.

This amount is 12 (or 26) times the hours normally, or regularly, scheduled in the employee's workweek. Thus:

a. Regular full-time employees who normally work 40 hours per week are entitled to up to 480 hours of FMLA-covered absences within a leave year for all qualifying reasons except for covered service member care. For such service member care, full-time employees who normally work 40 hours per week are entitled to up to 1046 hours in a single 12-month period that begins when the first leave is taken.

b. Part-time and Non-Traditional Full-Time (NTFT) employees who have regular weekly schedules that may be greater or less than 40 hours per week are entitled to 12 (or 26) times the number of hours normally scheduled in their workweek. For example, an employee with a regular schedule of 30 hours a week is entitled to 360 hours (12 weeks times 30 hours), or 780 hours, for service member care (26 weeks times 30 hours). A NTFT employee with a regular schedule of 44 hours a week is entitled to 528 hours (12 weeks times 44 hours), or 1144 hours, for service member care (26 weeks times 44 hours). If an employee is reassigned to a position with more or less workhours, the entitlement may change, but will be calculated so that the employee receives, but does not exceed 12 or 26 workweeks of FMLA protection.

515.5 Notice and Documentation

515.51 Notice

An employee must provide a supervisor a PS Form 3971 at least 30 days before the absence if the need for the FMLA leave is foreseeable. If 30 days notice is not practicable, the employee must give notice as soon as practicable.

two different worksites of an employer located more than 75 miles from each other, or by two different operating divisions of the same company. On the other hand, if one spouse is ineligible for FMLA leave, the other spouse would be entitled to a full 12 weeks of FMLA leave. Where the spouses both use a portion of the total 12-week FMLA leave entitlement for either the birth of a child, for placement for adoption or foster care, or to care for a parent, the spouses would each be entitled to the difference between the amount he or she has taken individually and 12 weeks for FMLA leave for other purposes. For example, if each spouse took six weeks of leave to care for a parent, each could use an additional six weeks due to his or her own serious health condition or to care for a child with a serious health condition. See also §825.127(d).

§825.202 Intermittent leave or reduced leave schedule.

(a) Definition. FMLA leave may be taken intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule under certain circumstances. Intermittent leave is FMLA leave taken in separate blocks of time due to a single qualifying reason. A reduced leave schedule is a leave schedule that reduces an employee's usual number of working hours per workweek, or hours per workday. A reduced leave schedule is a change in the employee's schedule for a period of time, normally from full-time to part-time.

(b) Medical necessity. For intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule taken because of one's own serious health condition, to care for a spouse, parent, son, or daughter with a serious health condition, or to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness, there must be a medical need for leave and it must be that such medical need can be best accommodated through an intermittent or reduced leave schedule. The treatment regimen and other information described in the certification of a serious health condition and in the certification of a serious injury or illness, if required by the employer, addresses the medical necessity of intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule. See §§825.306, 825.310. Leave may be taken intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule when medically necessary for planned and/or unanticipated medical treatment of a serious health condition or of a covered servicemember's serious injury or illness, or for recovery from treatment or recovery from a serious health condition or a covered servicemember's serious injury or illness. It may also be taken to provide care or psychological comfort to a covered family member with a serious health condition or a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness.

(1) Intermittent leave may be taken for a serious health condition of a spouse, parent, son, or daughter, for the employee's own serious health condition, or a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember which requires treatment by a health care provider periodically, rather than for one continuous period of time, and may include leave of periods from an hour or more to several weeks. Examples of intermittent leave would include leave taken on an occasional basis for medical appointments, or leave taken several days at a time spread over a period of six months, such as for chemotherapy. A pregnant employee may take leave intermittently for prenatal examinations or for her own condition, such as for periods of severe morning sickness. An example of an employee taking leave on a reduced leave schedule is an employee who is recovering from a serious health condition and is not strong enough to work a full-time schedule.

(2) Intermittent or reduced schedule leave may be taken for absences where the employee or family member is incapacitated or unable to perform the essential functions of the position because of a chronic serious health condition or a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, even if he or she does not receive treatment by a health care provider. See §§825.113 and 825.127.

(c) Birth or placement. When leave is taken after the birth of a healthy child or placement of a healthy child for adoption or foster care, an employee may take leave intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule only if the employer agrees. Such a schedule reduction might occur, for example, where an employee, with the employer's agreement, works part-time after the birth of a child, or takes leave in several segments. The employer's agreement is not required, however, for leave during which the expectant mother has a serious health condition in connection with the birth of her child or if the newborn child has a serious health condition. See §825.204 for rules governing transfer to an alternative position that better accommodates intermittent leave. See also §825.120 (pregnancy) and §825.121 (adoption and foster care).

(d) Qualifying exigency. Leave due to a qualifying exigency may be taken on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule basis.

§825.203 Scheduling of intermittent or reduced schedule leave.

Eligible employees may take FMLA leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis when medically necessary due to the serious health condition of a covered family member or the employee or the serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember. See §825.202. Eligible employees may also take FMLA leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis when necessary because of a qualifying exigency. If an employee needs leave intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule for planned medical treatment, then the employee must make a reasonable effort to schedule the treatment so as not to disrupt unduly the employer's operations.

§825.204 Transfer of an employee to an alternative position during intermittent leave or reduced schedule leave.

(a) Transfer or reassignment. If an employee needs intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule that is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment for the employee, a family member, or a covered servicemember, including during a period of recovery from one's own serious health condition, a serious health condition of a spouse, parent, son, or daughter, or a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, or if the employer agrees to permit intermittent or reduced schedule leave for the birth of a child or for placement of a child for adoption or foster care, the employer may require the employee to transfer temporarily, during the period that the intermittent or reduced leave schedule is required, to an available alternative position for which the employee is qualified and which better accommodates recurring periods of leave than does the employee's regular position. See §825.601 for special rules applicable to instructional employees of schools.

(b) Compliance. Transfer to an alternative position may require compliance with any applicable collective bargaining agreement, Federal law (such as the Americans with Disabilities Act), and State law. Transfer to an alternative position may include altering an existing job to better accommodate the employee's need for intermittent or reduced schedule leave.

(c) Equivalent pay and benefits. The alternative position must have equivalent pay and benefits. An alternative position for these purposes does not have to have equivalent duties. The employer may increase the pay and benefits of an existing alternative position, so as to make them equivalent to the pay and benefits of the employee's regular job. The employer may also transfer the employee to a part-time job with the same hourly rate of pay and benefits, provided the employee is not required to take more leave than is medically necessary. For example, an employee desiring to take leave in increments of four hours per day could be transferred to a half-time job, or could remain in the employee's same job on a part-time schedule, paying the same hourly rate as the employee's previous job and enjoying the same benefits. The employer may not eliminate benefits which otherwise would not be provided to part-time employees; however, an employer may proportionately reduce benefits such as vacation leave where an employer's normal practice is to base such benefits on the number of hours worked.

(d) Employer limitations. An employer may not transfer the employee to an alternative position in order to discourage the employee from taking leave or otherwise work a hardship on the employee. For example, a white collar employee may not be assigned to perform laborer's work; an employee working the day shift may not be reassigned to the graveyard shift; an employee working in the headquarters facility may not be reassigned to a branch a significant distance away from the employee's normal job location. Any such attempt on the part of the employer to make such a transfer will be held to be contrary to the prohibited acts of the FMLA.

(e) Reinstatement of employee. When an employee who is taking leave intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule and has been transferred to an alternative position no longer needs to continue on leave and is able to return to full-time work, the employee must be placed in the same or equivalent job as the job he or she left when the leave commenced. An employee may not be required to take more leave than necessary to address the circumstance that precipitated the need for leave.

§825.205 Increments of FMLA leave for intermittent or reduced schedule leave.

(a) Minimum increment. (1) When an employee takes FMLA leave on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule basis, the employer must account for the leave using an increment no greater than the shortest period of time that the employer uses to account for use of other forms of leave provided that it is not greater than one hour and provided further that an employee's FMLA leave entitlement may not be reduced by more than the amount of leave actually taken. An employer may not require an employee to take more leave than is necessary to address the circumstances that precipitated the need for the leave, provided that the leave is counted using the shortest increment of leave used to account for any other type of leave. See also §825.205(a)(2) for the physical impossibility exception, §§825.600 and 825.601 for special rules applicable to employees of schools, and §825.802 for special rules applicable to airline flight crew employees. If an employer uses different increments to account for different types of leave, the employer must account for FMLA leave in the smallest increment used to account for any other type of leave. For example, if an employer accounts for the use of annual leave in increments of one hour and the use of sick leave in increments of one-half hour, then FMLA leave use must be accounted for using increments no larger than one-half hour. If an employer accounts for use of leave in varying increments at different times of the day or shift, the employer may also account for FMLA leave in varying increments, provided that the increment used for FMLA leave is no greater than the smallest increment used for any other type of leave during the period in which the FMLA leave is taken. If an employer accounts for other forms of leave use in increments greater than one hour, the employer must account for FMLA leave use in increments no greater than one hour. An employer may account for FMLA leave in shorter increments than used for other forms of leave. For example, an employer that accounts for other forms of leave in one hour increments may account for FMLA leave in a shorter increment when the employee arrives at work several minutes late, and the employer wants the employee to begin work immediately. Such accounting for FMLA leave will not alter the increment considered to be the shortest period used to account for other forms of leave or the use of FMLA leave in other circumstances. In all cases, employees may not be charged FMLA leave for periods during which they are working.

(2) Where it is physically impossible for an employee using intermittent leave or working a reduced leave schedule to commence or end work mid-way through a shift, such as where a flight attendant or a railroad conductor is scheduled to work aboard an airplane or train, or a laboratory employee is unable to enter or leave a sealed "clean room" during a certain period of time and no equivalent position is available, the entire period that the employee is forced to be absent is designated as FMLA leave and counts against the employee's FMLA entitlement. The period of the physical impossibility is limited to the period during which the employer is unable to permit the employee to work prior to a period of FMLA leave or return the employee to the same or equivalent position due to the physical impossibility after a period of FMLA leave. See §825.214.

(b) Calculation of leave. (1) When an employee takes leave on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule, only the amount of leave actually taken may be counted toward the employee's leave entitlement. The actual workweek is the basis of leave entitlement. Therefore, if an employee who would otherwise work 40 hours a week takes off eight hours, the employee would use one-fifth ($\frac{1}{5}$) of a week of FMLA leave. Similarly, if a full-time employee who would otherwise work eight hour days works four-hour days under a reduced leave schedule, the employee would use one-half ($\frac{1}{2}$) week of FMLA leave. Where an employee works a part-time schedule or variable hours, the amount of FMLA leave that an employee uses is determined on a pro rata or proportional basis. If an employee who would otherwise work 30 hours per week, but works only 20 hours a week under a reduced leave schedule, the employee's 10 hours of leave would constitute one-third ($\frac{1}{3}$) of a week of FMLA leave for each week the employee works the reduced leave schedule. An employer may convert these fractions to their hourly equivalent so long as the conversion equitably reflects the employee's total normally scheduled hours. An employee does not accrue FMLA-protected leave at any particular hourly rate. An eligible employee is entitled to up to a total of 12 workweeks of leave, or 26 workweeks in the case of military caregiver leave, and the total number of hours contained in those workweeks is necessarily dependent on the specific hours the employee would have worked but for the use of leave. See also §§825.601 and 825.602, special rules for schools and §825.802, special rules for airline flight crew employees.

(2) If an employer has made a permanent or long-term change in the employee's schedule (for reasons other than FMLA, and prior to the notice of need for FMLA leave), the hours worked under the new schedule are to be used for making this calculation.

(3) If an employee's schedule varies from week to week to such an extent that an employer is unable to determine with any certainty how many hours the employee would otherwise have worked (but for the taking of FMLA leave), a weekly average of the hours scheduled over the 12 months prior to the beginning of the leave period (including any hours for which the employee took leave of any type) would be used for calculating the employee's leave entitlement.

(c) Overtime. If an employee would normally be required to work overtime, but is unable to do so because of a FMLA-qualifying reason that limits the employee's ability to work overtime, the hours which the employee would have been required to work may be counted against the employee's FMLA entitlement. In such a case, the employee is using intermittent or reduced schedule leave. For example, if an employee would normally be required to work for 48 hours in a particular week, but due to a serious health condition the employee is unable to work more than 40 hours that week, the employee would utilize eight hours of FMLA-protected leave out of the 48-hour workweek, or one-sixth ($\frac{1}{6}$) of a week of FMLA leave. Voluntary overtime hours that an employee does not work due to an FMLA-qualifying reason may not be counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement.

§825.206 Interaction with the FLSA.

(a) Leave taken under FMLA may be unpaid. If an employee is otherwise exempt from minimum wage and overtime requirements of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) as a salaried executive, administrative, professional, or computer employee (under regulations issued by the Secretary, 29 CFR part 541), providing unpaid FMLA-qualifying leave to such an employee will not cause the employee to lose the FLSA exemption. See 29 CFR 541.602(b)(7). This means that under regulations currently in effect, where an employee meets the specified duties test, is paid on a salary basis, and is paid a salary of at least the amount specified in the regulations, the employer may make deductions from the employee's salary for any hours taken as intermittent or reduced FMLA leave within a workweek, without affecting the exempt status of the employee. The fact that an employer provides FMLA leave, whether paid or unpaid, and maintains records required by this part regarding FMLA leave, will not be relevant to the determination whether an employee is exempt within the meaning of 29 CFR part 541.

(b) For an employee paid in accordance with the fluctuating workweek method of payment for overtime (see 29 CFR 778.114), the employer, during the period in which intermittent or reduced schedule FMLA leave is scheduled to be taken, may compensate an employee on an hourly basis and pay only for the hours the employee works, including time and one-half the employee's regular rate for overtime hours. The change to payment on an hourly basis would include the entire period during which the employee is taking intermittent leave, including weeks in which no leave is taken. The hourly rate shall be determined by dividing the employee's weekly salary by the employee's normal or average schedule of hours worked during weeks in which FMLA leave is not being taken. If an employer chooses to follow this exception from the fluctuating workweek method of payment, the employer must do so uniformly, with respect to all employees paid on a fluctuating workweek basis for whom FMLA leave is taken on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule basis. If an employer does not elect to convert the employee's compensation to hourly pay, no deduction may be taken for FMLA leave absences. Once the need for intermittent or reduced scheduled leave is over, the employee may be restored to payment on a fluctuating workweek basis.

(c) This special exception to the salary basis requirements of the FLSA exemption or fluctuating workweek payment requirements applies only to employees of covered employers who are eligible for FMLA leave, and to leave which qualifies as FMLA leave. Hourly or other deductions which are not in accordance with 29 CFR part 541 or 29 CFR 778.114 may not be taken, for example, from the salary of an employee who works for an employer with fewer than 50 employees, or where the employee has not worked long enough to be eligible for FMLA leave without potentially affecting the employee's eligibility for exemption. Nor may deductions which are not permitted by 29 CFR part 541 or 29 CFR 778.114 be taken from such an employee's salary for any leave which does not qualify as FMLA leave, for example, deductions from an employee's pay for leave required under State law or under an employer's policy or practice for a reason which does not qualify as FMLA leave, e.g., leave to care for a grandparent or for a medical condition which does not qualify as a serious health condition or serious injury or illness; or for leave which is more generous than provided by FMLA. Employers may comply with State law or the employer's own policy/practice under these circumstances and maintain the employee's eligibility for exemption or for the fluctuating workweek method of pay by not taking hourly deductions from the employee's pay, in accordance with FLSA requirements, or may take such deductions, treating the employee as an hourly employee and pay overtime premium pay for hours worked over 40 in a workweek.

(a) Generally, FMLA leave is unpaid leave. However, under the circumstances described in this section, FMLA permits an eligible employee to choose to substitute accrued paid leave for FMLA leave. If an employee does not choose to substitute accrued paid leave, the employer may require the employee to substitute accrued paid leave for unpaid FMLA leave. The term substitute means that the paid leave provided by the employer, and accrued pursuant to established policies of the employer, will run concurrently with the unpaid FMLA leave. Accordingly, the employee receives pay pursuant to the employer's applicable paid leave policy during the period of otherwise unpaid FMLA leave. An employee's ability to substitute accrued paid leave is determined by the terms and conditions of the employer's normal leave policy. When an employee chooses, or an employer requires, substitution of accrued paid leave, the employer must inform the employee that the employee must satisfy any procedural requirements of the paid leave policy only in connection with the receipt of such payment. See §825.300(c). If an employee does not comply with the additional requirements in an employer's paid leave policy, the employee is not entitled to substitute accrued paid leave, but the employee remains entitled to take unpaid FMLA leave. Employers may not discriminate against employees on FMLA leave in the administration of their paid leave policies.

(b) If neither the employee nor the employer elects to substitute paid leave for unpaid FMLA leave under the above conditions and circumstances, the employee will remain entitled to all the paid leave which is earned or accrued under the terms of the employer's plan.

(c) If an employee uses paid leave under circumstances which do not qualify as FMLA leave, the leave will not count against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. For example, paid sick leave used for a medical condition which is not a serious health condition or serious injury or illness does not count against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement.

(d) Leave taken pursuant to a disability leave plan would be considered FMLA leave for a serious health condition and counted in the leave entitlement permitted under FMLA if it meets the criteria set forth above in §§825.112 through 825.115. In such cases, the employer may designate the leave as FMLA leave and count the leave against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. Because leave pursuant to a disability benefit plan is not unpaid, the provision for substitution of the employee's accrued paid leave is inapplicable, and neither the employee nor the employer may require the substitution of paid leave. However, employers and employees may agree, where state law permits, to have paid leave supplement the disability plan benefits, such as in the case where a plan only provides replacement income for two-thirds of an employee's salary.

(e) The Act provides that a serious health condition may result from injury to the employee on or off the job. If the employer designates the leave as FMLA leave in accordance with §825.300(d), the leave counts against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. Because the workers' compensation absence is not unpaid, the provision for substitution of the employee's accrued paid leave is not applicable, and neither the employee nor the employer may require the substitution of paid leave. However, employers and employees may agree, where state law permits, to have paid leave supplement workers' compensation benefits, such as in the case where workers' compensation only provides replacement income for two-thirds of an employee's salary. If the health care provider treating the employee for the workers' compensation injury certifies the employee is able to return to a light duty job but is unable to return to the same or equivalent job, the employee may decline the employer's offer of a light duty job. As a result the employee may lose workers' compensation payments, but is entitled to remain on unpaid FMLA leave until the employee's FMLA leave entitlement is exhausted. As of the date workers' compensation benefits cease, the substitution provision becomes applicable and either the employee may elect or the employer may require the use of accrued paid leave. See also §§825.210(f), 825.216(d), 825.220(d), 825.307(a) and 825.702(d)(1) and (2) regarding the relationship between workers' compensation absences and FMLA leave.

(f) Section 7(o) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) permits public employers under prescribed circumstances to substitute compensatory time off accrued at one and one-half hours for each overtime hour worked in lieu of paying cash to an employee when the employee works overtime hours as prescribed by the Act. This section of the FLSA limits the number of hours of compensatory time an employee may accumulate depending upon whether the employee works in fire protection or law enforcement (480 hours) or elsewhere for a public agency (240 hours). In addition, under the FLSA, an employer always has the right to cash out an employee's compensatory time or to require the employee to use the time. Therefore, if an employee requests and is permitted to use accrued compensatory time to receive pay for time taken off for an FMLA reason, or if the employer requires such use pursuant to the FLSA, the time taken may be counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement.

§825.209 Maintenance of employee benefits.

(a) During any FMLA leave, an employer must maintain the employee's coverage under any group health plan (as defined in the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 at 26 U.S.C. 5000(b)(1) on the same conditions as coverage would have been provided if the employee had been continuously employed during the entire leave period. All employers covered by FMLA, including public agencies, are subject to the Act's requirements to maintain health coverage. The definition of group health plan is set forth in §825.102. For purposes of FMLA, the term group health plan shall not include an insurance program providing health coverage under which employees purchase individual policies from insurers provided that:

(1) No contributions are made by the employer;

(2) Participation in the program is completely voluntary for employees;

(3) The sole functions of the employer with respect to the program are, without endorsing the program, to permit the insurer to publicize the program to employees, to collect premiums through payroll deductions and to remit them to the insurer;

(4) The employer receives no consideration in the form of cash or otherwise in connection with the program, other than reasonable compensation, excluding any profit, for administrative services actually rendered in connection with payroll deduction; and,

(5) The premium charged with respect to such coverage does not increase in the event the employment relationship terminates.

(b) The same group health plan benefits provided to an employee prior to taking FMLA leave must be maintained during the FMLA leave. For example, if family member coverage is provided to an employee, family member coverage must be maintained during the FMLA leave. Similarly, benefit coverage during FMLA leave for medical care, surgical care, hospital care, dental care, eye care, mental health counseling, substance abuse treatment, etc., must be maintained during leave if provided in an employer's group health plan, including a supplement to a group health plan, whether or not provided through a flexible spending account or other component of a cafeteria plan.

(c) If an employer provides a new health plan or benefits or changes health benefits or plans while an employee is on FMLA leave, the employee is entitled to the new or changed plan/benefits to the same extent as if the employee were not on leave. For example, if an employer changes a group health plan so that dental care becomes covered under the plan, an employee on FMLA leave must be given the same opportunity as other employees to receive (or obtain) the dental care coverage. Any other plan changes (e.g., in coverage, premiums, deductibles, etc.) which apply to all employees of the workforce would also apply to an employee on FMLA leave.

(d) Notice of any opportunity to change plans or benefits must also be given to an employee on FMLA leave. If the group health plan permits an employee to change from single to family coverage upon the birth of a child or otherwise add new family members, such a change in benefits must be made available while an employee is on FMLA leave. If the employee requests the changed coverage it must be provided by the employer.

(e) An employee may choose not to retain group health plan coverage during FMLA leave. However, when an employee returns from leave, the employee is entitled to be reinstated on the same terms as prior to taking the leave, including family or dependent coverages, without any qualifying period, physical examination, exclusion of pre-existing conditions, etc. See §825.212(c).

(f) Except as required by the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986 (COBRA) and for key employees (as discussed below), an employer's obligation to maintain health benefits during leave (and to restore the employee to the same or equivalent employment) under FMLA ceases if and when the employment relationship would have terminated if the employee had not taken FMLA leave (e.g., if the employee's position is eliminated as part of a nondiscriminatory reduction in force and the employee would not have been transferred to another position); an employee informs the employer of his or her intent not to return from leave (including before starting the leave if the employer is so informed before the leave starts); or the employee fails to return from leave or continues on leave after exhausting his or her FMLA leave entitlement in the 12-month period.

(g) If a key employee (see §825.218) does not return from leave when notified by the employer that substantial or grievous economic injury will result from his or her reinstatement, the employee's entitlement to group health plan benefits continues unless and until the employee advises the employer that the employee does not desire restoration to employment at the end of the leave period, or the FMLA leave entitlement is exhausted, or reinstatement is actually denied.

(h) An employee's entitlement to benefits other than group health benefits during a period of FMLA leave (e.g., holiday pay) is to be determined by the employer's established policy for providing such benefits when the employee is on other forms of leave (paid or unpaid, as appropriate).

§825.210 Employee payment of group health benefit premiums.

(a) Group health plan benefits must be maintained on the same basis as coverage would have been provided if the employee had been continuously employed during the FMLA leave period. Therefore, any share of group health plan premiums which had been paid by the employee prior to FMLA leave must continue to be paid by the employee during the FMLA leave period. If premiums are raised or lowered, the employee would be required to pay the new premium rates. Maintenance of health insurance policies which are not a part of the employer's group health plan, as described in §825.209(a), are the sole responsibility of the employee. The employee and the insurer should make necessary arrangements for payment of premiums during periods of unpaid FMLA leave.

(b) If the FMLA leave is substituted paid leave, the employee's share of premiums must be paid by the method normally used during any paid leave, presumably as a payroll deduction.

(c) If FMLA leave is unpaid, the employer has a number of options for obtaining payment from the employee. The employer may require that payment be made to the employer or to the insurance carrier, but no additional charge may be added to the employee's premium payment for administrative expenses. The employer may require employees to pay their share of premium payments in any of the following ways:

(1) Payment would be due at the same time as it would be made if by payroll deduction;

(2) Payment would be due on the same schedule as payments are made under COBRA;

(3) Payment would be prepaid pursuant to a cafeteria plan at the employee's option;

(4) The employer's existing rules for payment by employees on leave without pay would be followed, provided that such rules do not require prepayment (i.e., prior to the commencement of the leave) of the premiums that will become due during a period of unpaid FMLA leave or payment of higher premiums than if the employee had continued to work instead of taking leave; or,

(5) Another system voluntarily agreed to between the employer and the employee, which may include prepayment of premiums (e.g., through increased payroll deductions when the need for the FMLA leave is foreseeable).

(d) The employer must provide the employee with advance written notice of the terms and conditions under which these payments must be made. See §825.300(c).

(e) An employer may not require more of an employee using unpaid FMLA leave than the employer requires of other employees on leave without pay.

(f) An employee who is receiving payments as a result of a workers' compensation injury must make arrangements with the employer for payment of group health plan benefits when simultaneously taking FMLA leave. See §825.207(e).

§825.211 Maintenance of benefits under multi-employer health plans.

(a) A multi-employer health plan is a plan to which more than one employer is required to contribute, and which is maintained pursuant to one or more collective bargaining agreements between employee organization(s) and the employers.

(b) An employer under a multi-employer plan must continue to make contributions on behalf of an employee using FMLA leave as though the employee had been continuously employed, unless the plan contains an explicit FMLA provision for maintaining coverage such as through pooled contributions by all employers party to the plan.

(c) During the duration of an employee's FMLA leave, coverage by the group health plan, and benefits provided pursuant to the plan, must be maintained at the level of coverage and benefits which were applicable to the employee at the time FMLA leave commenced.

(d) An employee using FMLA leave cannot be required to use banked hours or pay a greater premium than the employee would have been required to pay if the employee had been continuously employed.

(e) As provided in §825.209(f) of this part, group health plan coverage must be maintained for an employee on FMLA leave until:

(1) The employee's FMLA leave entitlement is exhausted;

(2) The employer can show that the employee would have been laid off and the employment relationship terminated; or,

(3) The employee provides unequivocal notice of intent not to return to work.

§825.212 Employee failure to pay health plan premium payments.

(a)(1) In the absence of an established employer policy providing a longer grace period, an employer's obligations to maintain health insurance coverage cease under FMLA if an employee's premium payment is more than 30 days late. In order to drop the coverage for an employee whose premium payment is late, the employer must provide written notice to the employee that the payment has not been received. Such notice must be mailed to the employee at least 15 days before coverage is to cease, advising that coverage will be dropped on a specified date at least 15 days after the date of the letter unless the payment has been received by that date. If the employer has established policies regarding other forms of unpaid leave that provide for the employer to cease coverage retroactively to the date the unpaid premium payment was due, the employer may drop the employee from coverage retroactively in accordance with that policy, provided the 15-day notice was given. In the absence of such a policy, coverage for the employee may be terminated at the end of the 30-day grace period, where the required 15-day notice has been provided.

(2) An employer has no obligation regarding the maintenance of a health insurance policy which is not a group health plan. See §825.209(a).

(3) All other obligations of an employer under FMLA would continue; for example, the employer continues to have an obligation to reinstate an employee upon return from leave.

(b) The employer may recover the employee's share of any premium payments missed by the employee for any FMLA leave period during which the employer maintains health coverage by paying the employee's share after the premium payment is missed.

(c) If coverage lapses because an employee has not made required premium payments, upon the employee's return from FMLA leave the employer must still restore the employee to coverage/benefits equivalent to those the employee would have had if leave had not been taken and the premium payment(s) had not been missed, including family or dependent coverage. See §825.215(d)(1)-(5). In such case, an employee may not be required to meet any qualification requirements imposed by the plan, including any new preexisting condition waiting period, to wait for an open season, or to pass a medical examination to obtain reinstatement of coverage. If an employer terminates an employee's insurance in accordance with this section and fails to restore the employee's health insurance as required by this section upon the employee's return, the employer may be liable for benefits lost by reason of the violation, for other actual monetary losses sustained as a direct result of the violation, and for appropriate equitable relief tailored to the harm suffered.

§825.213 Employer recovery of benefit costs.

(a) In addition to the circumstances discussed in §825.212(b), an employer may recover its share of health plan premiums during a period of unpaid FMLA leave from an employee if the employee fails to return to work after the employee's FMLA leave entitlement has been exhausted or expires, unless the reason the employee does not return is due to:

(1) The continuation, recurrence, or onset of either a serious health condition of the employee or the employee's family member, or a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, which would otherwise entitle the employee to leave under FMLA; or

(2) Other circumstances beyond the employee's control. Examples of other circumstances beyond the employee's control are necessarily broad. They include such situations as where a parent chooses to stay home with a newborn child who has a serious health condition; an employee's spouse is unexpectedly transferred to a job location more than 75 miles from the employee's worksite; a relative or individual other than a covered family member has a serious health condition and the employee is needed to provide care; the employee is laid off while on leave; or, the employee is a key employee who decides not to return to work upon being notified of the employer's intention to deny restoration because of substantial and grievous economic injury to the employer's operations and is not reinstated by the employer. Other circumstances beyond the employee's control would not include a situation where an employee desires to remain with a parent in a distant city even though the parent no longer requires the employee's care, or a parent chooses not to return to work to stay home with a well, newborn child.

(3) When an employee fails to return to work because of the continuation, recurrence, or onset of either a serious health condition of the employee or employee's family member, or a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember, thereby precluding the employer from recovering its (share of) health benefit premium payments made on the employee's behalf during a period of unpaid FMLA leave, the employer may require medical certification of the employee's or the family member's serious health condition or the covered servicemember's serious injury or illness. Such certification is not required unless requested by the employer. The cost of the certification shall be borne by the employee, and the employee is not entitled to be paid for the time or travel costs spent in acquiring the certification. The employee is required to provide medical certification in a timely manner which, for purposes of this section, is within 30 days from the date of the employer's request. For purposes of medical certification, the employee may use the optional DOL forms developed for these purposes. See §§825.306(b), 825.310(c)-(d). If the employer requests medical certification and the employee does not provide such certification in a timely manner (within 30 days), or the reason for not returning to work does not meet the test of other circumstances beyond the employee's control, the employer may recover 100 percent of the health benefit premiums it paid during the period of unpaid FMLA leave.

(b) Under some circumstances an employer may elect to maintain other benefits, e.g., life insurance, disability insurance, etc., by paying the employee's (share of) premiums during periods of unpaid FMLA leave. For example, to ensure the employer can meet its responsibilities to provide equivalent benefits to the employee upon return from unpaid FMLA leave, it may be necessary that premiums be paid continuously to avoid a lapse of coverage. If the employer elects to maintain such benefits during the leave, at the conclusion of leave, the employer is entitled to recover only the costs incurred for paying the employee's share of any premiums whether or not the employee returns to work.

(c) An employee who returns to work for at least 30 calendar days is considered to have returned to work. An employee who transfers directly from taking FMLA leave to retirement, or who retires during the first 30 days after the employee returns to work, is deemed to have returned to work.

(d) When an employee elects or an employer requires paid leave to be substituted for FMLA leave, the employer may not recover its (share of) health insurance or other non-health benefit premiums for any period of FMLA leave covered by paid leave. Because paid leave provided under a plan covering temporary disabilities (including workers' compensation) is not unpaid, recovery of health insurance premiums does not apply to such paid leave.

(e) The amount that self-insured employers may recover is limited to only the employer's share of allowable premiums as would be calculated under COBRA, excluding the two percent fee for administrative costs.

(f) When an employee fails to return to work, any health and non-health benefit premiums which this section of the regulations permits an employer to recover are a debt owed by the non-returning employee to the employer. The existence of this debt caused by the employee's failure to return to work does not alter the employer's responsibilities for health benefit coverage and, under a self-insurance plan, payment of claims incurred during the period of FMLA leave. To the extent recovery is allowed, the employer may recover the costs through deduction from any sums due to the employee (e.g., unpaid wages, vacation pay, profit sharing, etc.), provided such deductions do not otherwise violate applicable

Federal or State wage payment or other laws. Alternatively, the employer may initiate legal action against the employee to recover such costs.

General rule. On return from FMLA leave, an employee is entitled to be returned to the same position the employee held when leave commenced, or to an equivalent position with equivalent benefits, pay, and other terms and conditions of employment. An employee is entitled to such reinstatement even if the employee has been replaced or his or her position has been restructured to accommodate the employee's absence. See also §825.106(e) for the obligations of joint employers.

§825.215 Equivalent position.

(a) Equivalent position. An equivalent position is one that is virtually identical to the employee's former position in terms of pay, benefits and working conditions, including privileges, perquisites and status. It must involve the same or substantially similar duties and responsibilities, which must entail substantially equivalent skill, effort, responsibility, and authority.

(b) Conditions to qualify. If an employee is no longer qualified for the position because of the employee's inability to attend a necessary course, renew a license, fly a minimum number of hours, etc., as a result of the leave, the employee shall be given a reasonable opportunity to fulfill those conditions upon return to work.

(c) Equivalent pay. (1) An employee is entitled to any unconditional pay increases which may have occurred during the FMLA leave period, such as cost of living increases. Pay increases conditioned upon seniority, length of service, or work performed must be granted in accordance with the employer's policy or practice with respect to other employees on an equivalent leave status for a reason that does not qualify as FMLA leave. An employee is entitled to be restored to a position with the same or equivalent pay premiums, such as a shift differential. If an employee departed from a position averaging ten hours of overtime (and corresponding overtime pay) each week, an employee is ordinarily entitled to such a position on return from FMLA leave.

(2) Equivalent pay includes any bonus or payment, whether it is discretionary or non-discretionary, made to employees consistent with the provisions of paragraph (c)(1) of this section. However, if a bonus or other payment is based on the achievement of a specified goal such as hours worked, products sold or perfect attendance, and the employee has not met the goal due to FMLA leave, then the payment may be denied, unless otherwise paid to employees on an equivalent leave status for a reason that does not qualify as FMLA leave. For example, if an employee who used paid vacation leave for a non-FMLA purpose would receive the payment, then the employee who used paid vacation leave for an FMLA-protected purpose also must receive the payment.

(d) Equivalent benefits. Benefits include all benefits provided or made available to employees by an employer, including group life insurance, health insurance, disability insurance, sick leave, annual leave, educational benefits, and pensions, regardless of whether such benefits are provided by a practice or written policy of an employer through an employee benefit plan as defined in Section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, 29 U.S.C. 1002(3).

(1) At the end of an employee's FMLA leave, benefits must be resumed in the same manner and at the same levels as provided when the leave began, and subject to any changes in benefit levels that may have taken place during the period of FMLA leave affecting the entire workforce, unless otherwise elected by the employee. Upon return from FMLA leave, an employee cannot be required to requalify for any benefits the employee enjoyed before FMLA leave began (including family or dependent coverages). For example, if an employee was covered by a life insurance policy before taking leave but is not covered or coverage lapses during the period of unpaid FMLA leave, the employee cannot be required to meet any qualifications, such as taking a physical examination, in order to requalify for life insurance upon return from leave. Accordingly, some employers may find it necessary to modify life insurance and other benefits programs in order to restore employees to equivalent benefits upon return from FMLA leave, make arrangements for continued payment of costs to maintain such benefits during unpaid FMLA leave, or pay these costs subject to recovery from the employee on return from leave. See §825.213(b).

(2) An employee may, but is not entitled to, accrue any additional benefits or seniority during unpaid FMLA leave. Benefits accrued at the time leave began, however, (e.g., paid vacation, sick or personal leave to the extent not substituted for FMLA leave) must be available to an employee upon return from leave.

(3) If, while on unpaid FMLA leave, an employee desires to continue life insurance, disability insurance, or other types of benefits for which he or she typically pays, the employer is required to follow established policies or practices for continuing such benefits for other instances of leave without pay. If the employer has no established policy, the employee and the employer are encouraged to agree upon arrangements before FMLA leave begins.

(4) With respect to pension and other retirement plans, any period of unpaid FMLA leave shall not be treated as or counted toward a break in service for purposes of vesting and eligibility to participate. Also, if the plan requires an employee to be employed on a specific date in order to be credited with a year of service for vesting, contributions or participation purposes, an employee on unpaid FMLA leave on that date shall be deemed to have been employed on that date. However, unpaid FMLA leave periods need not be treated as credited service for purposes of benefit accrual, vesting and eligibility to participate.

(5) Employees on unpaid FMLA leave are to be treated as if they continued to work for purposes of changes to benefit plans. They are entitled to changes in benefits plans, except those which may be dependent upon seniority or accrual during the leave period, immediately upon return from leave or to the same extent they would have qualified if no leave had been taken. For example, if the benefit plan is predicated on a pre-established number of hours worked each year and the employee does not have sufficient hours as a result of taking unpaid FMLA leave, the benefit is lost. (In this regard, §825.209 addresses health benefits.)

(e) Equivalent terms and conditions of employment. An equivalent position must have substantially similar duties, conditions, responsibilities, privileges and status as the employee's original position.

(1) The employee must be reinstated to the same or a geographically proximate worksite (i.e., one that does not involve a significant increase in commuting time or distance) from where the employee had previously been employed. If the employee's original worksite has been closed, the employee is entitled to the same rights as if the employee had not been on leave when the worksite closed. For example, if an employer transfers all employees from a closed worksite to a new worksite in a different city, the employee on leave is also entitled to transfer under the same conditions as if he or she had continued to be employed.

(2) The employee is ordinarily entitled to return to the same shift or the same or an equivalent work schedule.

(3) The employee must have the same or an equivalent opportunity for bonuses, profit-sharing, and other similar discretionary and non-discretionary payments.

(4) FMLA does not prohibit an employer from accommodating an employee's request to be restored to a different shift, schedule, or position which better suits the employee's personal needs on return from leave, or to offer a promotion to a better position. However, an employee cannot be induced by the employer to accept a different position against the employee's wishes.

(f) De minimis exception. The requirement that an employee be restored to the same or equivalent job with the same or equivalent pay, benefits, and terms and conditions of employment does not extend to de minimis, intangible, or unmeasurable aspects of the job.

§825.216 Limitations on an employee's right to reinstatement.

(a) An employee has no greater right to reinstatement or to other benefits and conditions of employment than if the employee had been continuously employed during the FMLA leave period. An employer must be able to show that an employee would not otherwise have been employed at the time reinstatement is requested in order to deny restoration to employment. For example:

(1) If an employee is laid off during the course of taking FMLA leave and employment is terminated, the employer's responsibility to continue FMLA leave, maintain group health plan benefits and restore the employee cease at the time the employee is laid off, provided the employer has no continuing obligations under a collective bargaining agreement or otherwise. An employer would have the burden of proving that an employee would have been laid off during the FMLA leave period and, therefore, would not be entitled to restoration. Restoration to a job slated for lay-off when the employee's original position is not would not meet the requirements of an equivalent position.

(2) If a shift has been eliminated, or overtime has been decreased, an employee would not be entitled to return to work that shift or the original overtime hours upon restoration. However, if a position on, for example, a night shift has been filled by another employee, the employee is entitled to return to the same shift on which employed before taking FMLA leave.

(3) If an employee was hired for a specific term or only to perform work on a discrete project, the employer has no obligation to restore the employee if the employment term or project is over and the employer would not otherwise have continued to employ the employee. On the other hand, if an employee was hired to perform work on a contract, and after that contract period the contract was awarded to another contractor, the successor contractor may be required to restore the employee if it is a successor employer. See §825.107.

(b) In addition to the circumstances explained above, an employer may deny job restoration to salaried eligible employees (key employees, as defined in §825.217(c)), if such denial is necessary to prevent substantial and grievous economic injury to the operations of the employer; or may delay restoration to an employee who fails to provide a fitness-for-duty certificate to return to work under the conditions described in §825.312.

(c) If the employee is unable to perform an essential function of the position because of a physical or mental condition, including the continuation of a serious health condition or an injury or illness also covered by workers' compensation, the employee has no right to restoration to another position under the FMLA. The employer's obligations may, however, be governed by the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), as amended. See §825.702, state leave laws, or workers' compensation laws.

(d) An employee who fraudulently obtains FMLA leave from an employer is not protected by FMLA's job restoration or maintenance of health benefits provisions.

(e) If the employer has a uniformly-applied policy governing outside or supplemental employment, such a policy may continue to apply to an employee while on FMLA leave. An employer which does not have such a policy may not deny benefits to which an employee is entitled under FMLA on this basis unless the FMLA leave was fraudulently obtained as in paragraph (d) of this section.

§825.217 Key employee, general rule.

(a) A key employee is a salaried FMLA-eligible employee who is among the highest paid 10 percent of all the employees employed by the employer within 75 miles of the employee's worksite.

(b) The term salaried means paid on a salary basis, as defined in 29 CFR 541.602. This is the Department of Labor regulation defining employees who may qualify as exempt from the minimum wage and overtime requirements of the FLSA as executive, administrative, professional, and computer employees.

(c) A key employee must be among the highest paid 10 percent of all the employees—both salaried and non-salaried, eligible and ineligible—who are employed by the employer within 75 miles of the worksite.

(1) In determining which employees are among the highest paid 10 percent, year-to-date earnings are divided by weeks worked by the employee (including weeks in which paid leave was taken). Earnings include wages, premium pay, incentive pay, and non-discretionary and discretionary bonuses. Earnings do not include incentives whose value is determined at some future date, e.g., stock options, or benefits or perquisites.

(2) The determination of whether a salaried employee is among the highest paid 10 percent shall be made at the time the employee gives notice of the need for leave. No more than 10 percent of the employer's employees within 75 miles of the worksite may be key employees.

§825.218 Substantial and grievous economic injury.

(a) In order to deny restoration to a key employee, an employer must determine that the restoration of the employee to employment will cause substantial and grievous economic injury to the operations of the employer, not whether the absence of the employee will cause such substantial and grievous injury.

(b) An employer may take into account its ability to replace on a temporary basis (or temporarily do without) the employee on FMLA leave. If permanent replacement is unavoidable, the cost of then reinstating the employee can be considered in evaluating whether substantial and grievous economic injury will occur from restoration; in other words, the effect on the operations of the company of reinstating the employee in an equivalent position.

(c) A precise test cannot be set for the level of hardship or injury to the employer which must be sustained. If the reinstatement of a key employee threatens the economic viability of the firm, that would constitute substantial and grievous economic injury. A lesser injury which causes substantial, long-term economic injury would also be sufficient. Minor inconveniences and costs that the employer would experience in the normal course of doing business would certainly not constitute substantial and grievous economic injury.

(d) FMLA's substantial and grievous economic injury standard is different from and more stringent than the undue hardship test under the ADA. See also §825.702.

§825.219 Rights of a key employee.

(a) An employer who believes that reinstatement may be denied to a key employee, must give written notice to the employee at the time the employee gives notice of the need for FMLA leave (or when FMLA leave commences, if earlier) that he or she qualifies as a key employee. At the same time, the employer must also fully inform the employee of the potential consequences with respect to reinstatement and maintenance of health benefits if the employer should determine that substantial and grievous economic injury to the employer's operations will result if the employee is reinstated from FMLA leave. If such notice cannot be given immediately because of the need to determine whether the employee is a key employee, it shall be given as soon as practicable after being notified of a need for leave (or the commencement of leave, if earlier). It is expected that in most circumstances there will be no desire that an employee be denied restoration after FMLA leave and, therefore, there would be no need to provide such notice. However, an employer who fails to provide such timely notice will lose its right to deny restoration even if substantial and grievous economic injury will result from reinstatement.

(b) As soon as an employer makes a good faith determination, based on the facts available, that substantial and grievous economic injury to its operations will result if a key employee who has given notice of the need for FMLA leave or is using FMLA leave is reinstated, the employer shall notify the employee in writing of its determination, that it cannot deny FMLA leave, and that it intends to deny restoration to employment on completion of the FMLA leave. It is anticipated that an employer will ordinarily be able to give such notice prior to the employee starting leave. The employer must serve this notice either in person or by certified mail. This notice must explain the basis for the employer's finding that substantial and grievous economic injury will result, and, if leave has commenced, must provide the employee a reasonable time in which to return to work, taking into account the circumstances, such as the length of the leave and the urgency of the need for the employee to return.

(c) If an employee on leave does not return to work in response to the employer's notification of intent to deny restoration, the employee continues to be entitled to maintenance of health benefits and the employer may not recover its cost of health benefit premiums. A key employee's rights under FMLA continue unless and until the employee either gives notice that he or she no longer wishes to return to work, or the employer actually denies reinstatement at the conclusion of the leave period.

(d) After notice to an employee has been given that substantial and grievous economic injury will result if the employee is reinstated to employment, an employee is still entitled to request reinstatement at the end of the leave period even if the employee did not return to work in response to the employer's notice. The employer must then again determine whether there will be substantial and grievous economic injury from reinstatement, based on the facts at that time. If it is determined that substantial and grievous economic injury will result, the employer shall notify the employee in writing (in person or by certified mail) of the denial of restoration.

§825.220 Protection for employees who request leave or otherwise assert FMLA rights.

(a) The FMLA prohibits interference with an employee's rights under the law, and with legal proceedings or inquiries relating to an employee's rights. More specifically, the law contains the following employee protections:

(1) An employer is prohibited from interfering with, restraining, or denying the exercise of (or attempts to exercise) any rights provided by the Act.

(2) An employer is prohibited from discharging or in any other way discriminating against any person (whether or not an employee) for opposing or complaining about any unlawful practice under the Act.

(3) All persons (whether or not employers) are prohibited from discharging or in any other way discriminating against any person (whether or not an employee) because that person has—

(i) Filed any charge, or has instituted (or caused to be instituted) any proceeding under or related to this Act;

(ii) Given, or is about to give, any information in connection with an inquiry or proceeding relating to a right under this Act;

(iii) Testified, or is about to testify, in any inquiry or proceeding relating to a right under this Act.

(b) Any violations of the Act or of these regulations constitute interfering with, restraining, or denying the exercise of rights provided by the Act. An employer may be liable for compensation and benefits lost by reason of the violation, for other actual monetary losses sustained as a direct result of the violation, and for appropriate equitable or other relief, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, or any other relief tailored to the harm suffered. See §825.400(c). Interfering with the exercise of an employee's rights would include, for example, not only refusing to authorize FMLA leave, but discouraging an employee from using such leave. It would also include manipulation by a covered employer to avoid responsibilities under FMLA, for example:

(1) Transferring employees from one worksite to another for the purpose of reducing worksites, or to keep worksites, below the 50-employee threshold for employee eligibility under the Act;

(2) Changing the essential functions of the job in order to preclude the taking of leave;

(3) Reducing hours available to work in order to avoid employee eligibility.

(c) The Act's prohibition against interference prohibits an employer from discriminating or retaliating against an employee or prospective employee for having exercised or attempted to exercise FMLA rights. For example, if an employee on leave without pay would otherwise be entitled to full benefits (other than health benefits), the same benefits would be required to be provided to an employee on unpaid FMLA leave. By the same token, employers cannot use the taking of FMLA leave as a negative factor in employment actions, such as hiring, promotions or disciplinary actions; nor can FMLA leave be counted under no fault attendance policies. See §825.215.

(d) Employees cannot waive, nor may employers induce employees to waive, their prospective rights under FMLA. For example, employees (or their collective bargaining representatives) cannot trade off the right to take FMLA leave against some other benefit offered by the employer. This does not prevent the settlement or release of FMLA claims by employees based on past employer conduct without the approval of the Department of Labor or a court. Nor does it prevent an employee's voluntary and uncoerced acceptance (not as a condition of employment) of a light duty assignment while recovering from a serious health condition. See §825.702(d). An employee's acceptance of such light duty assignment does not constitute a waiver of the employee's prospective rights, including the right to be restored to the same position the employee held at the time the employee's FMLA leave commenced or to an equivalent position. The employee's right to restoration, however, ceases at the end of the applicable 12-month FMLA leave year.

(e) Individuals, and not merely employees, are protected from retaliation for opposing (e.g., filing a complaint about) any practice which is unlawful under the Act. They are similarly protected if they oppose any practice which they reasonably believe to be a violation of the Act or regulations.

Subpart C—Employee and Employer Rights and Obligations Under the Act

§825.300 Employer notice requirements.

(a) General notice. (1) Every employer covered by the FMLA is required to post and keep posted on its premises, in conspicuous places where employees are employed, a notice explaining the Act's provisions and providing information concerning the procedures for filing complaints of violations of the Act with the Wage and Hour Division. The notice must be posted prominently where it can be readily seen by employees and applicants for employment. The poster and the text must be large enough to be easily read and contain fully legible text. Electronic posting is sufficient to meet this posting requirement as long as it otherwise meets the requirements of this section. An employer that willfully violates the posting requirement may be assessed a civil money penalty by the Wage and Hour Division not to exceed $166 for each separate offense.

(2) Covered employers must post this general notice even if no employees are eligible for FMLA leave.

(3) If an FMLA-covered employer has any eligible employees, it shall also provide this general notice to each employee by including the notice in employee handbooks or other written guidance to employees concerning employee benefits or leave rights, if such written materials exist, or by distributing a copy of the general notice to each new employee upon hiring. In either case, distribution may be accomplished electronically.

(4) To meet the requirements of paragraph (a)(3) of this section, employers may duplicate the text of the Department's prototype notice (WHD Publication 1420) or may use another format so long as the information provided includes, at a minimum, all of the information contained in that notice. Where an employer's workforce is comprised of a significant portion of workers who are not literate in English, the employer shall provide the general notice in a language in which the employees are literate. Prototypes are available from the nearest office of the Wage and Hour Division or on the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. Employers furnishing FMLA notices to sensory-impaired individuals must also comply with all applicable requirements under Federal or State law.

(b) Eligibility notice. (1) When an employee requests FMLA leave, or when the employer acquires knowledge that an employee's leave may be for an FMLA-qualifying reason, the employer must notify the employee of the employee's eligibility to take FMLA leave within five business days, absent extenuating circumstances. See §825.110 for definition of an eligible employee and §825.801 for special hours of service eligibility requirements for airline flight crews. Employee eligibility is determined (and notice must be provided) at the commencement of the first instance of leave for each FMLA-qualifying reason in the applicable 12-month period. See §§825.127(c) and 825.200(b). All FMLA absences for the same qualifying reason are considered a single leave and employee eligibility as to that reason for leave does not change during the applicable 12-month period.

(2) The eligibility notice must state whether the employee is eligible for FMLA leave as defined in §825.110. If the employee is not eligible for FMLA leave, the notice must state at least one reason why the employee is not eligible, including as applicable the number of months the employee has been employed by the employer, the hours of service with the employer during the 12-month period, and whether the employee is employed at a worksite where 50 or more employees are employed by the employer within 75 miles of that worksite. Notification of eligibility may be oral or in writing; employers may use optional Form WH-381 (Notice of Eligibility and Rights and Responsibility) to provide such notification to employees. Prototypes are available from the nearest office of the Wage and Hour Division or on the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. The employer is obligated to translate this notice in any situation in which it is obligated to do so in §825.300(a)(4).

(3) If, at the time an employee provides notice of a subsequent need for FMLA leave during the applicable 12-month period due to a different FMLA-qualifying reason, and the employee's eligibility status has not changed, no additional eligibility notice is required. If, however, the employee's eligibility status has changed (e.g., if the employee has not met the hours of service requirement in the 12 months preceding the commencement of leave for the subsequent qualifying reason or the size of the workforce at the worksite has dropped below 50 employees), the employer must notify the employee of the change in eligibility status within five business days, absent extenuating circumstances.

(c) Rights and responsibilities notice. (1) Employers shall provide written notice detailing the specific expectations and obligations of the employee and explaining any consequences of a failure to meet these obligations. The employer is obligated to translate this notice in any situation in which it is obligated to do so in §825.300(a)(4). This notice shall be provided to the employee each time the eligibility notice is provided pursuant to paragraph (b) of this section. If leave has already begun, the notice should be mailed to the employee's address of record. Such specific notice must include, as appropriate:

(i) That the leave may be designated and counted against the employee's annual FMLA leave entitlement if qualifying (see §§825.300(c) and 825.301) and the applicable 12-month period for FMLA entitlement (see §§825.127(c), 825.200(b), (f), and (g));

(ii) Any requirements for the employee to furnish certification of a serious health condition, serious injury or illness, or qualifying exigency arising out of covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and the consequences of failing to do so (see §§825.305, 825.309, 825.310, 825.313);

(iii) The employee's right to substitute paid leave, whether the employer will require the substitution of paid leave, the conditions related to any substitution, and the employee's entitlement to take unpaid FMLA leave if the employee does not meet the conditions for paid leave (see §825.207);

(iv) Any requirement for the employee to make any premium payments to maintain health benefits and the arrangements for making such payments (see §825.210), and the possible consequences of failure to make such payments on a timely basis (i.e., the circumstances under which coverage may lapse);

(v) The employee's status as a key employee and the potential consequence that restoration may be denied following FMLA leave, explaining the conditions required for such denial (see §825.218);

(vi) The employee's rights to maintenance of benefits during the FMLA leave and restoration to the same or an equivalent job upon return from FMLA leave (see §§825.214 and 825.604); and

(vii) The employee's potential liability for payment of health insurance premiums paid by the employer during the employee's unpaid FMLA leave if the employee fails to return to work after taking FMLA leave (see §825.213).

(2) The notice of rights and responsibilities may include other information—e.g., whether the employer will require periodic reports of the employee's status and intent to return to work—but is not required to do so.

(3) The notice of rights and responsibilities may be accompanied by any required certification form.

(4) If the specific information provided by the notice of rights and responsibilities changes, the employer shall, within five business days of receipt of the employee's first notice of need for leave subsequent to any change, provide written notice referencing the prior notice and setting forth any of the information in the notice of rights and responsibilities that has changed. For example, if the initial leave period was paid leave and the subsequent leave period would be unpaid leave, the employer may need to give notice of the arrangements for making premium payments.

(5) Employers are also expected to responsively answer questions from employees concerning their rights and responsibilities under the FMLA.

(6) A prototype notice of rights and responsibilities may be obtained from local offices of the Wage and Hour Division or from the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. Employers may adapt the prototype notice as appropriate to meet these notice requirements. The notice of rights and responsibilities may be distributed electronically so long as it otherwise meets the requirements of this section.

(d) Designation notice. (1) The employer is responsible in all circumstances for designating leave as FMLA-qualifying, and for giving notice of the designation to the employee as provided in this section. When the employer has enough information to determine whether the leave is being taken for a FMLA-qualifying reason (e.g., after receiving a certification), the employer must notify the employee whether the leave will be designated and will be counted as FMLA leave within five business days absent extenuating circumstances. Only one notice of designation is required for each FMLA-qualifying reason per applicable 12-month period, regardless of whether the leave taken due to the qualifying reason will be a continuous block of leave or intermittent or reduced schedule leave. If the employer determines that the leave will not be designated as FMLA-qualifying (e.g., if the leave is not for a reason covered by FMLA or the FMLA leave entitlement has been exhausted), the employer must notify the employee of that determination. If the employer requires paid leave to be substituted for unpaid FMLA leave, or that paid leave taken under an existing leave plan be counted as FMLA leave, the employer must inform the employee of this designation at the time of designating the FMLA leave.

(2) If the employer has sufficient information to designate the leave as FMLA leave immediately after receiving notice of the employee's need for leave, the employer may provide the employee with the designation notice at that time.

(3) If the employer will require the employee to present a fitness-for-duty certification to be restored to employment, the employer must provide notice of such requirement with the designation notice. If the employer will require that the fitness-for-duty certification address the employee's ability to perform the essential functions of the employee's position, the employer must so indicate in the designation notice, and must include a list of the essential functions of the employee's position. See §825.312. If the employer handbook or other written documents (if any) describing the employer's leave policies clearly provide that a fitness-for-duty certification will be required in specific circumstances (e.g., by stating that fitness-for-duty certification will be required in all cases of back injuries for employees in a certain occupation), the employer is not required to provide written notice of the requirement with the designation notice, but must provide oral notice no later than with the designation notice.

(4) The designation notice must be in writing. A prototype designation notice may be obtained from local offices of the Wage and Hour Division or from the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. If the leave is not designated as FMLA leave because it does not meet the requirements of the Act, the notice to the employee that the leave is not designated as FMLA leave may be in the form of a simple written statement.

(5) If the information provided by the employer to the employee in the designation notice changes (e.g., the employee exhausts the FMLA leave entitlement), the employer shall provide, within five business days of receipt of the employee's first notice of need for leave subsequent to any change, written notice of the change.

(6) The employer must notify the employee of the amount of leave counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. If the amount of leave needed is known at the time the employer designates the leave as FMLA-qualifying, the employer must notify the employee of the number of hours, days, or weeks that will be counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement in the designation notice. If it is not possible to provide the hours, days, or weeks that will be counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement (such as in the case of unforeseeable intermittent leave), then the employer must provide notice of the amount of leave counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement upon the request by the employee, but no more often than once in a 30-day period and only if leave was taken in that period. The notice of the amount of leave counted against the employee's FMLA entitlement may be oral or in writing. If such notice is oral, it shall be confirmed in writing, no later than the following payday (unless the payday is less than one week after the oral notice, in which case the notice must be no later than the subsequent payday). Such written notice may be in any form, including a notation on the employee's pay stub.

(e) Consequences of failing to provide notice. Failure to follow the notice requirements set forth in this section may constitute an interference with, restraint, or denial of the exercise of an employee's FMLA rights. An employer may be liable for compensation and benefits lost by reason of the violation, for other actual monetary losses sustained as a direct result of the violation, and for appropriate equitable or other relief, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, or any other relief tailored to the harm suffered See §825.400(c).

§825.301 Designation of FMLA leave.

(a) Employer responsibilities. The employer's decision to designate leave as FMLA-qualifying must be based only on information received from the employee or the employee's spokesperson (e.g., if the employee is incapacitated, the employee's spouse, adult child, parent, doctor, etc., may provide notice to the employer of the need to take FMLA leave).

In any circumstance where the employer does not have sufficient information about the reason for an employee's use of leave, the employer should inquire further of the employee or the spokesperson to ascertain whether leave is potentially FMLA-qualifying. Once the employer has acquired knowledge that the leave is being taken for a FMLA-qualifying reason, the employer must notify the employee as provided in §825.300(d).

(b) Employee responsibilities. An employee giving notice of the need for FMLA leave does not need to expressly assert rights under the Act or even mention the FMLA to meet his or her obligation to provide notice, though the employee would need to state a qualifying reason for the needed leave and otherwise satisfy the notice requirements set forth in §825.302 or §825.303 depending on whether the need for leave is foreseeable or unforeseeable. An employee giving notice of the need for FMLA leave must explain the reasons for the needed leave so as to allow the employer to determine whether the leave qualifies under the Act. If the employee fails to explain the reasons, leave may be denied. In many cases, in explaining the reasons for a request to use leave, especially when the need for the leave was unexpected or unforeseen, an employee will provide sufficient information for the employer to designate the leave as FMLA leave. An employee using accrued paid leave may in some cases not spontaneously explain the reasons or their plans for using their accrued leave. However, if an employee requesting to use paid leave for a FMLA-qualifying reason does not explain the reason for the leave and the employer denies the employee's request, the employee will need to provide sufficient information to establish a FMLA-qualifying reason for the needed leave so that the employer is aware that the leave may not be denied and may designate that the paid leave be appropriately counted against (substituted for) the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. Similarly, an employee using accrued paid vacation leave who seeks an extension of unpaid leave for a FMLA-qualifying reason will need to state the reason. If this is due to an event which occurred during the period of paid leave, the employer may count the leave used after the FMLA-qualifying reason against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement.

(c) Disputes. If there is a dispute between an employer and an employee as to whether leave qualifies as FMLA leave, it should be resolved through discussions between the employee and the employer. Such discussions and the decision must be documented.

(d) Retroactive designation. If an employer does not designate leave as required by §825.300, the employer may retroactively designate leave as FMLA leave with appropriate notice to the employee as required by §825.300 provided that the employer's failure to timely designate leave does not cause harm or injury to the employee. In all cases where leave would qualify for FMLA protections, an employer and an employee can mutually agree that leave be retroactively designated as FMLA leave.

(e) Remedies. If an employer's failure to timely designate leave in accordance with §825.300 causes the employee to suffer harm, it may constitute an interference with, restraint of, or denial of the exercise of an employee's FMLA rights. An employer may be liable for compensation and benefits lost by reason of the violation, for other actual monetary losses sustained as a direct result of the violation, and for appropriate equitable or other relief, including employment, reinstatement, promotion, or any other relief tailored to the harm suffered. See §825.400(c). For example, if an employer that was put on notice that an employee needed FMLA leave failed to designate the leave properly, but the employee's own serious health condition prevented him or her from returning to work during that time period regardless of the designation, an employee may not be able to show that the employee suffered harm as a result of the employer's actions. However, if an employee took leave to provide care for a son or daughter with a serious health condition believing it would not count toward his or her FMLA entitlement, and the employee planned to later use that FMLA leave to provide care for a spouse who would need assistance when recovering from surgery planned for a later date, the employee may be able to show that harm has occurred as a result of the employer's failure to designate properly. The employee might establish this by showing that he or she would have arranged for an alternative caregiver for the seriously ill son or daughter if the leave had been designated timely.

§825.302 Employee notice requirements for foreseeable FMLA leave.

(a) Timing of notice. An employee must provide the employer at least 30 days advance notice before FMLA leave is to begin if the need for the leave is foreseeable based on an expected birth, placement for adoption or foster care, planned medical treatment for a serious health condition of the employee or of a family member, or the planned medical treatment for a serious injury or illness of a covered servicemember. If 30 days notice is not practicable, such as because of a lack of knowledge of approximately when leave will be required to begin, a change in circumstances, or a medical emergency, notice must be given as soon as practicable. For example, an employee's health condition may require leave to commence earlier than anticipated before the birth of a child. Similarly, little opportunity for notice may be given before placement for adoption. For foreseeable leave due to a qualifying exigency notice must be provided as soon as practicable, regardless of how far in advance such leave is foreseeable. Whether FMLA leave is to be continuous or is to be taken intermittently or on a reduced schedule basis, notice need only be given one time, but the employee shall advise the employer as soon as practicable if dates of scheduled leave change or are extended, or were initially unknown. In those cases where the employee is required to provide at least 30 days notice of foreseeable leave and does not do so, the employee shall explain the reasons why such notice was not practicable upon a request from the employer for such information.

(b) As soon as practicable means as soon as both possible and practical, taking into account all of the facts and circumstances in the individual case. When an employee becomes aware of a need for FMLA leave less than 30 days in advance, it should be practicable for the employee to provide notice of the need for leave either the same day or the next business day. In all cases, however, the determination of when an employee could practicably provide notice must take into account the individual facts and circumstances.

(c) Content of notice. An employee shall provide at least verbal notice sufficient to make the employer aware that the employee needs FMLA-qualifying leave, and the anticipated timing and duration of the leave. Depending on the situation, such information may include that a condition renders the employee unable to perform the functions of the job; that the employee is pregnant or has been hospitalized overnight; whether the employee or the employee's family member is under the continuing care of a health care provider; if the leave is due to a qualifying exigency, that a military member is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty), and that the requested leave is for one of the reasons listed in §825.126(b); if the leave is for a family member, that the condition renders the family member unable to perform daily activities, or that the family member is a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness; and the anticipated duration of the absence, if known. When an employee seeks leave for the first time for a FMLA-qualifying reason, the employee need not expressly assert rights under the FMLA or even mention the FMLA. When an employee seeks leave due to a FMLA-qualifying reason, for which the employer has previously provided FMLA-protected leave, the employee must specifically reference the qualifying reason for leave or the need for FMLA leave. In all cases, the employer should inquire further of the employee if it is necessary to have more information about whether FMLA leave is being sought by the employee, and obtain the necessary details of the leave to be taken. In the case of medical conditions, the employer may find it necessary to inquire further to determine if the leave is because of a serious health condition and may request medical certification to support the need for such leave. See §825.305. An employer may also request certification to support the need for leave for a qualifying exigency or for military caregiver leave. See §§825.309, 825.310). When an employee has been previously certified for leave due to more than one FMLA-qualifying reason, the employer may need to inquire further to determine for which qualifying reason the leave is needed. An employee has an obligation to respond to an employer's questions designed to determine whether an absence is potentially FMLA-qualifying. Failure to respond to reasonable employer inquiries regarding the leave request may result in denial of FMLA protection if the employer is unable to determine whether the leave is FMLA-qualifying.

(d) Complying with employer policy. An employer may require an employee to comply with the employer's usual and customary notice and procedural requirements for requesting leave, absent unusual circumstances. For example, an employer may require that written notice set forth the reasons for the requested leave, the anticipated duration of the leave, and the anticipated start of the leave. An employee also may be required by an employer's policy to contact a specific individual. Unusual circumstances would include situations such as when an employee is unable to comply with the employer's policy that requests for leave should be made by contacting a specific number because on the day the employee needs to provide notice of his or her need for FMLA leave there is no one to answer the call-in number and the voice mail box is full. Where an employee does not comply with the employer's usual notice and procedural requirements, and no unusual circumstances justify the failure to comply, FMLA-protected leave may be delayed or denied. However, FMLA-protected leave may not be delayed or denied where the employer's policy requires notice to be given sooner than set forth in paragraph (a) of this section and the employee provides timely notice as set forth in paragraph (a) of this section.

(e) Scheduling planned medical treatment. When planning medical treatment, the employee must consult with the employer and make a reasonable effort to schedule the treatment so as not to disrupt unduly the employer's operations, subject to the approval of the health care provider. Employees are ordinarily expected to consult with their employers prior to the scheduling of treatment in order to work out a treatment schedule which best suits the needs of both the employer and the employee. For example, if an employee who provides notice of the need to take FMLA leave on an intermittent basis for planned medical treatment neglects to consult with the employer to make a reasonable effort to arrange the schedule of treatments so as not to unduly disrupt the employer's operations, the employer may initiate discussions with the employee and require the employee to attempt to make such arrangements, subject to the approval of the health care provider. See §§825.203 and 825.205.

(f) Intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule must be medically necessary due to a serious health condition or a serious injury or illness. An employee shall advise the employer, upon request, of the reasons why the intermittent/reduced leave schedule is necessary and of the schedule for treatment, if applicable. The employee and employer shall attempt to work out a schedule for such leave that meets the employee's needs without unduly disrupting the employer's operations, subject to the approval of the health care provider.

(g) An employer may waive employees' FMLA notice requirements. See §825.304.

§825.303 Employee notice requirements for unforeseeable FMLA leave.

(a) Timing of notice. When the approximate timing of the need for leave is not foreseeable, an employee must provide notice to the employer as soon as practicable under the facts and circumstances of the particular case. It generally should be practicable for the employee to provide notice of leave that is unforeseeable within the time prescribed by the employer's usual and customary notice requirements applicable to such leave. See §825.303(c). Notice may be given by the employee's spokesperson (e.g., spouse, adult family member, or other responsible party) if the employee is unable to do so personally. For example, if an employee's child has a severe asthma attack and the employee takes the child to the emergency room, the employee would not be required to leave his or her child in order to report the absence while the child is receiving emergency treatment. However, if the child's asthma attack required only the use of an inhaler at home followed by a period of rest, the employee would be expected to call the employer promptly after ensuring the child has used the inhaler.

(b) Content of notice. An employee shall provide sufficient information for an employer to reasonably determine whether the FMLA may apply to the leave request. Depending on the situation, such information may include that a condition renders the employee unable to perform the functions of the job; that the employee is pregnant or has been hospitalized overnight; whether the employee or the employee's family member is under the continuing care of a health care provider; if the leave is due to a qualifying exigency, that a military member is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty), that the requested leave is for one of the reasons listed in §825.126(b), and the anticipated duration of the absence; or if the leave is for a family member that the condition renders the family member unable to perform daily activities or that the family member is a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness; and the anticipated duration of the absence, if known. When an employee seeks leave for the first time for a FMLA-qualifying reason, the employee need not expressly assert rights under the FMLA or even mention the FMLA. When an employee seeks leave due to a qualifying reason, for which the employer has previously provided the employee FMLA-protected leave, the employee must specifically reference either the qualifying reason for leave or the need for FMLA leave. Calling in "sick" without providing more information will not be considered sufficient notice to trigger an employer's obligations under the Act. The employer will be expected to obtain any additional required information through informal means. An employee has an obligation to respond to an employer's questions designed to determine whether an absence is potentially FMLA-qualifying. Failure to respond to reasonable employer inquiries regarding the leave request may result in denial of FMLA protection if the employer is unable to determine whether the leave is FMLA-qualifying.

(c) Complying with employer policy. When the need for leave is not foreseeable, an employee must comply with the employer's usual and customary notice and procedural requirements for requesting leave, absent unusual circumstances. For example, an employer may require employees to call a designated number or a specific individual to request leave. However, if an employee requires emergency medical treatment, he or she would not be required to follow the call-in procedure until his or her condition is stabilized and he or she has access to, and is able to use, a phone. Similarly, in the case of an emergency requiring leave because of a FMLA-qualifying reason, written advance notice pursuant to an employer's internal rules and procedures may not be required when FMLA leave is involved. If an employee does not comply with the employer's usual notice and procedural requirements, and no unusual circumstances justify the failure to comply, FMLA-protected leave may be delayed or denied.

§825.304 Employee failure to provide notice.

(a) Proper notice required. In all cases, in order for the onset of an employee's FMLA leave to be delayed due to lack of required notice, it must be clear that the employee had actual notice of the FMLA notice requirements. This condition would be satisfied by the employer's proper posting of the required notice at the worksite where the employee is employed and the employer's provision of the required notice in either an employee handbook or employee distribution, as required by §825.300.

(b) Foreseeable leave—30 days. When the need for FMLA leave is foreseeable at least 30 days in advance and an employee fails to give timely advance notice with no reasonable excuse, the employer may delay FMLA coverage until 30 days after the date the employee provides notice. The need for leave and the approximate date leave would be taken must have been clearly foreseeable to the employee 30 days in advance of the leave. For example, knowledge that an employee would receive a telephone call about the availability of a child for adoption at some unknown point in the future would not be sufficient to establish the leave was clearly foreseeable 30 days in advance.

(c) Foreseeable leave—less than 30 days. When the need for FMLA leave is foreseeable fewer than 30 days in advance and an employee fails to give notice as soon as practicable under the particular facts and circumstances, the extent to which an employer may delay FMLA coverage for leave depends on the facts of the particular case. For example, if an employee reasonably should have given the employer two weeks notice but instead only provided one week notice, then the employer may delay FMLA-protected leave for one week (thus, if the employer elects to delay FMLA coverage and the employee nonetheless takes leave one week after providing the notice (i.e., a week before the two week notice period has been met) the leave will not be FMLA-protected).

(d) Unforeseeable leave. When the need for FMLA leave is unforeseeable and an employee fails to give notice in accordance with §825.303, the extent to which an employer may delay FMLA coverage for leave depends on the facts of the particular case. For example, if it would have been practicable for an employee to have given the employer notice of the need for leave very soon after the need arises consistent with the employer's policy, but instead the employee provided notice two days after the leave began, then the employer may delay FMLA coverage of the leave by two days.

(e) Waiver of notice. An employer may waive employees' FMLA notice obligations or the employer's own internal rules on leave notice requirements. If an employer does not waive the employee's obligations under its internal leave rules, the employer may take appropriate action under its internal rules and procedures for failure to follow its usual and customary notification rules, absent unusual circumstances, as long as the actions are taken in a manner that does not discriminate against employees taking FMLA leave and the rules are not inconsistent with §825.303(a).

§825.305 Certification, general rule.

(a) General. An employer may require that an employee's leave to care for the employee's covered family member with a serious health condition, or due to the employee's own serious health condition that makes the employee unable to perform one or more of the essential functions of the employee's position, be supported by a certification issued by the health care provider of the employee or the employee's family member. An employer may also require that an employee's leave because of a qualifying exigency or to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness be supported by a certification, as described in §§825.309 and 825.310, respectively. An employer must give notice of a requirement for certification each time a certification is required; such notice must be written notice whenever required by §825.300(c). An employer's oral request to an employee to furnish any subsequent certification is sufficient.

(b) Timing. In most cases, the employer should request that an employee furnish certification at the time the employee gives notice of the need for leave or within five business days thereafter, or, in the case of unforeseen leave, within five business days after the leave commences. The employer may request certification at some later date if the employer later has reason to question the appropriateness of the leave or its duration. The employee must provide the requested certification to the employer within 15 calendar days after the employer's request, unless it is not practicable under the particular circumstances to do so despite the employee's diligent, good faith efforts or the employer provides more than 15 calendar days to return the requested certification.

(c) Complete and sufficient certification. The employee must provide a complete and sufficient certification to the employer if required by the employer in accordance with §§825.306, 825.309, and 825.310. The employer shall advise an employee whenever the employer finds a certification incomplete or insufficient, and shall state in writing what additional information is necessary to make the certification complete and sufficient. A certification is considered incomplete if the employer receives a certification, but one or more of the applicable entries have not been completed. A certification is considered insufficient if the employer receives a complete certification, but the information provided is vague, ambiguous, or non-responsive. The employer must provide the employee with seven calendar days (unless not practicable under the particular circumstances despite the employee's diligent good faith efforts) to cure any such deficiency. If the deficiencies specified by the employer are not cured in the resubmitted certification, the employer may deny the taking of FMLA leave, in accordance with §825.313. A certification that is not returned to the employer is not considered incomplete or insufficient, but constitutes a failure to provide certification.

(d) Consequences. At the time the employer requests certification, the employer must also advise an employee of the anticipated consequences of an employee's failure to provide adequate certification. If the employee fails to provide the employer with a complete and sufficient certification, despite the opportunity to cure the certification as provided in paragraph (c) of this section, or fails to provide any certification, the employer may deny the taking of FMLA leave, in accordance with §825.313. It is the employee's responsibility either to furnish a complete and sufficient certification or to furnish the health care provider providing the certification with any necessary authorization from the employee or the employee's family member in order for the health care provider to release a complete and sufficient certification to the employer to support the employee's FMLA request. This provision will apply in any case where an employer requests a certification permitted by these regulations, whether it is the initial certification, a recertification, a second or third opinion, or a fitness for duty certificate, including any clarifications necessary to determine if such certifications are authentic and sufficient. See §§825.306, 825.307, 825.308, and 825.312.

(e) Annual medical certification. Where the employee's need for leave due to the employee's own serious health condition, or the serious health condition of the employee's covered family member, lasts beyond a single leave year (as defined in §825.200), the employer may require the employee to provide a new medical certification in each subsequent leave year. Such new medical certifications are subject to the provisions for authentication and clarification set forth in §825.307, including second and third opinions.

§825.306 Content of medical certification for leave taken because of an employee's own serious health condition or the serious health condition of a family member.

(a) Required information. When leave is taken because of an employee's own serious health condition, or the serious health condition of a family member, an employer may require an employee to obtain a medical certification from a health care provider that sets forth the following information:

(1) The name, address, telephone number, and fax number of the health care provider and type of medical practice/specialization;

(2) The approximate date on which the serious health condition commenced, and its probable duration;

(3) A statement or description of appropriate medical facts regarding the patient's health condition for which FMLA leave is requested. The medical facts must be sufficient to support the need for leave. Such medical facts may include information on symptoms, diagnosis, hospitalization, doctor visits, whether medication has been prescribed, any referrals for evaluation or treatment (physical therapy, for example), or any other regimen of continuing treatment;

(4) If the employee is the patient, information sufficient to establish that the employee cannot perform the essential functions of the employee's job as well as the nature of any other work restrictions, and the likely duration of such inability (see §825.123(b) and (c));

(5) If the patient is a covered family member with a serious health condition, information sufficient to establish that the family member is in need of care, as described in §825.124, and an estimate of the frequency and duration of the leave required to care for the family member;

(6) If an employee requests leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis for planned medical treatment of the employee's or a covered family member's serious health condition, information sufficient to establish the medical necessity for such intermittent or reduced schedule leave and an estimate of the dates and duration of such treatments and any periods of recovery;

(7) If an employee requests leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis for the employee's serious health condition, including pregnancy, that may result in unforeseeable episodes of incapacity, information sufficient to establish the medical necessity for such intermittent or reduced schedule leave and an estimate of the frequency and duration of the episodes of incapacity; and

(8) If an employee requests leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis to care for a covered family member with a serious health condition, a statement that such leave is medically necessary to care for the family member, as described in §§825.124 and 825.203(b), which can include assisting in the family member's recovery, and an estimate of the frequency and duration of the required leave.

(b) DOL has developed two optional forms (Form WH-380E and Form WH-380F, as revised) for use in obtaining medical certification, including second and third opinions, from health care providers that meets FMLA's certification requirements. Optional form WH-380E is for use when the employee's need for leave is due to the employee's own serious health condition. Optional form WH-380F is for use when the employee needs leave to care for a family member with a serious health condition. These optional forms reflect certification requirements so as to permit the health care provider to furnish appropriate medical information. Form WH-380-E and WH-380-F, as revised, or another form containing the same basic information, may be used by the employer; however, no information may be required beyond that specified in §§825.306, 825.307, and 825.308. In all instances the information on the form must relate only to the serious health condition for which the current need for leave exists. Prototype forms WH-380-E and WH-380-F may be obtained from local offices of the Wage and Hour Division or from the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd.

(c) If an employee is on FMLA leave running concurrently with a workers' compensation absence, and the provisions of the workers' compensation statute permit the employer or the employer's representative to request additional information from the employee's workers' compensation health care provider, the FMLA does not prevent the employer from following the workers' compensation provisions and information received under those provisions may be considered in determining the employee's entitlement to FMLA-protected leave. Similarly, an employer may request additional information in accordance with a paid leave policy or disability plan that requires greater information to qualify for payments or benefits, provided that the employer informs the employee that the additional information only needs to be provided in connection with receipt of such payments or benefits. Any information received pursuant to such policy or plan may be considered in determining the employee's entitlement to FMLA-protected leave. If the employee fails to provide the information required for receipt of such payments or benefits, such failure will not affect the employee's entitlement to take unpaid FMLA leave. See §825.207(a).

(d) If an employee's serious health condition may also be a disability within the meaning of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), as amended, the FMLA does not prevent the employer from following the procedures for requesting medical information under the ADA. Any information received pursuant to these procedures may be considered in determining the employee's entitlement to FMLA-protected leave.

(e) While an employee may choose to comply with the certification requirement by providing the employer with an authorization, release, or waiver allowing the employer to communicate directly with the health care provider of the employee or his or her covered family member, the employee may not be required to provide such an authorization, release, or waiver. In all instances in which certification is requested, it is the employee's responsibility to provide the employer with complete and sufficient certification and failure to do so may result in the denial of FMLA leave. See §825.305(d).

§825.307 Authentication and clarification of medical certification for leave taken because of an employee's own serious health condition or the serious health condition of a family member; second and third opinions.

(a) Clarification and authentication. If an employee submits a complete and sufficient certification signed by the health care provider, the employer may not request additional information from the health care provider. However, the employer may contact the health care provider for purposes of clarification and authentication of the medical certification (whether initial certification or recertification) after the employer has given the employee an opportunity to cure any deficiencies as set forth in §825.305(c). To make such contact, the employer must use a health care provider, a human resources professional, a leave administrator, or a management official. Under no circumstances, however, may the employee's direct supervisor contact the employee's health care provider. For purposes of these regulations, authentication means providing the health care provider with a copy of the certification and requesting verification that the information contained on the certification form was completed and/or authorized by the health care provider who signed the document; no additional medical information may be requested. Clarification means contacting the health care provider to understand the handwriting on the medical certification or to understand the meaning of a response. Employers may not ask health care providers for additional information beyond that required by the certification form. The requirements of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA) Privacy Rule (see 45 CFR parts 160 and 164), which governs the privacy of individually-identifiable health information created or held by HIPAA-covered entities, must be satisfied when individually-identifiable health information of an employee is shared with an employer by a HIPAA-covered health care provider. If an employee chooses not to provide the employer with authorization allowing the employer to clarify the certification with the health care provider, and does not otherwise clarify the certification, the employer may deny the taking of FMLA leave if the certification is unclear. See §825.305(d). It is the employee's responsibility to provide the employer with a complete and sufficient certification and to clarify the certification if necessary.

(b) Second opinion. (1) An employer who has reason to doubt the validity of a medical certification may require the employee to obtain a second opinion at the employer's expense. Pending receipt of the second (or third) medical opinion, the employee is provisionally entitled to the benefits of the Act, including maintenance of group health benefits. If the certifications do not ultimately establish the employee's entitlement to FMLA leave, the leave shall not be designated as FMLA leave and may be treated as paid or unpaid leave under the employer's established leave policies. In addition, the consequences set forth in §825.305(d) will apply if the employee or the employee's family member fails to authorize his or her health care provider to release all relevant medical information pertaining to the serious health condition at issue if requested by the health care provider designated to provide a second opinion in order to render a sufficient and complete second opinion.

(2) The employer is permitted to designate the health care provider to furnish the second opinion, but the selected health care provider may not be employed on a regular basis by the employer. The employer may not regularly contract with or otherwise regularly utilize the services of the health care provider furnishing the second opinion unless the employer is located in an area where access to health care is extremely limited (e.g., a rural area where no more than one or two doctors practice in the relevant specialty in the vicinity).

(c) Third opinion. If the opinions of the employee's and the employer's designated health care providers differ, the employer may require the employee to obtain certification from a third health care provider, again at the employer's expense. This third opinion shall be final and binding. The third health care provider must be designated or approved jointly by the employer and the employee. The employer and the employee must each act in good faith to attempt to reach agreement on whom to select for the third opinion provider. If the employer does not attempt in good faith to reach agreement, the employer will be bound by the first certification. If the employee does not attempt in good faith to reach agreement, the employee will be bound by the second certification. For example, an employee who refuses to agree to see a doctor in the specialty in question may be failing to act in good faith. On the other hand, an employer that refuses to agree to any doctor on a list of specialists in the appropriate field provided by the employee and whom the employee has not previously consulted may be failing to act in good faith. In addition, the consequences set forth in §825.305(d) will apply if the employee or the employee's family member fails to authorize his or her health care provider to release all relevant medical information pertaining to the serious health condition at issue if requested by the health care provider designated to provide a third opinion in order to render a sufficient and complete third opinion.

(d) Copies of opinions The employer is required to provide the employee with a copy of the second and third medical opinions, where applicable, upon request by the employee. Requested copies are to be provided within five business days unless extenuating circumstances prevent such action.

(e) Travel expenses. If the employer requires the employee to obtain either a second or third opinion the employer must reimburse an employee or family member for any reasonable "out of pocket" travel expenses incurred to obtain the second and third medical opinions. The employer may not require the employee or family member to travel outside normal commuting distance for purposes of obtaining the second or third medical opinions except in very unusual circumstances.

(f) Medical certification abroad. In circumstances in which the employee or a family member is visiting in another country, or a family member resides in another country, and a serious health condition develops, the employer shall accept a medical certification as well as second and third opinions from a health care provider who practices in that country. Where a certification by a foreign health care provider is in a language other than English, the employee must provide the employer with a written translation of the certification upon request.

§825.308 Recertifications for leave taken because of an employee's own serious health condition or the serious health condition of a family member.

(a) 30-day rule. An employer may request recertification no more often than every 30 days and only in connection with an absence by the employee, unless paragraphs (b) or (c) of this section apply.

(b) More than 30 days. If the medical certification indicates that the minimum duration of the condition is more than 30 days, an employer must wait until that minimum duration expires before requesting a recertification, unless paragraph (c) of this section applies. For example, if the medical certification states that an employee will be unable to work, whether continuously or on an intermittent basis, for 40 days, the employer must wait 40 days before requesting a recertification. In all cases, an employer may request a recertification of a medical condition every six months in connection with an absence by the employee. Accordingly, even if the medical certification indicates that the employee will need intermittent or reduced schedule leave for a period in excess of six months (e.g., for a lifetime condition), the employer would be permitted to request recertification every six months in connection with an absence.

(c) Less than 30 days. An employer may request recertification in less than 30 days if:

(1) The employee requests an extension of leave;

(2) Circumstances described by the previous certification have changed significantly (e.g., the duration or frequency of the absence, the nature or severity of the illness, complications). For example, if a medical certification stated that an employee would need leave for one to two days when the employee suffered a migraine headache and the employee's absences for his or her last two migraines lasted four days each, then the increased duration of absence might constitute a significant change in circumstances allowing the employer to request a recertification in less than 30 days. Likewise, if an employee had a pattern of using unscheduled FMLA leave for migraines in conjunction with his or her scheduled days off, then the timing of the absences also might constitute a significant change in circumstances sufficient for an employer to request a recertification more frequently than every 30 days; or

(3) The employer receives information that casts doubt upon the employee's stated reason for the absence or the continuing validity of the certification. For example, if an employee is on FMLA leave for four weeks due to the employee's knee surgery, including recuperation, and the employee plays in company softball league games during the employee's third week of FMLA leave, such information might be sufficient to cast doubt upon the continuing validity of the certification allowing the employer to request a recertification in less than 30 days.

(d) Timing. The employee must provide the requested recertification to the employer within the time frame requested by the employer (which must allow at least 15 calendar days after the employer's request), unless it is not practicable under the particular circumstances to do so despite the employee's diligent, good faith efforts.

(e) Content. The employer may ask for the same information when obtaining recertification as that permitted for the original certification as set forth in §825.306. The employee has the same obligations to participate and cooperate (including providing a complete and sufficient certification or adequate authorization to the health care provider) in the recertification process as in the initial certification process. See §825.305(d). As part of the information allowed to be obtained on recertification for leave taken because of a serious health condition, the employer may provide the health care provider with a record of the employee's absence pattern and ask the health care provider if the serious health condition and need for leave is consistent with such a pattern.

(f) Any recertification requested by the employer shall be at the employee's expense unless the employer provides otherwise. No second or third opinion on recertification may be required.

§825.309 Certification for leave taken because of a qualifying exigency.

(a) Active Duty Orders. The first time an employee requests leave because of a qualifying exigency arising out of the covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or notification of an impending call or order to covered active duty)of a military member (see §825.126(a)), an employer may require the employee to provide a copy of the military member's active duty orders or other documentation issued by the military which indicates that the military member is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status, and the dates of the military member's covered active duty service. This information need only be provided to the employer once. A copy of new active duty orders or other documentation issued by the military may be required by the employer if the need for leave because of a qualifying exigency arises out of a different covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or notification of an impending call or order to covered active duty) of the same or a different military member;

(b) Required information. An employer may require that leave for any qualifying exigency specified in §825.126 be supported by a certification from the employee that sets forth the following information:

(1) A statement or description, signed by the employee, of appropriate facts regarding the qualifying exigency for which FMLA leave is requested. The facts must be sufficient to support the need for leave. Such facts should include information on the type of qualifying exigency for which leave is requested and any available written documentation which supports the request for leave; such documentation, for example, may include a copy of a meeting announcement for informational briefings sponsored by the military, a document confirming an appointment with a counselor or school official, or a copy of a bill for services for the handling of legal or financial affairs;

(2) The approximate date on which the qualifying exigency commenced or will commence;

(3) If an employee requests leave because of a qualifying exigency for a single, continuous period of time, the beginning and end dates for such absence;

(4) If an employee requests leave because of a qualifying exigency on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis, an estimate of the frequency and duration of the qualifying exigency;

(5) If the qualifying exigency involves meeting with a third party, appropriate contact information for the individual or entity with whom the employee is meeting (such as the name, title, organization, address, telephone number, fax number, and email address) and a brief description of the purpose of the meeting; and

(6) If the qualifying exigency involves Rest and Recuperation leave, a copy of the military member's Rest and Recuperation orders, or other documentation issued by the military which indicates that the military member has been granted Rest and Recuperation leave, and the dates of the military member's Rest and Recuperation leave.

(c) DOL has developed an optional form (Form WH-384) for employees' use in obtaining a certification that meets FMLA's certification requirements. Form WH-384 may be obtained from local offices of the Wage and Hour Division or from the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. This optional form reflects certification requirements so as to permit the employee to furnish appropriate information to support his or her request for leave because of a qualifying exigency. Form WH-384, or another form containing the same basic information, may be used by the employer; however, no information may be required beyond that specified in this section.

(d) Verification. If an employee submits a complete and sufficient certification to support his or her request for leave because of a qualifying exigency, the employer may not request additional information from the employee. However, if the qualifying exigency involves meeting with a third party, the employer may contact the individual or entity with whom the employee is meeting for purposes of verifying a meeting or appointment schedule and the nature of the meeting between the employee and the specified individual or entity. The employee's permission is not required in order to verify meetings or appointments with third parties, but no additional information may be requested by the employer. An employer also may contact an appropriate unit of the Department of Defense to request verification that a military member is on covered active duty or call to covered active duty status (or has been notified of an impending call or order to covered active duty); no additional information may be requested and the employee's permission is not required.

§825.310 Certification for leave taken to care for a covered servicemember (military caregiver leave).

(a) Required information from health care provider. When leave is taken to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness, an employer may require an employee to obtain a certification completed by an authorized health care provider of the covered servicemember. For purposes of leave taken to care for a covered servicemember, any one of the following health care providers may complete such a certification:

(1) A United States Department of Defense ("DOD") health care provider;

(2) A United States Department of Veterans Affairs ("VA") health care provider;

(3) A DOD TRICARE network authorized private health care provider;

(4) A DOD non-network TRICARE authorized private health care provider, or

(5) Any health care provider as defined in §825.125.

(b) If the authorized health care provider is unable to make certain military-related determinations outlined below, the authorized health care provider may rely on determinations from an authorized DOD representative (such as a DOD Recovery Care Coordinator) or an authorized VA representative. An employer may request that the health care provider provide the following information:

(1) The name, address, and appropriate contact information (telephone number, fax number, and/or email address) of the health care provider, the type of medical practice, the medical specialty, and whether the health care provider is one of the following:

(i) A DOD health care provider;

(ii) A VA health care provider;

(iii) A DOD TRICARE network authorized private health care provider;

(iv) A DOD non-network TRICARE authorized private health care provider; or

(v) A health care provider as defined in §825.125.

(2) Whether the covered servicemember's injury or illness was incurred in the line of duty on active duty or, if not, whether the covered servicemember's injury or illness existed before the beginning of the servicemember's active duty and was aggravated by service in the line of duty on active duty;

(3) The approximate date on which the serious injury or illness commenced, or was aggravated, and its probable duration;

(4) A statement or description of appropriate medical facts regarding the covered servicemember's health condition for which FMLA leave is requested. The medical facts must be sufficient to support the need for leave.

(i) In the case of a current member of the Armed Forces, such medical facts must include information on whether the injury or illness may render the covered servicemember medically unfit to perform the duties of the servicemember's office, grade, rank, or rating and whether the member is receiving medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy.

(ii) In the case of a covered veteran, such medical facts must include:

(A) Information on whether the veteran is receiving medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy for an injury or illness that is the continuation of an injury or illness that was incurred or aggravated when the covered veteran was a member of the Armed Forces and rendered the servicemember medically unfit to perform the duties of the servicemember's office, grade, rank, or rating; or

(B) Information on whether the veteran is receiving medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy for an injury or illness that is a physical or mental condition for which the covered veteran has received a U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs Service-Related Disability Rating (VASRD) of 50 percent or greater, and that such VASRD rating is based, in whole or in part, on the condition precipitating the need for military caregiver leave; or

(C) Information on whether the veteran is receiving medical treatment, recuperation, or therapy for an injury or illness that is a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs the covered veteran's ability to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation by reason of a disability or disabilities related to military service, or would do so absent treatment; or

(D) Documentation of enrollment in the Department of Veterans Affairs Program of Comprehensive Assistance for Family Caregivers.

(5) Information sufficient to establish that the covered servicemember is in need of care, as described in §825.124, and whether the covered servicemember will need care for a single continuous period of time, including any time for treatment and recovery, and an estimate as to the beginning and ending dates for this period of time;

(6) If an employee requests leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis for planned medical treatment appointments for the covered servicemember, whether there is a medical necessity for the covered servicemember to have such periodic care and an estimate of the treatment schedule of such appointments;

(7) If an employee requests leave on an intermittent or reduced schedule basis to care for a covered servicemember other than for planned medical treatment (e.g., episodic flare-ups of a medical condition), whether there is a medical necessity for the covered servicemember to have such periodic care, which can include assisting in the covered servicemember's recovery, and an estimate of the frequency and duration of the periodic care.

(c) Required information from employee and/or covered servicemember. In addition to the information that may be requested under §825.310(b), an employer may also request that such certification set forth the following information provided by an employee and/or covered servicemember:

(1) The name and address of the employer of the employee requesting leave to care for a covered servicemember, the name of the employee requesting such leave, and the name of the covered servicemember for whom the employee is requesting leave to care;

(2) The relationship of the employee to the covered servicemember for whom the employee is requesting leave to care;

(3) Whether the covered servicemember is a current member of the Armed Forces, the National Guard or Reserves, and the covered servicemember's military branch, rank, and current unit assignment;

(4) Whether the covered servicemember is assigned to a military medical facility as an outpatient or to a unit established for the purpose of providing command and control of members of the Armed Forces receiving medical care as outpatients (such as a medical hold or warrior transition unit), and the name of the medical treatment facility or unit;

(5) Whether the covered servicemember is on the temporary disability retired list;

(6) Whether the covered servicemember is a veteran, the date of separation from military service, and whether the separation was other than dishonorable. The employer may require the employee to provide documentation issued by the military which indicates that the covered servicemember is a veteran, the date of separation, and that the separation is other than dishonorable. Where an employer requires such documentation, an employee may provide a copy of the veteran's Certificate of Release or Discharge from Active Duty issued by the U.S. Department of Defense (DD Form 214) or other proof of veteran status. See §825.127(c)(2).

(7) A description of the care to be provided to the covered servicemember and an estimate of the leave needed to provide the care.

(d) DOL has developed optional forms (WH-385, WH-385-V) for employees' use in obtaining certification that meets FMLA's certification requirements, which may be obtained from local offices of the Wage and Hour Division or on the Internet at www.dol.gov/whd. These optional forms reflect certification requirements so as to permit the employee to furnish appropriate information to support his or her request for leave to care for a covered servicemember with a serious injury or illness. WH-385, WH-385-V, or another form containing the same basic information, may be used by the employer; however, no information may be required beyond that specified in this section. In all instances the information on the certification must relate only to the serious injury or illness for which the current need for leave exists. An employer may seek authentication and/or clarification of the certification under §825.307. Second and third opinions under §825.307 are not permitted for leave to care for a covered servicemember when the certification has been completed by one of the types of health care providers identified in §825.310(a)(1)-(4). However, second and third opinions under §825.307 are permitted when the certification has been completed by a health care provider as defined in §825.125 that is not one of the types identified in §825.310(a)(1)-(4). Additionally, recertifications under §825.308 are not permitted for leave to care for a covered servicemember. An employer may require an employee to provide confirmation of covered family relationship to the seriously injured or ill servicemember pursuant to §825.122(k) of the FMLA.

(e) An employer requiring an employee to submit a certification for leave to care for a covered servicemember must accept as sufficient certification, in lieu of the Department's optional certification forms (WH-385) or an employer's own certification form, invitational travel orders (ITOs) or invitational travel authorizations (ITAs) issued to any family member to join an injured or ill servicemember at his or her bedside. An ITO or ITA is sufficient certification for the duration of time specified in the ITO or ITA. During that time period, an eligible employee may take leave to care for the covered servicemember in a continuous block of time or on an intermittent basis. An eligible employee who provides an ITO or ITA to support his or her request for leave may not be required to provide any additional or separate certification that leave taken on an intermittent basis during the period of time specified in the ITO or ITA is medically necessary. An ITO or ITA is sufficient certification for an employee entitled to take FMLA leave to care for a covered servicemember regardless of whether the employee is named in the order or authorization.

(1) If an employee will need leave to care for a covered servicemember beyond the expiration date specified in an ITO or ITA, an employer may request that the employee have one of the authorized health care providers listed under §825.310(a) complete the DOL optional certification form (WH-385) or an employer's own form, as requisite certification for the remainder of the employee's necessary leave period.

(2) An employer may seek authentication and clarification of the ITO or ITA under §825.307. An employer may not utilize the second or third opinion process outlined in §825.307 or the recertification process under §825.308 during the period of time in which leave is supported by an ITO or ITA.

(3) An employer may require an employee to provide confirmation of covered family relationship to the seriously injured or ill servicemember pursuant to §825.122(k) when an employee supports his or her request for FMLA leave with a copy of an ITO or ITA.

(f) An employer requiring an employee to submit a certification for leave to care for a covered servicemember must accept as sufficient certification of the servicemember's serious injury or illness documentation indicating the servicemember's enrollment in the Department of Veterans Affairs Program of Comprehensive Assistance for Family Caregivers. Such documentation is sufficient certification of the servicemember's serious injury or illness to support the employee's request for military caregiver leave regardless of whether the employee is the named caregiver in the enrollment documentation.

(1) An employer may seek authentication and clarification of the documentation indicating the servicemember's enrollment in the Department of Veterans Affairs Program of Comprehensive Assistance for Family Caregivers under §825.307. An employer may not utilize the second or third opinion process outlined in §825.307 or the recertification process under §825.308 when the servicemember's serious injury or illness is shown by documentation of enrollment in this program.

(2) An employer may require an employee to provide confirmation of covered family relationship to the seriously injured or ill servicemember pursuant to §825.122(k) when an employee supports his or her request for FMLA leave with a copy of such enrollment documentation. An employer may also require an employee to provide documentation, such as a veteran's Form DD-214, showing that the discharge was other than dishonorable and the date of the veteran's discharge.

(g) Where medical certification is requested by an employer, an employee may not be held liable for administrative delays in the issuance of military documents, despite the employee's diligent, good-faith efforts to obtain such documents. See §825.305(b). In all instances in which certification is requested, it is the employee's responsibility to provide the employer with complete and sufficient certification and failure to do so may result in the denial of FMLA leave. See §825.305(d).

§825.311 Intent to return to work.

(a) An employer may require an employee on FMLA leave to report periodically on the employee's status and intent to return to work. The employer's policy regarding such reports may not be discriminatory and must take into account all of the relevant facts and circumstances related to the individual employee's leave situation.

(b) If an employee gives unequivocal notice of intent not to return to work, the employer's obligations under FMLA to maintain health benefits (subject to COBRA requirements) and to restore the employee cease. However, these obligations continue if an employee indicates he or she may be unable to return to work but expresses a continuing desire to do so.

(c) It may be necessary for an employee to take more leave than originally anticipated. Conversely, an employee may discover after beginning leave that the circumstances have changed and the amount of leave originally anticipated is no longer necessary. An employee may not be required to take more FMLA leave than necessary to resolve the circumstance that precipitated the need for leave. In both of these situations, the employer may require that the employee provide the employer reasonable notice (i.e., within two business days) of the changed circumstances where foreseeable. The employer may also obtain information on such changed circumstances through requested status reports.

§825.312 Fitness-for-duty certification.

(a) As a condition of restoring an employee whose FMLA leave was occasioned by the employee's own serious health condition that made the employee unable to perform the employee's job, an employer may have a uniformly-applied policy or practice that requires all similarly-situated employees (i.e., same occupation, same serious health condition) who take leave for such conditions to obtain and present certification from the employee's health care provider that the employee is able to resume work. The employee has the same obligations to participate and cooperate (including providing a complete and sufficient certification or providing sufficient authorization to the health care provider to provide the information directly to the employer) in the fitness-for-duty certification process as in the initial certification process. See §825.305(d).

(b) An employer may seek a fitness-for-duty certification only with regard to the particular health condition that caused the employee's need for FMLA leave. The certification from the employee's health care provider must certify that the employee is able to resume work. Additionally, an employer may require that the certification specifically address the employee's ability to perform the essential functions of the employee's job. In order to require such a certification, an employer must provide an employee with a list of the essential functions of the employee's job no later than with the designation notice required by §825.300(d), and must indicate in the designation notice that the certification must address the employee's ability to perform those essential functions. If the employer satisfies these requirements, the employee's health care provider must certify that the employee can perform the identified essential functions of his or her job.

Following the procedures set forth in §825.307(a), the employer may contact the employee's health care provider for purposes of clarifying and authenticating the fitness-for-duty certification. Clarification may be requested only for the serious health condition for which FMLA leave was taken. The employer may not delay the employee's return to work while contact with the health care provider is being made. No second or third opinions on a fitness-for-duty certification may be required.

(c) The cost of the certification shall be borne by the employee, and the employee is not entitled to be paid for the time or travel costs spent in acquiring the certification.

(d) The designation notice required in §825.300(d) shall advise the employee if the employer will require a fitness-for-duty certification to return to work and whether that fitness-for-duty certification must address the employee's ability to perform the essential functions of the employee's job.

(e) An employer may delay restoration to employment until an employee submits a required fitness-for-duty certification unless the employer has failed to provide the notice required in paragraph (d) of this section. If an employer provides the notice required, an employee who does not provide a fitness-for-duty certification or request additional FMLA leave is no longer entitled to reinstatement under the FMLA. See §825.313(d).

(f) An employer is not entitled to a certification of fitness to return to duty for each absence taken on an intermittent or reduced leave schedule. However, an employer is entitled to a certification of fitness to return to duty for such absences up to once every 30 days if reasonable safety concerns exist regarding the employee's ability to perform his or her duties, based on the serious health condition for which the employee took such leave. If an employer chooses to require a fitness-for-duty certification under such circumstances, the employer shall inform the employee at the same time it issues the designation notice that for each subsequent instance of intermittent or reduced schedule leave, the employee will be required to submit a fitness-for-duty certification unless one has already been submitted within the past 30 days. Alternatively, an employer can set a different interval for requiring a fitness-for-duty certification as long as it does not exceed once every 30 days and as long as the employer advises the employee of the requirement in advance of the employee taking the intermittent or reduced schedule leave. The employer may not terminate the employment of the employee while awaiting such a certification of fitness to return to duty for an intermittent or reduced schedule leave absence. Reasonable safety concerns means a reasonable belief of significant risk of harm to the individual employee or others. In determining whether reasonable safety concerns exist, an employer should consider the nature and severity of the potential harm and the likelihood that potential harm will occur.

(g) If State or local law or the terms of a collective bargaining agreement govern an employee's return to work, those provisions shall be applied.

(h) Requirements under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA), as amended, apply. After an employee returns from FMLA leave, the ADA requires any medical examination at an employer's expense by the employer's health care provider be job-related and consistent with business necessity. For example, an attorney could not be required to submit to a medical examination or inquiry just because her leg had been amputated. The essential functions of an attorney's job do not require use of both legs; therefore such an inquiry would not be job related. An employer may require a warehouse laborer, whose back impairment affects the ability to lift, to be examined by an orthopedist, but may not require this employee to submit to an HIV test where the test is not related to either the essential functions of his or her job or to his/her impairment. If an employee's serious health condition may also be a disability within the meaning of the ADA, the FMLA does not prevent the employer from following the procedures for requesting medical information under the ADA.

§825.313 Failure to provide certification.

(a) Foreseeable leave. In the case of foreseeable leave, if an employee fails to provide certification in a timely manner as required by §825.305, then an employer may deny FMLA coverage until the required certification is provided. For example, if an employee has 15 days to provide a certification and does not provide the certification for 45 days without sufficient reason for the delay, the employer can deny FMLA protections for the 30-day period following the expiration of the 15-day time period, if the employee takes leave during such period.

(b) Unforeseeable leave. In the case of unforeseeable leave, an employer may deny FMLA coverage for the requested leave if the employee fails to provide a certification within 15 calendar days from receipt of the request for certification unless not practicable due to extenuating circumstances. For example, in the case of a medical emergency, it may not be practicable for an employee to provide the required certification within 15 calendar days. Absent such extenuating circumstances, if the employee fails to timely return the certification, the employer can deny FMLA protections for the leave following the expiration of the 15-day time period until a sufficient certification is provided. If the employee never produces the certification, the leave is not FMLA leave.

(c) Recertification. An employee must provide recertification within the time requested by the employer (which must allow at least 15 calendar days after the request) or as soon as practicable under the particular facts and circumstances. If an employee fails to provide a recertification within a reasonable time under the particular facts and circumstances, then the employer may deny continuation of the FMLA leave protections until the employee produces a sufficient recertification. If the employee never produces the recertification, the leave is not FMLA leave. Recertification does not apply to leave taken for a qualifying exigency or to care for a covered servicemember.

(d) Fitness-for-duty certification. When requested by the employer pursuant to a uniformly applied policy for similarly-situated employees, the employee must provide medical certification, at the time the employee seeks reinstatement at the end of FMLA leave taken for the employee's serious health condition, that the employee is fit for duty and able to return to work (see §825.312(a)) if the employer has provided the required notice (see §825.300(e)); the employer may delay restoration until the certification is provided. Unless the employee provides either a fitness-for-duty certification or a new medical certification for a serious health condition at the time FMLA leave is concluded, the employee may be terminated. See also §825.213(a)(3).

Subpart D—Enforcement Mechanisms

§825.400 Enforcement, general rules.

(a) The employee has the choice of:

(1) Filing, or having another person file on his or her behalf, a complaint with the Secretary of Labor, or

(2) Filing a private lawsuit pursuant to section 107 of FMLA.

(b) If the employee files a private lawsuit, it must be filed within two years after the last action which the employee contends was in violation of the Act, or three years if the violation was willful.

(c) If an employer has violated one or more provisions of FMLA, and if justified by the facts of a particular case, an employee may receive one or more of the following: wages, employment benefits, or other compensation denied or lost to such employee by reason of the violation; or, where no such tangible loss has occurred, such as when FMLA leave was unlawfully denied, any actual monetary loss sustained by the employee as a direct result of the violation, such as the cost of providing care, up to a sum equal to 26 weeks of wages for the employee in a case involving leave to care for a covered servicemember or 12 weeks of wages for the employee in a case involving leave for any other FMLA qualifying reason. In addition, the employee may be entitled to interest on such sum, calculated at the prevailing rate. An amount equaling the preceding sums may also be awarded as liquidated damages unless such amount is reduced by the court because the violation was in good faith and the employer had reasonable grounds for believing the employer had not violated the Act. When appropriate, the employee may also obtain appropriate equitable relief, such as employment, reinstatement and promotion. When the employer is found in violation, the employee may recover a reasonable attorney's fee, reasonable expert witness fees, and other costs of the action from the employer in addition to any judgment awarded by the court.

§825.401 Filing a complaint with the Federal Government.

(a) A complaint may be filed in person, by mail or by telephone, with the Wage and Hour Division, U.S. Department of Labor. A complaint may be filed at any local office of the Wage and Hour Division; the address and telephone number of local offices may be found in telephone directories or on the Department's Web site.

(b) A complaint filed with the Secretary of Labor should be filed within a reasonable time of when the employee discovers that his or her FMLA rights have been violated. In no event may a complaint be filed more than two years after the action which is alleged to be a violation of FMLA occurred, or three years in the case of a willful violation.

(c) No particular form of complaint is required, except that a complaint must be reduced to writing and should include a full statement of the acts and/or omissions, with pertinent dates, which are believed to constitute the violation.

§825.402 Violations of the posting requirement.

Section 825.300 describes the requirements for covered employers to post a notice for employees that explains the Act's provisions. If a representative of the Department of Labor determines that an employer has committed a willful violation of this posting requirement, and that the imposition of a civil money penalty for such violation is appropriate, the representative may issue and serve a notice of penalty on such employer in person or by certified mail. Where service by certified mail is not accepted, notice shall be deemed received on the date of attempted delivery. Where service is not accepted, the notice may be served by regular mail.

§825.403 Appealing the assessment of a penalty for willful violation of the posting requirement.

(a) An employer may obtain a review of the assessment of penalty from the Wage and Hour Regional Administrator for the region in which the alleged violation(s) occurred. If the employer does not seek such a review or fails to do so in a timely manner, the notice of the penalty constitutes the final ruling of the Secretary of Labor.

(b) To obtain review, an employer may file a petition with the Wage and Hour Regional Administrator for the region in which the alleged violations occurred. No particular form of petition for review is required, except that the petition must be in writing, should contain the legal and factual bases for the petition, and must be mailed to the Regional Administrator within 15 days of receipt of the notice of penalty. The employer may request an oral hearing which may be conducted by telephone.

(c) The decision of the Regional Administrator constitutes the final order of the Secretary.

§825.404 Consequences for an employer when not paying the penalty assessment after a final order is issued.

The Regional Administrator may seek to recover the unpaid penalty pursuant to the Debt Collection Act (DCA), 31 U.S.C. 3711 et seq., and, in addition to seeking recovery of the unpaid final order, may seek interest and penalties as provided under the DCA. The final order may also be referred to the Solicitor of Labor for collection. The Secretary may file suit in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the monies due as a result of the unpaid final order, interest, and penalties.

Subpart E—Recordkeeping Requirements

§825.500 Recordkeeping requirements.

(a) FMLA provides that covered employers shall make, keep, and preserve records pertaining to their obligations under the Act in accordance with the recordkeeping requirements of section 11(c) of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) and in accordance with these regulations. FMLA also restricts the authority of the Department of Labor to require any employer or plan, fund, or program to submit books or records more than once during any 12-month period unless the Department has reasonable cause to believe a violation of FMLA exists or the Department is investigating a complaint. These regulations establish no requirement for the submission of any records unless specifically requested by a Departmental official.

(b) No particular order or form of records is required. These regulations establish no requirement that any employer revise its computerized payroll or personnel records systems to comply. However, employers must keep the records specified by these regulations for no less than three years and make them available for inspection, copying, and transcription by representatives of the Department of Labor upon request. The records may be maintained and preserved on microfilm or other basic source document of an automated data processing memory provided that adequate projection or viewing equipment is available, that the reproductions are clear and identifiable by date or pay period, and that extensions or transcriptions of the information required herein can be and are made available upon request. Records kept in computer form must be made available for transcription or copying.

(c) Covered employers who have eligible employees must maintain records that must disclose the following:

(1) Basic payroll and identifying employee data, including name, address, and occupation; rate or basis of pay and terms of compensation; daily and weekly hours worked per pay period; additions to or deductions from wages; and total compensation paid.

(2) Dates FMLA leave is taken by FMLA eligible employees (e.g., available from time records, requests for leave, etc., if so designated). Leave must be designated in records as FMLA leave; leave so designated may not include leave required under State law or an employer plan which is not also covered by FMLA.

(3) If FMLA leave is taken by eligible employees in increments of less than one full day, the hours of the leave.

(4) Copies of employee notices of leave furnished to the employer under FMLA, if in writing, and copies of all written notices given to employees as required under FMLA and these regulations See §825.300(b)-(c). Copies may be maintained in employee personnel files.

(5) Any documents (including written and electronic records) describing employee benefits or employer policies and practices regarding the taking of paid and unpaid leaves.

(6) Premium payments of employee benefits.

(7) Records of any dispute between the employer and an eligible employee regarding designation of leave as FMLA leave, including any written statement from the employer or employee of the reasons for the designation and for the disagreement.

(d) Covered employers with no eligible employees must maintain the records set forth in paragraph (c)(1) of this section.

(e) Covered employers in a joint employment situation (see §825.106) must keep all the records required by paragraph (c) of this section with respect to any primary employees, and must keep the records required by paragraph (c)(1) with respect to any secondary employees.

(f) If FMLA-eligible employees are not subject to FLSA's recordkeeping regulations for purposes of minimum wage or overtime compliance (i.e., not covered by or exempt from FLSA), an employer need not keep a record of actual hours worked (as otherwise required under FLSA, 29 CFR 516.2(a)(7)), provided that:

(1) Eligibility for FMLA leave is presumed for any employee who has been employed for at least 12 months; and

(2) With respect to employees who take FMLA leave intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule, the employer and employee agree on the employee's normal schedule or average hours worked each week and reduce their agreement to a written record maintained in accordance with paragraph (b) of this section.

(g) Records and documents relating to certifications, recertifications or medical histories of employees or employees' family members, created for purposes of FMLA, shall be maintained as confidential medical records in separate files/records from the usual personnel files. If the Genetic Information Nondiscrimination Act of 2008 (GINA) is applicable, records and documents created for purposes of FMLA containing family medical history or genetic information as defined in GINA shall be maintained in accordance with the confidentiality requirements of Title II of GINA (see 29 CFR 1635.9), which permit such information to be disclosed consistent with the requirements of FMLA. If the ADA, as amended, is also applicable, such records shall be maintained in conformance with ADA confidentiality requirements (see 29 CFR 1630.14(c)(1)), except that:

(1) Supervisors and managers may be informed regarding necessary restrictions on the work or duties of an employee and necessary accommodations;

(2) First aid and safety personnel may be informed (when appropriate) if the employee's physical or medical condition might require emergency treatment; and

(3) Government officials investigating compliance with FMLA (or other pertinent law) shall be provided relevant information upon request.

(h) Special rules regarding recordkeeping apply to employers of airline flight crew employees. See §825.803.

Subpart F—Special Rules Applicable to Employees of Schools

§825.600 Special rules for school employees, definitions.

(a) Certain special rules apply to employees of local educational agencies, including public school boards and elementary and secondary schools under their jurisdiction, and private elementary and secondary schools. The special rules do not apply to other kinds of educational institutions, such as colleges and universities, trade schools, and preschools.

(b) Educational institutions are covered by FMLA (and these special rules) and the Act's 50-employee coverage test does not apply. The usual requirements for employees to be eligible do apply, however, including employment at a worksite where at least 50 employees are employed within 75 miles. For example, employees of a rural school would not be eligible for FMLA leave if the school has fewer than 50 employees and there are no other schools under the jurisdiction of the same employer (usually, a school board) within 75 miles.

(c) The special rules affect the taking of intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule, or leave near the end of an academic term (semester), by instructional employees. Instructional employees are those whose principal function is to teach and instruct students in a class, a small group, or an individual setting. This term includes not only teachers, but also athletic coaches, driving instructors, and special education assistants such as signers for the hearing impaired. It does not include, and the special rules do not apply to, teacher assistants or aides who do not have as their principal job actual teaching or instructing, nor does it include auxiliary personnel such as counselors, psychologists, or curriculum specialists. It also does not include cafeteria workers, maintenance workers, or bus drivers.

(d) Special rules which apply to restoration to an equivalent position apply to all employees of local educational agencies.

§825.601 Special rules for school employees, limitations on intermittent leave.

(a) Leave taken for a period that ends with the school year and begins the next semester is leave taken consecutively rather than intermittently. The period during the summer vacation when the employee would not have been required to report for duty is not counted against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. An instructional employee who is on FMLA leave at the end of the school year must be provided with any benefits over the summer vacation that employees would normally receive if they had been working at the end of the school year.

(1) If an eligible instructional employee needs intermittent leave or leave on a reduced leave schedule to care for a family member with a serious health condition, to care for a covered servicemember, or for the employee's own serious health condition, which is foreseeable based on planned medical treatment, and the employee would be on leave for more than 20 percent of the total number of working days over the period the leave would extend, the employer may require the employee to choose either to:

(i) Take leave for a period or periods of a particular duration, not greater than the duration of the planned treatment; or

(ii) Transfer temporarily to an available alternative position for which the employee is qualified, which has equivalent pay and benefits and which better accommodates recurring periods of leave than does the employee's regular position.

(2) These rules apply only to a leave involving more than 20 percent of the working days during the period over which the leave extends. For example, if an instructional employee who normally works five days each week needs to take two days of FMLA leave per week over a period of several weeks, the special rules would apply. Employees taking leave which constitutes 20 percent or less of the working days during the leave period would not be subject to transfer to an alternative position. Periods of a particular duration means a block, or blocks, of time beginning no earlier than the first day for which leave is needed and ending no later than the last day on which leave is needed, and may include one uninterrupted period of leave.

(b) If an instructional employee does not give required notice of foreseeable FMLA leave (see §825.302) to be taken intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule, the employer may require the employee to take leave of a particular duration, or to transfer temporarily to an alternative position. Alternatively, the employer may require the employee to delay the taking of leave until the notice provision is met.

Back to Top

§825.602 Special rules for school employees, limitations on leave near the end of an academic term.

(a) There are also different rules for instructional employees who begin leave more than five weeks before the end of a term, less than five weeks before the end of a term, and less than three weeks before the end of a term. Regular rules apply except in circumstances when:

(1) An instructional employee begins leave more than five weeks before the end of a term. The employer may require the employee to continue taking leave until the end of the term if —

(i) The leave will last at least three weeks, and

(ii) The employee would return to work during the three-week period before the end of the term.

(2) The employee begins leave during the five-week period before the end of a term because of the birth of a son or daughter; the placement of a son or daughter for adoption or foster care; to care for a spouse, son, daughter, or parent with a serious health condition; or to care for a covered servicemember. The employer may require the employee to continue taking leave until the end of the term if—

(i) The leave will last more than two weeks, and

(ii) The employee would return to work during the two-week period before the end of the term.

(3) The employee begins leave during the three-week period before the end of a term because of the birth of a son or daughter; the placement of a son or daughter for adoption or foster care; to care for a spouse, son, daughter, or parent with a serious health condition; or to care for a covered servicemember. The employer may require the employee to continue taking leave until the end of the term if the leave will last more than five working days.

(b) For purposes of these provisions, academic term means the school semester, which typically ends near the end of the calendar year and the end of spring each school year. In no case may a school have more than two academic terms or semesters each year for purposes of FMLA. An example of leave falling within these provisions would be where an employee plans two weeks of leave to care for a family member which will begin three weeks before the end of the term. In that situation, the employer could require the employee to stay out on leave until the end of the term.

§825.603 Special rules for school employees, duration of FMLA leave.

(a) If an employee chooses to take leave for periods of a particular duration in the case of intermittent or reduced schedule leave, the entire period of leave taken will count as FMLA leave.

(b) In the case of an employee who is required to take leave until the end of an academic term, only the period of leave until the employee is ready and able to return to work shall be charged against the employee's FMLA leave entitlement. The employer has the option not to require the employee to stay on leave until the end of the school term. Therefore, any additional leave required by the employer to the end of the school term is not counted as FMLA leave; however, the employer shall be required to maintain the employee's group health insurance and restore the employee to the same or equivalent job including other benefits at the conclusion of the leave.

§825.604 Special rules for school employees, restoration to an equivalent position.

The determination of how an employee is to be restored to an equivalent position upon return from FMLA leave will be made on the basis of "established school board policies and practices, private school policies and practices, and collective bargaining agreements." The "established policies" and collective bargaining agreements used as a basis for restoration must be in writing, must be made known to the employee prior to the taking of FMLA leave, and must clearly explain the employee's restoration rights upon return from leave. Any established policy which is used as the basis for restoration of an employee to an equivalent position must provide substantially the same protections as provided in the Act for reinstated employees. See §825.215. In other words, the policy or collective bargaining agreement must provide for restoration to an equivalent position with equivalent employment benefits, pay, and other terms and conditions of employment. For example, an employee may not be restored to a position requiring additional licensure or certification.

Back to Top

Subpart G—Effect of Other Laws, Employer Practices, and Collective Bargaining Agreements on Employee Rights Under FMLA

§825.700 Interaction with employer's policies.

(a) An employer must observe any employment benefit program or plan that provides greater family or medical leave rights to employees than the rights established by the FMLA. Conversely, the rights established by the Act may not be diminished by any employment benefit program or plan. For example, a provision of a CBA which provides for reinstatement to a position that is not equivalent because of seniority (e g., provides lesser pay) is superseded by FMLA. If an employer provides greater unpaid family leave rights than are afforded by FMLA, the employer is not required to extend additional rights afforded by FMLA, such as maintenance of health benefits (other than through COBRA), to the additional leave period not covered by FMLA.

(b) Nothing in this Act prevents an employer from amending existing leave and employee benefit programs, provided they comply with FMLA. However, nothing in the Act is intended to discourage employers from adopting or retaining more generous leave policies.

§825.701 Interaction with State laws.

(a) Nothing in FMLA supersedes any provision of State or local law that provides greater family or medical leave rights than those provided by FMLA. The Department of Labor will not, however, enforce State family or medical leave laws, and States may not enforce the FMLA. Employees are not required to designate whether the leave they are taking is FMLA leave or leave under State law, and an employer must comply with the appropriate (applicable) provisions of both. An employer covered by one law and not the other has to comply only with the law under which it is covered. Similarly, an employee eligible under only one law must receive benefits in accordance with that law. If leave qualifies for FMLA leave and leave under State law, the leave used counts against the employee's entitlement under both laws. Examples of the interaction between FMLA and State laws include:

(1) If State law provides 16 weeks of leave entitlement over two years, an employee needing leave due to his or her own serious health condition would be entitled to take 16 weeks one year under State law and 12 weeks the next year under FMLA. Health benefits maintenance under FMLA would be applicable only to the first 12 weeks of leave entitlement each year. If the employee took 12 weeks the first year, the employee would be entitled to a maximum of 12 weeks the second year under FMLA (not 16 weeks). An employee would not be entitled to 28 weeks in one year.

(2) If State law provides half-pay for employees temporarily disabled because of pregnancy for six weeks, the employee would be entitled to an additional six weeks of unpaid FMLA leave (or accrued paid leave).

(3) If State law provides six weeks of leave, which may include leave to care for a seriously-ill grandparent or a "spouse equivalent," and leave was used for that purpose, the employee is still entitled to his or her full FMLA leave entitlement, as the leave used was provided for a purpose not covered by FMLA. If FMLA leave is used first for a purpose also provided under State law, and State leave has thereby been exhausted, the employer would not be required to provide additional leave to care for the grandparent or "spouse equivalent."

(4) If State law prohibits mandatory leave beyond the actual period of pregnancy disability, an instructional employee of an educational agency subject to special FMLA rules may not be required to remain on leave until the end of the academic term, as permitted by FMLA under certain circumstances. See Subpart F of this part.

(b) [Reserved]

§825.702 Interaction with Federal and State anti-discrimination laws.

(a) Nothing in FMLA modifies or affects any Federal or State law prohibiting discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, national origin, sex, age, or disability (e.g., Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended by the Pregnancy Discrimination Act). FMLA's legislative history explains that FMLA is "not intended to modify or affect the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, as amended, the regulations concerning employment which have been promulgated pursuant to that statute, or the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 [as amended] or the regulations issued under that act. Thus, the leave provisions of the [FMLA] are wholly distinct from the reasonable accommodation obligations of employers covered under the [ADA], employers who receive Federal financial assistance, employers who contract with the Federal government, or the Federal government itself. The purpose of the FMLA is to make leave available to eligible employees and employers within its coverage, and not to limit already existing rights and protection." S. Rep. No. 103-3, at 38 (1993). An employer must therefore provide leave under whichever statutory provision provides the greater rights to employees. When an employer violates both FMLA and a discrimination law, an employee may be able to recover under either or both statutes (double relief may not be awarded for the same loss; when remedies coincide a claimant may be allowed to utilize whichever avenue of relief is desired. Laffey v. Northwest Airlines, Inc., 567 F.2d 429, 445 (D.C. Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 434 U.S. 1086 (1978).

(b) If an employee is a qualified individual with a disability within the meaning of the ADA, the employer must make reasonable accommodations, etc., barring undue hardship, in accordance with the ADA. At the same time, the employer must afford an employee his or her FMLA rights. ADA's "disability" and FMLA's "serious health condition" are different concepts, and must be analyzed separately. FMLA entitles eligible employees to 12 weeks of leave in any 12-month period due to their own serious health condition, whereas the ADA allows an indeterminate amount of leave, barring undue hardship, as a reasonable accommodation. FMLA requires employers to maintain employees' group health plan coverage during FMLA leave on the same conditions as coverage would have been provided if the employee had been continuously employed during the leave period, whereas ADA does not require maintenance of health insurance unless other employees receive health insurance during leave under the same circumstances.

(c)(1) A reasonable accommodation under the ADA might be accomplished by providing an individual with a disability with a part-time job with no health benefits, assuming the employer did not ordinarily provide health insurance for part-time employees. However, FMLA would permit an employee to work a reduced leave schedule until the equivalent of 12 workweeks of leave were used, with group health benefits maintained during this period. FMLA permits an employer to temporarily transfer an employee who is taking leave intermittently or on a reduced leave schedule for planned medical treatment to an alternative position, whereas the ADA allows an accommodation of reassignment to an equivalent, vacant position only if the employee cannot perform the essential functions of the employee's present position and an

Dear John:

Our representatives met, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether an employee who works his holiday but did not work the last hour of the employee's scheduled workday prior to or the first hour of the employee's scheduled workday after the holiday is entitled to holiday pay.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Section 11.2 states, "To be eligible for holiday pay, an employee must be in a pay status the last hour of the employee's scheduled workday prior to or the first hour of the employee's scheduled workday after the holiday." Therefore, determination of this issue is based on the fact circumstances involved.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to regional level arbitration in keeping with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Washington, DC 20005

Gentlemen:

On February 9, 1988, David Cybulski and Charles Dudek met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether an employee who is on extended absence and wishes to continue eligibility for health and life insurance benefits, and those protections for which an employee may be eligible under Article 6 of the National Agreement may use sick leave and/or annual leave in conjunction with leave without pay (LWOP) prior to exhausting his/her leave balance.

During our discussions, we mutually agreed that an employee in the above circumstances may use sick leave and/or annual leave in conjunction with LWOP prior to exhausting his/her respective leave balance. In addition, this settlement does not limit management's prerogative to grant leave requests at its discretion according to normal leave approval procedures. Furthermore, the Employer is not obligated to approve such leave for the last hour of the employee's scheduled workday prior to and/or the first hour of the employee's scheduled workday after a holiday.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Neill:

Recently, Bobby Kennedy and Randy Sutton met in a prearbitration discussion of the above-referenced case.

The issue in this grievance concerns the utilization of paid leave requested in conjunction with holidays, when the request originates from an employee in an extended leave without pay (LWOP) status.

The parties mutually agree it is inappropriate for employees in an extended LWOP status to manipulate the utilization of paid leave for the purpose of obtaining paid holidays. The parties further agree management should not deny paid leave requests from employees in an extended LWOP status solely because it provides an entitlement to a paid holiday.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case and remove it from the pending national arbitration listing.

Sincerely,

David P. Silvestre

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

LEAVE SHARING

The Postal Service will continue a Leave Sharing Program during the term of the 2019 National Agreement under which career postal employees are able to donate annual leave from their earned annual leave account to another career postal employee. Single donations must be of 8 or more whole hours and may not exceed half of the amount of annual leave earned each year based on the leave earnings category of the donor at the time of donation. Sick leave, unearned annual leave, and annual leave hours subject to forfeiture (leave in excess of the maximum carryover which the employee would not be permitted to use before the end of the leave year), may not be donated, and employees may not donate leave to their immediate supervisors. To be eligible to receive donated leave, a career employee (a) must be incapacitated for available postal duties due to serious personal health conditions including pregnancy or must need leave to care for a child born to or placed for adoption with the employee within the twelve months prior to taking leave and (b) must be known or expected to miss at least 40 more hours from work than his or her own annual leave and/or sick leave balance(s), as applicable, will cover, and (c) must have his or her absence approved pursuant to standard attendance policies. Donated leave may be used to cover the 40 hours of LWOP required to be eligible for leave sharing.

For purposes other than pay and legally required payroll deductions, employees using donated leave will be subject to regulations applicable to employees in LWOP status and will not earn any type of leave while using donated leave.

Donated leave may be carried over from one leave year to the next without limitation. Donated leave not actually used remains in the recipient's account (i.e., is not restored to donors). Such residual donated leave at any time may be applied against negative leave balances caused by a medical exigency. At separation, any remaining donated leave balance will be paid in a lump sum.

434.411 Holidays Observed

Provisions for holiday observance are as follows:

a. The following 10 days are observed as holidays:

(1) New Year's Day.

(2) Martin Luther King Jr.'s Birthday.

(3) Washington's Birthday (Presidents' Day).

(4) Memorial Day.

(5) Independence Day.

(6) Labor Day.

(7) Columbus Day.

(8) Veterans' Day.

(9) Thanksgiving Day.

(10) Christmas Day.

b. Variations in schedule for holiday observance are as follows:

(1) If a holiday falls on an eligible employee's regular scheduled workday, including Saturday or Sunday, the employee observes the holiday on that day.

(2) If a holiday falls on an eligible employee's scheduled nonworkday, the first scheduled day preceding the holiday is designated as the employee's holiday except as provided in 434.411b3 and 434.421.

(3) If a holiday falls on a Sunday that is a nonscheduled workday for an eligible employee, Monday is designated as the employee's holiday. However, if Monday is also a nonscheduled workday, then Saturday is designated as the employee's holiday. For postal police officers, see the USPS-PPO Agreement.

(4) For all full-time postmasters, if a holiday falls on a Saturday that is a nonscheduled workday, the preceding Friday is designated as the postmaster's holiday. Additional workhour allowances are authorized for those Post Offices without a senior supervisor to provide relief coverage during the postmaster's absence on holiday leave, where necessary.

434.412 Application

On these holidays, eligible employees receive holiday leave pay for the number of hours equal to their regular daily work schedule, not to exceed 8 hours (see 434.421). This holiday pay is instead of other paid leave to which employees might otherwise be entitled on their holiday.

Eligible employees who work their holiday, at their option, may elect to have their annual leave balance credited with up to 8 hours of annual leave in lieu of holiday leave pay (see 434.422). When this option is chosen, the deferred holiday leave pay is subject to all applicable rules for requesting and scheduling annual leave and is combined with annual leave and counted as annual leave for purposes of annual leave carryover (see 512.32).

Dear John:

Our representatives met, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether part-time flexible (PTF) employees are entitled to Christmas worked-pay for hours worked on December 24 or December 26.

PTF employees are eligible for Christmas-worked pay for hours worked on December 25 only. Therefore, determination of this issue is based on the fact circumstances involved.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration, if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Dear Mr. Anderson:

On June 2, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The question in this grievance is whether the grievant is entitled to Christmas Worked Pay for time worked from 2030 hours to 2400 hours on December 25, 1981.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The Union contends that since the hours cited were on the calendar day of December 25, then the grievant is entitled to Christmas Worked Pay.

It is the position of the Postal Service that under circumstances present in this case that the grievant is not entitled to Christmas Worked Pay. Article 11, Section 4.B, sets forth the provisions for receiving Christmas Worked Pay. This section authorizes Chistmas Worked Pay only on the employee's holiday. Specifically, "... in addition to the holiday pay to which the employee is entitled..." The grievant, in this case, was non-scheduled on his Christmas holiday which was the service day, December 25, 1981. When the grievant reported to work at 2030 hours on December 25, he was reporting for the service day, December 26. Therefore, the grievant's work was not in conjunction with Holiday Leave and does not qualify for the Christmas Worked Based upon the above considerations, this grievance is hereby denied.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

and

GRIEVANCE NO. NC-C-6085

W. LITTRELL
KANSAS CITY, MISSOURI

ISSUED: August 16, 1978

THE GRIEVANCE

This grievance arose in the Kansas City, Missouri Post Office when the Postal Service failed to assign the Grievant to work on a holiday for which he had volunteered to work. The parties agreed to present the issues involved to the Associate Impartial Chairman on the basis of the following stipulation:

> 'Have the parties agreed upon a remedy applicable to grievances which arise under Article XI, Section 6, of the 1973 or 1975 national agreement, when the Postal Service admits that an employee who volunteered to work a holiday or a day designated as a holiday was erroneously not scheduled to work; and if not, what, if any, is the appropriate remedy?'

It was agreed that the grievance would be argued on the basis of the stipulation rather than the facts surrounding the specific incident in the Kansas City Post Office.

BACKGROUND

The issues center around the language of Article XI, Section 6 of the 1973[1] National Agreement which reads:

> "Section 6. Holiday Schedule. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be posted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. As many full-time and part-time regular schedule employees as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as their holiday. Such employees will not be required to work on a holiday or day designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so. An employee scheduled to work on a holiday who does not work shall not receive holiday pay, unless such absence is based on an extreme emergency situation and is excused by the Employer."

As stated in Section 6, the priority sequence of assignment on a given holiday, for purposes of this case, can be taken to be as follows:

(a) all casuals and part-time flexibles are to be utilized to the maximum extent possible;

(b) all full-time and part-time regulars with needed skills who wish to work on the holiday shall be afforded the opportunity to work;

(c) those full-time and part-time regular employees who cannot "be spared" from work on the holiday.

[1] The language of this Section was not changed in the 1975 negotiations.

This effectively establishes three categories of employees for use in performing work on holidays, but does not spell out the order in which individual employees are to be selected within each category. This matter is left to local negotiations and is a proper subject for negotiations under Article XXX of the 1973 National Agreement which reads in relevant part:

"ARTICLE XXX - LOCAL IMPLEMENTATION

A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1973 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.

B. There shall be a 30-day perio of local implementation to commence 45 days after the effective date of this Agreement, on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1973 National Agreement:

13. The method of selecting employees to work on a holiday.

Local agreements are reported to vary considerably dealing with this matter. Obviously, no local agreement can vary the order of selection as among the three categories set forth in Article XI, Section 6. But in each such category there are important practical problems to determine which employees shall be assigned first -- i.e., as between (1)"casuals" and "flexibles"; (2)"part-time" and "full-time" regulars; and (3)in determining how to select employees who cannot be spared. These intensely practical problems seemingly are left to the local parties under Article XXX.

In April, 1975, the parties were faced with "10 or 15" grievances under Article XI, Section 6. James Rademacher, President of the National Association of Letter Carriers, and David Charters, Director of the Office of Grievance Procedures, met to discuss the grievances. As a result of those discussions, an informal, oral arrangement was made to categorize the grievances and dispose of them. The arrangement was said to be as follows[1]:

> "The agreed remedy . . . is that the aggrieved employee who should have been selected to work the holiday . . . will be compensated at the straight time rate for one-half of the hours involved."

This arrangement apparently related only to full-time regular "volunteers" under the second category in Article XI, Section 6.

It appears that Rademacher and Charters applied it until October, 1975 when Charters transferred to the Central Region. The parties assiduously avoided arguing details of individual settlements on the basis that each settlement was non-citable and non-precedential. The Postal Service stresses that such an approach was part of the arrangement with Rademacher. Details of the nature and number of settlements are, therefore, not available. Even though Charters was no longer available to meet with Rademacher in regard to the arrangement, his successor issued the following memorandum in July, 1976:

DATE: 7/26/76
SUBJECT: NALC Holiday Grievance Settlements

General Managers, Labor Relations
All Regions

In April, 1975, a settlement agreement was reached with the NALC relative to the remedy for 'pecking order' violations regarding the scheduling of full time employees to work on holidays pursuant to the provisions of Article XI of the National Agreement. These grievances have previously only been settled at Step 4 or in pre-arbitration decisions. Authorization is now being granted to settle holiday scheduling violations at Step 3 regarding NALC grievance cases in accordance with the instructions provided below.

The agreed remedy, which is provided on a non-precedent and non-citable basis, is that the aggrieved employee who should have been selected to work the holiday pursuant to the National Agreement or local agreement will be compensated at the straight time rate for one-half of the hours involved. This remedy does not apply to an aggrieved employee who actually worked.

Mr. Rademacher has delegated authority to the Union officials at the regional level to settle grievance cases as outlined above.

There is no reason to doubt that this memorandum accurately reflects the arrangement developed with Rademacher. Nevertheless, there is no evidence that Rademacher subsequently delegated such authority to Union officials as spelled out in the memo nor is there evidence that any Union Representative, other than Rademacher, actually dealt with such a grievance. In any event, incoming NALC President, Joseph Vacca, faced with the Kansas City grievance, refused to settle it on the basis of the Rademacher-Charters arrangement.

The Postal Service, in the present case agrees that the Kansas City Post Office did not follow the agreed sequence established under Article XI, Section 6 within the category of employees' volunteering for holiday work.

CONTENTIONS

The Union argues that it is not bound by the Rademacher-Charters arrangement. It says that the arrangement was used by the two men to settle grievances on a non-citable, non-precedential basis and the arrangement is not necessarily binding on the Union.

In regard to the remedy, the Union maintains that, no matter the "pecking order" established by local agreement within the volunteer category, an employee has the clear right to volunteer for holiday work and, all other things being equal, he thereby becomes entitled to be assigned to work on that holiday in the proper order. When another employee is assigned to work the holiday in favor of the employee with a prior right, the Postal Service is in violation of the National Agreement and should make up to the employee that which he lost; i.e., the additional pay he would have received for working the holiday had he been given his proper opportunity to work.

The Union says that an employee volunteers to work a holiday for the pay involved and, to the extent that he is improperly denied that holiday assignment, he suffers a loss of the pay which he volunteered, and thereby gained a right, to earn.

The Postal Service maintains that the Rademacher-Charters arrangement, even though unwritten, is a binding agreement and when the parties entered into the agreement they contemplated that it would cover not only current but also prospective holiday work grievances. It says that such arrangements are commonplace in settling groups of grievances with common elements and that negating the Rademacher-Charters agreement would undermine future arrangements to handle grievance problems.

In regard to the remedy, the Postal Service proposes that, if it is determined that no binding agreement arose between Rademacher and Charters, the parties should be instructed to work each grievance out on a case-by-case basis since, "these matters are matters inherently in which a right arises, if at all, only under a local memorandum (of) understanding."1/

1/ Transcript p. 18.

It says further that, if the Associate Impartial Chairman rejects that approach, it would be appropriate that no penalty be assessed and the offending Post Office be informed that it should not violate Article XI, Section 6. The Postal Service claims that the purpose of Article XI, Section 6 is to provide, to the extent possible, full-time and part-time regular employees with the holiday off work. It says that, to the extent that an employee who volunteered to work the holiday and due to Postal Service error did not work the holiday, he was nevertheless given the full measure of the "day off" principle set out in the National Agreement.

The Service denied that any right to be paid for the missed holiday assignment accrues to a properly sequenced volunteer. It claims that, at best, he should be offered an assignment to work a future holiday since, in the first instance, he suffered no loss. For this proposition the Service relies on the language of the National Agreement set out in Article VIII, Section 5,C(2) which deals with the distribution of overtime among City Letter Carriers on a quarterly basis.

FINDINGS

The first issue here is raised by stipulation, and no elaboration is necessary concerning the facts surrounding the Kansas City grievance. The Postal Service agrees that a local violation of Article XI, Section 6 occurred when holiday work was given to another employee when the Grievant had established a prior right to that work.

In dealing with such grievances, Rademacher and Charters fashioned a formula which apparently rested on their respective evaluations of the language of Article XI, Section 6. Their oral arrangement obviously reflected a compromise (designed to dispose of grievances in hand) because Article XI, Section 6 does not precisely spell out a remedy for such an infraction. The view of the Postal Service that such an oral, informal arrangement must be observed in perpetuity is not sound. The oral arrangement was just that -- an arrangement. It represented a transitory compromise that arose from a problem under Section 6, but the application of the compromise was on a "non-precedent and non-citable basis."

The Postal Service's argument, that if a right exists it arises only under the local memorandum of understanding, is not valid. Article XXX, Item 13 refers only to the method of selecting employees to work on a holiday within the three categories clearly established in Article XI, Section 6 since the local parties obviously have no authority to change the National Agreement. There is nothing in Item 13 to suggest the need for local agreement to remedy violations of Article XI, Section 6. The parties made a good faith effort to provide certain rights to a holiday volunteer when they negotiated Article XI, Section 6. To maintain that the language, "shall be afforded the opportunity to work," is meaningless is to fly in the face of that good faith effort. The Local Memorandum of Agreement establishes only the "pecking order" among employees to whom that right accrues. Certainly, there would have been no reason for Rademacher and Charters to enter into the "non-precedential, non-citable" compromise if the local parties had available to them the mechanism of Article XXX to resolve such issues. Under these circumstances, to remand each grievance to be reviewed in the light of the Local Memorandum of Understanding would be pointless.

The negotiators in the 1975 negotiations were aware of the problem but made no change in Article XI, Section 6 to reflect the informal case-by-case compromise. Certainly, a permanent arrangement acceptable to principals for both parties who were on the scene during the negotiations would have received consideration for inclusion in the National Agreement. Perhaps the most important factor that made the arrangement exclusively that of Rademacher and Charters was the metho by which it was applied. Rules for categorizing overlooked holiday volunteer grievances are not in evidence. If there were any, they apparently resided with Rademacher and Charters. Moreover, the parties respected the non-citable and non-precedential nature of the individual settlements. No light is shed on the criteria that Rademacher used to determine whether a grievance fell within the purview of the arrangement. Given the oral and informal nature of the arrangement and its case-by-case application of a non-citable, non-precedential basis, it cannot now be held to constitute a binding agreement.

The second question, under the stipulation, is to determine the appropriate remedy for violation of Article XI, Section 6. The Postal Service suggests that the affected employee be given the next opportunity to work a holiday within the quarter much as the distribution of overtime for City Letter Carriers is handled. But holiday work problems are not similar to overtime problems. A holiday not worked is lost forever. Overtime situations occur frequently and those on the "overtime desired" list have an opportunity, over the course of a calendar quarter, to work a relatively equal number of overtime hours. Moreover, an employee may desire to work on Memorial Day but not on Independence Day or some other holiday.

The Service suggests that the overlooked holiday volunteer is no worse off than other employees who do not work on the holiday since the purpose of Article XI, Section 6 is to maximize the n[illegible] ployees who are off on the holiday. This argument is not persuasive when it is considered that the overlooked holiday volunteer elected not to be off on the holiday and the employee who worked in his stead was covered by the same language.

Additionally, the Service's argument that the overlooked holiday volunteer lost nothing since he did not work the holiday and should, therefore not be entitled to payment for such hours, has no merit. Such a construction of Article XI, Section 6 would effectually negate the part of that Section pertinent to this case and any local agreement worked out in accordance with Article XXX,(B)13. Clearly, the overlooked holiday volunteer suffered the loss of pay for the hours that he would have worked except for Postal Service error.

The thrust of Article XI, Section 6 is to permit the maximum number of full-time and part-time regulars to enjoy holidays off work if they do not desire to work. It also makes clear that employees who are not scheduled for the holiday (or are scheduled off) have a right to volunteer to work on that holiday. Once a volunteer is reached (in whatever order the parties may have agreed locally), he is entitled to be assigned to work the holiday if his services are required. Here the Postal Service admits that it violated Article XI, Section 6 by failing to work the grieving employee on a holiday according to his rank in the volunteer category.

There is no purpose to be served by instructing the parties (as the Service suggests) to deal with each incident on a case-by-case basis since this would simply evade the issue raised by the parties' stipulation. Thus the only reasonably appropriate remedy available, in the light of the plain language of Article XI, Section 6, is to require that the overlooked holiday volunteer be compensated for the total number of hours lost.

AWARD

The oral, informal, case-by-case, non-precedent technique used to remedy individual grievances under Article XI, Section 6 of the 1973 National Agreement is not binding for cases other than those actually settled thereunder. The appropriate remedy now is to compensate the overlooked holiday volunteer for the total number of hours of work lost.

Case No: H8C-5D-C-14577

BACKGROUND

The USPS selected employees from the "overtime desired list" to work overtime November 10, 1980. The Union claims that other employees for whom November 10th was a holiday and who had volunteered to work that day had a superior claim to this work. It contends that the Postal Service's failure to allow them to work was a violation of Article XI, Section 6 of the National Agreement.

The three full-time regular employees who worked are scheduled off on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. The Veteranrs day holiday fell orI Tuesday November 11, 19$(3. Pursuant to Article XI, Section 5-B, Monday, November 10th was considered " a designated holiday for these three employees. The holiday schedule was posted on Wednesday, November 5th. Prior to the posting, the three employees volunteered to work on on day November 10th, their designated holiday. Managenment did not list them on the schedule to work that day. The problem arose when the Service, sometime after Wednesday, November 5th but before Monday November 10 th decided it would need additional full-time regulars on Monday November 10th. It choose seven, from the "overtime desired list." They worked at the time and one-half rate on Monday November 10th of which was not a designated holiday for any of the seven. The three employees not on the list did not work and filed a grievance contending that their right to work on the designated holiday violated the provisions of Article XI, Section 6.

UNION'S POSITION

Management's obligation to prefer regular volunteers did not end with the posting of the holiday schedule. The obligation continued to exist after the posting.

USPS' POSITION

Its obligation to regular volunteers ceases with the posting of the schedule. The Service did not become aware of the need for additional employees until after the November 5th posting. Had it known at the time the schedule was posted that additional employees would be needed on Monday, November 10th it would have placed the &rieued employees on the schedule. The Service concedes that their claim to extra work being available on November 10th would, in these circumstances negate utilizing the three volunteers, rather then those on the overtime desired list. Therefore, it was free to resort to the overtime desired list to satisfy the needs on November 10th.

ARBITRATOR'S OPINION

A close reading does not support the Union's claim. Only the applicable provisions of Article XI, Section 6 specifically the second and third sentences apply to this case. Article XI, Section 6 does not give regular volunteers any right in relation to employees on the overtime desired list,

None of the documents submitted by the Union warrant a different conclusion. This includes the arbitration settlement in Case No. AB-N-2746 where employees on the overtime desired list were improperly passed over. That is not the situation here. The other grievance settlement contain statements that "the overtime desired list . . . is not applicable to holiday scheduling." That appears to refer to initial posted holiday schedule, not to later additions to the schedule due to changed circumstances.

Statement of the Award: The grievance is denied.

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests the PasCal Service's action in selecting employees from the "overtime desired list" to work overtime on November 10, 1980. The APWU says others for wham November 10 was a holiday and who had volunteered to work that day had a superior claim to this work. It believes the Postal Service's failure to allow them to work was a violation of Article XI, Section 6 of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

The essential facts are not in dispute. M. Avery, M. Bettman and D, Lane are full-time regular Distribution Clerks in the Bellview, Washington Post Office. They are scheduled off on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. The Veterans Day holiday fell on Tuesday, November 11, 1980. Pursuant to Article XI, Section 5-B, Monday, November 10 was considered a designated holiday for these three Clerks. That provision states: "When an employee's scheduled non-work day falls on a day observed as a holiday, the employee's scheduled workday preceding the holiday~ shall be designated as that employee's holiday."

The holiday schedule was posted on Wednesday, November S. Avery, Bettman and Lane had, prior to-this posting, volunteered to work on Monday, November 10, their designated holiday. Management did not list them on the schedule to work that day. It apparently had no need of their services at the time of the posting. The parties stipulated at the arbitration hearing that the posted schedule, as of Wednesday, November 5, was "proper."

The problem arose when Management, sometime after Wednesday, November 5 but before Monday, November 10, decided it would need additional full-time regular Distribution Clerks on Monday, November 10. It chose seven such Clerks from the "overtime desired list." They worked at the time and one-half rate on Monday, November 10.* Their use is covered by Article VIII, Section 5 which reads in part:

> "Overtime Assignments. when needed, overtime work for regular full-time employees shall be scheduled among qualified employees doing similar work in the work" location where the employees regularly work in accordance with the following:

* Monday, November 10 was not a designated holiday for any of these seven employees.

A. Two weeks prior to the start of each calendar quarter, full-time regular employees desiring to work overtime during that quarter shall place their names on an 'Overtime Desired' list.

B. Lists will be established by craft, section or tour in accordance with Article XXX, Local Implementation.

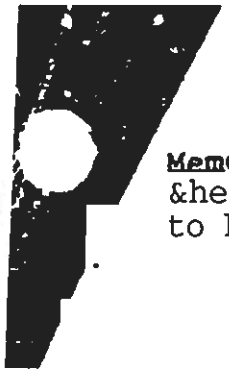
Avery, Bettman and Lane did not work on Monday November 10. They grieved, alleging that their right to work on designated holiday was superior to the rights of other Clerks on the "overtime desired list." They maintain that because they had volunteered to work this holiday, they should have been chosen. Their claim rests largely on Article XI, Section 6:

"Holiday Schedule. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be pasted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. As many full-time and part-time ~~regular schedule employees~~ as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as there holiday. Such employees will ~~not be required to work on a holiday or day~~ designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and ~~unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work~~ on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so. An employee scheduled to work on a holiday who does not work shall not receive holiday pay, unless such absence is based on an extreme emergency situation and is excused by the Employer." (Emphasis added)

A few remaining points should be noted. No employee for whom Monday, November 10 was a designated holiday was required to work that day against his wishes. The grievants worked on Tuesday, November 11, the Veterans Day holiday, and were paid time and one-half for their work. The Local



Memorandum of Understanding in effect in November 1980 had the following provision, Article XI, Section 6, with respect to holiday schedules:

> "A. After determination has been made by Management as to the number of employees needed on a holiday or designated holiday, scheduling of employees will be accomplished in the following order:
>
> 1. Full or part-time regular employees who have volunteered to work the holiday.
>
> 2. Part-time flexible employees who have volunteered to work the holiday.
>
> 3* Casual employees.
>
> 4. Part-time flexible employees.
> 5. Full or part-time regular's who have not volunteered to work on the holiday by inverse seniority."

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

This grievance concerns the Postal Service's obligation regarding additional Clerk jobs which had to be filled on November 10, 1980. The APWU says the Clerks fur whom November 10 was a designated holiday and who had volunteered to work that day should have been chosen pursuant to Article XI, Section 6. The Postal Service states that it had no such contract obligation and that it was within its rights in choosing Clerks from the "overtime desired list" pursuant to Article VIII, Section 5. The question here is which of these contract provisions, if either, Management was required to apply under the facts of this case.

The Postal Service's position at the arbitration hearing is a helpful starting point in this analysis. It acknowledges that had it known at the time the schedule was posted on Wednesday, November 5 that additional Clerks would be needed on Monday, November 10, it would have placed the aggrieved Clerks on the schedule. It concedes that their claim to the extra Clerk work on November 10 would, in these circumstances, be superior to the claim of anyone m the

"overtime desired list." This concession derives, it seems to me, from the Local Memorandum of Understanding. Article or section 6A of this Memorandum describes the "order" in which people will be "scheduled" after Management determines "the number of employees needed on a holiday or designated holiday..." First priority on such a schedule is given to "full or part-time regular [s]...who have volunteered to work the holiday."

However, the Postal Service insists that its obligation to regular-volunteers ceases with the posting of the schedule. It stresses that Management did not become aware of the need for additional Clerks until after the November 5 posting. It believes it was then no longer bound by the Local Memorandum of Understanding. It urges that it was free, after November 5, to resort to the "overtime desired list" to satisfy its needs on November 10.

The APWU maintains that Management's obligation to prefer regular-volunteers did not end with the posting of the holiday schedule. It states that this obligation continued to exist after the posting. It relies not on the Local Memorandum of Understanding but rather Article .X1, Section 6 of the National Agreement.

A close reading of this provision-does not support the APWU'S case. Article XI, Section 6 consists of four sentences. only the second and third have any possible application to this dispute. But the purpose of-these sentences is to require, where possible, that full-time (or part-time) regulars be given their holiday off.* The second sentence calls for Management to "excuse" from holiday work "as many full-time and part-time regulars as can be spared..." The third sentence recognizes+ that these regulars may be required to work on their holiday. But it provides that this cannot happen "unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible" and "unless all full-time and part-time regulars. . . who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so." All regular-volunteers, in other words, must be used for holiday work before Management can compel regular, non-volunteers to perform such work. That is the only preference granted to regular-volunteers. section 6 allows them to exercise this right only in relation to regular, non-volunteers. Or, to express the point in terms of the present grievance, Article XI, Section 6 does not give regular-volunteers any right in relation to employees on the "overtime desired list."

* Throughout this discussion, the word "holiday" should be taken to mean the actual holiday or the designated holiday.

For these reasons, the APWU'S reliance on Article X1, Section 6 seems misplaced. It attempts to bring this case withim the ambit of this provision by arguing that the grievants "deserved to work rather than require employees from the overtime desired list." But, to repeat, regular-volunteers in the situation presented here do not have a preference ever employees on the "overtime desired list.?' Their preference is limited in the manner set forth in Article XI, Section 6. The APWU seeks to enlarge this preference. That cannot be done without modifying or adding to the terms of the National Agreement.

None of the documents referred to by the APWU warrant a differen& conclusion in this case. The March 1974 Holiday Settlement Agreement relates almost entirely to holiday pay questions. It has no bearing on the issue raised by the instant grievance. The pre-arbitration settlement in Case No. AB-N-24,76 was concerned with employees on the "overtime desired list" who were "improperly passed over by Management in the selection for overtime work assignments." That is not the situation here. Other grievance settlements contain statements that "the overtime desired list... is riot applicable to holiday scheduling." But that appears ,to refer to the initial posted holiday schedule, not to later additions to the schedule due to changed circumstances.*

There has been no violation of the National Agreement.

BACKGROUND:

On Wednesday, December 17, 1980, the Christmas Holiday schedule was posted at the Salem, Oregon Post Office pursuant to the provisions of Article XI, Section 6 of the then current 1978-1981 National Agreement. On December 21, 1980, the schedule was revised by Managment for Tour III and Tour I employees. Because of this revision, seven (7) full-time regular employees, who had been scheduled to work the holiday, were no longer required to work on that holiday. For them it was a designed holiday, and they were paid their regular holiday pay.

The Union took the position that once the schedule was posted, pursuant to the provisions of Article XI, Section 6, and the terns of a settlement agreement between the USPS and the APWU NALC and the Mailhandlers, made on March 4, 1974, the employees on the posted schedule were "guaranteed" those holiday hours and they should be paid as if they had worked the holdiay.

The USPS argued that subsequent to the signing of the March 4, 1974 settlement agreement, referred to in the paragraph above, the Employer issued several provisions of the the F-21 Time and Attendance, Handbook as well as the Employee and Labor Relations Manual which related to the times when employees were guaranteed hours under the terms of Article VIII of the National Agreement. Guarantees, according to these provisions, are only provided for hours actually worked. If the APWU deisred to contest the provisions of the F-21 Handbook and the E&LR Manual, it should have done so as provided for in Article XIX of the National Agreement or those provisions become part of the terms of the National Agreement. Additionally, the Postal Service claimed that the March 4, 1974 settlement agreement did not create any "guarante According to the Service, the terms of that agreement did not provi a payment compensation requirement when the Postal Service changed the posted schedule for that holiday. In fact, the USPS asserted, Article XI, Section 6 indicated a clear desire not to use regular or part-time regular employees whenever possible on holidays, and this is what the Postal Service did on this occasion by deleting the names of these seven regular employees after the indicated mail volume showed that they could be spared.

The Union referred to a decision issued by a Regional Arbitrator in Case No. AC-C-1397/S-Min.44 on November 12, 1979, wherein the Union claimed that the Arbitrator determined that scheduled employees had a right to work the hours they were scheduled to work on the notice posted pursuant to Articls XX, Section 6. The Postal Service said that the case referred to by the Union could be distinguished because those employees had their ported hours of work changed on the very dry they were scheduled to work, and they were then called upon to work hours other than those which had been initially posted.

THE ISSUE:

Based upon the undisputed statement of operative facts which triggered this grievance, and the contentions of the Parties, as set out above, the issue beform the Arbitrator can be stated as follows:

> Are the seven regular employees of the Salem, Oregon Post Office entitled to be paid as if they had workrd the Christmas Holiday in 1980? If so, what shall the appropriate remedy be?

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

In this case, the Union made a point of emphasizing that Management has an obligation to manage. Under the terms of the Agreement and the settlement agreement made in 1974, the Union alleged that once a management decision was made to notify these employees they were to work the holiday, Management could not change its mind and be relieved of the obligation to pay these grievants as if they had worked.

Section 6 of Article XI read as follows:

Section 6. Holiday Schedule. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be posted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. As many full-time and part-time regular schedule employees as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as their holiday. Such employees will nut be required to work on a holiday or day designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexible8 are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so. An employee scheduled to work on a holiday who does not work shall not receive holiday pay, unless such absence is based upon an extreme emergency situation and is excused by the Employee.

Obviously, Section 6, quoted above, does not address the subject of employees initially scheduled to work whose work assignment is later revoked. For this reason, the APWJ referred to the settlement agreement made in 1974 to "flesh out" the understanding on this issue which they claimed had been reached.

Referring to this settlement, the Union claimed that Section 3(b) and (c) of that agreement spelled out the Postal Service's only right to replace an employee on the posted schedule. Those provisions read:

> b. In the event that, subsequent to the Article XI, Section 6 posting period, an emergency situation attributable to an "Act(s) of God" arises which requires the use of manpower on that holiday in excess of that posted pursuant to Article XI, Section 6, full time regular employees required to work in this circumstance(s) shall only be paid for such holiday in accordance with Article XI, Sections 2, 3, and 4.

C. When a full time regular employee scfied-uled to work on a holiday in accordance with the provisions of Article XI, Section 6, is unable to or fails to work on the holiday, the Employer may require another full time regular employee to work such schedule and such replacement employee shall only be paif for such holiday in accordance with Article XI, Scctions 2, 3 and 4. The selection of such replacement employees shall be made in accordance with any applicable local aqreement consisent with the terms of the 1973 National Agreement.

Once again, the specific provisions relied upon in this settlement agreement do not address any rights or guaranteres accruing to a scheduled regular employees whose name is later deleted from the posted holiday work schedule. Only Section 5 of that 1974 agreement deals with a guarantee and that is concerned with the guarantee of eight hours "of work or pay in lieu thereof, in addition to the holiday pay to which he is entitled under Article XI, Sections 2 and 3.", for an employee who does work on his holiday. No guarantee to an employee who does not work is provided by the terms of this 1974 settlement.

Since that is so, the Union pointed to the instructions issued to the field shortly aftor the 1974 settlement was reached. In tha first of these documents, identified as Union Exhibit 2, and dated April 17, 1974, all Postmasters were advised as follows:

"No manager should attempt to 'play it safe' by adopting a policy of scheduling everybody to work on a holiday and then later releasing those employee not required. Such a tactic absolutely will not be tolerated since it would completely subvert our obligation under Article XI, Section 6, of the National Agreement.

That obligation undertaken by the Postal Service in Article XI, Section 6 was to use as few regular and part-time regulate employee as possible on a holiday and to allow them to be off fron work on their regularly scheduled holidays. Clearly, if all employees were scheduled and then regulars and part time regulars were later released, that would improperly avoid the commitment the Postal Service had made to allow as many of such employeess as possible to enjoy the holiday with advance knowledge that this would be their earned right under the contract. Once again, however, no commitment to vest a right to be paid or to guarantee that the employee would be paid in lieu of working, if the schedule were later amended to delete their names, is expressed in these instructions or guidance issued to the field with regard to the application and interpretation of Section 6 of Article XI.

The Union, with knowledge that an express guarantee was not to be found in the documents referred to above, also submitted as Union Exhbit 3, a Postal Bulletin dated May 16, 1974, and more specifically instructions contained therein dealing with "Timely Posting of Holiday Work Schedules." After repeating the requirement of Section 6 and the previous instructions which had been published this Postal Bulleting provision went on to advise:

> "The holiday for full time employeses will be treated as any other day in terms of the call-in. A full-time employee will be entitled to eight hours work or pay in lieu thereof. The same provision will be applicable on the holiday or the day designated as the employee's holiday. You must take this into consideration in scheduling employees, so that you don't schedule manpower in excess of that which your workload is likely to require."

An examination of the thrust an actual language used in this instruction indicates quite clearly that it is concerned with the USPS obligation when employees are actually called in who are not needed and who may be sent home, on their holiday, before having eight hours of work to complete.

The Union also called attention to other instructions issued in Labor Relations Reporter No. 20, in July of 1974, dealing with the March 4, 1974 settlement.

Most specifically, the Union made reference to the guidance provided starting on page 2 of that document. That particular. provision reads as follows:

1. That the obligations set forth in the entire settlement agreement pertain only to full-time regular employees.

2. That if the postmaster complies with the Wednesday posting provision found in Article XI,

Section 6, and works the employee in accordance with that schedule that was posted the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls, the employee will be entitled to payment only in accordance with the terms of the National Agreement. There will be no penalty pay provision upon management for this employee.

3. That an employee ha8 no right to work his normal schedule on a holiday--his schedule is that which is posted for him in accordance with Article XI, Section 6.

4. That an employee does, howwer, have a fight to work the schedule which management posts for him on the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. *

5. . .n

As can be seen, the instructions referred to above only provide that an employee who has been scheduled to work can expect to work and can be required to work the scheduled time for him or her that has been posted and not his or her regular schedule or some hours other than those which were posted for that employee to work on the holiday. No guarantee or inference of a guarantee or penalty for not working an employee at all on the holiday is to be found in the language quoted above.

This same item in the Labor Relations Reporter goes on to state there is only one guarantee contained in Article XI and that is a provision for penalty pay for an employee who is not time scheduled to work and is then called in or volunteers to come in to meet manpower needs on his holiday.

It is axiomatic that if guarantees or vested rights are to be created by the application of the provisions of an agreement, it is incumbent upon the beneficiary of such rights or guarantees to see to it that these are clearly apalled out in the agreement and not to be discerned by inference or innuendo. For this reason, merit must be found in the argumemt of the Employor that specific provisions were written into the F-21 Time and Attendance Handbook and to the E&LR Manual, subsequent to the making of the March 4, 1974 settlement and well after Section 6 of Article XI first appeal in National Agreements, which clearly define when payment is to

Certain obligations are imposed upon management by virtue of the specific language of Section 6 and the instructions contained in the documents placed in evidence by both Parties. With regard to the factual situation which gave rise to this case, Management certainly would not have had the right to schedule all regulars and part-time regulars just to be sure that sufficient manpower was on hand on the holiday and then to delete all such names and only require casuals to work the holiday. If that were the case present the Union clearly would have been entitled to have the arbitrator direct that Management cease and desist from scheduling in that manner. That would have been an abuse of the obligation which Management had undertaken. Management admitted such in its advice to the field. Such a situation did not occur in the case at hand or we must assure that it did not occur or it would have been made part of the record in the processing of this grievance.

What must have happened was that Panaqement did overestimate the volume of mail or duties to be performed during the two tours in question on the holiday. When that became apparent, a few days after the Wednesday schedule had been posted, but prior to the holiday itself, the schedule was revised to delete seven name No evidence is to be found in this record that Management "played it safe" and schedule well above any rationally estimated manpower requirements for the holiday and alerted regular full-time emplovees unnecessarily that they ware required to work and in that fashion disrupted their holiday plans. Section 6 of Article XI was specific ally designed to minimize the possibility that would occur and to require that Management schedule accordingly. That Management knowingly ignored such an obligation is not the case presented in this proceeding.

Once a schedule is posted and an employee is called in to work, that employee can rely upon the fact that he or she will only work the hours on the posted schedule and not his or her regular hours or some other hours without the Employer suffering an additional penalty. That, too, was not the case presented in this proceeding. Such a case is more skin to the case referred to by the Union and decided as Case No. AC-C- 1397/5-MIN-44.

For the reasons set forth above, the Undersigned makes the following Statement of the Award: The grievance is denied.

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests the Postal Service's action in selecting employees from the "overtime desired list" to work overtime on November 10, 1980. The APWU says others for whom November 10 was a holiday and who had volunteered to work that day had a superior claim to this work. It believes the Postal Service's failure to allow them to work was a violation of Article XI, Section 6 of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

The essential facts are not in dispute. M. Avery, M. Bettman and D. Lane are full-time regular Distribution Clerks in the Bellview, Washington Post Office. They are scheduled off on Tuesdays and Wednesdays. The Veterans Day holiday fell on Tuesday, November 11, 1980. Pursuant to Article XI, Section 5-B, Monday, November 10 was considered a designated holiday for these three Clerks. That provision states: "When an employee's scheduled non-work day falls on a day observed as a holiday, the employee's scheduled workday preceding the holiday, shall be designated as that employee's holiday."

The holiday schedule was posted on Wednesday, November 5. Avery, Bettman and Lane had, prior to this posting, volunteered to work on Monday, November 10, their designated holiday. Management did not list them on the schedule to work that day. It apparently had no need of their services at the time of the posting. The parties stipulated at the arbitration hearing that the posted schedule, as of Wednesday, November 5, was "proper."

The problem arose when Management, sometime after Wednesday, November 5 but before Monday, November 10, decided it would need additional full-time regular Distribution Clerks on Monday, November 10. It chose seven such Clerks from the "overtime desired list." They worked at the time and one-half rate on Monday, November 10.* Their use is covered by Article VIII, Section 5 which reads in part:

> "Overtime Assignments. When needed, overtime work for regular full-time employees shall be scheduled among qualified employees doing similar work in the work location where the employees regularly work in accordance with the following:

* Monday, November 10 was not a designated holiday for any of these seven employees.

A. Two weeks prior to the start of each calendar quarter, full-time regular employees desiring to work overtime during that quarter shall place their names on an 'Overtime Desired' list.

B. Lists will be established by craft, section or tour in accordance with Article XXX, Local Implementation.

Avery, Bettman and Lane did not work on Monday, November 10. They grieved, alleging that their right to work on their designated holiday was superior to the rights of other Clerks on the "overtime desired list." They maintain that because they had volunteered to work this holiday, they should have been chosen. Their claim rests largely on Article XI, Section 6:

"Holiday Schedule. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be posted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. As many full-time and part-time regular schedule employees as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as their holiday. Such employees will not be required to work on a holiday or day designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so. An employee scheduled to work on a holiday who does not work shall not receive holiday pay, unless such absence is based on an extreme emergency situation and is excused by the Employer." (Emphasis added)

A few remaining points should be noted. No employee for whom Monday, November 10 was a designated holiday was required to work that day against his wishes. The grievants worked on Tuesday, November 11, the Veterans Day holiday, and were paid time and one-half for their work. The Local

Memorandum of Understanding in effect in November 1980 had the following provision, Article XI, Section 6, with respect to holiday schedules:

> "A. After determination has been made by Management as to the number of employees needed on a holiday or designated holiday, scheduling of employees will be accomplished in the following order:
>
> 1. Full or part-time regular employees who have volunteered to work the holiday.
>
> 2. Part-time flexible employees who have volunteered to work the holiday.
>
> 3. Casual employees.
>
> 4. Part-time flexible employees.
> 5. Full or part-time regulars who have not volunteered to work on the holiday by inverse seniority."

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

This grievance concerns the Postal Service's obligation regarding additional Clerk jobs which had to be filled on November 10, 1980. The APWU says the Clerks for whom November 10 was a designated holiday and who had volunteered to work that day should have been chosen pursuant to Article XI, Section 6. The Postal Service states that it had no such contract obligation and that it was within its rights in choosing Clerks from the "overtime desired list" pursuant to Article VIII, Section 5. The question here is which of these contract provisions, if either, Management was required to apply under the facts of this case.

The Postal Service's position at the arbitration hearing is a helpful starting point in this analysis. It acknowledges that had it known at the time the schedule was posted on Wednesday, November 5 that additional Clerks would be needed on Monday, November 10, it would have placed the aggrieved Clerks on the schedule. It concedes that their claim to the extra Clerk work on November 10 would, in these circumstances, be superior to the claim of anyone on the

"overtime desired list." This concession derives, it seems to me, from the Local Memorandum of Understanding. Article XI, Section 6A of this Memorandum describes the "order" in which people will be "scheduled" after Management determines "the number of employees needed on a holiday or designated holiday..." First priority on such a schedule is given to "full or part-time regular[s]...who have volunteered to work the holiday."

However, the Postal Service insists that its obligation to regular-volunteers ceases with the posting of the schedule. It stresses that Management did not become aware of the need for additional Clerks until after the November 5 posting. It believes it was then no longer bound by the Local Memorandum of Understanding. It urges that it was free, after November 5, to resort to the "overtime desired list" to satisfy its needs on November 10.

The APWU maintains that Management's obligation to prefer regular-volunteers did not end with the posting of the holiday schedule. It states that this obligation continued to exist after the posting. It relies not on the Local Memorandum of Understanding but rather Article XI, Section 6 of the National Agreement.

A close reading of this provision does not support the APWU's case. Article XI, Section 6 consists of four sentences. Only the second and third have any possible application to this dispute. But the purpose of these sentences is to require, where possible, that full-time (or part-time) regulars be given their holiday off.* The second sentence calls for Management to "excuse" from holiday work "as many full-time and part-time regulars as can be spared..." The third sentence recognizes that these regulars may be required to work on their holiday. But it provides that this cannot happen "unless all casuals and part-time flexibles are utilized to the maximum extent possible" and "unless all full-time and part-time regulars... who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so." All regular-volunteers, in other words, must be used for holiday work before Management can compel regular, non-volunteers to perform such work. That is the only preference granted to regular-volunteers. Article XI, Section 6 allows them to exercise this right only in relation to regular, non-volunteers. Or, to express the point in terms of the present grievance, Article XI, Section 6 does not give regular-volunteers any right in relation to employees on the "overtime desired list."

* Throughout this discussion, the word "holiday" should be taken to mean the actual holiday or the designated holiday.

For these reasons, the APWU's reliance on Article XI, Section 6 seems misplaced. It attempts to bring this case within the ambit of this provision by arguing that the grievants "deserved to work rather than require employees from the overtime desired list." But, to repeat, regular-volunteers in the situation presented here do not have a preference over employees on the "overtime desired list." Their preference is limited in the manner set forth in Article XI, Section 6. The APWU seeks to enlarge this preference. That cannot be done without modifying or adding to the terms of the National Agreement.

None of the documents referred to by the APWU warrant a different conclusion in this case. The March 1974 Holiday Settlement Agreement relates almost entirely to holiday pay questions. It has no bearing on the issue raised by the instant grievance. The pre-arbitration settlement in Case No. AB-N-2476 was concerned with employees on the "overtime desired list" who were "improperly passed over by Management in the selection for overtime work assignments." That is not the situation here. Other grievance settlements contain statements that "the overtime desired list...is not applicable to holiday scheduling." But that appears to refer to the initial posted holiday schedule, not to later additions to the schedule due to changed circumstances.*

There has been no violation of the National Agreement.

Dear Mr. Huerta:

On June 24, 1974, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The record evidence shows that employees whose designated holiday was February 16, 1974 were required to work on that day and that non-scheduled full-time employees were not given the opportunity to work if they wished to do so. To this extent, we find that the grievance is sustained.

It is our position that an employee classified as a letter carrier possesses the "needed skills", as provided in Article XI Section 6 the 1973 Agreement, to perform carrier duties on a holiday, provided he meets the necessary qualifications unique to a particular route, such as possession of a valid SP-46, etc. There is no provision in this section which provides for the assignment of "best qualified" employees to perform carrier work on a holiday. In the absence of any local memorandum of understanding providing to the contrary, full-time and part-time regular letter carriers who wish to work on a holiday must be afforded an opportunity to do so before arbitrarily assigning employees to work on their designated holiday.

By copy of this letter the Postmaster is instructed to comply with the provision set forth in Article XI Section 6 of the National Agreement with respect to affording the opportunity to work on a holiday to all full-time and part-time regular employees who wish to do so.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On March 3, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure as set forth in Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement.

The question in this grievance is whether management violated Article 11, Section 6 of the National Agreement, when light duty employees were precluded from the holiday schedule.

During our investigation, local management indicated that the only reason the three (3) light duty employees named in the grievance were precluded from the holiday schedule, was because they were not needed for Tour 3.

Furthermore, it is our position that all full-time and part-time regulars, including those who are on light duty, who possess needed skills and wish to work on the holiday be afforded an opportunity to do so. However, when local management is determining the number and categories of employees needed to work, a factor to be considered in scheduling a light duty employee, who wishes to work the holiday, is the medical restrictions imposed by the employees medical practitioner and whether that employee could in fact be utilized to do the work that would be available on the holiday.

Dear Mr. Hopton:

On September 9, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in these grievances is whether management violated Article 11 of the National Agreement by not scheduling light duty employees for holiday work.

During our discussion, we agreed to resolve the grievances based on our agreement to the following:

> All full-time and part-time regulars, including those who are on light duty, who possess needed skills and wish to work on the holiday may be afforded an opportunity to do so. However, when local management is determining the number and categories of employees needed to work, a factor to be considered in scheduling a light duty employee, who wishes to work the holiday, is the medical restrictions imposed by the employees medical practitioner and whether that employee could in fact be utilized to do the work that would be available on the holiday.

In the Matter of the Arbitration between AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION and UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	Re: Case No. H8C-SD-C-15429 Salem Oregon (A8-W-1517) OPINION AND AWARD

APPEARANCES:

For the USPS - J. K. Hellquist, Mgr., Arb., Branch
Central Region

For the APWU - Gerald "Andy" Anderson, Executive Aide, Clerk Craft

BACKGROUND:

On Wednesday, December 17, 1980, the Christmas Holiday schedule was posted at the Salem, Oregon Post Office pursuant to the provisions of Article XI, Section 6 of the then current 1978-1981 National Agreement. On December 21, 1980, the schedule was revised by Managment for Tour III and Tour I employees. Because of this revision, seven (7) full-time regular employees, who had been scheduled to work the holiday, were no longer required to work on that holiday. For them it was a designed holiday, and they were paid their regular holiday pay.

The Union took the position that once the schedule was posted, pursuant to the provisions of Article XI, Section 6, and the terns of a settlement agreement between the USPS and the APWU NALC and the Mailhandlers, made on March 4, 1974, the employees on the posted schedule were "guaranteed" those holiday hours and they should be paid as if they had worked the holdiay.

The USPS argued that subsequent to the signing of the March 4, 1974 settlement agreement, referred to in the paragraph above, the Employer issued several provisions of the the F-21 Time and Attendance, Handbook as well as the Employee and Labor Relations Manual which related to the times when employees were guaranteed hours under the terms of Article VIII of the National Agreement. Guarantees, according to these provisions, are only provided for hours actually worked. If the APWU deisred to contest the provisions of the F-21 Handbook and the E&LR Manual, it should have done so as provided for in Article XIX of the National Agreement or those provisions become part of the terms of the National Agreement. Additionally, the Postal Service claimed that the March 4, 1974 settlement agreement did not create any "guarante According to the Service, the terms of that agreement did not provi a payment compensation requirement when the Postal Service changed the posted schedule for that holiday. In fact, the USPS asserted, Article XI, Section 6 indicated a clear desire not to use regular or part-time regular employees whenever possible on holidays, and this is what the Postal Service did on this occasion by deleting the names of these seven regular employees after the indicated mail volume showed that they could be spared.

The Union referred to a decision issued by a Regional Arbitrator in Case No. AC-C-1397/S-Min.44 on November 12, 1979, wherein the Union claimed that the Arbitrator determined that scheduled employees had a right to work the hours they were scheduled to work on the notice posted pursuant to Articls XX, Section 6. The Postal Service said that the case referred to by the Union could be distinguished because those employees had their ported hours of work changed on the very dry they were scheduled to work, and they were then called upon to work hours other than those which had been initially posted.

THE ISSUE:

Based upon the undisputed statement of operative facts which triggered this grievance, and the contentions of the Parties, as set out above, the issue beform the Arbitrator can be stated as follows:

> Are the seven regular employees of the Salem, Oregon Post Office entitled to be paid as if they had workrd the Christmas Holiday in 1980? If so, what shall the appropriate remedy be?

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

In this case, the Union made a point of emphasizing that Management has an obligation to manage. Under the terms of the Agreement and the settlement agreement made in 1974, the Union alleged that once a management decision was made to notify these employees they were to work the holiday, Management could not change its mind and be relieved of the obligation to pay these grievants as if they had worked.

Section 6 of Article XI read as follows:

Section 6. Holiday Schedule. The Employer will determine the number and categories of employees needed for holiday work and a schedule shall be posted as of the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. As many full-time and part-time regular schedule employees as can be spared will be excused from duty on a holiday or day designated as their holiday. Such employees will nut be required to work on a holiday or day designated as their holiday unless all casuals and part-time flexible8 are utilized to the maximum extent possible, even if the payment of overtime is required, and unless all full-time and part-time regulars with the needed skills who wish to work on the holiday have been afforded an opportunity to do so. An employee scheduled to work on a holiday who does not work shall not receive holiday pay, unless such absence is based upon an extreme emergency situation and is excused by the Employee.

Obviously, Section 6, quoted above, does not address the subject of employees initially scheduled to work whose work assignment is later revoked. For this reason, the APWJ referred to the settlement agreement made in 1974 to "flesh out" the understanding on this issue which they claimed had been reached.

Referring to this settlement, the Union claimed that Section 3(b) and (c) of that agreement spelled out the Postal Service's only right to replace an employee on the posted schedule. Those provisions read:

> b. In the event that, subsequent to the Article XI, Section 6 posting period, an emergency situation attributable to an "Act(s) of God" arises which requires the use of manpower on that holiday in excess of that posted pursuant to Article XI, Section 6, full time regular employees required to work in this circumstance(s) shall only be paid for such holiday in accordance with Article XI, Sections 2, 3, and 4.

> C. When a full time regular employee scfied-uled to work on a holiday in accordance with the provisions of Article XI, Section 6, is unable to or fails to work on the holiday, the Employer may require another full time regular employee to work such schedule and such replacement employee shall only be paif for such holiday in accordance with Article XI, Scctions 2, 3 and 4. The selection of such replacement employees shall be made in accordance with any applicable local aqreement consisent with the terms of the 1973 National Agreement. ment.

Once again, the specific provisions relied upon in this settlement agreement do not address any rights or guaranteres accruing to a scheduled regular employees whose name is later deleted from the posted holiday work schedule. Only Section 5 of that 1974 agreement deals with a guarantee and that is concerned with the guarantee of eight hours "of work or pay in lieu thereof, in addition to the holiday pay to which he is entitled under Article XI, Sections 2 and 3.", for an employee who does work on his holiday. No guarantee to an employee who does not work is provided by the terms of this 1974 settlement.

Since that is so, the Union pointed to the instructions issued to the field shortly aftor the 1974 settlement was reached. In tha first of these documents, identified as Union Exhibit 2, and dated April 17, 1974, all Postmasters were advised as follows:

> "No manager should attempt to 'play it safe' by adopting a policy of scheduling everybody to work on a holiday and then later releasing those employee not required. Such a tactic absolutely will not be tolerated since it would completely subvert our obligation under Article XI, Section 6, of the National Agreement.

That obligation undertaken by the Postal Service in Article XI, Section 6 was to use as few regular and part-time regulate employee as possible on a holiday and to allow them to be off fron work on their regularly scheduled holidays. Clearly, if all employees were scheduled and then regulars and part time regulars were later released, that would improperly avoid the commitment the Postal Service had made to allow as many of such employeess as possible to enjoy the holiday with advance knowledge that this would be their earned right under the contract. Once again, however, no commitment to vest a right to be paid or to guarantee that the employee would be paid in lieu of working, if the schedule were later amended to delete their names, is expressed in these instructions or guidance issued to the field with regard to the application and interpretation of Section 6 of Article XI.

The Union, with knowledge that an express guarantee was not to be found in the documents referred to above, also submitted as Union Exhbit 3, a Postal Bulletin dated May 16, 1974, and more specifically instructions contained therein dealing with "Timely Posting of Holiday Work Schedules." After repeating the requirement of Section 6 and the previous instructions which had been published this Postal Bulleting provision went on to advise:

> "The holiday for full time employeses will be treated as any other day in terms of the call-in. A full-time employee will be entitled to eight hours work or pay in lieu thereof. The same provision will be applicable on the holiday or the day designated as the employee's holiday. You must take this into consideration in scheduling employees, so that you don't schedule manpower in excess of that which your workload is likely to require."

An examination of the thrust an actual language used in this instruction indicates quite clearly that it is concerned with the USPS obligation when employees are actually called in who are not needed and who may be sent home, on their holiday, before having eight hours of work to complete.

The Union also called attention to other instructions issued in Labor Relations Reporter No. 20, in July of 1974, dealing with the March 4, 1974 settlement.

Most specifically, the Union made reference to the guidance provided starting on page 2 of that document. That particular. provision reads as follows:

1. That the obligations set forth in the entire settlement agreement pertain only to full-time regular employees.

2. That if the postmaster complies with the Wednesday posting provision found in Article XI,

Section 6, and works the employee in accordance with that schedule that was posted the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls, the employee will be entitled to payment only in accordance with the terms of the National Agreement. There will be no penalty pay provision upon management for this employee.

3. That an employee ha8 no right to work his normal schedule on a holiday--his schedule is that which is posted for him in accordance with Article XI, Section 6.

4. That an employee does, howwer, have a fight to work the schedule which management posts for him on the Wednesday preceding the service week in which the holiday falls. *

5. . .n

As can be seen, the instructions referred to above only provide that an employee who has been scheduled to work can expect to work and can be required to work the scheduled time for him or her that has been posted and not his or her regular schedule or some hours other than those which were posted for that employee to work on the holiday. No guarantee or inference of a guarantee or penalty for not working an employee at all on the holiday is to be found in the language quoted above.

This same item in the Labor Relations Reporter goes on to state there is only one guarantee contained in Article XI and that is a provision for penalty pay for an employee who is not time scheduled to work and is then called in or volunteers to come in to meet manpower needs on his holiday.

It is axiomatic that if guarantees or vested rights are to be created by the application of the provisions of an agreement, it is incumbent upon the beneficiary of such rights or guarantees to see to it that these are clearly apalled out in the agreement and not to be discerned by inference or innuendo. For this reason, merit must be found in the argumemt of the Employor that specific provisions were written into the F-21 Time and Attendance Handbook and to the E&LR Manual, subsequent to the making of the March 4, 1974 settlement and well after Section 6 of Article XI first appeal in National Agreements, which clearly define when payment is to

Certain obligations are imposed upon management by virtue of the specific language of Section 6 and the instructions contained in the documents placed in evidence by both Parties. With regard to the factual situation which gave rise to this case, Management certainly would not have had the right to schedule all regulars and part-time regulars just to be sure that sufficient manpower was on hand on the holiday and then to delete all such names and only require casuals to work the holiday. If that were the case present the Union clearly would have been entitled to have the arbitrator direct that Management cease and desist from scheduling in that manner. That would have been an abuse of the obligation which Management had undertaken. Management admitted such in its advice to the field. Such a situation did not occur in the case at hand or we must assure that it did not occur or it would have been made part of the record in the processing of this grievance.

What must have happened was that Panaqement did overestimate the volume of mail or duties to be performed during the two tours in question on the holiday. When that became apparent, a few days after the Wednesday schedule had been posted, but prior to the holiday itself, the schedule was revised to delete seven name No evidence is to be found in this record that Management "played it safe" and schedule well above any rationally estimated manpower requirements for the holiday and alerted regular full-time emplovees unnecessarily that they ware required to work and in that fashion disrupted their holiday plans. Section 6 of Article XI was specifically designed to minimize the possibility that would occur and to require that Management schedule accordingly. That Management knowingly ignored such an obligation is not the case presented in this proceeding.

Once a schedule is posted and an employee is called in to work, that employee can rely upon the fact that he or she will only work the hours on the posted schedule and not his or her regular hours or some other hours without the Employer suffering an additional penalty. That, too, was not the case presented in this proceeding. Such a case is more skin to the case referred to by the Union and decided as Case No. AC-C- 1397/5-MIN-44.

For the reasons set forth above, the Undersigned makes the following

Re: T. Wilson

NC-C-4322/5-CLE-572

Dear Mr. Riley:

This will supersede and replace the Step 4 decision issued on the above-captioned grievance under date of March 25, 1977.

On the basis of our further discussion on this case, we have reconsidered the matter in dispute in the light of the particular language set forth in item (3)c. of the "Settlement Agreement" of March 4, 1974, concerning the scheduling of employees for holiday work under Article XI, Section 6 of the National Agreement.

The particular language in the referenced agreement pertains only to those situations where it is necessary to replace a properly scheduled full-time employee with another full-time employee. This language does not apply to replacing properly scheduled part-time flexible employees with a full-time regular employee.

In the particulars presented in this case, it is clear that a properly scheduled part-time flexible employee was replaced on the schedule by a full-time regular employee after the part-time flexible advised of being ill and of his inability to report as scheduled. Under such circumstances, the full-time regular employee is entitled to be compensated an additional fifty percent (50%) of his basic hourly straight-time rate of pay for each hour worked on the holiday schedule up to eight hours.

Accordingly, by copy of this letter, the postmaster is instructed to pay the grievant an additional fifty percent (50%) of his basic hourly straight-time rate of pay for the work performed on his designated holiday, July 3, 1976.

Sincerely,

W. F. Henry

Background

This is a Step 4 appeal to National level arbitration, pursuant to the provisions or Article 15 of the National Agreement between United States Postal Service (hereinafter "Service") and American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO (hereinafter "Union"). Hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on January 18, 1985, at which time exhibits were offered and made part of the record, and argument was heard. Post-hearing briefs were received on February 25, 1985.

Appearance

For the Service: D. James Shipe

For the Union: Darryl J. Anderson, Esq.

Statement of the Case

The Union, on behalf of two terminated probationary employees, seeks remedy alleging that the Service violated

Article 2 (which prohibits discrimination on the basis of handicap), and Article 21 (which requires the Service to abide by the Federal Employees Compensation Act prohibiting retaliatory action against employees who file claims for workers' compensation). The Service contends that these employees were terminated during their probationary period and that grievances alleging discriminatory and retaliatory acts are not arbitrable.

Issue

The question to be resolved is whether a probationary employee who is terminated during the probation period is entitled access to the grievance-arbitration procedure in relation to that termination where violations of Article 2 or Article 21 are alleged.

Statement of Facts

Grievants herein were terminated during their 90-day probationary period. It is agreed that the notifications of separation were issued and received within the 90-day period.

Grievant Roberta Rand was hired on October 8, 1983. In November, she began suffering from a pain in her arms and hands, which was later diagnosed as Carpal Tunnel Syndrome, an occupational disease. On December 2, 1983, Grievant Rand filed a notice of occupational disease and a Claim for compensation for work injuries under Article 21, Section 4 of the Agreement. On December 20, 1983, she was notified that she would be separated. Three days later, she was terminated.

Grievant Victoria Comstock was hired on October 15, 1983. In early November, she began to suffer from Carpal Tunnel Syndrome. On December 5, 1983, she filed a notice of occupational disease and a Claim for compensation. On December 27, 1983, Grievant Comstock was notified that she would be separated. Three days later she was terminated.

The Union filed a grievance on behalf of Grievant Rand on December 29, 1983, and on behalf of Grievant Comstock on January 10, 1984. The grievances alleged that the Grievants had been retaliated against for filing workers' compensation claims, in violation of Article 21; and had been the victims of handicap discrimination in violation of Article 2.

The Service denied the grievances at each Step of the grievance procedure contending that these Grievants did not have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure to contest a probationary separation.

Relevant Contract Provisions

ARTICLE 2
NON-DISCRIMINATION AND CIVIL RIGHTS

Section 1. Statement of Principle

The Employer and the Unions agree that there shall be no discrimination by the Employer or the Unions against employees because of race, color, creed, religion, national origin, sex, age, or marital status or because of a physical handicap with respect to a position the duties of which can be performed efficiently by an individual with such a physical handicap without danger to the health or safety of the physically handicapped person or to others.

Section 3. Grievances

Grievances arising under this Article may be filed at Step 2 of the grievance procedure within fourteen (14) days of when the employee or the Union has first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of the alleged discrimination, unless filed directly at the national level, in which case the provisions of this Agreement for initiating grievances at that level shall apply.

ARTICLE 12
PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 1. Probationary Period

A. The probationary period for a new employee shall be ninety (90) calendar days. The Employer shall have the right to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period and these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto. If the Employer intends to separate an employee during the probationary period for scheme failure, the employee shall be given at least seven (7) days advance notice of such intent to separate the employee. If the employee qualifies on the scheme within the notice period, the employee will not be separated for prior scheme failure.

* * * * *

C. When an employee completes the probationary period, seniority will be computed in accordance with this Agreement as of the initial day of full-time or part-time employment.

ARTICLE 16
DISCIPLINE PROCEDURE

Section 1. Principles

In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause such as, but not limited to, insubordination, pilferage, intoxication (drugs, or alcohol), incompetence, failure to perform work as requested, violations of the terms of this Agreement, or failure to observe safety rules and regulations. Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement, which could result in reinstatement and restitution, including back pay.

ARTICLE 21

Section 4. Injury Compensation

Employees covered by this Agreement shall be covered by subchapter 1 of Chapter 81 of Title 5, and any amendments thereto, relating to compensation for work injuries. The Employer will promulgate appropriate regulations which comply with applicable regulations of the Office of Workers Compensation Programs and any amendments thereto.

Position of the Service

The Service contends that a probationary employee who is separated during the 90-day probationary period does not have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure. In support of its position, the Service relies on Article 12, Section 1A of the National Agreement.

The Service asserts that Article 12 is a specific exception to the broad provisions of Article 16 which prohibits the Service from discharging an employee except for just cause. Since the provisions of Article 12 are comprehensive, Article 12 bars access to the grievance-arbitration procedure for separated probationary employees no matter what the reason, even where, as here, the Union alleges separation by reason of retaliation for filing workers' compensation claims or discrimination.

The Service points out that Regional arbitrators have consistently held that a probationary employee does not have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure to contest a separation. The Service does acknowledge, however, that a probationary employee does have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure for disputes other than those involving the employee's termination. As an example, the Service points out that a probationary employee who is not paid the proper wages would have the right to grieve that dispute.

Position of the Union

The Union vigorously asserts that probationary employees, despite their probationary status, are employees with contractual rights established under the Agreement. They are, for example, entitled to be paid in accordance with Article 9; and entitled to a safe and healthy work place under Article 14. Probationary employees are also, as in the present dispute, entitled to the protections afforded by Articles 2 and 21 which guarantee that they will be free from discrimination on the basis, inter alia, of handicap, and from retaliation for filing workers' compensation claims.

While the Union concedes that Article 12 prohibits a probationary employee from filing a grievance for separation during the probationary period, it argues that this prohibition is only a narrow exception to the right of a probationary employee or the Union to file a grievance alleging that such employee was not terminated for "just cause" as required by the provisions of Article 16.

Article 12, the Union asserts, was not intended to exclude probationary employees from all contractual protection. Rather, according to the Union, "the Article is intended to provide a period of time during which Management can observe, evaluate and determine whether to retain probationary employees without reference to the 'just cause' standard articulated in Article 16"

To accept the position of the Service, the Union argues, would go far beyond denying probationary employees the benefit of the "just cause" standard. It would lead to the conclusion that probationary employees have no enforceable contractual rights, and this would be contrary to the plain language of contractual provisions such as Article 2 prohibiting discrimination against employees because of, as in this case, physical handicap. The Union points out that the contractual language in Articles 2 and 21 is unqualified by reference to probationary or non-probationary status -- the provisions merely refer to "employees"

The Union next argues that while it has traditionally agreed not to pursue "just case" cases involving the performance of probationary employees, the Union has certain rights under the agreement in situations, such as here, where the Service was motivated to discharge Grievants for discriminatory or unlawful reasons. In its post-hearing brief, the Union states:

> [i]n this situation, the familiar adage that an employee may be fired for a good cause, or no cause, but not for a wrongful cause finds application. Where an employee has been discharged for such wrongful, even unlawful cause, then the interest of the work force as a whole are at stake and it should not matter that the particular victims are probationary employees.

In further support of its contention that the position of the Service is unjust and illogical, the Union argues that the Service could, through discharge or harassment of probationary employees, develop a work force consisting of "white, able-bodied males", and that the Union "would have no recourse under the Agreement". While individual probationary employees might have recourse to other forums to remedy such discrimination, the Union contends that it would not necessarily be party to such litigation; and that the availability of other forums would in no way mitigate against the Union's important institutional interest in resolving these matters through arbitration.

The Union further contends that if its position were upheld, it would not be a loophole that would allow any separated probationary employee falling within a class protected by the anti-discrimination provisions of Article 2 to grieve "just cause" cases under the guise of discrimination or retaliation. The Union states:

> Where the grievant cannot allege specific facts to support a finding of discrimination, but merely alleges membership in a protected group, the case would be readily dismissed. Under the circumstances, the Union will not repeatedly waste its money and resources by making unfounded allegations. In a case where evidence of discrimination or retaliation exists, however, such as in this case, facts sufficient to state a cause of action will be alleged and must be tried before the arbitrator. This result gives practical effect to Article 12.1 upon which the Employer > so heavily relies, but also preserves the important contractual protections unquivocally provided to probationary employees by Articles 2 and 21, and elsewhere in the Agreement.

Finally, in response to the numerous Regional awards cited by the Service which, directly or indirectly, support its position, the Union implies that they should be given no force or effect since they were referred to Regional arbitration under the stipulation that no "interpretative issue under the National Agreement was involved". Since neither the Union nor the Service sought an authoritative interpretation of the National Agreement at the National level, the Union asserts that this is a case of first impression.

Findings and Conclusions

The Union asserts that these Grievants, as terminated probationary employees, were entitled to enforce rights and protections granted under Article 2 and 21 through the grievance-arbitration procedure.

Central to the resolution of this dispute is the scope and effect of Article 12.1 of the Agreement, and its application to the other contractual provisions of the Agreement. Article, Section 1A states in pertinent part:

> The probationary period for a new employee shall be ninety (90) calendar days. The employer shall have the right to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period and these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto. . . . (Underscoring added.)

As the Union agrees, this specific language is clearly an exception to the general language of Article 16 relative to terminations for just cause. Critical inquiry is whether, as the Union contends, the language of Article 12.1A is applicable only as an exception to the "just cause" provisions of Article 16.

This Arbitrator thinks not.

Article 12.1A, in clear, unqualified, unrestricted, and all encompassing language, denies probationary employees access to the grievance-arbitration process if they are terminated for any reason during the probationary period. There is simply no contractual basis that would warrant a conclusion that the Article 12.1A exception has application only to "just cause" terminations.

Over the last decade, numerous Regional awards (with one exception that will be discussed below) have consistently held that a probationary employee, terminated during the probationary period, has no right to the grievance-arbitration procedure. */

Even though probationary employees are not barred from the grievance procedure for all purposes, it is clear that probationary employees do not have access to the grievance procedure in matters relating to a separation.

*/ While Regional awards, as the Union asserts, may have no binding precedential effect at the National level, they do, nonetheless, interpret the National Agreement and are entitled to be given weight.

The one deviation, noted above, from the long line of Regional arbitrable authority on this issue is Award No. CIT-4H-C 3278 (Arbitrator Roumell). The Roumell award, in effect, held that Article 2 of the National Agreement, which bars discrimination, has application to all employees, including probationary employees. Arbitrator Roumell reasons:

> . . . [w]hen the parties agreed to Section 1 of the Agreement and referred to 'employee', without reference to whether those employees were probationary or regular employees, that every employee of the postal service covered by the Agreement would be covered by Article 2 of the Agreement. Since Article 2 also provides in Section 1 that grievances arising under Article 2 may be filed and does not refer to the class of employee affected, the arbitrator must assume that all employees in the Bargaining Unit were to be protected by the Article 2 anti-discrimination proscription and the right to grieve thereunder.

Regional arbitrators have refused to follow the Roumell award. In case no. SIC-3N-C 6735, Arbitrator Caraway stated:

> Article 12.1A in very clear and unambiguous language, states that a probationary employee is not entitled to invoke the grievance and arbitration procedure in the event of his termination. The parties specifically negotiated on this direct subject matter, namely, the right of a probationary employee who is terminated prior to his 90-day probation ry period. He has no right to the grievance and arbitration procedure. The prohibition agreed to by the parties was all encumpassing. They did not exclude terminations which are based on a charge of discrimination. The conclusion must > be that the parties intended when they negotiated the National Agreement that any termination of a probationary employee, regardless of the reason, was not subject to the grievance and arbitration procedure.

In case no. N1T-1E-D 29164, Arbitrator Levin held:

> Article 2 clearly states the position of the parties with regard to non-discrimination and Civil Rights. But to enforce such rights through the grievance procedure, an employee must have passed the probationary period. No exception is made for probationary employees and there is no basis to imply the existence of such an exception.

This Arbitrator, in Award No. N1C-1E-D 27195, held that the grievance of a probationary employee was not arbitrable, even where the basis of the grievance was discrimination. This Arbitrator rejected the reasoning of the Roumell award "because it simply ignores the universally accepted axiom in contract interpretation that all the provisions of a contract must be interpreted with reference to all other parts so as to give effect to its entire general purpose".

In case no. N1C-1E-D 27210, involving a probationary employee who was physically handicapped, this Arbitrator stated:

> [S]imilarly, grievant's charge of being discriminated against by reason of his physical disability being violative of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, may be presented for resolution to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. There is no recourse to the grievance procedure under the National Agreement in order to seek redress for the alleged violations which may or may not have resulted in his termination. As a > probationary employee, grievant has no claim of entitlement, under the terms of the National Agreement, sufficient to create any property interest in his continued employment.

The Rousell award is palably erroneous, and is to be given no weight.

Finally, the Union argues that it has a right, under Article 15, to pursue a grievance on behalf of a probationary employee where such an employee has been terminated for wrongful or unlawful reasons. In Award No. AC-S-22,995-D, Arbitrator Ushman persuasively rejected this contention as follows:

> The Union argues further that Article 12 excludes access to the grievance procedure with regard to discharge of a probationary employee only as regards the employee himself and contends that the Union may file a grievance about such a discharge and pursuant through the grievance procedure up to and including arbitration. The Union says that the Union, as such, has been given such a right because of the definition of a grievance as set forth in Section 1 of Article XV. The Union's contention is contrary to the wording and meaning of Article XII, Section I. As stated above, that section states the Postal Service has a right to separate any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period. The fact that the sentence goes on to state that these probationery employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure was not intended to mean that action taken by the Postal Service to separate an employee during a probationary period is subject to the challenge by the Union although not by the employee, at least if the challenge is to the merits of the Postal Service's action. Section 1 of Article XII properly read prevails over the general provision of Article XV > that the grievance procedure shall include the complaint of an employee or the Union. It follows that where a probationary employee is precluded from using the grievance procedure on a complaint involving his discharge, the Union acting at his representative is likewise so precluded. Otherwise the purpose of the exception of the probationer from the grievance procedure would be meaningless.

On the basis of the foregoing, the grievances are not arbitrable.

AWARD

The grievance are not arbitrable, and they are therefore dismissed.

Background

This is a Step 4 appeal to National level arbitration pursuant to the provisions of Article 15 of the National Agreement between United States Postal Service (hereinafter "Service") and American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO (hereinafter "Union"). Hearing was held in Washington, D.C. on December 13, 1984, at which time argument was heard, and exhibits were offered and made part of the record. The post-hearing brief of the Service was received on February 15, 1985. The Union's post-hearing brief was received or February 10, 1985.

For the Union: Jim Connors

Statement of the Case

This dispute involves a probationary employee who received a poor evaluation. Grievant sought Shop Steward's time in order to investigate with her supervisor what she felt was an erroneous evaluation. The request was refused by the Service contending that she did not have access to the grievance procedure in disputes involving evaluations, relying on Article 12 of the National Agreement. Soon after, Grievant was terminated because of the poor evaluation.

Being unable to resolve the dispute, the parties submitted the dispute to impartial arbitration at the National level pursuant to Article 15, Section 4(D) because it involved an interpretative issue involving provisions of the National Agreement.

Issue

The question to be resolved in this dispute is whether a probationary employee has access to the grievance procedure when it concerns an evaluation of work performance.

Statement of Facts

The essential facts are not in dispute: Grievant was hired on March 3, 1984 at the main facility in Salt Lake City, Utah as a Mail Distributor.

On March 30, 1984, Grievant was evaluated by her supervisor. On that day she was shown a copy of the Employee Probationary Period Evaluation Report (Form 1750) which included the following comments:

> [Grievant] is not meeting the job requirements and will be terminated unless she shows better progress in learning her job assignments. Her productivity must greatly increase, she must understand her instructions quicker, and must learn all assigned areas or she will be separated for failure to qualify.

On April 6, 1984, Grievant was further evaluated by another supervisor who recommended that Grievant "be terminated as sufficient time has gone by for her to bring her overall production up to the same level as her co-workers of equal time in the postal service".

On April 13, 1984, Grievant approached her Shop Steward and advised him that she had requested grievance time from her supervisor in order to inquire about her evaluation and that the request was refused. The Shop Steward approached Grievant's supervisor, who denied his request for Union grievance time, contending that probationary employees do not have access to the grievance procedure.

On that same day, the Service notified Grievant by letter that she had been terminated. The termination letter was received by Grievant on April 16, 1984.

Position of the Service

The Service contends that, under Article 12, Grievant does not have access to the grievance procedure. The Service argues that if a probationary employee is separated for poor work performance, his or her evaluation is considered a matter relating to his or her separation, and Article 12 bars the employee from filing a grievance on the matter.

The Service acknowledges that a probationary employee does have access to the grievance procedure in matters other than those relating to separation. Under Article 16, a probationary employee may file a grievance on wages, hours, or working conditions. But Article 12 is a specific exception to Article 16 when matters relating to separation are involved.

The Service further contends that the Union, by requesting access to the grievance procedure in relation to the evaluation, is really attempting to grieve the separation, which is barred by Article 12.

Position of the Union

While the Union recognizes that Article 12 bars the filing of a grievance for a separation of a probationary employee, it asserts that Article 12 has no application to evaluations; and a probationary employee, therefore, may file a grievance concerning his or her evaluation.

Grieving an evaluation of a probationary employee, according to the Union, is not related to termination. Rather, it falls in the category of other instances where a probationary employee may grieve, such as wages, hours and working conditions. A Shop Steward should be allowed to review the probationary employee's evaluation in order to ascertain whether such employee receives proper training, or whether such employee was discriminated against in violation of the provisions of Article 2 of the Agreement.

Findings and Conclusions

After review of the record and the applicable contractual provisions, it is the finding of this Arbitrator that a probationary employee does not have access to the grievance procedure in matters concerning an evaluation of work performance.

Article 12, Section 1A provides, in pertinent part:

> The probationary period for a new employee shall be nineth (90) calendar days. The Employer shall have the right to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period and these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto. (Underscoring added.)

While Article 12 makes no specific reference to the evaluation, it is clear that evaluations are the essential instruments utilized by the Service in determining whether a probationary employee will or will not be separated. It would be illogical, therefore, not to consider the evaluation part of the decision to separate (or not to separate) probationary employee even though the evaluation takes place prior to such action.

Article 12, Section 1A gives the Service the unilateral right to separate probationary employee. If the Union were able, through the grievance procedure, to participate in the evaluation of probationary employee (affecting ultimately the decision to separate), the Service would be deprived of its unilateral right to separate such probationary employees granted under the National Agreement.

BACKGROUND Q98C-4Q-C 99251456

This case arises under the 1998-2000 National Agreement between the American Postal Workers Union (APWU) and the Postal Service. The National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC) has intervened in support of the position taken by the APWU. The dispute involves the interpretation of Article 12.1.A of the National Agreement, which provides as follows:

> The probationary period for a new employee shall be ninety (90) calendar days. The Employer shall have the right to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period and these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto. If the Employer intends to separate an employee during the probationary period for scheme failure, the employee shall be given at least seven (7) days advance notice of such intent to separate the employee. If the employee qualifies on the scheme within the notice period, the employee will not be separated for prior scheme failure.

The Unions assert that a grievance over whether the Postal Service has actually effectuated a separation of an employee during his or her probationary period is subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure. More particularly, the Unions maintain that Section 365.32 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) sets forth four procedural requirements for effectuating the separation of a probationary employee, and that the Union may file a grievance that challenges whether those separation procedures were followed.

The Postal Service maintains that Article 12.1 clearly denies a probationary employee access to the grievance procedure to challenge his or her separation on any grounds, including alleged noncompliance with Section 365.32 of the ELM.

The principle provisions of Section 365.32 of the ELM cited by the Unions provide as follows:

> 365.3 Separations - Involuntary
>
> * * *
>
> 365.32 Separation-Disqualification (S-Disqual)
>
> 365.321 Applicability
>
> This type of separation applies only to employees who have not completed their probationary period, except where the separation is caused by a finding that employees who have completed the probationary period have failed to meet certain conditions attached to their appointment.
>
> 365.323 Probationary Period
> Separation-disqualification must be effected during the probationary period except as provided in 365.321. Action is initiated at any time in the probationary period when it becomes apparent that the employee is lacking in fitness and capacity for efficient service. Any separation based on disqualification not effected during the probationary period, as provided in 365.321, even though the action is based on unsatisfactory performance during the probationary period, must be effected as a removal.

365.325 Who Initiates Action

Supervisors may recommend separation-disqualification, but such recommendations must be referred for decision to the official having authority to take the action.

365.326 Procedure in Separating

If an appointing official decides to terminate an employee who is serving a probationary period due to conditions arising prior to appointment, or because work performance or conduct during this period fails to demonstrate fitness or qualification for continued postal employment, the employee's services are terminated by notifying the employee in writing why she or he is being terminated and the effective date of the action. The information in the notice regarding the termination must, at a minimum, consist of the appointing official's conclusions as to the inadequacies of performance or conduct.

365.327 Effective Date

The effective date of separation by disqualification must be before the end of the probationary period but may not be retroactively effective. The notice of separation must be given to the employee before the end of the probationary or trial period.

Article 19 of the National Agreement provides that:

> Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21, Timekeeper's Instructions.
> Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Union at the national level at least sixty (60) days prior to issuance.... At the request of the Union, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Union, after the meeting, believes the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), it may then submit the issue to arbitration....

The issue in this case has not been addressed in a National Arbitration decision. Evidently, the only National Arbitration decision dealing with Article 12.1.A is the 1985 decision of Arbitrator Zumas in Case No. H1C-4C-C 27351/2. In that case, the APWU challenged the separation of two probationary employees. The Union alleged that the grievants had been retaliated against for filing workers compensation claims, in violation of Article 21, and had been the victims of handicap discrimination in violation of Article 2. Arbitrator

Zumas rejected the Union's contentions that the grievants were entitled to enforce their rights under Articles 2 and 21 through the grievance-arbitration procedure, and that the language of Article 12.1.A applies only as an exception to the "just cause" provision of Article 16. In his decision, Arbitrator Zumas stated:

> Article 12.1A, in clear, unqualified, unrestricted, and all encompassing language, denies probationary employees access to the grievance-arbitration process if they are terminated for any reason during the probationary period. There is simply no contractual basis that would warrant a conclusion that the Article 12.1A exception has application only to "just cause" terminations.

There have been a considerable number of regional arbitration cases in which the Unions challenged the purported separation of a probationary employee on various grounds, including that the separation was not properly effectuated in accordance with one or more of the requirements of Section 365.32 of the ELM. Prior to 1999, a large majority of the regional arbitrators who were presented with a claim that a purported separation did not comply with the cited ELM provisions applied those provisions, even in cases where the Postal Service insisted the grievance was not arbitrable under Article 12.1.A. Prior to 1998, the Postal Service never challenged any of the decisions which ruled in the Unions' favor on that issue in a court of law.

Regional Arbitrator Miles issued a decision in Case No. K94C-4K-D 97080929 on June 16, 1998. The APWU had filed a grievance challenging the separation of the grievant on the grounds that the Postal Service violated the procedures in Section 365.32 of the ELM. More particularly, as articulated by Arbitrator Miles, the Union claimed that the Postal Service failed to provide a specific statement that the grievant was being terminated for a particular reason and that the notice of separation was not issued by the appointing official. The Postal Service asserted that the grievance was not arbitrable under Article 12.1.A. The case was bifurcated, and Arbitrator Miles issued a decision holding that the question of whether the Postal Service adhered to the proper ELM procedures was an arbitrable matter. Arbitrator Miles stated:

> There is no question that Article 12, Section 1 of the Agreement entitles the Postal Service to terminate probationary employees prior to the expiration of their probationary period. However, Article 12 does not stand alone, rather it must be considered in conjunction with all other provisions of the Agreement. Thus, when taking action to separate a probationary employee, the Postal Service must do so in accordance with the provisions of the Agreement and the applicable provisions which are contained in Section 365.32 of the ELM. This provision is every bit a part of the Agreement, pursuant to Article 19, as is Article 12, Section 1.

The Postal Service brought an action to vacate the Miles award in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia. The APWU counterclaimed for enforcement of the award. The district court vacated the Miles award, ruling that the arbitrator had exceeded his authority by issuing an award that was directly contrary to the language of Article 12.1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Thereafter, the APWU appealed that decision to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. It also initiated this Step 4 interpretive dispute.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals issued its ruling on February 25, 2000 (USPS v. APWU, 204 F.3d 523.) By a 2 to 1 majority, the court affirmed the district court's judgment vacating the Miles award. The court rejected the APWU's argument that the Miles award does not violate Article 12.1.A because nothing in that provision precludes an arbitrator from determining whether a probationary employee was actually separated in the first place. The Court stated:

> ...The arbitrator's decision that procedural attacks on the separation of a probationary employee are arbitrable contravenes the unambiguous language of Article 12.1.A. The terms of this provision are worth repeating: "The Employer shall have the right to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period and these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto" (emphasis added). This language is unqualified and admits of no exception. The provision makes no distinction whatsoever between procedural attacks on separations and substantive challenges. The sweeping > phrase "in relation thereto" brings any separation-related grievance by a probationary employee within the ambit of the prohibition. In other words, so long as the matter involves probationary employees and the question of separation, no grievance may be brought. In fact, it is difficult to see how the parties could have been any clearer in prohibiting every kind of separation-related grievance by a probationary employee.

> The arbitrator ruled that notwithstanding the clear language of Article 12, Article 19 somehow renders this matter grievable. He claimed that Article 19 incorporates Postal Service handbooks and manuals into the National Agreement, and that ELM violations are grievable by probationary employees because ELM violations are also violations of the National Agreement.
> This argument, however, has no basis whatsoever in the National Agreement. Even assuming, arguendo, that Article 19 incorporates the ELM into the National Agreement, there is no language either in the ELM or in Article 19 that even suggests ELM violations are grievable by probationary employees. Further, even if there were any hint in the ELM that probationary employees could grieve ELM violations, this hint would run smack into Article 12. And Article 19 unequivocally states that Postal Service handbooks and manuals "shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement."

In addition to the action it filed to vacate the Miles award, the Postal Service has since filed similar actions to vacate other regional arbitration awards holding that a grievance that protests that a purported separation violates Section 365.32 of the ELM is arbitrable. The Union has counterclaimed to enforce those awards. These actions in various United States District Courts have been stayed (or a motion to stay has been filed), pending issuance of this National Arbitration decision.

UNION POSITION

Initially, the Unions point out that Article 15.5.A.9 of the National Agreement provides that: "Any dispute as to arbitrability may be submitted to the arbitrator and be determined by such arbitrator".

The Unions contend that Article 12.1.A must be interpreted in the context of the separation procedures set forth in Postal Service Manuals and Regulations. Since at least the 1950's the Postal Service had regulations set forth in its Post Office Manuals governing the separation of probationary employees. Although the language changed slightly over the years, the core requirements for the Postal Service to effectuate a probationary separation always have been: (1) written notice; (2) by the appointing official; (3) stating, at a minimum, the reasons for the termination; (4) provided to the employee prior to the end of the probationary period. These regulations also provide that if an employee is not separated during the probationary period, that employee can only be removed by following the procedures for permanent employees, even if the action is based on unsatisfactory performance during the probationary period.

The Unions stress that prior to adoption of Article 12 in 1971, the Postal Service had to satisfy all the requirements for separating a probationary employee in order to effectuate such a separation. The Unions argue that it was in this context that they entered into negotiations with the Postal Service for the first National Agreement in 1971, and that the language in the Post Office Manual provided the basis for the parties agreeing to Article 12. The language in Article 12 was intended to operate in tandem with the separation procedures in the Post Office Manual, which remained in effect. Thus, there was no reason to include any language defining probationary separations in the National Agreement. The Postal Service would effectuate a probationary separation by following the procedures in the Post Office Manual. Once there was a separation, the language of Article 12 would bar challenges to that separation, which was the Postal Service's central concern. For decades after the first National Agreement, the Unions assert, the Postal Service continued to apply the probationary separation procedures and arbitrators continued to review whether the Postal Service had complied with those procedures.

The Unions point out that the Postal Service could hardly have negotiated Article 12 with the belief that Article 19 would eliminate the separation procedures as contradictory language, because Article 19 did not come into existence until the second National Agreement was negotiated in 1973. Moreover, the Postal Service's claim that the ELM provisions are in conflict with Article 12 is controverted by its promulgation of the ELM in 1978, which reincorporated the separation procedures previously set forth in the Postal Manual. The Unions also emphasize that the provisions of the ELM are part of the official regulations governing the Postal Service, as provided in 39 C.F.R. §211.2(a)(1).

The Unions contend that the contract language supports its interpretation. The language of Article 12 is far from clear. It speaks of the right to the Postal Service to separate employees and the prohibition on the right to file grievances in relation to that separation, but there is no guidance as to when a separation has occurred. Absent language elsewhere incorporated into the National Agreement or past practice, it reasonably could be argued that common sense or industrial common law could be used to determine the threshold issue of whether an employee was separated during the probationary period. Here, however, the language of the ELM and the past practice of the parties spells out exactly what it means to "separate" a probationary employee.

The Unions assert that ELM provisions in Section 365.32 clearly and specifically define when a separation of a probationary employee occurs. These provisions have been specifically incorporated into the National Agreement by Article 19 and have been in effect for at least a half century. There is no conflict between these provisions and Article 12, and they should be followed in applying that provision.

The Unions adamantly reject the Postal Service's claim that the Unions' position will deprive the Postal Service of the benefit of its bargain. Nothing in the Unions' argument diminishes the Postal Service's right to separate probationary employees during the probationary period without adhering to the just cause standard. All the Unions are seeking here is a decision requiring the Postal Service to adhere to its own almost 50-year-old regulation when effecting the separation. The benefit of the bargain argument also cuts both ways. The Unions have negotiated just cause protection for all employees who have not been properly separated before the end of their 90th day of employment. A ruling which undermines the standards for effectuating separations diminishes this protection.

The Unions maintain that the 2000 Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals decision upholding the vacating of the Miles award misinterpreted the National Agreement. Moreover, that court did not have the benefit of the parties' negotiating history and the foundation of the Post Office Manual serving as a governing document when the parties first negotiated Article 12. The Unions also assert that the Zumas National Arbitration Award and two earlier Federal Court of Appeal decisions cited by the Postal Service are not on point. Those cases merely held that once a separation is effected during the probationary period, the basis for the separation cannot be challenged through the grievance procedure even if the Union alleges that the basis for the separation violated another provision of the National Agreement.

The Unions also insist that the post-1971 bargaining history cited by the Postal Service does not support the Postal Service's claim that the Unions are trying to achieve by arbitration what they failed to gain in negotiations. The Unions never sought to include into the National Agreement the right to challenge whether a separation occurred during the probationary period, always believing it had that right by way of the ELM. The bargaining proposals the Unions submitted sought to shorten the probationary period and to include just cause dismissal rights enforceable in the grievance procedure, for probationary employees. The just cause proposals went to the reasons for separation, not whether a separation occurred.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that the language of Article 12.1.A is as clear and unequivocal as contract language can be. The probationary period is intended to be a trial period designed to determine if the initial decision to employ a person was appropriate. The purpose of Article 12.1.A is to allow the Postal Service to make such evaluations and, if necessary, to separate a probationary employee without becoming entangled in the complicated and time-consuming procedures afforded to permanent employees by Article 15 (Grievance-Arbitration Procedure) and Article 16 (Discipline Procedure). The Postal Service asserts that this right is especially important in an organization as large as the Postal Service, and becomes increasingly important as the Postal Service moves away from the notion of a traditional personnel office, and toward a system where the supervisor has increased autonomy and uses shared web-based applications to process personnel actions directly.

The Postal Service maintains that in the negotiation of the first National Agreement in 1971, its negotiators insisted that management have the unequivocal right to dismiss an employee during the probationary period without having the decision challenged through the grievance-arbitration procedure. This was the quid pro quo for its agreement to shorten the probationary period, which had been one year under the Postal Manual, to 90 days. The parties unambiguously agreed that a certain class of disputes is not subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure. Only the parties, by mutual agreement, may change that.

Over the years, the Postal Service asserts, the Unions have unsuccessfully sought to amend Article 12.1.A to secure probationary employees access to the grievance procedure. They cannot gain through arbitration what they could not gain through negotiation.

The Postal Service states that the provisions of the Postal Manual relating to probationary separations were in large part continued in Section 365.32 of the ELM in 1978, despite the negotiated language of Article 12, because they continue to apply to non-bargaining unit employees.

The Postal Service insists that Article 12.1.A does not differentiate between substantive and procedural challenges to a probationary employee's separation -- both are precluded by the blanket prohibition contained in that provision. It asserts that the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recognized the Unions' argument for what it is -- a "back door" attempt to obtain access for probationary employees to the grievance-arbitration procedure. To allow probationary employees access to the grievance procedure to challenge alleged "procedural" violations of Section 365.32 of the ELM would open the flood gates to grievances alleging violation of that and other ELM provisions. Apart from eviscerating the Postal Service's bargain, permitting probationary employees to challenge the manner in which their separations were effectuated would render the language of Article 12.1.A meaningless. As the Fourth Circuit noted, the Unions' distinction between procedural and substantive challenges is a "false dichotomy", and substantive challenges to probationary employee separations can often be formulated as procedural ones.

The Postal Service maintains that the Unions' argument that ELM violations are grievable violations of the National Agreement because Article 19 incorporates the ELM into the Agreement is fundamentally flawed and blatantly ignores the plain meaning of Article 12.1.A. This argument was flatly rejected by the Fourth Circuit's decision. Under Article 19, ELM provisions cannot supersede the clear and unequivocal language of Article 12.1.A.

The Postal Service cites USPS v. APWU, 922 F 2d.256 (5th Cir. 1991), a case in which the Union grieved the separation of a probationary employee on the ground that the Postal Service separated the employee due to compensable work-related injury in violation of the Federal Employees Compensation Act (FECA) and postal regulations implementing FECA. A regional arbitrator found the grievance was arbitrable and that the Postal Service violated Articles 19 and 21. The Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's ruling that the arbitrator exceeded his authority under Article 15.4.A.6, because Article 12.1.A denies probationary employees "any right to resort to grievance and arbitration procedures".[1]

Arbitrator Zumas in his 1985 National Arbitration decision likewise rejected a similar attempt by the Union to challenge the separation of a probationary employee on the grounds that it violated Articles 2 and 21. As Arbitrator Zumas declared: "Article 12.1.A, in clear, unqualified, unrestricted, and all-encompassing language, denies probationary employees access to the grievance-arbitration process if they are terminated for any reason during the probationary period."

Finally, the Postal Service explains that the reason it does not dispute that notice of separation must be provided to a probationary employee within a 90-day period is that

[1] The Postal Service also cites APWU v. USPS, 940 F.2d 704 (D.C. Cir. 1991). Although the court in that case relied on Article 12.1.A to dismiss the Union's breach of contract claim, access to the grievance-arbitration procedure was not an issue in that case.

Article 12.1.A defines the probationary period as 90 days. That is an enforceable contract provision, unlike the remaining elements in Section 365.32 of the ELM cited by the Unions that are superseded by Article 12.1.A.

FINDINGS

The 2000 decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit serves at the very least as a sharp reminder that an arbitrator must focus first and foremost on the language of the parties' agreement. As explicitly stated in Article 15.5.A.6 of the National Agreement:

> All decisions of arbitrators shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement, and in no event may the terms and provisions of this Agreement be altered, amended, or modified by an arbitrator.

Article 12.1.A grants the Postal Service the unqualified right "to separate from its employ any probationary employee at any time during the probationary period" and mandates that "these probationary employees shall not be permitted access to the grievance procedure in relation thereto". Looking solely to the language of Article 12.A.1, I have to agree with the finding of the Fourth Circuit that:

> This language is unqualified and admits of no exception. The provision makes no distinction whatsoever between procedural attacks on separations and substantive > challenges. The sweeping phrase "in relation thereto" brings any separation-related grievance by a probationary employee within the ambit of the prohibition.

The Unions, of course, are correct in asserting that there must have been a separation before the end of the employee's probationary period in order for Article 12.1.A to apply. Absent such a separation, the probationary employee becomes a permanent employee and can only be discharged or removed for just cause in accordance with Article 16. The discharge of a permanent employee, in contrast to the separation of a probationary employee, is subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure.

The Unions also are correct in pointing out that Article 12 does not define what constitutes a separation. That definition is provided, however, in Section 365.11 of the ELM which states:

> Separations are personnel actions that result in employees' being removed from the rolls of the Postal Service.

Section 365.32 then goes on to provide the procedures to be followed in involuntarily separating a probationary employee. I agree with the Unions that these provisions of the ELM, in effect, are incorporated in the National Agreement pursuant to Article 19. There is nothing in the National Agreement or the ELM to suggest that these provisions do not apply to bargaining unit probationary employees. These provisions are not in any way inconsistent with Article 12.1.A. By the same token, however, these ELM provisions do not address or govern access to the grievance-arbitration procedure.

The issue, in my view, is not whether the ELM provisions the Unions rely on "conflict" with Article 12.1.A. They do not. The issue, however, is whether Article 12.1.A nonetheless precludes a probationary employee and the Union from grieving that the employee's separation did not comply in one or more respects with those ELM provisions. Or put a different way, whether Article 12.1.A permits a probationary employee and the Union to grieve that a separation action taken by the Postal Service was not a "separation", for purposes of Article 12.1.A, because the Postal Service did not comply in one or more respects with the ELM provisions.

The 1985 National Arbitration decision by Arbitrator Zumas is instructive in answering this question. It holds, as did the 1991 Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals decision, that a probationary employee and the Union cannot resort to the grievance procedure to challenge a separation on the grounds that the separation violated some other valid provision of the National Agreement. Thus, even if Article 19 incorporates the provisions of Section 365.32 of the ELM into the National Agreement, and even if those provisions do not conflict with Article 12.1.A, that does not provide a contractually valid basis on which to disregard Article 12.1.A's broad prohibition on access to the grievance procedure.

Similarly, even accepting the Union's contention that the parties negotiated Article 12.1.A in 1971 with the implicit understanding that the separation procedures in the Post Office Manual (later included in the ELM) would continue to apply to the separation of probationary employees, it does not follow that they intended to permit probationary employees to grieve alleged violations of those procedures. The broad sweep of the language they agreed to, in my opinion, compels a finding that the prohibition on access to the grievance procedure applies equally to such procedural challenges.

Not permitting a probationary employee to grieve a procedural defect in the processing of his or her separation is fully consistent with the evident purpose of Article 12.1.A, which is to permit the Postal Service to elect to separate a probationary employee before that employee attains permanent employee status without having to defend its action in the grievance procedure. The Unions have not established a convincing contractual basis on which to conclude that, notwithstanding the broad language in Article 12.1.A, the parties agreed to permit procedural attacks on such separations in the grievance procedure.

I recognize that, starting in the late 1970's, many regional arbitrators have applied the ELM provisions and, when they have found violations, have upheld grievances challenging the separation of probationary employees. Since Arbitrator Zumas' 1985 National Arbitration decision, however, there have been a number of regional decisions that have found such grievances not to be arbitrable.

My review of the cases indicates that, like the recently vacated Miles award, many of the regional decisions that ruled in the Unions' favor on arbitrability did so on the basis that, as Arbitrator Miles put it, the ELM provisions are "every bit a part of the Agreement, pursuant to Article 19, as is Article 12, Section 1". What is missing in these decisions is a convincing analysis that gets around the prohibition on access to the grievance procedure set forth in Article 12.1.A. Even assuming that the National Agreement requires the Postal Service to comply with the ELM provisions -- just as it requires the Postal Service not to discriminate on the basis of handicap (Article 2) and not to retaliate against employees for filing workers compensation claims (Article 21) -- Article 12.1.A bars access to the grievance procedure "in relation" to the separation of a probationary employee.[2]

In all these cases, the individual on whose behalf the Union has filed a grievance has been removed from the rolls, that is, separated by an action taken by the Postal Service. Otherwise, there would have been no reason to file a grievance. The one issue that legitimately can be raised in a case where the Postal Service claims that a grievance is barred by Article

[2] Arbitrator Zumas' 1985 National Arbitration decision held that Article 12.1.A denies probationary employees access to the grievance procedure to protest that their separations violated Articles 2 and 21.

12.1.A, is that the separation action did not occur during the probationary period.[3] The Postal Service acknowledges this, as it must, because Article 12.1.A has no application if the separation action does not occur during the probationary period. That is a fundamentally different issue, however, from whether or not the separation action complied with all the particular requirements set forth in Section 365.32 of the ELM. A challenge to the validity of the procedures followed in effecting a separation is barred by the broad prohibitory language of Article 12.1.A.

For the reasons set forth in this decision, I conclude that Article 12.1.A denies a probationary employee access to the grievance procedure to challenge his or her separation on the grounds of alleged noncompliance with the procedures in Section 365.32 of the ELM. A dispute as to whether or not the Postal Service's action separating the employee occurred during his or her probationary period is arbitrable because that is a precondition to the applicability of Article 12.1.A.

[3] This was an issue in a significant number of the regional arbitration cases involving Article 12.1.A.

AWARD

The grievance is resolved on the following basis:

1. Article 12.1.A denies a probationary employee access to the grievance procedure to challenge his or her separation on the grounds of alleged noncompliance with the procedures in Section 365.32 of the ELM.

2. A dispute as to whether or not the Postal Service's action separating the employee occurred during his or her probationary period is arbitrable because that is a precondition to the applicability of Article 12.1.A.

775 Reemployment Positions

Returnees from the uniformed services are to be reemployed promptly based on their length of military service as defined in sections 775.1 through 775.3.

775.1 Length of Service

The following length of service time periods are used to establish reemployment priorities for returnees from military service:

a. One to ninety days of service. Without exercising any other options, the returnee will be restored in accordance with the following priority:

(1) The returnee will be restored to the seniority, step, and position he or she would have held if he or she had remained continuously employed. This is known as the escalator position. This means that bargaining employees progress in accordance with the provisions of the appropriate contract as if they had been active with the Postal Service during the period of military service.

(2) If the employee is unable to qualify for a position in (1), then the employee is assigned to the position prior to entry in the service with full seniority.

(3) If not qualified after reasonable effort, then to a position of lesser status and pay, with full seniority, that the returnee is qualified to perform.

b. Ninety-one days and more service. Without exercising any other option, the returnee will be restored according to the following priority:

(1) To the escalator position with full seniority, or position of like seniority, status, and pay.

(2) If not qualified after reasonable effort, then to a position of like seniority, status, and pay.

(3) If not qualified after reasonable effort, then to the position held prior to entry in the uniformed service, with full seniority, status, and pay, or position of like seniority, status, and pay.

(4) If not qualified after reasonable effort, then to any position of lesser status, and pay that most closely approximates the positions in (1), (2), or (3) above that the returnee is qualified to perform, with full seniority.

c. Probationary period. Employees who were serving their probationary period at the time of entry into active duty and who met the probationary time period while serving on active duty are considered as having met the probationary time.

775.2 Returnees With a Service-Connected Disability

The following is the priority for reemploying individuals who return from the uniformed service with a service-connected disability:

a. Restore the returnee to the escalator position with reasonable accommodation.

b. If not qualified for the position after a reasonable effort to accommodate the disability, then employ the individual in any other

Relevant Contract Provisions:	Articles 15 and 16 and MOU Re: Mail Handler Assistant Employees
Contract Year:	2011 and 2016

Award Summary:

As set forth in the above Findings, discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may not be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

The issue in this national level interpretive dispute is whether discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status, or whether the noncareer employee's disciplinary record is eliminated and his or her record starts anew upon conversion and appointment to the career position.

The parties have consolidated two Step 4 appeals in which full-time career Mail Handlers faced disciplinary action -- in Nashua, New Hampshire and Milwaukee, Wisconsin, respectively -- and where the disciplinary action cited infractions and disciplines incurred during the employee's time as an MHA.

MHAs were established by an interest arbitration award issued by Arbitrator Herbert Fishgold in February 2013 and incorporated into the 2011-2016 National Agreement.[1] MHAs are noncareer bargaining unit employees who are hired for terms of 360 days with a break in service of five days if reappointed. When full-time career Mail Handler vacancies arise, MHAs are converted to fill the vacancy in the order of their relative standing on an MHA roster which they are placed on in the order of their initial appointment in the installation.

The parties' Memorandum of Understanding Re: Mail Handler Assistant Employees (MHA MOU), as set forth in the 2016-2019 National Agreement, includes the following provisions:

> 3. Other Provisions
>
> A. Article 15
>
> 3. The separation of MHAs upon completion of their 360-day term and the decision to not reappoint MHAs to a new term are not grievable, except where it is alleged that the decision to not reappoint is pretextual....

[1] Earlier, in 2011, the Postal Service and the APWU negotiated the equivalent Postal Support Employee (PSE) noncareer position, and an NALC/Postal Service interest arbitration award created the equivalent City Carrier Assistant (CCA) position.

> MHAs may be disciplined or removed within the term of their appointment for just cause and any such discipline or removal will be subject to the grievance arbitration procedure, provided that within the immediately preceding six months, the employee has completed ninety (90) work days, or has been employed for 120 calendar days (whichever comes first) of their initial appointment.
> In the case of removal for cause within the term of an appointment, a MHA shall be entitled to advance written notice of the charges against him/her in accordance with the provisions of Article 16 of the National Agreement.
> 4. Discipline for an MHA who does have access to the grievance-arbitration procedure does not generally have to be issued in the same progressive manner as discipline issued to a career employee. However, an appropriate element of just cause is that discipline should be progressive and corrective in nature rather than punitive. When management removes or otherwise disciplines an MHA, determining whether the disciplinary action taken is appropriate must be based on the individual facts and circumstances of each case.

Bruce Lerner, General Counsel for the NPMHU, testified generally about the differences between MHAs and career employees. He pointed out:

> MHAs have a different pay scale. They really just have a pay rate. They get no retirement, little health insurance, very little leave. Their schedules are unfixed. They really basically are a separate category of employees in many, many ways. The ways have changed over the years and the negotiations have changed those ways, but coming out of the 2011 contract...there were all sorts of issues about how the MHAs would get implemented, and that led us to extensive bargaining over those issues in 2016 and '19.

In 2016 negotiations, one of the Union's proposals was to include in Article 16 (Discipline Procedure) the following provision:

> The disciplinary record of an MHA employee shall be removed from his/her file upon conversion to career status and may not be cited or considered in a subsequent disciplinary action against that employee.

Lerner testified that he "stated on the record that we were proposing this to clarify our understanding of what the national agreement already meant." He noted that by that time the issue had arisen in local grievances and that the NPMHU was "winning the issue in regional arbitration," as was the APWU.[2]

Patrick Devine, Manager of Contract Administration for the NPMHU contract, was the Postal Service's chief spokesperson in 2016 bargaining. He testified that he did not remember the Union claiming it already had the right to have MHA discipline expunged prior to its proposal or stating that the purpose of the proposal was to clarify existing contract language. (He added that there was no language to clarify.) He said he was aware there might have been some grievance activities, but there had been no request to move the issue to the national level as an interpretive issue.

The issue came up again in 2019 negotiations, but there is no dispute that by then the grievances in the present case had been appealed to arbitration at the national level.

Lerner stressed that the issue here is what happens if, after conversion to a career position, an employee engages in conduct that management determines justifies discipline and the Postal Service seeks to cite or rely on discipline issued to the employee prior to conversion. The Union concedes that if an MHA is issued a notice of removal, which the employee challenges, and then is up for conversion, the employee does not acquire career status prior to the removal action being resolved. Devine maintained, however, that the general practice in such circumstances has been to go ahead with the conversion.

In 2015 I issued a national level award in a grievance filed by the NALC involving the right of former CCAs to use annual leave following their conversion to full-time career status. The NPMHU and the APWU both intervened in that arbitration. Case No. Q11N-4Q-C 14239951, hereinafter referred to as "the 2015 arbitration." At issue in that case was the requirement in ELM Section 512.313 that: "new employees are not credited with and may not take annual leave until they complete 90 days of continuous employment...." The Unions argued that CCAs (and MHAs and PSEs) are not "new employees." The Postal Service contended that this ELM provision applies only to new career employees. I upheld the Postal Service position.

UNION POSITION

The National Agreement is silent on whether the Postal Service may consider or cite to discipline of a noncareer MHA when determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after conversion to career status. The Union argues, however, that review of the National Agreement as a whole, confirms that the parties' did not intend MHA discipline to carry over to career employment.

ELM Section 421.41 recognizes that a "career appointment" is a "new hire for an appointment without time limit...that confers full employee benefits and privileges." The ELM's declaration that an MHA converted to a career appointment is a "new hire," the Union asserts, is confirmed by a review of the National Agreement. When an MHA is hired into a career position, the employee: has no seniority; receives no credit for any service as a noncareer MHA for placement on the salary schedule; is not permitted to carry over any annual leave -- but instead such leave must be paid out as terminal leave; and has no service credit for retirement purposes or for leave accrual. Moreover, as held in the 2015 arbitration, time as an MHA does not count for satisfying the 90-day qualifying period to utilize annual leave.

The Union also points to unchallenged testimony of its General Counsel, Bruce Lerner, that in both 2016 and 2019 bargaining the Postal Service repeatedly stressed the importance of maintaining the demarcation between noncareer and career to avoid legal challenges to their separate treatment for purposes such as participation in federal retirement and health insurance programs. Not surprisingly, the Union asserts, where the parties wanted to depart from the general rule that career employees were "new hires" without a link to their noncareer appointment, they did so expressly.[3]

The Union contends that, consistent with the 2015 arbitration, it would be improper for the Postal Service to discipline a career employee by relying upon prior discipline imposed under a different set of rules and standards than those applicable to career employees, including the full protections of just cause and the disciplinary procedures set out in Article 16. The Union stresses that this is particularly true in the two grievances leading to this case, both of which involved attendance issues. MHAs have unfixed schedules and reduced leave, as well as lower standards for "just cause," which may well have contributed to the underlying attendance issues.

The Union adamantly rejects the Postal Service's claim that the NPMHU is attempting in this case to achieve in arbitration what it failed to achieve in bargaining. During bargaining for the 2016 and 2019 contracts, the NPMHU made, and later withdrew, proposals seeking to prohibit the carryover of MHA discipline. Notably, by the spring of 2016, when the parties were in negotiations, there was an ongoing dispute between the parties on this issue. Not only had the Union filed numerous grievances, including the two at issue here, but the NPMHU had prevailed in regional arbitration on this issue -- as had the APWU. Lerner credibly testified that in both rounds of bargaining he stated on the record that the purpose of the proposal was to clarify the National Agreement to conform to the Union's position as to what it already meant.

The Union also rejects the Postal Service's arguments that barring the Postal Service from considering discipline imposed while an employee was an MHA is impractical or [3] The Union points to the following instances where linkage between noncareer and career appointments is set out in the National Agreement: (1) relative standing of MHAs hired as career employees on the same day is based on service as an MHA; (2) MHAs who have successfully completed a 360-day term are not required to serve a probationary period when hired for a career appointment; (3) dues deduction authorization forms stay in effect, subject to a proviso; (4) time as an MHA is counted for determining FMLA eligibility; and (5) MHA time is counted for the lock-in period for transfers from one postal installation to another.

unreasonable. In particular, the NPMHU conceded at arbitration that in the rare case where a removal is pending at the time of conversion, the MHA is not going to get a career position unless that removal is overturned.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that, in the absence of specific contract language addressing the issue in this case, an arbitrator should apply the long-held principle of "just cause" to gauge the appropriateness of management's disciplinary actions. The concept of just cause has long been fundamental to contracts between the parties. As stated in Article 16.1 of the National Agreement, "a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause...."[4] Application of just cause necessarily must be highly fact-specific, and any deciding party must be able to consider the totality of the circumstances. See USPS and NALC, Case No. NC-NAT-16, 285 (Garrett 1979). The Postal Service insists that regional arbitrators are more than equipped to consider the facts and circumstances of each case and employee, and determine if consideration of that individual's MHA record is appropriate. Just cause, the Postal Service argues, demands that arbitrators have that flexibility. Automatically absolving an employee of their record taints not only the principle of just cause, but the purpose of progressive discipline.

The Postal Service maintains that the 2015 arbitration case can be distinguished from the present case because it dealt with the interpretation of very specific ELM handbook language -- not the absence of any language. A blanket application of the 2015 award misses the nuance that interpretation deserves.

The Postal Service also contends that the Union is attempting to gain rights through arbitration that it was unable to achieve in bargaining. In 2016, the NPMHU made a proposal to achieve what it is seeking in this arbitration -- expungement of records of an employee upon conversion from MHA to career. Postal Service negotiator Patrick Devine testified he had no recollection of hearing the Union state that it considered its proposal to be a clarification proposal as Lerner testified. Moreover, Devine testified that at the time he received the 2016 proposal he had not previously been aware of any Union position, including in a local grievance, that mail handlers already had expungement rights. The Postal Service stresses that if the Union previously had understood that MHA records were to be expunged upon conversion to career, there would have been no need to make the changes it proposed.

The Postal Service argues that adopting the Union's position would lead to unworkable and absurd results. It stresses that when a career vacancy opens up, management is required to convert an MHA based on their relative standing. It might be that, as in one of the underlying grievances, an MHA is converted when on the brink of being issued a Notice of Removal. In that case, it makes no sense that the employee start with a clean slate. The Postal Service asserts:

> If the newly converted employee continues to have attendance issues, management would have to start at square one in implementing progressive discipline. This would be true even though the employee had actual notice and opportunity -- during his time as an MHA -- to correct the offending behavior. That is to say, he already knew that such absences were unacceptable, and management had already attempted to deter him from such behavior with gradual discipline.
> Additionally, while employees who do not improve their attendance work their way through the disciplinary process for a second time, management may be forced to make on-the-spot adjustments to preserve operational integrity and function, possibly placing additional burdens on the employee's coworkers.

The Postal Service also points to certain positive vestiges of employment that carry over upon conversion to career. For example on-the-job training which is not repeated upon an MHA's conversion to career. Similarly, when individuals are converted, they bring their relative standing, vis-à-vis others converted at the same time. It argues this only emphasizes that newly converted career employees are not "brand new persons."

FINDINGS

Article 16 of the National Agreement addresses Discipline Procedure. It provides:

>
> In the administration of this Article, a basic principle shall be that discipline should be corrective in nature, rather than punitive. No employee may be disciplined or discharged except for just cause.... Any such discipline or discharge shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure provided for in this Agreement....

The parties' Contract Interpretation Manual further elaborates:

> Corrective Rather than Punitive
> The requirement that discipline be "corrective" rather than "punitive" is an essential element of the "just cause" principle. In short, it means that for most offenses management must issue discipline in a "progressive" fashion, issuing lesser discipline (e.g., a letter of warning) for a first offense...and a pattern of increasingly severe discipline for succeeding offenses (e.g., short suspension, long suspension, discharge)....

MHAs who convert to career status are hired as "new employees." ELM Section 421.41 includes the following description:

> a. Career appointment -- a new hire for an appointment without time limit requiring the completion of a probationary period that confers full employee benefits and privileges. The term applies to (a) new employees, (b) former employees who are being reinstated, (c) employees transferring from federal agencies, and (d) current Postal Service employees who choose to transfer to or from the rural carrier craft.

As the Union points out, MHAs who are hired as new career employees do not receive service credit for seniority or retirement purposes or, as determined in the 2015 arbitration, for eligibility to start taking annual leave upon being hired as a career employee.

In Article 12.1.E of the National Agreement, the parties expressly provided:

> MHAs who successfully complete at least one 360-day term will not serve a probationary period when hired for a career appointment, provided such career appointment directly follows an MHA appointment.

The parties also expressly agreed in an MOU Re: Relative Standing of Mail Handler Assistants and Subsequent Seniority Upon Conversion to Career Mail Handlers that:

> MHAs will be converted to career positions in the Mail Handler craft in precisely the same order as the relative standing list. If more than one MHA is converted to career status on the same date in the same installation, seniority ranking will be based on their position on the MHA relative standing list.

The parties notably did not provide for carryover of the disciplinary record acquired as an MHA when an MHA is converted and hired as a new career employee.

The evidence does not show that the Union's 2016 (or 2019) bargaining proposal on this matter was an acknowledgement that -- absent agreement on such proposal -- the Postal Service contractually could consider MHA discipline. In addition to the testimony of its General Counsel that he stated during bargaining that the Union's proposal was to clarify its understanding that the existing contract did not permit such consideration, the Union had asserted that position in the grievance process. And while the issue had not yet been elevated to the national level -- which the Postal Service chose to do in this case -- the Union's position was successfully presented in regional arbitration cases by both the NPMHU and the APWU. Where an existing contract is ambiguous or open to different interpretations and the parties appear not to agree, a party may seek to obtain agreement on an explicit provision consistent with its position as to the meaning of the existing contract without detracting from that position.

The Postal Service argues that it makes more sense and better comports with the concept of just cause to take into account an employee's entire discipline record including discipline previously imposed when in a noncareer position. The Postal Service seems to recognize that the situations are not entirely the same, by arguing that the deciding party -- such as a regional arbitrator -- should and can consider the appropriate weight to accord to discipline imposed while the individual was employed as an MHA. It also does not dispute that MHAs not only are subject to different working conditions -- particularly as regards scheduling -- but do not have the full scope of just cause protection afforded to career employees.[5]

From a policy perspective, arguably there may be some appeal to the Postal Service's position -- just as in the 2015 arbitration I noted that the Union's position to credit service as a CCA (or MHA) for leave-taking status did not seem unjustifiable as a policy matter. But, on balance, the record supports a finding that when the parties to the National Agreement wanted to include or carry over experience while an MHA after conversion to new career employee status they did so expressly, as they did for probationary period and relative standing.[6]

In conclusion, consistent with their status as new hires, former MHAs who are converted to career positions start afresh for disciplinary purposes.[7]

[5] It also is noteworthy that upon completion of each 360-day term the Postal Service is free not to reappoint an MHA to a new term without having to justify its decision, provided the decision is not pretextual.

[6] The Postal Service points out that employees who convert from MHA to career status, unlike other new hires, do not undergo on-the-job training although this is not spelled out in the contract. A decision by management not to provide redundant training, even if it could be subject to bargaining, hardly is comparable to the issue at hand, particularly as discipline of both career and MHA employees is addressed in some detail in the contract.

[7] The Union essentially has conceded that if an MHA is the subject of a notice of removal at the time the individual otherwise would be converted to a career position, that removal process -- including any challenge by the MHA -- is first to be completed.

AWARD

As set forth in the above Findings, discipline issued to an employee while employed as a noncareer Mail Handler Assistant (MHA) may not be considered or cited in determining whether to issue discipline to the employee after his or her conversion to full-time career status.

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On April 10, 1981, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that there is no interpretive dispute between the parties at the National level as to the meaning and intent of the language set forth in Article XLII, Section 1.D.4., of the National Agreement as that language relates to the assignment given the employee on behalf of whom this grievance was filed.

Based upon information contained in the file, an agreement was reached between local union and management officials relative to the operation of the 010/020 culling area. We recognize the responsibility of the parties to adhere to the provisions of that agreement. We also recognize, however, that it was not the intent of the parties who negotiated the National Agreement to have the referenced contract language serve as a basis for allowing employees to select particular preferred duties (or tasks they would like to perform) from among the duties in the preferred duty assignments which they are awarded through the bidding procedure. With this understanding, we can consider the case closed.

Please sign a copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to close this case.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On November 22, 1982, we met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by your representative as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The question in this grievance is whether or not management violates Article 12 of the National Agreement when full-time regular employees are not given their preference of assignments within their bids.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that there is no contractual requirement to give a full-time regular his choice of work assignments within his bid.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as acknowledgment of agreement to close this grievance.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

RE: Reassignment Under Article 12.6C5

Dear Mr. Downes:

I am writing to you in regards to the anticipated impact of reassignments made to the Mail Handler craft under Article 12.6C5 of the Agreement due to new and advanced automation.

A number of questions have arisen regarding the status and seniority standing of employees who may be involuntarily reassigned to the Mail handler craft under the aforementioned provisions.

Specifically, the provisions of Article 12.2G3, provide that when an employee changes from one craft to another (involuntarily) the employee begins a new period of seniority. The Union contends that the employee so effected would have seniority in the Mail Handler craft established as of the date he/she enters the Mail Handlers craft.

For example: A full-time clerk craft employee is involuntarily reassigned to the Mail Handler craft effective October 1, 1990.

It is the Union's position in the example cited that the employee would be placed in the Mail Handler craft with a seniority date of October 1, 1990.

Please advise as to whether you concur with the Union's position in this regard.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.

Dear Mr. Amma:

This is in response to your of letter of September 25 regarding the anticipated impact of reassignments made to the the Mail Handler Craft under Article 12.6C5 of the National Agreement due to new and advanced automation.

Your concerns centered around the status and seniority standing of employees who may be involuntarily reassigned to the Mail Handler Craft under Article 12.6C5.

You raised as a example a full-time clerk craft employee who was involuntarily reassigned to the Mail Handler Craft, effective October 1.

It is the Union's position in the example cited above that the affected employee would be placed in the Mail Handler Craft with a seniority date of October 1.

The Postal Service concurs with the Union's position that the affected employee who was involuntarily reassigned from the Clerk Craft to the Mail Handler Craft under Article 12.6C5 would begin a new period of seniority.

Should there be any questions on this matter, please contact William Scott of my staff at 268-3841.

Questions and Answers

Effective Dates

1. What are the effective dates of implementation of the 2019 National Agreement?

Work Rules. All work rules revised by the 2019 National Agreement take effect on Saturday, April 25, 2020, unless the National Agreement specifies another date.

Wages. With regard to wage increases and new wage rates – which to this point include the November 2019 general wage increase and the COLA which was effective February 29, 2020 (paid on March 20, 2020) – these are implemented prospectively in Pay Period 10, which begins on April 25, 2020.

Night Differential. The new night differential rates begin in Pay Period 11, which begins on May 9, 2020.

MHA Overtime. The new rules on MHA overtime, providing overtime pay for hours over eight in a service day, begin on May 9, 2020.

MHA Conversions. The date for conversion of MHAs to career under the one-time conversion program for MHAs with 2.5 years of service is June 6, 2020.

Elimination of Casual Employees. The last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

MHA Relative Standing. The effective date for deeming all newly hired MHAs to be hired on a Saturday at the start of the pay period during which they begin work, solely for relative-standing-based-conversion to career, is May 9, 2020.

Starting Times. The effective date for measuring cumulative changes in starting time for a bid under revised Article 12.3B6 is the date of ratification, or April 7, 2020.

LMOUs. Because of the ongoing pandemic, the NPMHU and the Postal Service have agreed on a Memorandum of Understanding to delay the period during which the parties at each Installation will be authorized to conduct negotiations over the terms of their Local Memoranda of Understanding or LMOUs. In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in

May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing. Initialed copies of this written statement and copies of all proposals and counterproposals pertinent to the issue(s) in dispute shall be appealed within fifteen (15) days after October 31, 2020 to all of the following addresses:

   LR Service Center
   Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

Casuals

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

Recently, I met with Tim Dwyer to discuss the above captioned case at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the senior volunteer in lieu of takes the seniority of the senior full-time employee subject to involuntary reassignment.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Per Article 12.5.C.5.B.9 of the National Agreement, "Any senior employee in the same occupational group in the same installation may elect to be reassigned to the gaining installation and take the seniority of the senior full-time employee subject to involuntary reassignment. Such senior employees who accept reassignment to the gaining installation do not have retreat rights". Article 12.2.G.6 does not apply to senior in lieu of volunteers.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case, thereby removing it from the pending Step 4 listing.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

BACKGROUND

This dispute raises the question of whether an employee accumulates seniority within the letter carrier craft during such time as he serves as a temporary supervisor. The Postal Service says he does; NALC says he does not.

Supervisors are absent for a variety of reasons. They may miss a day or two because of illness; they may be gone a week or more because of vacation; they may be away even longer because of a special detail. Management ordinarily replaces them with craft employees. The latter become temporary supervisors.* While working in that capacity, they have the authority to adjust grievances on behalf of Management and to discipline employees. Appointment to such a temporary supervisor's position is strictly voluntary on the part of the employee.

Employees have always accumulated seniority within the letter carrier craft for time spent as temporary supervisors. Their original dates of hire were unaffected by such a supervisory stint.

However, this subject has been a source of conflict between the parties in recent years. NALC amended the membership eligibility provisions of its constitution at an August 1976 convention. Its constitution thereafter provided that "...any regular member of the NALC who is temporarily... promoted to a supevisory position...will not be eligible to continue their membership in the NALC." NALC subsequently interpreted this provision to mean that anyone accepting a temporary supervisor's position would not be eligible to participate in the NALC health benefits plan. These actions prompted a Postal Service charge that NALC was engaging in "unfair labor practices." The charge led to extensive NLRB litigation.

Also, during the negotiation of the 1978 National Agreement, NALC proposed the following clause: "Seniority does not continue to accrue during service in temporary (204b)... supervisory positions." The Postal Service rejected this proposal on two grounds. First, it believed adoption of such a clause would pose severe administrative problems in maintaining seniority rosters. Second, it believed adoption of such a clause would significantly reduce the pool of craft employees willing to accept temporary supervisory positions. Bargaining on this issue led NALC to drop its proposal in return for a Postal Service concession on a related seniority matter.*

* They are also known as 204(b) supervisors, a reference to Section 204(b) of the Postal Field Service Compensation Act of 1955.

The instant grievance was filed in July 1980, two years after the execution of the 1978 National Agreement. It protests Management's action in continuing to permit employees to accrue seniority in the letter carrier craft during the period they are working as temporary supervisors. It was prompted by a November 8, 1979 Postal Service memorandum signed by Senior Assistant Postmaster General Ulsaker which stated in part:

> "Recent arbitration and NLRB decisions hold that bargaining unit employees while temporarily assigned...to supervisory...positions are not employees under the collective bargaining agreements; and therefore not governed by the provisions of, nor entitled to the benefits provided by, such agreements.
> "Our policy with respect to such assignments outside of the bargaining units will be to treat them as non-bargaining unit employees and to grant benefits consistent with those provided for other employees in the non-bargaining unit salary schedules to which assigned. Thus such employees will not be entitled to Out of Schedule Overtime, Guaranteed Time, PDC On-Call Time and Holiday Scheduling Premium.

* The concession involved employees who moved into permanent supervisor positions and were later involuntarily returned to the letter carrier craft. They received seniority credit within the craft for their supervisory time pursuant to Article XLI, Section 2G2 of the 1975 National Agreement. The parties eliminated that seniority credit in Article XLI, Section 2F of the 1978 National Agreement.

"Such employees will assume the schedule for the non-bargaining unit position to which assigned but will not be eligible for Out of Schedule Overtime or Non-Bargaining Rescheduling Premium due to a schedule change upon accepting the temporary assignment. They will, of course, be eligible for overtime and other special pay provisions applicable to their assigned non-bargaining position..." (Emphasis added)

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

NALC relies on Article XLI, Section 2A2 of the 1978 National Agreement:

"Seniority is computed from date of appointment in the letter carrier craft and continues to accrue so long as service is uninterrupted in the letter carrier craft in the same installation, except as otherwise specifically provided."

It claims the Postal Service had for years considered temporary supervisors to be bargaining unit employees. It believes it necessarily followed that their "service" in the letter carrier craft was "uninterrupted" and that they hence were entitled to accrue craft seniority while filling a supervisory assignment. It believes all of this was changed by the November 1979 memorandum, by the Postal Service statement that temporary supervisors would thereafter be treated as non-unit employees. It argues that such non-unit status means their "service" in the letter carrier craft has been "...interrupted" and that they hence cannot accrue seniority while working as a supervisor. Its position, in short, is that the proper application of Article XLI, Section 2A2 has been substantially altered by the Postal Service memorandum.

Any analysis of this argument must begin with the terms of the National Agreement itself. Article XLI, Section 2A2 addresses the issue in dispute. It says an employee's seniority accrues only "so long as service is uninterrupted in the letter carrier craft..." Nowhere in the National Agreement did the parties explain how this clause was to be applied. They did not describe situations in which "service" would be considered to have been "...interrupted" or "uninterrupted." These words were simply left undefined.

There are, notwithstanding this silence, several ways of determining what the parties intended. The Postal Service has, from the inception of this collective bargaining relationship, given employees seniority credit within the letter carrier craft for time spent working as a temporary supervisor. This seniority accrual has occurred routinely in most, if not all, postal installations. NALC accepted these arrangements for years. It did not challenge this seniority accrual through the grievance procedure until July 1980. This long-standing practice indicates the parties fully understood that employees accumulate craft seniority during those periods in which they serve as temporary supervisors. The parties never deemed an employee's "service" to have been "...interrupted" by reason of such supervisory status.

The language of Article XLI, Section 2A2 has remained the same for years.* The practice of employees accruing seniority within the letter carrier craft while working as temporary supervisors has been in effect for years. Hence, the general contract language with respect to "service" being "...interrupted" or "uninterrupted" should be construed in light of this practice. The established way of doing things is usually the contractually correct way of doing things.

These views are reinforced by the parties' bargaining history. NALC proposed the following clause in the 1978 negotiations: "Seniority does not continue to accrue during service in temporary (204b)...supervisory positions." It thus sought to eliminate the practice described in the previous paragraphs. But its proposal was unacceptable to the Postal Service. After further discussion, NALC dropped this proposal in return for some other seniority concession. Under these circumstances, it seems obvious that NALC knew at the time the 1978 National Agreement was executed that Article XLI, Section 2A2 did not contemplate an employee's "service" being "...interrupted" by his working as a temporary supervisor.

* Only the article and section numbers may have changed.

In reaching these conclusions, I have considered the memorandum issued by the Postal Service in November 1979. That memorandum, to repeat, says employees will not be regarded as part of the bargaining unit while functioning as temporary supervisors. It says too that these temporary supervisors will no longer be entitled to certain benefits under the National Agreement. None of this alters my interpretation of Article XLI, Section 2A2. That contract clause has been given its own special meaning through long-standing practice. The memorandum, a unilateral statement by the Postal Service, cannot change the meaning of this clause. Only a revision of the contract language itself or a mutual understanding to modify (or nullify) the practice could effect such a change.

It is commonplace in American industry to make some provision in collective bargaining contracts for seniority accrual for employees promoted to supervision. That accrual takes place even though the employee, during his supervisory stint, is not covered by the collective bargaining contract. This is essentially what the parties did in Article XLI, Section 2A2. That provision was designed to deal with the seniority accrual issue. The only difference is that it does not expressly mention employee assignments to temporary supervisor. Instead, it relates seniority accrual to "service" in the letter carrier craft being "uninterrupted." These words cannot be read in a vacuum. They have been construed for many years to provide for seniority accrual during the time employees are working as temporary supervisors. The employees' non-unit status, during this period, in no way detracts from this seniority accrual.*

Accordingly, the Postal Service memorandum offers no sound basis for upsetting a well-established interpretation of Article XLI, Section 2A2. Past practice must prevail in this case. It follows that employees are properly permitted to accrue seniority during the time they serve as temporary supervisors. There has been no violation of the National Agreement.

* This entire discussion assumes that the Postal Service is correct in declaring temporary supervisors to be outside the bargaining unit. Perhaps that assumption is supported by a NLRB decision but there is no arbitration award which holds that temporary supervisors are outside the unit for purposes of seniority accrual under Article XLI, Section 2A2.

Dear Mr. Elesie:

On July 31, 1986, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management properly reassigned a former supervisor to a full-time mail handler position.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that the case is to be remanded for application of the following:

> An employee reassigned from another craft to the mail handler craft on or after January 7, 1985, would be subject to the provisions of Article 12.2.F.1b of the 1984 National Agreement. We agreed that the meaning and intent of that section is that reassignments from another craft to the mail handler craft are to part-time flexible positions. Employees reassigned from another craft prior to January 7, 1985, would be subject to the provisions of the 1981 National Agreement which did not limit such reassignments to part-time flexible positions.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from July 21, 1987 to November 21, 1990. Case No. H4N-5N-C 41526 arose under the 1984-87 National Agreement, but relevant portions of the agreement are the same in both labor contracts. This was a three party hearing, and the American Postal Workers Union intervened in a dispute involving the United States Postal Service and the National Association of Letter Carriers.

Arbitration hearings occurred on August 11, November 28, and December 7, 1989, as well as on March 20, 1990. All hearings took place in a conference room of the USPS headquarters at 475 L'Enfant Plaza located in Washington, D.C. Mr. L. G. Handy, Manager of Labor Relations, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. Keith Secular of the Cohen, Weiss and Simon law firm in New York City represented the National Association of Letter Carriers. Mr. Thomas Neill, Industrial Relations Director, initially represented the American Postal Workers Union, but Mr. Richard Wevodau, Director of the Maintenance Division, assumed Mr. Neill's position at the hearing when he had to leave in order to see a doctor. In subsequent hearings, Mr. Phillip Tabbita, Special Assistant to the President, represented the American Postal Workers Union.

The hearings proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties. A representative of Diversified Reporting Services, Inc., recorded the proceedings and submitted a transcript of 572 pages.

There were no challenges to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. The parties elected to submit post-hearing briefs, and the arbitrator officially closed the hearing on June 11, 1990 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The parties stipulated that the issues before the arbitrator are as follows:

(1) In Case Nos. H7N-2A-C 4340 (St. George, Utah); No. H7N-2U-C 4618 (Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania); No. H7N-5K-C 10423 (Fairfax, Virginia); and No. H4N-5N-C 41526 (Santa Clara, California), the issue is whether the Employer violated the National Agreement by assigning a former supervisor to a full-time position in the Letter Carrier craft. If so, what should the remedy be?

(2) In Case No. H7N-4U-C 3766 (Laramie, Wyoming), the issue is whether the Employer violated the National Agreement by assigning a former supervisor to a part-time flexible position in the Letter Carrier craft. If so, what should the remedy be?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 12 - PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 2. Principles of Seniority

A. Except as specifically provided in this Article, the principles of seniority are established in the craft Articles of this Agreement.

B. An employee who left the bargaining unit on or after July 21, 1973 and returns to the same craft:

1. will begin a new period of seniority if

if the employee returns from a position outside the Postal Service, or

2. will begin a new period of seniority if the employee returns from a non-bargaining unit position within the Postal Service, unless the employee returns within 2 years from the date the employee left the unit.

ARTICLE 41 - LETTER CARRIER CRAFT

Section 1. Posting

A. In the Letter Carrier Craft, vacant craft duty assignments shall be posted as follows:

1. A vacant or newly established duty assignment not under consideration for reversion shall be posted within five working days of the day it becomes vacant or is established.

All city letter carrier craft full-time duty assignments other than letter routes, utility or T-6 swings,m parcel post routes, collection routes, combination routes, official mail messenger service, special carrier assignments and night routers, shall be known as full-time Reserve Letter Carrier duty assignments. The term "unassigned regular" is to be used only in those instances where full-time letter carriers are excess to the needs of the delivery unit and not holding a valid bid assignment.

2. Letter carriers temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) may not bid on vacant Letter Carrier Craft duty assignments while so detailed. However, nothing contained herein shall be construed to preclude such temporarily detailed employees from voluntarily terminating a 204b detail and returning to their craft position. Upon return to the craft position, such employees may exercise their right to bid on vacant Letter Carrier Craft duty assignments.

The duty assignment of a full-time carrier detailed to a supervisory position, including a supervisory training program in excess of four months shall be declared vacant and shall be posted for bid in accordance with this Article. Upon return to the craft the carrier will become an unassigned regular. A letter carrier temporarily detailed to a supervisory position will not be returned to the craft solely to circumvent the provisions of Section 1.A.2.

. . . .

C. Successful Bidder

1. The senior bidder meeting the qualification standards established for that position shall be designated the "successful bidder."

2. Within ten (10) days after the closing date of the posting, the Employer shall post a notice indicating the successful bidder, seniority date and number.

3. The successful bidder must be placed in the new assignment within 15 days except in the month of December.

4. The successful bidder shall work the duty assignment as posted. Unanticipated circumstances may require a temporary change in assignment. This same rule shall apply to T-6 and utility assignments, unless the local agreement provides otherwise.

Section 2. Seniority

A. Coverage

1. This seniority section applies to all regular work force Letter Carrier Craft employees when a guide is necessary for filling assignments and for other purposes and will be so used to the maximum extent possible.

2. Seniority is computed from date of appointment in the Letter Carrier Craft and continues to accrue so long as service is uninterrupted in the Letter Carrier Craft in the same installation, except as otherwise specifically provided.

B. Definitions

6. (b) Part-time flexible letter carriers shallbe converted to full-time positions of the same designation and PS salary level in the order of their standing on the part-time flexible roll.

G. Changes in Which a New Period of Seniority is Begun

1. When an employee from another agency transfers to the Letter Carrier Craft.

2. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement when an employee from another USPS craft is reassigned voluntarily or involuntarily to the Letter Carrier Craft.

3. When a letter carrier transfers from one postal installation to another at the carrier's own request (except as provided in subsection E of this Article).

4. Any former employee of the U.S. Postal Servixce entering the Letter Carrier Craft by reemployment or reinstatement shall begin a new period of seniority, except as provided in subsections D.1 and 0.4 above.

5. Any surplus employees from non-processing and non-mail delivery installations, regional offices or the United States Postal Service Headquarters, begin a new period of seniority effective the date of reassignment.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Union has challenged management's reassignment of supervisors to the employment status of full-time, regular or part-time, flexible employes in the Letter Carrier craft. In four of the five grievances in this dispute, the Employer reassigned supervisors to the National Association of Letter Carriers bargaining unit as full-time regular employes; and the NALC has challenged those assignments. The fifth grievance involves a supervisor who was returned to the Letter Carrier craft as a part- time flexible employe, and the Union has maintained that he should have been returned with full-time, regular status. Supervisors in all five grievances had their paygrade lowered when they returned to the bargaining unit.

One of the cases appealed to the national level arose in Laramie, Wyoming. The grievant left the Letter Carrier craft for less than two years while he worked as a full-time supervisor. He requested a return to the craft, and management reassigned him as a part-time, flexible employe. The grievant argued that the grievant should have been entitled to retain his seniority and that management should have reassigned him to a full-time, regular position. He seeks restoration of his seniority and reassignment to a full-time position as well as a make whole monetary remedy. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2).

Another of the cases arose in St. George, Utah. Mr. Jerry Turnbeaugh left the Letter Carrier craft and worked as a supervisor for over two years before he requested a reassignment to the craft. The Employer created an unassigned full-time, regular craft position and assigned it to Mr. Turnbeaugh, giving him a new seniority date. The Union contended that the unassigned, regular position should have been made available for bid and that Mr. Turnbeaugh should have been placed on the part-time, flexible seniority list with a new seniority date. (See Joint Exhibit No. 3.

A third case arose in Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania. A former letter carrier became a supervisor, but the Employer demoted him for disciplinary reasons pursuant to a Merit Systems Protection Board order. Management transferred him to a different postal facility and gave him a full-time, regular carrier position. The Union contended that the Employer should have promoted a part-time, flexible employe from the office of transfer to the regular position in that facility. The requested remedy is that the demoted supervisor be reassigned to the part-time, flexible list in order of seniority. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4).

A fourth case arose in Fairfax, Virginia and involved a letter carrier in Fairfax who received a promotion to the rank of supervisor in July of 1987 and transferred to a different office. After three months he requested a return to the Letter Carrier craft in Fairfax, Virginia. The Employer reassigned him there as a full-time letter carrier, and his "letter carrier" seniority was restoreed. It is the contention of the Union that the former supervisor should not have received his previous seniority because he had left Fairfax, Virginia and transferred back to the facility from another office. It is the belief of the Union that the former supervisor should be reassigned as a junior, part-time, flexible employe. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 5).

The final case arose in Santa Clara, California. It involved a letter carrier who became a supervisor of another office in July of 1985. In November of 1986, he submitted his resignation to the Employer. There is a factual dispute between the parties with respect to whether or not management ever accepted the resignation. In January of 1987, the Employer demoted the supervisor and reassigned him as a full-time letter carrier in a different office, giving him credit for his previous seniority in the craft. The Union contended that the former supervisor was not entitled to his prior seniority because he had transferred from another office where he had served as a supervisor and also because he had resigned from the U.S. Postal Service and, subsequently, had been rehired in Santa Clara, California. It is the belief of the Union that the former supervisor should be reassigned to the position of a part-time flexible employe and that any full-time assignment for which he had successfully bid should be reposted., (See, Joint Exhibit No. 6).

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The National Association of Letter Carriers

The National Association of Letter Carriers takes the position that management must make assignments to full-time positions in the Letter Carrier craft strictly in compliance with seniority provisions in the National Agreement. A former letter carrier reassigned to that craft from a supervisory position, thus, would be eligible for reassignment as a full-time, regular employe only if the supervisor retains greater craft seniority than any other full-time or part-time flexible carrier who, otherwise, would be entitled to the assignment, according to the NALC's theory of the case. The National Association of Letter Carriers argues that management fails to honor the seniority provisions in the parties' agreement when it asserts that it has complete discretion to reassign supervisors as either full-time, regular or part-time, flexible employes.

B. The American Postal Workers Union

The American Postal Workers Union intervened in this arbitration proceeding in order to dispute management's position that it has unilateral authority to return supervisory personnel to any craft at any installations in any status. It is the position of the American Postal Workers Union that the full-time or part-time flexible status of a returning supervisor is determined by numerous contractual and manual provisions, which vary from craft to craft. Accordingly, the APWU takes the position that the results of this arbitration proceeding may well determine how returning letter carriers are reassigned but that it does not necessarily decide how members of other crafts are to be reassigned.

C. The Employer

The Employer's first line of argument is that the issues in this case are governed by the concept of res judicata (the matter previously has been decided) because the parties to this proceeding allegedly settled the issue at Step 4 of several grievances in national pre-arbitration settlements. Those settlements, according to management's theory of the case, confirmed the right of management to place supervisors returning to the Letter Carrier craft in any status it sees fit.

Alternatively, it is the position of the Employer that there is no contractual provision restricting its right to determine the status of a supervisor reassigned to the Letter Carrier craft. Management maintains that Article 3 of the National Agreement gives it the exclusive right to determine the "craft" status of a reassigned employe, and the Employer contends that nothing in the agreement has restricted this managerial prerogative. Moreover, management maintains that past practice, supported by the parties' mutual agreement as manifested in negotiated settlements, establishes the Employer's right to determine the "craft" status of a reassigned employe, according to management's theory of the case.

The Employer contends that the Union has attempted to broaden the issue in the arbitration proceeding so that it includes seniority and not merely "status." According to the Employer, the only issue before the arbitrator is whether or not management has a right to determine whether a supervisor returning to the craft will be returned as a part-time flexible or as a full-time regular employe. Seniority, in the view of the Employer, is a separate issue..

VI. ANALYSIS

A. Nature of the Issue

The parties disagreed strongly about whether or not the dispute is about employment status or seniority. There are three types of employes in the bargaining unit, namely, (1) full-time regular employes, who are assigned five eight-hour days a week; (2) full-time flexible employes, who work flexible hours while they wait for conversion to full-time regular status; and (3) part-time regular employes, who permanently work less than forty hours a week. Part-time regular employes are governed by different seniority and assignment provisions than the other two types of employes and are not part of this dispute. Of concern in this case is the status of part-time flexible employes (hired for future full-time regular work) and full-time regular employes. References to employment "status" in the case have been to part-time flexible employes and full-time regular employes, and not to part-time regular employes.

Seniority, on the other hand, is concerned with "the length of service an individual employee has in a unit." (See, Robert's Dictionary of Industrial Relations, 657 (1986)).

Seniority determines the relative priority of full-time regular employes and part-time flexible employes with respect to a variety of privileges, such as the right to bid on certain positions for full-time regular employes, the order of selection for qualified bidders, and the order of conversion of part-time flexible employes to full-time regular employes. For purposes of this arbitration proceeding, the most important seniority right is concerned with the conversion of part-time flexible employes to full-time regular status. The Employer has not argued that it has a right to disturb provisions on seniority in the parties' National Agreement. Management, however, has contended that its reassignment of supervisors to full-time regular or part-time flexible status has nothing to do with the concept of seniority. It is the belief of the Employer that it has a reserved right in Article 3 of the National Agreement to make such reassignments. The contractual provision states:

> The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:
> (b) to hire, promote, transfer, assign and retain employes in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action against such employees.

B. Some General Guidelines

The parties have balanced their interests in the way they designed their collective bargaining agreement, and one manifestation of the balancing mechanism is to be found in the way the parties described their rights and obligations in the management's rights clause and the seniority provisions. The importance of disputes implicating such provisionscannot be underestimated. The role of an arbitrator in such cases is to review the language of the parties' agreement in order to construe the way they have ordered their relationship with regard to management rights and seniority.

The parties' agreement is an arbitrator's touchstone, and an arbitration award is "legitimate only so long as it draws its essence from the collective bargaining agreement." (See, United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel and Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593 (1960)). The point is that a source of seniority rights is to be found in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. As one arbitrator has observed:

> An employee's seniority as such does not by itself confer any right upon him. Seniority, without more, is merely the service status of a particular employee, in relation to the service status of other employees. (See, General Electric Co., 54 LA 351, 352 (1970)).

In other words, the meaning of seniority must find its explanation in the collective bargaining relationship between the parties. An arbitrator's assumption must be that the parties have decided seniority rights encourage loyalty and stability in the work force and have balanced those values against any lost flexibility as a result of using seniority as a basis for making employment decisions. An arbitrator is obligated to interpret and, then, to apply such contractual terms in a given case, recognizing that an application of seniority is almost never neutral. As the eminent Ralph Seward observed almost four decades ago:

> In seniority matters, the advantage of one employe is the disadvantage of another. To "stretch" the agreement to be "fair" to Smith is to stretch it to be "unfair" to Jones. Fairness, then, exists when each employe has the relative seniority right he is entitled to under the Agreement--no more and no less. (See, Bethlehem Steel Co., 23 LA 538, 541-42 (1954)).

It is an arbitrator's obligation to understand and implement the bargain of the parties, no more and no less. This is accomplished by interpreting the language of the parties' agreement. If the language of the collective bargaining agreement fails to be clear and unambiguous, it becomes necessary for an arbitrator to seek other sources of the parties' negotiated intent. Settlement agreements between the parties provide one source of such information. Past practices of the parties also may make clear their contractual intent. If the parties have been silent throughout their relationship with regard to the issue in dispute, it is reasonable for an arbitrator to assume that they expected their agreement to be interpreted in light of established arbitral principles. As one scholar has observed, "there is a whole set of implicit relationships not spelled out in the agreement and not confined to any particular employer, which an arbitrator assumes to exist." (See, 2 Ind. Rel. L.J. 97, 104 (1977)). As Professor Archibald Cox has noted, 'these arbitral principles are "drawn out of the institutions of labor relations and shaped by their needs." (See, 69 Harv. L. Rev. 601, 605 (1956)).

It is not uncommon for collective bargaining agreements to be specific about the effect of work outside a bargaining unit on an employe's accumulation of seniority. (See, e.g., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 61 LA 136 (1973); and National Cash Register Co., 48 LA 743 (1967)). In the absence of clear and unambiguous language, arbitrators often have scrutinized the practices of the parties to understand their mutual intent. (See, U.S. Steel Corp., 28 LA 740 (1957); and Mississippi Lime Co., 31 LA 869 (1969)). Numerous arbitration decisions have concluded that employes who return to a bargaining unit should be permitted to exercise their retained seniority. (See, e.g., Folger Coffee Co., 60 LA 353 (1953); Alpha Portland Cement Co., 40 LA 495 (1962); Pannier Corp., 41 LA 1228 (1964); and Leesona Corp., 56 LA 668 (1971)).

C. The Impact of Settlement Agreements

The Employer presented a number of negotiated settlement agreements and argued that they constituted binding precedents between the parties, precedents that already had resolved the disputed issue. (See, Exhibit Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, and 8). The Employer argued that those "Step 4" decisions supported its position in the case and established that management's conduct is consistent with its rights under Article 3 of the parties' agreement. In other words, the Union allegedly had agreed to settle grievances involving the same set of issues because it recognized the rights of management in Article 3. The Employer argued that those settlement agreements disposed of the issue in this case because they reflect uncoerced, consensual agreements by national representatives of the parties and show management's rights to determine the status of former supervisors who are placed in the crafts by a demotion. As binding precedent, the Employer argued that they must determine the parties' interpretation of their agreement and be dispositive in this dispute. Alternatively, the Employer argued that even if the Step 4 settlement agreements are not automatically dispositive, they at least show how the parties' view their agreement and how it should be interpreted. (See, Tr. I, pp. 20, 85, 100; and Tr. II, p. 62).

In one of the settlement agreements, a grievance had been filed by the National Association of Letter Carriers after management reassigned a former carrier who had served as a supervisor for eight years. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 1). The employe received the lowest seniority in the postal authority, but management awarded him a position as a full-time regular letter carrier. The Union took the position in the dispute that the former supervisor should have been reassigned to the bargaining unit as the last part-time flexible employe and should have started a new period of seniority, in accordance with Articles 12.2 and 41.2 of the National Agreement. Although this settlement agreement presented a similar issue as the grievance before the arbitrator in this case, the parties signed an actual agreement which stated:

> After reviewing this matter, we mutually agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. There is no dispute between the parties at Step 4 relative to the meaning and intent of Article 12.2 of the National Agreement. We find no agreement to return an employe to a part-time flexible position under the circumstances described. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 1, emphasis added).

The parties remanded the grievance to Step 3 for further processing. By the parties' explicit intent not to provide an interpretation of the National Agreement, they made this negotiated settlement agreement nonbinding on the arbitrator in this case. While it is not necessary to decide the effect of the settlement agrement on postal managers and union representatives, it is clear that the parties did not make it binding on the arbitrator.

The same analysis must be applied in another one of the settlement agreements submitted by the Employer. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 8). In that case, a supervisor had been demoted to the position of a full-time regular clerk and had been assigned to a different office. Management created a full-time regular position for the supervisor, and the Union grieved the fact that a part-time flexible clerk should have been converted prior to making such an assignment. The parties again "mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case" and remanded it to the regional level. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 8). Accordingly, that decision is not binding on the arbitrator in this case. The settlement agreement is not binding for another reason as well. It involves the American Postal Workers union, and the National Association of Letter Carriers was not a party to it. Likewise, another of the settlement agreements did not involve the National Association of Letter Carriers. (See, Employer's Exhibit No.5). It would not be rational to impose a binding interpretation of a contractual provision on a party when it had no opportunity to represent itself at the negotiated settlement. Yet another settlement agreement involved the National Association of Letter Carriers, but again it was an agreement to remand the dispute to Step 3 because the parties "mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue was fairly presented in this case." (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3).

Only one of the negotiated settlement agreements might have precedential value in this dispute. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2). In that case, the Union protested when a supervisor was transferred from another office and given a vacant, full-time position in the Letter Carrier craft, despite the availability of a part-time flexible letter carrier for conversion to a full-time regular position. The settlement agreement at Step 4 incorporated a memorandum on transfers prepared during Postmaster General Bolger's administration. (See, Tr. II, p. 39 re: The Bolger Memorandum of April 6, 1979). The arbitrator received evidence to the effect that the Bolger memorandum was devised to provide guidelines for voluntary reassignments and transfers. The

> Full-time nonbargaining unit employees will be reassigned into full-time positions unless the reassignment is to a vacant bargaining unit position.
> All employes reassigned to positions in the bargaining unit will have their seniority established in accordance with the applicable collective bargaining agreement. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2).

The Bolger Memorandum gave support to the Union's contention that seniority for reassigned employes is to be determined in accordance with the National Agreement and that such reassignments are to respect the contractual seniority provisions. While the Bolger Memorandum purported only to furnish guidelines, its incorporation into the Settlement Agreement gave it the potential force of a binding precedent. The Settlement Agreement gave the grievant, a part-time flexible employe, the status of a full-time regular employe and placed him in the bid position that previously had been awarded to the reassigned supervisor. The supervisor was not reassigned as a part-time flexible employe, however, but as an "unassigned regular."

The remedial portion of the grievance in this settlement agreement has not been read as permitting reassignment of supervisory personnel in an "unassigned regular" status in all cases. In this grievance, the Union did not ask that the former supervisor be reclassified as a part-time flexible employe in its request for corrective action. More importantly, the record showed that, when the Step 4 negotiated settlement agreement was reached by the parties, the postal facility in question had no part-time flexible employes at that particular work site. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 13 and Tr. IV, p. 61). In other words, no employe's seniority rights were implicated in the decision to classify the former supervisor as an unassigned regular. The point is that the only aspect of this settlement agreement binding in this case is the statement of principle from the Bolger Memorandum. The remedial section, because it failed adequately to address the same issues as those before the arbitrator in this case, is limited to its own facts and does not decide the issues of whether and under what circumstances a reassigned supervisor may be given full-time regular status when there are part-time flexible employes awaiting conversion. None of the settlement agreements submitted to the arbitrator proved to be instructive in this regard.

D. The Matter of Past Practice

The Employer argued that the precedential value of the negotiated settlement agreements it submitted to the arbitrator, should determine the outcome of this proceeding. There however, was nothing in the settlement agreements that indicated a mutual intent of the parties to supersede the language of their agreement or the Handbook with respect to seniority. (See, Case No. H4C-3W-C 28547, p. 32). Alternatively, the Employer argued that past practice between the parties modified or interpreted the language of the National Agreement to permit the Employer to reassign former craft members to the craft in a status designated by management. Almost three decades ago, the parties' own Richard Mittenthal set forth the preeminent instruction on the topic of past practice, and nothing since has surpassed its insightfulness and wisdom, although others have borrowed heavily from it. (See, e.g., NYU Fifteenth Annual Conference on Labor, 311 (1962)). Arbitrator Mittenthal set forth the virtually universally accepted tests of a past practice when he asked if it has (1) clarity and consistency; (2) longevity and repetition; (3) acceptability; and (4) mutuality. (See, Mittenthal, "Past Practice and the Administration of Collective Bargaining Agreements," Proceedings of the Fourteenth Annual Meeting, National Academy of Arbitrators, 30, 32-3 (1961)). Evidence submitted by the Employer with respect to the past practice of the parties failed to establish that management's decisions to reassign supervisors to bargaining unit positions met these well-established criteria, and it is clear that the Employer has the burden of establishing the past practice whose existence it has asserted. (See, Case No. W1N-5C-C 23743, p. 11).

Evidence submitted to the arbitrator failed to establish a clear pattern of reassigning former supervisors to full-time regular status. Nor did the evidence clearly establish an enunciated policy to do so. Instead, the data showed that management has acted at its discretion, sometime assigning returning supervisors to full-time regular status and sometimes to part-time flexible status. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9). Nationwide data on reassignment of supervisors from 1981 to 1989 showed that approximately thirty percent of supervisors returning to the craft in a different installation were reassigned as full-time regular employes. But eighty-seven percent of those returning to the same office were reassigned as full-time regular employes. Other data for fourteen selected cities showed that, except in Richmond, Virginia, returning supervisors were overwhelmingly reassigned as full-time regular employes. (See, Employer's Exhibit Nos. 10-20, 42, 43, 44, and 45(A)).

The problem with these data is that they fail consistently to show whether the returning supervisor was out of the craft for more or less than two years. A supervisor who returns to the same installation in the Letter Carrier craft after an absence of less than two years does not forfeit accumulated seniority under Article 41.2 of the parties' agreement. In other words, reassignment of a full-time regular employe would be consistent with the seniority provisions of the agreement. Nor have the data indicated the underpinning for decisions to reassign some supervisors as part-time flexible employes. Moreover, some of the personnel actions on data submitted to the arbitrator might later have been modified. (See, Tr. II, 17). Finally, not all supervisors involved were returned to the Letter Carrier craft. The Maintenance Craft does not have part-time flexible employes, so a return to full-time regular status in that craft would not indicate a practice of reassigning supervisors as full-time regulars at the expense of eligible part-time bargaining unit employes.

In summary, the data are not clear, consistent evidence of management's past practice of reassigning supervisors to full-time regular status in the Letter Carrier craft. Some of the data are consistent with the National Agreement. Some appear to violate it. Some are irrelevant to this dispute. The point is that management failed to show a clear and consistent practice of reassignment contrary to seniority provisions in the parties' National Agreement. Nor has it shown that such a practice, even if it existed, enjoyed mutual agreement. The existence of a number of grievances from a variety of geographical areas argue against such a position. The evidence failed to establish that the parties modified their agreement by past practice.

E. The Teaching of the Agreement

It is the teaching of the parties' agreement which is paramount in guiding an arbitrator. Although other sources such as negotiated settlement agreements or past practices of the parties might be instructive in the absence of clear contractual guidance, it is the negotiated agreement which is always preeminent. Article 41.2(D)(6)(b) of the parties' agreement states:

> Part-time flexible letter carriers shall be converted to full-time positions of the same designation and PS salary level in the order of their standing on the part-time flexible roll. (See, Joint Exhibit 1(B), p. 109).

Part-time flexible employes have been expressly covered in the seniority clause of the parties' agreement. One of their important seniority rights is the order of conversion to full-time regular status. To argue that status and seniority are separable issues overlooks the fact that reassignment of a supervisor into full-time regular status may cost a part-time flexible employe his or her advancement to full-time regular status. But for the reassigned supervisor, a part-time flexible employe could have converted to a more secure position. Accordingly, the reassignment of a supervisor who has not retained his or her seniority to full-time regular status violates the seniority right of part-time flexible employes waiting to convert. It should be noted that this contractual right is consistent with presumptions applied by arbitrators in the absence of contractual language about the seniority status of individuals returning to a bargaining unit. As one arbitrator has observed, "the great weight of arbitral authority" supports the proposition that an employe who leaves the bargaining unit and returns should not be preferred over an employe with the same or equal seniority who remains in the unit. (See, Folger Coffee Co., 60 LA 353, 355 (1973)).

At the arbitration hearing, Mr. William Henry, Special Assistant to the Assistant Postmaster General for Labor Relations, testified about his understanding of the difference between status and seniority rights. He stated:

ANSWER: When [a former supervisor] would go back to the craft, he went back at full-time status, but-we're obligated by contract to maintain the seniority provisions, which put this individual at the one date junior to the junior part-time flexible employee or substitute employee at that time.

QUESTION: Was there and is there a difference between seniority and status?

ANSWER: Well, yes, there is a difference. If a person is returned to craft as a full-time individual, he has the right to bid. Whereas, a part-time flexible doesn't. Seniority places him in the appropriate order for bidding among full-time employees, if you will. Now, this individual who is placed one day junior to the junior part-time flexible, as each part-time flexible who is on the list above him becomes full-time, he goes ahead of him on the seniority register. So that any given point in time when they're converted to full-time status, they have bidding rights by virtue of their seniority which is senior to this individual. Until that happens, he has a right to bid. But his seniority, not just for bidding but for other purposes under the Agreement, is one day junior to the junior part-time flexible. (See, Tr. II, p. 28).

Management's explanation of the difference between status and seniority, however, did not take into account the impact of part-time flexible seniority for conversion to full-time regular status. Inevitably, reassigning a former supervisor to full-time regular status impedes the advancement a part-time flexible employe could, otherwise, have expected to occur.

The Employer's position, in effect, has been that conversion to full-time regular status is not an automatic right for part-time flexible employes. The National Agreement determines the order in which part-time flexible employes are converted, but it does not guarantee that they will automatically be converted to the first full-time regular vacancy. Although this is a potentially valid construction of the agreement, Section 522 of the P-11 Handbook narrow this possible construction of the agreement. It states:

> Promotions to positions where full time employees and part-time flexible employees are authorized are usually to part-time flexible positions. A full-time regular position is not normally filled by promotion, reinstatement, reassignment, transfer or appointment if qualified part-time flexible employees of the same designation or occupational code are available for conversion to the position. Part-time flexible employees must be changed to full-time regular positions within the installation in the order specified by any applicable collective bargaining agreement. (See Employer's Exhibit No. 33, emphasis added.)

In other words, the parties' agreement, pursuant to Article 19, makes clear that the norm is to fill full-time regular vacancies from the ranks of part-time flexible employes. This provision does not preclude filling vacancies from other than the ranks of part-time flexible employes. It, however, does establish that the Employer does not have unfettered discretion to determine the status of a reassigned supervisor. The point is that this language in the P-11 Handbook, which has been incorporated into the agreement through Article 19, places the burden on management to establish why it is reassigning a supervisor to full-time regular status, if such reassignment impairs seniority rights of part-time flexible employes. This construction is consistent with the overall contractual framework of protecting important rights of seniority for bargaining unit members. As the United States Supreme Court has recognized,"more than any other provision of the collection agreement ... seniority affects the economic security of the individual employee covered by its terms." (See, Franks v. Bowman Transportation Co., Inc., 424.U.S. 747, 766 (1976)).

In view of this interpretation of the parties' agreement and P-11 Handbook, the Employer has failed to justify its decisions to place former supervisors into full-time regular positions in Case Nos. H7N-2A-C 4340 (St. George, Utah); H7N-2U-C 4618 (Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania); H7N-5K-C 10423 (Fairfax, Virginia); and H4N-5N-C 41526 (Santa Clara, California). In the case from St. George, Utah, management reassigned a former carrier who had been a supervisor for more than two years as a full-time regular employe, even though he was placed at the bottom of the seniority list so that converted part-time flexible employes would have senior bidding rights to his after their conversion. In that case, the former supervisor should have been placed on part-time flexible status, and the unassigned regular position created for him should have been filled as a reserve position.

In the Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania case, the former carrier who was demoted to a junior carrier at a different installation was given full-time regular status. Under Article 41 of the National Agreement, transferring to a different installations obliterates accumulated seniority rights regardless of how long the supervisor has been out of the craft. The agreement states that:

> Seniority is computed from date of appointment in the Letter Carrier Craft and continues to accrue so long as service is uninterrupted in the Letter Carrier Craft in the same installation, except as otherwise specifically provided. (See, Joint Exhibit 1(D), p. 108, emphasis added).

In other words, the reassigned supervisor should have been reassigned to a different office, and the senior part-time flexible employe at the Clifton Heights facility should have been promoted to fill the vacancy.

In the Fairfax, Virginia case, Article 41.2(A)(2) also applied. The former carrier should have lost his seniority because he transferred to a different office as a supervisor. He should have been reassigned as a junior part-time flexible employe.

The case from Santa Clara, California presented an unresolved fact. Did the reassigned supervisor's Letter of Resignation ever go into effect, and, consequently, should he have been considered a "rehire?" That particular case needs to be remanded to the parties for consideration of this factual issue, and a determination consistent with this decision should be reached.

In the case from Laramie, Wyoming, the grievant served as a supervisor for less than two years. Then, he returned to the craft. All the time was spent at the same installation. The Employer reassigned him as a part-time flexible employe, but he had not lost his seniority rights and should have been reassigned as a full-time regular worker. He must be made whole for any losses.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the grievances should be sustained in a manner consistent with this report, recognizing the need to remand Case No. H4N-5N-C 41526 for a factual determination and ultimate decision consistent with this award. It is so ordered and awarded.

WEIGER JR.
TRAVERSE CITY, MI 49686-9997

Dear John:

Recently, I met with your representative Dallas Jones to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether military service time counts as federal service for the purpose of a tie breaker.

After reviewing this matter we mutually agreed that the leave computation date, currently box 14 of PS Form 50, is used to determine "total federal service" for the purposes of applying Article 12.2.G8 (f).

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for application of the above settlement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter acknowledging your agreement to remand this case Step 3 of the grievance process.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Billy:

I recently met with your representative, Richard Collins, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether or not management violated Article 12.2.I2 of the 1998 National Agreement when it failed to automatically place Dan Ellithorpe, a Mailhandler MH-4 into the newly established assignment of Mail Handler Equipment Operator MH-5.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Determination of this issue is based on the fact circumstances involved. We further agreed that the provisions of Article 12.2.I2 apply to those situations where an established position (see Article 12.2.H) is upgraded by appropriate authority. It does not apply to the replacement or addition of an assignment when the new assignment requires an established position that is ranked at a higher grade. Such newly established assignments shall be posted for bid pursuant to Article 12.2B3.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to regional level arbitration in keeping with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Dear Mr. Neill:

On September 20, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the bidding exceptions in Article 12, Section 3A, are applied from the first bid or whether the exceptions are applied only after the employee is bidding for the sixth time.

In full settlement of this grievance, the parties agree that the subject provision is to be applied in the following manner:

> The bidding exceptions listed in Article 12, Section 3, are to be applied from the first bid.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to sustain this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Sincerely,

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

EMPLOYEE BIDDING

The following conditions have been agreed to in the implementation of the telephone bidding system:

1. There will be a one hundred and twenty (120) day transition period following the implementation of telephone bidding at an installation, during which employees may submit bids either by telephone or in writing. The one hundred and twenty (120) days will run from the first day on which telephone bidding is implemented at an installation.

2. There will be a toll-free telephone number available from any telephone, as well as TDD.

3. Telephone bidding shall be available during the following days and hours (including holidays): Monday through Friday, 6:00 a.m. to Midnight (Central Time), and Saturday, 6:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. (Central Time).

4. All bids shall close at midnight (Central Time) on a weekday on which the telephone bidding system is available until midnight.

5. Employees can enter, withdraw and/or review the status of their bids.

6. Employees will need their Employee Identification Number (EIN) and Personal Identification Number (PIN) to access the telephone bidding system.

7. When an employee has reached his/her successful bid limit, as set forth in Article 12.3A of the National Agreement, the system will still allow bids to be entered, but the bid will be flagged by the system as "ineligible". A system message will notify the employee to contact management. The personnel office will routinely review job bidding reports prior to awarding the bid to investigate ineligible bids, and to determine if there are situations as provided for in Article 12.3A for which the employee's bid count must be manually adjusted to make the bid(s) eligible. It is the responsibility of the employee to notify management if a bid flagged as ineligible is proper under Article 12.3A3 because the employee is bidding on an assignment that is "closer to the employee's place of residence." It is the responsibility of management to identify and rectify all other situations in which eligible bids are erroneously flagged by the system as ineligible.

SUBJECT: Part-Time Regular Mail Handlers

TO: Field Directors, Human Resources

Recently, the Joint National Study Committee on Part-time Regular Mail Handlers met. During that meeting, it was agreed that a need exists to reemphasize the procedures on bidding rights and scheduling part-time regular mail handlers.

Article 12 of the Mail Handlers National Agreement provides that part-time fixed schedule employees shall be afforded an opportunity to bid on vacant duty assignments. Accordingly, all part-time regular mail handlers should be provided an opportunity to bid. This opportunity is limited to those vacancies having part-time fixed schedules.

As an aside, full-time regular mail handlers may apply for residual vacancies having a part-time fixed schedule. Article 12.3.B.2 provides that the senior full-time regular employee who meets the qualification standard will be selected. That employee's seniority would be computed in accordance with Article 12.2.D.2.b. which provides that seniority begins on the date of appointment as a part-time fixed schedule employee and continues to accrue as long as service in the craft, the part-time fixed schedule category, and the installation is uninterrupted.

With regard to scheduling, part-time regular mail handlers are to be regularly scheduled during specific hours of duty. The practice of routinely changing their starting times or altering their hours of work (e.g., day-to-day or week-to-week as may be the case with part-time flexible employees) should not occur.

Please assure that this information is disseminated to offices within your division.

If you have any questions concerning this matter, please contact Joan Palmer of my staff on (PEN or 202) 268-3842.

and the
National Postal Mail Handlers Union
Questions and Answers

Effective Dates

1. What are the effective dates of implementation of the 2019 National Agreement?

Work Rules. All work rules revised by the 2019 National Agreement take effect on Saturday, April 25, 2020, unless the National Agreement specifies another date.

Wages. With regard to wage increases and new wage rates – which to this point include the November 2019 general wage increase and the COLA which was effective February 29, 2020 (paid on March 20, 2020) – these are implemented prospectively in Pay Period 10, which begins on April 25, 2020.

Night Differential. The new night differential rates begin in Pay Period 11, which begins on May 9, 2020.

MHA Overtime. The new rules on MHA overtime, providing overtime pay for hours over eight in a service day, begin on May 9, 2020.

MHA Conversions. The date for conversion of MHAs to career under the one-time conversion program for MHAs with 2.5 years of service is June 6, 2020.

Elimination of Casual Employees. The last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

MHA Relative Standing. The effective date for deeming all newly hired MHAs to be hired on a Saturday at the start of the pay period during which they begin work, solely for relative-standing-based-conversion to career, is May 9, 2020.

Starting Times. The effective date for measuring cumulative changes in starting time for a bid under revised Article 12.3B6 is the date of ratification, or April 7, 2020.

LMOUs. Because of the ongoing pandemic, the NPMHU and the Postal Service have agreed on a Memorandum of Understanding to delay the period during which the parties at each Installation will be authorized to conduct negotiations over the terms of their Local Memoranda of Understanding or LMOUs. In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in

May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing. Initialed copies of this written statement and copies of all proposals and counterproposals pertinent to the issue(s) in dispute shall be appealed within fifteen (15) days after October 31, 2020 to all of the following addresses:

   LR Service Center
   Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

Casuals

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2, the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2. the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above captioned cases at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue(s) in these grievances are whether a light/limited duty employee can be assigned to a residual vacancy that they cannot physically perform.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. The parties agree that an unassigned employee cannot be assigned to a residual vacancy unless the employee is able to perform the core functions of the position, with or without reasonable accommodation.

Accordingly, we agree to remand these grievances to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

National Postal Mail Handlers Union
Questions and Answers

Effective Dates

1. What are the effective dates of implementation of the 2019 National Agreement?

Work Rules. All work rules revised by the 2019 National Agreement take effect on Saturday, April 25, 2020, unless the National Agreement specifies another date.

Wages. With regard to wage increases and new wage rates – which to this point include the November 2019 general wage increase and the COLA which was effective February 29, 2020 (paid on March 20, 2020) – these are implemented prospectively in Pay Period 10, which begins on April 25, 2020.

Night Differential. The new night differential rates begin in Pay Period 11, which begins on May 9, 2020.

MHA Overtime. The new rules on MHA overtime, providing overtime pay for hours over eight in a service day, begin on May 9, 2020.

MHA Conversions. The date for conversion of MHAs to career under the one-time conversion program for MHAs with 2.5 years of service is June 6, 2020.

Elimination of Casual Employees. The last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

MHA Relative Standing. The effective date for deeming all newly hired MHAs to be hired on a Saturday at the start of the pay period during which they begin work, solely for relative-standing-based-conversion to career, is May 9, 2020.

Starting Times. The effective date for measuring cumulative changes in starting time for a bid under revised Article 12.3B6 is the date of ratification, or April 7, 2020.

LMOUs. Because of the ongoing pandemic, the NPMHU and the Postal Service have agreed on a Memorandum of Understanding to delay the period during which the parties at each Installation will be authorized to conduct negotiations over the terms of their Local Memoranda of Understanding or LMOUs. In particular, the parties at the National level have reset the initial sixty-day period for local negotiations – which originally was set to occur in

May and June 2020 under Article 30 of the 2019 National Agreement – to the sixty-day period running from September 2, 2020 to October 31, 2020. The default bargaining period, if the parties cannot agree to the exact 30-day period, is October 2, 2020 through October 31, 2020.

Either party can open negotiations with notification to the other party on or before September 15, 2020. The key dates to remember regarding Local negotiations are as follows:

1. The deadline for notification of intent to open negotiations is September 15, 2020. If neither party provides notification of its intent to invoke local implementation procedures by September 15, 2020, presently effective Memoranda of Understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 2019 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement.

2. In the event that any issue(s) remain in dispute at the end of the thirty (30) consecutive day implementation period, each party shall identify such issue(s) in writing. Initialed copies of this written statement and copies of all proposals and counterproposals pertinent to the issue(s) in dispute shall be appealed within fifteen (15) days after October 31, 2020 to all of the following addresses:

   LR Service Center
   Installation Head
   Local Union President
   NPMHU Regional Representative

3. The appropriate management official at the Area office and the Regional Union representative shall attempt to resolve the matters in dispute within seventy-five (75) days of the close of the implementation period. This seventy-five day period runs from October 31, 2020 to January 14, 2021.

4. If the parties at the Area/Regional level are unable to reach agreement by the end of the 75-day period, the issues may be appealed to final and binding arbitration within twenty one (21) days of January 14, 2021 or by February 4, 2021.

One-time MHA Conversions

1. Which MHAs are eligible for the one-time conversion?

   All MHAs in 200 or more man-year installations who have over 2.5 years of service as of the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement (that is, April 7, 2020) will be converted to career status as full time employees.

2. When will these conversions be effective?

   These conversions will be completed as soon as administratively practicable but no later than June 6, 2020, which is 60 days after April 7, 2020, the ratification date for the 2019 National Agreement.

3. What date will be used to determine the 200 man-year office?

Normally September 21, 2019 would be the designated date and the office size would remain constant for the life of the September 21, 2019 – September 20, 2022 National Agreement. For purposes of the 2019 National Agreement only, the parties at the National level have agreed that the 200 man-year report will be calculated using the 26 pay periods that covered the period from September 16, 2017 to September 14, 2018 and the office size will remain constant for the remaining life of the 2019 National Agreement.

Casuals

1. The 2019 National Agreement eliminates use of casuals in the mail handler craft; when does this become effective?

   The parties have agreed to a transition period not to exceed 120 days from the date of the Union's ratification of the Agreement. Thus, the last date for casual employees on the rolls of the mail handler craft is July 31, 2020.

2. How will this transition period work?

   During the transition period, the number of casuals employed at any installation may be maintained at current levels or at 3.0%, whichever is lower. The current level on the rolls that may be maintained will be determined by the number on rolls on the AP Report AAW996 that includes the date of ratification of the 2019 National Agreement. An exception will be made for installations that have local agreements allowing temporary use of additional casuals: such agreements will remain enforceable, provided that after the local agreement expires (if within the 120 day period) the number of casuals will be limited to 3%. Any new non-career employee hired during this transition period will be an MHA. At no time during the transition period will the combination of casuals and MHAs exceed 21.5% in a district and 26.5% in any installation except as provided for in Article 7, Section 1B or due to the Temporary Exception Period MOU for COVID-19.

3. Can current casuals be converted to MHAs?

   Casuals are eligible to take the appropriate examination and if reached, during the competitive hiring process, are eligible to be hired as MHAs.

Other Items

1. How is the initial MHA appointment date determined for the purpose of relative standing?

   Effective on May 9, 2020 (the second full pay period after ratification of the 2019 National Agreement), all newly hired MHAs shall be deemed to have an initial MHA appointment date on a Saturday, at the start of the pay period during which they began work in the installation. This is solely for the purpose of relative standing.

2. When are MHAs paid at the overtime rate?

MHAs will be paid at the overtime rate for work performed in excess of eight (8) hours on duty in any one service day (effective May 9, 2020) or forty (40) hours in any one service week.

3. Can employees place their names on the Overtime Desired List at any time besides the two weeks prior to the start of a calendar quarter?

   Yes. Newly converted full-time employees and employees converted, transferred, or reassigned into an installation or into the Mail Handler craft within the installation or a mail handler who bids or is reassigned during the a calendar quarter to a duty assignment in a different facility, in a different section, or on a different tour may place their names on the "Overtime Desired" list within the two weeks (14 calendar days) following the date upon which they are converted, transferred, or reassigned to full time. It does not matter whether the mail handler was on the OTDL for the losing facility, section or tour. Placement on the list shall be effective on the next calendar day.

4. Can MHAs be offered part-time career positions?

   Yes, the 2019 National Agreement states that any newly established or vacant part-time career positions will be offered to all MHAs within fifty (50) miles of the position for conversion to career based on their relative standing.

5. How does the change made in Article 10.2C of the 2019 National Agreement relate to MHAs selecting annual leave during the choice vacation periods?

   This minor change is meant to ensure that, if either party properly raises the issue during local negotiations under Article 30, the parties' representatives are required to discuss whether MHAs are allowed to apply for annual leave during choice vacation periods. Neither party is allowed to argue that such local negotiations are unnecessary. In addition, the parties at the local level remain authorized to reach local agreements or accommodations on this subject, by mutual agreement.

6. Will the Union be provided copies of Seniority and Relative Standing lists?

   For Seniority lists, the installation head will post a seniority list of Mail Handlers on all official bulletin boards for that installation and provide an electronic or hard copy to the Union representative in that installation.

   For Relative Standing lists, the installation head or their designee shall provide a hard or electronic copy of the Relative Standing list to the local Union official upon request.

7. What is the seniority of a Mail Handler when they are involuntarily excessed outside of their installation?

   Effective with the ratification of the 2019 National Agreement, any Mail Handler involuntarily moving from one postal installation to another postal installation shall have the seniority established as of the employee's time in the losing installation. Prior to the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, the seniority had included the Mail Handler's complete Mail Handler service time.

8. When an employee transfers into the Mail Handler craft, will the Union be provided time to address them in orientation?

   Yes. During the course of any employment orientation for new career or non-career employees or in the event a current postal employee is reassigned or transfers to the mail handler craft, a representative of the Union representing the craft to which the new or current employee is assigned shall be provided ample opportunity to address these employees.

9. Article 12.3B6 talks about a change in start time of an assignment exceeding four (4) hours of cumulative changes within the life of the Agreement; what does that mean?

   Cumulative changes are changes that move the starting time outside of a circle which has the starting time as its center and the agreed upon time as its radius. The 2019 National Agreement states that, to be offered to the incumbent employee, cumulative changes must be within four hours prior and four hours after the start time of an assignment. The start date for determining these cumulative changes begins on the ratification date of the 2019 National Agreement, which is April 7, 2020. When an assignment is posted for bid, the start time of the effective date of the bid will become the new point from which cumulative changes are measured.

   For example, if a start time on April 7, 2020 was 7:00 am, then a change to 9:00 am may be kept by the incumbent, but another change to 12:00 pm would be outside of the four (4) hour rule.

   Another example would be a change of three (3) hours from 7:00 am to 10:00 am, followed by a subsequent change of five (5) hours in the other direction to 5:00 am. In this example, the incumbent would again be allowed to stay in that position because the new start time of 5:00 am remains four (4) hours or less from the original start time of 7:00 am.

10. What happens when changes are made by either Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) that require a bid to be reposted while the number of bids in the section remains the same?

    An expedited selection process must be applied, similar to the expedited selection process used under Article 12.6C4d.

11. How would that expedited process work?

    The full-time employee whose bid is being reposted and all employees junior to that employee will be identified, and their duty assignments will be offered, in seniority order, to the employees remaining in the section beginning with the senior employee whose bid is reposted. An employee(s) declining to make a selection when canvassed shall be assigned to the duty assignment(s) remaining in the section after the expedited selection process has been completed. The results of the above action shall be effective at the beginning of the succeeding pay period.

12. Is the bid that is being reposted in accordance with Article 12.3B4 (change of fixed days of work), Article 12.3B5 (change in duties or change in principal assignment area), or Article 12.3B6 (change in starting time) part of the expedited selection process?

    No, the bid will be posted installation wide and will not be part of the expedited selection process.

13. Can a Mail Handler who is temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) or detailed to an EAS position bid on a vacant mail handler duty assignment?

    No, a Mail Handler cannot bid on a vacant duty assignment while detailed. The Mail Handler must return to his or her craft position for one continuous pay period before they may exercise their right to bid on a vacant mail handler craft duty assignment. The one continuous pay period must be completed prior to submitting a bid.

14. Under the new agreement, when does an employee begin serving a 14-Day Suspension?

    If the Union or the employee initiates a timely grievance prior to the effective date of the suspension and if the grievance is timely appealed to Step 2. the effective date of the suspension will be delayed until disposition of the grievance, either by settlement or an arbitrator's final and binding decision.

Dear Mr. Quinn:

Recently, I met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the aforementioned grievance at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is whether the Postal Service violated Article 12.2.B.12 of the National Agreement when it assigned mail handler, Al Smith, to a vacant residual assignment while he was temporally detailed to a supervisory position.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issues were fairly presented in this case. The parties agree that pursuant to Article 12.2.B.12 "[u]pon return to the craft the mail handler will become an unassigned full-time mail handler with a fixed schedule", therefore, employees working in a 204-B assignment may not be assigned to vacant residual assignments while so detailed.

Based on the aforementioned analysis, Mr. Smith may not be placed into the vacant residual assignment until he returns to the craft and becomes an unassigned mail handler employee.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing or to be rescheduled for arbitration, as appropriate.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On April 23, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in this grievance is whether management must provide copies of Form 1723 to the local union in advance of the detail it reflects.

During the discussion, we mutually agreed that the following would represent a full settlement of this case.

In accordance with Article 41, Section 1.A.2, of the National Agreement, Form 1723 "shall be provided to the union at the local level showing the beginning and ending times of the detail." Such copies of Form 1723 should be provided to the union in advance of the detail or modification thereto.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Re: See Attached List

Dear Mr. Johnson:

On December 10, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these grievances is whether employees on 204B assignments are required to work in the assignments exclusively for the duration of time periods shown on Forms 1723.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that when an employee is detailed to a higher level (204B) by executing a Form 1723, the beginning and ending dates of the assignment are effective unless otherwise amended by a premature termination of the higher level assignment.

Accordingly, the cases are hereby remanded to the parties at Step 3 for application of the above and for the purpose of fashioning an appropriate remedy.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle these cases.

Dear Mr. Hutchins:

On January 12, 1989, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance currently pending national level arbitration.

In full and complete settlement of this case, it is agreed:

1. An employee serving as a temporary supervisor (204B) is prohibited from performing bargaining unit work, except to the extent otherwise provided in Article 1, Section 6, of the National Agreement. Therefore, a temporary supervisor is ineligible to work overtime in the bargaining unit while detailed, even if the overtime occurs on a nonscheduled day.

2. Form 1723, which shows the times and dates of a 204B detail, is the controlling document for determining whether an employee is in 204B status.

3. Management may prematurely terminate a 204B detail by furnishing an amended Form 1723 to the appropriate union representative. In such cases, the amended Form 1723 should be provided in advance, if the union representative is available. If the union representative is not available, the Form shall be provided to the union representative as soon as practicable after he or she becomes available.

4. The grievant in this case, William Morehouse, will be paid eight (8) hours at the overtime rate.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle case no. H1N-5H-C 26031 and remove it from the pending national arbitration listing.

Case No. H1N-4J-C8187
(Bidding on VOMA Vacancies by 204(b) Supervisor)

APPEARANCES: L. G. Handy for the Postal Service; Cohen Weiss and Simon, by Keith E. Secular, Esq., for the Union

DECISION

This grievance arose under and is governed by the 1981-1984 National Agreement (JX-1) between the above-named parties. The undersigned having been jointly chosen by the parties to serve as sole arbitrator, a hearing was held on 22 September 1983, in Washington, D. C. Both parties appeared and presented evidence and argument on the following issue (Tr. 15):

> Did the Postal Service violate Article 41 of the [1981-1984] National Agreement by accepting the bid of a regular city letter carrier temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204(b)) for a vacant Vehicle Operations Maintenance Assistant (VOMA)?

A verbatim transcript was made of the arbitration proceeding, and each side filed a post-hearing brief. Upon receipt of the briefs on 18 January 1984, the record in the case was closed.

On the basis of the entire record, the arbitrator makes the following

AWARD

The Postal Service did not violate Article 41 of the [1981-1984] National Agreement by accepting the bid of a regular city letter carrier temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204(b)) for a vacant Vehical Operations Maintenance Assitant (VOMA).

The grievance is denied.

(Bidding on VOMA Vacancies by 204(b) Supervisor)

OPINION

I

This grievance originated in the Brookfield, Wisconsin, Post Office. On 27 May 1982, a bid was posted for a vacancy in the position of Vehicle Operations Maintenance Assistant (VOMA) -- Level 6. It is undisputed that full-time regular bidders from the clerk craft, special delivery craft, motor vehicle craft and carrier craft were eligible to bid for this vacancy. The successful bidder, Paul Whettam, whose seniority date was 4 October 1969, was a member of the carrier craft who, at the time he submitted his bid, was serving as a temporary supervisory position, known as a "204b position." Contending that Whettam was ineligible to bid for the VOMA vacancy, the Union filed this grievance.

The following provisions of the 1981-1984 National Agreement have been cited by the parties in support of their respective positions:

Article 1 (UNION RECOGNITION), Section 2-1, provides in part that "Managerial and Supervisory personnel" are not covered by the National Agreement.

Article 3 (MANAGEMENT RIGHTS) provides in part that the Postal Service "shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement . . . B. To . . . promote . . . [and] assign . . . employees in positions within the Postal Service . . . . "

Article 40 (SPECIAL DELIVERY MESSENGER CRAFT), Section 1-D-3-c, provides in part that "Full-time regular special delivery messengers are entitled to bid on the positions of . . . Vehicle Operations-Maintenance Assistant SP2-195."

Article 41 (LETTER CARRIER CRAFT) reads in part as follows:

Section 1. Posting

A. In the letter carrier craft, vacant craft duty assignments shall be posted as follows:

1. A vacant or newly established duty assignment not under consideration for reversion shall be posted within 5 working days of the day it becomes vacant or is established . . . .

Positions currently designated in the letter carrier craft:

KP 11 City Carrier, PS-5 (includes the duty assignment of Official Mail Messenger Service in the Washington, D. C. Post Office)

KP 11 Special Carrier, PS-5

SP 2-261 Carrier Technician, PS-6 . . . .

2. Letter carriers temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) may not bid on vacant letter carrier craft duty assignments while so detailed. However, nothing contained herein shall be construed to preclude such temporarily detailed employees from voluntarily terminating a 204b detail and returning to their craft position. Upon return to the craft position, such employees may exercise their right to bid on vacant letter carrier craft duty assignments. . . .

D. Other positions

City letter carriers shall continue to be entitled to bid or apply for all other positions in the U. S. Postal Service for which they have, in the past, been permitted to bid or apply, including the positions listed below and any new positions added to the list:

SP 2-188 Examination Specialist

SP 2-195 Vehicle Operations-Maintenance Assistant.

The parties agreed to the following stipulations (Tr. 18):

First . . . a letter carrier who serves as a VOMA continues to be represented . . . by NALC.

Second, he continues to accrue seniority in the letter carrier craft . . . .

Third, while serving as a VOMA, the employee may bid for letter carrier assignments."

The Union makes two basic arguments. First, it contends that inasmuch as a letter carrier, once he has successfully bid for a VOMA vacancy, will continue to be treated as a letter carrier, the assignment should be considered as a letter carrier duty assignment that is covered by the language in Article 41, Section 1-A-2, which states: "Letter carriers temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) may not bid on vacant letter carrier craft duty assignments while so detailed."

Second, the Union maintains that under the National Agreement 204b supervisors have no bidding rights of any kind. In support of that position it cites a 1977 award by arbitrator Paul Fasser that a city carrier in a Fort Lauderdale, Florida, Post Office, who had been detailed as a 204b supervisor, could not bid on a carrier route other than that to which he had been assigned prior to the detail.

The Postal Service points out that the VOMA position is not one of the specified letter carrier craft positions, but is open to bidding by eligible members of the special delivery messenger, motor vehicle, and clerk crafts.

In response to the Union's argument based on the language of Article 41, Section 1-A-2, the Postal Service asserted during the hearing and in its post-hearing brief that "there is a long history of allowing craft employees (while acting as 204B) to bid on open positions" (USPS Br., p. 4). No evidence to that effect, however, was introduced at the hearing.

In addition, the Postal Service emphasizes that Article 41, Section 1-A-2 prohibits letter carriers temporarily detailed to a 204b position from bidding on "vacant letter carrier craft duty assignments while so detailed." (Underscoring added) It argues that this provision is not applicable in this case because the VOMA position is not exclusively a letter carrier duty assignment.

II

The Union's first argument is unconvincing. That a successful letter carrier bidder for a VOMA vacancy continues to be represented by NALC and to accrue seniority in the clerk carrier craft does not alter the fact that members of three other crafts may also bid for the same job and have the possibility of being the successful bidder, depending upon their seniority.

The Union's second argument is also unconvincing. As the Postal Service points out, Article 41, Section 1-A-2, prohibits 204b supervisors from bidding on vacant letter carrier craft positions. In the case considered by arbitrator Fasser, the vacancy involved was a carrier route -- indisputably a letter carrier craft duty assignment. His decision, therefore, cannot control this case.

The Union's inferential argument that 204b supervisors cannot bid on VOMA (or any other) bargaining unit duty assignments because of the language of Article 1, Section 2, is not persuasive; the National Agreement does give 204b supervisors some rights, including the right voluntarily to terminate a 204b detail and to return to their craft position. Moreover, if 204b supervisors had no rights under the National Agreement, it would not have been necessary to specify that they cannot bid on a vacant letter carrier craft duty assignment.

For the foregoing reasons, I conclude that the grievance must be denied.

NATIONAL ARBITRATION PANEL

In the Matter of Arbitration between AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION and UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	GRIEVANT: C. Hernandez POST OFFICE: Phoenix, AZ CASE NO. H1C-5K-C 24191

BEFORE: Professor Carlton J. Snow

APPEARANCES: Mr. Martin I. Rothbaum

Mr. C. J. "Cliff" Guffey

PLACE OF HEARING: Washington, D.C.

DATE OF HEARING: December 11, 1990

POST-HEARING BRIEFS: March 4, 1991

AWARD:

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the Employer violated Article 37 of the National Agreement when, on approximately March 28, 1984, management denied the grievant a bid assignment due to her inability to work overtime. Because the grievant was the senior bidder for the open position and met all published qualification standards, she should have been awarded the position. An inability to work overtime does not necessarily prohibit an employe from performing his or her normal assignment. Accordingly, such an individual working with such a restriction is not necessarily on "light duty." Employes restricted from working overtime may bid on and receive assignments for which they can perform a regular eight hour assignment. The parties did not intend the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding to control individuals who are unable to work overtime but have no other medical restrictions.

The parties shall have sixty days from the date of this report to negotiate a remedy for the specific grievant involved in the case. If they are unable to accomplish this objective, they, by mutual agreement, may activate the arbitrator's jurisdiction any time during the ninety days period following the date of this report or by the request of either party after sixty days have passed from the date of this report but expiring ninety days after the date of this report. Further evidentiary hearings might be necessary in order for the arbitrator to fashion an appropriate remedy. It is so ordered and awarded.

IN THE MATTER OF ARBITRATION BETWEEN AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION AND UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE (Case No. H1C-5K-C 24191) (C. Hernandez Grievance)	ANALYSIS AND AWARD Carlton J. Snow Arbitrator

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to an appeal to arbitration from the American Postal Workers Union on January 18, 1985. The matter came to arbitration pursuant to Article 15, Sections 2 and 4 of the National Agreement. A hearing occurred on December 11, 1990 in a conference room of the United States Postal Service headquarters located at 475 L'Enfant Plaza, S.W., in Washington, D.C. Mr. Martin I. Rothbaum, Labor Relations Program Analyst, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. C.J. "Cliff" Guffey, Assistant Director of the Clerk Division, represented the American Postal Workers Union.

The hearing proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties. Ms. Ashorethea

Cleveland of the Diversified Reporting Services, Inc., recorded the proceeding for the parties and submitted a transcript of 91 pages.

At the hearing, the Employer challenged the substantive arbitrability of the dispute. The parties agreed, however, that the issue of arbitrability was so enmeshed in the merits of the case that the arbitrator should hear all relevant evidence and proceed to an award on the merits of the case only if the matter proved to be substantively arbitrable. The parties elected to submit post-hearing briefs, and the arbitrator officially closed the hearing on March 4, 1991 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The parties failed to agree at the arbitration hearing regarding a statement of the issue before the arbitrator. The Employer maintained that the issue is" "Was there a violation of Articles 13 and 37 of the National Agreement when an employe was denied a bid assignment on or about March 28, 1984 due to her inability to work the full duties of the assignment?" According to the Union, the correct issue before the arbitrator is: "Did the Postal Service violate Article 37 when the Service denied the grievant, who was the senior qualified bidder, bid Assignment 3711?"

The primary difference between the issues presented by the parties is whether Article 13 of the National Agreement was violated by management. At the arbitration hearing, the Union alleged that only Article 37 of the National Agreement had been violated. According to Mr. Guffey, the Union "never alleged that they [management] violated Article 13." (See, Tr., 6). According to Mr. Rothbaum, management believed "it was the Union's position all along that Articles 13 and 37 were the issue, and there are Union documents that substantiate that." (See, Tr., 9).

A careful review of evidence submitted to the arbitrator supports a conclusion that the Union is claiming only a violation of Article 37 of the National Agreement. At Step 2, documents in the grievance procedure refer to a possible violation of Article 19 of the National Agreement; but no one has argued to the arbitrator that Article 19 is a focal point of this dispute. Based on authority from the parties, the arbitrator states the issues as follows:

1. Is the grievance substantively arbitrable?
2. If so, did the Employer violate Article 37 of the National Agreement when, on approximately March 28, 1984, the Employer denied the grievant a bid assignment due to her inability to work overtime? If so, what is the appropriate remedy?

E. Information on Notices

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Employer has challenged the arbitrator's subject matter jurisdiction. On the merits, the Union has challenged the decision of management to deny a work assignment based on an employe's inability to work overtime. Although the meaning of the facts is in dispute, there is substantial agreement on the underlying context of the dispute. The grievant became an employe of the U.S. Postal Service some time prior to October of 1980. On October 4, 1980, she suffered an injury which resulted in her subsequent inability to perform certain normal work duties. From October of 1980 until January of 1984, the grievant underwent various medical treatments and was classified during this time with either a "limited duty" or a "light duty" status. At one point, the grievant's doctor limited her to answering the telephone at work.

On January 31, 1984, the grievant's doctor signed a "work limitation" slip which indicated that the grievant "may return to regular duties with no limitations on January 31, 1984." The doctor also indicated that the grievant "may work eight hours per day." (See, Union's Exhibit No. 5, p. 2). On January 31, 1984, a medical doctor for the Employer concurred with the report of the grievant's personal physician. According to the Employer's doctor, the grievant "is medically approved for regular duty, eight hours only, per day." (See, Union's Exhibit No. 5, p. 1).

On approximately February 17, 1984, management posted job No. 3711, a job entitled "Mark-up Clerk--Automated."

The job involved operating an electro-mechanical operator paced machine used to process mail that was undeliverable as addressed. On March 9, 1984, the Employer announced that the grievant was the senior bidder and that job No. 3711 had been awarded to the grievant. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 7).

On March 16, 1984, management notified the grievant that she did not meet physical requirements for the job because of her "limited duty restrictions." (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3(R)). The Employer asked the grievant to provide medical documentation of her ability to meet physical requirements of the position, or she would risk losing the bid. The grievant responded by re-submitting the form completed by her doctor on January 31, 1984 which allowed her to return to regular duties but limited her to no more than eight hours of work a day. On March 28, 1984, the Employer acknowledged receipt of the doctor's statement and added that

> The documentation provided states that you may work 8 hours per day. Your job duty requirements may require you to work more than 8 hours per day.
> Please provide us with a current evaluation of your ability to meet the physical requirement of this position prior to April 4, 1984.
>
> Failure to provide the required documentation will result in your bid being disallowed, and you will not be awarded the position. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3(S)).

On April 11, 1984, the grievant submitted a Step 1 complaint in the matter. Subsequently, she submitted a work limitation slip prepared by her doctor on April 12, 1984 which referred to notes of April 3, 1984. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3(T) and (U). The grievant's doctor recommended the following:

> The patient is apparently being asked to work a 50 hour a week shift. That is, 10 hours a day, 5 days a week. She's willing to work an 8 hour shift, a regular 40 hour work week, and I think it is reasonable to try this. I'm concerned, however, with the fact that, in time, that still she may not be able to handle this repetitive type of activity; and although I will give her medical clearance to try this on a 40 hour work week schedule, I would wish to indicate to her administrators . . . that it may become necessary for her to be considered for a job transfer to a job that does not include this kind of repetitive activity. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3(U).

On receiving this medical documentation, management concluded that the employe was not able to perform all requirements of the position and that she could not be awarded job No. 3711. The grievance was denied at each step of the procedure, and the Union appealed it to arbitration on January 18, 1985. When the parties were unable to resolve their differences, the matter came for hearing on December 11, 1990 with no challenge on the basis of procedural arbitrability.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The Employer

According to the Employer, the arbitrator is without subject matter jurisdiction in this case because "the parties resolved any national interpretive issue discussed in the grievance procedure in September of 1987 with the signing of a Memorandum of Understanding." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 11). The Employer has offered two distinct arguments for its theory of the case that the grievance is not arbitrable. First, the Employer maintains that the parties consistently considered the grievant to be in a "light duty" status during all relevant times, including the time period immediately before she bid on job No. 3711. Second, the Employer maintains that changes in language of the Local Memorandum of Understanding highlight a Union agreement to the effect that an inability to work overtime amounts to "light duty" status. In either case, the Employer believes that "light duty" status is a condition which the parties fully addressed and is controlled by the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding between the parties and that no national interpretive issue remains for resolution by the arbitrator.

Mr. George S. McDougald, General Manager of the Grievance and Arbitration Division for the Employer, and Mr. William Burrus, Executive Vice-president for the Union, signed the Memorandum of Understanding on September 1, 1987. This Memorandum established procedures to be followed when "an employee, as a result of illness or injury or pregnancy, is temporarily unable to work all of the duties of his or her normal assignment. Instead, such an employee is working on (1) light duty; or (2) limited duty." (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 1).

The Employer contends that the grievant was on "light duty" during the time period when she bid on job No. 3711. Accordingly, it is the belief of the Employer that the grievance which arose out of management's denial of her bid must be resolved in accordance with the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding. Hence, it is the belief of management that no issue remains for the arbitrator to consider. The Union, likewise, has considered the grievant to be in a "light duty" status throughout the grievance process, according to the Employer. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 11).

As evidence of this proposition, the Employer has pointed to Union statements during the grievance procedure. At Step 3, the Union argued that "the Local Memoranda of Understanding [sic] reads 'Employees with a light duty status must be allowed to bid and be awarded a position provided he/she can perform the duties of the new assignment.'" (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2, p. 5). In addition to this document, the Employer maintains that the medical documentation confirms the fact that the grievant was never removed from "light duty" status. According to the Employer, notes of the grievant's doctor indicate that he was not certain the grievant could perform even a 40 hour work week schedule.

According to the Employer, the doctor gave the grievant permission to "try" to work. He was not saying she could perform the work even for an eight hour day, according to the Employer's interpretation of the doctor's statements. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 12).

The Employer has acknowledged that there was some discussion with the Union during the grievance procedure which suggested that the Union believed the grievant was able to perform the assignment for eight hours a day and that she should not be denied the job because she could not work beyond this time period. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 12). It is the position of the Employer, however, that this discussion failed to amount to a disagreement about the fact that the employe was on "light duty" status. According to management, the grievant's status was precisely the status which the parties had covered in their 1987 Memorandum of Understanding. The Employer described its position as follows:

> It is our position that a person being unable to work more than eight hours, being considered on light duty, is no different than a person with a sit-down job and unable to walk being considered on light duty. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 12).

Alternatively, the Employer argues that the grievant was never removed from "light duty" status because she was under the control of a "Disability Reassignment Board established by the Local Memorandum of Understanding for the Phoenix Post Office. The Local Memorandum of Understanding had a provision which stated that "if the employee being qualified for permanent light duty bids off that assignment (with the approval of the Disability Reassignment Review Board, and supported by medical evidence), he will not be able to have his new assignment tailored to light duty." (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2). According to the Employer, this contractual provision "required the approval of the Committee to bid off. She could not arbitrarily leave the control of the Committee." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 13). Management argues that, because the grievant was still under the control of the Committee, her circumstances were covered by the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding between the parties.

It is also the position of the Employer that bargaining history for the Local Memorandum of Understanding shows that it was the intent of the parties to cover the present case with the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding at the national level. The parties submitted a portion of the 1982 Local Memorandum of Understanding to the arbitrator. It states that:

> Light duty is defined as a restriction on the type of duties that can be performed by the clerk during the tour. Limited hours is defined as a restriction on the number of hours that may be worked on any tour and shall not be construed as light duty. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2, p. 8).

Management argues that this provision was marked by an asterisk in the 1982 agreement between the parties. The marking allegedly indicates that management considered the provision to be inconsistent or in conflict with the National Agreement. (See, Tr., p. 72). According to the Employer, the provision was one of a number of provisions discussed at impasse in May or June, 1982; and the provision quoted by the arbitrator allegedly was negotiated out of the agreement prior to 1983. (See, Tr., 72).

It is the belief of the Employer that "the Union in agreeing to remove the existing language considered work beyond eight hours to be part of the light duty provisions." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 13). In other words, management argues that, when the parties agreed to remove the provision which stated "limited hours is defined as a restriction on the number of hours that may be worked on any tour and shall not be construed as light duty," this meant that a "limited hours" restriction for an employe would be construed as a "light duty" assignment for that employe.

B. The Union

The Union maintains that the grievance is substantively arbitrable. It acknowledges that the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding established a procedure to resolve situations in which an employe, "as a result of illness or injury or pregnancy, is temporarily unable to work all the duties of his or her normal assignment." (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 2). It is the belief of the Union, however, that there remains a legitimate dispute regarding the meaning of the words "normal assignment" in the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding. According to the Union, "whether a restriction to not work overtime modifies the employee's normal assignment is not just the threshold issue, but is the core of the case" in dispute before the arbitrator. (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 3). The Union maintains that the dispute in this case concerns whether the ability to work overtime is included within the duties of a "normal assignment."

To resolve the dispute, the Union focuses on language in the National Agreement in an effort to help define the verbiage of the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding. That Memorandum applies to all employes "temporarily unable to work all the duties of his or her normal assignment." According to the Union, "regular" or "normal" assignments are identified in all contracts and manuals of the parties as eight hour work days. From this fact, the Union concludes that overtime is not part of a "normal duty assignment" and that, therefore, the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding does not apply to employes who are capable of working the normal eight hour work day. (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, pp. 13-14). Further, the Union maintains that a limitation to work no more than eight hours a day does not necessarily constitute "light duty." According to the Union, Article 13 describes light duty as a 'reassignment to other duties because employes are 'unable to perform their regularly assigned duties.'" (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 14).

It is the position of the Union that, regardless of what the grievant's restrictions were at other times, her doctor had released her to full duty at the time of her bid on job No. 3711, with only a restriction that she not work overtime. Accordingly, the Union argues that the grievant, in fact, was able to perform her "normal assignment" and that, therefore, the circumstances of her case and others like hers do not fall within and are not covered by the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding. As a consequence, it is the conclusion of the Union that the dispute before the arbitrator is substantively arbitrable.

It is the belief of the Union that no weight should be accorded testimony and evidence which management introduced with regard to the 1982 Local Memorandum of Understanding. The Union argued that such evidence involved a new argument which had not been raised at prior steps of the grievance procedure. (See, Tr., 34-35). Furthermore, the Union argues that the 1982 Local Memorandum of Understanding included language which stated "limited hours is defined as a restriction on the number of hours that may be worked on any tour and shall not be construed as light duty." According to the Union, management's witness on the matter acknowledged that the local agreement which included this language was "the local memo we were being guided by at that time." (See, Tr. 61). The Union acknowledges that this language subsequently was deleted from the Local Memorandum of Understanding. It, nevertheless, is the Union's position that this subsequent deletion of local language "cannot add an 'overtime limitation' to the National Agreement's definition of light duty." (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 17).

VI. ANALYSIS

A. The Matter of Substantive Arbitrability

1. Did the Union acknowledge that the Grievant Was on "Light Duty"?

The Employer has argued the Union conceded in the grievance procedure that the grievant was on "light duty" status at the time she bid for the disputed job. As a consequence, it is management's conclusion that the present case is governed by the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding signed by Messrs. McDougald and Burrus on September 1, 1987. Hence, the parties already would have negotiated principles covering this dispute, and it would not present a justiciable issue for the arbitrator, according to management.

It is correct that the Step 3 appeal included a statement which said "employees with light duty status must be allowed to bid and be awarded a position provided he/she can perform the duties of the new assignment." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2, p. 5). The Employer did not submit the status report at the appeal to Step 2 into evidence,although both were cited during the hearing. When management was attempting to demonstrate that the Union had acknowledged the grievant's "light duty" status, Mr. Rothbaum had Mr. Guffey read a portion of the Step 4 appeal. There occurred the following exchange:

> Mr. Rothbaum: Go on. Read it.
> Mr. Guffey: There is no dispute the employee can perform the job eight hours a day and forty hours a week. The problem is, management takes the position, because the employee cannot work overtime, she is not entitled to the position. The Union takes the position, the employee is entitled to bid while on permanent light duty as long as it is within the medical restrictions.

Mr. Rothbaum: Acknowledgement that the person is on permanent light duty, Mr. Arbitrator,

Mr. Guffey: That is not an acknowledgement. Produce a document that put her on permanent light duty. Did she have five years in at the time? She couldn't be on permanent light duty. (See, Tr., 14).

The point is the Union took issue with management's contention that the grievant was always on "light duty" status. It is reasonable to understand earlier arguments of the Union within the context of concurrent arguments of management. In other words, it is clear that management has found an admission against interest or an acknowledgement where none existed.

From early stages of the grievance procedure, the Employer asserted that overtime is a requirement of regular positions in the bargaining unit. In its Step 2 response to the grievance on May 2, 1984, the Employer noted that the grievant had been restricted from working more than eight hours a day. Despite this observation, the Employer reached the following conclusion:

> It is management's position that overtime, as needed, is a requirement of regular positions in the Postal Service, and therefore the failure to award her this position was in compliance with the agreement. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2, p. 6).

Later, in the Step 4 response of January 4, 1985, the Employer stated that:

> The question in this grievance is whether the grievant was improperly denied a bid because of her physical inability to work overtime.
> It is the position of the Postal Service that the ability to work overtime is a bona fide physical requirement which must be met in order to qualify for the position involved. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2, p. 2).

Throughout the grievance procedure, the Employer has maintained that the ability to work overtime is a part of an employe's "normal assignment." It is precisely this interpretation which the Union challenged, and the question of whether that interpretation is correct has not been answered by the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding between the parties. By focusing on whether or not the grievant was under "light duty status," the Employer failed to interact completely with the fundamental question in dispute between the parties. The 1987 Memorandum of Understanding established procedures to be used when an employe is "temporarily unable to work all of the duties of his or her normal assignment." This agreement between the parties failed to answer the question pursued by the Union into this arbitration proceeding. The 1987 Memorandum of Understanding did not answer the fundamental question regarding whether or not the ability to work overtime is part of the ability to work "all of the duties of his or her normal assignment."

Evidence submitted to the arbitrator makes it reasonable to conclude that the Union's past references to employes on light duties failed to constitute an admission against interest that the grievant in this case was, in fact, in a "light duty" status. Union references to "light duty" status in various fields has not conclusively demonstrated that the Union considered the grievant in this case to be in a "light duty" status. The prior grievance procedure, including statements by the Employer which the arbitrator previously has discussed, support a conclusion that the continuing dispute has been about whether the ability to work overtime is a part of a "normal assignment." Management has acknowledged that "there was some discussion by the Union during the grievance procedure alleging that the employe was able to work the assignment for eight hours per day and should not be denied the job because she could not work beyond the eight hours." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 12). Although management considered this statement to be an insignificant concession, it acknowledged the core of the present dispute.

Testimony from Renee Breeden, Clerk Craft Director at the time the Union filed the grievance, demonstrated that the Union did not consider the grievant to be on a "light duty" assignment. The testimony was as follows?

> I'm saying, in this case, management took the position that it was light duty. The Union was saying, No, it is not light duty because we have this document that was dated 1/31/84 which goes to your previous question.
>
> She was on light duty prior to 1/31/84 by virtue of this document being marked in the second box, 'may be returned to light duty.'
>
> Those documents that you showed me said, yes, at that point in time, she was on light duty.

> However, in this document that she received on 1/31/84, it came back stating that she could return to regular duties with limitations. (See, Tr., 85-86).

The document referred to by the witness is the form completed by the grievant's doctor. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 5, p.2). The Union stressed the fact that the doctor did not check the box on the form signifying that the grievant "may return to light duty." Instead, the doctor checked the box next to the statement "a return to regular duties with no limitations on 1/31/84." (See, Tr., 70-71). The Union also established that the medical doctor for the Employer, who had authority to make the final decision with respect to the grievant's medical status, stated that the grievant "is medically approved for regular duty, 8 hours only/day." (See, Union's Exhibit No. 5, p. 1, and Tr., 57-58).

The Employer's contention that the medical examination conducted by the grievant's doctor after the grievant bid on job No. 3711 confirmed her ongoing "light duty" status was an unpersuasive contention. The analysis and comments of the grievant's doctor in April of 1984 were more complete than comments made in conjunction with the evaluation on January 31, 1984. Yet, the evaluation and recommendation were essentially the same. On January 31, the doctor indicated that the grievant "may return to regular duties with no limitations on January 31, 1984" and also that the grievant "may work eight hours per day." While definitely voicing a concern about the grievant working more than a regular forty hour a week shift, the doctor did not impose further limitations on April 3, 1984 beyond those that existed in his report of January 31, 1984. The fact that the grievant or the grievant's doctor may have been aware that the job might have required overtime is not directly relevant to the issue of arbitrability.

2. The Local Memorandum of Understanding

Management argued that the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding resolved the present dispute because the grievant was under the control of a Local Disability Reassignment Review Committee. The 1982 Local Agreement cited by management established a Disability Reassignment Board, and the agreement stated that, "if the employee being qualified for permanent light duty bids off that assignment (with the approval of the Disability Reassignment Review Board and supported by medical evidence), he will not be able to have his new assignment tailored to light duty." Those provisions were marked with an asterisk, indicating that management believed the provisions were inconsistent or in conflict with the National Agreement. (See, Tr., 72). While management argued that the grievant "could not arbitrarily leave the control of the Committee," the Employer submitted no evidence which convincingly established that the grievant was under the control of the Committee in the first place. The closest it came was in questioning Mr. Deapen, a Labor Relations representative in Phoenix from 1980 through mid-1984. There occurred the following exchange at the arbitration hearing:

> QUESTION: These are all restrictive documents, are they not, Mr. Deapen?
>
> ANSWER: Well, the document that I'm referring to, dated 6/21/83 is entitled, "Employee Work Limitation Slip," but the copy I have, I I don't see anything on it but a doctor's statement. I don't see any restrictions.
>
> QUESTION: OK. But it still says restrictions?
>
> ANSWER: Yes, it does. Beyond that, I don't see any of them that say that she could do the full duties of her position.
>
> QUESTION: Would a person who has this type of medical history have been covered by that Committee under the Local Agreement?
> ANSWER: I can't say that for a certainty because I don't have the documents; but certainly, she could apply under that Committee for an assignment. (See, Tr., 50-51, emphasis added).

Evidence submitted to the arbitrator failed to establish that the grievant, in fact, was under the control of the Disability Reassignment Review Board. Initially, neither of the letters which the Employer sent to the grievant on March 16 and March 28, 1984 made any reference to a requirement that the Disability Reassignment Review Board approve her bid for a new position. The correspondence merely asked for additional medical documentation. The evidence simply never established that the grievant was under the control of the Local Disability Reassignment Review Board. Although he speculated that the grievant might have been under the auspices of the Board, Mr. Deapen was unable to answer with certainty about this matter. (See, Tr., 52).

Nor did testimony from Renee Breeden establish that the grievant, in fact, had been covered by the Disability Reassignment Review Committee. Because the Employer advanced the argument that the control of this Committee is relevant to the issue of substantive arbitrability, it was management's burden to prove the matter of control. Evidence submitted by the Employer simply was unpersuasive in this regard. Although the grievant might have been a logical candidate for committee review, witnesses who addressed the issue did so within the context of many disclaimers. Arguably, even if the Committee was controlling with regard to the grievant's status, the fact that it may not have released her from "light duty" status (if that had been the case) failed to require a conclusion that the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding is controlling in this case. Arguably, a limitation to eight hours a day did not require "tailoring" to light duty. It also could be argued that when an individual has shown an ability to perform work during the regular eight hour shift, he or she has established an ability to perform a new assignment. In other words, the grievant arguably satisfied the requirements which the Committee could have asserted under the local agreement. In other words, the ultimate question remained unanswered in the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding, namely, do the duties of a normal assignment include the ability to work overtime? This is the unanswered question the parties have placed before the arbitrator.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the grievance is substantively arbitrable and that the arbitrator has jurisdiction to proceed to the merits of the case. It is so ordered and awarded.

Respectfully submitted,

B. Merits of the Case

1. Theories of the Case

It is instructive to review the positions the parties have taken on the merits of the dispute in order to place their arguments in context. The Union believes that, "whether a restriction to not work overtime modifies the employee's normal assignment is not just the threshold issue, but is the core of the case." (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 3). As the senior qualified bidder for job No. 3711, the grievant should have received the bid, according to the Union. Even though the grievant was unable to work more than eight hours a day, she, nevertheless, was able to perform fully the normally scheduled duties of the position and met all the published qualification standards for it. Consequently, when management denied the grievant the bid assignment for the job, it allegedly violated Article 37 of the parties' agreement.

According to the Union's theory of the case, Article 37 of the parties' agreement has set forth a clear procedure by which vacant assignments are filled. Section 1(B) of Article 37 has defined "duty assignment" as "a set of duties and responsibilities within recognized positions regularly scheduled during specific hours off duty. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 91). There are clear-cut procedures for posting and bidding on vacant duty assignments. The parties have identified information which must be posted on notices of vacant assignments. Such notices must include hours of duty (beginning and ending) and tour as well as qualification standards. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 103).

The Union has argued that Article 37(3)(F) requires the Employer to designate the senior qualified bidder meeting the qualification standards as the "successful bidder." Article 37(3)(F)(2) states that the successful bidder "must" be placed in the new assignment. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 103). As the successful bidder, the grievant should have been placed in the position, according to the Union.

According to the Union, the qualification standards on which the parties have agreed do not include the ability to work overtime, and any insistence that an individual meet this unpublished qualification allegedly is a violation of the National Agreement. The qualification standards set forth in the parties' agreement are specific and have been negotiated with precision. It is the belief of the Union that the qualification standards established for job No. 3711 included no requirement that the successful bidder be able to work overtime. It is the position of the Union that the "overtime" requirement of management is neither an element of a duty assignment nor any sort of bona fide requirement for the position. (See, Union's Post-hearing Brief, p. 11). It is the contention of the Union that the qualification standard set forth in the official handbooks and manuals of the parties are the sole source of job qualifications, and management has no authority to add to, delete, or alter the published qualification standards in the face of objection from the Union. Accordingly, the Union believes that management is prohibited from adding the ability to work overtime as a qualification standard for job No. 3711 without first successfully negotiating the matter with the Union.

The Employer has argued just as vigorously that (1) the grievant always was in a "light duty" status; (2) that she did not request and was not released by the Local Disability Reassignment Review Board to bid on a new position; and (3) that she at all times had a restriction which prevented her from doing the work in the job for which she bid. It is the position of the Employer that negotiations for the 1982 Local Memorandum of Understanding and the removal of certain language from the Local Agreement demonstrated that "all parties to the Local Agreement understood that a person who could not work more than eight hours was considered on light duty." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 16).

The Union has responded that, despite those negotiations, a dispute remains between the parties with respect to whether a person who could work no more than eight hours was considered on light duty. The Employer has maintained that the Union has asserted a new argument in arbitration which is inappropriate and that it is a new position for the Union to assert that "the employee was not on light duty because she could work the posted schedule for the position for which she bid." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 16). Accordingly, the Union's argument should not be considered by the arbitrator, according to management.

In support of its contention, the Employer has relied on a case by Arbitrator Benjamin Aaron in which he stated:

> I am fully in agreement with Arbitrator Mittenthal that the provisions of Article XV require that all the facts and arguments relied upon by both parties must be fully disclosed before the case is submitted to arbitration should be strictly enforced. (See, Case No. H8N-5B-C 17682).

The Employer has offered the following justification for the rule:

> The reason for the rule is obvious; neither party should have to deal with evidence or argument presented for the first time in an arbitration hearing, which it has not previously considered and for which it has had no time to prepare rebuttal evidence and argument. (See, Employer's Post-Hearing Brief, p.17).

These principles have practical utility and should be closely followed in appropriate cases. The contention that the Union is raising a completely new argument which was not previously disclosed, however, is not persuasive. As previously noted, even at Step 2 of this grievance, management took the position "that overtime, as needed, is a requirement of regular positions in the Postal Service." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2). This position of management is precisely what the Union is disputing in this case. It is not credible to argue that the issue previously has not been considered nor that management has had no time to prepare rebuttal evidence and argument since it articulated its position regarding the matter in 1984.

Management's position on the merits in this case is straightforward. It contends that:

> Overtime is an integral part of the job. It need not be placed in the job description or in the > qualification standards any more than a need to be regular in attendance must be specified. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, p. 17).

In this case, management allegedly proceeded on the premise that an employe must perform the entire job, including possible overtime.

The Employer has conceded that the published position description and qualification standards described an eight hour day and relevant physical abilities without mentioning the need to work overtime. Moreover, the Employer has acknowledged that relevant manuals and handbooks used by the parties refer to a basic eight hour work day. On the other hand, it is the position of the Employer that a requirement of an ability to work overtime need not be expressly included in the written qualification standards. It is the belief of the Employer that it retains an inherent managerial prerogative to require overtime from employes.

Since the Employer allegedly retained the right to require overtime of employes, there was no need to include the overtime requirement as part of a job description or as a qualification standard for the position. At the same time, the Employer has recognized that some positions within the operation require little or no overtime. The Employer argues that the difference in the amount of overtime which might be required of any given position is the precise reason why management needs to know the extent of an employe's ability to work overtime before the Employer can grant an employe a position.

2. Managerial Right to Require Overtime

It would be a daunting task to argue persuasively that, as a general rule, management may not require employes to work overtime. Such an argument would fly in the face of a deeply rooted presumption that it is a right of management to require employes to perform overtime assignments, absent some exceptions. As one arbitrator has stated:

> A long line of arbitration decisions has fairly well established the right of management to require its employees to work overtime unless there is a contractual restriction which specifically takes away this right. This right of management, however, requires that the overtime so assigned be of a reasonable duration under reasonable circumstances. There is also a requirement that management accept certain reasonable excuses advanced by employees to be excused from such overtime.
> If there is no reference to management's right to require overtime, the provisions of the agreemnent establishing pay for overtime work certainly imply that occasional overtime work may be mandated. (See, Pennwalt Corp., 77 LA 626, 631 (1981)).

There is general agreement among arbitrators that management may require overtime as long as the assignment is "of reasonable duration, commensurate with employee health, safety and endurance, and the direction is issued under reasonable circumstances." (See, Texas Co., 14 LA 146, 149 (1949)).

The collective bargaining agreement between the parties in this case is not silent on the issue of overtime assignments. In Article 8 of the parties' National Agreement, they have made extensive provision for the assignment of overtime work by management. Section 8.5(A) has codified the parties' agreement that management will establish an Overtime Desired List. Article 8.5(D) of the National Agreement states:

> If the voluntary "Overtime Desired" list does not provide sufficient qualified people, qualified full-time regular employees not on the list may be required to work overtime on a rotating basis with the first opportunity assigned to the junior employee. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 16).

This contractual provision makes clear that, when necessary, management is permitted to require overtime work even from employes who may not wish to work overtime. This conclusion is strengthened by other negotiated restrictions contained in the National Agreement as well as in handbooks and manual, which have been incorporated into the parties' agreement by Article 19. Article 8.5(F) and Section 432.32 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual established maximum hours which the Employer may require of different employes except in emergency circumstances.

A logical implication of including Article 8.5(F) in the National Agreement and Section 432.32 in the Manual is that the parties expected management occasionally to need to require overtime of employes. Moreover, the provisions manifest a desire to place limitations on managerial discretion with regard to overtime requirements. The fact that the parties agreed to limit managerial discretion supports an implication that such discretion exists in the first place. In other words, the Employer has not negotiated away a presumption that management may require overtime from its employes. But this conclusion does not dispose of the dispute in this case.

3. Limitations on Management's Discretion

Some positions in the bargaining unit may require much overtime, while other positions require little or none. Even within the same type of position, some duty assignments require much overtime, while other duty assignments require little or none. Management has argued that the differences in the amounts of overtime that might be required in any given duty assignment constitutes a reason why the Employer must know of any limitations on an employe's ability to work overtime. Consequently, the Employer has concluded that the ability to work overtime must be considered an inherent qualification for any position.

Any decision with respect to whether the ability to work overtime is an inherent job qualification will have different effects depending on the size of the operation. In a large operation, if an employe does not want to work overtime, the availability of other willing workers in the same position would make it easy for an unwilling employe to avoid overtime and for management to accommodate the wishes of the unwilling employe. In the context of a large operation with many employes working the same position, it would be far less important for management to know the extent of an employe's ability to work overtime.

The guiding principle is the rule of reasonableness. For almost half a century in the United States, highly regarded arbitrators have maintained that an employer's right to require overtime must be analyzed within the context of a reasonable person rule. In Connecticut River Mills, Inc., the eminent Saul Wallen confronted the following contractual provision:

> The eight (8) hour day and forty (40) hour week commencing Monday, at 12:01 A.M. and ending Friday (inclusive), shall be in effect without revision during the term of this contract. Time and one half shall be paid for all work done in excess of eight (8) hours in any day or forty (40) hours in any one week, and overtime paid for on a daily basis shall not be duplicated on a weekly basis. (See, 6 LA 1017 (1947)).

After the employer removed an employe for refusing to work overtime, Arbitrator Wallen overturned the discharge and stated that "once forty hours of service has been rendered, the obligation imposed by the contract has been met." (See, 6 LA 1017 (1947)). He found that the rule of reasonableness restricted the employer in scheduling overtime work. Numerous cases have followed the analysis used by Arbitrator Wallen. (See, e.g., National Electric Coil Co., 1 LA 468 (1945); Campbell Soup Co., 11 LA 715 (1948); and A.D. Julliard & Co., 17 LA 606 (1951)). The point is that, even if management has the right to require overtime work, there is an implied condition of reasonableness which must be applied in each case. Some decisions have found that the rule of reasonableness permitted even a legitimate employer request to work overtime to be refused. (See, e.g., Sylvania Electric Products, Inc., 24 LA 199 (1954)). The eminent Harry Shulman has taught that an employe has a right to reject overtime if there is a justified reason for doing so. (See, Ford Motor Co., 11 LA 158 (1948)).

The important point is that no single, simple formula can be applied to resolve all overtime problems. The facility in Phoenix, Arizona is a large one. The posting containing the position sought by the grievant included bid invitations for five other identical positions with the same regular hours. Management filled all five positions through the bidding process. (See, Union's Exhibit Nos. 6 and 7). Theoretically, all five individuals who received identical positions could place their names on the Overtime Desired List and be able to handle emergency situations requiring overtime.

It is also possible that the Overtime Desired List might not provide sufficient qualified people to fill all overtime requirements. In such a situation, management might be forced to consider less willing employes to work the overtime. This possibility would seem more likely in smaller facilities where a single position of a certain type might exist. In such situations, it could disrupt management's ability to direct the work force if it could not rely on every employe to perform overtime work.

4. An Express Limitation

The parties have established a precise method through which vacant positions are to be filled. Article 37 of the parties' National Agreement established a bidding process which requires that notices of vacant positions be posted and that the notice include qualification standards. Article 37.3(F)(1) makes clear that "the senior qualified bidder meeting the qualification standards for the position shall be designated the 'successful bidder'." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 103). Article 37.3(F)(2) makes clear that "the successful bidder must be placed in the new assignment . . . ." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 103).

No published qualification standard for the position sought by the grievant included the ability to work overtime. The EL-303 Handbook is equally clear about the fact that management may not alter posted qualification standards. Section 171 of the Handbook states:

> The qualification standard appropriate for the particular position is included in the announcement. This Handbook shall be the source of such qualification standards. No additions, deletions, or alterations will be allowed by any local, district, or regional office, except as provided in 142. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 4, emphasis added).

The EL-303 Handbook is clear about the fact that qualification standards are to be established on a national level but that pursuant to Section 142, local, district, or regional offices may add narrowly limited exceptions to the qualification standards, for example, the ability to type or drive when such needs constitute a bona fide occupational qualification. The parties, however, did not include in Section 171 a qualification standard that applicants must be able to work overtime. The Handbook is the source of qualification standards, and it is inappropriate to expand the narrow exceptions provided for in Section 171. This conclusion finds support in Section 174 of the EL-303 Handbook. It states that:

> The senior bidders' qualifications will then be compared to the published qualification standard, and the senior bidder will be selected if qualified. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 4, emphasis added.)

The point is that bidders are to be evaluated by express, published qualification standards. The parties have limited management's presumptive discretion with regard to overtime work, and that limitation is inconsistent with the sort of implied qualification standard asserted by management. Rather, the express limitation has activated the rule of reasonableness.

The grievant in this case was performing the full duties of an eight hour day. Unrebutted testimony at the hearing established that, at the time the grievant bid for the position, she was working a regular eight hour day. Renee Breeden, Clerk Craft Director in Phoenix, testified as follows:

> QUESTION: Could you tell us what hours and days off she [the grievant] was working prior to the bid?
>
> ANSWER: Prior to the bid Christina Hernandez had Saturdays and Sundays as days off. She was working 1450 to 2300 hours, and she was performing her duty assignment for eight hours a day.
>
> QUESTION: Has she ever had a step increase withheld?
>
> ANSWER: No, she has not.

QUESTION: The hours and days off she was working, Saturday and Sunday off, 1450 to 2300, is that identical to the job that she was bidding?

ANSWER: Yes, it was. (See, Tr., 70).

5. Another Potential Limitation

There is another reason for concluding that the parties did not bargain for management to enjoy an unfettered right to include overtime as a requirement of any job. The parties intended their relationship to be circumscribed by the law, including such legislation as the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 and the ADEA. Such implicit limitations on the parties' relationship cannot be ignored.

The rule of reasonableness with regard to overtime assignments must be construed within the context of the Americans with Disabilities Act which President Bush signed into law on July 26, 1990. This legislation provides federal protection for persons with disabilities. It extends rights associated with the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 to private employers, while the 1973 Act focused primarily on the federal government.

The legislation defines a "physical impairment" as:

> Any physiological disorder or condition . . . or anatomical loss affecting one or more of the following body systems: neurological; musculoskeletal; . . . (See, 45 C.F.R. § 84.3(j)(2)(i) (2989)).

If a person has such a physical impairment, it must substantially limit the individual in a major life activity.

The legislation also makes clear that the Americans with Disabilities Act extends to "persons who have recovered--in whole or in part--from a handicapping condition such as a mental or neurological illness, but who may nevertheless be discriminated against on the basis of prior medical history . . . ." (See, 120 Cong. Rec. 30531, 30534 (Sept. 10, 1974). In other words, the definition of a disability under ADA extends to an individual who had an impairment in his or her life and who, then, recovered from the disability. The new legislation prohibits discrimination against such individuals.

The Americans with Disabilities Act also covers individuals who are "regarded" as having an impairment. In other words, even if an individual has a physical impairment that does not substantially limit a significant life activity, but the person has been treated by the employer as though the person had such a limitation, that person is protecfed by the legislation. (See, 45 C.F.R. § 84.3(j)(2)(iv) (1989)). That is, the new legislation prohibits discrimination against a person who has been treated by the employer as though the individual were impaired. (See, School Board of Nassau County v. Arline, 480 U.S. 273 (1987)).

It is important to recognize that an impairment under the ADA must not be of any particular duration. In other words, a person with a temporary impairment would be covered by the legislation. One need only establish an impairment that substantially limits a major life activity. It would be possible to establish coverage under the legislation without regard to the duration of the impairment.

If a worker is a qualified individual with a disability, management has an obligation to make a reasonable accommodation for that person. The legislation states that the employer commits discrimination by > not making reasonable accommodations to the known physical or mental limitations of an otherwise qualified individual with a disability who is an applicant or employee unless such covered entity can demonstrate that the accommodation would impose an undue hardship on the operation or business of such covered entity. (See, ADA § 102(b)(5)(A), 104 Stat. 332).

Section 101(9) of the legislation defines "reasonable accommodation" to include job restructuring as well as modifying work schedules. It is clear from the legislative history for the Act that the intent of the drafters was for management to make a determination about a specific accommodation on the basis of particular facts for individual cases. (See, Senate Rep. 116, 101 1st Cong., 1st Sess. 26, 31 (1989)). Legislators expected that management would be flexible with regard to job restructuring and modifying schedules. (See, Sen. Rep. 31). Legislators were clear about the fact that, even if the job restructuring or modified schedule reduced efficiency of an operation, it must be made, unless the inefficiencies could be defined as an "undue hardship" in specific cases.

The point is that the Employer has an obligation to look to laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act for general guidance about the nature of the Employer's obligation to provide reasonable accommodation for individuals who are impaired. The Employer's obligation extends to all employment decisions. Decisions must be made on a case-by-case basis looking at the facts of each specific problem. The legislation suggests that the Employer must use a problem solving approach to the matter. This means management must identify aspects of the job that limit the person's performance; determine potential accommodations; evaluate the reasonableness of the alternative accommodations in terms of their impact on the employer; and, assuming no undue hardship on the employer, implement the most effective accommodation. (See, e.g., Davis v. Frank, 711 Fed. Supp. 447 (N.D. Ill. 1989)).

Management's authority to assign overtime work must be understood within the context of laws such as the Americans with Disabilities Act. The Employer's authority to order overtime is not unfettered, and such overtime assignments cannot be viewed as an implied part of every job description. Management's right to require overtime of employes must be understood not only within the context of the parties' contractual agreement but also as informed by relevant legislation. Those sources make clear that the right of management to require overtime does not translate into an implied or inherent qualification for every postal position.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the Employer violated Article 37 of the National Agreement when on approximately March 28, 1984, management denied the grievant a bid assignment due to her inability to work overtime. Because the grievant was the senior bidder for the open position and met all published qualification standards, she should have been awarded the position. An inability to work overtime does not necessarily prohibit an employe from performing his or her normal assignment. Accordingly, such an individual working with such a restriction is not necessarily on "light duty." Employes restricted from working overtime may bid on and receive assignments for which they can perform a regular eight hour assignment. The parties did not intend the 1987 Memorandum of Understanding to control individuals who are unable to work overtime but have no other medical restrictions.

The parties shall have sixty days from the date of this report to negotiate a remedy for the specific grievant involved in the case. If they are unable to accomplish this objective, they, by mutual agreement, may activate the arbitrator's jurisdiction any time during the ninety day period following the date of this report or by the request of either party after sixty days has passed from the date of this report but expiring ninety days after the date of this report. Further evidentiary hearings might be necessary in order for the arbitrator to fashion an appropriate remedy. It is so ordered and awarded.

Dear Mr. Eleele:

On March 4, 1986, we met with your representative, Karen Seavey, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether full-time mail handlers may elect to perform specific duties of their job assignment prior to management utilizing casual employees in the Mail Handler Craft.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Whether such movement was accomplished in accordance with Article 12, Section 3.E.3, of the National Agreement is a non interpretive issue.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Sincerely,

OPINION

I. Statement of the Case

The NALC filed this grievance as a class action on November 7, 2011 to contend that the Postal Service violated Articles 3 and 12 by improperly excessing a clerk craft employee into a full-time city letter carrier position. The parties could not resolve the dispute in the grievance procedure, so the Union demanded arbitration. The APWU and NPMHU intervened because of the potential impact on their represented employees.

The arbitration hearings took place in Washington, DC on August 27 and October 3, 2013. Both parties appeared and had full opportunity to testify, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to present all pertinent evidence. Both parties filed lengthy post-hearing briefs with supporting documents, and both intervenors submitted shorter briefs.

II. Statement of the Facts

There are no significant factual disputes. The real controversy is over the interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement, so this grievance stands as a proxy. Although the grievance formally involves just one employee at the Westerly, Rhode Island post office, the NALC filed many similar grievances elsewhere because the issue here could affect many other employees.

A. Background[1]

Of course there is a lot of background to that simple statement of the facts. It begins with a 2011 MOU between the APWU and the Postal Service that provided for the use of Non-Traditional Full-Time (NTFT) duty assignments. The MOU allowed the Postal Service to create NTFT assignments in the clerk and motor vehicle crafts consisting of 30-48 hours a week. The object of those assignments was to give the Postal Service more flexibility while providing more work opportunities for APWU employees, and thereby reduce the possibility of layoffs (termed "excessing" in this agency). In return, the Postal Service agreed to convert clerk craft part-time flexible (PTF) employees to full-time status. In the three-month period provided, about 9,000 employees were converted.

So far, so good. The parties differed about what those changes would mean. The APWU thought that the converted employees would all be placed in traditional 40-hour, 5-day schedules. Instead, the Postal Service classified them as unassigned regulars and gave them NTFT schedules of less than 40 hours. The APWU naturally grieved. On July 29, 2012, Arbitrator Shyam Das denied the grievance, finding that "in the unique circumstances" of the case, management's action did not violate the agreement (NALC Exhibit 4, p. 12).

That left many of the 9,000 converted part-time APWU employees working NTFT schedules for fewer than 40 hours a week. That alone would not have affected the NALC. What happened next did. The Postal Service excessed many of those employees — an NALC witness testified without contradiction that the number was about 700-750 — into the carrier craft. At that point, of course, NALC employees were affected. As a result, the NALC filed about 70 grievances, including this one.

One other agreement is worth mentioning at this point. The NALC and the Postal Service entered into an MOU, known as the "Bridge Agreement," about cross-craft transfers. The critical portion of that MOU is this:

> A. It is understood by the parties that in applying the provisions of Articles 7, 12 and 13 of this Agreement, cross craft assignments of employees, on both a temporary and permanent basis, shall continue as they were made among the six crafts under the 1978 National Agreement.

The 1978 National Agreement (NALC Exhibit 7, Article 12, Sections 5.B.2., 5.C.5 and 8, and 5.D.), which is similar in relevant respects to the current NALC agreement, provided for the transfer of full-time employees of one craft to full-time positions in other crafts, and the transfer of part-time employees to part-time positions in other crafts.

B. The Leonetti Grievance

As stated concisely in the Step B Impasse decision (NALC Exhibit 2), the instant dispute began when the Postal Service wrote Anthony Leonetti, a Level 6 PTF Clerk, on September 22, 2010. The letter informed Leonetti that he would be reassigned outside the installation due a reduction in staffing needs. He was to be assigned to vacant PTF positions at the same or higher wage level but that never happened. Instead, he was promoted on August 27, 2011 to an NTFT clerk position. He was supposed to work five hours a day for six hours a week, but for some reason he only averaged about 26 hours a week and never worked more than 30 hours. Later, however, he was offered his choice of two vacant full-time jobs in the letter carrier craft in the Westerly facility. The employer confirmed his choice on October 18, 2011.

This grievance followed. The thrust of the grievance was that Leonetti was a part-time clerk employee who was assigned to a full-time carrier job. The Grievance asked that the assignment be rescinded and that he be offered a position as a PTF letter carrier instead.

The Step B team reached impasse. The management member of the team declared that the grievance involved an interpretive issue under the National Agreement, so the dispute advanced to this National Level arbitration.

C. Previous Awards

As is normal in the Postal Service, there are several previous arbitration awards that bear on the issue in this case. While I considered all of the awards cited by the parties, three of them are particularly important.

The first of these was by Arbitrator Carlton Snow in 1998 (Case 194N-4I-D 96027608). In typically thorough and convincing fashion, Arbitrator Snow addressed the question of whether the temporary cross-craft transfer of an employee was controlled by the "losing" or the "gaining" union's contract. In that case, unlike here, the NALC was the sending union; the APWU was the receiving union. Arbitrator Snow held that the transferring employee must enter the new craft in accordance with that craft's collective bargaining agreement, rather than in accordance with the former craft's agreement. His rationale was clear:

> A fundamental problem with the argument of the NALC is its failure to recognize that the American Postal Workers Union is not a party to the agreement between the NALC and the Employer and, likewise, that the NALC is not a party to the agreement between the APWU and the Employer. In such a circumstance, the National Association of Letter Carriers cannot determine what rights and obligations are required under the agreement between the APWU and the Employer. It is also true that the NALC cannot determine the meaning of language chosen by other parties in their agreements with the Employer. Nor is the NALC in a position to enforce the language of other agreements against the will of the parties involved in them. These are labor contracts with other parties, and rights and obligations under those agreements are unto themselves, unless there is proof of third party beneficiary rights. No such theory has been asserted in this dispute.

An alternative reading, Arbitrator Snow wrote, would allow one union to affect the rights of employees represented by another union during negotiations at which the second union was not present:

> No evidence submitted to the arbitrator established the basis for subordinating rights and obligations of the APWU won through contract negotiations to rights of the NALC in its agreement with the Employer. The APWU was not a party to the NALC negotiations with the Employer or any subsequent agreements, and rights of bargaining unit employees represented by the APWU should not be affected by a negotiation at which it had no opportunity to protect itself. Just as the National Association of Letter Carriers should not be faulted because the Employer promised more than it could deliver, the American Postal Workers Union should not be compelled to bear the burden of the Employer's lack of planning in negotiations. Accordingly, if a Letter Carrier is to be transferred to a craft represented by the American Postal Workers Union, such an individual must enter the craft in compliance with the collective bargaining agreement between the American Postal Workers Union and the Employer. Where this is not possible, a Letter Carrier is entitled to a different remedy.[2]

[2]Another decision by Arbitrator Snow, Case HOC-3N-C 418 (1994), is similar in important respects.

The second award is a 2002 decision by Arbitrator Shyam Das, Case No. E90C-4E-C 95076238. The Postal Service transferred a letter carrier injured on the job to a clerk craft position created specifically for him. The APWU grieved on the basis that any new clerk craft position should be subject to bidding. Relying on the Postal Service's obligations under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act (FECA), which were incorporated in the APWU Agreement, Arbitrator Das rejected the grievance. He held that the job in question was not created for the Postal Service's operational needs but to fit the employee's medical restrictions. "By definition, it would make no sense to create such a uniquely created assignment as a duty assignment that must be posted for bid" (APWU Exhibit 1, p. 20).

The third award is also by Arbitrator Das. In cases Q11C-4Q-C 11322481 and 11322494 (2012), he dealt with an APWU grievance over the Postal Service's placement of the PTF employees who were converted in August 2011. The Postal Service placed the employees in unassigned regular positions with NTFT schedules. The APWU argued that the Employer had to put all those employees in traditional 40-hour positions. Although Article 7.1.A.1. stated that full-time employees were to work five 8-hour days a week, the NTFT MOU modified article 7. NALC contract, in contrast, retains the traditional definition of full-time employee with no such modification. Arbitrator therefore denied the grievance.

III. The Issue

The issue in dispute was originally described broadly: Whether the Postal Service may reassign clerk craft employees in nontraditional full-time regular (NTFT) duty assignments to full-time regular city letter carrier positions. Despite that broad phrasing, the NALC focused during the first hearing day on the particular individual who prompted this grievance. Understandably, at the beginning of the second hearing day the APWU representative sought clarification about whether this decision was to be about the broad issue or about the sole grievant. The NALC's counsel clarified by narrowing the issue:

> MR. SECULAR: I'm prepared to respond. Okay. As far as we're concerned, this case is about this one individual and this one fact patter, and to the extent you have to interpret the contract to decide this case, that's the interpretation we're looking for. We are not looking for a categorical statement that all NTFT employees are ineligible for excessing at the full-time positions in the letter carrier craft.
>
> What we do say is that depends on whether those employees meet the definition of full-time employee in the NALC contract. I don't know how many NTFT employees nationwide do meet that definition or don't meet that definition. All I know for sure is that the individual in this case, Mr. Leonetti, did not.

(Tr. 10/3/13, p. 91)

Neither the Postal Service nor the intervenors objected to that phrasing of the issue, so that is the one that I will use.

IV. Pertinent Contractual Provisions

To make this opinion more readable, relevant contract provisions are printed in Appendix 1.

V. The Parties' Positions

A. The NALC Position

The core of the NALC's position is that the Postal Service violated the NALC contract by transferring a clerk craft employee who did not meet that contract's definition of a full-time employee into a full-time carrier position. Article 7 defines full-time as an employee who works five 8-hour shifts in a service week. Leonetti admittedly did not come close to that. Article 12, Section 5.B.2 clearly distinguishes between full-time and part-time positions and makes clear that full-time positions are withheld to accommodate only full-time employees. The following portions of Article 12 confirm this understanding.

The Postal Service's changes in the APWU Agreement do not justify violations of the NALC Agreement. NTFT employees are considered full-time under the APWU Agreement, but they would not be considered full-time under the NALC Agreement. The APWU Agreement itself does not provide for reassignment of a 30-hour a week employee to a full-time carrier position. Even if it did so, the two Agreements would be in conflict. In such a situation, the NALC Agreement must ben enforced. A cross-craft assignment is impermissible if it violates the gaining union's collective bargaining agreement. Bi-partite negotiations cannot alter the meaning of a different union's contract.

Arbitral authority, notably the 1994 and 1998 decisions by Arbitrator Snow and the 2012 decision by Arbitrator Das, support the NALC's position. The main case relied on by the APWU, Arbitrator Das's 2002 decision, is inapposite because it involved "unique circumstances" posed by the need to accommodate an injured employee in a temporary position created just for him.

B. The APWU Position

The APWU naturally relies on its own agreements with the Postal Service. The NTFT MOU clearly defines NTFT employees as full time even if they hold a 30-hour per week job. For that reason, they can be excessed into another craft's full-time positions just like any other full-time employee. As the Postal Service points out, if the NALC's agreement prohibits that excessing, the Postal Service might not be able in some cases like this one to excess employees from the clerk craft to the carrier craft. That might lead to layoffs.

The NALC's reliance on Articles 7 and 8 of its Agreement is unpersuasive. Arbitrator Das rejected that reasoning in his 2012 decision. He noted the "anomaly" and "inconsistency" between the right to work five 8-hour shifts and the Postal Service's agreement with the APWU for other arrangements, and commented that the full-time category "no longer is confined to employees assigned to traditional schedules as defined in Article 7." For the same reason, the NALC's reliance on Article 12.5.B.11 is misplaced. Full-time cross-craft assignments must be made as they were when all six crafts bargained together. That means that full-time carrier positions may be withheld when necessary to accommodate excess full-time clerk craft employees, as happened here. Similarly, the NALC's reliance on inapposite cases like the three Snow awards it cites does not control the result here.

C. The NPMHU Position

The Mail Handlers agree with the NALC's main point that the Postal Service may not transfer an NTFT clerk craft employee working less than 40 hours a week to a full-time carrier craft position. The NPMHU makes one additional point, that interpreting "full time" under the NALC Agreement should not be based on the APWU Agreement's definition of "full time." Article 12.6.B.2. of the NPMHU's Agreement, like the corresponding provision (Sec. 12.5.B.2) of the NALC Agreement, means that withholdings, excessing, and reassignments are to be done by job category. The Postal Service is supposed to withhold full-time positions for those full-time employees involuntarily reassigned from other crafts, and part-time positions for part-time employees involuntarily reassigned from other crafts.

The critical question is therefore whether the NALC Agreement or the APWU Agreement controls the distinction between full-time and part-time employees. Citing a decision by Arbitrator Carlton Snow (NALC Exhibit 10), the NPMHU argues that one union cannot control the meaning of language used by another union in its collective bargaining agreement. To hold the contrary would mean that one union could affect the rights of employees represented by another union during the course of negotiations at which the second union would not even be present.

D. The USPS Position

The Postal Service's argument partially tracks that of the APWU but adds some additional points.

It first argues that the losing craft's contract should control in excessing situations. In this case, that means the APWU's NTFT MOU governs rather than the NALC National Agreement. The NTFT MOU provides that NTFT employees are full-time employees, and that means that they have the same rights as any other full-time employees to be excessed into another craft. Following the NALC's Bridge Memo, which provides that cross-craft assignments are to follow the 1978 agreement, would be "stilted and short-sighted." For example, if Congress directs the Postal Service to deliver mail only four days a week, the parties would have to renegotiate the definition of full-time.

Second, there will rarely be any effect on part-time or non-career employees when an NTFT employee is excessed into the carrier craft. In particular, the harm identified in some of the arbitration awards cited by the NALC would not apply in the NTFT excessing situation. If NTFT employees could not be excessed into a full-time carrier position, some other employee such as the junior clerk, would be.

Third, the arbitrator should avoid a result that would prevent NTFT excessing into other crafts. The NALC's position would paint the Postal Service into a corner. As Arbitrator Stephen Goldberg recently wrote, an arbitrator should not readily assume that the Postal Service agreed to terms that would create entirely foreseeable problems.

VI. Discussion

I have described the parties' arguments in detail to make clear all the areas in dispute. Having done so, however, it is now apparent that the only real issue is extremely narrow: which of the two agreements, the NALC's National Agreement or the APWU's NTFT MOU, controls the definition of full-time employee for purposes of cross-craft excessing?

The APWU is indisputably correct that its agreements, and arbitral authority under them, treat NTFT clerks as full-time employees entitled to all the protections of that classification. The MOU effectively amended the APWU's Article 7, as Arbitrator Das held. If the APWU agreement controls, therefore, the Postal Service properly excessed Leonetti into a full-time carrier position. Just as indisputably, if the NALC's agreement controls, then Leonetti, who had a 30-hour position but actually worked fewer hours, was not a full-time employee because he did not work five 8-hour shifts.

As to that fundamental question, there is only one fair answer. The problem arises only because the Postal Service negotiates with different unions whose individual agreements contain different provisions and different definitions. So long as the negotiated terms in a particular contract affect only the employees in that bargaining unit, the parties can make whatever bargains they wish. Separate contracts may provide that the Postal Service will treat clerks in one fashion, carriers in another, and mail handlers in a third, even if the issues addressed are exactly the same in each case. But when provisions in one contract affect employees in a different bargaining unit, the representative of those employees has a legitimate objection.

The obvious way to avoid those difficulties is for the Postal Service not to bargain with one union any terms that would harm members of another union unless it first receives the second union's consent. That would, of course, limit the bargaining flexibility of the Postal Service and the first union, but that is one of the risks of having multiple bargaining units. An employer cannot reasonably promise contradictory things to different unions.

If the Postal Service does negotiate conflicting agreements, either intentionally or (more likely) by accident and oversight, it is stuck with the result. The problem is of its own making. The only alternative — the alternative argued here by the Postal Service and the APWU — would mean that the employer and one union could change the terms of another union's agreement in negotiations where the second union would not participate. No rationalization could make that just. Place the shoes on the other union's feet, and each would take the opposite side. That is why one rule has to apply in all such cases: the Postal Service may not undercut one union's collective bargaining agreement by negotiating with a different union.

In short, when dealing with cross-craft assignments, the gaining bargaining unit's contract must apply. That was exactly the conclusion reached by Arbitrator Snow in his 1998 decision. Arbitrator Das's 2002 decision did not contradict Arbitrator Snow. Arbitrator Das simply found that FECA imposed an overriding legal obligation and that the Postal Service properly created a special temporary position for injured employees pursuant to FECA. No overriding legal obligation obliged the Postal Service to excess into a full-time carrier craft position an employee who did not meet the requirements for full-time status under the NALC Agreement.[3]

Apparently recognizing that its agreements with the APWU and NALC were likely inconsistent, the Postal Service offered two alternative arguments. One was that reading the contracts literally would be "stilted and short-sighted" because it might create a problem if Congress were to change the law. A hypothetical legislative possibility provides no basis for overriding a negotiated agreement. If Congress were to mandate four-day delivery, as the Postal Service speculates, Congress and the Postal Service would have to deal with the consequences. Fortunately that issue is beyond the scope of this case.

The Postal Service's other argument asserts that upholding the grievance would paint the Postal Service into a corner and limit its ability to engage in cross-craft excessing. The metaphor is inaccurate. The NALC did not paint the Postal Service into a corner, much less the arbitrator. If there was any corner-painting, it was by the Postal Service itself. Had it not negotiated the NTFT MOU with the APWU, or if it had not tried to apply it in this fashion, there would have been no grievance. If complying with the agreement it negotiated with the NALC creates a problem in its relations with the APWU, that is a problem for those two parties to resolve.

[3]Arbitrator Das's 2012 award did not deal with conflicting bargaining units. It merely held that the APWU's National Agreement was amended by the APWU's NTFT MOU. That MOU did not and could not have anything to do with the NALC.

AWARD

For the reasons stated, I sustain the grievance and find that the Postal Service may not reassign into a full-time carrier craft position any clerk craft employee who does not meet the definition of full-time employee specified in the Postal Service's Agreement with the NALC. The reassignment of Anthony Leonetti must therefore be vacated.

The Postal Service's breach of the Agreement may or may not have harmed any identifiable carriers. The record does not contain evidence on that question, so I will remand that issue to the parties. If any identifiable carriers did suffer losses, the Postal Service must make them whole.

Appendix 1: Pertinent Contractual Provisions

USPS/NALC 2006-2011 National Agreement

ARTICLE 7
EMPLOYEE CLASSIFICATIONS

Section 1. Definition and Use

A. Regular Work Force. The regular work force shall be comprised of two categories of employees which are as follows:

1. Full-Time. Employees in this category shall be hired pursuant to such procedures as the Employer may establish and shall be assigned to regular schedules consisting of five (5) eight (8) hour days in a service week.[4]

2. Part-Time. Employees in this category shall be hired pursuant to such procedures as the Employer may establish and shall be assigned to regular schedules of less than forty (50) hours in a service week, or shall be available to work flexible hours as assigned by the Employer during the course of a service week.

ARTICLE 8
HOURS OF WORK

Section 1. Work Week

The work week for full-time regulars shall be forty (40) hours per week, eight (8) hours per day within ten (10) consecutive hours, provided, however, that in all offices with more than 100 full-time employees in the bargaining units the normal work week for full-time regular employees will be forty hours per week, eight hours per day within nine consecutive hours. Shorter work weeks will, however, exist as needed for part-time regulars.

ARTICLE 12
PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 4. Principles of Reassignments

A. A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service. Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Section and the provisions of Section 5. . . .

---

[4]The NPMHU National Agreement has the same definition of "full-time." It does not contain any provision for modified work weeks.

D. In order to minimize the impact on employees in the regular work force, the Employer agrees to separate, to the extent possible, casual employees working n the affected craft and installation prior to excessing any regular employee in that craft out of the installation. The junior employee who is being excessed has the option of reverting to part-time flexible status in his/her craft, or of being reassigned to the gaining installation.

Section 5. Reassignments

B. Principles and Requirements

2. The Vice Presidents Area Operations shall give full consideration to withholding sufficient full-time and part-time flexible positions within the area for full-time and part-time flexible employees who may be involuntarily reassigned. When positions are withheld, management will periodically review the continuing need for withholding such positions and discuss with the NBA the results of such review.

3. No employee shall be allowed to displace, or "bump" another employee, properly holding a position or duty assignment.

4. Unions affected shall be notified in advance (as much as six (6) months whenever possible), such notification to be at the regional level, except under A.4 above, which shall be at the local level. . . .

11. It is understood that any employee entitled hereunder to a specific placement may exercise such entitlement only if no other employee has a superior claim hereunder to the same position. . . .

C. Special Provisions on Reassignments

5. Reduction in the Number of Employees in an Installation Other Than by Attrition

a. Reassignments within installation. When for any reason an installation must reduce the number of employees more rapidly than is possible by normal attrition, that installation:

(1) Shall determine by craft and occupational group the number of excess employees;

(2) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular work force employees by separation of all casuals;

(3) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on full-time positions by reducing part-time flexible hours;

(4) Shall identify as excess the necessary number of junior full-time employees in the salary level, craft, and occupational group affected on an installation-wide basis within the installation; make reassignments of excess full-time employees who meet the minimum qualifications for vacant assignments in other crafts in the same installation; involuntarily reassign them (except as provided for letter carriers and special delivery messengers and vehicle service employees in Section C.5.b below) in the same or lower level with seniority, whichever is the lesser of:

(a) One day junior to the seniority of the junior full-time employees in the same level and craft or occupational group in the installation to which assigned, or

(b) The seniority the employee had in the craft from which reassigned. . . .

8. Reassignment—Part-Time Flexible Employees in Excess of Quota (Other Than Motor Vehicle)

Where there are part-time flexible employees in excess of the part-time flexible quota for the craft for whom work is not available, part-time flexibles lowest on the part-time flexible roll equal in number to such excess may at their option be reassigned to the foot of the part-time flexible roll in the same or another craft in another installation.

D. Part-Time Regular Employees

Part-time regular employees assigned in the craft units shall be considered to be in a separate category. All provisions of this Section apply to part-time regular employees within their own category.

Case No. NC-E-16340
(Altoona, Pa.)

In the Matter of the Arbitration between :

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, AFL-CIO -and- :

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE -and- : OPINION AND AWARD

AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO

BACKGROUND:

At the opening of the hearing, these Parties agreed that the matter in issue arose during the term of the 1975 National Collective Bargaining Agreement. These Parties also agreed that the grievance was properly processed through the steps of the grievance procedure provided in that Agreement, and that the American Postal Workers Union intervened and was afforded full party status in this proceeding.

A hearing before the Undersigned, duly designated Arbitrator, was held in Washington, DC on May 31, 1979. At that hearing, all the above-captioned Parties appeared and were represented by counsel. They were afforded full opportunity to present testimony, other evidence and argument in support of their respective contentions. By agreement, post-hearing briefs were filed.

THE ISSUE:

Although these Parties did not agree upon a definition of the matter in issue, from the contentions raised by the grieving Union and from the arguments submitted by the USPS and the APWU, it could be determined that the NALC was contending that the Postal Service improperly interpreted the provisions of Article VII and Appendix A of the National Agreement by deciding to withhold various full-time duty assignments in the letter carrier craft at the Altoona, Pennsylvania Post Office, during the period from May of 1978 through until May of 1979, and by not filling those positions with part-time flexible letter carriers. The NALC was aware, at the time that it filed this grievance on approximately June 28, 1978, that the Postal Service was withholding these assignments in anticipation of the excessing of clerk craft employees, at the same installation, who the USPS intended to employ to fill in the vacancies created by the retirement of full-time carrier craft members of that postal installation's labor force. Whereas the NALC contended that the Postal Service could not withhold these vacancies and was required to fill them with part-time flexible carrier craft employees as they arose, the USPS and the APWU claimed that, in accordance with Appendix A of the Agreement, the Postal Service was obligated to act in this fashion under all the circumstances present during the period under consideration at the Altoona Post Office.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

As stated above, the grievance arose when the Postal Service failed to promote the part-time flexible carriers employed at the Altoona, Pennsylvania Post Office to fill vacant full-time duty assignments in the carrier craft.

Commencing in the Spring of 1978, there began a series of retirements by full-time carriers. Each of these retirements, except two which were stipulated to by the parties, created vacancies for unassigned reserve regular carriers who filled in for other regular full-time carriers who were on their scheduled vacations. Between the end of April and mid-August of that year, at least six such full-time vacancies were created by these resignations.

When the Local Union officials inquired as to why part-time flexible carriers were not being promoted to fill the vacancies, pursuant to the provisions of Article VII, Section 3 of the Agreement, The Postal Service officials responded by indicating that the Altoona Post Office was scheduled to receive a multi-position letter sorting machine. When such a machine was in place and in operation, the Postal Service stated that it was expected that there would be a reduction in the number of clerks required at Altoona, and that these vacant positions would be utilized to provide full-time employment at Altoona for some of the clerks who would have to be excessed.

The NALC thereafter brought this grievance claiming that the withholding was improper and for too long a period of time. The NALC requested that, as an appropriate remedy, these part-time flexible carriers be promoted to full-time positions at once and be made whole for any losses suffered as a result of the alleged unwarranted withholding of their promotions to full-time positions.when these positions had orginally become available. During the course of the hearing, it was also suggested that, in the event that the Arbitrator should find that such withholding could be undertaken under the provisions of Appendix A, then the guidelines for implementing Appendix A in future disputes should be established in this determination.

PROVISIONS OF THE AGREEMENT REFERRED TO DURING THE HEARING:

Article VII, Section 3, states in pertinent part:

> The Employer shall maximize the number of full-time employees and minimize the number of part-time employees who have no fixed work schedules in all postal installations. A part-time flexible employee working eight (8) hours within ten (10), on the same five (5) days each week and the same assignment over a six-month period will demonstrate the need for converting the assignment to a full-time position...

Appendix A of the 1975 National Agreement, later incorporated as part of Article XII of the 1978 Agreement, provides for both the letter carrier craft and the clerk craft in pertinent part as follows:

APPENDIX A

A. Basic Principles and Reassignments

When it is proposed to:

...

5. Reduce the number of regular work force employees of an installation other than by attrition;...

B. Principles and Requirements

2. The Regional Postmasters General shall give full consideration to withholding sufficient full-time and part-time flexible positions within the area for full-time and part-time flexible employees who may be involuntarily reassigned.

OPINION:

Although, during the course of the arbitration hearing, the NALC argued that the quoted provision of Section 3 of Article VII imposed a duty or obligation upon the Postal Service to maximize the number of full-time employees and withholding the promotion of part-time flexibles to full-time duty assignments violated this provision of the Agreement, that provision does not provide much support for the ultimate position taken by the NALC. That Article in the Agreement, as was acknowledged by one of the witnesses for the Letter Carriers Union, addresses the issue of how many full-time assignments are needed in a particular installation . The point at which the Union can require that the Postal Service convert certain part-time positions to full-time positions is detailed in this particular provision. In this proceeding, there was no dispute between the grieving Union and the Service that full-time positions were vacant because of stipulated retirements. They had no dispute about the "maximization" of regular full-time duty assignments. No evidence was required to establish the existence of conditions which required such "maximization".

What really was in dispute was whether the Postal Service could delay filling such vacant full-time positions for a period of time in anticipation of an obligation imposed under Appendix A to provide employment within the area for certain full-time and part-time flexibles, where appropriate, who may be involuntarily reassigned.

In issue was the length of time that the Postal Service could wait to fill such positions and keep them vacant for this purpose. The NALC claimed that at the time that each regular carrier retired, during the period under review at Altoona, no specific employees had been declared excess and the USPS had not specifically proposed a reduction of the work force at that installation. For these reasons, at the time of each resignation, a full-time vacancy was created which should have been filled with the most eligible part-time flexible in the carrier craft.

The Postal Service took the position that it did not violate the National Agreement by withholding these positions as they became vacant by virtue of the series of retirements which took place between May of 1978 and May of 1979 because such action was the reasonable course to follow under the circumstances then existing at Altoona. The APWU apparently concurred with this position contending that the Service could withhold vacancies, to meet its obligation under Appendix A to absorb excessed employees, as long as it was necessary to make provision to take care of such excessed employees. The APWU stated that the length of time that the USPS could withhold such vacancies would depend upon such factors as the expected rate at which such positions would be created through retirements or otherwise and the expected number of excessed employees who the Service would have to absorb in the area.

In 1972, Arbitrator J. Fred Holly had before him the grievance brought by the NALC on behalf of a part-time letter carrier at the Stillwater, Oklahoma Post Office. In that grievance, the NALC contended that this part-time flexee should have been promoted to cover the full-time city route made vacant by the retirement of a full-time carrier. The Union argued that the failure of the Postal Service to promote this grievant between the date of the retirement, in October of 1971, and the date of the grievance, February 14, 1972, was a violation of that grievant's contractual right to fill that vacancy.

Although Arbitrator Holly had before him a case which was limited to the application of Article VII, Section 3 of the National Agreement then in effect, the Arbitrator gave full consideration to the inter-action of Article XII of that same agreement with the proper application of the Article VII provision. Article XII, in that National Agreement, imposed upon the Regional Postmaster General the same obligation to withhold sufficient full-time regular positions within the area to take care of full-time regulars who might be involuntarily reassigned as was required by Appendix A of the 1975 Agreement in effect when the instant grievance was filed, and which is also required of that official under the present National Agreement.

The Union, in the earlier case, contended that each full-time vacancy which arose had to be filled immediately because the existence of such full-time vacancy created a situation in which the Postal Service could "maximize" its regular full-time work force. The Stillwater Post Office took the position that the vacancy created by the retirement was withheld because it came into being at a time when the Employer was instituting Area Mail Processing throughout Oklahoma and it was recognized that this would result in displacement of employees in the clerk craft who would have to be assigned to other locations.

Mr. Holly, in his Opinion, found that to follow the Union's contention with regard to the requirement that the Postal Service immediately fill each vacancy as it occurred would render the terms of the then Article XII provision meaningless. Applying the usual principles of contract construction, Arbitrator Holly concluded that the parties did desire to give full meaning and effect to the provision requiring the Regional Postmaster General to withhold positions under certain conditions. He also found that the institution of the Area Mail Processing System was the type of situation which the parties had in mind when they made provision for withholding positions to cushion the impact of dislocation wherever possible by such action.

At that point in his Opinion Arbitrator Holly addressed himself to the question of for what period of time could the Postal Service withhold positions without rendering its obligation to "maximize" full-time employment meaningless. As to this issue, Arbitrator Holly concluded as follows:

> The National Agreement does not contain specific guidelines for this determination. It is evident though that the parties intended to permit the > withholding of positions for the previously indicated purpose. Hence, it is apparent that withholding positions for the purpose of minimizing the dislocations of the AMP program was in keeping with this intent and was reasonable. In other words, when Management knew that the AMP program would result in the displacement of clerks it had the right to withhold vacated positions until the displacement occurred...

In effect, Arbitrator Holly applied a rule of reason based upon the facts and circumstances then existing to sustain the Postal Service's right, in that case, to withhold the vacated full-time carrier position in anticipation of the need to absorb a displaced member of the full-time clerk craft rather than immediately award the vacancy to the grieving part-time flexee member of the carrier craft. Arbitrator Holly did not find that the USPS had absolute discretion to determine in each instance when or if it would promote a part-time employee to a vacant full-time position or withhold that position to meet some future contingency.

The findings and conclusions of Arbitrator Holly are basically sound and based upon long accepted principles of contract language construction and interpretation. There is no question that Appendix A of the 1975 National Agreement imposed upon Management an obligation to anticipate dislocations which might occur and to withhold full-time vacancies for the purpose of preserving as many opportunities for regular full-time employees to avoid the dislocation of moving out of the area by bidding into such full-time positions when they were forced out of their regular positions. Such a requirement was agreed to by the parties to several previous national negotiations, regardless of the craft or crafts represented on the union side of the bargaining table, because both labor and management recognized that full-time employees, in this instance, were member of a career work force, with tenure and stability of employment to be protected wherever possible, with rights which superseded those with a less protected career status regardless of craft. That is obviously why the provisions of the earlier Article XII and these of Appendix A, pertinent to this proceeding, as well as those of the present Article XII, did not impose a restriction upon the Area Postmaster General to withhold vacant full time positions only for the benefit and protection of employees who are members of the same craft as that in which the vacancy exists.

Having said that, it is necessary to determine whether, in the instant case, it was reasonable for the Postal Service to withhold such vacant full-time positions for the period from May of 1978 until May of 1979. Without reviewing in detail all the evidence found in this record, it can be found that the Eastern Regional Office in Philadelphia published its intention of providing Altoona with a MPLSM on March 23, 1978. That equipment was initially foreseen as being installed and operational by August of 1978. For that reason, the proposed training program was explained to the clerk craft representatives as early as May or June of 1978. The NALC was aware in March as well that this equipment was coming to Altoona. The Union was also aware in May that the Local Postmaster was going to withhold positions in the carrier craft because of the anticipated excessing.

The evidence in this record also clearly established that the installation and operation of a LSM would create a reduction in the need for members of the clerical craft at Altoona and even if positions on the machine were made available to every clerk, the number of members of the craft who would or could successfully complete the required training would be, at best, half of those who entered such a training program.

Resultant dislocation caused by the use of the MPSLM was not based upon speculation but rather upon the experience with the introduction of this machine at many other postal facilities. Calculations based upon the experience with manning this equipment elsewhere indicated that at Altoona, after all the MPLSM positions were eventually filled, some 16 or 17 clerks would still have to be excessed.

The actual experience of the Postal Service at Altoona, gained from the hindsight now available, established that it was definitely ascertained by February of 1979 some 22 clerks would be excessed from Altoona. By May of 1979, the Local Postmaster was able to revise that figure so only 20 clerks were to be declared excess. Of those 20, 11 were able to fill withheld carrier craft positions at Altoona rather than be forced to move to the Pittsburgh Bulk Mail Facility, approximately 120 miles from Altoona, or to some other installation even a greater distance from Altoona. In this way, in keeping with another provision of Appendix A, the Postal Service was able to comply with the following dictate:

> Dislocation and inconvenience to full-time and part-time flexible employees shall be kept to the minimum consistent with the needs of the service.

While it was quite true, as the NALC argued, the specific individuals who were to be excessed or the number of such clerk craft positions which were to be excessed were not known as early as May of 1978, the evidence does support the Postal Service conclusion reached as early of May of 1978, that the introduction of this equipment would provide for a signifigant reduction in clerk craft positions and that withholding vacancies, as they occurred and in whatever craft these vacancies might occur, would be the prudent course to follow if the career status rights, in this instance of the clerk craft employees, were to be protected as contemplated by the provisions of Appendix A of the National Agreement.

The automation of the operations involved in mail processing as well as mail delivery continues apace. The reassignment and dislocation of career employees appears to be an almost daily occurrence. Whereas in the case here under review the members of the carrier craft who were filling part-time flexible positions were deprived of the opportunity to bid for and fill permanent full-time positions in their craft, under some other circumstances it might very well be that members of the clerk craft, also occupying positions for a good number of years as part-time flexees, might be delayed in bidding for full-time positions because jobs of this nature were appropriately withheld to provide opportunities for dislocated or excessed full-time carriers to fill vacant full-time positions at their home installation. We are all aware of technological innovations which may impact upon the present methods of mail delivery.

Because, as stated above, it must be found that, under the circumstances existing in this case, with the impact of the introduction of the MPLSM definite and ascertainable and with the knowledge that this equipment would be installed and operated at Altoona within the foreseeable future, the Area Postmaster General acted in a reasonable fashion under the discretion afforded pursuant to the provisions of Appendix A of the 1975 Agreement.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	:	ARBITRATION CASE NO.
and	:	AC-NAT-3052
AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO	:	ISSUED: April 25, 1977

BACKGROUND

This is a national level grievance initiated by APWU President Filbey in a March 4, 1976 letter to Senior Assistant Postmaster General Conway. The major issue involves interpretation and application of Appendix A, Section II-A and -B of the July 21, 1975 National Agreement, as hereinafter set forth. 1

The basic facts are not seriously in dispute. Under date of March 1, 1976, Logistics Division Director Koenigs, Central Regional Office, issued a directive to all Central Region SCF Managers and Postmasters including the following relevant paragraphs: 2

> Effective March 6, 1976, the distribution of contiguous state first-class mail at your office is revised as outlined herein.
>
> 1. MPLSM Distribution
>
> Outgoing mail will be separated on MPLSM's to SCF's of contiguous states where volume justifies or the make-up is necessary to maintain service standards. This will be accomplished on the initial sortation.
>
> 2. Manual and SPLSM Distribution
> The distribution of first-class mail for contiguous states will be discontinued at all Sectional Centers except as noted below.

(a) Origin SCF offices actually contiguous to another state will makeup overnight ODIS committed SCF's of that state on the primary case. Other SCF's of the contiguous state may be made up as warranted by volume and as space permits on the manual 77-hole primary case or on the SPLSM. All other mail for the state(s) involved will be dispatched to the appropriate SDC.

(b) Origin SCF offices not actually contiguous to another state will discontinue contiguous state distribution. Exceptions to this will be makeup of overnight ODIS committed areas on a primary sortation. All other mail for the states involved will be dispatched to the appropriate SDC.

3. The distribution of first-class flats will be accomplished to the same degree as that afforded manual letter sortation.

4. Each SCF office will continue to accomplish local state distribution of all classes of mail by General Scheme.

To conform to these guidelines, the authorized distribution of first-class mail at your office, destined to contiguous states, will be as follows:

	Contiguous State(s)/Type of Distribution
Distribution Method
MPLSM
Manual & SPLSM

Separations for SCF/City Zip Codes, if shown for manual distribution, must be provided for on the primary case. This is in your overnight ODIS committed area.

Corrections to the Postal Logistics Directory (PLD) and effected schemes and schedules should be initiated by your office. Additional Zip Code separations of contiguous states which are made on manual cases, as provided in paragraph 2A, should be identified on the corrected PLD page. It is expected that revised pages, as necessary, will be submitted promptly to insure publication of correct information.

Issuance of the above directive was prompted by a decision late in 1975 to eliminate a substantial number of air taxi routes used to transport mail in the Central Region. Since the existing mail distribution system was geared to use of such routes, appropriate revision of the distribution system was required. Prior to the cutback in air taxi use, under the ATP program, installations where mail originated performed primary and secondary sortation of contiguous state mail. With elimination of various air taxi routes, it seemed more efficient to transfer the secondary distribution from installations where distribution of contiguous state mail was being performed (either manually or on Single Position Letter Sorting Machines) to the appropriate SDC in the state where mail was destined. The cutback in the ATP program, however, was not intended to require any change in distribution methods where contiguous state mail was distributed on Multiple Position Letter Sorting Machines. 3

APWU Vice President Williams, who also is APWU Regional Coordinator for the Central Region, received a number of phone calls on or shortly after March 1, 1976, from various local APWU officials in Central Regional Post Offices who had learned informally of the above directive and were concerned about its impact upon the clerical work force in the offices affected. Shortly after March 1, indeed, Williams received a copy of the directive from a local Union official in Evansville, Indiana. He had not been provided a copy by the Service, but telephoned Contract Administration Branch Manager Powell (Labor Relations Division, Central Region) to inquire and learned that Powell also had been unaware of its issuance. Williams and Powell thereafter had several conversations, with Powell ultimately asserting that the directive did not affect bargaining unit personnel in such manner as to have required the giving of notice to the Union at the Regional level under Appendix A, Section II-B-4 of the July 21, 1975 National Agreement. In relevant part, Appendix A, Section II-A and -B reads: 4

"Section II: Clerk Craft

A. Basic Principles and Reassignments

When it is proposed to:

1. Discontinue an independent installation;

2. Consolidate an independent installation (i.e., discontinue the independent identity of an installation by making it part of another and continuing independent installation);

"3. Transfer a classified station or classified branch to the jurisdiction of another installation or make an independent installation;

4. Reassign within an installation employees excess to the needs of a section of that installation;

5. Reduce the number of regular work force employees of an installation other than by attrition;

6. Reduce RPO, HPO employment, including employment in mobile stations;

7. Centralized mail processing and/or delivery installation (New and Old);

8. Reassignment--Part-time flexibles in excess of quota; such actions shall be subject to the following principles and requirements.

"B. Principles and Requirements

1. Dislocation and inconvenience to full-time or part-time flexible employees affected shall be kept to the minimum consistent with the needs of the service.

"2. The Regional Postmasters General shall give full consideration to withholding sufficient full-time and part-time flexible positions within the area for full-time and part-time flexible employees who may be involuntarily reassigned.

3. No employee shall be allowed to displace, or 'bump' another employee properly holding a position or duty assignment.

4. Unions affected shall be notified in advance (as much as six months whenever possible), such notification to be at the regional level, except under A4 above, which shall be at the local level.

5. Full-time and part-time flexible employees involuntarily detailed or reassigned from one installation to another shall be given not less than 60 days advance notice, if possible, and shall receive moving, mileage, per diem and reimbursement for movement of household goods; as appropriate, if legally payable, will be governed by the standardized Government travel regulations as set forth in Methods Handbook M-9, 'Travel'.

"6. Any employee volunteering to accept reassignment to another craft or occupational group, another branch of the Postal Service, or another installation shall start a new period of seniority beginning with such assignment, except as provided herein."

. . . . . .

(Underscoring added.)

On March 3, 1976, Vice President Williams wrote APWU Industrial Relations Director Andrews stating in part:

"We have been deluged with calls since this bulletin hit the field, since the impact on Outgoing Distribution jobs at various offices will be severe.

"Minneapolis indicates that between 40 and 50 jobs, including a number of level 6 Distribution and Dispatch Expediter positions will be affected.

"Cleveland indicates that 30 to 50 jobs will be impacted; Indianapolis 20 positions; Rockford, IL 9 positions, Evansville, Indiana 15 positions, etc.

"There was no consultation, nor was Labor Relations at the Central Region given any advance notice."

On March 4, 1976 President Filbey initiated this grievance by letter, enclosing a copy of the Central Region March 1 directive and noting that it was to become effective on March 6. Filbey's letter concluded: 6

"It would appear that the Postal Service is completely ignoring the consultation provisions of the National Agreement, specifically those contained in Appendix A, Section II, B, 4. For that reason I am hereby instituting a grievance at the National level. We shall be prepared to meet for discussion at Step 4 at the earliest possible date."

Fourth Step discussion took place April 8, 1976 between Acting Director Merrill of the Office of Grievance Procedures (Labor Relations Department) and APWU Industrial Relations Director Andrews. On April 19, 1976 Merrill replied to the grievance as follows, in relevant part: 7

"The issue in dispute is whether or not the United States Postal Service has violated Appendix A, Section 2, B, 4, of the National Agreement, when the Central Region issued changes in mail processing regarding the processing of contiguous state first class mail without notifying the Union in advance?

"At the Step 4 meeting, I stated that Regional Labor Relations officials were not aware of the change in advance, which was of concern to us particularly in view of Mr. Williams' assessment of the impact on employees. I stated that if Mr. Williams' assessment was accurate and clerk craft employees were to be excessed from their installation, management was in violation of Appendix A, Section 2, B, 4, of the National Agreement by not providing advance notification to the Union.

"However, the information we have received subsequent to our meeting discloses that no employees have been excessed out of the installations nor has there been significant excessing of employees out of their sections within the installations, as a result of the changes involved. In addition, local management has advised the local union officials when jobs were reverted due to scheme changes which occurred.

"For example, in Minneapolis, no plans are contemplated to excess employees from the section or installation as a result of the changes in question. In Cleveland, Rockford, Evansville, and Indianapolis, no plans are contemplated to excess employees from those installations due to these changes.

"Therefore, the provision of Appendix A, Section 2, B, 4, regarding regional notification to the Union has not been violated since it is not applicable. However, the region should have advised the Union in advance of these changes as a matter of sound labor-management relations.

"I recognize that the Regional Labor Relations officials were not aware of the change in question beforehand in order to determine if Appendix A, Section 2, B, 4, would be applicable. By copy of this letter to all regions, we are advising them to insure that matters as described above are acted upon as appropriate to avoid unnecessary grievances and to insure compliance with the National Agreement."

(All underscoring added, except in second paragraph.)

The Fourth Step answer was not satisfactory to the APWU and after subsequent discussions failed to resolve the parties' differences, the grievance was certified to arbitration on May 19, 1976. 8

THE ARGUMENTS

1. APWU

During an opening exchange between Counsel at the hearing, the Postal Service stressed that Appendix A, Section II-A starts with the phrase "When it is proposed to:". According to the Postal Service, the operational changes flowing from the March 1, 1976 directive did not result in a "proposal" to reduce the number of regular work force employees at any installation. Thus, said Counsel, there was no obligation to notify the APWU under Appendix A, Section II-B-4. 9

The APWU elected not to file a post-hearing brief and summarized its arguments at the end of the hearing. The APWU then emphasized not only a contention that there was violation of the notification requirements of Appendix A, Section II-B-4 but also that the USPS had failed to bargain collectively over a fundamental change in conditions of employment. This, said the APWU, not only violated Article V of the National Agreement, but also ignored the continuing duty of the Postal Service to engage in collective bargaining on such matters pursuant to the National Labor Relations Act. 10

The APWU notes that Appendix A originally was developed in March of 1968, before the Postal reorganization took place, and its language obviously was addressed to the situation as it then existed. This specifically did not include any obligation of the Post Office Department to engage in collective bargaining under the National Labor 11

Relations Act. Given this critical fact, it would be entirely unrealistic to interpret the phrase "When it is proposed to" as if it contemplated a formal proposal to initiate collective bargaining. Instead, the intent of this phrase is to require the giving of notice whenever Management action is contemplated which reasonably may be expected to have consequences of the types delineated in Appendix A, Section II-A.

Article XII, Section 4--Principles of Reassignments--first was embodied in the National Agreement in 1973. Section 4-A states: 12

> "A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees will be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the Service. Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Article and the provisions of Appendix A."

Given this contractual commitment and the provisions of Appendix A, the APWU deems it entirely clear that the parties should bargain concerning any situation which falls within the scope of Appendix A, Section II-A. Since Article V of the National Agreement is intended to prohibit unilateral action by the Service, it seems obvious to the APWU that collective bargaining should take place once notification is given pursuant to Appendix A, Section II-B-4.

In the present case, the Regional directive embodied a region-wide program, not a local program. Hence, the APWU holds that the responsibility for giving notice to the Union could not be passed down from the Region to the various local installations where reassignments would be required. 13

Since there was no notice given and no opportunity for collective bargaining, the APWU urges that the only meaningful remedy now would be an order that the Postal Service withdraw the March 1, 1976 Regional directive completely, and cancel all actions taken as a result of the directive. After the status quo thus was restored, the parties then could proceed to bargain in accordance with the requirements of the Agreement. If good faith bargaining did not produce agreement, the APWU agrees that the Service then could implement the program subject to protest through the grievance procedure. 14

2. USPS

Initially the Service asserts that an obligation to give notice to the Union can arise under Appendix A, Section II-B-4 only "when Management has formulated a proposal" to engage in any of the personnel actions specified in Appendix A, Section II-A. This is the only proper meaning which can be attributed to the word "proposed," it says, since the terms of a collective bargaining agreement must be given "their ordinary and popularly accepted meaning." Thus it cites Webster's International Dictionary--Unabridged (2nd Ed.) as defining "propose" as "to offer for consideration, discussion, acceptance, or adoption." 15

Even if the term "proposed" is not to be given such literal meaning here, says the Service, there is no solid evidence at all that the March 1, 1976 Regional directive either contemplated, or resulted in, the reassignment of Clerks from one installation to another. Thus the only notices which might have been required as a result of the directive would have been at the local level where reassignments within an installation may have been required as contemplated under Appendix A, Section II-A-4. 16

While there is no clear evidence as to whether or how actual notice was given locally, the Service emphasizes that local APWU officials in at least 9 cities had become aware of the directive locally and were concerned about its impact. The Service thus reasons that local notices must have been given in these instances by no later than March 3. Its brief suggests further that June 19, 1976 was the earliest date upon which any reassignment within an installation was required under the directive. Thus, the brief concludes, there was adequate notice given at the local level pursuant to Appendix A, Section II-B-4. 17

The Service fundamentally disagrees with the APWU claims that the notice requirements in Appendix A, Section II, contemplate any "consultation" with the Union, or any "bargaining" as to the propriety of a proposed new program. Nothing in the Agreement uses the terms "consult" or "consultation," and the actions detailed in the directive were fully consistent with all substantive provisions of the National Agreement. 18

In addition, the Service suggests that it is improper to consider here any claim of violation of Article V since this particular argument was not raised specifically in the grievance procedure or in Fourth Step discussions. As noted in its brief-- "It is an axiom of industrial relations that matters not raised in the contractual grievance procedure may not be raised for the first time at arbitration..." 19

The absence of any duty to bargain about the substance of the March 1, 1976 Regional directive, in any event, is clear under the National Agreement, in the view of the Service. The use of the phrase "notified in advance" in Appendix A, Section II-B-4 implies no duty to bargain, as is apparent from the manner in which the parties dealt with "major" relocations of employees under Article XII, Section 4-B. This reads: 20

> "When a major relocation of employees is planned in major metropolitan areas or due to the implementation of national postal mail networks, the Employer will apply Article XII, in the development of the relocation and reassignment plan. At least 90 days in advance of implementation of such plan, the Employer will meet with the Unions at the national level to fully advise the Unions how it intends to implement the plan. If the Unions believe such plan violates the National Agreement, the matter may be grieved.

"Such plan shall include a meeting at the regional level in advance (as much as six months whenever possible) of the reassignments anticipated. The Employer will advise the Unions, based on the best estimates available at the time of the anticipated impact; the number of employees affected by craft; the locations to which they will be reassigned; and, in the case of a new installation, the anticipated complement by tour and craft: The Unions will be periodically updated by the Region should any of the information change due to more current data being available."

(Underscoring added.)

FINDINGS

The March 1, 1976 Regional directive was issued without the knowledge of the Labor Relations Division of the Central Region. It is clear that no consideration was given by USPS Management to the need to comply with the notification requirement under Appendix A, Section II-B-4. 21

Subsequent events establish that the directive actually did not result in reassignment of any Clerks to other installations. It also now is clear that implementation of the directive did require reassignment of Clerks who were "excess to the needs of a section," within the meaning of Appendix A, Section II-A-4, in at least four cities. 22

1. The Claimed Necessity for a Formal Proposal Under Appendix A, Section II-A

Given these basic facts it is appropriate to consider first the principal USPS contention that the notice requirement under Appendix A, Section II-B-4 cannot apply because the Service never "proposed," to the Union, that any action be taken which would fall under 1 of the 8 categories of actions delineated under Appendix A, Section II-A. This argument rests on the assertion that the word "proposed" in the first sentence of Section II-A must be given its "ordinary and popularly accepted meaning" as found in a dictionary. 23

This argument is unpersuasive. Words which appear in a collective agreement must be interpreted in the context in which they were written: their "popularly accepted" meaning may not in fact reflect the true intent of the parties, who hardly can be expected to negotiate with a dictionary in hand to be sure that the "accepted" meaning of each important word they put in their agreement actually comports with their true intent. In the present instance the relevant interpretive context includes the entire collective bargaining agreement, and more particularly the framework of Appendix A, Section II. Other provisions in Article XII (and particularly Section 4-B thereof) also are pertinent. Finally, it is significant that the phrase "When it is proposed to" first was used for this purpose in 1968 when the Post Office Department obviously was not required to make any formal proposals to a Union, for negotiation, on a matter of this sort. 24

The Impartial Chairman thus has no doubt that the requirement to notify under Appendix A, Section II-B-4 arises whenever USPS Management decides to effectuate any program which reasonably may have consequences which fall within any of the 8 categories listed in Section II-A of Appendix A. To adopt a narrower interpretation would be to defeat the stated purpose of Appendix A, Section II-B to minimize "dislocation and inconvenience" to affected employees. 25

While the Service stresses that there is no hard evidence here that the March 1, 1976 directive actually resulted (or will ultimately result) in reassignments of Clerks except within an installation (under Section II-A-4), it is unrealistic and impractical to determine whether notice is required by later events. "Notice" is meaningless unless given prior to the event. One obvious purpose of giving notice is to provide opportunity for an involved Union to investigate the facts and make suggestions calculated to minimize "dislocation and inconvenience to full-time or part-time flexible employees affected." Thus, in any given instance it is possible that some (or all) of such potential consequences of a proposed Management action under Section II-A may be avoided in the end after proper notice has been given. 26

The present facts, in any event, leave no room for doubt that a violation of Appendix A, Section II-B-4 occurred, even if it could be assumed that Regional USPS officials were absolutely certain, in advance, that no reassignments of Clerks excess to the needs of an installation would be required. The directive was issued March 1, 1976, to be effective exactly 5 days later and 27

there is no way that it could be claimed that the officials who prepared the directive could not anticipate that it would be necessary to reassign Clerks, in a number of localities, who were excess to the needs of a section. This precipitate action thus left no time for local management representatives to comply with Section II-B-4 which requires that the notice be given "as much as six months" in advance "whenever possible." Even a cursory reading of Appendix A, Section II, leaves no doubt that proper notice is not given, for purposes of Section II-B-4, unless it provides an affected Union with a reasonable time period to investigate relevant facts and to discuss the matter with appropriate Management representatives before the proposed action becomes effective.

2. The Claimed Duty to Bargain Concerning Matters Covered by Appendix A, Section II-A

The APWU urges that a duty to bargain collectively also arises in any situation where notice is required under Appendix A, Section II-B-4. Here the Union stresses Article V of the National Agreement, which states: 28

"Prohibition of Unilateral Action

The Employer will not take any actions affecting wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment as defined in Section 8(d) of the National Labor Relations Act which violate the terms of this Agreement or are otherwise inconsistent with its obligations under law."

The Service objects to any consideration of this argument, on the ground that it constitutes a "matter" not raised in the grievance. The Impartial Chairman does not so regard it. It simply constitutes an additional contractual argument to support a basic position advanced by the APWU in President Filbey's letter of March 4, 1976, complaining that the USPS was "completely ignoring the consultation provisions of the National Agreement." The Service has had full opportunity to deal with this contractual argument in its post-hearing brief. Thus the APWU argument under Article V is not deemed by the Impartial Chairman to constitute a "matter" not fairly raised during the course of this case. 29

On the merits of this issue, however, the Service position is correct. The applicable provisions of the National Agreement, and specifically Appendix A, Section II, fully deal with both the notice requirement and the substantive policies which apply in the present situation. Given Management's authority under Article III and the provisions of Article XII and Appendix A, Section 2, the parties already have bargained on this subject and have recognized that Management may proceed, under Appendix A, Section II, without any further collective bargaining. Although it is a plain implication of these provisions that once the Union is notified, it will have reasonable opportunity to present facts and suggestions to the Service, there can be no obligation by the Service to engage in "collective bargaining" as to whether or how it should exercise its authority under Article III of the National Agreement. 30

3. Remedial Action

It seems apparent that responsible officials in Central Region Operations were unaware of the applicability of Appendix A, Section II-B-4 of the National Agreement because they failed to consult with representatives of the Labor Relations Division. This was a serious oversight and demonstrates need for clear instructions to the Regions for future guidance in such instances. Since the present case represents a national level dispute, therefore, the Award herein will direct the Postal Service to send appropriate notification to all concerned Regional officials, if such action has not already been taken. 31

The APWU further requests, however, that the March 1, 1976 directive be withdrawn in its entirety, and that all actions taken thereunder be rescinded. There is no evidence in this record to demonstrate need for such a drastic step at this time. No Clerk actually was reassigned outside his or her installation. Nor is there evidence that any Clerk actually lost earnings, or otherwise was deprived of contractual rights, by virtue of reassignment within an installation. Absent a showing that significant instances of this sort actually occurred, it would seem unrealistic and punitive to undo all that was done pursuant to the March 1, 1976 directive. 32

This ruling, of course, rests on the unique facts here. Different remedial action easily may be required should similar violations of Appendix A, Section II-B-4 occur in the future. Nothing in this Opinion, moreover, bars any individual Clerk from pressing a grievance claiming violation of the Agreement because of any reassignment, adversely affecting such Clerk, as a result of the March 1, 1976 directive. 33

AWARD

1. The grievance is sustained to the extent that the effectuation of the March 1, 1976 Regional directive without reasonable prior notice to the APWU, violated Appendix A, Section II-B-4 of the National Agreement.

2. To avoid recurrence of such a problem, the USPS shall issue appropriate instructions to all Regional offices, unless such action already has been taken.

3. Under the particular facts here, and in the absence of any showing that individual employees suffered loss or otherwise were deprived of contractual rights, no further remedial action now is warranted.

4. This ruling does not affect the rights of individual employees to file grievances seeking to be made whole for claimed violations of the National Agreement, or any applicable local agreement, as a result of local implementation of the March 1, 1976 Regional directive.

5. No violation of Article V of the National Agreement has been established.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE and NATIONAL POST OFFICE MAIL HANDLERS, WATCHMEN, MESSENGERS AND GROUP LEADERS DIVISION OF THE LABORER'S INTERNATIONAL UNION OF NORTH AMERICA, AFL-CIO	OPINION AND AWARD: Grievance: MC-C-325 Omaha, Nebraska Issued: DEC 8 1978

The Grievance

This grievance arose when the Postal Service involuntarily reassigned 33 Mail Handlers from the Omaha, Nebraska Post Office to the Des Moines, Iowa Bulk Mail Center (BMC). The Union claims that the Postal Service violated the protective provisions of the National Agreement when it ordered the reassignments.

Background

In the early 70's the Postal Service devised a highly automatic centralized system for handling bulk mail, i.e., second, third and fourth class mail. The new system contemplated the construction of 21 major Bulk Mail Centers located strategically on a geographical basis. The purpose of the Bulk Mail System is stated to be to remove bulk mail processing from the individual post offices and process it in these highly mechanized centers. The centers are designed to be serviced by a truck and rail system used exclusively for moving bulk mail. The Bulk Mail System is designed to effectuate economics of scale based on its single purpose and concentration of effort. The System was not to be encumbered by first class and specially handled mail. And, conversely, the post offices were to be relieved of the necessity of accommodating large volumes of advertising mail, publications and parcel post.

The first BMC, New York, was scheduled to become operational in 1973 with the remaining centers to phase-in over the next two years. At that time it was contemplated that the majority of the centers would come on line in calendar 1975. In the early planning, the Des Moines Center was among the last scheduled to become operational. Detroit, San Francisco, Philadelphia and Des Moines were scheduled to begin operations in the summer of 1975.

Apparently, the original start-up schedule could not be met because on May 22, 1974 the Postal Service advised the Unions that the second Center, Chicago, would not open until January 1, 1975. Two other centers, Greensboro, North Carolina and Washington, D. C. were now scheduled to open on the same date. A group of seven more centers were slated to open on March 15, 1975. And an additional seven centers to start-up on April 30, 1975. The Des Moines BMC was included in the April 30 group.

The Des Moines BMC opened in January 1976 shortly after the Denver BMC became operational. The Director of Processing at the Omaha Post Office testified that 20 per cent of the pre-January 1 total transit parcel post volume of the Omaha Post Office was lost to the Denver BMC on January 1, 1976 and an additional 40 per cent was lost to the Des Moines BMC on January 31, 1975. According to the Postal Service's witness this amounted to 20 million pieces of mail.

On March 9, 1976, 33 Mailhandlers were notified that they were to be excessed and involuntarily reassigned to Des Moines effective April 10, 1976. The Administrative Vice President of the Mailhandlers initiated a grievance in the first step on March 20. The grievance was denied and it was appealed to Step 2a on March 25. On April 8 the Union petitioned the District Court for a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction to stay the proposed involuntary reassignments to Des Moines. The District Judge granted the temporary restraining order on April 9. Of the 33 excessed Mailhandlers, 23 took various options offered them leaving 10 who were more directly impacted by the temporary restraining order. Five went to Des Moines and five chose to stay in Omaha.

On April 20 the parties entered into a stipulation that caused the Union's complaint and motion for a preliminary injunction to be withdrawn. The temporary restraining order was also dismissed. In brief, the stipulation provided that the five Mailhandlers remaining in Omaha would be guaranteed 40 hours, that the Postal Service would undertake to maximize the hours of the other Mail-handlers who opted for part-time flexible jobs in Omaha and that the original grievance as appealed to Step 2a on March 25, 1976 would be arbitrated. It is this series of events that led up to this arbitration.

The parties have been involved with the excessing of employees and the resultant necessity for involuntary transfers over the course of their bargaining history. Situations such as this one are an inescapable corallary of the Postal Service's move toward centralization of facilities. Bulk mail handling in depots built solely for that purpose is one of the components of that centralized effort.

In order to meet the problems faced by the employees who find that their jobs have been moved to another location, the parties have devised a system of steps to be followed whenever the Postal Service embarks on a program that impacts on its bargaining unit employees.

This case arises mainly because the Union claims that the Postal Service did not follow the contractual procedures that had been developed by the parties to cover situations such as the excessing of Mailhandlers in Omaha and their involuntary reassignment to Des Moines. There were other questions raised at the opening of the Arbitration Hearing. These questions will be dealt with later in this Opinion.

Essentially, the language of the Labor Agreement that sets out a procedure for the conduct of the parties involves notice to the Union Officers at all levels—National, Regional and Local and ultimately to the individual employees who are excessed. At each of these levels there is provision for advance notice in order that the Union or the individual employee can seek ways under the Agreement to minimize the adverse impact of the move.

The utility of a system of notification is related to the parties' agreement that "no employees employed in the regular work force will be laid off on an involuntary basis during this Agreement." The parties sought to spell out their rights and obligations under these circumstances. The Union looked to alleviating the possible hardships caused by the relocation of its members and the Postal Service looked to maintaining a productive work force.

The rights and obligations of the parties are, of course, distributed throughout the Labor Agreement. However, the principal provisions dealing with the excessing of Mailhandlers at Omaha and the concomitant involuntary reassignments to the Des Moines BMC are contained in Article XII and Appendix A of the 1973 and 1975 National Agreements.

These pertinent provisions read as follows:

"ARTICLE XII
PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 4. Principles of Reassignments

A. A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the Service. Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Article and the provisions of Appendix A.

B. When a major relocation of employees is planned in major metropolitan areas or due to the implementation of national postal mail networks, the Employer will apply Article XII in the development of the relocation and reassignment plan. At least 90 days in advance of implementation of such plan, the Employer will meet with the Unions at the national level to fully advise the Unions how it intends to implement the plan. If the Unions believe such plan violates the National Agreement, the matter may be grieved.

Such plan shall include a meeting at the regional level in advance (as much as six months whenever possible) of the reassignments anticipated. The Employer will advise the Unions, based on the best estimates available at the time, of the anticipated impact; the numbers of employees affected by craft; the locations to which they will be reassigned; and, in the case of a new installation, the anticipated complement by tour and craft. The Unions will be periodically updated by the Region should any of the information change due to more current data being available.

C. When employees are excessed out of their installation, the Union at the national level may request a comparative work hour report of the losing installation 60 days after the excessing of such employees.

If a review of the report does not substantiate that business conditions warranted the action taken, such employees shall have their retreat rights activated. If the retreat right is denied, the employees have the right to the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D. In order to minimize the impact on employees in the regular work force, the Employer agrees to separate public policy program employees, and to the extent possible, casual employees, working in the affected craft and installation prior to excessing any regular employee in that craft out of the installation. The junior full-time employee who is being excessed has the option of reverting to part-time flexible status in his craft, or of being reassigned to the gaining installation.

APPENDIX A

Appendix A is an incorporation of the principles of Reassignments as contained in Article XII of the March 9, 1968, National Agreement. The old Article XII has been edited to conform with the new employee classifications. In addition, other word changes have been incorporated to bring Article XII up to date with present terminology;however, there have been no substantive changes.

Discussion and Contentions

At the hearing the Union raised three issues involved with the excessing of the 33 employees from Omaha to Des Moines. It raised the issues of jurisdiction, sub-contracting and notice. The Postal Service questioned the propriety of presenting issues of jurisdiction and sub-contracting since it maintains that these items were not raised in the Grievance Procedure. Management stated that the sub-contracting issue was never mentioned and the jurisdictional issue was raised only five days before on May 17, 1976. The Union Counsel had communicated with Francis J. Filbey, President of the American Postal Workers' Union advising him that the Union expected to make a jurisdictional argument at the Arbitration Hearing. President Filbey dispatched APWU Union Counsel to attend the hearing.

The Arbitrator reserved judgment on the two issues newly raised and advised the parties that, in that day's hearing, he would hear arguments that went solely to the issue of notice.

From the appropriate clauses of the National Agreement cited earlier it will be seen that there are essentially five instances of notice required of the Postal Service "when a major relocation of employees is planned in major metropolitan areas or due to the implementation of national postal mail networks."

These notice requirements are as follows:

National: ". . . At least 90 days in advance of implementation of such (relocation and reassignment) plant, the Employer will meet with the Unions at the national level . . ." (Article XII, Section 4B)

Regional: ". . . Such plan shall include a meeting at the regional level in advance (as much as six months whenever possible) of the reassignments anticipated. . ." (Article XII, Section 4B)

Regional: ". . . The Unions will be periodically updated by the Region should any of the information change due to more current data being available." (Article XII, Section 4B)

National, Regional or Local: "Involuntarily reassign such excess full-time employees . . . for duty assignments to vacancies in installations within 100 miles of the installation, or in more distant installations if after consultation with the effected Union it is determined that it is necessary . . ." (Appendix A, Section 1, C5, b(1))

Individual Employee: "Full-time . . . employees involuntarily detailed or reassigned shall be given not less than 60 days advance notice, if possible . . ." (Appendix A, Section 1, B5)

It is important at this point to cite the grievance dated March 25, 1976 and filed at Step 2a.

SOURCE(S) OF RIGHT(S) VIOLATED: Including but not limited to Article VII Appendix A of the National Working Agreement.

CAUSE AND SPECIFICS OF GRIEVANCE: Management has reassigned 33 employees to the Des Moines BMC without notifying the National or the Region. There was not any notice at all. The National Agreement said there will be a 90 day notice when there are a reassignment or a relocation.

CORRECTIVE ACTION REQUESTED: That these men will not be relocated until all of the provisions of the National Agreement has been completed."

For purposes of developing the ensuing opinion it is useful here to test each of the notice requirements as if all of the provisions of the National Agreement dealing with notice under these circumstances were meticulously spelled out in the Step 2a Appeal.

(A) Notice to the National Union -

There was introduced into evidence a plan submitted to the National Union on May 22, 1974. This plan elaborately dealt with details of the nationwide implementation of the Bulk Mail Network. The Labor Agreement provided that the Union could file a grievance if it felt that the National Labor Agreement was violated. No such grievance was filed.

(B) Notice to the Regional Union -

On June 30, 1975 a joint meeting was held in Des Moines, Iowa. The purpose of the meeting was to discuss a package presented by the Postal Service to the Regional Union Officers covering the manning of the Des Moines Bulk Mail Center.

On July 2 Mr. Frank Sias, Regional Vice President of the Union, was supplied with estimated impact figures in connection with the opening of the Des Moines BMC. This information indicated that it was expected that no Mailhandlers would be excessed at the Omaha Post Office.

(C) Regional Update

On January 15, 1976 the Omaha Post Office Officials met with Local Union Officials to advise them that Mailhandlers would be excessed from the Omaha Post Office to the Des Moines BMC and to discuss possible alternatives including moving excessed Mailhandlers into the Clerk Craft.* Sometime after this meeting had failed to produce an alternative to excessing and at the point of its final decision to excess Mailhandlers to Des Moines, the Omaha Postal Service advised the Union's Regional Vice President.

(D) Notice to National, Regional or Local Unions -

There seemed to be no question that the Union was advised at all levels that any excessing would be to Des Moines which was approximately 145 miles from Omaha.

*Such a plan was devised and proposed to the Union. This plan would move a certain number of Mailhandlers into the Clerk Craft and obviate excessing. The APWU did not agree and the plan was abandoned.

(E) Notice to Individual Employees -

On March 9, 1976 the Omaha Postmaster sent notices to the affected employees advising them that they would be excessed from the Omaha Post Office and involuntarily assigned to the Des Moines BMC effective April 10, 1976.

Regarding notice, the Union contends that the notices all through the planning and into the implementation of the excessing were deficient and the Postal Service violated the Labor Agreement throughout the entire process. The Union particularly stresses the hardship created for the excessed Mailhandlers caused by the lack of notice particularly the short notice to individual employees.

The Union argues further that adequate notice would (a) allow the affected employees to prepare for the inconveniences caused by the involuntary transfer; (b) permit the Union to explore alternatives and (c) allow time for the Union to challenge any plan for a major relocation through the Grievance and Arbitration Procedure.

Management says that the Union was adequately informed at every step of the implementation, particularly at the Local level where a number of meetings were held to inform the Union of the excessing. It states further that any involuntary transfer causes problems and inconvenience for the employees involved. It maintains that it did everything possible to alleviate the hardship and inconvenience to the excessed employees even to the extent of offering extensions of time for those employees requesting them.

Two excessed Mailhandlers, Kojdecki and Kelly, submitted written requests for extensions. The requests were received by the Omaha Postmaster on April 6, 1976. The Postal Service maintains that the extensions would have been granted but before it could act, the requests were withdrawn on April 8, 1976. Kojdecki stated that he withdrew his request because:

> "I was never given any answer from any of these people and I was getting very mad. I was talking to these people all the time and I was not getting anywhere."
>
> and
>
> "I was advised by my counsel, if they didn't want to respond to it."

Kelly's reason for withdrawal was:

> Q. "Why . . . did you withdrew . . . your request?"
>
> A. "Well, because I was told."
>
> Q. "By whom?"
>
> A. "By the same person he was."
>
> Q. "Who is that?"
>
> A. "The Counselor."

On April 8, 1976, the Union petitioned the United States District Court for temporary, preliminary and permanent injunctive relief. The Union moved out of the grievance procedure and into the Court for the purpose of enjoining the involuntary transfer of Mailhandlers to Des Moines. In its petition to the Court, the Union cited only the alleged notice violations and described to the Court the hardships confronting the transferred employees.

It pleaded, "Failure to enjoin the involuntary transfer will, as a practical matter, defeat these employee and Union contract rights even if a later arbitration decision rules in plaintiff's favor. In that time employees reassigned to Des Moines will be required to secure new housing, to undergo inherent difficulties of relocating, to remove children from school in mid-term, and to disrupt their family and community ties. A later arbitration award cannot repair these injuries."

In seeking a remedy the Union stated:

> "Plaintiff has no plain or adequate remedy at law to maintain the status quo pending arbitration, which as a practical matter, will irreparably prejudice the 33 employees plaintiff represents, even if they prevail in the arbitration process."

The Union then asked the Court to:

> ". . . specifically enforce the 1975 Agreement by directing the Employer to arbitrate the validity of its April 10, 1976 involuntary transfer order and by enjoining defendent . . . from requiring . . . transfer . . . in order to maintain the status quo pending arbitration.

On April 9, 1976 the District Judge granted the Union's motion for a Temporary Restraining Order pending a processing of this matter through the Grievance and Arbitration Procedure. In addition the Postal Service was ordered to appear in Court on April 19, 1975 to show cause why a Preliminary Injunction should not be issued.

The parties entered into a stipulation on April 20, 1976 providing for arbitration of the grievance as filed in Step 2a. The stipulation characterized ten Mailhandlers as being those "who were the subject of the restraining order issued on April 9, 1976." Five remained in Des Moines and five remained in Omaha. The Postal Service agreed that the five who remained in Omaha would be guaranteed 40 hours of work and would be treated as unassigned regular Mailhandlers. The five remaining in Omaha were: Kelly, Kojdecki, Grap, Hickman and Ramos. The Postal Service agreed to make all reasonable efforts to maximize the hours for the other mail handlers remaining in Omaha who were affected by the excessing. Both parties agreed that the Arbitration would involve all 33 excessed employees.

One further point requires discussion. This Arbitration involves 33 excessed employees only to the extent that the original grievance was filed because the March 9, 1976 notices of involuntary reassignment to Des Moines were sent to 33 Omaha Mailhandlers. On March 22, 1976 four of the Mailhandlers who had received the excessing notice were notified that such notices were cancelled. Two more Mailhandlers had their notices cancelled on March 29, 1976. Obviously, this was known to the Union as it pursued its claim in Court. It was also known to the parties when they entered into the stipulation to arbitrate on behalf of 33 excessed Mailhandlers.

The parties submitted joint exhibits listing each of the 33 excessed Mailhandlers and 31 letters detailing the status of each grievant. Each letter included the option selected by the grievant. A breakout of the options and the number of excessed employees selecting each is as follows:

OPTIONS		Excessed Employees
a.	Transfer to Des Moines	10
b.	Part-time Flexible Mailhandlers	2
c.	Part-time Flexible Clerk	8
d.	Part-time Flexible Carrier	1
e.	Full-time Custodian-Maintenance	3
f.	Full-time Mailhandler-Kansas City	1
g.	Resigned Prior to Effective Date of Notice	2
h.	Excess Notice Rescinded	6
	TOTAL	33

The length of service of the employees who received the excess notices on March 9, 1976 ranged from two years and four months to less than one year and five months.

Eliminating the six employees who had their excessing notices rescinded and the two short service employees who resigned prior to the effective date of the notice, there remained 25 who could select the available options. Of these 25, 16 made selections. One of the 16 was not given his option because he opted only for Custodian and senior Mailhandlers had already filled the available Custodian jobs. He was one of the 10 slated for involuntary transfer to Des Moines.

It is interesting to note that the 16 Mailhandlers selecting options did so between one and eight days after the posting of the notice. All prior to the Court action and all prior to the discussion of the grievance in the first step.

Findings

The Union was in error when it claimed lack of proper notice to the National Union and the Region. There is adequate evidence to demonstrate that the Postal Service properly provided notice to the National Union and the Region as required by the National Agreement.

The Union was correct when it claimed that the individual employees did not receive a 60 day notice of excessing. It also correctly claims that it was possible to notify the individual employees 60 days prior to the effective date of the involuntary reassignment. The Postal Service erred when it gave notice on March 9, 1976 advising 33 Mailhandlers that they would be excessed to the Des Moines Bulk Mail Center on April 10, 1976. The parcel post transit mail lost to the Denver and Des Moines Bulk Mail Centers occurred on January 1, 1976 and January 31, 1976, respectively.

The date of the workload loss does not necessarily establish the beginning date of any particular notice period. However, in the face of inaction by the Postal Service when the loss occurred, it is not appropriate for it to argue later that the insufficient notice was necessary for sound business reasons.

In January 1976 the Omaha Postal Service and the Local Union Officials were actively engaged in an attempt to work out an arrangement that would make the inevitable excessing of Mailhandlers unnecessary. This activity proved futile because it involved jurisdictional difficulties with the American Postal Workers Union who refused to go along with the plan. While I can find no specific violation of Article XII, Section 4B, the manner of notification to the Regional Vice President of the Union could have been improved so that the express purpose of notification would be fulfilled. Had the Regional Postal Service and the Regional Office of the Union dealt in this area, as they properly could have under the update language, it is possible that a solution could have been found. Even if the excessing problem was not resolved, other issues now lying on the periphery of this Arbitration would have been sufficiently articulated so as to be dealt with here.

The Union was forestalled from raising other issues at the Arbitration Hearing primarily because the Arbitration was held pursuant to a stipulation of the Parties that dealt essentially with notice problems.

In this connection a few words of clarification concerning the scope of the decision in this case seem to be in order. The original grievance form in this case claimed violation of the National Agreement "including but not limited to Article VII, Appendix A. . ." In appealing the case to arbitration the Union cited both Article VII and Article XII. The parties stipulated on April 20, 1976 that the grievance as filed in Step 2a should be submitted to arbitration. Since the basic issues actually considered by the parties up to that time had related to the adequacy of the various notices provided by the USPS, the Service objected at the hearing in this case to any consideration of issues of compliance with Article VII or claimed improper sub-contracting. As noted, the Arbitrator deemed neither such issue to be properly before him for hearing at that time. The issue of sub-contracting, for example, seemed entirely outside the scope of the original grievance. The situation was different as to Article VII, however. It cannot be said that no such issue was implicit in this case from the beginning and, indeed, the original grievance in fact did refer to Article VII. The fact was, however, that there had been no substantive discussion between the parties as problems under Article VII prior to the arbitration hearing. Absent any such discussion, any presentation of evidence as to such an issue would have substituted the hearing for the grievance procedure. Since there were real issues in the case as to adequacy of notice, properly developed in the grievance procedure. It would have been impractical, and unfair to other interested parties, to permit the Mailhandlers to develop its evidence and argument as to Article VII for the first time at the hearing.

On the other hand, the ruling to exclude such matters from the hearing herein cannot fairly be construed as barring the Union from proceeding now to develop its evidence and argument under Article VII, commencing at the 2a level of the grievance proceeding.

Returning then, to the issue of adequate notice, I reject the Management's contention that these employees have had sufficient notice and that subsequent events here made the question of notice moot. There are Mailhandlers who are awaiting the outcome of this Arbitration and until such is available they are not able to take advantage of the lapse of time and consider that time as notice.

The notices required throughout the Agreement and especially those contained in Article XII and Appendix A are substantive conditions. The underlying purpose of the notice requirements is to keep the Union informed about changes that affect the day-to-day relationship of the parties. It is imperative that the notice requirements that are so carefully worked out at the bargaining table command the respect due them. This is especially true in situations such as the excessing under consideration here. The traumatic impact of the involuntary reassignment on the individual and his family embraces countless variations and ramifications. The purpose of notice is to minimize to the extent possible, that traumatic impact.

The Postal Service failed to respect the need for the 60 day notice to the individual employees in this instance and must be found in violation of Appendix A, Section 1, B, 5.

THE AWARD

I. As soon as practicable after the date of this Award, the Postal Service will offer to each excessed Mailhandler in the original group of 33 the same options that were made available to him at the time of the March 9, 1976 notice.

II. Each of the 33 excessed Mailhandlers will be given the opportunity to review the option he chose as a result of the March 9, 1976 notice and, if he so desires, to make an alternative selection.

III. Any public policy or casual employees being utilized in the Mailhandlers craft at the Omaha Post Office or any of its Branches will be separated to the extent necessary to minimize the impact.

IV. The offer date of (I) above shall constitute the beginning date of a new 45 day period of notice.

V. The date at the end of the 45 day period set out in (IV) above shall constitute the new excessing date.

VI. The beginning date of the 60 day period set out in Article XII, Section 4, C shall be the same as (V) above.

VII. Mailhandlers from among the group of 33 who are involuntarily reassigned shall be entitled to take advantage of the provisions of Appendix A, Section 1, C, 5, b(6).

VIII. The Management at the Omaha Post Office will provide the Union with such information as is necessary to keep the Union informed concerning compliance with this Award.

IX. The issues raised by the Union which involve the interpretation of Article VII are reinstated in that Step of the Grievance Procedure which will provide full discussion.

231 Distance Requirements

To qualify for relocation benefits, employees must meet the following distance requirement:

a. The distance between the old residence and the new duty station must be at least 50 miles more than the distance between the old residence and the old duty station. This is known as the IRS 50-mile rule. If the distance is less than 100 miles, you must move at least half the distance closer to the new duty station.

b. The Postal Service also requires you to physically move your household to the new duty station. Postal Service personnel verify distance moved by using Internet mapping tools, and the determination they make is final. The illustration and formula below explain how the rule works.

If you and your spouse are employed by the Postal Service and are both relocating to the same area, only one of you will receive full relocation benefits. Your spouse is eligible as a family member only if he or she is moving to the new job location. Your spouse is eligible for advance round-trip travel time while searching for a permanent residence and en route travel time when leaving the former residence and traveling to the new duty station. Time spent for these trips are to be charged as work hours.

APPEARANCES:

For the Union - James S. Ray, Esq.

For the USPS - Richard A. Levin, Esq.

BACKGROUND:

This case concerns the entitlement of certain employees to relocation allowance upon exercise of contractual retreat rights following an involuntary reassignment in an excessing situation. The parties framed the issue as follows:

> Did the Postal Service violate the provisions of the 1975-1978 collective bargaining agreement in not paying a relocation reimbursement to the grievants upon exercise of their retreat rights to the Boston Post Office.

The parties also agreed that the case was properly processed through the steps of the grievance procedure and was before the Arbitrator for a final and binding decision.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

There is little dispute concerning the relevant facts in this case, The Grievants, Mail Handlers at the Boston Post Office, were advised by a letter dated March 22, 1976, that they were excess to the needs of the Boston Post Office, and were, therefore, subject to involuntary reassignment to another duty station pursuant to Appendix A, Section 1.C.5 of the National Agreement. The Grievants were given the right to complete a preference form on which they indicated their respective choices from among alternative duty stations which were available. They were also given the right to chose to revert to part-time flexible status. On April 24, 1976, the Grievants, having chosen not to become part-time flexibles, were involuntary reassigned to the Bulk Mail Center in Springfield, Massachusetts. They were reimbursed for expenses incurred in connection with this transfer in accordance with the provisions of the M-9 Handbook, which covered allowances for relocation expenses.

The Grievants all requested that they be granted retreat rights to the Boston Post Office pursuant to the provisions of Appendix A, Section 1.C.5.b(6) of the National Agreement. On June 24, 1977, they were advised that they were being transferred back to Boston as Unassigned Regular Mail Handlers. In the letter so advising them, they were also informed that they were not eligible for relocation allowance payments to cover the expenses involved in returning to the Boston Post Office from the Springfield Bulk Nail Center. When they did return to Boston, they were not paid any allowance to cover the expenses which they incurred in making this change in duty station. Thereafter, the Union filed a grievance on their behalf in which reimbursement for such expenses was requested.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

On behalf of these Grievants, the Mail Handlers Union argued that Appendix A, Section 1.B.5. entitles involuntarily reassigned employees to reimbursement for relocation expenses without regard to, and independent of, the eligibility standards set forth in the M-9 Handbook.

The Union further contended that the exercise of retreat rights by involuntarily assigned employees, to return to their original duty station, is subsumed in the term "involuntarily reassigned" as used in Appendix A, Section 1.B.5. For that reason, such employees are entitled to relocation expenses in connection with their return under that contractual provision.

Finally, the Union also asserted that the postmaster in Boston represented to the Grievants, at the time of their involuntary reassignment, that they would be reimbursed for expenses incurred in exercising their retreat rights. For that reason, the Postal Service was estopped from denying such reimbursement to these employees.

The USPS argued that, in order to receive reimbursement for expenses incurred in relocation, an employee would have to relocate pursuant to an involuntray reassignment and such reimbursement must be consistent with the provisions of the M-9 Handbook. Neither of these conditions were met when these Grievants exercised their retreat rights in order to return to the Boston Post Office.

The Postal Service also pointed to the provisions of a Comptroller General decision in which it was held that reimbursement for expenses incurred in retransferring to an original duty station could only be allowed when such transferwas primarily for the benefit of the Post Office. In this case, according to the USPS, the return to Boston was strictly for the benefit of and at the request of the employees involved.

The Postal Service claimed that, although employees exercising retreat rights are treated somewhat differently from other voluntary transferees in terms of seniority does nothing to rectify the complete lack of contractual support for the claim for reimbursement.

Finally, the Postal Service alleged that there was no promise by the Postmaster tothese Grievants that they would be reimbursed for expenses incurred in exercising their retreat rights. The Employer contended that the Union just failed to sustain the burden of proving such an assertion.

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

Section 1. C.5. b(6) of Appendix A provides:

> Employees involuntarily reassigned under b(1) and (2) above, other than senior employees who elect to be reassigned in place of junior employees, shall be entitled at the time of such reassignment to file a written request to be returned to the first vacancy in the level, in the craft or occupational group in the installation from which reassigned, and such request shall be honored so long as he does not withdraw it or decline to accept an opportunity to return in accordance with such request.

Thus, it is clear that these Grievants, having filed a written request to be reassigned had a contractual right to return to Boston. The Union argued that since such right arises because of the involuntary nature of the initial move, in this case to Springfield, it must be accompanied with the companion right to be reimbursed for expenses incurred in returning to Boston.

If there were any such right to reimbursement under such circumstances, that right must arise initially from the provisions of Section 1.B.5 of Appendix A, which states:

> Full-time and part-time flexible employees involuntarily detailed or reassigned from one installation to another shall be given not less than 60 days advance notice if possible, and reimbursement for moving household goods, as appropriate, if legally payable, will be governed by the standardized Government travel regulation as set forth in Methods Handbook M-9 "Travel".

It is the provision quoted above which is the basis for the Union's claim in this case. This is where the right to reimbursement, in the event of an involuntary detail or reassignment, is specifically set out. As the provision states, the move must be an involuntary one, and it must also meet the requirements of the M-9 Handbook in order to qualify for reimbursement.

These Grievants were certainly involuntarily reassigned from Boston to Springfield. They went very reluctantly and they exercised their right under Section 1.C.5.b(6) of Appendix A to request reassignment to Boston at the first available opportunity. Once relocated in Springfield, these Grievants had a right to remain there, if they so desired, or to exercise the option of returning to Boston when that choice was offered to them. They certainly were not required to either return to Boston or face some adverse consequence if they elected to stay in Springfield. The choice of returning cannot be characterized as an involuntary one. It cannot be tainted with any degree of compulsion because these Grievants found themselves in Springfield through an involuntary reassignment.

The provisions of the M-9 Handbook, which are mentioned in Section 1.B.5 of Appendix A, quoted above, and which are also incorporated into the National Agreement pursuant to Article XIX, require payment under certain circumstances and not under others.

Th. Handbook provides for reimbursement when:

> Transfer of an employee from one official station to another for permanent duty, provided the transfer is in the interest of the Postal Service and not primarily for the. convenience or benefit "of the employee or at his request. . . (Section 414,1) (emphasis in original)

That is the nub of the matter insofar as the Travel Regulations are concerned. The movement of the employee must provide a benefit primarily to the Service and not to the individual employee . It must be initiated by the Service and not by the individual. In this case, the Grievants were reassigned to Boston not to benefit the Service. In fact, there was some unrebutted testimony that indicated the return to Boston was in a sense prematurely facilitated to meet the desires Of these employees rather than to meet existing staffing requirements -in Boston, If these Grievants had not exercised their retreat rights at the time the Postmaster would not have had to hire any new employees in the Boston Post Office to meet the workload or would he have had to convert part-time flexibles to regulars for this purpose.

The Union introduced a decision of the Comptroller General, 45 Comp. Gen . 674 (1966), which was issued to interpret rights arising under the 1966 collective bargaining agreement. Section B5(5) of Article XII of that Agreement provides for the same retreat rights found in Appendix A of the Agreement with which we are concerned and which is quoted in part above,

As to the retreat rights of employees, regarding reimbursement for relocation expenses, the Comptroller General held:

> The entitlement of an employee retransferring to his original installation to a payment of travel and relocation expenses would therefore arise only from an administrative determination that such transfer or relocation is in the interest of the Government and not by virtue of his request made pursuant to Section B5 e(5) of the National Agreement. . .
> Therefore, we will interpose no objection to the allowance of travel and relocation expenses in such circumstances when it is expressly administratively determined that such retransfers are solely or predominantly in the interest of the Government.

Here again, the benefit to the Government or the Postal Service is paramount in considering entitlement to the relocation allowance. Nothing in the testimony in this proceeding established any such benefit was provided by the exercise of such retreat rights under all the circumstances present when these Grievants did return to Boston after some fourteen months or so in Springfield.

Recognizing that the provisions of the Agreement, the M-9 Handbook and the Comptroller General Decision might not conclusively establish such a right to the relocation allowances they were requesting for these Grievants, the Union also argued that the Postmaster in Boston had promised these employees that such allowances would be paid when they exercised such retreat rights. Such a contention was supported by the testimony of one Grievant who was not sure when such assurance had been given to the employees required to relocate and he only believed that it was the Postmaster who had so stated, The postmaster denied that he had made any such promise to pay expenses to Springfield and then back to Boston, The Postal Service produced a letter which was sent to all the Grievants prior to their departure from Boston to Springfield. In that letter, contrary to the testimony offered by the Union, the Grievants were informed:

> As you are voluntarily requesting reassignment back to the Boston Post Office, you will not be eligible for any travel or transportation expenses and applicable allowances as provided for in Chapter IV, Series M-9, Methods Handbook.

The Union offered no evidence that the receipt of this statement, directly contradictory to the promise allegedly made to the Grievants by the Postmaster prompted any response or protest from any of the Grievants or their Union representative when the letter was received or thereafter if the meeting at which the Postmaster ostensibly made such a promise occurred after the letter was received.

For the reasons set forth above, it cannot be found that the Union was able to furnish sufficient evidence to credit the argument that the Postal Service should be estopped from opposing payments as requested in this grievance.

Since for the reasons also set forth above, I cannot conclude that the exercise of retreat rights under the provisions of Section 1.C.5.b(6) of the National Agreement then in effect can be considered part and parcel of an involuntary reassignment which originally gave rise to the right to a relocation allowance, under Section 1.B.5 of Appendix A, the grievance filed in this case must be dismissed.

AWARD

The grievance filed in Case No. MC-N-1386, by letter dated June 23, 1977, is hereby denied.

A mail handler bargaining unit employee is not eligible for severance pay when he/she is involuntarily reassigned, per Article 12, outside his/her commuting area and chooses not to accept reassignment.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

BACKGROUND

E11M-1E-C 14375279
J11M-1J-C 14310985

The United States Postal Service (Postal Service) and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (Union) consolidated two Step 4 appeals in cases in which the Postal Service reassigned mail handlers more than sixty miles away from their prior work locations pursuant to Article 12 of the parties' 2011 National Agreement. The stipulated issue is whether a bargaining unit employee is eligible for severance pay when he/she is involuntarily reassigned, per Article 12, outside his/her commuting area and chooses not to accept reassignment.

The reassignments at issue were processed under Article 12.6 of the National Agreement. Article 12 contains no reference to severance pay. Article 6 which applies to layoff and reduction in force (RIF) provides in Section 6.6.A:

> Severance Pay
> Employees who are separated because of a layoff or reduction in force shall be entitled to severance pay in accordance with Part 435 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual.

Article 6.3.D also provides that before implementation of reassignment under Article 6 or layoff and RIF:

> ...the Employer shall solicit volunteers from among employees in the same craft within the installation to terminate their employment with the Employer. Employees who elect to terminate their employment will receive a lump sum severance payment in the amount provided by Part 435 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual, will receive benefit coverage to the extent provided by such Manual, and, if eligible, will be given the early retirement benefits provided by Section 8336(d)(2) of Title 5, United States Code and the regulations implementing that statute.

ELM Section 435, as in effect at the time the two mail handlers at issue were reassigned under Article 12, provides as follows:

435 Severance Pay

435.1 Eligibility and Qualifying Job Offer

435.11 Eligibility

A career Postal Service employee is eligible for severance pay if the following applies:

a. The employee is involuntarily separated.

b. Immediately before the separation, the Postal Service, another federal agency, or both continuously employed the employee for at least 12 consecutive months without a break in service of three or more consecutive days.

A career Postal Service employee is not eligible for severance pay in the following circumstances:

a. The employee is entitled to an immediate retirement annuity from a federal civilian retirement system or from the uniformed services.

Note: If the employee becomes eligible for a retirement annuity after being involuntarily separated, his or her eligibility for severance pay ends on the date he or she becomes eligible for the annuity and the employee will not receive any additional severance pay after that date. The employee does not reimburse the Postal Service for any severance pay received before that date.

b. Within the 60-day period before the employee's separation, the employee receives and declines to accept a written qualifying job offer, as defined in 435.12.

c. The employee is administratively separated because, following entry into military service, he or she has become ineligible for reemployment under USERRA (see 365.37).

d. The employee is separated for cause on charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency.

e. At the time of separation, the employee is receiving compensation as a beneficiary of the Federal Employees Compensation Act, except when the employee is receiving this compensation:

(1) Concurrently with Postal Service pay, or

(2) Because of someone else's death.

435.12 Qualifying Job Offer

For the purposes of 435.1, a job offer is considered qualifying if the following conditions are met:

a. The offer is made in writing;

b. The employee is qualified for the position offered; and

c. The position offered is:

(1) In the Postal Service or another federal agency;

(2) Within the employee's local commuting area, unless geographic mobility is a condition of employment;

(3) In the same work schedule (i.e., either a full-time or part-time schedule) regardless of whether the employee is scheduled to work fewer hours in the position offered than he or she works in his or her current position;

(4) Of like tenure (i.e., the expected duration of the employee's appointment);

(5) Of like seniority, for bargaining positions only; and

(6) Of comparable pay, as defined below:

(a) The position offered is "of comparable pay" if it is in the same grade or pay level as the employee's current position.

(b) For positions in different pay schedules, the position offered is "of comparable pay" if the maximum salary range for the position offered is the same as or exceeds the maximum salary range for the employee's current position.

(c) Whether a position is "of comparable pay" is determined without regard to the employee's eligibility for saved grade or pay in either the position offered or the employee's current position.

In the first case, the Postal Service reassigned mail handler Chris Maurer from Rockford, Illinois, to Palatine, Illinois, a distance of over 60 miles. This reassignment under Article 12 took place because the Postal Service was centralizing mail processing from one location to another. After Mr. Maurer did not report for work in Palatine, the Postal Service proposed his removal on November 7, 2014, and issued a letter of decision on March 10, 2015, sustaining his removal for failure to report as scheduled, failure to follow instructions, and absence without leave ("AWOL"). Maurer, who was listed as preference eligible on his PS Form 50, remained on the Postal Service's rolls (in an unpaid status) while he grieved the matter until he took a voluntary early retirement, effective January 31, 2018. It is the position of the Postal Service that this retirement was not an involuntary separation.

In the second case, the Postal Service reassigned mail handler Joan Spiering from Norfolk, Nebraska, to Omaha, Nebraska, a distance of over 100 miles. This reassignment also occurred because the Postal Service was centralizing mail processing work. Spiering also did not report for work in her new duty assignment, and the Postal Service removed her, effective December 4, 2016, for AWOL. It is the position of the Postal Service that this was a separation for cause.

UNION POSITION

The Union argues the history and consistent interpretation of the Postal Service's policies and the National Agreement show that mail handlers who cannot or choose not to move with an involuntary reassignment outside their commuting area are eligible for severance pay. The Union explains that the Postal Service's modern history of severance pay began in the 1960s when Congress adopted a new federal statute to govern federal and postal compensation prior to collective bargaining. The initial law was enacted in the Federal Employees Salary Act of 1965, Pub. Law 89-301 (codified at 5 U.S.C. § 5595), which provided that "[a]n officer or employee to whom this section applies who is involuntary separated from the service, ... not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency, shall ... be paid severance pay" unless the employee is receiving workers' compensation or is eligible for an immediate retirement annuity. These provisions were re-codified in 1967, by Public Law 90-83, which stated in Section 5595(b):

> Under regulations prescribed by the President or such officer or agency as he may designate, an employee who-
> (1) has been employed currently for a continuous period of at least 12 months; and
>
> (2) is involuntarily separated from the service, not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency;
> is entitled to be paid severance pay in regular pay periods by the agency from which separated.

The meaning of the somewhat complex statutory provisions, the Union maintains, was made clear when regulations were adopted by the Civil Service Commission (CSC) in 1968 in 5 CFR, Section 550.705, entitled "Failure to accompany activity":

> The separation of an employee by an agency when the employee declines to accompany his position when it is moved to another commuting area because of a transfer function is deemed to be involuntary separation not by removal for cause on charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency for purposes of entitlement to severance pay.

The Union asserts that when the Postal Service was a federal executive agency and a regular component of the Federal Government it was obligated to provide severance pay to employees who were involuntarily separated because their jobs were moved outside their commuting area and they declined to accompany the position. The Union states that this common understanding was confirmed by administrative decisions issued in the years following adoption of these statutory and regulatory directives from 1965 through 1968. The Union cites three Comptroller General decisions which indicate that employees who do not follow reassignments outside the relevant commuting area are entitled to severance pay.[1] The Union points out that publications by the Post Office Department prior to creation of the Postal Service in the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 echoed the Federal Government's policy on severance pay. In particular, this was spelled out in the 1970 Postal Operations Manual which preceded creation of the Postal Service.

In 1978, the Postal Service published its first version of the ELM, in which entitlement to severance pay was included in Section 435, wherein the Postal Service added references to other federal employment, as follows:

> Any career USPS employee who is involuntarily separated and who has been employed continuously by the USPS and/or other federal agency for at least 12 consecutive months (without a break in service of three or more consecutive days) immediately prior to the separation is eligible for severance pay, except in the following circumstances:
>
> b. At the time of separation the employee is offered and declines to accept a position in the USPS or in any other federal agency of like seniority, tenure, and pay within the same commuting area.

In May 1999, the Union notes, the Postal Service issued an edition of Publication 164 -- Qs and As on Compensation, Relocation Benefits, and Reinstatement Policies for Career Employees,[2] which states, in addressing severance pay, "if you are involuntarily separated from the Postal Service because you do not accept a directed reassignment outside your commuting area or due to a reduction in force, you may be entitled to severance pay or a discontinued service annuity." In the May 2001 Pub. 164, the Postal Service included the following paragraph:

> Bargaining Employees. If you are a bargaining employee, you may be entitled to severance pay or a discontinued service annuity, if you receive an involuntary reassignment under the terms of your collective bargaining agreement to a position outside your commuting area and you elect to do either of the following:
> (1) Voluntarily resign prior to the effective date of your involuntary reassignment.

---

[2] The Union acknowledges as stated in Pub. 164: "This Brochure is NOT an official U.S. Postal Service directive....It should not be used or cited as an official source document."

(2) Decline the involuntary assignment and you receive an involuntary separation notice from the Postal Service.

The Union stresses that an "involuntary reassignment" occurs under the NPMHU National Agreement only under Article 12. Similar statements appear in versions of Pub. 164 issued in 2003.

The Union also highlights a memorandum dated March 1, 2000, that was sent from Susan M. LaChance, then Manager for Selection, Evaluation, and Recognition, to Area Human Resource Managers, and copied to -- among others -- Area Managers of Labor Relations and Peter Sgro, who in 2000 was serving as the USPS Manager for Contract Administration with the NPMHU. The LaChance Memorandum directly dealt with closing of remote encoding centers whose employees were represented by the APWU, but the contractual references are identical in the NPMHU National Agreement. The LaChance Memorandum stated that, "[i]n accordance with the current labor agreement," the Postal Service has "a contractual obligation under the provisions of Article 12 to reassign career bargaining unit employees impacted by...closings to other postal positions. While our goal is to minimize the disruptive impact that such reassignments may have on our employees by reassigning them to positions within their commuting area and with the same tenure (i.e., full-time to full-time), in some cases, such assignments may not be available." The LaChance Memorandum then states:

> Therefore, when a career bargaining unit employee declines, in writing, an involuntary reassignment that...is outside the employee's commuting area, he/she shall be afforded the option of being involuntarily separated from the Postal Service and, if otherwise eligible, receive severance pay or a discontinued service annuity. In addition, the employee also has the option of voluntarily resigning, in writing, prior to the effective date of their involuntary separation and, once again, if otherwise eligible, receiving severance pay or a discontinued service annuity.

The LaChance Memorandum was accompanied by an attachment to be sent to employees, which stated:

> You have received a letter involuntarily reassigning you to a new position outside your commuting area.... If you do not report as scheduled you may be subject to disciplinary action, including removal from the U.S. Postal Service. You should advise the manager who signed your involuntary reassignment letter whether you intend to accept the involuntary reassignment or wish to decline the assignment and discuss the other alternatives that may be available to you....
>
> An involuntary reassignment to a position outside your commuting area...is not considered a reasonable offer for severance pay and discontinued service retirement purposes. Since your involuntary reassignment meets one of these conditions, you may be eligible for one or more of the following alternatives:
>
> SEVERANCE PAY:
> A career employee who is involuntarily separated or resigns prior to the effective date of the involuntary separation for reasons other than cause, charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency may be entitled to severance pay....

According to the Union, the LaChance Memorandum and its attachments confirmed the longstanding meaning of the federal statute and regulations from the 1960s, the Postal Operations Manual from 1970, and Section 435 of the ELM since its initial dissemination in April 1978, and was consistent with the language that the Postal Service used to describe an employee's right to severance pay upon involuntary reassignments under Article 12 in various versions of its Pub. 164 until at least 2008. The Union further notes that when Congress enacted the Postal Accountability and Enhancement Act (PAEA) of 2006, the Postal Service submitted a required "Network Plan" which confirmed the applicability of its "Severance Pay Provisions."

The Union argues that the Postal Service's attempt to reinterpret ELM Section 435 beginning in 2008 may not be unilaterally imposed on mail handlers or other bargaining unit employees. In its June 2008 version of Pub. 164, the Postal Service changed the language on eligibility for severance pay for bargaining employees to state that severance pay was available "If you receive an involuntarily [sic] separation due to a layoff or reduction-in-force under the terms of Article 6 of your collective bargaining agreement," but that "[b]argaining employees impacted by involuntary reassignments outside of their local commuting area under Article 12 of their collective bargaining agreement... are not entitled to severance pay." The Union did not see this revised Pub. 164 before it was issued, but points out that the Postal Service acknowledges this publication is not a contractually binding provision.

In a February 9, 2010 letter to the Union, the Postal Service clarified its position on severance pay and said that mail handlers who are "involuntarily reassigned or excessed" are not entitled to severance pay. The Postal Service supported its position with two arguments based on ELM 435 in effect at that time: (1) that a mail handler who "voluntarily resigns his/her employment or fails to report as scheduled to his/her new duty station" after reassignment resulting from an Article 12 excessing action "has been offered and has declined a position in the Postal Service"; and (2) that a mail handler who does not report for duty as scheduled will be charged with AWOL and removed for cause. The Union asserts that both arguments were based on alternative readings of the "exceptions" language in ELM 435.[3] Notably, there was no claim that severance pay was not available for Article 12 reassignments.

On March 8, 2010, the Union filed a National-level grievance at Step 4, arguing that mail handlers involuntarily reassigned outside their commuting area under Article 12 are entitled to severance pay. The parties engaged in discussions but ultimately the Postal Service denied the grievance on August 4, 2011. The Union did not appeal, but instead waited for one or more denials of severance pay to work their way up through the grievance procedure. Subsequently, in June 2015, the Postal Service issued a revised Issue 45 of the ELM, notifying

[3] ELM 435 at that time included the following "exceptions":

> b. At the time of separation, the employee is offered and declines to accept a position in the Postal Service or in any other federal agency of like seniority, tenure, and pay within the same commuting area.
>
> d. The employee is separated for cause on charges of misconduct, delinquency, or inefficiency.

the Unions that is was making changes in ELM 435 to provide "clarification of severance pay eligibility" and "clarification of qualifying job offer." The current Section 435 indicates that a career mail handler is eligible for severance pay if the employee is "involuntarily separated" unless the employee "receives and declines to accept a written qualifying job offer," which is specifically defined to include a position in the Postal Service that is "[w]ithin the employee's local commuting area." The Union asserts that it did not challenge the new ELM language because it believed that the language supported the Union's position on severance pay eligibility.

The Union asserts that the current version of ELM 435 initially refers to "involuntary separation," and this term relates back directly to the federal regulation issued by the CSC in 1968 and Post Office directives predating the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 which provided that an employee is involuntarily separated when he or she is moved outside the current commuting area. The Union stresses that the current definition of a "qualifying job offer" includes the requirement that the qualifying job must be "within the commuting area" and makes clear that an employee with a distant job offer from the Postal Service is eligible for severance pay.[4]

The Union asserts that none of the Postal Service's arguments attempting to explain why employees reassigned under Article 12 are ineligible for severance pay can withstand scrutiny. The Postal Service incorrectly argues that severance pay is only available under Article 6 of the National Agreement. Although severance pay is specifically mentioned in two subparagraphs of Article 6 and is not mentioned in Article 12, the Union contends that the absence of language about severance pay in Article 12 does not speak, one way or the other, to whether severance pay must be paid for involuntary reassignments. Moreover, the Union stresses that the language in ELM 435 refers to "involuntary separations" and "qualifying job offers," two terms that principally relate to reassignments under Article 12, not to layoffs or reductions in force under Article 6. The Union also insists that the Postal Service's payment of relocation expenses under Article 12 for the vast majority of employees who agree to relocate large distances does not foreclose payment of severance pay to the small number of employees who are forced to resign or be removed because their personal circumstances do not allow them to relocate.

[4] The Union notes that by placing "within the employee's local commuting area" into a new subsection of the regulation, ELM 435.12(c)(2), separate from the reference to "the Postal Service or another federal agency" which appears in the prior subsection, ELM 435.12(c)(1), the Postal Service has confirmed once again that the commuting area requirement applies to all USPS positions, as well as other federal positions, defeating the argument the Postal Service once presented about the commuting area language in ELM Section 435 only being applicable to federal agencies, and not to the Postal Service.

The Union disagrees with the Postal Service's reliance on this Arbitrator's 2017 decision in an APWU national arbitration decision, Case No. Q06C-4Q-C 08268987, (APWU VER Decision) which held that APWU-represented employees who choose to retire under a Voluntary Early Retirement (VER) program administered in conjunction with an Article 12 reassignment are not eligible for severance pay. The NPMHU does not disagree with the ruling in that decision, although it points out it did not intervene, and, therefore, is not bound by that ruling. While the decision in that case stressed that Article 12, unlike Article 6, does not include any reference to either early retirement or severance pay, the question presented here does not turn on Article 12; rather, this case asks whether the severance pay provision in ELM 435, based on its long and undisputed history from the 1960s through at least 2008, requires the Postal Service to provide severance pay to certain employees who are involuntarily reassigned outside their commuting area under Article 12.

Finally, the Union disagrees with the Postal Service's testimony that there have not been any bargaining unit employees that have received severance pay. It points out that USPS Manager Debra Mills who testified about this history of severance pay only has been in her managerial role since 2016, and only at USPS Headquarters since 2007. The Union argues that the supplemental exhibits it provided following the arbitration hearing in this case show that bargaining unit employees have been offered severance pay under ELM 435 on various occasions in connection with reassignments under Article 12 or comparable reassignment provisions found in other Postal agreements.

The Union requests that its grievance be sustained, and that the Arbitrator enter an award finding that, under Articles 12 and 19 of the National Agreement and ELM Section 435, which is incorporated in the National Agreement under Article 19, mail handlers who choose not to accept involuntary reassignments under Article 12 to a position outside their commuting area are involuntarily separated and eligible for severance pay.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that severance pay is a benefit available when it is conducting a layoff or reduction in force under Article 6, but not when it makes reassignments under Article 12. It stresses that there is no dispute that it complied with Article 12 when it reassigned mail handlers Maurer and Spiering under Article 12, and that it did not conduct a layoff or reduction in force under Article 6.

The Postal Service argues that the ELM does not provide for severance pay to either grievant in this case. The two requirements in ELM Section 435 that are relevant in this case are: (1) there must be an involuntary separation for an employee to be eligible for severance pay; and (2) that separation cannot be for cause. The Postal Service asserts that Spiering was ineligible because she was removed for cause, and Maurer was ineligible because he either voluntarily retired, and thus was not involuntarily separated, or was removed for cause.

The Postal Service insists that the Union is attempting to conflate provisions of two distinct contractual articles and receive an Article 6 benefit (severance pay) for an Article 12 action (reassignment). The Postal Service points to the 2017 AWPU VER Decision, which interprets identical language. In that case, this Arbitrator concluded that he had "no authority to extend the entitlement to severance pay under Article 6.B.4 to employees who take VER offered in connection with a reassignment effected under Article 12" and "no authority to read into Article 12 a right to severance pay if an employee takes a VER offered in conjunction with implementation of the reassignment procedure in Article 12" as "under the controlling terms of the National Agreement, the two procedures are separate and distinct."

The Postal Service contends that the Union's proffered interpretation of ELM Section 435 would eliminate a major disincentive for management to conduct a layoff or RIF. The Postal Service never has utilized Article 6 which, it asserts, is a benefit for both parties. By utilizing Article 12, the Postal Service avoids having to pay severance pay, which can cost up to one year of salary per employee, while bargaining unit employees are not laid off or separated because of a layoff/RIF.

The Postal Service also insists that the few instances documented by the Union after the hearing in which the Postal Service made severance payments to postal bargaining unit employees in conjunction with an Article 12 reassignment do not detract from the clear meaning of the National Agreement and ELM 435.[5] The Postal Service stresses that most of these payments were the result of distinct settlement agreements, and none of them detract from the clear language of the NPMHU National Agreement or ELM 435. Many involve a Postal Data Center bargaining unit that is represented by the APWU, but is not part of the National Agreement. The parties reached an agreement related to these employees when the Postal Data Center in New York, New York was closed which gave the employees three options, one of which involved severance pay. Those employees were entitled to severance pay by virtue of a one-time negotiated agreement wholly apart from the language of Articles 6 or 12 or the ELM. The Union also provided two arbitration awards related to reassignments following the closure of Remote Encoding Centers. Consistent with the 2000 LaChance Memorandum, local postal officials agreed severance pay could be available -- the dispute centered on how to define commuting area. Some bargaining members did receive severance pay, but the Postal Service stresses that those cases, while final and binding resolutions of grievances, were not national interpretive decisions. It respectfully submits that the results in those cases were incorrect.[6] [5] Those instances involved APWU employees, and the Postal Service points out that the APWU did not include these documents in its own 2017 case (APWU VER Decision) on eligibility for severance pay.

[6] The Postal Service makes a similar argument with respect to another Union exhibit which indicates severance pay was awarded in a reassignment case in an (unidentified) regional arbitration award which the Postal Service has been unable to locate.

The Postal Service points out that when the NPMHU previously raised the issue in this case in a national grievance it submitted in 2010 – that was not appealed to arbitration -- the Postal Service made clear its position that the 2000 LaChance Memorandum was mistaken in stating that clerks would be eligible for severance pay if they were reassigned outside their commuting area and declined to report to their new assignments. That advice might have been true if the Postal Service had been running an RIF under Article 6, but it was wrong as to bargaining unit employees because the Postal Service was only making Article 12 reassignments.[7]

FINDINGS

The issue in the 2017 APWU VER Decision, as stated therein, was:

> Whether the National Agreement requires the payment of severance pay when an employee accepts an offer of voluntary early retirement (VER) in conjunction with the Postal Service effecting a reassignment under Article 12, as it would if the offer was made in conjunction with a reassignment or, if necessary, layoff and reduction in force under Article 6.B.4.

There was no claim in that case that the employees the APWU asserted were entitled to severance pay were "involuntarily separated" from the Postal Service and no reliance on ELM 435 as such. The APWU in that case was seeking to have the provision in Article 6 which provided that employees who accept VER offered in connection with a layoff/RIF also receive severance pay apply to employees who accept VER in connection with a reassignment action under Article 12. Any comments in that Decision about Article 12 and eligibility for severance pay are limited to that context. The arguments made by NPMHU in this case were not raised by the APWU in that earlier case and were not relevant to the APWU's position.

[7] Postal Service witness Mills, who has been Manager of Strategic Complement Reassignment since 2016, noted that Manager LaChance was in a Human Resources, not Labor Relations, role, and that higher management took subsequent action to have that position report to Labor Relations to ensure contractual provisions were applied correctly to bargaining unit employees.

ELM 435 applies to all Postal employees, only some of whom are covered by a collective bargaining agreement.[8] The critical issue in this case is whether a mail handler who is reassigned under Article 12 of the NPMHU National Agreement to a location beyond his/her local commuting area – however defined -- and declines that reassignment is to be treated as "involuntarily separated" and not as having been "separated for cause" for purposes of ELM 435.

At the outset, it can be acknowledged that over the years the Postal Service has not been totally consistent and straightforward in setting forth its position regarding entitlement to severance pay in cases where bargaining unit employees are subject to reassignment under Article 12 or corresponding provisions. Nonetheless, the issue that has to be decided here is whether a mail handler bargaining unit employee contractually is eligible for severance pay under the controlling terms of the parties' National Agreement, including Article 19.

Editions of Pub. 164 issued between 1999 and 2008 and the 2000 LaChance Memorandum (which evidently was applied in some instances), while admissible as evidence of previous expressions/actions by the Postal Service on severance pay eligibility, are not contractually binding on the Postal Service in this case. The same is true regarding the two cited regional arbitration decisions – both of which relied on Pub. 164.[9] Moreover, whatever the particular arguments expressed by the Postal Service in response to the NPMHU's 2010 Step 4 grievance, its position that mail handlers who are "involuntarily reassigned or excessed" are not entitled to severance pay under ELM 435 -- which was not appealed to arbitration -- is consistent with its present position that severance pay is not available for Article 12 reassignments.

[8] Pub. 164 also addresses various groups of Postal employees, including those not covered by a collective bargaining agreement.

[9] The Union also cited two federal court cases which refer to options that included severance pay that were specially negotiated between the Postal Service and the APWU in specific Postal Data Center consolidations.

Provisions of the National Agreement, of course, are binding on the Postal Service. Under Article 19, this incorporates provisions of the ELM directly relating to wages, hours or working conditions of bargaining unit employees that are not in conflict with the National Agreement. This would include, to the extent otherwise applicable, the provisions of ELM 435.

Article 12 sets forth detailed provisions governing reassignment of mail handlers in a variety of contexts. Here, both employees at issue were reassigned due to centralized mail processing covered by Article 12.6.C6. Article 12, unlike Article 6, makes no provision for severance pay. It does not provide employees an option to decline a directed reassignment and to receive severance pay instead.

ELM 435 provides that employees who are "involuntarily separated" are eligible for severance pay, subject to specified exceptions. Those exceptions include employees who receive a written qualifying job offer as defined in 435.12 and employees who are separated for cause. Here, both employees were directed, pursuant to Article 12, to report to a new installation following centralization of mail processing affecting their existing positions. These directions were not job offers as such; they were involuntary reassignments. When the employees failed to report to their new assignments, they were terminated for cause.[10] Under ELM 435.11 an employee separated for cause is not eligible for severance pay. Thus, the question is whether under the National Agreement, including ELM 435 as incorporated under Article 19, the two employees had the right to decline their reassignment and be treated as having been involuntarily separated for reasons other than cause and to receive severance pay. Neither ELM 435 nor Article 12 includes such a provision. Given the detailed provisions of Article 12 that extensively deal with involuntary reassignment, including to locations beyond 50 miles and even beyond 100 miles without reference to local commuting area, and provide for relocation benefits, I am not persuaded that these employees contractually were entitled to severance pay under ELM 435, as is explicitly provided for in case of layoff/RIF governed by Article 6. In particular, on the present record, it has not been convincingly established that the substance of the regulation in 5 CFR, Section 550.705, entitled "Failure to accompany activity" -- adopted by the CSC in 1968, prior to creation of the Postal Service and negotiation of Article 12 -- applies to implementation of ELM 435 in the context of a directed reassignment of a mail handler in accordance with the procedures in Article 12.

[10] Mauer remained on the rolls in unpaid status after filing his grievance asserting a right to severance pay until he later took a voluntary early retirement. But for present purposes the issue is whether he had the option of declining his reassignment and receiving severance pay at that time.

The two employees at issue were reassigned pursuant to detailed negotiated provisions of Article 12 -- not given a job offer of the sort contemplated in ELM 435.12. They were involuntarily separated for cause for failure to report to their new assignment. It has not been established that those employees had a contractual right to decline their reassignment under Article 12 and receive severance pay instead.

AWARD

A mail handler bargaining unit employee is not eligible for severance pay when he/she is involuntarily reassigned, per Article 12, outside his/her commuting area and chooses not to accept reassignment.

IN THE MATTER OF THE ARBITRATION BETWEEN:

AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION, AFL-CIO

-and-

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

USPS CASE NO. A-NAT-2341

OPINION AND AWARD

Appearances:

For the APWU, AFL-CIO - Thomas P. Powers, Esq.

For the USPS - Stephen E. Alpern, Esq.

Background:

Pursuant to the provisions of the 1971 National Agreement, the matter in dispute was jointly submitted to the undersigned for final and binding arbitration by letter dated March 16, 1973. Also by mutual agreement, a hearing was held on this matter on April 26, 1973, at which both parties were given full opportunity to present testimony, other evidence and argument in support of their respective contentions. This hearing was held at the Headquarters of the USPS in Washington, DC. After the close of the hearing, the parties submitted briefs. These were filed in timely fashion and the contents of same were also considered in arriving at the determination made below.

The Issue:

Most of the material facts in this case are not in dispute. On August 12, 1972, the Postal Service reassigned eight employees in the clerk craft to the Pottsville, Pennsylvania Post Office from various post offices in the area due to centralization of mail processing. On November 7, 1972, the Postal Service advised an officer of the APWU that six clerks would be excessed from Pottsville and reassigned to Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. On November 8, 1972, the local union in Pottsville was notified of the specific employees to be reassigned. On November 9, 1972, four of these employees filed grievances. These were not employees who had been transferred to Pottsville in August. They had already been employed at that Post Office when the employees were assigned there in August. These grievants claimed that the employees excessed into Pottsville in August should have been the first to be excessed out of Pottsville because they did not have seniority rights to remain in Pottsville for 180 days from August 12, 1972.

The issue is whether under Article XII, Section 2 of the Agreement the individuals reassigned to Pottsville in August were on the seniority list of that installation during the 180-day period for purposes of determining which employees were to be excessed and reassigned to Harrisburg.

Contentions:

The Union contended that the individuals excessed into Pottsville had no seniority rights in a reassignment situation vis-a-vis the other Pottsville employees and therefore they should have been excessed out to Harrisburg rather than the grievants.

The Postal Service maintained that the individuals reassigned to Pottsville could exercise their seniority rights for all purposes except bidding on preferred duty assignments within that installation for 180 days after such assignments were first made.

Contractual Provisions:

Article XII, Section 2 of the 1971 National Agreement reads, in pertinent part, as follows:

> "The parties agree to abide by the terms and conditions of Article XII (Reassignments)... as stated in the Agreement between the United States Post Office Department and the seven (7) national exclusive unions, contained in POD Publication 53...dated March 9, 1968..."

Article XII, of POD Publication 53, contains two provisions which the parties emphasized in their presentation:

Article XII-B-7:

> "Whenever changes in mail handling patterns are undertaken in an area including one or more postal installations with resultant successive reassignments of personnel from those installations to one or more central installations, such reassignments shall be treated as details for the first 180 days in order to prevent inequities in the seniority lists at the gaining installations. The 180 days is computed from the date of the first detail of an employee to the central consolidated or new installation in that specific planning program."

Article XII-C-7a:

> "When the operations at a centralized installation or other mail processing and/or delivery installation result in an excess of regular employees at another installation(s), regular employees who are excessed in a losing installation(s) by reason of the change, shall be reassigned as provided in section 5b, such reassignments shall be treated as details for the first 180 days to avoid inequities in the selection of preferred duty assignments by regular employees in the gaining installation."

Opinion:

The spokesman for the USPS contended that employees involuntarily reassigned as a result of Centralized Mail Processing, such as the eight employees reassigned to Pottsville in August, do not lose their seniority rights by virtue of the language in the above-cited provisions, they merely are prohibited for 180 days from exercising those seniority rights for bidding purposes. The spokesman for the Postal Service argued that the employees excessed into the gaining installation are reassigned as regular employees and the assignment is only treated as a detail for certain specific purposes. It was also argued that the 180 day period was placed in this provision to protect the employees coming into the installation and not the ones already there.

The spokesman for the APWU claimed that the provisions cited made clear that the employees sent into the gaining installation were treated as if on detail for 180 days. During that period of time, according to the APWU, the employees coming into the installation could not dislocate any of the regular employees already there. If another reassignment were necessary during the 180 day period, the newly arrived employees would have to be considered as if they were on detail and without seniority in the gaining installation. Being in that position, they would be the first to be reassigned out.

The operative language of Article XII-B-7 seems to lend support to the APWU contention. It states,"....such reassignments shall be treated as details for the first 180 days in order to prevent inequities in the seniority lists at the gaining installations." The only inequity that could be created in the seniority list at the gaining installation would be accomplished by dovetailing into that seniority list the newly gained employees. If they arrived with greater seniority than regulars already at the installa- any new bidding that occurred thereafter would disadvantage the employees who had been at the installation for a longer period of time.

Article XII-C-7a , which gives greater detail on special provisions governing reassignment, makes this even clearer. It provides,"...such reassignments shall be treated as details for the first 180 days to avoid inequities in the selection of preferred duty assignments by regular employees in the gaining installation." The 180-day period, from the date of the first reassignment into a gaining installation, is provided as protection from dislocation or loss of rights in bidding for the employees who were there before the 180 days began.

These provisions of the Agreement provide that,no matter how much seniority an employee may have had in the clerk craft,when that employee is reassigned into an installation as a result of his being excessed for stated reasons at his regular installation, he does not have any seniority rights for bidding at the gaining installation during that 180-day period. During that same period, the employees already at the gaining installation,before the 180-days began,are protected against inequities in the selection of preferred duty assignments against those who came later with greater seniority. The regular employees at the gaining installation are to have their seniority rights respected during that limited protection period. If he can bid for preferred duty assignments and has the right to such assignments over more senior employees who arrived later, the regular employee at the gaining installation also must have the right to remain at that installation when, during the 180-days, assignments to another installation are to be made.

In sum, if the employees reassigned to the gaining installation were to be treated as if they were on detail,they were to be treated as if they had no viable seniority rights at the gaining installation for the 180-day period. Without seniority rights to remain at that gaining installation, when the need for a further reassignment came about,these "detailed" employees should have been so reassigned. Article XII, Section II-B-3, also appears to most clearly reenforce that right of the incumbent. It provides,"No employee shall be allowed to displace or 'bump' another employee properly holding a position or duty assignment." The four clerks at the Pottsville Post Office who grieved on November 9, 1972 and who subsequently wrote those grievances up on November 12, 1972, were holding a position or duty assignment (emphasis added above in the quote from the Agreement by the writer) when they were displaced or "bumped" by the dovetailing of eight employees onto the seniority list at Pottsville during the 180-day period.

The witness from the Postal Service who testified concerning the force and effect of this provision argued that it did not apply in the case of a reduction in force. No place in the writing is that limitation on its applicability spelled out. For this reason that limitation cannot be applied to the clear language of this provision of the Agreement.

Award:

For the reasons stated above, the grievance must be sustained. The right of the four grievants to duty assignments at the Pottsville Post Office at the time they were reassigned to Harrisburg must be restored by reassigning them to their duty assignments at Pottsville with their seniority unimpaired at that installation, due to their incorrect reassignment.

LABOR RELATIONS

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

July 14, 2000

TO: AREA MANAGERS, LABOR RELATIONS

SUBJECT: Article 12 – Reassignment

We are in an environment where it is becoming more and more necessary to reassign employees in accordance with Article 12 due to various initiatives e.g., automation and BPI. This memorandum serves as a reminder of the USPS' position with respect to when light and/or limited duty employees are part of the complement mix subject to Article 12 reassignment.

As stated in a June 11, 1990, correspondence from Joe Mahon to the APWU, management's interpretation of Article 12 of the contract is that when excessing occurs in a craft, either within the installation or to another installation, the sole criteria for selecting the employees to be excessed is seniority. Whether or not a member of the affected craft is recovering from either an on- or off-the-job injury would have no bearing on his/her being excessed

In the case of other craft employees who are temporarily assigned to the craft undergoing the excessing, they would have to be returned to their respective crafts. This is in accordance with the provisions of Article 13, Section 4.C., which reads:

> "The reassignment of a full-time regular or part-time flexible employee to a temporary or permanent light duty or other assignment shall not be made to the detriment of any full-time regular on a scheduled assignment or give a reassigned part-time flexible preference over other part-time flexible employees."

Also, remember that Section 546.221 of the ELM states:

> "Collective bargaining agreement provisions for filling job vacancies and giving promotions and provisions relating to retreat rights due to reassignment must be complied with before an offer of reemployment or reassignment is made to a current or former postal employee on the OWCP rolls for more than 1 year."

Please ensure that we are in compliance with the above interpretation when applying Article 12 in the above circumstance.

Dear Mr. Thompson:

Recently, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the meaning of the "within 100 mile" limit in Article 12.

After discussion, we agreed to settle this grievance as follows:

> The 100 mile criteria identified in Article 12, (e.g. 12.5.C.1.b, 12.5.C.1.d, 12.5.C.1.f, 12.5.C.5.b.(1), and 12.5.C.5.b.(1)(b) is measured as the shortest actual driving distance between installations.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

BACKGROUND Q16N-4Q-C 18427350

The NALC initiated this national level grievance on September 20, 2018. The parties basically agree on the issue in dispute. The NALC states the issue as: Whether employees from other crafts in pay grades equivalent to the former City Carrier Grade 1 (CC-1) may be reassigned under Article 12 of the National Agreement to the Letter Carrier craft? The NALC contends the answer to this question is "No." The Postal Service states the issue as: Whether the MOU Re: Pay Schedule Consolidation from the parties' 2016-2019 National Agreement impacts cross-craft assignments under Article 12? The Postal Service contends the answer to this question is "No." The APWU and the NPMHU each intervened in this case in support of the Postal Service's position.

The procedures of Article 12 -- included in each of the three Unions' National Agreement -- are the principal means by which bargaining unit employees excess to the needs of their section, craft or installation are reassigned within the Postal Service. Although the provisions of Article 12 generally favor reassigning employees within the same craft, the Postal Service may reassign employees to a different craft in order to enable employees to stay within their local areas. Under Article 12, cross-craft assignments must be to a position "at the same or lower level." [1]

The Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) includes an Equivalent Grades Chart (ELM Chart) which identifies pay systems and grades that are considered to be on the same level for a variety of pay purposes.

[1] Through 1978, the APWU, NALC and NPMHU bargained jointly with the Postal Service and their members were covered by a single National Agreement. Thereafter, the Mail Handlers split off and bargained separately. Later the APWU and the NALC also ceased to bargain jointly. Cross-craft assignments were provided for in Article 12 of the 1978 Agreement. The National Agreements of the three Unions each contain a similar MOU -- the "Bridge Memo" -- which (as included in the NALC's National Agreement) states in relevant part:

> Re: Article 7, 12 and 13 - Cross Craft and Office Size
> A. It is understood by the parties that in applying the provisions of Articles 7, 12 and 13 of this Agreement, cross craft assignments of employees, on both a temporary and permanent basis, shall continue as they were made among the six crafts [four covered by the APWU Agreement] under the 1978 National Agreement.

Historically, since at least 1907, Clerks and Carriers were ranked at the same level and received the same pay. The NALC, alleging a substantial change in Carrier work, sought an upgrade in 1994 negotiations, the first where it negotiated separately from the APWU, but an upgrade was not granted by the interest arbitration panel chaired by Arthur Stark.

The NALC renewed its upgrade proposal in 1998 national negotiations. By the time those negotiations reached interest arbitration before a panel chaired by George Fleischli, collective bargaining agreements with the APWU and Mail Handlers Union already had been reached. The NALC again justified its upgrade proposal based on various changes to job duties brought about by increased automation of the mail prior to its being presented to the carrier. The Postal Service countered that the changes did not have the significance to warrant an upgrade, but also stressed the importance of adhering to the history between the parties and the wage pattern that had been set in the voluntary agreements with the other unions. The Postal Service expressed great concern that granting the NALC an upgrade would have "a potentially disruptive effect" on collective bargaining and "discourage voluntary agreements," while encouraging competitive union negotiations rather than pattern agreements. Arbitrator Fleischli, while not disregarding those concerns, nevertheless concluded that the upgrade was justified based on the impact of automation and other changes on the job duties of the City Carriers. This upgrade was granted in addition to, and not in lieu of, the general wage increase awarded for that year.

The NALC and the Postal Service agreed to the following contractual language regarding this upgrade:

> Effective November 18, 2000, all Grade 5 employees covered by this Agreement will be upgraded to Grade 6, and the existing carrier technician differential will be maintained, in accordance with the [Fleischli] Arbitration Award issued September 19, 1999.

The parties further agreed to establish new City Carrier Grades 1 and 2. The previously Postal Service (PS) Grade 5 Carriers were placed in the new CC-1 Grade in the same step they previously held in Grade 5. The Carrier Technicians were placed in the new CC-2 Grade. After implementation of the upgrade provided for in the Fleischli Award, the ELM Chart was revised in 2003 to reflect an equivalency between CC-1 and PS-6 and CC-2 and PS-7.[2]

Following implementation of the upgrade provided for in the Fleishli Award, PS-5 Clerks (the bulk of the craft) no longer were eligible for reassignment to Carrier positions. The APWU sought an upgrade for its employees to restore the parity in 2000 negotiations with the Postal Service. Those negotiations concluded in interest arbitration before a panel chaired by Stephen Goldberg. While the APWU did not achieve a general upgrade for its employees, it was awarded upgrades to certain selected positions. The National Agreement resulting from the Goldberg Award was extended by the parties for two years in 2003 and for an additional year in 2005. Both extensions included an MOU for a limited number of additional positions to be upgraded.

In 2006 national negotiations, the APWU again sought and successfully bargained a general upgrade for all positions. As a result, PS-5 Clerks were upgraded to PS-6 Clerks and, as such, became eligible for reassignment to CC-1 Carrier positions.

In negotiations for the 2016-2019 National Agreement, the NALC and the Postal Service agreed to an MOU (the MOU) which, in relevant part, provides:

> Re: Pay Schedule Consolidation
>
> The parties hereby agree that effective November 24, 2018, all city carrier pay schedules will consolidate existing grade levels into a single grade, as follows:
>
> Grade 1 career city carriers in RSC Q and RSC Q7 will slot to the equivalent step in Grade 2 of their respective pay schedule, and retain time-in-step credit. The remaining grade level will be classified as "City Carrier."
>
> Grade 1 CCAs in RSC Q4 and RSC Q5 will slot to the equivalent step in Grade 2 of their respective pay schedule, and retain time-in-step credit. The remaining grade level will be classified as "City Carrier Assistant."

[2] The ELM Chart has remained unchanged since 2003.

Carrier Technician Pay

Carrier Technicians (Occupation Code 2310-2010) and CCA Carrier Technicians (Occupation Codes 2310-0047 and 2310-0048) will receive additional compensation equivalent to 2.1% of the employee's applicable hourly rate for all paid hours. This additional compensation will be considered basic pay for all purposes of determining benefits or additional compensation....

The 2.1% additional compensation received by Carrier Technicians was based on the average differential between the former CC-1 pay and the City Carrier (former CC-2) pay to be received by the former CC-1 Carriers under the MOU.

Although both parties rely on the wording of the MOU as clearly supporting their respective positions in this case, each also presented testimony related to the bargaining that resulted in this MOU in further support of their positions.

Doug Tulino has been Vice President of Labor Relations for the Postal Service since 2005. He was the Postal Service's chief negotiator in the 2016 NALC negotiations. He testified that he had ongoing discussions during the negotiations with his NALC counterpart, President Fred Rolando. Tulino stated that at the outset of negotiations the NALC made clear that one of its important objectives was to achieve an upgrade for Carriers. Tulino stated that they had many discussions and he was clear that the Postal Service was not going to agree to an upgrade. This was because, as he said he told Rolando: "...we have a long sordid history with the upgrade in our collective bargaining process, and it wasn't something that I wanted to set as a pattern for the rest of the negotiations process with the other unions."

Tulino continued that, in an effort to find a way to meet the Union's demand for an upgrade, the conversation shifted to the compensation portion of what an upgrade would provide. Tulino explained that he was willing to consider that, provided the Postal Service got the necessary quid pro quo from the Union. Tulino said that is what happened and resulted in the MOU. The consolidation of pay scales provided for in the MOU was the mechanism used to provide the Union with the objective they had to get the money to their employees.

Tulino stressed that there never was any discussion about an upgrade being justified because of any change in job duties, skill levels, or other factors that might merit a higher level. There also never was any discussion between him and Rolando or other Union representatives regarding the MOU having any impact on cross-craft excessing.

Joe Alexandrovich served as Manager of Collective Bargaining and Arbitration for five years prior to his retirement from the Postal Service in March 2018. At Tulino's request, he drafted the key relevant provisions in the first three paragraphs of the MOU. He pointed out that the MOU does not use the term "upgrade" because this was not an upgrade. He added that if they had done an upgrade they would have called it that and the CC-1 Carriers would have become CC-2, and the CC-2 Technician Carriers would have become CC-3.

Fred Rolando has been President of the NALC for some ten years and was the Union's chief negotiator in the 2016 negotiations. He noted that bargaining occurred over a 15-month period. He said he made it clear from the beginning that "due to the nature of our work and some of the other give and take that was going on in the negotiations" the Union felt the Carriers deserved an upgrade. According to Rolando, Tulino made it clear he was "fine with the upgrade," but had two conditions. The first was that he did not want to call it an "upgrade" because he did not want to be in a position to give all the other unions upgrades. Tulino also for some reason did not want to create a CC Grade 3 for Technician Carriers. Rolando said he was agreeable as long as the CC Grade 1s became CC Grade 2 Carriers. Rolando stated that the Postal Service came up with the term "Pay Schedule Consolidation" and giving the Technician Carriers a pay differential.

Rolando agreed that he and Tulino did not discuss the effects of an upgrade on Article 12. Rolando added: "I think we were both aware of the past and the history." Rolando stated that the NALC's understanding after the negotiations were completed was that the impact on Article 12 would be the same as when the Carriers received a previous upgrade in the 1999 Fleischli Award. Rolando noted that the NALC did not learn that the Postal Service had a different understanding until it received a letter dated September 6, 2018 from the Postal Service, stating:

> This letter is in reference to the implementation of the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) Re: Pay Schedule Consolidation found in the 2016-2019 National Agreement.
>
> Pursuant to the terms of the MOU, Rate Schedule Codes (RSC) Q, Q4, and Q7 will consolidate into one grade. The pay rates in this grade will be equivalent to the Grade 2 pay rates in effect as of November 24, 2018.
>
> City Carriers (Occupation Code 2310-2009) and City Carrier Assistants (CCA) (Occupation Codes 2310-0045 and 2310-0046) wil be placed into the equivalent step in the consolidated grade and will retain time-in-step credit.
>
> Carrier Technicians (Occupation Code 2310-2010) and City Carrier Assistant Technicians (Occupation Codes 2310-0047 and 2310-0048) will be placed into the equivalent step in the consolidated grade and will retain time-in-step credit. For all paid hours, these employees will receive additional compensation equivalent to 2.1% of their hourly rate.
>
> To accommodate these changes in our internal systems, the personnel records of City Carriers and CCAs will continue to reflect they are a "Grade 01" employee, and the personnel records of Carrier Technicians and CCA Technicians will continue to reflect they are a "Grade 02" employee.
>
> Upon the effective date of the MOU, all employees in the city letter carrier craft will receive a new PS Form 50, Notice of Personnel Action, with Nature of Action (NOA) Code 997, "Contractual Increase," which will indicate the employee's new salary.
>
> Implementation of the MOU Re: Pay Schedule Consolidation will not impact any provisions of the National Agreement, including, but not limited to, Articles 6, 12, and 41 and handbooks/manuals that are incorporated into the National Agreement through Article 19, except as described above.

NALC POSITION

The NALC insists that employees in PS Grade 6 positions no longer are eligible to be excessed into the Letter Carrier craft. Article 12 prohibits excessing employees across craft lines to higher level positions. It is undisputed that prior to implementation of the MOU on November 24, 2018, determination of pay level equivalencies for purposes of cross-craft reassignments had been determined by reference to the ELM Equivalent Grades Chart. That chart provides that Grade 1 in the City Carriers pay schedule is equivalent to PS Grade 6, and Grade 2 in the City Carriers pay schedule is equivalent to PS Grade 7. The consolidation of City Carrier pay schedule that was implemented on November 24, 2018 eliminated City Carrier Grade 1. The MOU provides that "Grade 1 career city carriers in RSC Q and RSC Q7 will slot to the equivalent step in Grade 2 of their respective pay schedule." Grade 1 carriers were upgraded to Grade 2. Grade 2 Technicians remained in Grade 2. The consequences of this change for Article 12, the NALC asserts, are unambiguous. PS Grade 7 employees remain eligible for reassignment to any position in the Letter Carrier craft, but for employees in PS Grade 6 any reassignment to the Letter Carrier craft would constitute excessing to a higher level, which is prohibited by Article 12. This result is the only outcome that harmonizes the plain language of Article 12, the ELM Chart and the MOU.

The NALC contends that relevant precedent also supports the NALC's position. The basic premise of the Postal Service's position is that the pay schedule consolidation was fundamentally different from previous upgrades. In fact, the NALC asserts, it was exactly the same. When the NALC pay upgrade granted in the 1999 Fleischli Award was implemented on November 18, 2000, all PS Grade 5 Letter Carriers were upgraded to a new NALC Grade 1, which was the same as PS Grade 6. The parties used a step-to-step upgrade procedure by which employees were placed in the new CC Grade 1 in the same step they previously held in PS Grade 5. For Grade 1 Letter Carriers, the implementation of the pay schedule consolidation in 2019 was identical to the implementation of the Fleischli upgrade. The only difference was that the pay schedule consolidation did not result in a new higher grade for the Carrier Technicians. That difference is not an issue in this case.

The NALC also argues that the 2018 consolidation cannot be dismissed as "merely a pay rate increase" without any other repercussions. Bargaining history undercuts this argument. The 2008 APWU upgrade clearly was a substitute for a pattern general increase. The 2006-2010 APWU National Agreement provided for only two general increases over the four-year agreement, effective November 25, 2006 and November 21, 2009. There was no general increase in the three years between. Instead, the parties provided for a one-pay-level upgrade, effective February 16, 2008. Following this APWU upgrade, the Postal Service once again was entitled under Article 12 to reassign former Grade 5 Clerks into the Letter Carrier craft. Those clerks were now in Grade 6 which was the equivalent of City Carrier Grade 1 on the ELM Chart. Although it could have done so, the NALC did not argue that there had been no recognized changes in the Clerk position so that the upgrade was simply a disguised pattern pay increase.

Similarly, the NALC asserts, the drafting precedent shows there is no significance to the MOU's changing the name "City Grade Carrier 2" to "City Carrier." After the Fleischli Award, which upgraded PS 5 and 6 Letter Carriers to Grades 6 and 7, the parties agreed to rename the Letter Carrier grades "CC-1" and "CC-2." Notwithstanding the name change, these grades were understood to be equivalent to PS Grades 6 and 7 for purposes of Article 12. In sum, the NALC argues, in 2000 and 2008 all that mattered for Article 12 purposes was that employees were moved to the higher pay grade. That is all that should matter here.

The NALC further rejects the Postal Service's contention that the bargaining history of the MOU supports management's position. On the contrary, such history supports the NALC's position. There is no dispute that in negotiating the MOU the parties never discussed Article 12 or excessing. The MOU, which notably was drafted by the Postal Service, contained no language allowing PS Grade 6 employees to be excessed into the Letter Carrier positions following the pay schedule consolidation. Insofar as Article 12 prohibits the cross-craft excessing of employees to higher level positions, it was the Postal Service's responsibility to incorporate appropriate language allowing such excessing, if that is what it wanted to do. The NALC's position is based on the plain meaning of the contract language.

The NALC maintains that the record also does not support the assertion of the Postal Service and APWU that eliminating Letter Carrier vacancies as "landing spots" for excess Clerks would have "profound implications" for postal operations and would be "devastating to the clerk craft." The record shows that 11,589 Level 6 Clerk positions were eliminated over the five-year period from 2014 to 2018. Yet, only 98 Clerks were excessed into the Carrier craft during those five years -- 0.8 percent of the positions eliminated.

Finally, the NALC notes, a long line of national arbitration precedent clearly establishes that the present interpretive dispute must be resolved within the four corners of the NALC National Agreement.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that the language of the MOU demonstrates that the parties did not agree to an upgrade or otherwise intend to impact cross-craft assignments under Article 12. Initially, the Postal Service notes, the title of the MOU is "Pay Schedule Consolidation." The term "upgrade" is not used in the title or anywhere else in the MOU. This is in stark contrast to other MOUs or contract language providing for an upgrade, all of which use the term "upgrade" or "upgrades" in the title or section heading. The use of another term in this MOU is a clear indication the parties agreed to something different from an upgrade. The plain meaning of "pay schedule consolidation" is not upgrade.

The Postal Service asserts that the first paragraph of the MOU reinforces the point that its purpose is to "consolidate existing grade levels into a single grade, as follows." Therefore, what "follows" in the MOU has to be understood in the context of the MOU's purpose to consolidate existing grade levels. By its terms, the language in the second paragraph, relied on by the NALC, merely describes how the new consolidated pay schedule is to be established. The intent of the MOU was to consolidate the schedules in a way that provided for an increase equivalent to what an upgrade would provide. There is nothing in the MOU that would remotely suggest it was intended to have any consequences outside the issue of pay.

The Postal Service points out that it never had agreed to a "pay schedule consolidation" before; nor is there any other example of a bargaining unit pay system where two positions are in the same grade, but are making different salaries.

The MOU, the Postal Service stresses, literally says nothing about an upgrade. The Postal Service insists this was purposeful and demonstrates that the parties' agreement did not include an upgrade. The NALC expressly sought a general upgrade, but failed to achieve that and settled instead for a pay schedule consolidation.

The Postal Service argues that the bargaining history of the MOU also demonstrates that the parties did not agree to an upgrade or otherwise intend to impact cross-craft assignments under Article 12. Postal Service Vice President Tulino explicitly and unequivocally testified that when NALC President Rolando brought up the issue of an upgrade, Tulino told him that an upgrade was not something he could consider, explaining that it would complicate negotiations with other unions and set a pattern that he was unwilling to set. The discussion then turned to whether the NALC, even if it could not be granted an upgrade, could receive a comparable pay increase. That was a possibility Tulino could consider, assuming other concessions and trade-offs rendered an overall deal satisfactory. Not only is Tulino's account of his response to the NALC's upgrade request plausible, the Postal Service insists, it is precisely what one would expect based on the Postal Service's collective bargaining history. The upgrading of carriers in the Fleischli Award sparked a subsequent interest arbitration and series of negotiations focused in large measure on the upgrade issue. This era ended with the 2006 APWU National Agreement which granted the APWU a general upgrade. Since that time, all has been quiet on the upgrade front. It is inconceivable that Tulino would have agreed to restart a new era of one-upmanship, leapfrogging and competitive, rather than pattern bargaining. President Rolando must have, or at least should have, understood that the concern of avoiding complications with the other unions could only be satisfied by not agreeing to an upgrade.

Understanding the MOU as a pay raise rather than as an upgrade, the Postal Service contends, also is consistent with how both parties treated the MOU as part of the overall economic provisions of the new NALC National Agreement. Unlike the upgrade in the Fleischli Award, the pay raise provided in the MOU was in lieu of, not in addition to, a general increase for that year. Because of other concessions in the overall agreement, this increase was within the established pattern with the other unions. Moreover, there is no suggestion whatsoever that the MOU was based on any understanding of changed job duties or responsibilities, as was the upgrade in the Fleischli Award.

The Postal Service emphasizes there is no dispute that the parties did not discuss any issues concerning the MOU having an impact on cross-craft assignments or any other collateral impact that a general upgrade might have. As such, there clearly was no agreement or meeting of the minds to affect that issue. While the Postal Service submits that the evidence supports the conclusion that both parties knew that the MOU was a pay raise and not an upgrade, the evidence is virtually undisputed that at least the Postal Service had no thought that the MOU would impact cross-craft assignments. In such circumstances, the plain meaning of the language must control, and the plain meaning of "pay schedule consolidation" is far from "upgrade."

The Postal Service further points out that technological changes, mail volume declines, and changes in the mix of mail all have contributed to major reorganizations, consolidations, and complement reductions throughout the Postal Service. The impact of these factors has fallen disproportionately on the APWU, and especially the Clerk craft. The ability to make cross-craft reassignments is one of the most important tools within Article 12's reassignment process to find jobs for excessed employees and to do so in keeping with the fundamental goal and obligation of keeping dislocation and disruption to a minimum. It is not reasonable or even plausible that the Postal Service and the NALC came to an agreement to severely limit cross-craft reassignments into the Carrier craft when there is no mention of such in the text of the agreement. Such a conclusion would be all the more astonishing when both parties concur that there was no discussion of the topic at any point in bargaining. This issue, the Postal Service stresses, has far too much significance, implicates the rights of too many other unions, adversely affects too many employees, and has had too complicated a history to suggest that this is what the parties meant to do with no word of discussion.

INTERVENOR APWU POSITION

The APWU, which intervened in this case in support of the Postal Service's position, maintains that the MOU does not change the right of PS 6 Clerks to reassignment into formerly Grade 1 City Carrier positions under the APWU National Agreement. Both the NALC and the Postal Service agree they never discussed, negotiated or settled on an understanding, implied or explicit, that the MOU and pay raise for Grade 1 Carriers to the Grade 2 pay rate would bar PS 6 Clerks from reassignment to the former Grade 1 positions. Changing the long standing rule about the Carrier positions available for cross-craft reassignment of PS 6 Clerks has to be consciously made and explicitly stated and has to include the APWU. The record is bare of any evidence that the MOU explicitly, implicitly or in its application, was expected or intended by both parties to change the right of PS 6 Clerks to be reassigned to Grade 1 City Carrier positions.

The APWU stresses that the NALC did not achieve an actual upgrade like the APWU accomplished in 2006. The NALC negotiated a pay raise, not an upgrade, and the word upgrade is nowhere to be found in the MOU. It is evident the parties did not use the term upgrade because it does have meaning -- a meaning the Postal Service did not intend. Moreover, nothing changed about the work or circumstances of the Grade 1 Carrier position that would seem to justify making them Grade 2.

The APWU insists the ELM Equivalent Grades Chart which predates the new consolidated Carrier pay scale does not show that comparable pay grades for pay rate purposes change with changes to the pay rates within those grades. Pay rates of the comparable Carrier and Clerk grades for more than a decade have not been equal despite the pay grades being identified as equivalent on the ELM Chart. Even if the arbitrator accepts the NALC's interpretation of the ELM Chart, that chart does not override the APWU National Agreement or the practice of equating PS 6 with the former CC 1 Grade, regardless of their specific pay rates and regardless of raises that change those rates.

The APWU believes that preventing the reassignment of its bargaining unit employees to the Carrier positions that have for years been available to them requires intent and agreement on the part of at least three parties (the Postal Service, the APWU and the NALC), if not four (the Mail Handlers). Otherwise, the APWU argues, there is a conflict with the fundamental principle that one union's entitlements and obligations cannot be changed through the bilateral agreements of other unions with the Postal Service.

Finally, the APWU stresses, the issues and disputes the NALC's position have and will give rise to are sobering. As the APWU identified, future arbitrations will have to grapple with a host of substantive challenges about reassignments. The APWU poses these questions:

> Does Article 12 protect only a bargaining unit employee's opportunity to be reassigned to a position in another craft at the same or lower level or is it also a limit on which employees can come into a craft? What does "same or lower level" mean in the collective bargaining agreement, does it mean the same thing in all of the unions' contracts, and which contract is operative? As noted earlier, what does "equivalent" mean in the ELM Equivalent Grades Chart and how does the Postal Service properly interpret or change the chart in accordance with Article 19 in the APWU National Agreement? And...does the Bridge Memo prohibit the Postal Service from unilaterally or bilaterally changing reassignment rules (either losing or gaining) that impact another union's Article 12?

These questions and the overall impact of the NALC's position, the APWU argues, favor prudence against changing cross-craft reassignments, especially in the absence of language and intent to do so.

INTERVENOR NPMHU POSITION

The NPMHU, which intervened in this case in support of the Postal Service's position, sees the question posed by this arbitration -- whether the MOU between the Postal Service and the NALC changed the manner in which employees from other crafts are eligible for cross-craft reassignments -- as being of the utmost importance to the unions, their respective members and to the Postal Service. The importance of this issue is best exemplified by the Bridge Memo which continues to be part of each union's separate national agreement. The Bridge Memo prohibits any one union and the Postal Service from bilaterally agreeing to change the application and meaning of Article 12 from how it existed under the 1978 National Agreement when the three national postal unions were covered by the same collective bargaining agreement. The Mail Handlers also point to the 1999 Fleischli Award -- which granted an upgrade to the City Letter Carriers -- in which Fleischli explained that such changes should occur only "when necessary to address proven inequity."

In this case, the NPMHU insists, there is no evidence of "proven inequity" to justify an upgrade. Consistent with Vice President Tulino's testimony that the NALC did not justify the request for an upgrade on any change in job duties, Tulino testified not only that he expressly told NALC President Rolando that the Postal Service would not "entertain an upgrade," but also that, in drafting the MOU, the Postal Service "crafted" the language so that it could not be an upgrade because of the implications that had for the Postal Service on bargaining with other postal unions.

In sum, the Mail Handlers argue, given what Fleischli described as the "destructive effect" of upgrades, particularly the impact on what positions would be eligible for cross-craft reassignments, a party desiring to alter the historic relationships between the parties has a heavy standard to meet and a high bar to overcome. Where, as in this case, there is a complete absence of any justification for the upgrade; the drafted language in the MOU does not even reference a change in the relative comparison of positions between bargaining units; and there is clear testimony from Tulino regarding the specific discussions he had with Rolando on this very topic, it must be concluded that the NALC has failed to meet its burden or the heavy standard that properly must be applied in this case.

FINDINGS

This grievance was filed by the NALC seeking an interpretation of the NALC's National Agreement with the Postal Service. The Postal Service and the intervenor Unions agree that only the NALC National Agreement is at issue in this case, although cross-craft assignments occur under provisions of Article 12 that are found in all three National Agreements and that are subject to the Bridge Memo.

The MOU at issue is part of the 2016-2019 NALC National Agreement. There is no question that the MOU provided for an increase in compensation for NALC members, who evidently did not otherwise receive pay raises in that contract. Pay rates for employees in different crafts whose grades have been designated as equivalent have and do vary depending on negotiations or interest arbitration awards.

In contrast to prior agreements or awards providing for an upgrade, the MOU does not include any use of the term "upgrade." It is titled "Pay Schedule Consolidation," and states at the outset the parties' agreement that "all city carrier pay schedules will consolidate existing grade levels into a single grade" and then provides how that is to be accomplished, including:

> Grade 1 career city carriers in RSC Q and RSC Q7 will slot to the equivalent step in Grade 2 of their respective pay schedule, and retain time-in-step credit. The remaining grade level will be classified as "City Carrier."

The record in this case indicates this is the first occasion on which the Postal Service has agreed to or utilized a pay schedule consolidation. The language of the MOU is not so clear as to preclude consideration of its bargaining history, particularly in the context of past upgrades, in an effort to determine the meaning of the parties' agreement as it relates to the issue in this case.

The testimony of Postal Service Vice President Tulino and NALC President Rolando, the principal negotiators, is fairly close. The NALC sought an upgrade for Carriers.

That was an important bargaining goal for the Union. The Postal Service, however, made it clear it could not agree to an upgrade as such, explaining that would trigger demands from other unions to obtain an upgrade. There was no reference to or discussion of Article 12 excessing, withholding of positions or cross-craft assignments, but, as Rolando indicated, it is reasonable to conclude that both of them were "aware of the past and the history."

There is some difference in the testimony of the two principals. Tulino insisted he told Rolando that the Postal Service was not going to agree to an upgrade and explained why not. Rolando testified that Tulino was "fine with the upgrade," but did not want to call it an "upgrade" because Tulino did not want to be in position to give all the unions upgrades.

There is no question that the MOU provided Carriers with the increased compensation they would have received if granted an upgrade. This additional compensation was in lieu of the pay increases negotiated with other unions. Indeed, it was greater, but the Postal Service's assertion that the difference was "paid for" (quid pro quo) by other concessions agreed to by the NALC was uncontradicted.

In these circumstances, it would not have been reasonable for the NALC to assume that the Postal Service chose for the first time to structure and agree to the "pay schedule consolidation" set forth in the MOU, instead of agreeing to a traditional upgrade, simply to avoid using the word "upgrade," but with the intent, for Article 12 purposes, to elevate the relative level of CC-1 Carriers, whose grade level was consolidated in the new City Carrier grade level, above that of positions in other crafts that then were at the equivalent level. This is particularly so given that there is no evidence that the duties, responsibilities and/or working conditions of the CC-1 Carrier positions had changed significantly, or that the NALC alleged such changes in negotiations. Past experience, as both parties were aware, indicated that when one craft got an "upgrade" -- as the NALC did in the 1999 Fleischli Award -- that immediately triggered demands by other crafts to regain parity.[3] [3] Prior to the Fleischli Award, Carriers were PS Grade 5, as were the bulk of APWU Clerks. As the result of the Fleischli Award, Carriers were upgraded to PS Grade 6 (Technician Carriers continued to receive an additional differential payment). It followed that PS-5 Clerks no longer were at the same level as PS-6 Carriers and no longer could be excessed into Carrier positions.

The fact that the "pay schedule consolidation" ultimately agreed to in the MOU was a new concept proposed by the Postal Service in response to the NALC's demand for an upgrade and the absence of any use of the term "upgrade" in the MOU -- in the context of the discussions between Tulino and Rolando and the past history of Postal upgrades -- surely alerted, or should have alerted, the NALC that the Postal Service understood that by agreeing to the MOU it was not agreeing to change the relative level of Carriers in relation to positions in other crafts. Otherwise, there would have been no apparent reason not to just agree to upgrade CC-1 Carriers to CC-2 and CC-2 Technician Carriers to CC-3.

Given the NALC's knowledge of the Postal Service's concerns, and the NALC's agreement in the MOU to a pay schedule consolidation, which purposely was not delineated as an upgrade, without any discussion of the MOU having an impact on Article 12 excessing or cross-craft assignments, the evidence as a whole supports a finding that the parties' understanding memorialized in the MOU is that it does not have such an effect.

Accordingly, I conclude that (i) the NALC's stated issue should be answered in the affirmative with respect to newly designated City Carrier positions that formerly were CC-1 positions, and (ii) the Postal Service's stated issue should be answered in the negative.

(Thereafter the NALC and the Postal Service agreed to CC-1 and CC-2 positions that were slotted into the ELM Chart as equivalent to PS-6 and PS-7.) In the next round of negotiations, the APWU sought an upgrade for its crafts. It did not achieve an upgrade for PS-5 Clerks in the interest arbitration that concluded those negotiations, but in the next round of negotiations the APWU successfully bargained an upgrade that returned those Clerks to the same level (PS-6) as the CC-1 Carriers as part of an overall compensation package comparable to that achieved by the other Unions.

AWARD

The Postal Service's position in this case is affirmed as set forth in the above Findings.

Class Action
North Reading, MA 01889-7060

Dear John:

Our representatives met, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether bidding is restricted to sectional bidding as per article 12.6C4 after changing off days.

The parties agree that when it is necessary that fixed scheduled day(s) of work in the basic work week for a craft assignment be permanently changed, including during periods of excessing to the needs of a section, the affected assignment(s) shall be reposted for all employees eligible to bid within the installation.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Accordingly, we agree to remand this case to Step 3 for discussion and possible resolution as to the appropriate remedy or regional level arbitration in keeping with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this grievance to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) allows the Employer discretion in separating casuals to the extent that the discretion is exercised in a manner consistent with this report and decision. Based on evidence presented to the arbitrator in this case, the Unions are not entitled to a nationwide remedy. It is ordered and awarded.

NATIONAL ARBITRATION PANEL

IN THE MATTER OF ARBITRATION BETWEEN UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE AND AMERICAN POSTAL WORKERS UNION WITH NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS (as Intervenor) (Grievance: Separating Casuals) (Case No.: HOC-NA-C 12)	)	ANALYSIS AND AWARD Carlton J. Snow Arbitrator

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from November 21, 1990 through November 20, 1994. Hearings took place on March 14 and June 7, 2000 in a conference room of the North Building of the United States Postal Service Headquarters located at L'Enfante Plaza in Washington, D.C.

The hearings proceeded in an orderly manner. The parties had a full opportunity to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. Ms. Lisa Sirard and Mr. Peter K. Shonerd of Diversified Reporting Services, Inc. tape-recorded the proceedings and submitted a transcript of 371 pages. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties.

Prior to hearings on the merits, the Employer challenged the procedural and substantive arbitrability of the disputes; and the arbitrator on November 24, 1999 issued an award finding the matter to be procedurally and substantively arbitrable. Consequently, the matter proceeded to hearings on the merit. The parties elected to submit the matter on the basis of evidence presented at the hearings as well as post-hearing briefs, and the arbitrator officially closed the hearing on February 26, 2001 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

Does Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) of the agreement between the American Postal Workers Union and the Employer grant the Employer discretion in separating casuals when doing so will minimize the impact on the regular workforce? If there has been a contractual violation, what is an appropriate remedy?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 12 - PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENT

Section 5.C.5. Reduction in the Number of Employees in an Installation Other Than by Attrition

a. Reassignments within installation. When for any reason an installation must reduce the number of employees more rapidly than is possible by normal attrition, that installation:

(2) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular workforce employees by separation of all casuals.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Union argued that the Employer is permitting widespread violations of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) to occur nationwide and that such continuing violations can be prevented by a national level arbitration decision. The dispute between the parties has deep roots. In 1991, Mr. William Burrus, APWU Executive Vice-president, discovered that the APWU's interpretation of language in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) of the agreement between the APWU and the Employer was not in sync with management's interpretation and application of the labor contract. Consequently, he initiated discussions with Ms. Sherry Cagnoli, Assistant Postmaster General in the Labor Relations Department. On November 6, 1991, they began a correspondence about the matter in an effort to clarify the correct interpretation of the disputed provision.

The dispute went through years of discussions and negotiation. Ultimately, it became a formal grievance which the Employer rejected. When the parties were unable to resolve their differences, the matter proceeded to arbitration.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The Unions

The American Postal Workers Union (and the National Association of Letter Carriers as Intervenor) argue that, although the Employer now says it agrees with the Unions' interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2), widespread violations of the provision continue to occur throughout the nation. Accordingly, the Unions maintain that they are entitled to have the parties' stipulated understanding of the disputed contractual provision set forth in a national level arbitration award. Such a decision, then, can be used as a benchmark to adjudicate all pending grievances as well as continuing violations and future disputes. Hence, the Unions seek such a national award in this matter.

B. The Employer

The Employer argues that the Unions are not entitled to an interpretive award in this case because the parties do not disagree about the correct interpretation of the disputed contractual provision. The Employer argues that, when the APWU realized the Employer incorrectly understood the nature of the problem at Step 4, the Union had an obligation to clarify its understanding of the labor contract. The APWU's failure to do so allegedly foreclosed its right to appeal to arbitration under Article 15.3.D of the labor contract.

The Employer also argues that the arbitrator is without authority to act in this matter because the Union is no longer seeking an interpretation of disputed contractual language. It is the belief of the Employer that the APWU, with the agreement of the NALC, is asking that the arbitrator rewrite negotiated language of the labor contract. Since such language allegedly is not the subject of dispute and does not constitute an interpretive issue, the parties' collective bargaining agreement does not authorize the arbitrator to act. Hence, the Employer urges that the grievance be denied.

VI. ANALYSIS

A. Context of the Dispute

The dispute before the arbitrator centers on Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). It states:

> When for any reason an installation must reduce the number of employees more rapidly than is possible by normal attrition, that installation:
> (2) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular workforce employees by separation of all casuals. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 52, emphasis added.)

The crux of the dispute revolves around the words "to the extent possible." The Unions argue that this language modifies the phrase "minimize the impact on regular workforce employees." According to the Unions' theory of the case, the Employer is left with no discretion when separating casual employees if such separation minimizes the impact on the regular workforce. On the other hand, the Employer believes that management retains discretion with regard to separating casuals if they are not separated due to operational requirements. Such reasoning led the Unions to conclude the Employer was arguing that the language "to the extent possible" modified the phrase "by separation of all casuals."

On the initial theory that the arbitrator was without jurisdictional authority, the Employer contested the procedural and substantive arbitrability of the dispute; and hearings on this matter were held on July 13 and September 1, 1999. On November 24, 1999, the arbitrator concluded that there was a contractual basis for proceeding to the merits of the case.

At hearings on the merits, the Employer stated for the first time that it agreed with the Union's interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) of the APWU's National Agreement. The parties agreed the language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) means:

> All casuals must be removed if it will eliminate the impact on regular workforce employees. The Employer must eliminate all casual employees to the extent that it will minimize the impact on the regular workforce.

With the ambiguity of the disputed language clarified, the Employer reasoned that the grievance was moot and immediately should be dismissed on the merits by the arbitrator. The Unions, on the other hand, argued that the Employer could not avoid an adverse decision by merely conceding the Unions' interpretation of the issue on the merits. The Unions continued to see a need for a decision on the merits because of the fact that the Employer allegedly has not uniformly applied this new interpretation of the agreement for the last eight years. The Employer insisted, however, that management always has applied the stipulated interpretation in its reassignment of excess regular workforce employees nationwide and that it merely was confused over the years about the Unions' position in the matter.

B. Revisiting Arbitrability

At the hearings on the merits of the case, the Employer, in effect, once again raised issues with regard to the procedural arbitrability of the dispute. The Employer argued once again that it had not been given proper notice with regard to the fundamental issue in dispute and that, therefore, the grievance should be dismissed. Additionally, the Employer argued at the hearings on the merits that the Union did not comply with its obligation under the APWU-USPS agreement to clarify the disputed issue and to attempt to resolve the conflict at the lowest possible level. Those arguments constituted renewed challenges to the procedural arbitrability of the dispute.

The parties devoted two hearings exclusively to the issue of jurisdictional challenges to the arbitrator's authority in this matter. During the earlier hearings, the Employer had every opportunity to present evidence and raise arguments, and in fact did so, in an effort to forestall an examination of the dispute on the merits. After receiving considerable evidence with regard to jurisdictional challenges and issuing an extensive report on threshold issues, the arbitrator decided in 1999 that the matter was both procedurally and substantively arbitrable. The initial award authorized the parties to proceed to the merits of the case. Since the precise issue of procedural arbitrability has been fully addressed, arguments now raised by the Employer with regard to jurisdictional challenges are precluded by the doctrine of res judicata; and the earlier jurisdictional award must be followed both because it has precedential value and also assures continuity of interpretation. It is binding on this arbitrator and the parties in an absolute sense.

C. A Need for a Decision on the Merits?

Alternatively, the Employer asserted the concept of mootness. According to the Employer, the dispute before the arbitrator is now moot because there no longer exists any controversy between the parties about the appropriate interpretation of the disputed provision in the APWU agreement. In the Employer's view, all the parties now agree with regard to the meaning of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). The Employer reasoned that, because management stipulated to the Unions' interpretation of the contractual language under review, the controversy is now moot; and the arbitrator is without any authority to issue a decision on the merits. Such a theory of the case, however, failed to be persuasive.

Arbitral authority under a grievance procedure devolves from a contract between parties. All an arbitrator is empowered to do is read and interpret words of an agreement. As Professor Theodore St. Antoine, past-president of the National Academy of Arbitrators, observed, "The arbitrator is the parties' officially designated 'reader' of the contract." (See 30 NAA 30 (1977).) This proposition means that an arbitrator must be subservient to no party but servant of all.

Article 15.1 of the APWU-USPS agreement states that a "grievance" is a disagreement "which involves the interpretation, application of or compliance with the provisions of this agreement." (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 75.) Article 15.3.D states that:

> In the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the Step 4 level by the President of the Union. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 81.)

Article 15.4.D further limits national level arbitration proceedings to "only cases involving interpretive issues" of the parties' negotiated agreement. (See Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 87.)

The Union has pursued this dispute since 1991. During the ensuing decade, there have been numerous attempts to reach a negotiated settlement; but such efforts never came to fruition. Whether their inability to reach agreement with regard to the disputed language was caused by a misunderstanding of the issue or was due to shifts in the Employer's position is unclear from the evidence. What is clear, however, is that representatives of the parties have authority to settle disputes in accordance with Article 15 guidelines.

The fact that the parties did not settle the dispute during the last ten years indicates the existence of some level of a continuing dispute, if only abstractly. It matters little whether the parties were unable to resolve the conflict because they do not entirely agree on the meaning of the language, its application, or the Unions' entitlement to a remedy for alleged violations of the agreement. The fact that the parties were unable to enter into a settlement agreement shows the existence of a substantial dispute. Article 15 of the APWU-USPS agreement as well as authority inherent in NALC's status as an intervenor empower the arbitrator to resolve contractual disputes inherent in the issues submitted to him. The point is that the Employer's current lack of disagreement with the Unions' contractual interpretation does not trigger the concept of mootness because there remain disputes regarding whether the Employer has applied the disputed provision in accordance with the stipulated agreement.

D. A Nationwide Interpretation?

The parties agreed that Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) means:

> All casuals have to be removed if it will minimize the impact on regular workforce employees. The Employer must eliminate all the casuals to the extent that it will minimize the impact on the regular workforce.

Despite presently agreeing on the interpretation of the disputed provision, the parties continue to disagree with regard to whether the Employer consistently acted in accordance with this interpretation when applying the contractual provision. The Employer insisted that the provision has been and is being applied in accordance with the parties' negotiated intent.

Mr. Brian Gillespie, the Employer's Executive Program Director of the Pacific Area, testified about 1973 contract negotiations when the parties first discussed excessing issues. He recalled the APWU proposed changes to the National Agreement that included language requiring all casuals to be completely separated from the employee complement before any regular workforce employee could be reassigned. But the Union was unsuccessful in getting such a commitment codified into the National Agreement. The parties, however, agreed to four principles that were drafted into Section 4 of Article 12 in the agreement. They intended for the four principles to overarch the rest of Article 12.

As someone present at the main negotiation table in 1973, Mr. Gillespie offered the following observation about his work on Article 12:

> I think the language commits the Postal Service to look at its workforce and separate a casual if by doing that it will eliminate the need to reassign the full-time employee, because by and large we're only talking reassignments of full-time people. If it doesn't do that, if it doesn't eliminate it, if it merely defers it or doesn't really mitigate it, the Postal Service is entitled to keep the casual. (See Tr., June 7, 2000, 68.)

Later in 1975 the Employer issued a Regional Instruction on the subject of reassigning excess craft employees. Although it went out under the signatures of several Postmasters General, Mr. Gillespie actually drafted the Instruction. It explained the Employer's understanding of its obligations under Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). The Employer further codified its understanding in a publication entitled "Reference and Training Guide for Article 12: Reassignment Principles and Requirements," (See Employer's Exhibit No. 1.) Mr. Gillespie insisted that postal officials at Headquarters consistently required managers to follow the policy as described in his testimony.

Mr. Robert Brenker, Headquarters Field Labor Relations Specialist, concurred with Mr. Gillespie's description of the policy and its application. He testified as follows:

> It has been continuously the same policy [as described by Vice-president Burrus] that if we can reduce casuals and save someone from being excessed, we would do it. If we can reduce them [casuals] and create full-time assignments, eight within nine or eight within 10 five days a week, we would do it. (See Tr. March 14, 2000, pp. 78-79.)

According to Mr. Brenker, management enjoys administrative discretion if its decisions only defer a regular workforce separation; and, in such circumstances, the Employeer is not required to separate a casual employee. In other words, the Employer understands its obligation to be that of separating a casual worker if doing so will eliminate a need to reassign a regular workforce employee. But if separation of a casual employee will only defer the reassignment of a regular workforce employee, then the Employer maintains that it is not contractually obligated to separate the casual worker.

Ms. Eleanor Williams, Regional Labor Relations Specialist, also testified that managers have found no ambiguity in the meaning and application of the policy. She testified that the policy requires separation of casual employees if doing so prevents a reassignment of a regular workforce employee. She also stated that, before reassignments are made, the Union is issued an Impact Statement and given an opportunity to object. She insisted that it would be impossible, in view of the Impact Statements, for the Employer to violate Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) without the Unions' immediate knowledge. The parties agreed that Mr. Paul Driscoll, Headquarters Labor Relations Specialist, and Ms. Linda Schumate, Regional Labor Relations Specialist, would have testified in accordance with testimony from Mr. Brenker and Ms. Williams had they been called to do so.

E. A Dissenting Viewpoint

The Union vigorously challenged the Employer's claim of across-the-board conformity with the agreed interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) when excessing regular workforce employees. Mr. James Burke, APWU Eastern Region Coordinator, testified that, as recently as April of 2000, the Employer notified the Union it would excess 144 clerks at a Philadelphia, Pennsylvania installation. While the Employer's Impact Statement demonstrated an intent to excess this large number of regular workforce clerks, the number of clerk casuals, 182, was not being reduced. Additionally, the Union received written notice that 38 clerk positions were to be excessed from the South Jersey Processing and Distribution Center, as well as 465 clerks in the Allegheny area. Management told Union officials that there were no plans to eliminate any casuals from those facilities.

Mr. Leo Persails, APWU Central Region Coordinator, testified that, in April of 2000, management informed him of 78 clerk positions to be excessed from the Cincinnati Processing and Distribution Center. Yet, the Impact Statement indicated no change in the number of clerk casuals or any reduction in the number of clerk casual work hours. Although a March, 2000 Impact Statement covering the Columbus Processing and Distribution Center indicated that 54 clerks were to be excessed, there was no corresponding change in the number of clerk casuals or clerk casual work hours.

Mr. Terry Stapleton, APWU Southern Region Coordinator, testified about an Impact Statement concerning a reduction of regular workforce employees at the Houston Processing and Distribution Center.

This Impact Statement revealed that the number of casuals on the Employer's payroll remained the same as before management excessed regular workforce employees. Likewise, an Impact Statement from a Gulfport, Mississippi installation revealed that the number of casuals or casual hours were not being reduced, despite the fact that 19 regular workforce employees were scheduled to be excessed.

F. A Need for More Evidence

Testimony from the Union stood in stark contrast to the Employer's confident assertion of nationwide compliance with the agreed interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). Yet, the Unions' evidence raised suspicions regarding how the Employer is applying the disputed contractual provision. But it did no more than raise suspicions. The Unions had the affirmative of the issue and needed to show by at least a preponderance of the evidence that there is a direct causal connection between the conflicting data and a violation of the parties' labor contract. Facts are stubborn things and must provide the basis for an interpretive decision. Speculation will not suffice. While the evidence in this case was sufficient to raise suspicions, the Unions did not present evidence that demonstrated a specific contractual violation.

The arbitrator, for example, did not receive evidence that excessed regular workforce positions could have been retained had the Employer eliminated casuals. The parties agreed that the Employer was only obligated to separate casual workers if doing so would yield sufficient hours for a regular workforce clerk, that is, eight hours within nine or ten hours, five days a week. While the Union presented overwhelming evidence suggesting that regular workforce clerks are being separated without a corresponding reduction in casual clerks, the arbitrator received no clearcut evidence demonstrating that the retained casual hours could have resulted in the required configuration and, thus, would have required separation of the casuals in accordance with the parties' mutual interpretation of Article 12. Such evidence is needed not only to establish a contractual violation but also to ascertain damages, if a nationwide remedy were to be fashioned.

The totality of the record submitted to the arbitrator was not sufficient to establish that, while there now is uniformity in the parties' understanding of the disputed provisions, it was violated in this particular case. Nor was there sufficient evidence of harm to ascertain damages.

These are factual issues to be addressed on a case-by-case basis. It also must be established on a case-by-case basis whether or not the Unions should have been on notice of any previous contract violations.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) allows the Employer discretion in separating casuals to the extent that the discretion is exercised in a manner consistent with this report and decision. Based on evidence presented to the arbitrator in this case, the Unions are not entitled to a nationwide remedy. It is ordered and awarded.

Award Summary

The provision in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) for "separation of all casuals" applies to casuals in the affected or losing craft, and not to casuals in other crafts.

Shyam Das

Shyam Das, Arbitrator

At issue in this case is the meaning of the term "all casuals" in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) of the 1994-1998 National Agreement between the Postal Service and the National Association of Letter Carriers. The National Agreements of the American Postal Workers Union and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union contain the same contractual provision, and both of those Unions have intervened in this national arbitration proceeding.[1]

Sections 4 and 5 of Article 12 contain extensive provisions relating to the involuntary reassignment of employees for operational reasons. Relevant to this dispute are the following provisions:

>
> A. A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service. Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Section and the provisions of Section 5 below.
> B. When a major relocation of employees is planned in major metropolitan areas or due to the implementation of national postal mail networks, the Employer will apply this Article in the development of the relocation and reassignment plan. At least 90 days in advance of implementation of such plan, the Employer will meet with the Unions at the national level to fully advise the Unions how it intends to implement the plan. If the Unions believes such plan violates the National Agreement, the matter may be grieved.

Such plan shall include a meeting at the regional level in advance (as much as six months whenever possible) of the reassignments anticipated. The Employer will advise the Unions, based on the best estimates available at the time, of the anticipated impact; the numbers of employees affected by craft; the locations to which they will be reassigned; and, in the case of a new installation, the anticipated complement by hour and craft. The Unions will be periodically updated by the Region should any of the information change due to more current data being available.

C. When employees are excessed out of their installation, the Union at the national level may request a comparative work hour report of the losing installation 60 days after the excessing of such employees.

If a review of the report does not substantiate that business conditions warranted the action taken, such employees shall have their retreat rights activated. If the retreat right is denied, the employees have the right to the grievance-arbitration procedure.

D. In order to minimize the impact on employees in the regular work force, the Employer agrees to separate, to the extent possible, casual employees working in the affected craft and installation prior to excessing any regular employee in that craft out of the installation. The junior full-time employee who is being excessed has the option of reverting to part-time flexible status in his/her craft, or of being reassigned to the gaining installation.

Section 5. Reassignments

A. Basic Principles and Reassignments

When it is proposed to:

1. Discontinue an independent installation;

2. Consolidate an independent installation (i.e., discontinue the independent identity of an installation by making it part of another and continuing independent installation);

3. Transfer a classified station or classified branch to the jurisdiction of another installation or make an independent installation;

4. Reassign within an installation employees excess to the needs of a section of that installation;

5. Reduce the number of regular work force employees of an installation other than by attrition;

6. Centralized mail processing and/or delivery installation (Clerk Craft only);

7. Reassignment -- motor vehicles;

8. Reassignment -- part-time flexibles in excess of quota; such actions shall be subject to the following principles and requirements.

B. Principles and Requirements

1. Dislocation and inconvenience to full-time and part-time flexible employees shall be kept to the minimum consistent with the needs of the service.

* * *

C. Special Provisions on Reassignments

In addition to the general principles and requirements above specified, the following specific provisions are applicable:

* * *

5. Reduction in the Number of Employees in an Installation Other Than by Attrition

a. Reassignments within installation. When for any reason an installation must reduce the number of employees more rapidly than is possible by normal attrition, that installation:

(1) Shall determine by craft and occupational group the number of excess employees;

(2) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular work force employees by separation of all casuals;

(3) Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on full-time positions by reducing part-time flexible hours;

(4) Shall identify as excess the necessary number of junior full-time employees in the salary level, craft, and occupational group affected on an installation-wide basis within the installation; make reassignments of excess full-time employees who meet the minimum qualifications for vacant assignments in other crafts in the same installation; involuntarily reassign them (except as provided for letter carriers and special delivery messengers and vehicle service employees in Section C.5.b below) in the same or lower level with seniority, whichever is the lesser of:

(a) One day junior to the seniority of the junior full-time employee in the same level and craft or occupational group in the installation to which assigned, or

(b) The seniority the employee had in the craft from which reassigned. The 5-year rule does not apply.

* * *

> b. Reassignments to other installations after making reassignments within the installation:
>
> (1) Involuntarily reassign such excess full-time employees starting with the junior with their seniority for duty assignments to vacancies in the same or lower level in the same craft or occupational group in installations within 100 miles of the losing installation, or in more distant installations if after consultation with the affected Union it is determined that it is necessary, the Postal Service will designate such installations for the reassignment of excess full-time employees....
> (Emphasis added.)

As provided above, when an installation must reduce the number of employees more rapidly than is possible by normal attrition, Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) requires that the installation:

> Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular work force employees by separation of all casuals.
>
> (Emphasis added.)

The present grievance originally included a dispute as to the meaning of the words "to the extent possible" in this provision. That dispute was resolved in a national arbitration case involving an APWU grievance, in which the NALC intervened -- Case No. HOC-NA-C 12 (Snow 2001). In that case, the parties agreed the language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) means:

> All casuals must be removed if it will eliminate the impact on regular workforce employees. The Employer must eliminate all casual employees to the extent that it will minimize the impact on the regular workforce.[2]

The remaining dispute is whether the words "all casuals" means all casuals regardless of craft or Union, as the Unions maintain, or all casuals in the affected (or losing) craft, as the Postal Service contends.

The reassignment provisions in Section 5 of Article 12 originated in Article XII of the original collective bargaining agreements between the Post Office Department and the then existing postal Unions in the 1960s. The reassignment provisions in Article XII were set forth in two Sections. Section 1 covered all crafts except the clerk craft, which was covered by Section 2. Both Sections 1 and 2 included the same provision on separation of casuals in Paragraph C.5.a(2). This provision, as set forth in Article XII of the 1968-1970 Agreement -- the fourth such agreement -- stated that the installation:

> Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on career employees by separation of all temporaries; postal assistants, seasonal assistants, etc;

In 1971, following the Postal Reorganization Act, the Postal Service and the postal Unions agreed to a National Working Agreement. As part of this 1971-1973 Agreement, the parties agreed to adopt or carry forward a number of prior regulations and provisions of the 1968 Agreement without substantive change, including Article XII governing reassignments. The NALC and APWU each printed their own version of the 1971 Agreement, which included the language of Article XII of the 1968 Agreement, with some modifications. The applicable provision in the NALC and APWU printed versions read as follows:

> Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on full-time regular or part-time flexible employees by separation of all casuals, postal assistants, employees doing bargaining unit work and not in one of the bargaining units, etc.[3]

There was no agreement by the Postal Service to this particular wording of this provision.

[3] In the 1971 Agreement, casuals replaced temporaries.

In 1973, the Postal Service and the then four national Unions agreed to a collective bargaining agreement and jointly agreed to a printed version of that 1973-1975 Agreement. The 1973 Agreement contained an Appendix A whose preamble states:

> Appendix A is an incorporation of the principles of Reassignments as contained in Article XII of the March 9, 1968, National Agreement. The old Article XII has been edited to conform with the new employee classifications. In addition, other word changes have been incorporated to bring Article XII up to date with present terminology; however, there have been no substantive changes.

The applicable provision in Appendix A of the 1973 Agreement states that the installation:

> Shall, to the extent possible, minimize the impact on regular work force employees by separation of all casuals, postal assistants, seasonal assistants, etc.;

Article XII of the 1973 Agreement also included an entirely new Section 4 entitled: "Principles of Reassignments." Appendix A and Section 4 of Article XII of the 1973 Agreement were carried forward -- with some modifications not relevant here -- in the 1975-1978 Agreement.

In the 1978-1981 Agreement, the parties eliminated Appendix A and incorporated its provisions as Section 5 of Article XII.[4] The applicable provision in Section 5.C.5.a(2) eliminated the reference to "postal assistants, seasonal assistants, etc.," and reads exactly as it does in the 1994 Agreement at issue in this case.

The Postal Service presented as a witness Brian Gillespie, who retired from postal management in 2005. Gillespie testified that he was hired as a management intern in the Post Office Department in 1966. In 1969 he became a Labor Relations Specialist at headquarters, a position he continued in after Postal Reorganization in 1971. He developed expertise in seniority, posting and reassignment.

Gillespie testified that based on discussions with his superiors he understood that the reference to separation of "all temporaries..." in the applicable provision in Article XII of the 1968 Agreement was to all temporaries in the affected or losing craft. Gillespie stated that this was consistent with the manner in which the provisions relating to Reduction in the Number of Employees in an Installation Other Than by Attrition -- now in Article 12.5.C.5 -- were and are applied: management calculates the reduction in a particular craft in terms of work hours and applies 12.5.C.5.a(1) through (3) to determine the number of positions that are to be excessed from that craft, Article 12.5.C.5.a(4) then is applied to reassign the excess employees into vacant positions in other crafts, which typically have been withheld in anticipation of such excessing and temporarily filled by casual employees or expanded PTF hours.

[4] The 1978 Agreement also eliminated Sections 1 and 2, ending the separation of the clerk craft reassignment provisions from the provisions covering all other crafts.

Gillespie was the Postal Service's lead negotiator on reassignment issues in the 1973 negotiations. He explained that the Postal Service had embarked on a major initiative to create Bulk Mail Centers, which would result in significant reassignments within installations and to other installations, including the new BMCs. The Unions, he stated, raised concerns regarding their role in the planning process at the national level and as to whether some excessing might actually turn out to have been unnecessary. The Unions also proposed some changes to the existing reassignment provisions in Appendix A, including eliminating the phrase "to the extent possible" from the provision in issue relating to separation of casuals. Gillespie stated that the Postal Service would not agree to the Union's proposal, but he developed a concept paper to try to alleviate the Union's concerns. Gillespie said the substance of his concept paper ultimately was incorporated as the new Section 4 (Principles of Reassignment) in Article XII of the 1973 Agreement. Gillespie stated that the Postal Service told the Unions that these new provisions would overarch the existing reassignment provisions in Appendix A that had been carried over from the 1968 Agreement.

Included in Article XII, Section 4 of the 1973 Agreement was the provision now set forth in Article 12.4.D, which states:

> In order to minimize the impact on employees in the regular work force, the Employer agrees to separate, to the extent possible, casual employees working in the affected craft and installation prior to excessing any regular employee in that craft out of the installation....
>

Referring to the corresponding provision relating to separation of casuals in Paragraph C.5.a(2) of Sections 1 and 2 of Appendix A, which predated Postal Reorganization, Gillespie testified:

> ...that language had been interpreted and applied to be all of the temporaries or their successors, casuals, in the affected craft in that installation. That was the same language that we gave the Unions, the same concept in the concept paper, and it spoke to when we are excessing outside the facility to separate casuals in the affected craft, to the extent possible in the affected craft and installation.

Gillespie testified that most of the BMC reassignments occurred between 1973 and 1976. In accordance with Section 4 of Article XII, the Postal Service met with the Unions and provided its reassignment plans. Those plans, he said, specified only the separation of casuals in the affected craft. The Unions, he stated, did not object or claim that all casuals, not just those in the same craft, had to be separated pursuant to the provision in Appendix A now found in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2).

The APWU introduced as an exhibit a set of Regional Instructions on the reassignment of excess craft employees issued by postal headquarters in November 1975. This document refers to the contractual requirement to separate casual employees and reduce PTF hours, to the extent possible. The APWU stresses that this document does not state any limitation on which casuals are to be separated. Gillespie testified that he drafted this document, and that the reference to reducing casuals was to casuals in the affected craft, based on the provisions then found in Appendix A.

The Postal Service introduced as exhibits two letters sent to the Mail Handlers Union at the national level. In the first, dated December 1976, Assistant Postmaster General Gildea in Labor Relations responded to an inquiry from that Union regarding the use of the term "casual" in, for example, Section 1, Paragraph C.5.a(2) of Appendix A. Gildea stated the Postal Service's opinion that the provisions in Paragraph C.5 of Appendix A and Article XII, Paragraph D (presumably a reference to Section 4.D)

> ...must be read, and applied, as a whole, in determining how the employee complement will be reduced. In our opinion, these provisions provide that the procedures for reducing the number of employees within an installation will be applied on a craft by craft basis....

The second letter, dated September 1977, is a fourth step grievance response by General Manager Merrill in Labor Relations, which states:

> It is our position that the term "all casuals" as the term is written in Section 1, Paragraph C.5.a(2) of Appendix A does not infer that casuals of all crafts "to the extent possible," must be separated prior to excessing employees from a particular craft.
> The procedures outlined in Section 1, Paragraph C.5.a must be read and applied as a whole in determining how the employee complement will be reduced. In our opinion, these provisions provide that the procedures for reducing the number of employees within an installation are to be applied on a craft-by-craft basis.

The Postal Service also presented testimony from two witnesses, Managers Robert Brenker and Michael Mlarker, in support of its contention that historically, in applying the reassignment provisions in Article 12.5.C.5.a, the Postal Service, in determining the number of employees who must be excessed, minimizes the impact on the regular workforce by separating casuals in the affected craft. Similarly, it reduces PTF hours in the affected craft, pursuant to subparagraph (3) of that provision. It also reduces overtime and transitional employees in the affected craft. These witnesses noted that impact statements provided to the affected Unions pursuant to Section 4 of Article 12 showed the planned reduction of casuals only in the affected crafts.

The APWU submitted into evidence several management documents to show that the parties understood the language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) to encompass all casuals regardless of craft. The earliest of these documents is a summary of the various requirements of Article 12 issued to the field by James > e. Prior to reassigning full time employees, it is necessary to minimize the impact on the regular work force employees by separating all casual employees, regardless of designation/ activity code, to the extent possible. (Ref: Article 12, Section 5.C.5.a.2.)[5]

The other documents, all of which appear to duplicate the text in the Holmes document, consist of: (i) a booklet, evidently distributed in 1989, consisting of guidelines for Article 12 which states that it was jointly developed by Central Region Labor Relations staff and Central Region APWU officials; (ii) an undated Central Region Computer Program on Article 12 which states that the APWU, NALC and NPMHU all participated in its formation; and (iii) an undated document, evidently prepared by Labor Relations in the Eastern Region, which APWU witness Greg Bell testified was in his possession while he was President of the Philadelphia Local from 1986 to 1995, although it never had to be applied.

Postal Service witness Mlarker testified that he reported directly to Central Region Director Holmes when Mlarker served as Regional Complement Coordinator for the Central Region

[5] This document further states:

> f. Reduce part-time flexible hours to the extent possible regardless of craft designation. (Ref: Article 12, Section 5.C.5.a.3) from 1990 to 1997. He insisted that during that period they did not apply Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) in the manner described in the 1988 Holmes document, but only separated casuals in the affected craft when applying that provision. He further stated that Holmes never told him to follow the 1988 Holmes document, nor did the Unions ever cite it.

In 1991, Labor Relations at headquarters issued an Article 12 Reference and Training Guide, which states, with respect to Article 12.5.C.5.a(2):

> a(2) This requires management to minimize the impact on the regular workforce by separating casuals to the maximum extent possible. This provision does not require the automatic separation of all casuals prior to reassigning an excess employee across craft lines. It does require us to minimize the impact as much as possible, but there may be occasions when we will not be able to do so.
> (Emphasis in original.)

Postal Service witness Brenker testified that he put this document together and that he was referring only to casuals in the affected craft, and that is how he has explained it in training sessions.

Phillip Hart, Director of City Delivery at the NALC, testified that he dealt with Article 12 issues when he served as an NALC representative in the Western Region and, later, the Pacific Area. He said he never got into disputes over Article 12.5.C.5.a(2), but that as a trainer of stewards and branch officers, he taught that the reference to "all casuals" applied to casuals in all crafts at the installation.

UNION POSITION

The Unions contend that the language, purpose and structure of Article 12 compel the conclusion that Section 5.C.5.a(2) refers to all casuals. Indeed, the Unions argue, no other construction is compatible with the literal language at issue. This language was originally drafted, prior to Postal Reorganization, in the context of a single national collective bargaining agreement to which all Unions were parties. Article XII of that agreement covered all career employees regardless of craft, and all casuals, regardless of craft (then temporaries). The pertinent language states that the obligation to separate casuals is triggered when "for any reason an installation must reduce the number of employees" in the installation, without reference to craft. Paragraph 5.a(2), in turn, requires "that installation" to "minimize the impact on regular work force employees" without reference to craft. And the language requiring the "separation of all casuals" makes no reference to craft.

The Unions assert that separating a casual to allow an excess letter carrier to continue working in the same installation in the clerk craft reflects the precise language of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). It ensures that the "impact on regular workforce employees" is "minimized" by reducing to the absolute minimum the reduction in total number of regular workforce employees at that installation that otherwise would be required.

The Unions reject the interpretation of the relevant language provided by Postal Service witness Gillespie. Essentially, Gillespie argued that the provision in issue should be read as one in a series of steps to be taken by management before any employees are reassigned within the installation across craft lines. This approach effectively interprets "minimizing the impact on regular workforce employees" as really meaning "minimizing the number of employees within each craft who must be reassigned outside the craft." But that is not what the contract says. In the Unions' view, Gillespie's argument is no mere interpretive gloss; it is a complete rewriting of the language.

The Unions cite a half dozen regional arbitration awards, mostly APWU cases, all of which support their interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2).

The Unions stress that the explicit primary principle of the reassignment principles and procedures in Sections 4 and 5 of Article 12 is "that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum." Consistent with this primary purpose, Section 5.C.5 establishes that the first priority is to keep an excessed employee within their installation, by providing a multi-step process to avoid reassigning a regular employee out of their installation. First, to minimize the impact on regular employees the Postal Service must separate all casuals. Then it must reduce PTF hours. Then, in order to keep the excessed employee in their installation, the Postal Service must reassign this employee to vacant assignments in other crafts in the same installation. Only after all of these steps are exhausted, can the Postal Service reassign a regular employee out of their installation.

The contractual imperative to avoid dislocation to regular employees, the Unions assert, reflects the significant impact of reassigning a regular employee to a different installation. An employee may be reassigned to installations within 100 miles of the losing installation or to more distant installations. Such an employee would have to sell their house, purchase another house and relocate their family. Or, in the alternative, the employee would have to commute hundreds of miles a day, incurring large driving expenses. The Unions note that the Postal Service does not reimburse dislocated employees for many expenses associated with moving, including losses in buying or selling real estate.

The Unions point out that their interpretation would require the Postal Service to separate a casual regardless of the craft in those situations where the separation would create an opportunity for the career employee to remain in their home installation. The Postal Service's position, by contrast, would necessitate the transfer of the career employee for the sole purpose of retaining the casual. Such a result clearly is inconsistent with the fundamental purpose of Article 12.

The Unions maintain that management's reliance on Section 4.D of Article 12 is unavailing. There is no basis for the suggestion that 4.D narrows the application of Section 5.C.5.a(2). More likely, the Unions assert, is that this provision was designed to cover various excessing situations for which there had been no contractual requirement that casuals first be separated, such as those covered by Section 5.C.2 and Section 5.C.6. The Unions emphasize that Section 4.D sets forth general principles for reassignment. Section 5.C presents special provisions on reassignments that are to be applied in addition to the general principles. The specific requirement in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) takes precedence over the more general Article 12.4.D requirement. If anything, the language of Section 4.D establishes that the parties knew how to craft language limiting the separation of casuals by craft. Yet, no such language appears in Section 12.5.C.5.a(2).

The Unions argue that Postal Service witness Gillespie's testimony that there was an understanding in the 1960s that the relevant provision only required the separation of casuals in the craft of the affected regular employee should be given little weight. His testimony was based solely on hearsay conversations, and there is no evidence that the asserted internal management understanding was shared with, let alone accepted by, any Union officials. Indeed, the Unions' printed versions of the 1971 Agreement persuasively undercut any argument that they accepted Gillespie's interpretation. Those printed versions expressly called for separation of all casuals "not in one of the bargaining units."

The Unions also point out that the claim by management that the Unions historically have acquiesced in its view that only casuals in the same craft are to be separated is belied by the various regional arbitration awards sustaining grievances filed by the NALC and APWU to the contrary. In addition, the record indicates that over the past 20 years there have been very few instances in which letter carriers have been excessed at all and rarely from offices where casuals were employed. Thus any occasions on which the interpretive issue raised here could have arisen would have been extremely rare.

Accordingly, the Unions maintain, there is no basis for any argument that there has been a mutually agreed practice of limiting the separation of casuals along craft lines in the letter carrier craft, and testimony by APWU witness Greg Bell established that the separation of casuals historically has been a matter of dispute between the Postal Service and the APWU. Furthermore, the record shows there has not been a consensus as to the meaning of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) within postal management.

The Unions point out that reassigning an excessed regular carrier to a temporary position created by separation of a clerk casual can be part of a strategy to minimize dislocation to that carrier. For example, if the Postal Service plans to excess a regular carrier to an installation 100 miles away, but the carrier's installation employs a casual in the clerk craft for eight hours a day on a temporary basis and another letter carrier is scheduled to retire in 45 days, the installation can separate the casual and allow the carrier to remain in his or home installation until a regular position is available. Alternatively, allowing the carrier to work temporarily in the casual clerk assignment may allow time for a vacancy to open in another installation much closer to the carrier's home. In each of these situations, separating the casual minimizes the impact of the assignment on the excessed carrier.

The Unions also note that at the time this grievance arose the Postal Service was employing casuals on an ongoing basis in lieu of regular employees. In that historical context, there have been numerous opportunities to provide employment to career employees who otherwise would be excessed by separating casuals.

The Unions disagree with the suggestion by the Postal Service that separating all casuals regardless of craft will create delays caused by the posting and bidding process. They point out that the fact that the reassigned employee is from another craft does not increase whatever difficulties may arise in the bidding process following the separation of a casual.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Postal Service contends that its interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) better comports with the language of the collective bargaining agreement. Subsection a(1), which introduces the remaining subsections under 12.C.5.C.a, requires the Postal Service to determine the number of excessed employees "by craft." It is more logical to assume that the purpose for the following subsections, a(2) relating to casuals, and a(3) relating to PTF employees, also are discussing issues involving the same craft. After all, the ultimate aim of sub-parts 12.5.C.5.a(1)-(4) is to determine how to place that craft's excessed employees. Therefore, the absence of any qualifying language in a(2) stating that it applies only in the losing or affected craft carries no particular weight.

The Postal Service also rejects the Unions' effort to contrast the lack of reference to the losing or affected craft in 12.5.C.5.a(2) with the reference in what is now Article 12.4.D to separation of casuals in the affected craft. The language in 12.4.D, as testified to by Postal Service witness Gillespie, was borrowed from the way in which 12.5.C.5.a(2) always had been applied over the years. In response to the Unions' concern that assignments outside the installation would adversely affect their members as a result of the development of the bulk mail network, the Postal Service agreed to a new provision (Section 4) covering such reassignments and wrote in the protection already used in 12.5.C.5.a(2) for reassignments within the installation. The purpose, the Postal Service insists, was to treat the two situations the same.

The Postal Service also points out another anomaly in the Unions' position. Article 6.B.4 of the contract relating to layoff and reductions in force, provides that before layoff and reductions in force occur within an installation the Postal Service will to the fullest extent possible separate all casuals within the craft, but not casuals in every craft. The Postal Service contends that it is not likely that the parties in the same collective bargaining agreement intended to provide more protection for regular employees within the installation in reassignments under 12.5.C.5.a(2) than under layoff and reductions in force covered by Article 6.B.4.

The Postal Service stresses that its interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) is consistent with how that subparagraph has been applied and viewed by the parties. In addition to the testimony of Postal Service witnesses Brenker and Mlarker, the Postal Service points to two documents jointly issued at the national level by top Postal Service and APWU representatives regarding the application of Article 12. The Postal Service argues these documents confirm that the separation of casuals under Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) applies only to casuals in the affected craft. The Postal Service maintains that the documents cited by the Unions, including the Holmes document, did not and do not reflect national postal policy and do not correspond to the manner in which the applicable provision has been applied over the years.

The Postal Service also argues that the Unions' interpretation of 12.5.C.5.a(2) leads to a variety of operational and contractual absurdities. It points to testimony of Postal Service witness Brenker regarding the untoward consequences that would follow from adopting the Unions' interpretation, including delays caused by the need to first bid any position created by separating casuals in another craft in that craft.

Finally, the Postal Service insists that the regional arbitration awards cited by the Unions fail to support their position in this case. Notably, the arbitrators in those cases did not have the factual evidence that has been presented by the Postal Service in this arbitration.

FINDINGS

This case poses a difficult interpretive issue. On its face, the wording of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2), read in isolation, seems to support the Unions' position. It refers to "all casuals" without limitation. This is in contrast to Article 12.4.D, which specifically refers to: "casual employees working in the affected craft." Moreover, the Unions have cited several management documents, albeit from regional or area managers, that appear to agree with their position. At least six regional arbitrators, based largely on these factors, have concluded that "all casuals" means just that, without regard to craft or Union. Yet, the Postal Service in this national arbitration proceeding has presented a much fuller and more nuanced position than it did in those cases, which, ultimately, is more compelling than that of the Unions.

Context is important. The parties have expressly stated in Article 12.4.A that: "A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service." That provision goes on to provide that: "Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Section and the provisions of Section 5 below." Section 4.D, as noted above, specifically provides for separation of casuals working in the affected craft and installation, to the extent possible, prior to excessing any regular employee in that craft out of the installation. Section 4 was added to the Agreement in 1973. Section 5 -- then Appendix A -- dates back at least to 1968 prior to Postal Reorganization. Section 4 overlays the provisions of Section 5 which remain virtually unchanged from 1968.

Article 12.5.C.5.a(2), the provision in issue, is part of a process to be applied when it is necessary to reduce the number of employees in an installation other than by attrition. The initial part of this process, set forth in Section 5.C.5.a, covers reassignments within an installation. The first step is to determine by craft the number of excess employees. The second step -- the provision in issue -- is to minimize the impact on regular work force employees "by separation of all casuals." The third step is to minimize the impact on full-time positions by reducing PTF hours. The fourth step is to identify as excess the necessary number of junior full-time employees in the affected craft in the installation, and then seek to reassign them to vacant assignments in other crafts in that location. Section 5.C.5.b then goes on to provide for reassignments to other installations when necessary.

This procedure calls for separation of all casuals and reduction in PTF hours after determining the number of excess employees in a particular craft and prior to identifying those employees who must be excessed from that craft. In that context, as the Postal Service argues, it is more logical to read the reference to "all casuals" in Section 5.C.5.a(2) as covering all casuals in the affected craft because these initial steps are designed to identify who must be excessed from that craft to achieve the necessary reduction in that craft. Only after that occurs are employees reassigned to vacant positions in other crafts in the same installation, where possible. In other words, the separation of "all casuals" provided for in Section 5.C.5.a(2) is a step to be taken to reduce the number of regular employees to be excessed from the affected craft, not to create a full-time position in some other craft which -- presumably after being bid in that craft -- could provide a vacant position to be filled under Section 5.C.5.a(4).

Postal Service witness Gillespie, who was the lead negotiator for reassignment issues in 1973 negotiations, testified that when Section 4 was added to the National Agreement in 1973, the provision in Section 4-D relating to the separation of casuals -- which he said was based on his position paper -- was designed to parallel the application of Section 5.C.5.a(2), set forth in Appendix A of the 1973 Agreement. In the context of alleviating the Unions' concerns at that time regarding significant excessing as a result of the creation of bulk mail centers, it seems unlikely that the Postal Service would have proposed, and the Unions agreed to, a more limited separation of casuals than that already provided for in Section 5.C.5.a(2), which remained intact in Appendix A.[6] There is no support in this record for the Unions' alternative suggestion that Section 4-D more likely was intended to provide some, but more limited, protection in other situations not covered by Section 5.C.5, such as those described in Sections 5.C.2 and 5.C.6.

[6] Standing alone, the wording of Paragraph C.5.a(2) included in the NALC and APWU versions of the 1971 Agreement, which was not agreed to by the Postal Service, does not clearly indicate, as the Unions now argue, that in 1971 they read that provision of the 1968 Agreement as applying to casuals in other than the affected craft.

As for actual practice, this issue of separation of casuals in other crafts appears to have been essentially theoretical. There is no evidence of any situation in which Section 5.C.5.a(2) actually was applied to separate casuals in a different craft. There also is no evidence of any specific situation when such a separation actually would have made it possible to avoid excessing an employee in another craft, consistent with the 2001 Snow Award regarding the meaning of "to the extent possible."

Postal Service witnesses testified that in providing impact statements pursuant to Article 12.4.B, the Postal Service showed planned reductions of casuals only in the affected crafts, and that there was no objection by the Unions. The Unions, however, have cited a number of management documents, most notably the 1988 Holmes document, that appear to support their position. The Postal Service, in turn, presented testimony that the Holmes document was not even followed in the Central Region where it originated. Perhaps more significantly, the Postal Service rightly contends that, as a regional official, Holmes did not speak for the Postal Service at the national level, and it presented two national level communications to the Mail Handlers in the 1970s which clearly set forth the Postal Service's position that Section 5.C.5.a(2) applies only in the affected craft.

The Unions have introduced six regional arbitration cases, all postdating the 1988 Holmes document, in which the Unions successfully grieved the Postal Service's failure when applying Article 12.5.C.5 to consider separating casuals in other crafts. Those cases, most of which involved excessed employees in the Special Delivery Messenger craft, upheld grievances alleging a violation of Section 5.C.5.a(2) -- and in some cases a(3) -- because management did not consider separating casuals (or reducing PTF hours) in other than the affected craft. As previously noted, those regional cases were decided on the basis of considerably more limited records than that in this national case. Notably, the remedy in most of those cases was to rescind the excessing and to reassign the grievant(s) to the affected or losing craft, where, of course, they were not needed. What happened after that is not specified in this record. None of the decisions actually found that excessing could have been avoided by separating casuals (and/or reducing PTF hours) in other crafts, consistent with the Snow Award regarding the meaning of "to the extent possible." Arbitrator James Odom, in the most recent of these cases -- USPS and APWU Case H00C-1H-C 03128563 (2004) -- ordered an additional hearing to receive evidence on that score. But the present record does not indicate whether such a hearing was held, and, if so, what decision was rendered.

As the Postal Service points out, it also seems unlikely that the parties would have intended to provide more protection with respect to separation of casuals for regular employees within the installation in reassignments under Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) than under the provisions in Article 6.B.4 relating to reassignment, layoff and reduction in force, which call for separation of all casuals within the craft to the fullest extent possible.

While obviously not binding on the NALC, the May 18, 2005 Article 12 Questions and Answers document jointly issued by top Postal Service and APWU officers seem to offer some support to the Postal Service's interpretation of Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). It states:

> Q6. Is the Postal Service required to minimize impact on regular work force employees prior to excessing?
> A6. Yes. In order to minimize the impact on employees, to the extent possible, all casuals working in the affected craft and installation will be separated prior to making involuntary reassignments. Also, to the extent possible, part-time flexible employee work hours will be reduced. There is an obligation to separate casual workers if doing so would yield sufficient hours to establish a regular full time duty assignment; that is eight hours within nine or ten hours, the same five days during a service week.

Greg Bell, the APWU's Director of Industrial Relations, testified that this Q&A #6 deals with Article 12.4.D and does not address Article 12.5.C.5.a(2), but, as the Postal Service points out, reducing PTF hours -- referred to in this Q&A -- is provided for only in Article 12.5.C.5.a and not in Article 12.4.D.

Bell also explained that Q&A #6 tracks language in the 2004 Joint Contract Interpretation Manual issued by the APWU and the Postal Service relating to Minimizing Impact, which then was in effect. That 2004 JCIM provision is set forth under the heading "Article 12.5.B.5," which really does not fit, because that contractual provision addresses advance notice and relocation expenses relating to involuntary reassignments outside an installation. More recent APWU JCIM editions include this provision under the heading "Article 12.5.B," which provides "Principles and Requirements" for reassignments, and precedes Section 5.C which provides additional Special Provisions on Reassignments, including the provision in issue. The APWU is correct, however, in pointing out that the provisions in the JCIM under the heading "Article 12.5.C.5.a" make no reference to separation of casuals, which Bell stated was because of the present interpretive dispute.[7]

Under all these circumstances, I conclude that the Postal Service's position in this interpretive dispute is sounder and more compelling than that of the Unions.

[7] I did not find an indication in the record as to when the APWU filed its pending grievance on the meaning of "all casuals" in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2). That issue is not addressed in Arbitrator Snow's 2001 Award, in an APWU case, on the meaning of "to the extent possible."

AWARD

The provision in Article 12.5.C.5.a(2) for "separation of all casuals" applies to casuals in the affected or losing craft, and not to casuals in other crafts.

I met recently with your representative, Teresa Harmon, to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is whether the National Postal Mail Handlers Union (NPMHU) has the right to file a grievance to enforce returning an excessed clerk into a residual vacancy in the clerk craft.

After full discussion of this issue, the parties agree the NPMHU has the right to file a grievance to enforce the terms of Article 12.6.C5a5 of the NPMHU national agreement.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case in accordance with the Memorandum of Understanding on Step 4 Procedures.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Thompson:

Recently, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the meaning of the "within 100 mile" limit in Article 12.

After discussion, we agreed to settle this grievance as follows:

> The 100 mile criteria identified in Article 12, (e.g. 12.5.C.1.b, 12.5.C.1.d, 12.5.C.1.f, 12.5.C.5.b.(1), and 12.5.C.5.b.(1)(b) is measured as the shortest actual driving distance between installations.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Riley:

This will serve to cancel and supersede the Step 4 decision letter issued in the above-captioned case under date of May 23, 1977.

On the basis of our further discussions on this case, the matter at issue has been reconsidered in conjunction with the applicable contractual provisions.

Under the provisions of Appendix A, Section I, paragraph C, 5, b, (6), employees involuntarily reassigned to other installations are entitled to file a written request to be returned to the first vacancy in the level and in the craft or occupational group in the installation from which assigned. Such request was executed by the grievant in this instance under date of August 1, 1972. The conditions set forth in the referenced section of Appendix A further provide that such a request from an employee shall be honored so long as he (employee) does not withdraw or decline to accept an opportunity to return in accordance with such request. In the circumstances presented, the grievant did not withdraw his request to have retreat rights to the New Bedford Post Office, nor is it shown that he declined to accept an opportunity to return in accordance with his request. To this extent, we find that grievance is sustained.

Accordingly, by copy of this letter, the postmaster is instructed to take the necessary measures to assure that the grievant's seniority date is properly reestablished in accordance with the retreat right provisions in Appendix A of the National Agreement.

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from July 21, 1987 to November 21, 1990. Case No. H4N-5N-C 41526 arose under the 1984-87 National Agreement, but relevant portions of the agreement are the same in both labor contracts. This was a three party hearing, and the American Postal Workers Union intervened in a dispute involving the United States Postal Service and the National Association of Letter Carriers.

Arbitration hearings occurred on August 11, November 28, and December 7, 1989, as well as on March 20, 1990. All hearings took place in a conference room of the USPS headquarters at 475 L'Enfant Plaza located in Washington, D.C. Mr. L. G. Handy, Manager of Labor Relations, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. Keith Secular of the Cohen, Weiss and Simon law firm in New York City represented the National Association of Letter Carriers. Mr. Thomas Neill, Industrial Relations Director, initially represented the American Postal Workers Union, but Mr. Richard Wevodau, Director of the Maintenance Division, assumed Mr. Neill's position at the hearing when he had to leave in order to see a doctor. In subsequent hearings, Mr. Phillip Tabbita, Special Assistant to the President, represented the American Postal Workers Union.

The hearings proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties. A representative of Diversified Reporting Services, Inc., recorded the proceedings and submitted a transcript of 572 pages.

There were no challenges to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator. The parties elected to submit post-hearing briefs, and the arbitrator officially closed the hearing on June 11, 1990 after receipt of the final brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The parties stipulated that the issues before the arbitrator are as follows:

(1) In Case Nos. H7N-2A-C 4340 (St. George, Utah); No. H7N-2U-C 4618 (Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania); No. H7N-5K-C 10423 (Fairfax, Virginia); and No. H4N-5N-C 41526 (Santa Clara, California), the issue is whether the Employer violated the National Agreement by assigning a former supervisor to a full-time position in the Letter Carrier craft. If so, what should the remedy be?

(2) In Case No. H7N-4U-C 3766 (Laramie, Wyoming), the issue is whether the Employer violated the National Agreement by assigning a former supervisor to a part-time flexible position in the Letter Carrier craft. If so, what should the remedy be?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 12 - PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 2. Principles of Seniority

A. Except as specifically provided in this Article, the principles of seniority are established in the craft Articles of this Agreement.

B. An employee who left the bargaining unit on or after July 21, 1973 and returns to the same craft:

1. will begin a new period of seniority if

if the employee returns from a position outside the Postal Service, or

2. will begin a new period of seniority if the employee returns from a non-bargaining unit position within the Postal Service, unless the employee returns within 2 years from the date the employee left the unit.

ARTICLE 41 - LETTER CARRIER CRAFT

Section 1. Posting

A. In the Letter Carrier Craft, vacant craft duty assignments shall be posted as follows:

1. A vacant or newly established duty assignment not under consideration for reversion shall be posted within five working days of the day it becomes vacant or is established.

   All city letter carrier craft full-time duty assignments other than letter routes, utility or T-6 swings,m parcel post routes, collection routes, combination routes, official mail messenger service, special carrier assignments and night routers, shall be known as full-time Reserve Letter Carrier duty assignments. The term "unassigned regular" is to be used only in those instances where full-time letter carriers are excess to the needs of the delivery unit and not holding a valid bid assignment.

2. Letter carriers temporarily detailed to a supervisory position (204b) may not bid on vacant Letter Carrier Craft duty assignments while so detailed. However, nothing contained herein shall be construed to preclude such temporarily detailed employees from voluntarily terminating a 204b detail and returning to their craft position. Upon return to the craft position, such employees may exercise their right to bid on vacant Letter Carrier Craft duty assignments.

   The duty assignment of a full-time carrier detailed to a supervisory position, including a supervisory training program in excess of four months shall be declared vacant and shall be posted for bid in accordance with this Article. Upon return to the craft the carrier will become an unassigned regular. A letter carrier temporarily detailed to a supervisory position will not be returned to the craft solely to circumvent the provisions of Section 1.A.2.

. . . .

C. Successful Bidder

1. The senior bidder meeting the qualification standards established for that position shall be designated the "successful bidder."

2. Within ten (10) days after the closing date of the posting, the Employer shall post a notice indicating the successful bidder, seniority date and number.

3. The successful bidder must be placed in the new assignment within 15 days except in the month of December.

4. The successful bidder shall work the duty assignment as posted. Unanticipated circumstances may require a temporary change in assignment. This same rule shall apply to T-6 and utility assignments, unless the local agreement provides otherwise.

Section 2. Seniority

A. Coverage

1. This seniority section applies to all regular work force Letter Carrier Craft employees when a guide is necessary for filling assignments and for other purposes and will be so used to the maximum extent possible.

2. Seniority is computed from date of appointment in the Letter Carrier Craft and continues to accrue so long as service is uninterrupted in the Letter Carrier Craft in the same installation, except as otherwise specifically provided.

B. Definitions

6. (b) Part-time flexible letter carriers shallbe converted to full-time positions of the same designation and PS salary level in the order of their standing on the part-time flexible roll.

G. Changes in Which a New Period of Seniority is Begun

1. When an employee from another agency transfers to the Letter Carrier Craft.

2. Except as otherwise provided in this Agreement when an employee from another USPS craft is reassigned voluntarily or involuntarily to the Letter Carrier Craft.

3. When a letter carrier transfers from one postal installation to another at the carrier's own request (except as provided in subsection E of this Article).

4. Any former employee of the U.S. Postal Servixce entering the Letter Carrier Craft by reemployment or reinstatement shall begin a new period of seniority, except as provided in subsections D.1 and 0.4 above.

5. Any surplus employees from non-processing and non-mail delivery installations, regional offices or the United States Postal Service Headquarters, begin a new period of seniority effective the date of reassignment.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Union has challenged management's reassignment of supervisors to the employment status of full-time, regular or part-time, flexible employes in the Letter Carrier craft. In four of the five grievances in this dispute, the Employer reassigned supervisors to the National Association of Letter Carriers bargaining unit as full-time regular employes; and the NALC has challenged those assignments. The fifth grievance involves a supervisor who was returned to the Letter Carrier craft as a part- time flexible employe, and the Union has maintained that he should have been returned with full-time, regular status. Supervisors in all five grievances had their paygrade lowered when they returned to the bargaining unit.

One of the cases appealed to the national level arose in Laramie, Wyoming. The grievant left the Letter Carrier craft for less than two years while he worked as a full-time supervisor. He requested a return to the craft, and management reassigned him as a part-time, flexible employe. The grievant argued that the grievant should have been entitled to retain his seniority and that management should have reassigned him to a full-time, regular position. He seeks restoration of his seniority and reassignment to a full-time position as well as a make whole monetary remedy. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 2).

Another of the cases arose in St. George, Utah. Mr. Jerry Turnbeaugh left the Letter Carrier craft and worked as a supervisor for over two years before he requested a reassignment to the craft. The Employer created an unassigned full-time, regular craft position and assigned it to Mr. Turnbeaugh, giving him a new seniority date. The Union contended that the unassigned, regular position should have been made available for bid and that Mr. Turnbeaugh should have been placed on the part-time, flexible seniority list with a new seniority date. (See Joint Exhibit No. 3.

A third case arose in Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania. A former letter carrier became a supervisor, but the Employer demoted him for disciplinary reasons pursuant to a Merit Systems Protection Board order. Management transferred him to a different postal facility and gave him a full-time, regular carrier position. The Union contended that the Employer should have promoted a part-time, flexible employe from the office of transfer to the regular position in that facility. The requested remedy is that the demoted supervisor be reassigned to the part-time, flexible list in order of seniority. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4).

A fourth case arose in Fairfax, Virginia and involved a letter carrier in Fairfax who received a promotion to the rank of supervisor in July of 1987 and transferred to a different office. After three months he requested a return to the Letter Carrier craft in Fairfax, Virginia. The Employer reassigned him there as a full-time letter carrier, and his "letter carrier" seniority was restoreed. It is the contention of the Union that the former supervisor should not have received his previous seniority because he had left Fairfax, Virginia and transferred back to the facility from another office. It is the belief of the Union that the former supervisor should be reassigned as a junior, part-time, flexible employe. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 5).

The final case arose in Santa Clara, California. It involved a letter carrier who became a supervisor of another office in July of 1985. In November of 1986, he submitted his resignation to the Employer. There is a factual dispute between the parties with respect to whether or not management ever accepted the resignation. In January of 1987, the Employer demoted the supervisor and reassigned him as a full-time letter carrier in a different office, giving him credit for his previous seniority in the craft. The Union contended that the former supervisor was not entitled to his prior seniority because he had transferred from another office where he had served as a supervisor and also because he had resigned from the U.S. Postal Service and, subsequently, had been rehired in Santa Clara, California. It is the belief of the Union that the former supervisor should be reassigned to the position of a part-time flexible employe and that any full-time assignment for which he had successfully bid should be reposted., (See, Joint Exhibit No. 6).

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The National Association of Letter Carriers

The National Association of Letter Carriers takes the position that management must make assignments to full-time positions in the Letter Carrier craft strictly in compliance with seniority provisions in the National Agreement. A former letter carrier reassigned to that craft from a supervisory position, thus, would be eligible for reassignment as a full-time, regular employe only if the supervisor retains greater craft seniority than any other full-time or part-time flexible carrier who, otherwise, would be entitled to the assignment, according to the NALC's theory of the case. The National Association of Letter Carriers argues that management fails to honor the seniority provisions in the parties' agreement when it asserts that it has complete discretion to reassign supervisors as either full-time, regular or part-time, flexible employes.

B. The American Postal Workers Union

The American Postal Workers Union intervened in this arbitration proceeding in order to dispute management's position that it has unilateral authority to return supervisory personnel to any craft at any installations in any status. It is the position of the American Postal Workers Union that the full-time or part-time flexible status of a returning supervisor is determined by numerous contractual and manual provisions, which vary from craft to craft. Accordingly, the APWU takes the position that the results of this arbitration proceeding may well determine how returning letter carriers are reassigned but that it does not necessarily decide how members of other crafts are to be reassigned.

C. The Employer

The Employer's first line of argument is that the issues in this case are governed by the concept of res judicata (the matter previously has been decided) because the parties to this proceeding allegedly settled the issue at Step 4 of several grievances in national pre-arbitration settlements. Those settlements, according to management's theory of the case, confirmed the right of management to place supervisors returning to the Letter Carrier craft in any status it sees fit.

Alternatively, it is the position of the Employer that there is no contractual provision restricting its right to determine the status of a supervisor reassigned to the Letter Carrier craft. Management maintains that Article 3 of the National Agreement gives it the exclusive right to determine the "craft" status of a reassigned employe, and the Employer contends that nothing in the agreement has restricted this managerial prerogative. Moreover, management maintains that past practice, supported by the parties' mutual agreement as manifested in negotiated settlements, establishes the Employer's right to determine the "craft" status of a reassigned employe, according to management's theory of the case.

The Employer contends that the Union has attempted to broaden the issue in the arbitration proceeding so that it includes seniority and not merely "status." According to the Employer, the only issue before the arbitrator is whether or not management has a right to determine whether a supervisor returning to the craft will be returned as a part-time flexible or as a full-time regular employe. Seniority, in the view of the Employer, is a separate issue..

VI. ANALYSIS

A. Nature of the Issue

The parties disagreed strongly about whether or not the dispute is about employment status or seniority. There are three types of employes in the bargaining unit, namely, (1) full-time regular employes, who are assigned five eight-hour days a week; (2) full-time flexible employes, who work flexible hours while they wait for conversion to full-time regular status; and (3) part-time regular employes, who permanently work less than forty hours a week. Part-time regular employes are governed by different seniority and assignment provisions than the other two types of employes and are not part of this dispute. Of concern in this case is the status of part-time flexible employes (hired for future full-time regular work) and full-time regular employes. References to employment "status" in the case have been to part-time flexible employes and full-time regular employes, and not to part-time regular employes.

Seniority, on the other hand, is concerned with "the length of service an individual employee has in a unit." (See, Robert's Dictionary of Industrial Relations, 657 (1986)).

Seniority determines the relative priority of full-time regular employes and part-time flexible employes with respect to a variety of privileges, such as the right to bid on certain positions for full-time regular employes, the order of selection for qualified bidders, and the order of conversion of part-time flexible employes to full-time regular employes. For purposes of this arbitration proceeding, the most important seniority right is concerned with the conversion of part-time flexible employes to full-time regular status. The Employer has not argued that it has a right to disturb provisions on seniority in the parties' National Agreement. Management, however, has contended that its reassignment of supervisors to full-time regular or part-time flexible status has nothing to do with the concept of seniority. It is the belief of the Employer that it has a reserved right in Article 3 of the National Agreement to make such reassignments. The contractual provision states:

> The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:
> (b) to hire, promote, transfer, assign and retain employes in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge or take other disciplinary action against such employees.

B. Some General Guidelines

The parties have balanced their interests in the way they designed their collective bargaining agreement, and one manifestation of the balancing mechanism is to be found in the way the parties described their rights and obligations in the management's rights clause and the seniority provisions. The importance of disputes implicating such provisionscannot be underestimated. The role of an arbitrator in such cases is to review the language of the parties' agreement in order to construe the way they have ordered their relationship with regard to management rights and seniority.

The parties' agreement is an arbitrator's touchstone, and an arbitration award is "legitimate only so long as it draws its essence from the collective bargaining agreement." (See, United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel and Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593 (1960)). The point is that a source of seniority rights is to be found in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. As one arbitrator has observed:

> An employee's seniority as such does not by itself confer any right upon him. Seniority, without more, is merely the service status of a particular employee, in relation to the service status of other employees. (See, General Electric Co., 54 LA 351, 352 (1970)).

In other words, the meaning of seniority must find its explanation in the collective bargaining relationship between the parties. An arbitrator's assumption must be that the parties have decided seniority rights encourage loyalty and stability in the work force and have balanced those values against any lost flexibility as a result of using seniority as a basis for making employment decisions. An arbitrator is obligated to interpret and, then, to apply such contractual terms in a given case, recognizing that an application of seniority is almost never neutral. As the eminent Ralph Seward observed almost four decades ago:

> In seniority matters, the advantage of one employe is the disadvantage of another. To "stretch" the agreement to be "fair" to Smith is to stretch it to be "unfair" to Jones. Fairness, then, exists when each employe has the relative seniority right he is entitled to under the Agreement--no more and no less. (See, Bethlehem Steel Co., 23 LA 538, 541-42 (1954)).

It is an arbitrator's obligation to understand and implement the bargain of the parties, no more and no less. This is accomplished by interpreting the language of the parties' agreement. If the language of the collective bargaining agreement fails to be clear and unambiguous, it becomes necessary for an arbitrator to seek other sources of the parties' negotiated intent. Settlement agreements between the parties provide one source of such information. Past practices of the parties also may make clear their contractual intent. If the parties have been silent throughout their relationship with regard to the issue in dispute, it is reasonable for an arbitrator to assume that they expected their agreement to be interpreted in light of established arbitral principles. As one scholar has observed, "there is a whole set of implicit relationships not spelled out in the agreement and not confined to any particular employer, which an arbitrator assumes to exist." (See, 2 Ind. Rel. L.J. 97, 104 (1977)). As Professor Archibald Cox has noted, 'these arbitral principles are "drawn out of the institutions of labor relations and shaped by their needs." (See, 69 Harv. L. Rev. 601, 605 (1956)).

It is not uncommon for collective bargaining agreements to be specific about the effect of work outside a bargaining unit on an employe's accumulation of seniority. (See, e.g., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., 61 LA 136 (1973); and National Cash Register Co., 48 LA 743 (1967)). In the absence of clear and unambiguous language, arbitrators often have scrutinized the practices of the parties to understand their mutual intent. (See, U.S. Steel Corp., 28 LA 740 (1957); and Mississippi Lime Co., 31 LA 869 (1969)). Numerous arbitration decisions have concluded that employes who return to a bargaining unit should be permitted to exercise their retained seniority. (See, e.g., Folger Coffee Co., 60 LA 353 (1953); Alpha Portland Cement Co., 40 LA 495 (1962); Pannier Corp., 41 LA 1228 (1964); and Leesona Corp., 56 LA 668 (1971)).

C. The Impact of Settlement Agreements

The Employer presented a number of negotiated settlement agreements and argued that they constituted binding precedents between the parties, precedents that already had resolved the disputed issue. (See, Exhibit Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5, and 8). The Employer argued that those "Step 4" decisions supported its position in the case and established that management's conduct is consistent with its rights under Article 3 of the parties' agreement. In other words, the Union allegedly had agreed to settle grievances involving the same set of issues because it recognized the rights of management in Article 3. The Employer argued that those settlement agreements disposed of the issue in this case because they reflect uncoerced, consensual agreements by national representatives of the parties and show management's rights to determine the status of former supervisors who are placed in the crafts by a demotion. As binding precedent, the Employer argued that they must determine the parties' interpretation of their agreement and be dispositive in this dispute. Alternatively, the Employer argued that even if the Step 4 settlement agreements are not automatically dispositive, they at least show how the parties' view their agreement and how it should be interpreted. (See, Tr. I, pp. 20, 85, 100; and Tr. II, p. 62).

In one of the settlement agreements, a grievance had been filed by the National Association of Letter Carriers after management reassigned a former carrier who had served as a supervisor for eight years. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 1). The employe received the lowest seniority in the postal authority, but management awarded him a position as a full-time regular letter carrier. The Union took the position in the dispute that the former supervisor should have been reassigned to the bargaining unit as the last part-time flexible employe and should have started a new period of seniority, in accordance with Articles 12.2 and 41.2 of the National Agreement. Although this settlement agreement presented a similar issue as the grievance before the arbitrator in this case, the parties signed an actual agreement which stated:

> After reviewing this matter, we mutually agree that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. There is no dispute between the parties at Step 4 relative to the meaning and intent of Article 12.2 of the National Agreement. We find no agreement to return an employe to a part-time flexible position under the circumstances described. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 1, emphasis added).

The parties remanded the grievance to Step 3 for further processing. By the parties' explicit intent not to provide an interpretation of the National Agreement, they made this negotiated settlement agreement nonbinding on the arbitrator in this case. While it is not necessary to decide the effect of the settlement agrement on postal managers and union representatives, it is clear that the parties did not make it binding on the arbitrator.

The same analysis must be applied in another one of the settlement agreements submitted by the Employer. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 8). In that case, a supervisor had been demoted to the position of a full-time regular clerk and had been assigned to a different office. Management created a full-time regular position for the supervisor, and the Union grieved the fact that a part-time flexible clerk should have been converted prior to making such an assignment. The parties again "mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case" and remanded it to the regional level. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 8). Accordingly, that decision is not binding on the arbitrator in this case. The settlement agreement is not binding for another reason as well. It involves the American Postal Workers union, and the National Association of Letter Carriers was not a party to it. Likewise, another of the settlement agreements did not involve the National Association of Letter Carriers. (See, Employer's Exhibit No.5). It would not be rational to impose a binding interpretation of a contractual provision on a party when it had no opportunity to represent itself at the negotiated settlement. Yet another settlement agreement involved the National Association of Letter Carriers, but again it was an agreement to remand the dispute to Step 3 because the parties "mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue was fairly presented in this case." (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 3).

Only one of the negotiated settlement agreements might have precedential value in this dispute. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2). In that case, the Union protested when a supervisor was transferred from another office and given a vacant, full-time position in the Letter Carrier craft, despite the availability of a part-time flexible letter carrier for conversion to a full-time regular position. The settlement agreement at Step 4 incorporated a memorandum on transfers prepared during Postmaster General Bolger's administration. (See, Tr. II, p. 39 re: The Bolger Memorandum of April 6, 1979). The arbitrator received evidence to the effect that the Bolger memorandum was devised to provide guidelines for voluntary reassignments and transfers. The parties incorporated the following verbiage into the agreement:

> Full-time nonbargaining unit employees will be reassigned into full-time positions unless the reassignment is to a vacant bargaining unit position.
> All employes reassigned to positions in the bargaining unit will have their seniority established in accordance with the applicable collective bargaining agreement. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 2).

The Bolger Memorandum gave support to the Union's contention that seniority for reassigned employes is to be determined in accordance with the National Agreement and that such reassignments are to respect the contractual seniority provisions. While the Bolger Memorandum purported only to furnish guidelines, its incorporation into the Settlement Agreement gave it the potential force of a binding precedent. The Settlement Agreement gave the grievant, a part-time flexible employe, the status of a full-time regular employe and placed him in the bid position that previously had been awarded to the reassigned supervisor. The supervisor was not reassigned as a part-time flexible employe, however, but as an "unassigned regular."

The remedial portion of the grievance in this settlement agreement has not been read as permitting reassignment of supervisory personnel in an "unassigned regular" status in all cases. In this grievance, the Union did not ask that the former supervisor be reclassified as a part-time flexible employe in its request for corrective action. More importantly, the record showed that, when the Step 4 negotiated settlement agreement was reached by the parties, the postal facility in question had no part-time flexible employes at that particular work site. (See, Union's Exhibit No. 13 and Tr. IV, p. 61). In other words, no employe's seniority rights were implicated in the decision to classify the former supervisor as an unassigned regular. The point is that the only aspect of this settlement agreement binding in this case is the statement of principle from the Bolger Memorandum. The remedial section, because it failed adequately to address the same issues as those before the arbitrator in this case, is limited to its own facts and does not decide the issues of whether and under what circumstances a reassigned supervisor may be given full-time regular status when there are part-time flexible employes awaiting conversion. None of the settlement agreements submitted to the arbitrator proved to be instructive in this regard.

D. The Matter of Past Practice

The Employer argued that the precedential value of the negotiated settlement agreements it submitted to the arbitrator, should determine the outcome of this proceeding. There however, was nothing in the settlement agreements that indicated a mutual intent of the parties to supersede the language of their agreement or the Handbook with respect to seniority. (See, Case No. H4C-3W-C 28547, p. 32). Alternatively, the Employer argued that past practice between the parties modified or interpreted the language of the National Agreement to permit the Employer to reassign former craft members to the craft in a status designated by management. Almost three decades ago, the parties' own Richard Mittenthal set forth the preeminent instruction on the topic of past practice, and nothing since has surpassed its insightfulness and wisdom, although others have borrowed heavily from it. (See, e.g., NYU Fifteenth Annual Conference on Labor, 311 (1962)). Arbitrator Mittenthal set forth the virtually universally accepted tests of a past practice when he asked if it has (1) clarity and consistency; (2) longevity and repetition; (3) acceptability; and (4) mutuality. (See, Mittenthal, "Past Practice and the Administration of Collective Bargaining Agreements," Proceedings of the Fourteenth Annual Meeting, National Academy of Arbitrators, 30, 32-3 (1961). Evidence submitted by the Employer with respect to the past practice of the parties failed to establish that management's decisions to reassign supervisors to bargaining unit positions met these well-established criteria, and it is clear that the Employer has the burden of establishing the past practice whose existence it has asserted. (See, Case No. W1N-5C-C 23743, p. 11).

Evidence submitted to the arbitrator failed to establish a clear pattern of reassigning former supervisors to full-time regular status. Nor did the evidence clearly establish an enunciated policy to do so. Instead, the data showed that management has acted at its discretion, sometime assigning returning supervisors to full-time regular status and sometimes to part-time flexible status. (See, Employer's Exhibit No. 9). Nationwide data on reassignment of supervisors from 1981 to 1989 showed that approximately thirty percent of supervisors returning to the craft in a different installation were reassigned as full-time regular employes. But eighty-seven percent of those returning to the same office were reassigned as full-time regular employes. Other data for fourteen selected cities showed that, except in Richmond, Virginia, returning supervisors were overwhelmingly reassigned as full-time regular employes. (See, Employer's Exhibit Nos. 10-20, 42, 43, 44, and 45(A)).

The problem with these data is that they fail consistently to show whether the returning supervisor was out of the craft for more or less than two years. A supervisor who returns to the same installation in the Letter Carrier craft after an absence of less than two years does not forfeit accumulated seniority under Article 41.2 of the parties' agreement. In other words, reassignment of a full-time regular employe would be consistent with the seniority provisions of the agreement. Nor have the data indicated the underpinning for decisions to reassign some supervisors as part-time flexible employes. Moreover, some of the personnel actions on data submitted to the arbitrator might later have been modified. (See, Tr. II, 17). Finally, not all supervisors involved were returned to the Letter Carrier craft. The Maintenance Craft does not have part-time flexible employes, so a return to full-time regular status in that craft would not indicate a practice of reassigning supervisors as full-time regulars at the expense of eligible part-time bargaining unit employes.

In summary, the data are not clear, consistent evidence of management's past practice of reassigning supervisors to full-time regular status in the Letter Carrier craft. Some of the data are consistent with the National Agreement. Some appear to violate it. Some are irrelevant to this dispute. The point is that management failed to show a clear and consistent practice of reassignment contrary to seniority provisions in the parties' National Agreement. Nor has it shown that such a practice, even if it existed, enjoyed mutual agreement. The existence of a number of grievances from a variety of geographical areas argue against such a position. The evidence failed to establish that the parties modified their agreement by past practice.

E. The Teaching of the Agreement

It is the teaching of the parties' agreement which is paramount in guiding an arbitrator. Although other sources such as negotiated settlement agreements or past practices of the parties might be instructive in the absence of clear contractual guidance, it is the negotiated agreement which is always preeminent. Article 41.2(D)(6)(b) of the parties' agreement states:

> Part-time flexible letter carriers shall be converted to full-time positions of the same designation and PS salary level in the order of their standing on the part-time flexible roll. (See, Joint Exhibit 1(B), p. 109).

Part-time flexible employes have been expressly covered in the seniority clause of the parties' agreement. One of their important seniority rights is the order of conversion to full-time regular status. To argue that status and seniority are separable issues overlooks the fact that reassignment of a supervisor into full-time regular status may cost a part-time flexible employe his or her advancement to full-time regular status. But for the reassigned supervisor, a part-time flexible employe could have converted to a more secure position. Accordingly, the reassignment of a supervisor who has not retained his or her seniority to full-time regular status violates the seniority right of part-time flexible employes waiting to convert. It should be noted that this contractual right is consistent with presumptions applied by arbitrators in the absence of contractual language about the seniority status of individuals returning to a bargaining unit. As one arbitrator has observed, "the great weight of arbitral authority" supports the proposition that an employe who leaves the bargaining unit and returns should not be preferred over an employe with the same or equal seniority who remains in the unit. (See, Folger Coffee Co., 60 LA 353, 355 (1973)).

At the arbitration hearing, Mr. William Henry, Special Assistant to the Assistant Postmaster General for Labor Relations, testified about his understanding of the difference between status and seniority rights. He stated:

ANSWER: When [a former supervisor] would go back to the craft, he went back at full-time status, but-we're obligated by contract to maintain the seniority provisions, which put this individual at the one date junior to the junior part-time flexible employee or substitute employee at that time.

QUESTION: Was there and is there a difference between seniority and status?

ANSWER: Well, yes, there is a difference. If a person is returned to craft as a full-time individual, he has the right to bid. Whereas, a part-time flexible doesn't. Seniority places him in the appropriate order for bidding among full-time employees, if you will. Now, this individual who is placed one day junior to the junior part-time flexible, as each part-time flexible who is on the list above him becomes full-time, he goes ahead of him on the seniority register. So that any given point in time when they're converted to full-time status, they have bidding rights by virtue of their seniority which is senior to this individual. Until that happens, he has a right to bid. But his seniority, not just for bidding but for other purposes under the Agreement, is one day junior to the junior part-time flexible. (See, Tr. II, p. 28).

Management's explanation of the difference between status and seniority, however, did not take into account the impact of part-time flexible seniority for conversion to full-time regular status. Inevitably, reassigning a former supervisor to full-time regular status impedes the advancement a part-time flexible employe could, otherwise, have expected to occur.

The Employer's position, in effect, has been that conversion to full-time regular status is not an automatic right for part-time flexible employes. The National Agreement determines the order in which part-time flexible employes are converted, but it does not guarantee that they will automatically be converted to the first full-time regular vacancy. Although this is a potentially valid construction of the agreement, Section 522 of the P-11 Handbook narrow this possible construction of the agreement. It states:

> Promotions to positions where full time employees and part-time flexible employees are authorized are usually to part-time flexible positions. A full-time regular position is not normally filled by promotion, reinstatement, reassignment, transfer or appointment if qualified part-time flexible employees of the same designation or occupational code are available for conversion to the position. Part-time flexible employees must be changed to full-time regular positions within the installation in the order specified by any applicable collective bargaining agreement. (See Employer's Exhibit No. 33, emphasis added.)

In other words, the parties' agreement, pursuant to Article 19, makes clear that the norm is to fill full-time regular vacancies from the ranks of part-time flexible employes. This provision does not preclude filling vacancies from other than the ranks of part-time flexible employes. It, however, does establish that the Employer does not have unfettered discretion to determine the status of a reassigned supervisor. The point is that this language in the P-11 Handbook, which has been incorporated into the agreement through Article 19, places the burden on management to establish why it is reassigning a supervisor to full-time regular status, if such reassignment impairs seniority rights of part-time flexible employes. This construction is consistent with the overall contractual framework of protecting important rights of seniority for bargaining unit members. As the United States Supreme Court has recognized,"more than any other provision of the collection agreement ... seniority affects the economic security of the individual employee covered by its terms." (See, Franks v. Bowman Transportation Co., Inc., 424.U.S. 747, 766 (1976)).

In view of this interpretation of the parties' agreement and P-11 Handbook, the Employer has failed to justify its decisions to place former supervisors into full-time regular positions in Case Nos. H7N-2A-C 4340 (St. George, Utah); H7N-2U-C 4618 (Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania); H7N-5K-C 10423 (Fairfax, Virginia); and H4N-5N-C 41526 (Santa Clara, California). In the case from St. George, Utah, management reassigned a former carrier who had been a supervisor for more than two years as a full-time regular employe, even though he was placed at the bottom of the seniority list so that converted part-time flexible employes would have senior bidding rights to his after their conversion. In that case, the former supervisor should have been placed on part-time flexible status, and the unassigned regular position created for him should have been filled as a reserve position.

In the Clifton Heights, Pennsylvania case, the former carrier who was demoted to a junior carrier at a different installation was given full-time regular status. Under Article 41 of the National Agreement, transferring to a different installations obliterates accumulated seniority rights regardless of how long the supervisor has been out of the craft. The agreement states that:

> Seniority is computed from date of appointment in the Letter Carrier Craft and continues to accrue so long as service is uninterrupted in the Letter Carrier Craft in the same installation, except as otherwise specifically provided. (See, Joint Exhibit 1(D), p. 108, emphasis added).

In other words, the reassigned supervisor should have been reassigned to a different office, and the senior part-time flexible employe at the Clifton Heights facility should have been promoted to fill the vacancy.

In the Fairfax, Virginia case, Article 41.2(A)(2) also applied. The former carrier should have lost his seniority because he transferred to a different office as a supervisor. He should have been reassigned as a junior part-time flexible employe.

The case from Santa Clara, California presented an unresolved fact. Did the reassigned supervisor's Letter of Resignation ever go into effect, and, consequently, should he have been considered a "rehire?" That particular case needs to be remanded to the parties for consideration of this factual issue, and a determination consistent with this decision should be reached.

In the case from Laramie, Wyoming, the grievant served as a supervisor for less than two years. Then, he returned to the craft. All the time was spent at the same installation. The Employer reassigned him as a part-time flexible employe, but he had not lost his seniority rights and should have been reassigned as a full-time regular worker. He must be made whole for any losses.

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the grievances should be sustained in a manner consistent with this report, recognizing the need to remand Case No. H4N-5N-C 41526 for a factual determination and ultimate decision consistent with this award. It is so ordered and awarded.

BACKGROUND Q06N-4Q-C 11111196

This grievance involves a carrier who was excessed and involuntarily reassigned on May 21, 2010 from the North Bergen, New Jersey installation to the Elizabeth, New Jersey installation. Ten days later a carrier in the North Bergen installation retired, thereby creating a vacancy in that installation. Grievant sought to exercise his contractual right to retreat to North Bergen when the carrier retired.

The NALC took the position that the excessed carrier in the Elizabeth installation must be retreated back to the North Bergen installation so he could bid on assignments posted at that installation. The Postal Service took the position that the excessed carrier may only be returned to a residual vacancy. In July 2010, the NALC filed a grievance, and it was appealed to arbitration at the regional level. In March 2011, while the case was pending at regional arbitration, the NALC elevated the grievance to the national interpretive step. At arbitration, the NPMHU intervened in support of the NALC's position.

The stipulated issue in this case is whether Article 12, Section 5.C.5.b.(6) of the 2006 National Agreement is violated when involuntarily reassigned city letter carriers are required to exercise their retreat rights specifically on residual vacancies in the level from which they were excessed in their original installation.

There are two levels in the city carrier craft: CC1 and CC2. Generally, the CC1 carrier delivers mail on the same route five days per week and the CC2 carrier covers a string of five routes per week. CC2 carriers earn higher pay than CC1 carriers. The term "unassigned regular" is used in those instances where a full-time letter carrier does not hold a duty assignment with set duties. Unassigned regular positions are level CC1 positions and have regularly scheduled hours and days off.

Article 41 of the parties' 2006 National Agreement outlines the way in which a vacancy is filled through the bidding process. When a CC1 or CC2 vacancy arises in an installation, it either must be posted for bid or reverted. Subject to certain limitations, the Postal Service determines whether a position should be posted as a vacancy for bid or should be reverted. If the Postal Service decides not to revert a position, the vacancy must be posted within 30 days of the date it becomes vacant. Vacant assignments not under consideration for reversion must be posted for bid within 14 days of creation of the duty assignment or the vacancy, unless otherwise locally negotiated. Once a vacant duty assignment is posted for bid, a notice inviting bids will be posted for 10 days, unless otherwise locally negotiated. The senior qualified bidder shall be the successful bidder and once placed in the vacant position, his or her position becomes vacant. Then that vacant duty assignment goes through the same Article 41 process (reversion or posted for bid). This continuance of the Article 41 process is referred to as a "chain of bidding." If a vacancy is posted for bid, but no one successfully bids on it, then it becomes a residual vacancy. When a vacancy first occurs, there are three possibilities: reversion, a residual vacancy (if no one bids), or a chain of bidding followed by reversion or a residual vacancy.[1]

Cited provisions of Article 12 of the applicable 2006 NALC National Agreement are as follows:

ARTICLE 12
PRINCIPLES OF SENIORITY, POSTING AND REASSIGNMENTS

Section 4. Principles of Reassignments

A. A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service. Reassignments will be made in accordance with this Section and the provisions of Section 5 below.

* * *

C. When employees are excessed out of their installation, the National Business Agent of the Union may request at the Area level a comparative work hour report of the losing installation 60 days after the excessing of such employees.

[1] In a small installation the process may be completed relatively quickly, but in a larger installation, it might take a year or longer.

If a review of the report does not substantiate that business conditions warranted the action taken, such employees shall have their retreat rights activated. If the retreat right is denied, the employees have the right to the grievance-arbitration procedure.

* * *

Section 5. Reassignments

* * *

C. Special Provisions on Reassignments

In addition to the general principles and requirements above specified, the following specific provisions are applicable:

* * *

4. Reassignment Within an Installation of Employees Excess to the Needs of a Section

* * *

c. Such reassigned full-time employee retains the right to retreat to the section from which withdrawn only upon the occurrence of the first residual vacancy in the salary level after employees in the section have completed bidding. Such bidding in the section is limited to employees in the same salary level as the vacancy. Failure to bid for the first available vacancy will end such retreat right. . . .

* * *

5. Reduction in the Number of Employees in an Installation Other Than by Attrition

* * *

b. Reassignments to other installations after making reassignments within the installation:

* * *

(6) Employees involuntarily reassigned under b(1) and (2) above, other than senior employees who elect to be reassigned in place of junior employees, shall be entitled at the time of such reassignment to file a written request to be returned to the first vacancy in the level, in the craft or occupational group in the installation from which reassigned, and such request shall be honored so long as the employee does not withdraw it or decline to accept an opportunity to return in accordance with such request.

In the Clerk Craft, an employee(s) involuntarily reassigned shall be entitled at the time of such reassignment to file a written request to return to the first vacancy in the craft and installation from which reassigned. . . . The employee(s) shall have the right to bid for vacancies within the former installation and the written request for retreat rights shall serve as a bid for all vacancies in the level from which the employee was reassigned and for all residual vacancies in other levels for which the employee has expressed a desire to retreat. . . .

8. Reassignment -- Part-Time Flexible Employees in Excess of Quota (Other than Motor Vehicle)

* * *

e. Part-time flexibles reassigned to another craft in the same installation shall be returned to the first part-time flexible vacancy within the craft and level from which reassigned.

f. Part-time flexibles reassigned to other installations have retreat rights to the next such vacancy according to their standing on the part-time flexible roll in the losing installation but such retreat right does not extend to part-time flexibles who elect to request reassignment in place of the junior part-time flexibles.

g. The right to return is dependent upon a written request made at the time of reassignment from the losing installation and such request shall be honored unless it is withdrawn or an opportunity to return is declined.

(Underlining added.)

NALC POSITION

The NALC argues that Article 12, Section 5.C.5.b.(6) makes no reference to "residual" vacancies; therefore, under the plain language of the provision the Postal Service obligation to honor the employee's request to retreat is triggered as soon as the "first vacancy" occurs in the employee's level and craft in the original installation. It explains that this does not necessarily mean that in all cases the employee must be returned to the original installation immediately. The precise timing of the reassignment is on a case-by-case basis and is governed by "the primary principle" set forth in Article 12, Section 4.A, that "in effecting reassignments...dislocation and inconvenience to employees...will be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service."

The NALC points out that Section 5.C.5.b.(6) permits excessed employees to request to return to "the first vacancy," not "the first residual vacancy." It argues that these terms are not synonymous. A first vacancy occurs immediately and a residual vacancy will not be established until a chain of bidding has been completed and no one bids on a posted assignment. Section 5.C.5.b.(6) does not require that an excessed employee be placed in a specific, permanent bid assignment. It simply requires the Postal Service to honor an employee's request to return to the first vacancy, which is a flexible formulation that allows an employee to be accommodated while the bidding process is underway.

The NALC contends that its interpretation of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) is reinforced by related provisions of Article 12. It asserts that there are recurring references to retreat rights throughout Article 12 which clearly show that retreat rights are not presumptively linked to the completion of the bid process and the establishment of a residual vacancy. One example is Article 12, Section 4.C, which requires the Postal Service to provide the Union, upon request, a comparative work hour report 60 days after an excessing event. Depending on the review of the work hours report an employee may have his or her retreat rights activated. The NALC explains that these retreat rights are not contingent upon the existence of residual assignments, but on the continued existence of work hours which had been projected to decline. Another example cited by the NALC is the provision in Article 12, Section 5.C.5.a.(5), under which an employee reassigned to a different craft within the same installation is to be "returned at the first opportunity to the craft from which reassigned." The retreat right in this situation, the NALC notes, is made contingent on the existence of the first work opportunity, not the establishment of a residual vacancy.

The NALC also points to Article 12, Section 8, which covers the excessing of part-time flexible employees (PTFs) in the same installation or to other installations. The language in paragraphs e, f, and g, providing for the exercise of retreat rights by these employees is virtually identical to the wording of Section 5.C.5.b.(6). PTFs do not occupy specific duty assignments and do not bid on assignments. The only PTF vacancies that can exist are vacancies in the complement, not a residual vacant duty assignment. The NALC argues that the fact that the retreat rights of PTFs are defined in the same contractual language as that which appears in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) further illustrates that Section 5.C.5.b.(6) retreat rights likewise do not depend on the existence of a residual vacancy.

The NALC stresses that one section of Article 12 does expressly restrict the exercise of retreat rights to residual vacancies. Section 5.C.4 covers reassignments within an installation of employees excess to the needs of a section. Paragraph c of this section allows such reassigned full-time employees to retreat, but "only upon the occurrence of the first residual vacancy in the salary level after employees in the section have completed bidding." The NALC argues that this is the exception which proves the rule. It shows that the drafters of Article 12 knew how to link retreat rights to residual vacancies when they intended to do so.

The NALC stresses that any ambiguity in the meaning of the specific reassignment rules set forth in Article 12, Section 5.C must be resolved in accordance with the "principles of reassignments" set forth in Section 4. The four basic "principles of reassignment" set forth in Section 4 were negotiated in 1973 and purposefully placed in a new section preceding the specific reassignment rules in Section 5 to reflect the parties' specific intent that these principles would "overarch the rest of the provisions of Article 12," as testified to by Postal Service witness Brian Gillespie -- one of the negotiators -- in a 2000 national arbitration hearing in Case No. H0C-NA-C 12.

The most fundamental principle is the first, set forth in paragraph A: "[a] primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service." According to the NALC, management's position in this case is in direct conflict with this primary principle, for the following reasons. First, involuntary excessing invariably causes inconvenience and dislocation because employees, as a minimum, will have to travel longer distances from home to get to work and will incur additional costs. Second, the deferral of an excessed employee's return to the original installation until a residual vacancy is available prolongs inconvenience and dislocation to the employee. Finally, the return of an excessed employee prior to the completion of the bidding process can be accomplished in a manner which is consistent with the needs of the Postal Service.

The NALC argues that in a typical situation, a vacancy leaves at least 40 hours of work to be assigned while the bidding process is underway. In these situations, the excessed employee would simply be treated as an "unassigned regular" and assigned whatever work was available until the bid process was completed, after which they would be permanently assigned either by bidding or by involuntary assignment. The NALC recognizes that there may be some situations where there is not sufficient work and advocates for a case by case approach, which it contends is consistent with the language of Article 12, Section 4.A.

The NALC argues that the Postal Service's past practice argument falls short of establishing a consistent, nationwide past practice accepted and followed by both parties. The Postal Service's single witness, Manager Robert Brenker, acknowledged on cross examination that he could recall only two instances involving the potential excessing and retreat of letter carriers under Article 12, both occurring during his tenure as an NALC officer in Portchester, New York in the early 1970s. The first instance, when letter carrier routes were motorized, was in 1973 and no letter carriers were excessed in Portchester. Brenker also acknowledged that he did not know how many carriers may have been excessed, or subsequently exercised retreat rights, anywhere else in Westchester County, where Portchester is located. The second instance involved the automation of central forwarding in 1974 which took work from letter carriers that may have led to excessing. However, Brenker acknowledged that no letter carriers were excessed out of Portchester. The Postal Service's evidence corroborates the testimony of NALC Vice President Lew Drass that there has been very little excessing in the letter carrier craft. Moreover, the NALC points out that Brenker also admitted that successive NALC national officers consistently disagreed with management's approach to retreat rights during meetings of the national Article 12 work group about which he testified.

The NALC refutes the Postal Service's argument that the NALC's position is inconsistent with those provisions of Article 12 in the 2006 National Agreement requiring that employees be excessed and retreat within their pay levels.[2] The NALC argues that its interpretation of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) would not result in excessed carriers being returned to a different pay level. The grievant in this case was a CC1 carrier when he was excessed. The carrier who retired shortly thereafter was also a CC1. Thus, the first vacancy in North Bergen, which grievant sought to return to, was a CC1 position. Moreover, at the time the grievance arose there was a CC2 at North Bergen who was junior to the grievant. If the grievant had been returned in a timely manner, he would have had the right to exercise his seniority to outbid this CC2 employee for an available CC1 vacancy. It was the deferral of the grievant's return that created the possibility that the residual vacancy would be the CC2 position. Under the restrictive terms of the 2006 contract, the grievant could no longer be retreated once that had occurred. The NALC maintains that the Postal Service's arguments reflect a hypothetical scenario, not the facts of this case. Under the NALC's approach, a CC1 carrier could be retreated as a CC1 "unassigned regular." That carrier would remain a CC1 while the bidding process was underway. While there are scenarios where the employee ultimately would obtain a CC2 assignment which becomes vacant during a bid cycle -- either by successful bid or by involuntary assignment as a junior employee -- those results would follow from the operation of other contractual provisions.[3] The NALC argues that a reassignment of a CC1 carrier to a CC2 position within the installation after his return as a CC1 does not present a conflict with Section 5.C.5.b.(6).

[2] As noted at the hearing, the NALC points out that this pay level issue is relevant only because the present grievance arose under the 2006 Agreement. The current Agreement was modified to eliminate pay levels as a restriction on excessing and retreat of letter carrier craft employees.

The NALC also stresses that under its position, Section 5.C.5.b.(6) may be applied on a case-by-case basis so as not to conflict with the Postal Service's right to revert carrier assignments or to lead to a "second excessing" of the same employee. For example, if the Postal Service is in the process of reverting an assignment, delaying the return of a previously excessed employee may be justified and the NALC's approach does not preclude this result. Moreover, the Postal Service does not have unfettered discretion to revert letter carrier route assignments. Reversions must be justified by current data establishing that the route consists of less than eight hours work. If the rules are properly applied, when the first vacancy occurs the Postal Service will have an objective basis for knowing whether the potential retreat of an excessed carrier will conflict with the needs of the service. Similarly, if the Postal Service reasonably predicts that returning an employee to an unassigned regular position would obligate the Postal Service to pay out-of-schedule premium pay to the employee on a recurring basis, management could cite the scheduling problem as a reason why honoring the employee's request to return would not be consistent with the needs of the Postal Service.

NPMHU POSITION

Intervenor NPMHU supports the NALC's position in its post-hearing brief and submitted a letter in lieu of its own post-hearing brief. The NPMHU argues that the plain language of Article 12, Section 5.C.5.b.(6) does not include language restricting retreat rights to when a position is not filled through the bidding process, nor does it include a "residual" vacancy limitation. The provision makes it clear that the Postal Service shall allow an excessed employee to retreat or return to his or her former installation once there exists the "first vacancy" in the excessed employee's level at the former installation. The NPMHU contends that the Postal Service's proposed interpretation requires the Arbitrator to read "residual" into a provision in which it does not appear. This would fundamentally change the plain meaning of the contract and would exceed the Arbitrator's authority.

The NPMHU also disputes the Postal Service's contention that the NALC's position would require it to create an unassigned regular position. Because the returning employee will not hold a duty assignment at the time he or she returns to the installation, the employee temporarily will assume the status of an unassigned regular with a fixed schedule, the schedule of the first vacancy triggering retreat rights, a status that will end at the conclusion of the bidding process. Any potential costs to the Postal Service are minor compared to the adverse impact on the employee who has been excessed out of the installation and are part of the Postal Service's contractual commitment to minimize "dislocation and inconvenience to employees" in the reassignment process. Moreover, as explained by the NALC, its proposed interpretation is not inconsistent with the Postal Service's right to revert a position and would not lead to additional excessing.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

The Postal Service contends that the 2006 National Agreement requires excessed carriers to exercise their retreat rights on the first residual vacancy in their level in their original installation. The contract should be read as a whole, and, if possible, every word and every provision should be given effect. The NALC's interpretation ignores the fact that the level of the first vacancy will be unknown until the Article 41 bidding process is complete, and it results in a residual vacancy. When a duty assignment becomes vacant in an installation, making it a "first vacancy," three possibilities ensue: the vacancy can be reverted, it can become a residual vacancy, or it can be filled through the Article 41 bidding process. Only once there is a residual vacancy will the Postal Service know whether it will be "in the level" and if the employee is able to exercise his or her retreat rights to the position.

The Postal Service stresses that the term "returned to the first vacancy" in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) must be harmonized with the phrase "in the level...in the installation from which reassigned...," and this language must be read in the context of the entire National Agreement, specifically Article 41. The only way the above phrase can be given meaning is to wait until the Article 41 process concludes with a CC1 or CC2 residual vacancy.

The Postal Service contends that its interpretation is consistent with the intent of Article 12.4.A, which provides: "A primary principle in effecting reassignments will be that dislocation and inconvenience to employees in the regular work force shall be kept to a minimum, consistent with the needs of the service." (Emphasis added.) The NALC's interpretation would cause an increased rate of excessing and disruption. The excessed employee could only come back into a new unassigned regular position until the Article 41 bidding process is complete. The Postal Service stresses that not only is there no contractual obligation to create these new unassigned regular positions to accommodate retreat rights, but this course of action is operationally inefficient for at least two reasons. First, retreating an excessed employee prior to a residual vacancy can potentially lead to a second excessing if Management decides to revert a vacancy during the Article 41 bidding process. Second, unassigned regular positions do not have a set duty assignment and any change to their schedule to meet operational needs would require out-of-schedule premium pay. Since an unassigned regular carrier without a set duty assignment is more likely to be needed to work outside his or her regularly scheduled hours, premium pay is more likely to be paid. This adverse financial impact is inconsistent with the needs of the Postal Service.

The Postal Service maintains that it has a longstanding practice of retreating employees to residual vacancies. The relevant language in Article 12.5.C.5.b.(6) has appeared unchanged in the National Agreement since 1963. Since that time there were at least two earlier excessing events involving NALC members -- one in 1973 relating to motorizing city carrier routes in Westchester County, New York, and another in 1974 relating to the central forwarding system. Robert Brenker, Manager of Strategic Complement Reassignment at Postal Headquarters, testified that on those occasions -- when he was an NALC local official in Portchester, New York -- the Postal Service took the position it always has taken that excessed employees could only retreat back to a residual vacancy in their original installation. The Postal Service points out that while the NALC tries to argue that "there's not much excessing" in the bargaining unit, this does not preclude the establishment of a customary practice. Moreover, in recent years, beginning in 2008, the Postal Service met with the NALC leadership as part of Article 12 work group meetings, and maintained its position that retreat rights can be exercised only on residual vacancies.

The Postal Service acknowledges that it has an obligation to honor an excessed employee's request to return to his or her original installation in a manner which minimizes disruption to the employee consistent with the needs of the Postal Service. The NALC's position, according to the Postal Service, could increase disruption because the operational and staffing needs of the Postal Service cannot be known with any certainty until a vacancy goes through the Article 41 process, and either a reversion or a residual vacancy results from the process. The outcome of the Article 41 process could be realized right away (in the case of a smaller installation) or up to a year later (for a larger installation).

The Postal Service argues that Article 12.4.C is irrelevant to the instant dispute because retreat rights under that section are automatic; there is no "first vacancy" and no "request by the employee," per se, to honor. If the Union requests a comparative work hour report under Article 12.4.C, and the report shows that there is sufficient work in the installation for the excessed employees to perform, then the excessed employee can be returned to his or her original installation automatically. Since the comparative work hour report is a before-and-after snapshot of the work in the installation, and is used to substantiate Management's excessing decision, it is assessing the "needs of the Postal Service."

The Postal Service also argues that the NALC's comparison pertaining to PTFs is not relevant to this interpretive matter. PTF positions are not duty assignments and are not required to be posted for bid under Article 41, and therefore, PTF residual vacancies do not, and have never, existed.

The Postal Service insists that the most reasonable interpretation of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) is to retreat employees into a residual vacancy. The ambiguity from the omitted term "residual" only can be resolved by adopting the most reasonable interpretation.

The Postal Service notes that none of the parties advocates a plain language reading of Section 5.C.5.b.(6). Such a reading would violate Article 41, which allows management the option to revert the vacancy or to post it for bidding. Retreating an employee to the "first" vacancy without posting it for bid also potentially could violate the seniority provisions of the contract if a more senior carrier than the excessed carrier wanted to bid for that vacancy.

The Postal Service asserts that the NALC does not take the literal, plain language reading of "first vacancy," but rather contends that the Postal Service is obligated to return the employee to the work available in the original installation -- not to a specific position. However, the National Agreement does not impose an obligation on the Postal Service to create a new unassigned regular position simply to effectuate retreat rights. Moreover, a newly created unassigned regular position is not a vacancy.

In contrast, the Postal Service takes a straightforward interpretation of requiring involuntarily assigned city letter carriers to exercise their retreat rights specifically on residual vacancies in the level from which they were excessed in their original installation. Even the NALC admits to the reasonableness of this interpretation in some circumstances, taking the position that whether or not the employee would get to return prior to the establishment of a residual vacancy would have to be determined on a case-by-case basis.

FINDINGS

The retreat right provided for in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) is "to be returned to the first vacancy in the level, in the craft. . .in the installation from which reassigned." Not only must there be a vacancy in the level, but the right provided for in this provision is to be returned "to the first vacancy." Section 5.C.5.b.(6) does not state that an excessed carrier has a right to be returned to the installation when there is a vacancy (or a vacancy occurs) -- which in effect is what the NALC argues for in this case -- but to be returned to the vacancy.[4] Moreover, it is

[4] The provision in Article 12, Section 4.C, cited by the NALC does not tie the activation of retreat rights to a vacancy. Basically, that provision serves to undo the excessing which resulted in the undisputed that until returned to the installation from which the carrier was excessed, in this case North Bergen, a carrier has no right to bid on any vacancy that occurs at that installation.[5]

There is no dispute that Section 5.C.5.b.(6) does not apply so as to require that a reassigned employee be placed in the first vacancy in the level that arises at the former installation. For example, on the facts of this case, grievant had no right to be returned directly to the vacancy created by the retirement of the CC1 carrier at North Bergen. The parties agree that vacancy had to be posted -- if not reverted by the Postal Service -- and filled through the seniority and bidding process in Article 41. The parties further agree that if the Postal Service does not exercise its right to revert a position, all succeeding vacancies in the chain of bidding similarly are to be filled by posting. On the basis of the record in this case, the only vacancy at North Bergen that grievant could be returned to from Elizabeth, consistent with the National Agreement, would be a residual vacancy. If there was some other vacancy he could be returned to, his retreat rights under Section 5.C.5.b.(6) would be triggered by the existence of that vacancy. The reason he only can be returned to a residual vacancy is not because the wording of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) limits his right to return "to the first vacancy" to a residual vacancy, to the exclusion of other vacancies, but because there is no other vacancy that he can be returned to consistent with application of Article 41.

The NALC contends that when the first vacancy in the CC1 level arose at North Bergen, grievant should have been returned to North Bergen and treated as (given the status of) an unassigned regular. But that would not be returning grievant to a vacancy. The status of an unassigned regular does not constitute a vacancy.

employee's involuntary reassignment. Article 12.4.C does not offer a useful analogy for purposes of resolving the issue in this case. Likewise, the provisions of Article 5.C.8 relating to retreat rights of excessed PTFs to PTF vacancies are not analogous due to the very different nature of PTF vacancies and how they are filled.

[5] The situation would be different in the case of an excessed clerk as separately provided for in the second paragraph of Section 5.C.5.b.(6).

Therefore, while Section 5.C.5.b.(6) does not use the term "residual vacancy," that is the only vacancy to which a carrier involuntarily reassigned to another location could be returned consistent with other provisions of the National Agreement.

The NALC points to the language in Article 12, Section 5.C.4.c which provides that an employee involuntarily reassigned to a different section in the same installation retains the right to retreat to the "first residual vacancy." Understandably, the NALC argues that if the parties had intended to limit the retreat rights in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) to the "first residual vacancy," they would have stated that as they did in Section 5.C.4.c. The language in issue in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) dates back at least to the 1963 Agreement. While the provision in that Agreement corresponding to the retreat rights now set forth in Section 5.C.4.c is not in evidence, the NPMHU did introduce an excerpt from the 1964 Agreement which includes that provision (Article 12.B.4.c) in its entirety as follows:

> Such reassigned regular employee retains the right to retreat to the section from which withdrawn only upon the occurrence of the first vacancy. Failure to bid for the first available vacancy will end such retreat right.

Thus, it appears that the term "first vacancy" was used in both provisions relating to retreat rights at the time the language in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) at issue here originated.[6] More importantly, the only way in which Section 5.C.5.b.(6) can be applied to provide for a carrier to return from another installation to a "vacancy," consistent with the seniority provisions that both parties agree apply, is a return to a residual vacancy.

The evidence relating to past practice adds no real support to either parties' position. On the apparently rare occasions when carriers may have been excessed to other

[6] There is no evidence as to when or under what circumstances the word "residual" was added to the provision now found in Section 5.C.4.c, but that provision as it appears in the 2006 National Agreement shows considerable revision from how it appeared in 1964. Section 5.C.4.c also differs from Section 5.C.5.b.(6) in that it provides for the right to retreat "upon the occurrence of" the first vacancy (1964) or the first residual vacancy (2006), rather than "to the" first vacancy, and refers to the excessed employee bidding on a vacancy in the section from installations in the past, it appears that the Postal Service has taken the position it takes in this case regarding retreat rights. There is no evidence that the NALC agreed, and, at least in recent years, the NALC has asserted the position it does in this case. There is no evidence of the actual past application of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) that might be helpful in resolving the present dispute.

While the case-by-case approach advocated by the NALC attempts to recognize and harmonize the interests of both excessed employees and the Postal Service consistent with the general principle in Article 12.4.A, there is nothing in the language of Section 5.C.5.b.(6) -- including the words "such request shall be honored" -- that suggests such a case-by-case approach. There also is nothing in Section 5.C.5.b.(6) to suggest that when a vacancy in the level occurs at the carrier's former installation, the excessed carrier -- while not eligible to be placed in the vacancy or to bid on it -- is entitled to be returned to the former installation and to be given the status of an unassigned regular until either able to exercise seniority to bid into a vacancy or involuntarily assigned to a residual vacancy under Article 41. That might be a viable approach -- particularly with the case-by-case consideration proffered by the NALC -- but it is not what Section 5.C.5.b.(6) of the 2006 National Agreement provides for.

For all these reasons, this grievance must be denied.

Dear Mr. Thompson:

Recently, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance concerns the meaning of the "within 100 mile" limit in Article 12.

After discussion, we agreed to settle this grievance as follows:

> The 100 mile criteria identified in Article 12, (e.g. 12.5.C.1.b, 12.5.C.1.d, 12.5.C.1.f, 12.5.C.5.b.(1), and 12.5.C.5.b.(1)(b) is measured as the shortest actual driving distance between installations.

SUBJECT: Mutual Swap Seniority Rules

It has been brought to our attention that a number of facilities have erroneously been applying "mutual swap" seniority rules to members of the mail handler craft.

Unlike the crafts governed by the USPS-AFWU/NALC National Agreement, there are no provisions for the mutual swapping of positions in the USPS-NPMHU National Agreement. In fact, mail handler craft employees who voluntarily transfer to another installation must be assigned as part-time flexibles at the new installation regardless of their status at their previous installation. They must also begin a new period of seniority which is set at one day junior to the seniority of the junior part-time flexible at the new installation (Article 12.2.F1).

The misapplication of these seniority rules and providing misinformation to the affected employees can cause serious ramifications. Please ensure that members of your personnel staff are made aware of this distinction in seniority provisions.

If you have any questions regarding the foregoing, please contact Frank Jacquette (202-268-3843) at your convenience.

Dear Mr. Farris:

On May 27, 1988, we met to rediscuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether local management violated the National Agreement when the grievant's postmaster refused to forward the grievant's personnel folder to another office for evaluation in conjunction with the grievant's request for transfer.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is presented in this case. We also agreed that local management may not refuse to forward an employee's personnel folder to another installation in order to prevent or delay the consideration of the employee's request for transfer.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Dear Mr. Conners:

On January 12, 1983, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the national level under the provisions in Article 15, Section 2, Step 4, and Section 3.(d), of the National Agreement.

The matters presented by you, as well as the applicable contractual provisions, have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The union alleges that management discriminates against employees injured off duty in violation of Article 13 of the collective bargaining agreement when limited-duty assignments are granted preference over light-duty assignments.

While the Postal Service strives to accommodate all injured employees, its responsibilities toward employees injured on duty differ from its responsibilities toward employees whose injuries or illnesses are not job related. As outlined in Part 546, Employee and Labor Relations Manual, the Postal Service has certain legal obligations to employees with job related disabilities pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §8151 and Office of Personnel Management regulations. Article 21, Section 4, of the National Agreement acknowledges these legal obligations toward employees injured on the job and Article 13 recognizes the importance of attempting to accommodate employees whose injuries or illnesses are not job related. However, the statutory and regulatory responsibilities toward on-the-job injuries are obligatory in nature and given priority consideration when assigning ill or injured employees.

The provisions promulgated in Part 546 of the Employee and Labor Relations Manual for reemploying employees partially recovered from a compensable injury on duty were not intended to disadvantage employees who occupy assignments properly secured under the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement. This includes employees occupying permanent or temporary light-duty assignments acquired under the provisions set forth in Article 13 of the National Agreement.

It is our position that these interpretations are consistent with the terms and conditions of the National Agreement.

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative Tim Dwyer to discuss the above captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The first issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement when it sent a letter to an employee and/or the employee's physician requesting clarification and/or information on an employee's medical progress without sending a copy to The Office of Workers' Compensation Programs (OWCP). The second issue is whether management violated the National Agreement when it created locally generated letters.

The parties agree to settle both issues based on language from Handbook EL-505, Injury Compensation dated December 1995, Section 6.3, Contacting the Treating Physician which in part states:

> "When the USPS medical provider or OHNA is unable to do so, contact the treating physician if additional information is needed because of inconsistencies relative to the employee's duty status or if there are incomplete medical reports. (ELM 545.62) The designated control point may contact the treating physician if clarification is needed following the initial examination."
>
> "Send copies of such correspondence to the employee and to the OWCP district office, and forward copies of the physician's response to both, once it is received. "

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this case at this level thereby removing it from the pending Step 4 case listing.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On August 29, 1983, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in this grievance is whether the local memorandum setting forth a policy regarding light duty assignments violates Article 13 of the National Agreement.

The facts in the case file indicate that the policy specifically includes a provision that "temporary light or limited duty assignments will be authorized . . . for a period not to exceed 6 months . . . [A]n extension for 1-3 months . . . may be permitted with medical certification."

During our discussion of this matter, we agreed to the following as a full settlement of this case:

> The specific restrictions contained in the local memo that essentially preclude the authorization of a light duty assignment beyond 9 months is improper. Thus, any absolute language that limits the amount of time a light or limited duty will be authorized, without qualification, shall be stricken from the memo.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On April 21, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

We mutually agreed that there was no interpretive dispute between the parties at the national level as to the meaning and intent of Article XIII of the National Agreement as it relates to the establishment of light duty assignments.

Through local negotiations, light duty assignments may be established by adjusting normal assignments without seriously effecting the production of the assignment, as in Section C.1., or light duty assignments may be established from part-time hours, to consist of 8 hours or less in a service day and 40 hours or less in a service week, as in Section C.2.

In any case, the light duty employee's tour hours, work location and basic work week shall be those of the light duty assignment and the needs of the service, whether or not the same as the employee's previous duty assignment, as indicated by Section C.3.

Application should be a matter to be determined at the local level as required.

Accordingly, as further agreed, this case is hereby remanded back to Step 3 for further processing by the parties at that level.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Dear Mr. Riley:

On October 13, 1977, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

Based on the evidence presented in this grievance, we find that an employee on light duty may be scheduled for duty at such time as the light duty work is available. The employee's "normal schedule does not apply when that employee requests light duty." Local management will make a reasonable effort to reassign the employee to available light duty in his own craft prior to scheduling light duty in another craft.

Therefore, it is our conclusion that no violation of the National Agreement occurred and the grievance is denied.

In the Matter of the Arbitration between	:	Arbitration Case No. N8-NA-0003 Washington, DC
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, AFL-CIO	:
-and-	:	OPINION AND AWARD
UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	:

APPEARANCES:

For the NALC - Cohen, Weiss & Simon
by: Keith E. Secular, Esq.

For the APWU - Cafferky, Powers, Jordan & Lewis
by: Daniel B. Jordan, Esq.

For the Mail Handlers - James S. Ray, Esq.

For the USPS - Richard A. Levin, Esq.

BACKGROUND:

This case was properly processed through the steps in the grievance procedure found in the pertinent collective bargaining agreement. The Parties stipulated that it was in form before the Arbitrator for final and binding determination. The hearing was held at the offices of the USPS in Washington, DC, on October 9, 1979. At that time, the NALC, as the grieving Union, was represented as indicated above. Counsels for the APWU and the Mail Handlers appeared and requested leave to intervene pursuant to Article XV of the Agreement. The NALC and the USPS agreed that they should be afforded status as intervenors and they were represented as also indicated above.

During the course of the hearing, the Parties were given full opportunity to present testimony, other evidence and argument in support of their respective contentions. By agreement, post-hearing briefs were filed. These were received from the NALC and the USPS on January 25, 1980, and their contents were duly considered.

THE ISSUE:

As stipulated:

> When the USPS involuntarily assigns an employee to a limited duty assignment outside of his or her regular work schedule, pursuant to the F-21 and F-22 Handbook and the 1978 National Agreement, must the employee receive out-of-schedule premium pay?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

February 2, 1979, in Case No. NC-S-10828, which arose in Tulsa, Oklahoma, the Undersigned was presented with the following issue:

> Is the USPS obligated to pay overtime compensation, under the provisions of Article VIII, Section 4-B of the 1975 National Agreement, to an employee who is assigned to work hours outside his regular schedule to perform a temporary limited duty assignment while partially incapacitated due to a work related injury or illness?

Obviously, the case presently under consideration and the previous one referred to above are closely related. In the Tulsa case, the NALC argued successfully that Article VIII-Section 4-B entitled the Grievant to premium pay for the out-of-schedule limited duty assignment. The Union contended that such a result had to follow in order to be consistent with a still earlier Award in Case No. AB-C-341, issued in a Fort Wayne, Indiana Case, which was decided on July 27, 1975.

The Union, in the Tulsa Case, argued that any provision to the contrary regarding liability for overtime payment in the F-21 and F-22 Handbooks, which were issued in 1978, could not have any impact upon the validity of the Union's claim which was advanced in a grievance filed on October 6, 1977. Pursuant to the terms of Article XIX of the National Agreement, concerning the applicability of of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the USPS, the specific requirements of these two Handbooks relating to out-of-schedule limited duty assignment pay calculations could not be given retroactive force and effect.

The Award in the Tulsa Case, as indicated above, sustained the Union's position that, pursuant to Article VIII, Section 4-B of the 1975 Agreement, the Grievant was entitled to be paid at the overtime rate for the hours which he worked outside his regular schedule. However, in the earlier Case it was noted that we were dealing with a provision filed prior to the issuance of the F-21 and F-22 Handbooks which took effect in April and early May of 1978, and which had been under consideration from December of 1977, in the case of the F-21, and from February of 1978, in the case of the F-22 Handbook. In this regard, the Undersigned stated:

> "In this proceeding, where we are dealing with a grievance filed prior to the issuance of either of these Handbooks, the question of whether the Union is bound by the terms of such Handbooks now possibly incorporated by reference into the National Agreement pursuant to the provisions of Article XIX is not presented. Nothing in Article XIX suggests that the terms of such Handbooks be given retroactive application. At the same time, it must also be noted that in this proceeding no finding will be made as to whether or not the Union has placed in contention subsequent to their publication under the provisions of Article XIX, or properly challenged, the incorporation by reference of the above-quoted provision of these Handbooks thereafter."

The language in both Handbooks referred to above provides that overtime pay shall not be required for an out-of-schedule assignment under the following circumstances:

"Where the employee's schedule is temporarily changed because he was given a light duty assignment pursuant to Article XIII of the National Agreement or as required by the Federal Employee Compensation Act, as amended."

In this proceeding, the Unions have challenged the contention of the USPS that they failed to prevent the incorporation by reference of this provision in the 1978 Agreement, and for that reason the Service is no longer obligated to make such overtime payments. The Unions have also contended that, contrary to the assertion in that provision of the Handbooks, the Federal Employee Compensation Act does not now require that the Postal Service provide partially disabled employees, who were so disabled by an on-the-job injury or illness, with light or limited duty assignments when such assignments can be made available.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

As indicated above, the Unions claim that the provisions of Article XIX of the National Agreement are not applicable to this dispute since the Unions had already challenged the Service's right to deny overtime payments for limited duty assignments outside of an employee's regular scheduled hours in the Tulsa Case and even earlier. For that reason, a failure to process a challenge to this announced pay practice within 30 days after receipt of the notice of proposed change cannot be regarded as acquiescence.

With regard to this 30 day time limitation in the Agreement, the Unions contended that by practice the Parties had agreed that this requirement could be ignored and had been ignored without penalty. For this reason, discussions between the parties was an open ended process making this appeal to arbitration a timely challenge to the incorporation of this pay practice found in the Handbooks into the National Agreement.

The Unions also claimed that a failure to appeal a handbook revision to arbitration within 30 days does not permit the USPS to change the specific terms of the collective bargaining agreement. Since this failure to provide overtime payments would be contrary to the specific requirements of Article VIII-4-B, such provision could be grieved under the normal provisions of Article XV of the National Agreement. In addition, the Unions raised certain equitable considerations which they alleged warranted consideration in any determination of whether such overtime payments could be avoided.

Finally, the Union claimed that the Federal Employee Compensation Act does not require that the Employer put a partially disabled employee back to work, and implementing regulations issued by the Department of Labor and the Office of Personnel Management also do not impose such a requirement upon the Employer. For this reason, Section 233.23b of the Handbooks cannot be construed to permit the USPS to avoid its overtime obligation to such employees who are returned to duty in an out of schedule assignment.

The USPS made one principal argument with regard to the applicability of the provisions of Section 233.23b of the F21 Handbook. The Employer argued that by ratifying and signing the 1978 National Agreement, with knowledge of the provisions of the F21 and F22 Handbooks denying such overtime payments, the Unions accepted those provisions as being engrafted into the Agreement and not subject to further challenge as to their terms. According to the USPS, Article XIX of the Agreement clearly provides for such a result.

The Postal Service also contended that by operation of the terms of Article XIX the specific provisions of these Handbooks took precedence over the general provisions of Article VIII-4-B, which by their terms did not deal with the subject of out-of-schedule assignments for employees only capable of performing limited or light duty.

The Service also pointed out that the F21 and F22 Handbooks were published while the 1975 Agreement was in effect. Before that Agreement was superseded, the USPS served the notice that it intended to change the terms of the Handbooks upon the Union as required by Article XIX. The Union then had an additional 30 days in which to take those proposed changes to arbitration. Since the Union failed to do so, it must be concluded that it regarded the changes as not inconsistent with the requirements of Article VIII-4-B. There is no question, according to the Postal Service, that the Union knew of the change in pay practice which would result from the implementation of this provision in the Handbooks. It was discussed on numerous occasions, and the Union contended that the dispute over its implementation would be taken to arbitration. This did not happen in timely fashion.

The Postal Service also alleged that the fact it did discuss the implementation of Section 233.23b with certain attorneys who represented various plaintiffs in a Fair Labor Standards Act proceeding more than 30 days after the time to file a request for arbitration under Article XIX could not be regarded as a waiver of the right to impose such a time limit on the Union which was the party with the right to request arbitration. From statements made by spokesmen for the NALC, it was apparent that the Union recognized it had to challenge the implementation of Section 233.23b in arbitration if the Service would not reconcile the terms of that provision with the language in Article VIII-4-B, and the subsequent discussions did not relieve the Union of this obligation.

In responding to the Union's claim that the question of the propriety of denying overtime payments to light duty assignees working out-of-schedule was being controverted at the time that the F-21 and F-22 changes were transmitted to the Union and a subsequent additional demand for arbitration was unnecessary, the Postal Service pointed out that even as late as February of 1978, when the F-22 revisions were sent to the Union, the fourth step decision in the Tulsa Case had not been issued. That was transmitted two months later. For that reason, at least at the National level, pursuant to Article XIX, the Union's objections to the changes in the Handbook should have been made known.

Finally, the USPS asserted that it believed it had an obligation imposed upon it to provide partially disabled employees with limited duty assignments in addition to other good reasons why it should do so. According to the Postal Service, based upon the authority under 5 U.S.C. Section 815(b), when read in conjunction with 5 C.F.R. 353.306, which imposed an obligation to "make every effort" to provide such employment, coupled with 5 C.F.R.353.401, an employee could appeal to the Merit System Protection Board if the USPS did not offer such an employee a limited duty assignment. To prove that an employee waived his or her restoration rights, the USPS would be obliged to demonstrate a job offer was made and the employee did not avail himself or herself of that opportunity. For these and other reasons, which it advanced, the Employer claimed that the Federal Employee Compensation Act imposed a duty upon the Postal Service to "immediately and unequivocally" restore an employee who has recovered sufficiently within one year to perform work in his or her own pay grade.

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

As stated earlier, this Arbitrator has on previous occasions required the Postal Service, pursuant to the provisions of Article VIII-H-B, to pay overtime to employees for time worked outside of their regularly scheduled work week at the request of the Employer. In the Tulsa Case, that duty was imposed when the employees involved were given such out-of-schedule assignments temporarily while performing limited duty because of a partial physical incapacity due to a work related injury or illness.

In the Tulsa Case, the Arbitrator discussed the beneficial results which could be achieved from the rehabilitative effects of such assignments for the employee. Also considered were the considerable savings which might result from getting employees to work at jobs they were capable of handling rather than sitting at home and receiving compensation payments. Regardless of the obvious advantages to the employee and the Service, as well as adherence to the government policy stated in the Federal Employees Compensation Act and implementing regulations of the Civil Service Commission, now Office of Personnel Management, and the Department of Labor, the Undesrigned was of the opinion that the clear language of Article VIII-Section 4-B precluded consideration of these other factors as then urged by the Postal Service. The Award had to take its "essence" from the terms of the Agreement.

The National Agreement provides in Article XIX as follows:

HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

> Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21 Timekeeper's Instructions.
> Notice of such proposed changes that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions will be furnished to the Unions at the national level at least thirty (30) days prior to issuance. At the request of the Unions, the parties shall meet concerning such changes. If the Unions, after the meeting, believe the proposed changes violate the National Agreement (including this Article), they may then submit the issue to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration procedure within thirty (30) days after receipt of the notice of proposed change. Copies of those parts of all new handbooks, manuals and regulations that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall be furnished to the Unions upon issuance.

In the case at hand, there is no dispute that the Unions were furnished with a copy of the proposed F-21 Handbook as revised, pursuant to the requirements of Article XIX, on December 15, 1977. The Parties met on January 13, 1978 to discuss the proposed Handbook contents. On February 16, 1978, the Postal Service transmitted the proposed F-22 Handbook along with certain revisions now proposed to the F-21 Handbook. The Parties met on March 17, 1978 to discuss the proposed contents of the two Handbooks . In the two Handbooks was the following language in Section 233.23b, excusing overtime payment:

> "Where an employee's schedule is temporarily changed because he was given a light duty assignment pursuant to Article XIII of the National Agreement or as required by the Federal Employee Compensation Act, as amended."

At that meeting, according to the testimony in this record, the spokesman for the NALC specifically brought up the Union's objections to making an exception out of involuntary out-of-schedule light duty assignments. He also argued that the Federal Employees Compensation Act did not require the USPS to make limited duty assignments. In the earlier Tulsa Case, this same witness indicated that he believed he told the Postal Service at the time he would arbitrate the issue and that arbitration was subsequently demanded. Before testifying in the present case, he learned that meetings had been requested but arbitration proceedings had not been invoked. Although this witness testified that he was of the opinion that the contentions made in the Tulsa Case covered the Union's position in this dispute, he obviously believed that the Postal Service was changing something because he indicated that an implementation of the Service's proposal to comply with Section 233.23b warranted processing a grievance on such an issue to arbitration. None of the Unions followed up their request for an Article XIX meeting with a request for arbitration when the Postal Service would not meet the objections to the inclusion of Section 233.23b in the Handbooks.

If the Unions believed that the changes in the payroll computation contemplated by this Section were in conflict with the terms of the then existing National Agreement, particularly Article VIII-4-B, than a grievance should have been raised and processed to a resolution. If the contention of the Unions was that this change was neither fair, reasonable, nor equitable, a right to grieve also existed under the terms of Article XIX.

Parenthetically, it should be noted that the F-21 Handbook is singled out for specific mention in the provisions of Article XIX.

Examining the testimony offered at this hearing and the record of the Tulsa Case, which was incorporated by agreement of the Parties, the conclusion must be reached that the Postal Service did comply with the procedural requirements found in the second paragraph of Article XIX. The Unions were properly placed on notice, in a timely manner, that this limitation upon entitlement to overtime pay was going to be implemented under the terms of the Handbooks as it had under previous practice of the Service which the Union's had contested in the Tulsa Case.

While the discussions with a number of attorneys representing employees were underway concerning the USPS' financial obligation to a large number of employees under a decision issued applying Fair Labor Standards Act, the Unions were also questioning the Service's right to implement the payroll practice discussed in the Handbooks. At that very same time, in the Spring of 1978, negotiation of the new National Agreement began looking toward the renewal of the National Agreement due to expire on July 20, 1978. During the time that those negotiations were underway, there is no dispute about the fact that the Unions were aware of the contested provision contained in the Handbooks. The 30 day period provided for in Article XIX had long past before the new Agreement was consumated. That Agreement was made effective July 21, 1978. It contained the identical Article XIX language which was contained in the 1975 Agreement, including a specific reference to the the F-21 Handbook provisions. No effort was made to modify that language at the time although the F-21 and F-22 were by then fully implemented nationwide and controlled time, attendance and payroll accounting procedures. The negotiators for the Unions, at the National level, thus agreed to continue in effect the terms of these Handbooks by their acceptance of the unaltered Article XIX requirements. It was not until April 19, 1979, more than a year after the transmission of these Handbooks, as revised, to the Unions, that the Union filed the grievance which led to this proceeding.

For reasons more fully explored in the Tulsa Case Award, the Undersigned is of the opinion that the language of the pertinent provisions of the Federal Employee Compensation Act as implemented by the regulations issued by the Office of Personnel Management and the Labor Department not only are designed to encourage employees to seek out and accept suitable work assignments for therapeutic reasons and to discourage malingering, but those same directives obligate the Postal Service to make every effort to find suitable employment, within a disabled employees physical capabilities, or be prepared to successfully explain why it was unable to do so. For that reason, the provision of Section 233.23b of the F-21 and F-22 Handbooks which indicates that such an obligation upon the Employer is a requirements of the FECA accurately reflects the intent of the draftsmen as well as those who were entrusted to administer the program and write the implementing regulations.

For the reasons set forth above, the Undersigned is of the opinion that this record supports the contention of the USPS that the current language of the F-21 and F-22 Handbooks governing eligibility for overtime payment for partially disabled employees has been engrafted into the National Agreement by virtue of the application of the provisions of Article XIX.

Having reached this conclusion it must finally be determined that the grievance raised protesting the practice of not making overtime payments for out-of-schedule assignments to employees who are partially disabled because of an on-the-job injury or illness must be denied. Having so concluded, it is necessary to add that this determination does not give the USPS an unbridled right to make an out-of-schedule assignment when the disabled employee could be offered such a work opportunity during the hours of his or her regular tour.

Dear Mr. Hughes:

On October 26, 1979, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

During our discussion, we concluded that at issue in this grievance is whether the grievant was properly denied out-of-schedule premium pay while working in a light duty assignment.

After reviewing the information provided, it is our position that the Step 3 decision properly concluded that the grievant was inappropriately required to report for the light duty assignment in question, as he had not requested such an assignment. Accordingly, inasmuch as he was directed to work a schedule different from his normal schedule and in another craft, and such assignment was not for his own personal convenience and sanctioned by the Union, the grievant is entitled to receive out-of-schedule premium pay for the period he worked in other than his normal work schedule. Accordingly, by copy of this letter, the Postmaster is instructed to reimburse the grievant at the appropriate premium rate for the period in question.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On March 3, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure as set forth in Article 15, Section 2 of the National Agreement.

The question in this grievance is whether management violated Article 11, Section 6 of the National Agreement, when light duty employees were precluded from the holiday schedule.

During our investigation, local management indicated that the only reason the three (3) light duty employees named in the grievance were precluded from the holiday schedule, was because they were not needed for Tour 3.

Furthermore, it is our position that all full-time and part-time regulars, including those who are on light duty, who possess needed skills and wish to work on the holiday be afforded an opportunity to do so. However, when local management is determining the number and categories of employees needed to work, a factor to be considered in scheduling a light duty employee, who wishes to work the holiday, is the medical restrictions imposed by the employees medical practitioner and whether that employee could in fact be utilized to do the work that would be available on the holiday.

Dear Mr. Hopton:

On September 9, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The question in these grievances is whether management violated Article 11 of the National Agreement by not scheduling light duty employees for holiday work.

During our discussion, we agreed to resolve the grievances based on our agreement to the following:

> All full-time and part-time regulars, including those who are on light duty, who possess needed skills and wish to work on the holiday may be afforded an opportunity to do so. However, when local management is determining the number and categories of employees needed to work, a factor to be considered in scheduling a light duty employee, who wishes to work the holiday, is the medical restrictions imposed by the employees medical practitioner and whether that employee could in fact be utilized to do the work that would be available on the holiday.

Dear Mr. Berrien:

On August 5, 1991, we met with your representative, Claudis Johnson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether employees on light duty should receive the same preference for work as those on limited duty.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that this case is to be remanded to the parties at Step 3 for application of the following:

> In accordance with Article 13, Section 4.A of the National Agreement, every effort shall be made to assign light duty employees within their present craft or occupational group. After all efforts are exhausted in that area, consideration will be given to reassignment to other crafts or ocupational groups within the same installation.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

We further agreed that this case is a fact circumstance best suited for regional determination. The parties further agreed that Article 13.4 does call for management to give consideration to reassignment to another craft or occupational group within the same installation when considering light duty request, provided the pre-existing conditions of the Article are met.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Dear Mr. Young:

Recently our representatives met in prearbitration discussions of the above-referenced grievance.

The issue in this grievance is whether a local "blanket policy" requiring an update of medical information every 30 days to continue in a light-duty assignment is a violation of Article 13 of the National Agreement.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that while no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case, the issue is resolved as follows:

The parties agree that the local practice of requiring an automatic update of medical information every 30 days is contrary to the intent of Article 13 and, therefore, will be discontinued. Consistent with the provisions of Article 13.4.F. of the National Agreement, an installation head may request an employee on light-duty to submit to a medical review at any time: The installation head shall review each light duty reassignment at least once each year, or at any time the installation head has reason to believe the incumbent is able to perform satisfactorily in other than the light duty assignment the employee occupies. This review is to determine the need for continuation of the employee in the light duty assignment. Such employee may be requested to submit to a medical review by a physician designated by the installation head if the installation head believes such examination to be necessary.

ARBITRATION AWARD

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE

-and-

Case No. H8N-5B-C 22251

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

Subject: Disqualification of Employee from Bid Assignment - Temporary Disability

Statement of the Issue: Whether the Postal Service's action in disqualifying an employee from her earlier bid assignment, and declaring such assignment to be vacant, was a violation of the National Agreement where the employee in question was unable to perform the full scope of her bid assignment due to temporary disability?

Contract Provisions Involved: Articles 3, 13, 19 and 41 of the July 21, 1981 National Agreement.

Appearances: For the Postal Service, D. James Shipman, Manager, Arbitration Branch (Central Region); for NALC, Richard N. Gilberg, Attorney (Cohen, Weiss & Simon).

Statement of the Award: The grievance is granted. M. McCollom should be placed in the bid assignment she held between late December 1980 and July 1981. She should be reimbursed for any wages or other benefits she lost by reason of this violation.

BACKGROUND

This grievance protests the Postal Service's action in disqualifying an employee, temporarily disabled by reason of an on-the-job injury, from her bid assignment. NALC claims this disqualification and the subsequent posting of her bid assignment as a vacancy were a violation of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

Marilyn L. McCollum was hired as a part-time flexible city carrier in the Redondo Beach, California Post Office in December 1978. She strained her back while lifting a heavy bag of mail in late January 1980. This work-related injury resulted in her being totally or partially disabled from late January 1980 to July 16, 1982. For this entire period, she was unable to perform the full scope of letter carrier work. She was assigned, on many occasions, to limited duty consistent with her restrictions. Such assignments typically involved three or four hours' work per day.

McCollum was automatically converted from part-time flexible to full-time regular city carrier on November 29, 1980. She thus became eligible to bid on full-time regular vacancies. She bid for such a vacancy, Swing #12 relief route. She was awarded this bid assignment in December 1980 notwithstanding the fact that she was then physically unable to perform the full scope of the assignment. She was still disabled.

Some seven months later, Management disqualified her from this bid assignment on account of her physical inability to perform the work. Its letter of July 22, 1981 read in part:

> "This is official notification that you are being disqualified from your present bid assignment because of your physical inability to perform the full duties of the position to which assigned.
> "The position of Carrier requires that an employee be able to perform heavy lifting 45 pounds and over, not to exceed 70 pounds, and to have full physical capacity for standing, reaching and walking.
>
> "Examination of your medical documentation... certifies that you only have limited capacity to perform some or all of the above cited position requirements, thereby necessitating this disqualification action from your current bid assignment.

"Effective July 25, 1981, you will be carried on the rolls as an unassigned regular..."

Management then declared McCollom's bid assignment vacant and posted it for bids. NALC promptly grieved, complaining that McCollom's bid assignment "is not vacant as long as she is on the rolls of the Postal Service in a L.W.O.P. [leave without pay] or other approved leave status." McCollom was fully recovered from her injury in July 1982. Management would not allow her to return to her previous bid assignment, Swing #12 relief route. That bid assignment had been filled by someone else in August 1981.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The critical provision in this case is Article 13, Section 4H:

"When a full-time regular employee in a temporary light duty assignment is declared recovered on medical review, the employee shall be returned to the employee's former duty assignment, if it has not been discontinued." (Emphasis added)

These words, on their face, seem to apply to McCollom. She was a "full-time regular" who had apparently been placed on "temporary light duty..." She had earlier been awarded a bid assignment on Swing #12 relief route. When she recovered, she sought to be "returned to...[this] former duty assignment."

The Postal Service recognizes in its brief that the "reservation of duty assignment" set forth in this provision, if applicable to McCollom, would support her grievance. It argues, however, that Article 13, Section 4H is not applicable here. It contends that McCollom received a limited duty assignment pursuant to Chapter 540 of the Employee & Labor Relations Manual (ELM). It believes Article 13 pertains only to those on light duty. Its position, accordingly, is that because McCollom was on limited (rather than light) duty, she can assert no rights under Article 13 and she was not entitled to "reservation of [her] duty assignment."

There are several difficulties with this argument. Article 13 is much broader than the Postal Service is willing to admit. Its purpose, according to Section 1B, is to provide "full-time regular...employees who through illness or injury are unable to perform their regularly assigned duties" a means of "reassignment to temporary or permanent light duty or other assignments." These words draw no distinction between injury on or off the job. They also speak not just of "light duty" but of "other assignments" as well. Indeed, Section 2B1 specifically allows employees who have suffered "injury on the job" to request reassignment to "light duty or other assignments."* Thus, Article 13 does cover employees such as McCollom who have been injured on the job. There are portions of Article 13 which expressly state that they do not apply to employees injured on the job. However, no such exclusionary language is found in Section 4H. Its "restoration of duty assignment" would seem to apply to injured employees regardless of where the injury occurred.

The Postal Service's contract analysis would produce a true anomaly. It would grant the "reservation of duty assignment" to someone injured off the job but would deny this "reservation of duty assignment" to someone injured on the job. In other words, the employee with the lesser equity would be protected while the employee with the greater equity would not. That could hardly have been what the parties intended.

Chapter 540 establishes an "injury compensation program." It refers to "employees injured on duty" and requires that they be placed on "limited duty" once they have partially overcome their disability. But these Chapter 540 rights cannot reduce the scope of Article 13. There is nothing in the National Agreement which would prevent an employee from exercising rights, if applicable, under both Chapter 540 and Article 13. It is true that Chapter 540 speaks only of "limited duty" while Article 13 speaks of "light duty." But, absent any explanation of the functional

* Section 2B1 applies only to requests for "permanent", as opposed to "temporary", reassignment.

 See, for example, Section 2B2 and Section 4C, both of which state: "These procedures shall not apply to cases where the employee's medical condition arose out of an occupational illness or injury."

difference between these terms, I believe this is a distinction without a difference. McCollom was restricted to three or four hours' work per day with no heavy or moderate lifting. She was plainly on "light duty" even though it may have been called "limited duty" by Management.

For these reasons, it would appear that McCollom was entitled to the protection of Article 13, Section 4H and that she therefore had a right to "return...to...[her] former duty assignment" when she was declared recovered in July 1982.

The Postal Service resists this conclusion on other grounds as well. It relies heavily on Article 41, Section 1C:

> "1. The senior bidder meeting the qualification standards established for that position shall be designated the 'successful bidder.'
>
> "2. Within ten (10) days after the closing date of the posting, the Employer shall post a notice indicating the successful bidder...
>
> "3. The successful bidder must be placed in the new assignment within 15 days except in the month of December.
> "4. The successful bidder shall work the duty assignment as posted. Unanticipated circumstances may require a temporary change in assignment..." (Emphasis added)

It argues that this provision "must be read as constructing a mutuality of obligation." That is, Management "must work the employee in the job as posted, and the employee, in turn, must work in that job." It realizes that there may be "temporary alterations." However, it insists that "at some point the Postal Service may properly determine that the employee is not fulfilling the obligation, and move to disqualify the employee from the position..." It urges that Management properly disqualified McCollom after she'd failed to work her bid assignment for seven months.

Article 41, Section 1C4 provides that "the successful bidder shall work the duty assignment as posted." McCollom was awarded the bid assignment in question in late December 1980; she was disqualified in July 1981, some seven months later. The parties realized that "unanticipated circumstances" might prevent a successful bidder from promptly working her bid assignment. Surely, a physical disability would qualify as an "unanticipated circumstance." Management then would have to make a "temporary change in assignment." It would select someone, presumably under Section 2B, to fill this available duty assignment until the disabled person could return.

The question remains as to whether Management could, after filling the duty assignment in this fashion for some period, declare the assignment vacant and post it for bids. NALC says Management cannot take such action. It believes Management's choices were either to fill the duty assignment through Article 41, Section 2B or to disqualify McCollom on the ground of permanent disability under Article 13.* The Postal Service, on the other hand, claims Management had a right under Article 41 Section 1C to declare this duty assignment vacant after some reasonable period of time. It stresses that the "unanticipated circumstances" demand only a "temporary change in assignment." It contends that Management's action in declaring McCollom's bid assignment vacant was justified.

Even assuming that the Postal Service's contractual position on Article 41, Section 1C is correct, I do not think Management was entitled to declare McCollom's bid assignment vacant in July 1981. She had held her bid assignment seven months as of the date of her disqualification. That seems too short a period given (1) the fact that she had a temporary disability, a back sprain, (2) the fact that one of the examining physicians had noted her prognosis was "good", and (3) the fact that she was apparently working on light (or limited) duty during some of these seven months. Moreover, the "temporary" period contemplated by Article 41, Section 1C4 must be read in light of the "reservation of duty assignment" granted to those on "temporary" light duty under Article 13, Section 4H.

For these reasons, the finding is that McCollom was improperly disqualified from her bid assignment in July 1981. Her rights under Article 13, Section 4H were violated.

* NALC asserts that such a disqualification for permanent disability could not be justified by the evidence in this case.

 I make no ruling on this issue.

AWARD

The grievance is granted. M. McCollom should be placed in the bid assignment she held between late December 1980 and July 1981. She should be reimbursed for any wages or other benefits she lost by reason of this violation.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On April 8, 1981, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

We mutually agreed that an employee assigned to light duty in another craft pursuant to Article XIII of the National Agreement, and is declared recovered on medical review, shall be returned to the first available full-time regular vacancy in complement in the employee's former craft. This is mandated by the National Agreement.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Dear Mr. Anderson:

On March 27, 1985, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether it was proper for management to terminate all permanent light-duty assignments on December 31, 1984.

After further review of this matter, we agreed that there was no national interpretive issue fairly presented as to the meaning and intent of Article 13 of the National Agreement. Whether management violated Article 13 of the National Agreement is a matter for regional determination.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to Step 3 for further consideration by the parties, with the understanding that Article 13.5 does not give management authority to unilaterally terminate all light-duty assignments. The termination of light duty assignments is to be made on a case-by-case basis.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

BACKGROUND Q87M-4Q-C 77008684

In 1989 the Postal Service added a provision to the ELM, now Section 355.14, which states:

> The light duty provisions of the various collective bargaining agreements between the U.S. Postal Service and the postal unions do not guarantee any employee who is on a light duty assignment any number of hours of work per day or per week.

The parties have agreed that the issue presented in this case is:

> Did the Postal Service's 1989 addition to the Employment and Labor Relations Manual, stating that employees on light duty are not guaranteed any number of hours per day or per week, violate Article 19?

The following provisions of the National Agreement are relevant to the arbitration of this dispute:

ARTICLE 13

ASSIGNMENT OF ILL OR INJURED REGULAR WORK FORCE EMPLOYEES

Section 13.1 Introduction

* * *

B The U.S. Postal Service and the Union, recognizing their responsibility to aid and assist deserving full-time regular or part-time flexible employees who through illness or injury are unable to perform their regularly assigned duties, agree to the following provisions and conditions for reassignment to temporary or permanent light duty or other assignments. It will be the responsibility of each installation head to implement the provisions of this Agreement within the installation after local negotiations.

* * *

Section 13.2 Employee's Request for Reassignment

* * *

C Installation heads shall show the greatest consideration for full-time regular or part-time flexible employees requiring light duty or other assignments, giving each request careful attention, and reassign such employees to the extent possible in the employee's office....

Section 13.3 Local Implementation

Due to varied size installations and conditions within installations, the following important items having a direct bearing on these reassignment procedures (establishment of light duty assignments) should be determined by local negotiations.

A Through local negotiations, each office will establish the assignments that are to be considered light duty within the office. These negotiations should explore ways and means to make adjustments in normal assignments, to convert them to light duty assignments without seriously affecting the production of the assignment.

B Light duty assignments may be established from part-time hours, to consist of 8 hours or less in a service day and 40 hours or less in a service week. The establishment of such assignment does not guarantee any hours to a part-time flexible employee.

C Number of Light Duty Assignments. The number of assignments within the craft that may be reserved for temporary or permanent light duty assignments, consistent with good business practices, shall be determined by past experience as to the number of reassignments that can be expected during each year, and the method used in reserving these assignments to insure that no assigned full-time regular employee will be adversely affected, will be defined through local negotiations. The light duty employee's tour hours, work location and basic work week shall be those of the light duty assignment and the needs of the service, whether or not the same as for the employee's previous duty assignment.

Section 13.4 General Policy Procedures

A Every effort shall be made to reassign the concerned employee within the employee's present craft or occupational group, even if such assignment reduces the number of hours of work for the supplemental work force. After all efforts are exhausted in this area, consideration will be given to reassignment to another craft or occupational group within the same installation.

* * *

D The reassignment of a full-time regular or part-time flexible employee under the provisions of this Article to an agreed-upon light duty temporary or permanent or other assignment within the office, such as type of assignment, area of assignment, hours of duty, etc., will be the decision of the installation head who will be guided by the examining physician's report, employee's ability to reach the place of employment and ability to perform the duties involved.

* * *

HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

Section 19.1

Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable. This includes, but is not limited to, the Postal Service Manual and the F-21 Timekeeper's Instructions

* * *

ARTICLE 30
LOCAL IMPLEMENTATION

* * *

Section 30.2 Items for Local Negotiations

There shall be a 30 consecutive day period of local implementation ... on the 20 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of this Agreement:

* * *

M The number of light duty assignments to be reserved for temporary or permanent light duty assignment.

N The method to be used in reserving light duty assignments so that no regularly assigned member of the regular work force will be adversely affected.

O The identification of assignments that are to be considered light duty.

Provisions relating to light duty assignments for employees unable to perform their regularly assigned duties due to an off-duty injury or illness date back to 1963. The current provisions in Article 13, quoted above, are substantively identical to provisions in the 1973 National Agreement between the Postal Service and the then Joint Bargaining Committee, comprised of the NPMHU, the APWU and the NALC.

In a letter to the NPMHU -- received on May 2, 1989 -- transmitting the text of a proposed addition to the ELM that (after minor revision) was promulgated as what is now Section 355.14, the Postal Service noted:

> The text ... includes a "no guarantee" provision. These changes are made to reflect the meaning of Article 13 as interpreted by arbitrator Mittenthal in his national award in Case H1C-4E-C 35028.

The cited decision by Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal (Mittenthal Award) is dated June 12, 1987. It involved a grievance arbitrated between the APWU and the Postal Service. At the start of that decision, Arbitrator Mittenthal stated:

> This grievance urges that full-time regulars on light duty assignments, resulting from off-duty injury or illness, are entitled to no less than eight hours' pay for each scheduled tour and forty hours' pay for each scheduled week. The APWU insists that Management violated these employees' rights when it sent them home before the end of their scheduled tours and refused to pay > them for the hours they did not work. Its claim rests on the "work week" provisions of Article 8. The Postal Service insists that there is no work (or pay) guarantee on light duty assignments, that the "work week" for these employees was governed by Article 13 rather than Article 8, and that Management's actions did not violate the National Agreement.

In his Discussion and Findings, Arbitrator Mittenthal rejected the APWU's position, stating:

> The APWU maintains that Article 8 guarantees full-time regulars eight hours' work a day and forty hours' work a week. It insists this guarantee applies to all full-time regulars, regardless of whether they are on their normal assignment or on a light duty assignment. It believes that nothing in Article 13 detracts from the scope of the Article 8 guarantee. It urges, accordingly, that Management's action in sending these employees home on various occasions before the end of their scheduled tour, before they completed eight hours' work, was improper under the National Agreement.
> This argument fails because of the discretion granted Management by Article 13 in dealing with employees on light duty assignments, because of certain guarantee language found in Article 8 itself, because of the apparent widespread practice supporting the Postal Service's position, because of a Step 4 concession made by a responsible APWU official at the national level, because of the NALC interpretation of the language in question, and because of prior arbitration awards. All of these factors join to support the Postal Service's view that the National Agreement does not guarantee full-time regulars on light duty assignments eight hours a day or forty hours a week.

Addressing the last sentence of Article 13.3.C, Arbitrator Mittenthal stated as follows:

> These words reveal that the "tour hours" and "basic work week" of a light duty employee are based not just on the original "light duty assignment" but also on the "needs of the service." The "tour hours" and "basic work week" are not always a constant. They can be varied with the "needs of the service."... The "needs" in question relate to the operating requirements, the amount of work available, and so on. Where there is no work for a light duty employee, the "needs of the service" may well dictate sending the employee home. This is the kind of variance contemplated by > Section 3C. It follows that Section 3C, like 3B, allows a departure from the eight and forty "work week" set forth in Article 8.

At the initial hearing in the present case, the parties expressed differing views on the correctness of, and the weight (if any), to be given to the Mittenthal Award, which the Postal Service maintains supports its position in this case. In its post-hearing brief, the NPMHU expresses its opinion that, on closer examination, the Mittenthal Award "does nothing to advance the inquiry" in the present case, because it addressed and answered a different issue than that presented by the Union here.

The Postal Service presented testimony from Joseph Berezo, its Manager of Contract Administration for the Mail Handlers. He has been employed by the Postal Service in various capacities for some thirty years. For twenty years prior to coming to headquarters in 2007, he served as a labor relations specialist in several Florida locations and at the southeast area level. During that time, as a technical advisor, he, in effect, negotiated numerous LMOUs establishing light duty assignments. Berezo testified that the LMOUs would identify the assignments by tour, but this did not mean they were eight-hour assignments. The practice during his thirty years of experience was that, when given their assignments, light duty employees were told where and when to report and the work they were to perform. He stressed that the available work used to construct light duty assignments varies on a daily basis. When that work was completed, and there was no more for them to perform, they were sent home. Berezo acknowledged he could not speak to the practice in other parts of the country. In his current national position, however, he has not seen the issue of guaranteed hours for light duty employees come up, except for cases in which the Union claimed a four-hour minimum guarantee under Article 8.8.

UNION POSITION

The Union contends that the ELM revision at issue violates Article 19 of the National Agreement because it is inconsistent with applicable provisions of the National Agreement. The Union rejects what it sees as the Postal Service's "absolutist" position that under no circumstances do the light duty provisions of Article 13 guarantee any employee on a light duty assignment any set number of hours of work. The Union disputes the Postal Service's position that a Local Memorandum of Understanding (LMOU) that purports to guarantee an employee on a light duty assignment a set number of hours of work is inconsistent with Article 13 and, therefore, unenforceable pursuant to Article 30.2.

The Union maintains that, under Article 13's plain language, the issue of whether an employee on a light duty assignment is guaranteed a set number of hours of work is governed by the light duty provisions of the particular LMOU in effect in each postal installation, taking into account, as appropriate, any established past practices at the local level that may inform the proper interpretation of those provisions. The Union insists that LMOU provisions which have been interpreted and/or implemented to guarantee certain employees on certain light duty assignments a set number of hours of work are entirely consistent with Article 13, and, thus, fully enforceable in accordance with their terms.

The Union asserts Article 13.3 plainly avoids setting of any kind of uniform, national standard with regard to the establishment of light duty assignments. Subsections A to C of Article 13.3 identify certain considerations that local negotiators are to take into account in establishing light duty assignments, and also set certain parameters (however broad) within which the local negotiators are free to act. It is clear from Article 13.3.B that one of the matters that local negotiators are expected to consider and provide for in establishing light duty assignments is the number of hours that those assignments will entail. Moreover, when local negotiators establish one or more light duty assignments for full-time or part-time regular employees that do consist of a set number of hours -- be it eight hours a day or less -- those employees are guaranteed that set number of hours on their assignments and may not under any scenario be sent home without pay before working that set number of hours. The Union further argues that this is the clear and undeniable import of the language of Article 13.3.B stating that the establishment of a light duty assignment that "consist(s) of" eight hours or less "does not guarantee any hours to a part-time flexible employee." The Postal Service's absolutist position, in the Union's view, flies in the face of this Article 13.3.B language and should be rejected on that basis alone.

The Union asserts that, given the language of Article 13.3.B and the fundamental principle embodied in Article 13.3 that the establishment of light duty assignments is a matter that should be determined by local negotiations, the only proper reading of Article 13.3.C -- which states that the light duty employee's "tour hours, work location and basic work week shall be those of the light duty assignment and the needs of the service" -- is the following: to the extent that an LMOU provides for a certain number of light duty assignments with set parameters, such as tour hours and work location, those contractually-provided for assignments are controlling and local management is not free to unilaterally deviate from those set parameters, but when the applicable LMOU leaves some or all of the parameters open, local management is free unilaterally to establish those parameters in accordance with "the needs of the service."

Similarly, the Union maintains, Article 13.4.D properly is read, consistent with 13.3.C, as a grant of residual authority to local management to make light duty assignments appropriate to the circumstances pertaining in a postal facility within the parameters left open by the "agreed-upon" light duty provisions of the applicable LMOU.

The Union adds that the plain language of Article 13 which is dispositive in this case is confirmed by statements in the nature of admissions included in LMOU-Negotiation training materials prepared by Postal Service headquarters which the Union presented as exhibits in this arbitration. One set of training materials, from 1994, includes a stern warning to local Postal Service negotiators to be "Careful!" not to "Negotiate language which would require management to provide eight hours work to a full-time employee on light duty." The other set of training materials, which the Union obtained a copy of in 2002, includes a statement that local Postal Service negotiators "may" bargain light duty assignments that consist of less than eight hours of work, which clearly reflects a reciprocal understanding on the Postal Service's part that local management negotiators also "may" bargain light duty assignments that consist of a guaranteed eight hours of work. These materials likewise contain a statement that Postal Service negotiators should strive to avoid bargaining LMOU language that could be read as establishing "an implied guarantee."

The Union rejects the Postal Service's reliance on the 1987 Mittenthal Award, to which the NPMHU was not a party. The Union stresses that, unlike the APWU in that case, the NPMHU has not taken the "absolutist" position that the National Agreement provides a "broad, all-encompassing guarantee" under which "all full-time regulars...on a light duty assignment" are guaranteed eight hours of work per day. The Union insists there is nothing in the Mittenthal Award that addresses the merits of -- much less supports -- the "absolutist" position taken by the Postal Service in this case.

Moreover, the Union insists, the Postal Service's reliance on the reference in the Mittenthal Award to the "apparent widespread practice" of the Postal Service sending full-time regular employees on light duty assignments home before the end of their scheduled tours because of a lack of work also is entirely misplaced. First, the Mittenthal Award actually identifies only five cities in which such a practice apparently had happened as of the 1987 date of that award, and there is nothing in the current record to indicate whether and, if so, to what extent, this "apparent widespread practice" has been adhered to "throughout the country" from that 1987 date forward. More importantly, given that the issue of whether an employee on a light duty assignment is guaranteed a set number of hours of work is governed by the provisions of the LMOU in effect at an individual installation, any inquiry into how "widespread" such a practice is would serve no useful purpose and be beyond the scope of this national arbitration. The only potentially relevant past practices inquiry would be an inquiry into the past practices of the local parties to that particular LMOU, which is not an issue to be resolved in national arbitration.

EMPLOYER POSITION

The Postal Service contends that ELM 355.14 is consistent with the National Agreement because the plain language of the National Agreement provides no guaranteed hours or pay to employees on light duty. When an employee is injured off-duty, the employee may request light duty work under Article 13. Article 13 does not require the Postal Service to grant such a request. Article 13.2.C states: "Installation heads shall show the greatest consideration for full-time regular or part-time flexible employees requiring light duty or other assignments...." Even if an employee's request is granted, that employee is not guaranteed work hours, as is made clear in various provisions of Article 13. First, as set forth in Article 13.3.C, the basic work week for light duty employees is subject to "the light duty assignment and the needs of the service." In his 1987 award, Arbitrator Mittenthal determined that the "tour hours" of a light duty employee are based not just on the original "light duty assignment," but also on "the needs of the service." As he further observed, "Where there is no work for a light duty employee, the 'needs of the service' may well dictate sending the employee home."[1] Second, Article 13.3.B plainly states that light duty assignments may be less than eight hours per day or forty hours per week. Third, Article 13.4.D provides that the "hours of duty" for light duty employees "will be the decision of the installation head." When reading Article 13.4.D in conjunction with Article 13.3.C, it is clear that "the needs of the service," including the hours of work available, are determined by the installation head. In these multiple ways Article 13 provides contractual exceptions to Article 8's "guarantees" with respect to work hours.

The Postal Service further argues that the parties have an established past practice of sending light duty employees home without pay when no work is available. This practice predates -- and is consistent with -- the ELM provision at issue here. As Postal Service witness Berezo testified, "When you don't have work, you send [employees on light duty] home. That's the way we've done it for thirty years." The Union offered no testimony to the contrary. The Postal Service stresses the Union knew about this practice, but for decades did not raise any dispute concerning a guarantee prior to the filing of this grievance. The Union's own understanding is evident in the arguments it raised -- and, more importantly, did not raise -- at regional arbitrations prior to (and contemporaneous with) the protested ELM change. Without exception, the Union did not argue that light duty employees were guaranteed any hours. Instead, the Union only argued that the Postal Service failed to make every effort to find more

[1] The Postal Service acknowledges that the Mail Handlers were not a party to the Mittenthal Award, but stresses that the parties, in crafting their positions, often have relied on national arbitration awards involving other postal unions. Both parties recognize that national arbitration awards involving other postal unions can be an excellent guide for interpreting common contractual language. This is reflected in these parties' Contract Interpretation Manual (CIM), in which some 62 national arbitration awards involving other postal unions are cited as authority. (The Union stresses that those awards were cited by agreement of the NPMHU and the Postal Service.)

work for light duty employees -- meaning the Postal Service should have searched for more work before sending the employee home. Thorough research by the Postal Service uncovered no Mail Handler grievance alleging the Postal Service violated any purported guarantee for light duty hours prior to 1989. The Union thereby acquiesced in the Postal Service's practice of sending light duty employees home when work was not available. The Postal Service also notes that it has maintained this same practice not only with the Mail Handlers, but also with its other unions.

The Postal Service stresses that both the NALC and the APWU, former bargaining partners with the Mail Handlers, agree that the National Agreement contains no light duty guarantee and that the ELM language is consistent with the National Agreement. Despite the same contractual language, common interests, and shared past practice with those unions, the NPMHU is the only union that still disputes this ELM provision or claims that a guarantee to light duty exists.

The Postal Service also insists that the ELM language in dispute is fair, reasonable, and equitable under Article 19. The Union has not presented any argument to the contrary. The ELM provision is reasonable because it only echoes what the National Agreement already provides and reflects the parties' past practice -- employees on light duty do not have guaranteed hours. The ELM provision also maintains a fair and equitable practice among the affected unions. If the ELM language is rejected, the Mail Handlers would secure a perceived protection its partners at the bargaining table already have acknowledged does not exist, without any additional negotiation. Moreover, should a guarantee be found to exist it could reasonably be expected that Mail Handlers would potentially lose -- not gain -- work hours. An installation head might be more likely to reject a Mail Handler's light duty request if a guarantee was attached, because sufficient work might not be available.

The Postal Service stresses that the Union's interpretation of the relevant provisions of the National Agreement fails to acknowledge the effect "the needs of the service" has on the employee's work week and tour hours. Even if an employee receives a light duty assignment that provides a set number of hours at a local installation, those hours still are subject to "the needs of the service," as Arbitrator Mittenthal already concluded. The Postal Service asserts that the Union's reliance on management LMOU-Negotiation guidelines -- whose authenticity the Postal Service disputes -- is simply misplaced. Those "instructions" actually are consistent with the Postal Service's understanding that light duty guarantees are not provided in the National Agreement. If the Postal Service instructs its local managers not to guarantee any hours to light duty employees during local negotiations, this only shows that the Postal Service does not understand such a guarantee exists in the National Agreement.

FINDINGS

As the Postal Service stresses, employees are not guaranteed light duty assignments if they are unable to perform their regular job due to an off-duty injury or illness. But management is required to make every effort to seek work for such employees, and Article 13.3 provides for the establishment of light duty assignments through local negotiations.

It appears that often established light duty assignments given to full-time regular employees basically entail having the employee report to a designated work area on a particular tour -- much like a regular full-time duty assignment -- with the expectation that the employee (if physically capable) generally will be gainfully employed performing light duty work for a full eight-hour shift and 40-hour work week.[2] The present dispute at its core is about the Postal Service's ability to send a light duty employee home before the end of an eight-hour tour (or to work the employee for less than five service days) due to lack of work.

At the time this Article 19 dispute was appealed to arbitration by the Union in 1989, there was no requirement that the parties provide each other with a statement of their respective positions. There is no evidence that the Union set forth the basis for its objection to the provision now in ELM 355.14 prior to this arbitration proceeding which commenced over a decade later in March 2011. At the initial March 2011 hearing, the Union argued that, under

[2] For example, the 2009 LMOU for the Cincinnati Bulk Mail Center (Union Exhibit 12) provides for a minimum of three "light duty assignment areas, per tour" and states that employees on light duty "will be moved to any of the light duty areas [identified as: Rewrappings, Loose Mail and Culled Debris belts] in an effort to achieve eight (8) hours of work."

Article 8, just as the Postal Service could not send a non-light duty regular full-time employee home for lack of work (without pay) before completion of an eight-hour shift, the Postal Service could not send a light duty employee home. To permit that, the Union also argued, would effectively eradicate LMOUs establishing light duty assignments pursuant to Article 13. At the second day of hearing in October 2012, the Union's position had evolved to the extent it no longer based its position in this case on Article 8. Its position then and in its post-hearing brief, as I understand it, is that Article 13 authorizes local parties to enter into LMOUs that as interpreted or implemented guarantee certain hours of work in a day and in a week.[3] Therefore, the Union argues, ELM 355.14 is inconsistent with the National Agreement and, hence, Article 19, because it negates any such guarantees.

In the 1987 Mittenthal Award, the APWU argued that Article 8 guarantees all full-time regular employees eight hours of work per day and forty hours per week even if they are on light duty assignments. Arbitrator Mittenthal rejected that position for a number of reasons, but most important was his determination that Article 13, not Article 8, controlled the hours of work for employees on light duty assignments, and that Article 13 did not provide the guarantee the APWU claimed. In doing so, Arbitrator Mittenthal carefully and, in my view, persuasively analyzed the provisions of Article 13, and -- key for present purposes -- concluded that Article 13.3.C provides that the "tour hours" and "basic work week" of a light duty employee are based not just on the original "light duty assignment," but also on "the needs of the service." He went on to state:

> The "needs" in question relate to the operating requirements, the amount of work available, and so on. Where there is no work for a light duty employee, the "needs of the service" may well dictate sending the employee home. This is the kind of variance contemplated by Section 3C.

The terms of Article 13, which have remained essentially unchanged since at least 1973, may not all be as precise and harmonious as might be desired. The Union also insists that the evidence in this record and that cited in the Mittenthal Award is not sufficiently [3] It seems that the Union may go so far as to contend that if the LMOU sets the number of hours included in a particular light duty assignment that in itself constitutes a guarantee.

widespread as to establish the existence of a nation-wide past practice under which the parties have recognized that, consistent with Article 13, an employee on light duty may be sent home for lack of work. But there is no significant evidence to the contrary. What appear to be Postal Service training materials, put into the record by the Union, at most reflect cautionary advice to managers negotiating LMOUs not to agree to language that expresses or might imply a guarantee of hours of work -- which seems sensible whether or not a claim of such a guarantee ultimately could prevail in light of the controlling terms of Article 13. More telling is the point made by the Postal Service that in researching light duty assignment grievances processed by the Union in regional arbitration prior to and contemporaneous with the filing of the present national level grievance in 1989, it discovered none where the Union protested employees being sent home as violating a guarantee. Instead, the disputes were over the Postal Service's failure to make every effort to find more work for the employee, consistent with Articles 13.2.C and 13.4.A.[4]

In any event, ultimately it is the language of Article 13 that controls. ELM 355.14 provides:

> The light duty provisions of the various collective bargaining agreements between the U.S. Postal Service and the postal unions do not guarantee any employee who is on a light duty assignment any number of hours of work per day or per week.

The Union does not claim that Article 13, as such, guarantees an employee on a light duty assignment a certain number of hours of work per day or per week. Rather, as I understand its position, it argues that Article 13 allows for, or does not prohibit, local parties' agreeing to provide such a guarantee in an LMOU, and if an LMOU does provide such a guarantee, it is enforceable. I am in agreement with the Mittenthal Award's reading of the language in Article 13, and conclude that Article 13.3.C, in particular, does not allow for local parties to establish [4] I suppose it may be possible that all of those cases arose at facilities where the Union would concede the LMOU provided no type of guarantee, and that where there were LMOUs that the Union would consider as providing a guarantee no employee ever protested being sent home due to lack of work. But that seems unlikely.

light duty assignments that guarantee an employee a set number of hours per day or per week without regard to "the needs of the service."[5] Article 13.3.C states:

> The light duty employee's tour hours, work location and basic work week shall be those of the light duty assignment and the needs of the service whether or not the same as for the employee's previous duty assignment.
> (Emphasis added.)

Under this provision, "the needs of the service" not only are relevant in establishing the "light duty assignment" through local negotiations at the beginning of the contract period, but also in terms of the actual hours, work location and work week an employee is assigned while performing that assignment. That includes, as Arbitrator Mittethal found in applying identical language in the USPS-APWU National Agreement, the right of the Postal Service to send the employee home when there is no work for him or her to perform on the light duty assignment, subject, of course, to management's obligation under Article 13.2.C and 13.4.A to make every effort to find work for the employee.

Accordingly, I find that the provision now found in ELM 355.14 is not inconsistent with the National Agreement. The Union has not otherwise contended that it is not fair, reasonable, and equitable for purposes of Article 19.

[5] Like Arbitrator Mittenthal, I am not persuaded that the provision in Article 13.3.B stating that "the establishment" of a light duty assignment consisting of "8 hours or less in a service day and 40 hours or less in a service week" "does not guarantee any hours" to a PTF warrants a finding, contrary to other provisions of Article 13.3, that such a guarantee exists for a full-time regular employee.

ASSIGNMENT OF ILL OR INJURED EMPLOYEES

BACKGROUND

In almost any endeavor illness and injury occur on the job. The current agreement contains several paragraphs indicating how such employees will be administered. Paricularly the Article is applicable to those who have filed claims under the Federal Employees Compensation Act.

UNION POSITION

The Union proposes additions to the current language to safeguard employees who have filed claims of harassment. The proposals include limitations on the time an employee who has sustained on the job injury may be required to report for a limited duty assignment, prohibitions against supervisors stating that filing claims may harm employee's careers, prohibitions from requiring employees who are on prolonged disability from daily contact with USPS, and providing Union notice of employees, who are called to accident board review meetings or other related meetings where more than one supervisor or safety officer is present. Some employees who have been injured or ill are not able to perform their regularly scheduled jobs. Such personnel are assigned to limited duty tasks. They have also been required to attend safety training classes. Sometimes these safety training sessions have been as much as eight hours in length, have been conducted at places distant from normal work locations, have been conducted at irregular hours and sometimes involve nothing more than answering a telephone. Often they are nothing more than harassment techniques to discourage the filing of claims. There have also been times when supervisors have stated to employees that the filing of claims may act to the employee's disadvantage when promotions are in order. It also makes little sense for the employee to be required to contact the USPS on a daily basis when documentation has been presented that the employee will be absent for a period of time. Too, employees have been summoned for appearance before review boards with little or no notice in advance. Union requests for representation at these appearances have been uniformly denied. The Union's proposed language in this regard will do much to alleviate these harassing situations.

POSTAL SERVICE POSITION

Two sentences in the Union proposal do nothing more than state that the parties are subject to the Federal Employees Compensation Act. The proposal also restricts the USPS in fulfilling its obligations under the Act. In its presentation, the Union offered no evidence why its proposal should be granted. The Union even admitted that there had been no grievances filed to justify the proposed language. It is ironic that the language proposed allows Mailhandlers, who are on limited duty, to perform the work of other crafts, but does not allow other crafts on limited duty to perform Mailhandler work. The Union proposal would also freeze part of the ELM that implements Department of Labor regulations. This is foolish in that if the Department of Labor Regulations change, then language frozen would be in conflict with those regulations. There has been no evidence that any supervisor threatened any employee for filing a claim. Furthermore, such conduct would be in violation of law. The Postal Service does not make it a practice to require employees who are on long term absences to make daily contact with the Service. There are times when such contact may be justified. There was no evidence presented to indicate that the Postal Service has abused employees in this regard. The proposal that employees always be given 24 hour notice before being called to meetings to review or discuss accidents is not acceptable in that this may not always be possible. Many times accident forms must be filled out within less than 24 hours after an accident. Too, it is not always possible to delay the reporting or discussion of accidents until a union representative is available. Simply stated, the Union presented no justification for the adoption of their proposals and have not indicated a single instance of Postal Service abuse of the matter.

CONCLUSIONS

Contract language which would do nothing more than state statutory requirements would be redundant and serve no useful purpose. Employees certainly are, at times, not able to perform their normal duties, yet are receiving compensation. If, in such cases, the affected employee is able to perform some useful function, he should be required to do so, even if the task is doing nothing more than answering a telephone. By him answering a telephone, it frees another employee to do more strenuous tasks and increases the business of the employer - to provide service to the public. Injured employees sometimes are in that category as a result of carelessness, inattention, or lack of knowledge of the hazards of the job. It is to the advantage of the employee, the Union and the Postal Service for employees to receive safety training. The Union complains that sometimes this training is nothing more than viewing films. There is nothing wrong with using films in training. The use of audio-visual aids in education and training has long been recognized. Seeing a matter often leads to greater understanding than if lectures are used instead. Even Confucius stated that "a picture is worth 10,000 words." Certainly, Union representation might often be appropriate. Ample notice should also be given employees to appear before accident review boards or other meetings for discussion of accidents. It is also realized that at any one location the number of employees required to observe training for safety matters may be insufficient to justify the conduct of training at that location. Subsequently, employees from several locations could be brought together for safety training at a central location. No evidence other than innuendo was presented to show that there has been abuse in this regard. Based on the above, the Panel AWARDS that a new Subsection G to Article XIII be added. Subsection G would read, "Employees will be given at least 24 hours notice before appearance is required before an Accident Review Board. Union representation will be permitted at all discussions of accidents upon request of the employee and provided that the acquiring of such representation does not delay the scheduled discussion."

Dear John:

I recently met with your representative, T.J. Branch, to discuss the above captioned cases at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue(s) in these grievances are whether a light/limited duty employee can be assigned to a residual vacancy that they cannot physically perform.

After full discussion of this issue, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. The parties agree that an unassigned employee cannot be assigned to a residual vacancy unless the employee is able to perform the core functions of the position, with or without reasonable accommodation.

Accordingly, we agree to remand these grievances to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

I recently met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above-captioned grievances which are currently scheduled for national arbitration.

The issue in the above referenced grievances is whether certain revisions of Employee and Labor Relations Manual (ELM) Section 515, concerning the Family and Medical Leave, and Section 865, Return to Duty after Medical Absences are fair, reasonable and equitable.

After full discussion of this issue, we agree the Contract Interpretation Manual will be updated to clarify current ELM 515 language.

The current ELM 865 language does not negate management's obligation under the MOU: Return to Duty when returning an employee to duty after an absence for medical reasons.

The reasonableness of the Service in delaying an employee's return beyond his/her next scheduled tour of duty or the date stated in the medical documentation shall be a proper subject for the grievance procedure on a case-by-case basis.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve these cases thereby removing them from the national arbitration list.

Dear Mr. Sombrotto:

On May 7, 1997, I met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our grievance-arbitration procedure.

The issue in these listed grievances involves discipline issued to carriers based on various safety infractions. Is local management in violation of the National Agreement when it issued a local safety policy and subsequent stand-up talks?

The parties agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in these cases.

The parties agree that management has the right to articulate guidelines to its employees regarding their responsibility concerning issues relating to safety. However, the parties also mutually agree that local accident policies, guidelines, or procedures may not be inconsistent or in conflict with the National Agreement. Discipline imposed for cited safety rule violations must meet the "just cause" provisions of Article 16 of the National Agreement. Further, administrative action with respect to safety violations must be consistent with Articles 14 and 29.

Accordingly, the parties agreed to remand these cases to Step 3 for application of the above understanding and further processing, including arbitration, if necessary.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases.

Foreign Postal Codes

Many foreign countries now use numeric postal codes that are similar or, in some cases, identical to our USPS ZIP Codes. The improper placement of these foreign postal codes causes sorting problems and missent mail. These errors occur because mailers position the foreign postal code after the country name. When mailers place the foreign postal code on the bottom right portion of an address, it is easy for U.S. letter-sorting machine clerks, distributing letters at the rate of one a second, to dispatch the letter to the U.S. city.

To ensure proper sortation and delivery, postal employees should advise mailers of the correct address format for international mail. The foreign address format should carry only the name of the country, typed or printed in capital letters in English, as the last line in the address block area. Because abbreviations can generate missorts, spell out the country name. For example, does Aus. stand for Australia or Austria? Place foreign postal codes on the line above the country of destination, preferably before the name of the city and state.

Proper addressing formats for international mail follow:

Line 1: Name of addressee

Line 2: Street and number including apartment number, if any, or post office box number

Line 3: Postal code, name of city, state, or province

Line 4: Country of destination in capital letters in English

AIC: Field Generated Products

Effective Accounting Period 09, Fiscal Year 1989, field generated products will be assigned unique AIC codes to record expenditures and receipts.

Field generated products include items produced for a local market that generally fill a local market need. Examples of such items include products developed locally for first-day-of-issue ceremonies (when approved by the Office of Stamps and Philatelic Marketing) and products bearing copyrighted Postal Service artwork (stamp designs) for sale in connection with local or regional promotions.

Local offices must take all opportunities and make every effort to sell nationally authorized retail products and national philatelic products before venturing into the development and promotion of local products. Field generated products developed and sold locally should be manufactured in the United States and purchased from an authorized licensee of the Postal Service.

The expenditures for all field generated products will be made at the division and management sectional center. The accounting entries are to AIC 494, Field Generated Product Costs, or General Ledger Account 52448 for invoices paid at the San Mateo Postal Data Center. These purchases will be offset as a revenue reduction to Field Generated Product Sales to leave a net revenue earned in PSFR Line Number 03, Other Operating Revenue. Offices should record revenues from all field generated product sales in AIC 098.

Offices should not confuse these items with existing AICs for retail products (AIC 093, Mailing Related Products and Mail Preparation Items) or national philatelic products (AIC 092, Commemorative, Definitive, and Topical Mint sets and Other Items Produced and Distributed by Headquarters).

Safety Rule Violations

When safety rule violations occur, managers and supervisors have several alternative corrective measures at their disposal. Although discipline is one such measure, they should use it only when other corrective measures do not appropriately fit the circumstances.

Correction of safety rule violations, whether by discipline or other alternatives, should not be predicated on whether an accident happened but rather on a factual determination that improper conduct occurred. Where discipline is the chosen alternative, the facts must support the requirements of just cause.—Labor Relations Dept., 5–4–89.

Article 16, Discipline Procedures, of the Nal Agreement clearly makes disciplinary ion appropriate for safety rule violations, unacptable safety performance, and failure to perm work as instructed. Management has the actual right to discipline employees for ate practices, whether those practices result in accident or not.

upervisors and managers must take necessary, rrective action to correct unsafe practices. When conducting any discussions or taking disciplinary action relating to safety, managers and supervisors must cite the safety rules or regulations violated or performance failures so that employees can correct unsafe practices. I. INTRODUCTION

This matter came for hearing pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement between the parties effective from June 12, 1991 through November 20, 1994. A hearing occurred on April 2, 1996 in a conference room of Postal Service headquarters located at 955 L'Enfant Plaza S.W., in Washington, D.C. Mr. John W. Dockins, Labor Relations Specialist, represented the United States Postal Service. Mr. Bruce H. Simon of Cohen, Weiss, & Simon in New York City represented the National Association of Letter Carriers.

The hearing proceeded in an orderly manner. There was a full opportunity for the parties to submit evidence, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to argue the matter. All witnesses testified under oath as administered by the arbitrator. The advocates fully and fairly represented their respective parties. A court reporter for Diversified Reporting Services, Inc. reported the proceeding and submitted a transcript of 180 pages.

The parties stipulated that the matter properly had been submitted to arbitration and that there were no issues of substantive or procedural arbitrability to be resolved. The arbitrator officially closed the hearing on July 5, 1996 after receipt of the final post-hearing reply brief in the matter.

II. STATEMENT OF THE ISSUE

The issue before the arbitrator is as follows:

> Does the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace constitute an enforceable agreement between the parties so that the Union may use the negotiated grievance procedure to resolve disputes rising under the Joint Statement? If so, what is an appropriate remedy?

III. RELEVANT CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

ARTICLE 3 MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

B. To hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employees.

IV. STATEMENT OF FACTS

In this case, the Union challenged the decision of the Employer to treat the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace as something other than a contractual commitment between the parties.

The dispute arose as an aftermath of several violent incidents in the workplace and, in particular, the "Royal Oaks" incident in which an employe killed postal supervisors after receiving an unfavorable arbitration award. The two cases before the arbitrator advanced to the national level when two local branches of the National Association of Letter Carriers filed individual grievances alleging harassment of letter carriers by supervisors and requesting that the supervisors not be allowed to direct the work of letter carriers. The parties consolidated the two grievances, and a full hearing occurred at the regional level on April 21, 1995.

The Union contended that the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace constituted a contract between the parties which set forth standards of behavior for supervisors. The standards set forth in the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace allow an arbitrator to deny a supervisor managerial authority over letter carriers, according to the Union. The Employer responded that Article 3 of the parties' agreement established exclusive rights for the Employer "to hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees," and it is the belief of the Employer that those exclusive rights remain unaltered by any other document about which the parties may have held discussion. It is the belief of the Employer that the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace constitutes a pledge by the Employer to take action that will reduce violence in the workplace. The different perspectives advanced through the parties' grievance procedure to the national level. When the parties were unable to resolve their differences, the matter proceeded to arbitration.

V. POSITION OF THE PARTIES

A. The Union

The Union states unequivocally that the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace constitutes a contract between the parties. The Union asserts that, because of violent circumstances that led to drafting the Joint Statement, the parties intended to negotiate an agreement which required both parties to give up something in a mutual effort to obtain a safer working environment. The Union maintains that the Joint Statement was made by the parties in an effort to indicate a clear-cut break from past behavior. The Union believes that language in the Joint Statement clearly and unambiguously represents a contractual promise by both sides to work relentlessly in an effort to end violent behavior in the workplace.

The Union claims that, when its members are disciplined for violent acts, the Joint Statement is often cited in support of the Employer's disciplinary action against workers. In return, the Union asserts the Employer has agreed in the Joint Statement that supervisors who use violent tactics should also be disciplined. The Union contends that the grievance arbitration procedure is the appropriate forum for determining whether a supervisor should be disciplined for violating the Joint Statement.

B. The Employer

The Employer claims that, when management signed the Joint Statement, the parties never intended the document to be contractually binding in the same way as the National Agreement. Instead, the Employer argues that it made a pledge to take more concerted action against violence in the workplace. Management contends that there is no evidence at all of any intent to give away the Employer's exclusive managerial authority under Article 3 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Employer also contends that there were insufficient contractual formalities present to give rise to an enforceable obligation. The Employer maintains that the Joint Statement at no point shows an intent by the parties to be contractually bound. Moreover, management asserts that it received no consideration for a right of the Union to use the grievance procedure in order to prevent a supervisor from managing letter carriers. Accordingly, the Employer concludes that the grievance must be denied.

VI. ANALYSIS

A. Altering a Right of Management

The right of management to manage is fundamental in the collective bargaining relationship. Such authority is crucial if management is to run an efficient organization and is to advance the agency toward a successful accomplishment of its mission. As one observer commented decades ago, "in the business organism there can be only one mind and only one nerve center if the various parts are to be coordinated into a harmonious whole." (See, Chamberlain, The Union Challenge to Management Control, 134 (1948)). Care must be taken not to undermine management's commitment to operate the organization efficiently.

The parties have codified the rights of management in their agreement with each other, and they specifically recognized management's exclusive right "to hire, promote, transfer, assign, and retain employees in positions within the Postal Service and to suspend, demote, discharge, or take other disciplinary action against such employes." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 5). The Employer argued that an asserted right of the Union to use the grievance procedure to remove or suspend supervisors might impinge on exclusive managerial prerogatives. The question is whether or not the parties have amended such managerial rights by entering into the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace.

It is the position of the Union that the parties have the power to alter their contractual obligations to each other by using methods that extend beyond the traditional negotiation process typically implemented to bring a labor contract into existence. Relying on U.S. Supreme Court precedents, the Union concluded that binding contractual obligations need not result only from a collective bargaining agreement in order to constitute an enforceable contract. (See, e.g., Retail Clerks Int'l Ass'n v. Lion Dry Goods, Inc., 369 U.S. 17 (1962)). The Employer, on the other hand, maintained that there needed to be a specific "negotiated change" to the parties' collective bargaining agreement in order to modify managerial prerogatives. (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, 11).

The parties' straightforward problem implicates a fundamental question of gargantuan proportions, namely, what constitutes a contract? Scholars have filled library shelves addressing the question, and students have puzzled over the issue for hundreds of years. While circumstances and the form of a labor contract may be different, no special set of criteria has evolved in the common law protecting the existence of a labor contract. The Restatement (Second) of Contracts, a highly regarded source of guidance for understanding contracts, defines a "contract" as follows:

> A contract is a promise or a set of promises for the breach of which the law gives a remedy, or the performance of which the law in some way recognizes as a duty. (See, § 1, p. 5 (1981)).

The question is whether or not the parties made binding promises to each other in the Joint Statement and whether or not the parties intended to create legal duties to perform promises to each other. If so, there are enforceable remedies when a promise is broken. By "promise" is meant "a manifestation of intention to act or refrain from acting in a specified way, so made as to justify a promisee in understanding that a commitment has been made." (See, Restatement (Second) of Contracts, § 2(1) p. 8 (1981)). To test the "manifestation of intention to act," an objective standard is used; and undisclosed intentions receive little or no consideration.

One ordinarily would expect to find a collective bargaining agreement reduced to writing and executed by both parties. This is more an evidentiary issue than anything else. (See, e.g., Georgia Purchasing, Inc., 95 LRRM 1469 (1977); and Diversified Services, Inc., 293 LRRM 1068 (1976)). One also would expect a labor contract to contain promises concerning economic issues or conditions of employment. One would expect the parties to provide guidance in an agreement that helps govern "their day-to-day relations" and a broad "stability to the bargaining relationship." (See, J.T. Sand and Gravel Co., 91 LRRM 1187 (1976)). In evaluating an agreement between parties, the U.S. Supreme Court concluded that:

> 'Contract' in labor law is a term the implications of which must be determined from the connection in which it appeared. It is enough that this is clearly an agreement between employers and labor organizations significant to the maintenance of labor peace between them. . . . Its terms affect the working conditions of the employees. . . . It resolves a controversy arising out of, and importantly and directly affecting, the employment relationship. (See, Retail Clerk Int'l Ass'n v. Lion Dry Goods, 369 U.S. 17 (1962), emphasis added).

It is clear the U.S. Supreme Court believes that the term "contract" embraces not only traditional collective bargaining agreements but also other documents negotiated between the parties such as "statements of understanding" drafted, for example, as a method of settling a strike.

While recognizing that long established definitions of a "contract" apply to a labor agreement, it also must be recognized that the context and character of a collective bargaining agreement are different from a contract in a typical commercial transaction. The eminent Archibald Cox observed many years ago that:

> It is not unqualifiedly true that a collective-bargaining agreement is simply a document by which the union and employees have imposed upon management limited, express restrictions of its otherwise absolute right to manage the enterprise, so that an employee's claim must fail unless he can point to a specific contract provision upon which the claim is founded. There are too many people, too many problems, too many unforeseeable contingencies to make the words of the contract the exclusive source of rights and duties. One cannot reduce all the rules governing a community like an industrial plant to fifteen or even fifty pages. Within the sphere of collective bargaining, the institutional characteristics and the governmental nature of the collective-bargaining process demand a common law of the shop which implements and furnishes the context of the agreement. (See, 72 Harv. L. Rev. 1482, 1498 (1959), Emphasis added.

The U.S. Supreme Court later quoted these words of Professor Cox in the Steelworkers' Trilogy. (See, United Steelworkers of America v. Warrior & Gulf Navigation Co., 363 U.S. 574 (1960)).

There, of course, is an expectation that parties will have followed conventional methods of bargaining in order to create their set of promises to each other. At the same time, there is an institutional character to a collective bargaining agreement that often makes it difficult to apply judge-made principles of the common law in the way they might be applied to a lease contract or a contract to sell a farm. The nature of a collective bargaining agreement as a system of self-government must not be forgotten, and the ongoing nature of the relationship between the parties may cause them loosely to draw their agreements and to add to or modify them more so than might be the case in a standard commercial transaction. Moreover, contract law itself generally has evolved in ways that makes it easier to modify agreements. For example, a modern approach to contract modification is set forth in Restatement (Second) of Contracts which states:

> A promise modifying a duty under a contract not fully performed on either side is binding if the modification is fair and equitable in view of circumstances not anticipated by the parties when the contract was made. (See, § 89, p. 237 (1981)).

A lack of classical formalities will not be dispositive in a dispute about contract modifications between knowledgeable parties engaged in an ongoing transaction.

B. Meaning of the Joint Statement

The Employer argued that the parties did not intend the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace to constitute an enforceable contract. As mentioned previously, an objective theory of assent to an agreement is used to determine whether a contractually binding offer has been made and accepted. Through the intellectual force of Judge Learned Hand and Professor Arthur Corbin, an objective assessment of the parties' intention carried the day, and it is the intention of the parties as judged by external or objective appearance that is used to evaluate whether the parties entered into an agreement. As Judge Hand observed, "a contract is an obligation attached by the mere force of law to certain acts of the parties, usually words, which ordinarily accompany and represent a known intent." (See, Hotchkiss v. Nat'l City Bank, 200 F. 287, 293 (1911)). Judged by an objective appearance of intentions, the question is whether parties manifested an intent to agree.

In testing whether promises exchanged by parties constituted a binding promise, a hope, a prediction, or even a pledge, it is appropriate to apply a standard of reasonableness and to ask whether a reasonable person, judging objectively, would conclude that the parties intended their words to constitute a binding promise. Even if one party intended to make a pledge and the other party intended to offer a binding promise, a reasonable person, judging objectively, must ask whether the party offering a binding promise had reason to know of the other parties' undiscussed intention merely to make a pledge. In this context, a "pledge" is used as a nonbinding expression of opinion; but it is recognized that one definition of "pledge" is "a binding promise." There is a famous case in which one farmer thought he was expressing a nonbinding opinion about selling his farm, but the other farmer believed he made a binding promise to buy the farm, and the Court made clear that the undiscussed intention of a party is not relevant under an objective theory of assent. (See, Lucy v. Zehmer, 196 Va. 493, 84 S.E.2d 516 (1954)).

The problem of a party making what was believed to be a nonbinding proposal but, in reality, was a binding promise is an old one. (See, e.g., Embry v. Hargadine, McKittrick Dry Goods Co., 105 S.W. 777 (1907)). The context, of course, cannot be ignored in determining whether or not a statement constituted a gratuitous "pledge" or a binding promise. As Restatement (Second) observed:

> The meaning given to words or other conduct depends to a varying extent on the context and the prior experience of the parties. Almost never are all the connotations of a bargain exactly identical for both parties; it is enough that there is a core of common meaning sufficient to determine their performances with reasonable certainty or to give a reasonably certain basis for an appropriate legal remedy. (See, § 20, comment b, p. 59 (1981), emphasis added).

As the U.S. Supreme Court has made clear, an arbitrator is a "creature of contract;" and an arbitration award is enforceable "only so long as it draws its essence from the collective bargaining agreement." (See, United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593 (1960)). Contractual language is the best evidence of the parties' promissory intent. One arbitrator concluded:

> It is a basic and fundamental concept in the arbitration process that an arbitrator's function in interpreting and applying contract language is to first ascertain and then enforce the intention of the parties as reflected by the language of the pertinent provisions involved. As a necessary and essential corollary is the principle that if the language being construed is clear and unambiguous, such language is itself the best evidence of the intention of the parties. And when language > so selected by the parties leaves no doubt as to the intention, this should end the arbitrator's inquiry. (See, Ohio Chemical & Surgical Equipment Company, 49 LA 377, 380-381 (1967), emphasis added).

The Employer asserted that it intended to make a "pledge" in the Joint Statement according to which it pledged itself to help eliminate violent behavior in the workplace. Management did not intend its "pledge" to constitute an enforceable promise because "there was no intent to alter, amend, or modify the National Agreement." (See, Tr. 58). The Union responded that its intent was to enter into an enforceable promise with management.

An examination of the purpose for the Joint Statement, the actual verbiage itself, and dispute resolution processes used by the parties provide objective manifestations of their intent. It is unrebutted that the principle purpose of the parties in publishing the Joint Statement was to lend their mutual weight to an anti-violence campaign in the workplace. Words used by the parties expressed their concern that combating violence in the workplace was such a high priority it was necessary to take an unprecedented step of jointly issuing a credo against violence. To convey the intensity of their commitment to reducing violence in the workplace, the parties stated:

> The United States Postal Service as an institution and all of us who serve that institution must firmly and unequivocally commit to do everything within our power to prevent further incidents of work-related violence.
> . . . .
> But let there be no mistake that we mean what we say and we will enforce our commitment to a workplace where dignity, respect, and fairness are > basic human rights, and where those who do not respect those rights are not tolerated. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4, emphasis added).

A representative of each party signed the document. Without regard to the unexpressed intentions of the parties, the document makes clear that the parties made promises to each other to take action. The parties addressed their statements to every member of the postal organization. They stated that:

> 'Making the numbers' is not an excuse for the abuse of anyone. Those who do not treat others with dignity and respect will not be rewarded or promoted. Those whose unacceptable behavior continues will be removed from their positions. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4), emphasis added).

On one hand, the Employer argued that management was completely serious about an intent to take action in order to end violence in the workplace. On the other hand, the Employer asserted that it lacked the requisite intent to be contractually bound by the language of the Joint Statement. The Employer contended that, as expressed in the Joint Statement, the parties made a "pledge" of their efforts to accomplish objectives set forth in the document. The reference to the understanding between the parties as a "pledge" indicated to the Employer that the parties merely were communicating their disdain for violence in the workplace and were pledging themselves to end such misconduct. As the Employer viewed it, the Joint Statement definitely was not a contract but, rather, an effort to "send a message to stop the violence." (See, Employer's Post-hearing Brief, 13).

The Employer supported its theory of the case with testimony from representatives present at discussions that led to the Joint Statement. As Mr. David C. Cybulski, Manager of Management Association Relations, testified:

> Following an exploration, again, of the circumstances leading to the tragedy [at Royal Oaks], the thought developed at the table that we should perhaps communicate what it is that we are doing. We are working collegally. We are trying to jointly approach these issues, as complex as they are.
>
> There has been a recognition here that there is something about the postal culture and perhaps something about the postal climate that we need to address and address in a more universal way than management exclusively issuing a statement or the labor union exclusively issuing a statement. (See, Tr. 90-91, emphasis added).

According to the Employer, it sought, in the aftermath of the "Royal Oaks" incident, to quell anxieties of employes by reaffirming an intent to end violence.

While it might be possible to interpret the word "pledge" in the Joint Statement as a nonpromissory commitment, the Statement must be interpreted as a whole document in order to assess its effect. It is a deeply rooted rule in aid of contract interpretation that a document should be interpreted so that its provisions make sense when read together. As Restatement (Second) observed, "since an agreement is interpreted as a whole, it is assumed in the first instance that no part of it is superfluous." ((§ 203, comment b, 93 (1981). The objective of reading a whole document is to give significance to each part and an interpretation is preferred that produces such a result.

Words in the last sentence of the Joint Statement such as "pledge" and "efforts" must be read in conjunction with strong language throughout the prior six paragraphs which referred to "time to take action to show that we mean what we say," or "we will enforce our commitment," and "no tolerance of violence." Such statements indicated that the parties' past efforts had been less than successful and that the "Royal Oaks" tragedy signalled to the parties their need to make a drastic change in postal culture. The Joint Statement marked a departure from the past and pointed the way to organizational change. This was a document that evidenced an intent to take action rather than a mere statement of opinions and predictions. It was a "manifestation of intention to act" which justified a conclusion that a commitment had been made. After making strong promissory statements, the parties signed the document, signaling more than a gratuitous pledge.

The parties' conduct in negotiating the Joint Agreement added support to a justifiable conclusion that they exhibited an objective manifestation to be contractually bound. When approaching management with the idea of issuing a Joint Statement, Mr. Vincent Sombrotto, President of the National Association of Letter Carriers, doubted that the Employer would enter into such an agreement. (See, Tr. 69). In response to Mr. Sombrotto's proposal, the Employer did not flinch but, instead, asserted, "Try me." (See, Tr. 69). Such negotiation behavior exhibited an objective intent of the parties to make legally binding commitments to each other and, if not performed, legally enforceable promises that could be the basis of a remedy. The language of the Joint Statement itself as well as the objective conduct of the parties evidenced their mutual assent to be legally bound by the Joint Statement.

Since the turn of the twentieth century, contract jurisprudence has recognized that an agreement can be "instinct with an obligation" and, therefore, enforceable as a contract. A relationship between parties is "instinct with an obligation" when it is "infused" or "imbued" or "filled" or "charged" with an obligation. (See, e.g., Wood v. Lucy, Lady Duff-Gordon , 118 N.E. 214 (N.Y. 1917)). The Joint Statement committed the parties to a course of action and created obligations for them. Even if the expression of the parties' intent in the Joint Statement was less than perfect, the language they used was instinct with an obligation which overcame any asserted indefiniteness in the document. The Joint Statement itself was clear in its manifestation of an intent to be bound; but even if one concluded that there was an imperfect expression of the parties' intent, the document was instinct with an obligation which supplied the binding requirement of the transaction. Moreover, courts have found that an agreement may be instinct with an obligation based on principles arising from the relationship of the parties and their course of conduct. (See, Toussaint v. Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Michigan, 292 N.W.2d 880 (1980)). A reasonable person would have viewed the surrounding circumstances of this transaction as contractually obligating the parties to each other.

C. Enforcing the Joint Statement

The Joint Statement did not specify a method concerning how to enforce the agreement. It is logical to presume that the parties intended to use standard enforcement mechanisms for disputes that might arise between the parties, namely, their negotiated grievance procedure set forth in the collective bargaining agreement. Such an interpretation is consistent with the parties' agreement.

Article 15.1 of the parties' agreement makes clear that the negotiated grievance procedure is not limited to disputes under the National Agreement which has been negotiated in the traditional way. The Agreement states that:

> A grievance is defined as a dispute, difference, disagreement or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment. A grievance shall include, but is not limited to, the complaint of an employee or of the Unions which involves the interpretation, application of, or compliance with the provisions of this Agreement or any local Memorandum of Understanding not in conflict with this Agreement. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 75, emphasis added).

The parties agreed that the grievance procedure could be used to resolve "a dispute, difference, or complaint" related to "conditions of employment." Moreover, there is an indication in the parties' agreement that, when they intended to make available some other dispute resolution process in lieu of the negotiated grievance procedure, they expressly said so in the agreement. For example, Article 16.9 makes clear that dispute resolution under the Veteran's Preference Act remains available to relevant employes.

(See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 91). In some cases, there is access to the Merit Systems Protection Board. (See, Joint Exhibit No. 1, p. 89). The parties clearly understood how to draft language into their agreement which expressed their intent that there would be an election of a forum different from the negotiated grievance procedure. (See, e.g., Exhibit No. 1, p. 14, Article 6(f)(1)).

The inference is clear that the collective bargaining agreement is presumed by the parties to be the enforcement mechanism used to resolve their disputes, differences, disagreements, and complaints with regard to conditions of employment. The Joint Statement did not provide an alternative means of enforcement. It is concerned with a condition of employment. Accordingly, it is reasonable to conclude that the Union may use the negotiated grievance procedure to resolve disputes under the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace.

The Employer argued that using the negotiated grievance procedure is inappropriate because there is no quid pro quo. In other words, the Union allegedly gave up nothing to receive this additional benefit. In effect, the Employer argued that, even if there were a promissory undertaking on the part of the parties, it was an illusory promise based on a lack of consideration. The modern day requirement is that consideration be bargained for. But, except in instances not relevant in this case, courts do not test the economic equivalence of the bargain. As one court concluded:

> The doing of an act by one at the request of another, which may be a detriment or inconvenience, however slight, to the party doing it, or may be a benefit, however slight, to the party at whose request it is performed, is a legal consideration for a promise by such requesting party. The judgment of the purchaser is the best arbiter of whether the thing is of any value, and how great, to him. (See, Hardesty v. Smith, 3 Ind. 39 (1851)).

The rule that courts do not test the economic equivalent of a bargain is long standing. As another court observed, "the rule is almost elementary that where parties get all the consideration they bargained for, they cannot be heard to complain of the want or inadequacy of consideration." (See, Chicago and Atlantic Railways v. Derkes, 3 N.E. 239 (1885)). If there is consideration, there is no requirement of benefit to a party.

What constitutes consideration has bedazzled students for generations. The rule is that, with several exceptions not relevant in this case, "any performance which is bargained for is consideration." (See, Restatement (Second) of Contracts, § 72, p. 177 (1981)). The usual consideration is a return promise, and even that may be an implied promise. The question is whether there was a promise or, possibly, a performance given in exchange for a promise.

The bargain theory of consideration supports a conclusion that the mutual exchange of promises in this case constituted consideration. The mutual exchange of promises involved a commitment from each party "to make the workroom floor a safer, more harmonious, as well as a more productive workplace." (See, Joint Exhibit No. 4). Use of the negotiated grievance procedure was an incidental result of the promissory exchange between the parties. Moreover, there was unrebutted evidence that the Employer, in fact, has benefited from the exchange between the parties and has used the Joint Statement in regional arbitrations against workers who exhibited behavior inconsistent with the Joint Statement. There, in fact, was consideration in the bargained-for exchange between the parties. The grievance procedure of the National Agreement may be used to enforce the parties' bargain, and arbitrators have available to them the flexibility found in arbitral jurisprudence when it comes to formulating remedies, including removing a supervisor from his or her administrative duties. As the U.S. Supreme Court instructed:

> There [formulating remedies] the need is for flexibility in meeting a wide variety of situations. The draftsmen may never have thought of what specific remedy should be awarded to meet a particular contingency. (See, United Steelworkers of America v. Enterprise Wheel and Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593 (1960)).

AWARD

Having carefully considered all evidence submitted by the parties concerning this matter, the arbitrator concludes that the Joint Statement on Violence and Behavior in the Workplace constitutes a contractually enforceable agreement between the parties. Accordingly, the Union shall have access to the negotiated grievance procedure set forth in the parties' collective bargaining agreement to resolve disputes arising under the Joint Statement. It is so ordered and awarded.

Dear Mr. Sombrotto:

On January 10, 1997, I met with your representative to discuss the above-captioned grievances at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in these cases is whether management violated ELM Section 546.14 in moving the grievants' limited duty assignments.

During this discussion, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue was fairly presented. Accordingly, we agreed that the provisions of ELM 546.14 are enforceable through the provisions of the grievance/arbitration process. Whether an actual violation occurred is fact based and suitable for regular arbitration if unresolved.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand these cases.

Class Action
St. Louis, MO 63155-6601

Dear Bill:

Recently, Joseph N. Amma, Jr. and myself held pre-arbitration discussions with you, Samuel D'Ambrosio and Arthur S. Vallone concerning the above-referenced grievance currently pending national level arbitration.

The issue in this grievance is whether a general supervisor violated the National Agreement when he issued a statement that all class action grievances filed by a shop steward must be filed with the stewards immediate supervisor regardless of where the grievance originated.

During this discussion it was mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. We further agreed that the determination of the immediate supervisor is a fact circumstance best suited for regional determination and application of Article 15.2 and 15.3. We further agreed that in the best interest of Article 15.3.A, a step one grievance should normally be initiated with the supervisor most likely responsible for the action giving rise to the dispute.

Re: Class Action
Wilson, NC 27893
NIC-3P-C-6922

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On August 4, 1981, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

e matters presented by you as well as the applicable ntractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful c .sideration.

The question in this grievance is whether or not management violated Article 17 of the National Agreement when management would not allow a local Union steward time to write up a grievance on the Union's standard grievance outline work sheet. Local management's position was that no form should be completed until the employee and supervisor have discussed the grievance.

Article 15, Section 2, of the National Agreement entitles an employee to discuss a grievance with his immediate supervisor. It also entitles the employee to be accompanied and represented by the employee's steward or a union representative.

Article 17, Section 3, of the National Agreement entitles the steward to investigate and adjust grievances or to investigate a specific problem to determine whether to file a grievance.

It seems logical that the Union would develop an internal format to ensure consistency and efficient use of the time allotted for a steward to interview a grievant or potential grievant. Not every item on the form would be completed in every case, as it may be determined that no corrective action or management response is required. Further, the form is completed during the interview and would consume no more time than any other method of note taking. Therefore, the Union steward may, while interviewing a grievant or potential grievant, complete his grievance outline worksheet.

If you agree with the position stated above, please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Sincerely,

R. L. Eugene

Dear Mr. Quinn:

On February 1, 1993, I discussed the above referenced case with your representative, Jewell Reed.

The issue in this representative grievance is whether the Union should be given the opportunity to be present when management and an employee adjust a Step 1 grievance and the employee has not asked to be accompanied and represented by a shop steward or union representative. The parties at Step 3 agreed to hold this case pending the outcome of case number H7C-4J-C 18047.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand the grievance to the parties at Step 3 for possible application of the attached resolution of case number H7C-4J-C 18047.

Re: H7C-4J-C 18047
Class Action
Milwaukee, WI 53203

Dear Mr. Neill:

Recently, the Postal Service met with Robert Tunstall in a prearbitration discussion of the above-referenced case.

The issue in this grievance is whether the Union should be given the opportunity to be present when management and an employee adjust a Step 1 grievance and the employee has not asked to be accompanied and represented by a shop steward or union representative.

We agreed to the following as a full settlement of the issues raised, recognizing that the terms of this settlement are applicable only to formally declared Step 1 grievances.

The parties recognize that Article 15 distinguishes between two aspects of a Step 1 meeting, the discussion and the adjustment. While both of these may occur at the same meeting, the adjustment may also be issued as much as five days following the discussion. A settlement would be considered part of the adjustment phase of the procedure.

We agreed that a grievant has the option to exclude a steward from the discussion portion, where the merits of the grievance are discussed by the grievant and management. However, absent waiver by the bargaining representative, Section 9 (a) of the National Labor Relations Act requires that the bargaining representative be given the opportunity to be present at the adjustment portion of the grievance procedure. The bargaining representative need not be given an opportunity to be present if the grievance is denied at Step 1.

Finally, we agreed that this settlement has prospective effect only, and will not be used to invalidate any Step 1 settlements reached prior to its issuance.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle case number H7C-4J-C 18047 and remove it from the pending national arbitration listing.

Dear Mr. Tunstall:

On July 22, 1986, and again on November 10, 1986, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether management violated the National Agreement by not scheduling a Step 2 meeting on grievance #9-85.

Dear John:

Recently, I met with T.J. Branch to discuss the above captioned case at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issues in this grievance are: does management have the right to designate its Step 2 designees from outside the installation, unilaterally determine the location of the Step 2 discussions, and require telephonic grievance discussions.

After full discussion of this issue, we agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case as the issues have previously been addressed as follows: Step 2 grievances shall be filed with the installation head or designee. Management is responsible for notifying the union of the proper representative to whom Step 2 appeals are to be made (CIM V3 Article 15 Page 6). The parties agree that the National Agreement does not dictate the location where Step 2 meetings must be held. Pre-arbitration settlement D84M-1D-C 87013561, (copy attached) in part states:

> "The parties at this level agree that the National Agreement does not dictate the location where Step 2 discussions must be held. This is a local dispute suitable for regional determination."

Individual telephonic Step 2 discussions are permitted only with agreement by both parties. These discussions and reviews will have the same contractual force and effect as if the parties had met in person.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for discussion and if necessary regional level arbitration in keeping with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 Procedures.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to Step 3 of the grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The question in this grievance is whether management violated Article XV of the National Agreement by not providing privacy during Step 2 meetings.

Although the National Agreement does not specifically address this matter, management is mandated along with the Union to have meaningful dialogue in order to resolve grievances. While complete privacy may be difficult to achieve, local management should make the effort to ensure that Step 2 meetings are as private as possible with no unnecessary interruptions.

To the extent discussed above, we consider this grievance resolved.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS

OPINION

I

Article VIII (Hours of Work), Section 5 of the 1978-1981 National Agreement (JX-1) provides in pertinent part:

> Section 5. Overtime Assignments. When needed, overtime work for regular full-time employees shall be scheduled among qualified employees doing similar work in the work location where the employees regularly work in accordance with the following:
>
> A. Two weeks prior to the start of each calendar quarter, full-time regular employees desiring to work overtime during that quarter shall place their names on an "Overtime Desired" list.
>
> B. Lists will be established by craft, section, or tour in accordance with Article XXX, Local Implementation.
>
> 2. Only in the letter carrier craft, when during the quarter the need for overtime arises, employees with the necessary skills having listed their names will be selected from the list. During the quarter every effort will be made to distribute equitably the opportunities for overtime among those on the list. In order to insure equitable opportunities for overtime, overtime hours worked and opportunities offered will be posted and updated quarterly. Recourse to the "Overtime Desired" list is not necessary in the case of a letter carrier working on the employee's own route in one of the employee's regularly scheduled days.

D. If the voluntary "Overtime Desired" list does not provide sufficient qualified people, qualified full-time regular employees not on the list may be required to work overtime on a rotating basis with the first opportunity assigned to the junior employee.

E. Exceptions to C and D above if requested by the employee may be approved by local management in exceptional cases based on equity (e.g. anniversaries, birthdays, illness, deaths).

F. Excluding December, only in an emergency situation will a full-time regular employee be required to work over ten (10) hours in a day or six (6) days in a week.

The instant grievance arose in the Torrance, California, Post Office, which employs about 220 carriers. Each carrier is assigned to one of five zip-code sections. There is a separate Overtime Desired list for each section. The section involved in this case is 90503, called the 03 section, for short. At the time in question, 12 carriers were on the Overtime Desired list of the 03 section.

On the morning of 27 February 1981, carrier Route No. 317 was vacant, and no part-time flexible or reserve carriers were available to deliver the route as a regular eight-hour, straight-time assignment. Consequently, in order to have the route delivered that day, management had to assign it as overtime.

On 27 February, of the 12 carriers on the Overtime Desired list of the 03 section, one had bid out of the section, one was an acting supervisor, one was on sick leave, and one was on annual leave. Of the eight remaining, all were already scheduled for work, and three were scheduled to work until 5:00 or 5:15 p. m. on their own routes. Management thus had only two options: (1) it could "pivot" the vacant route among the remaining five carriers, or (2) it could call in an employee not on the Overtime Desired list to work the route on overtime.

"Pivoting" is defined in Section 617.2 of the Postal Operations Manual (JX-3) as follows:

> .11 Pivoting is a method of utilizing the undertime of one or several carriers to perform duties on a temporarily vacant route or to cover absences. Non-preferential mail may be curtailed within delivery time standards on the vacant route and/or on the routes of the carriers being pivoted.
> .12 Pivoting is not limited to periods when mail volume is light and when absences are high but can be utilized throughout the year for maintaining balanced carrier workloads.

Management followed the second course, calling in Ronald Summers, the carrier regularly assigned to Route No. 317, who had the day off. Summers worked eight hours. The Union promptly filed a class grievance (JX-2), which was denied at the first step. On 13 March 1981, the Union appealed to step 2, asking for eight hours of pay to be divided among five carriers on the 03 Overtime Desired list. Management's step 2 answer, dated 27 March, read in part:

> It would be a poor management practice to split up a route on overtime when a regular is available. Additionally it would be a disservice to our customers to have them receive their mail in the late afternoon by carrier working on overtime.

The Union then appealed to step 3. Management's response, dated 3 June, read in part:

> It is Management's position that all contractual provisions have been met where all Carriers on the Overtime Desired List have been called into work. Management is not obligated to split up a route to be carried by those employees on the Overtime Desired List already at work and assigned to other duties.
> In our judgment, the grievance involves an interpretive issue pertaining to the National Agreement or a supplement thereto which may be of general application, and thus may only be appealed to Step 4 in accordance with the provisions of Article XV of the National Agreement.

At the step 4 meeting, Howard R. Carter, for the Postal Service, and Halline Overby, for the Union, jointly executed a statement, dated 10 August, that no national interpretive issue was presented by the grievance and that it should therefore be remanded to step 3. On the remand, management again denied the grievance; its answer, dated 15 September, was identical with that given on 3 June. The case was then appealed to arbitration.

II

Both James Hurst, the Union's sole witness, and Donald G. Talbert, the Postal Service's sole witness, agreed that the common practice at the Torrance Post Office when there are not enough part-time flexible carriers to cover vacant routes on straight time has been, first, to assign carriers from the Overtime Desired list who are not scheduled on that particular day; second, to pivot the route among carriers on the Overtime Desired list who are already scheduled; and third, to assign carriers not on the Overtime Desired list. They also agreed that the rule of thumb has been that no carrier should be scheduled on the street "after dark," which in February would be 5:15 p. m. (Talbert) 5:30 p. m. (Hurst). Finally, they agreed that although Article VIII, Section 5-F provides that except in December, or in an emergency, no full-time regular carrier will be required to work more than 10 hours in a day, carriers frequently voluntarily work in excess of 10 hours per day.

During the processing of the instant grievance, the Union argued that the overtime in question could have been distributed as follows (JX-2):

J. Ryan - 2.50 hours preshift [i.e., call in early] to case route, has normal 10 am starting time.

D. Bowser - 1.50 hours carrying

D. Arvin - 1.50 hours carrying

A. Bowman - 1.50 hours carrying

L. Sipe - 1.00 hours carrying

As shown by the time cards this would have resulted in the entire route being completed by 5:30 pm, not an uncommon time for residential routes to be comped in this city.

Had these carriers been pivoted in the manner suggested by the Union, they would have worked the following total number of hours, respectively: Ryan - 10½ , Bowser-9½, Arvin-9½, Bowman - 10½, Sipe - 10.

The Union's position is that management's failure to pivot the vacant assignment on 27 February 1981 was a prima facie violation of Article VIII, section 5-C-2 and 5-D, and that none of the exceptions in 5-E applied. Recognizing that in some circumstances it may be "impracticable or unreasonable to pivot an overtime assignment," the Union offers as a "fair and workable standard" that articulated by Arbitrator Neil N. Bernstein in a regional award dated 30 December 1981, in a similar case. The language alluded to by the Union (Bernstein award, P. 8), reads as follows:

> The Service does have the right in the first instance to schedule working hours, but the scheduling that it does must be "reasonable". The concept of reasonableness necessarily includes some recognition and protection of the overtime allocation principles contained in Article VIII. The avoidance of compulsory overtime by maximum utilization of the service of the employees on the "Overtime Desired" list is a factor that must be considered in any appropriate scheduling decision. However, that is not to say that avoidance of compulsory overtime is an overriding consideration; there are many other factors that also are relevant, and they may sometimes dictate a work schedule that involves more compulsory overtime than is absolutely necessary. However, if the Service does adopt such a schedule, it must have "good cause" for doing so.

The Union argues that the Postal Service has failed to satisfy the "good cause" standard. It points out that under Article XV (Grievance-Arbitration Procedure) of the National Agreement, both parties must state all of the facts and contentions upon which they rely during the grievance procedure, and it cites an award by Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal, dated 21 September 1981, refusing to consider arguments of the Postal Service advanced for the first time at the arbitration hearing. It emphasizes that all of the specific circumstances relied upon by management to prove the reasonableness and just cause for assigning the overtime work to Summers were mentioned for the first time at the arbitration hearing, and urges that they should therefore be inadmissible.

In addition, the Union contends that even if those circumstances are considered, they do not sustain management's position. Specifically, the Union argues that Article VIII, Section 5-F does not impose a flat ban on working over 10 hours in one day, but only a ban on compulsory assignment of work in excess of 10 Hours. It also denies management's claim that it would have taken more time to pivot the overtime work among the five carriers than it took Summers to complete it. Finally, while admitting that pivoting the overtime would have delayed some mail deliveries, the Union insists that this was irrelevant. No business mail was involved, and there has always been a substantial variation in times of residential deliveries of mail in Torrance.

The position of the Postal Service is that under Article III (Management Rights) of the National Agreement, it has the right to resort to compulsory overtime for the purpose of minimizing overtime, using it in the most efficient manner, and avoiding delay in the mails. It points out, further, that management had no way of knowing, in advance, whether any or all of the five carriers on the Overtime Desired list who were already scheduled would be willing to work in excess of 10 hours or, if so, whether they would be able to finish before dark. Finally, it asserts that the assignment of the vacant route to Summers was reasonable because it was his regular route, it could be completed in less time than would have been required if it had been pivoted, and the assignment resulted in no delay in the mail delivery.

III

The Postal Service says that the thrust of the Union's argument is that management must exhaust the Overtime Desired list to the maximum extent possible (up to two hours overtime for each carrier on the list) prior to using a carrier not on the list. I do not agree. As I understand the Union's position, generalizing from its arguments in this case, it is that management must exhaust the Overtime Desired list before compelling someone not on the list to work overtime, provided that those on the list are willing to work up to or beyond 10 hours, as may be required, and provided that street deliveries can be completed before dark. I also infer that the Union would probably agree that in some circumstances it might be unreasonable to require that overtime be offered to a carrier on the Overtime List even if the time involved would not increase his total hours worked in the day to 10.

On the other hand, the position taken by the Postal Service throughout the four steps of the grievance procedure was that Article VIII, Section 5 does not require it to assign overtime work to carriers on the Overtime Desired list if they have already been called in to work, and that management has no obligation "to split up a route to be carried by those employees. . .already at work and assigned to other duties." This interpretation is predicated, mistakenly, on Article III, which is expressly made "subject to the provisions of this Agreement," including Article VIII.

The Postal Service advanced other, more credible arguments at the arbitration hearing to support the reasonableness of its decision to assign the disputed work to Summers, but none of these except the later delivery of mail had been raised during earlier steps of the grievance procedure. I am fully in agreement with Arbitrator Nittenthal that the provisions of Article XV requiring that all of the facts and arguments relied upon by both parties must be fully disclosed before the case is submitted to arbitration should be strictly enforced. In this case, therefore, I have given no consideration to any of the arguments advanced by the Postal Service other than those referred to specifically in this and the preceding paragraph. The interpretation of Article VIII, Section 5 relied upon by the Postal Service in its answers at steps 2 and 3 of the grievance procedure is plainly in error. The argument that by pivoting the vacant route assignment in the manner suggested by the Union would have delayed the delivery of some residential mail seems to me inconsequential, in the light of the evidence of past practice, and not amounting to good cause for not doing so.

Both parties seem to accept Arbitrator Bernstein's good cause standard. By its very nature, however, this standard must be applied on a case-by-case basis; it does not lend itself to embodiment in a per se rule. In this case the Postal Service relied almost entirely on its own per se rule during the grievance procedure, and I have concluded that this rule goes too far. The Union should not interpret this decision, however, as meaning that under any conceivable circumstances the Postal Service is forbidden to assign overtime work to a carrier not on the Overtime Desired list simply because another carrier or carriers on that list, who have already been scheduled for work, desire to perform some or all of the overtime involved.

Although there is some question in my mind that all of the overtime work in this case, if pivoted as the Union asserted it should have been done, could have been completed before dark, the Postal Service waived its right to dispute the Union's claim by failing to challenge it directly in the grievance procedure. Accordingly, I shall grant the remedy requested.

Statement of the Award: The grievance is granted. The Helena postal facility should reimburse the Regular Carrier or T-6 for re-labeling work improperly assigned to others in April 1980.

BACKGROUND

This grievance from Helena, Montana involves the Postal Service's refusal to honor a clause in a Local Memorandum of Understanding which requires cases for a particular route to be "...re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only." NALC insists that this refusal is a violation of Article XXX of the 1978 National Agreement. The Postal Service argues, however, that this clause is unenforceable (1) because its subject matter does not fall within the 22 items enumerated for local negotiations in Article XXX, Section B and (2) because its terms are inconsistent or in conflict with Articles III and XIII. NALC disagrees with both of these propositions.

Since the mid-1960s, the parties have encouraged the execution of local agreements. Those local agreements included a variety of clauses. Some served to implement the general provisions of the National Agreement; others dealt with subject matter not covered by the National Agreement. The parties specifically contemplated local ageements which went beyond the terms of the National Agreement. For example, Article VII, Section 13(c) of the 1968 National Agreement prohibited local clauses which "repeat, reword, paraphrase or conflict with the National Agreement..." but added that "this is not to be interpreted to mean that local negotiations shall be restricted to only those options provided in articles in the National Agreement..."

This history was not ignored in the 1971 National Agreement, the first contract following the Postal Reorganization Act and the creation of the collective bargaining process now in effect. Article XXX stated that it was "impractical to set forth in the Agreement all detailed matters relating to local conditions..." and that therefore "further negotiations regarding local conditions will be required with respect to local installations, post offices, and facilities." It went on to say that "any agreement reached shall be incorporated in memoranda of understanding." It provided that no such memoranda "shall be inconsistent or in conflict with this Agreement..."; it provided for arbitration of impasses reached in local negotiations.

The 1971 local negotiations resulted in a huge number of impasses. More than 100,000 of them were appealed to arbitration. Obviously, the parties were unable to dispose of this volume of disputes. This difficulty prompted changes in the 1973 National Agreement. The parties decided to limit the number of impasses by restricting "local implementation" to "22 specific items enumerated below..." Thus, the local negotiators could deal with any or all of these 22 items but were not required to discuss anything else. The parties provided for arbitration of impasses where the appeal to arbitration was timely and was authorized by the National Union President.

The language of the 1973 National Agreement, specifically, Article XXX, has been carried forward into the 1975 and 1978 National Agreements. It is crucial to the resolution of this grievance and must be quoted at length:

> "A. Presently effective local memoranda of understanding not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement unless changed by mutual agreement pursuant to the local implementation procedure set forth below.
>
> "B. There shall be a 30-day period of local implemention to commence October 1, 1978 on the 22 specific items enumerated below, provided that no local memorandum of understanding may be inconsistent with or vary the terms of the 1978 National Agreement:
>
> ...[Items 1 through 22]
>
> "C. All proposals remaining in dispute may be submitted to final and binding arbitration, with the written authorization of the national Union President. The request for arbitration must be submitted within 10 days of the end of the local implementation period. However, where there is no agreement and the matter is not referred to arbitration, the provisions of the former local memorandum of understanding shall apply, unless inconsistent with or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement.
>
> "D. An alleged violation of the terms of a memorandum of understanding shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure."*

* This quotation is taken from the 1978 National Agreement. The language of the 1973 and 1975 National Agreements is identical except for the year 1973 or 1975, respectively, instead of 1978.

Given this background, the facts which prompted the instant dispute should be considered. Route cases are labeled so as to allow a Letter Carrier to case mail in a proper delivery sequence. Re-labeling is periodically required, perhaps two hours' work on each carrier route once a year, because of route changes (e.g., new addresses). In the 1975 local negotiations in Helena, Montana, the parties agreed to a Memorandum of Understanding which included the following clause in Article XLI, Section 3:

> "U. Routes will be re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only."

This clause does not fall within any of the 22 items enumerated in Article XXX-B. It was nevertheless applied by Management throughout the life of the 1975 National Agreement. It was not mentioned during the 1978 local negotiations and it appeared again, unchanged, in the 1978 Memorandum of Understanding. No claim was made by Management in those negotiations that the clause was inconsistent or in conflict with the National Agreement.

Helena Management used a part-time Flexible Carrier and a limited duty Regular Carrier to remove and replace labels on route cases on April 14, 1980. This was contrary to the terms of the 1978 Memorandum of Understanding. NALC Branch 220 grieved on April 28, 1980, alleging a violation of the Memorandum and seeking back pay for the Regular Carriers who would have performed this re-labeling had Management complied with Article XLI, Section 3U of the Memorandum.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

This case concerns the enforceability of that portion of the 1978 Helena Memorandum of Understanding which deals with the assignment of re-labeling work. Two principal questions are before the arbitrator. The first is whether this Helena clause is rendered unenforceable by reason of the fact that its subject matter is outside the scope of the 22 items enumerated for local negotiations in Article XXX-B. The second is whether this Helena clause is inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement and hence unenforceable under Article XXX-A and -B. The Postal Service believes both questions call for an affirmative answer. NALC disagrees.

I - Enforceability - Subject Matter

The Postal Service argues that Article XXX-B limits the permissible scope of local negotiations. It insists that local parties have the authority to negotiate only on those 22 items enumerated in XXX-B. It urges that they have no authority to negotiate on other subject matter and that should they nevertheless do so, any agreement they reach would be unenforceable. It asserts that these principles require that the Helena clause on re-labeling be declared unenforceable inasmuch as it does not fall within the 22 enumerated items.

This argument rests on a single sentence in Article XXX-B, "There shall be a 30-day period of local implementation...on the 22 specific items enumerated below..." These words simply state that the local parties are to negotiate on these 22 items. A familiar rule of contract construction provides, "To express one thing is to exclude another." The Postal Service apparently relies on this rule in asserting that the local parties are not to negotiate anything other than these 22 items. Its position is that the local parties in Helena had no authority to negotiate the clause on re-labeling and that this clause must therefore be deemed null and void.

This point of view is not persuasive. To begin with, it must be remembered that the local parties had in the past routinely negotiated local memoranda on subject matter nowhere mentioned in the National Agreement. No one claims these memoranda were, for that reason, invalid. However, so many local issues were deadlocked in the 1971 negotiations that the procedure for resolving such impasses was overwhelmed and hence unworkable. This problem prompted the introduction of XXX-B in the 1973 National Agreement. Clearly, the concern of the national parties was not the subject matter of the local memoranda* but rather the number of impasses. It is true that XXX-B served to limit the subjects on which the local parties were required to negotiate. But that obviously was done in order to limit the number of potential impasses in the future.

Given this tradition of broad local memoranda and the limited objectives of XXX-B, it would take clear contract language to prohibit the local parties from negotiating a clause on a subject outside the 22 listed items. No such language, no such prohibition, can be found in XXX-B. The Postal Service believes this provision describes what the local parties are authorized to negotiate. But it is equally plausible to argue, as NALC does, that this provision describes what the local parties are required to negotiate.* This interpretation is, I think, more consistent with the parties' history as well as collective bargaining reality. The rule of construction noted earlier, when applied to this view of XXX-B, would indicate only that the local parties are not required to negotiate on any subject outside the 22 listed items. Thus, the local parties are free if they wish to expand their negotiating agenda to include subjects nowhere mentioned in XXX-B. That is exactly what happened in Helena when the local parties agreed to a re-labeling clause in the 1975 negotiations. They had the authority to negotiate such a clause.

* The national parties were, of course, always concerned about local memoranda being consistent with the National Agreement. That matter is discussed later in this opinion.

Two other points deserve brief mention. First, the Postal Service concedes that any pre-1973 local memoranda on subjects outside the 22 listed items would be valid and binding notwithstanding XXX-B. It says only post-1973 memoranda are affected by the XXX-B constraints. If this distinction were correct, then the validity of many local clauses would depend not on their subject matter but rather on the date they happen to have been negotiated. The same clause might be valid if executed in the 1971 negotiations but invalid if executed in the 1973 negotiations. That would be a strange result. Second, the Postal Service cites several awards which have interpreted XXX-B in a manner consistent with its position. All but one of those awards were impasse arbitrations. They were not grievance arbitrations; they were not heard

* And Article XXX-B and -C together indicate that the parties are free to arbitrate what they are required to, but cannot successfully negotiate.

 Multi-facility (or multi-employer) collective bargaining contracts always permit local agreements so long as they are not in conflict with the master contract. That phenomenon is a result of the need for mutually acceptable arrangements for matters not covered by the master contract.

 The one exception, Case No. AC-N-14034, was a grievance arbitration at the national level. But the arbitrator's opinion did not really deal with the issue before me in the present case.

at the national level; they do not appear to have involved a full airing of this XXX-B issue. In another award at the national level (Case No. A8-N-0036), Arbitrator Aaron stated, "...it can scarcely be contended that management is precluded by Article XXX, Section B, from agreeing to negotiate locally about any particular matter." Under these circumstances, I do not consider myself bound by the Postal Service citations.

For these reasons, my conclusion is that the Helena Local Memorandum clause on re-labeling was enforceable even though it covered a subject outside the 22 enumerated items in XXX-B.

II - Enforceability - Continuity of Memoranda

The Helena clause in question was initially agreed to in the 1975 local negotiations. It was incorporated in the 1975 Local Memorandum. No mention was made of this clause in the 1978 negotiations and the parties carried it forward into the 1978 Memorandum.

That clause is enforceable under Article XXX-A, "Presently effective local memoranda of understanding...shall remain in effect during the term of this [1978 National] Agreement..." It was in effect in April 1980 when Management ignored its terms and assigned re-labeling work to someone other than "the Regular Carrier or T-6..." According to XXX-D, such "an alleged violation of the terms of a memorandum of understanding shall be subject to the grievance-arbitration procedure."

III - Enforceability - Conflict with National Agreement

Article XXX-A provides that only those "presently effective local memoranda" which are "not inconsistent or in conflict with the 1978 National Agreement shall remain in effect during the term of this Agreement..." The Postal Service asserts that the Helena clause on re-labeling is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Articles III and XIII of the 1978 National Agreement and is hence unenforceable. NALC disagrees.

Article III (Management Rights) states in part:

> "The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

A. To direct employees...in the performance of official duties;

B. To...assign...employees in positions within the Postal Service;

C. To maintain the efficiency of the operations...;

D. To determine the methods, means and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted..."

This contract language grants the Postal Service an "exclusive right" to "direct" the work force and "assign" work. Its broad discretion in these areas is "subject" to the provisions of the 1978 National Agreement. Neither party has cited any portion of the National Agreement which would limit that discretion in relation to the facts of this case. The M-39 Manual, Part 121.21, says that one of the Carrier's office duties is to "relabel cases if local management so desires..." These words merely indicate that Carriers are to perform re-labeling work only when Management asks them to do so.

The Helena clause on re-labeling work is part of a Local Memorandum of Understanding. It is not a provision of the 1978 National Agreement.* It states, "Route...[cases] will be re-labeled by the Regular Carrier or T-6 only." The issue raised by the parties is whether this clause, this restriction on Helena Management's right of assignment, is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article III of the National Agreement.

The Postal Service's argument is not without appeal. It correctly observes that this local clause prohibits Helena Management from assigning re-labeling work to anyone other than the Regular Carrier or T-6. It insists that Management's "exclusive right" to "assign" is thereby limited, that the broad discretion granted by Article III is reduced by the Helena clause. In its opinion, therefore, the prohibition in this local clause is "inconsistent or in conflict with" its Article III rights. It says this inconsistency should prevent this clause from being treated, under XXX-A, as a * Local memoranda are enforceable through the terms of the National Agreement. But that surely does not make any such memorandum a provision of the National Agreement.

"presently effective local memoranda..."

The difficulty with this argument is that it assumes Helena Management had no "right" to agree to such a clause. That is not true. One who holds an "exclusive right" has a wide variety of options. Thus, Helena Management had many alternatives with respect to the assignment of the disputed work. It was free to assign the re-labeling to any of its Carriers. It was free to assign the re-labeling to a special group of employees, the Regular Carrier or T-6 only. It was free indeed to reduce this latter arrangement (i.e., use of the Regular Carrier or T-6 only) to writing through a Local Memorandum. Each of these approaches represents a legitimate exercise of Management's "exclusive right" of assignment. It had a right to do whatever it wished to do.

In short, the "exclusive right" in Article III did not prevent Helena Management from contracting with the Local NALC Branch to limit the assignment of particular work to particular employees. That was simply one of the options available to it. Because this Helena clause was hence within Management's powers, it can hardly be considered "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article III rights. That being so, this local clause is not rendered unenforceable by XXX-A or -B. Helena Management was bound by this clause. When it assigned re-labeling to employees other than the Regular Carrier or T-6 on April 14, 1980, it violated that clause. Such a violation is subject to correction through the terms of XXX-D.

In reaching this conclusion, I have examined awards by Arbitrators Krimsly and Balicer cited by the Postal Service. Both appear to have been the result of impasse arbitrations. The Balicer award involves other provisions of the National Agreement besides Article III and seems to be distinguishable from the present case. The Krimsly award is based, at least in part, on the faulty premise that local parties cannot negotiate assignment restrictions because that is not one of the 22 local implementation items in XXX-B. I have already ruled otherwise in Part I of this opinion.

There remains the Postal Service's claim that the local clause in question is "inconsistent or in conflict with" Article XIII which concerns "assignment of ill or injured regular work force employees." The difficulty here is the lateness of this argument. Article XV describes in great detail what is expected of the parties in the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's Step 2 decision must make a "full statement" of its "understanding of...the contractual provisions involved." Its Step 3 decision must include "a statement of any additional...contentions not previously set forth..." Its Step 4 decision must contain "an adequate explanation of the reasons therefor." In this case, the Postal Service made no mention of Article XIII in Steps 2, 3 and 4. Its reliance on this contract provision did not surface until the arbitration hearing itself. Under such circumstances, it would be inappropriate to consider this belated Article XIII claim.*

For these reasons, I find that the Helena clause on re-labeling is valid and enforceable and that Helena Management violated this clause in April 1980 by using employees other than the Regular Carrier or T-6 to perform the re-labeling work.

AWARD

The grievance is granted. The Helena postal facility should reimburse the Regular Carrier or T-6 for re-labeling work improperly assigned to others in April 1980.

Dear Mr. Amma:

On September 12, 1988, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The threshold issue in this grievance is whether the National Agreement was violated (1) when management did not issue a Step 2 written decision in a timely manner and (2) when management refused to discuss the grievance at Step 3 when the Union did not provide management at Step 2 with a copy of the Step 3 appeal letter.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in the threshold of this case. We further shared the mutual understanding that the provisions of Article 15 of the National Agreement obligates management to issue a written Step 2 decision in timely manner and also, obligates the Union to provide management's Step 2 representative with a copy of the Step 3 appeal letter.

Accordingly, we mutually agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for consideration of the merits and further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On October 23, 1979, we met on the above-captioned case at the fourth step of the contractual grievance procedure set forth in the 1978 National Agreement.

The matter at issue in this grievance is whether a steward is allowed a reasonable amount of time on-the-clock to write a Union statement of corrections and additions to the Step 2 decision.

The following represents our mutual interpretation of the contract provision covering this issue and settles all matters in dispute in this case.

We mutually agree that a steward is allowed a reasonable amount of time on-the-clock to write the Union statement of corrections and additions to the Step 2 decision. This is considered part of the Step 2 process. The Union statement should relate to incomplete or inaccurate facts or contentions set forth in the Step 2 decision.

Please sign a copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of the agreed to interpretation.

Sincerely,

James J. Facciola

Class Action
Buffalo, NY 14240-9997

I recently met with your representative, Dick Collins, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this case is whether or not additions and corrections can be submitted by anyone other than the union Step 2 representative.

After full discussion of this issue, the parties agree that no interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. Determination of this issue is based on the fact circumstances involved. A Union representative may submit additions and corrections to a Step 2 decision. Whether the additions and corrections are accurate is subject to challenge, regarding accuracy, throughout the rest of the grievance arbitration procedure.

Accordingly, we agree to remand this grievance to Step 3 for further processing and/or regional arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case to regional level arbitration.

Time limits at this level were extended by mutual consent.

Dear Mr. Overby:

On November 5, 1981, we met with you to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

As full and final settlement of all matters relating to this grievance, we mutually agreed to settle this dispute as follows:

Normally, the Postmaster or management Step 2 representative will not issue corrections and additions to the Union. However, should this occur, the appropriate Union representative will be allowed reasonable official steward time to prepare a written response.

Please sign the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to resolve this case.

Subject: Payment of Stewards - Grievance Procedure

Statement of the Issue: "Is the Postal Service required to pay Union Stewards for time spent in writing appeals to Step 3 of the grievance procedure, pursuant to Article XVII, Section 4 of the 1978 National Agreement?"

Contract Provisions Involved: Article XV, Section 2, Steps 2 and 3 and Article XVII, Sections 2 and 4 of the July 21, 1978 National Agreement.

Grievance Filed:	March 1979
Step 2 Meeting:	March 19, 1979
Step 3 Meeting:	April 17, 1979
Step 4 Meeting:	June 8, 1979
Case Heard:	September 6, 1979
Transcript Received:	September 19, 1979
Briefs Submitted:	Nov. 21 & 23, 1979

Statement of the Award: Steward Romine should be paid for time spent in writing appeals to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's failure to pay him for such time was a violation of Article XVII, Section 4. He should be compensated for these hours.

BACKGROUND

These grievances protest the Postal Service's refusal to pay a Steward for time spent writing appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Union insists the Steward is entitled to be paid for such "grievance handling" pursuant to Article XVII, Section 4 of the National Agreement. The Postal Service disagrees.

T. Romine is a Distribution Clerk in the Parkersburg, West Virginia post office. He is a Steward as well. Sometime in 1979, supervision gave him a number of adverse Step 2 decisions on grievances he had processed. He chose to appeal those grievances to Step 3. He asked his supervisor to be relieved during his tour because "I have to appeal a couple of adverse Step 2 decisions." The supervisor refused to let him do this paper work "on the clock", i.e., on Postal Service time.

Romine wrote the appeals to Step 3 on his own time. He then grieved, urging that he had a right to appeal grievances from Step 2 to Step 3 during regular working hours and that he should be paid for this appeal work. His claim is based on Article XVII, Section 4 which reads in part:

> "The Employer will authorize payment only under the following conditions:
>
> "Steps 1 and 2 - The aggrieved and one Union steward...for time actually spent in grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer. The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance. In addition, the Employer will compensate any witnesses for time required to attend a Step 2 meeting.
>
> "Meetings called by the Employer for information exchange and other conditions designated by the Employer concerning contract application..." (Emphasis added)

A brief summary of the parties' main arguments would be useful. The Union insists that the Steward's preparation of appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 constituted a Step 2 "grievance handling" activity and that he hence should have been paid for his appeal work under Article XVII, Section 4. The Postal Service contends that pay is due only for certain specified "grievance handling" activities and that the Steward's appeal work was not an "investigation" or a "meeting with the Employer" or the "writ[ing of] a grievance." It alleges also that his appeal work was not a Step 2 activity but rather was the initial stage of Step 3. It believes the Steward's claim should be rejected on either of these grounds.

DISCUSSION AND FINDINGS

The problem in this case arises from the ambiguity in Article XVII, Section 4. That provision, to repeat, calls for payment to Stewards for time spent in "grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer [and] ...writ[ing] a grievance."

The Postal Service treats "including" as a word of strict limitation. Its position is that "grievance handling" covers only those tasks expressly "includ[ed]" in Article XVII, Section 4 and that the Steward's appeal from Step 2 to Step 3 is not one of them. Dictionary definitions provide no answer. For the term "including" can be used in more than one way. It is not necessarily a word of strict limitation. No one would deny that the whole is the sum of its parts. When one speaks of the whole "including" certain enumerated parts, the reference could be to all the parts. But it could just as well be to some of the parts. Thus, when the parties embraced the idea of paying for "grievance handling" which "includ[ed]" certain enumerated tasks, it is not clear whether they meant to cover only those listed tasks (as the Postal Service claims) or whether they meant to cover any task which fell within the rubric of "grievance handling" (as the Union claims).

The answer to this question must be found elsewhere. There are several considerations which favor the Union's position. First, if the Postal Service were correct, the parties need only have stated in Article XVII that Stewards would be paid for time spent in "investigation and meetings with the Employer [and]...writ[ing] a grievance." There would be no need whatever for the words "grievance handling." Those words would be mere surplusage.* However, the parties do not idly write into their Agreement words intended to have no effect. The very presence of the term "grievance handling" suggests that the parties had something more in mind than the three enumerated tasks.

Second, it is impossible to overlook the breadth of the term "grievance handling." It is much larger than any of the enumerated tasks. It encompasses "investigation", "meetings...", "writ[ing] a grievance", and more. Had the parties intended these three tasks to serve as a limit on payments to Stewards, they could easily have said so. They could have stated that payment was for time spent on the following kinds of "grievance handling" and then enumerated the three tasks. But the words they chose suggest that "grievance handling" is not circumscribed by these tasks.

Third, essentially the same issue was arbitrated under the 1971 National Agreement. There, a Steward sought pay for time spent appealing from Step 1 to Step 2A, i.e., for time spent reducing the grievance to writing. The Postal Service apparently took the same position as it does here. It urged that the Agreement called for payment for "grievance handling, including investigation and meetings with the Employer" and that writing a grievance was neither "investigation" nor a "meeting." Arbitrator Fisher held for the Union, explaining that the term "grievance handling" was broad enough to encompass writing a grievance. He asserted, "In the absence of any contractual language stating that the actual writing of a grievance does not constitute 'handling', it is held that such activity requires payment by the Employer." Notwithstanding this broad view of "grievance handling", the parties have continued to use the very same language in their National Agreements.

* The Union position, on the other hand, creates no surplusage. For the test then would be "grievance handling" and the three enumerated tasks would be the most prominent examples of what the parties meant by "grievance handling."

 This award is dated January 1973 and is referred to in the Union's arbitration files as Case No. 389.

For these reasons, I find that the word "including" in Article XVII, Section 4 is not a term of limitation. It follows that the payment for "grievance handling" is not limited to the three enumerated tasks. Steward Romine's action in appealing cases from Step 2 to Step 3 was plainly "grievance handling." He is therefore entitled to be paid for that time provided the appeals are truly Step 2 work. That question is discussed below.

In reaching this conclusion, I have fully considered another Postal Service claim. It emphasizes the following sentence which was added to Article XVII, Section 4 in the 1973 National Agreement: "The Employer will also compensate a steward for the time reasonably necessary to write a grievance." It argues that express inclusion of this writing as a form of compensable "grievance handling" indicates that other kinds of writing (e.g., the appeal from Step 2 to Step 3) are not covered. This argument is not persuasive. The fact is that this sentence represents nothing more than the parties' adoption of Arbitrator Fisher's award. The parties also continued to use the term "grievance handling." By doing so, they appear to have adopted Arbitrator Fisher's rationale that this term was broad enough to include tasks other than those enumerated in Article XVII, Section 4.

One other crucial question must be resolved. Stewards are paid only for Step 1 and Step 2 "grievance handling." The Union maintains that preparation of the appeal from Step 2 to Step 3 is part of Step 2 and is hence covered by Article XVII, Section 4. The Postal Service says this appeal is a Step 3 activity.

Article XV, Section 2 describes the various steps of the grievance procedure. The final stage of Step 2 and the initial stage of Step 3 read as follows:

> Step 2 - "(h) The Union may appeal an adverse Step 2 decision to Step 3. Any such appeal must be made within fifteen (15) days after receipt of the Employer's decision unless the parties' representatives agree to extend the time for appeal. Any appeal must include copies of (1) the standard grievance form, (2) the Employer's written Step 2 decision, and, if filed, (3) the Union corrections or additions to the Step 2 decision."

Step 3 - "(a) Any appeal from an adverse decision in Step 2 shall be in writing to the Regional Director for Employee and Labor Relations, with a copy to the Employer's Step 2 representative, and shall specify the reasons for the appeal."

These provisions offer little assistance. It is more useful to examine the Steward's function and the actual mechanics of moving a grievance from Step 2 to Step 3. The Steward meets with the Postal Service representative; he makes a detailed statement of the facts and contract clauses on which he relies; he introduces evidence if appropriate; he argues his case. This is of course the Step 2 meeting. Later, he receives the Postal Service's decision. If it is adverse, the Union may choose to appeal the grievance to Step 3. In that event, the Steward has other tasks to perform. He corrects the facts and contentions in the Step 2 decision if necessary; he puts together the required documents; and he writes out the reasons for the appeal. It seems to me that this is also a Step 2 activity. For not until the appeal is perfected, not until these papers are filed with the Postal Service Regional Director, does the dispute actually reach Step 3. Anything which precedes that filing is a Step 2 activity. This view is, I think, consistent with the language of the grievance procedure itself.

Thus, Steward Romine's appeals from Step 2 to Step 3 involved Step 2 "grievance handling" and the time he spent on this paper work was compensable under Article XVII, Section 4.

There is one final Postal Service claim which deserves brief mention. It points to a Union proposal in the 1978 contract negotiations which would have extended Article XVII, Section 4 to all steps of the grievance procedure and would have required payment of Stewards for time spent in "grievance handling, including investigation, writing the grievance, and all meetings with the Employer including arbitration hearings." It notes the proposal was rejected. And it alleges that the terms of the proposal demonstrate that the Union itself "did not believe that any activities beyond those specifically listed in Article XVII were reimbursible..." In my opinion, it demonstrates no such thing. The main thrust of the above proposal was to have Stewards paid by the Postal Service whenever they met with Management no matter what step of the grievance procedure was involved. That has nothing to do with the issue before me in this case.

AWARD

Steward Romine should be paid for time spent in writing appeals to Step 3 of the grievance procedure. The Postal Service's failure to pay him for such time was a violation of Article XVII, Section 4. He should be compensated for these hours.

Dear Mr. Amma:

On September 12, 1988, we met with your representative, Marcellus Wilson, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The threshold issue in this grievance is whether the National Agreement was violated (1) when management did not issue a Step 2 written decision in a timely manner and (2) when management refused to discuss the grievance at Step 3 when the Union did not provide management at Step 2 with a copy of the Step 3 appeal letter.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in the threshold of this case. We further shared the mutual understanding that the provisions of Article 15 of the National Agreement obligates management to issue a written Step 2 decision in timely manner and also, obligates the Union to provide management's Step 2 representative with a copy of the Step 3 appeal letter.

Accordingly, we mutually agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for consideration of the merits and further processing, including arbitration if necessary.

Dear Mr. Wright:

On September 6, 1991, we met with your representative, Terry Hatley, to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether a local policy that Step 2 representatives may not grant extensions of time limits to appeal to Step 3 is in violation of the National Agreement.

During our discussion, we mutually agreed that Article 15 does not preclude the granting of extensions by either Step 2 or Step 3 representatives. However, extensions are granted only by mutual agreement of the union and management

Case No. H8N-5B-C 17682

APPEARANCES: Howard R. Carter, for the Postal Service; Cohen, Weiss and Simon, by Keith E. Secular, Esq., for the Union

DECISION

This grievance arose under, and is governed by, the 1978-1981 National Agreement (JX-1) between the above-named parties. The undersigned having been jointly selected by the parties to serve as sole arbitrator, a hearing was held on 19 November 1982, in Washington, D. C. Both parties appeared and presented evidence and argument bearing upon the following issue (Tr. 5-6):

> Did the employer violate Article VIII, Section 5 of the 1978 [-1981] National Agreement by calling in an employee not on the overtime desired list when employees who were on the list were on duty [?]
> If so, what shall the remedy be [?]

A verbatim transcript was made of the arbitration proceeding, and each side filed a post-hearing brief. Upon receipt of both briefs on 15 February 1983, the arbitrator closed the record.

On the basis of the entire record, the arbitrator makes the following

AWARD

Under the particular facts of this case, the employer violated Article VIII, Section 5 of the 1978-1981 National Agreement by calling in an employee not on the Overtime Desired list when employees who were on the list were on duty.

The employer shall reimburse the following employees by paying them overtime pay for the indicated number of hours, respectively:

J. Ryan - 2.50 hours

D. Bowser - 1.50 hours

D. Arvin - 1.50 hours

A. Bowman - 1.50 hours

L. Sipe - 1.00 hour

OPINION

I

Article VIII (Hours of Work), Section 5 of the 1978-1981 National Agreement (JX-1) provides in pertinent part:

> Section 5. Overtime Assignments. When needed, overtime work for regular full-time employees shall be scheduled among qualified employees doing similar work in the work location where the employees regularly work in accordance with the following:
>
> A. Two weeks prior to the start of each calendar quarter, full-time regular employees desiring to work overtime during that quarter shall place their names on an "Overtime Desired" list.
>
> B. Lists will be established by craft, section, or tour in accordance with Article XXX, Local Implementation.
>
> C. 1. . . .
> 2. Only in the letter carrier craft, when during the quarter the need for overtime arises, employees with the necessary skills having listed their names will be selected from the list. During the quarter every effort will be made to distribute equitably the opportunities for overtime among those on the list. In order to insure equitable opportunities for overtime, overtime hours worked and opportunities offered will be posted and updated quarterly. Recourse to the "Overtime Desired" list is not necessary in the case of a letter carrier working on the employee's own route in one of the employee's regularly scheduled days.

D. If the voluntary "Overtime Desired" list does not provide sufficient qualified people, qualified full-time regular employees not on the list may be required to work overtime on a rotating basis with the first opportunity assigned to the junior employee.

E. Exceptions to C and D above if requested by the employee may be approved by local management in exceptional cases based on equity (e.g. anniversaries, birthdays, illness, deaths).

F. Excluding December, only in an emergency situation will a full-time regular employee be required to work over ten (10) hours in a day or six (6) days in a week.

The instant grievance arose in the Torrance, California, Post Office, which employs about 220 carriers. Each carrier is assigned to one of five zip-code sections. There is a separate Overtime Desired list for each section. The section involved in this case is 90503, called the 03 section, for short. At the time in question, 12 carriers were on the Overtime Desired list of the 03 section.

On the morning of 27 February 1981, carrier Route No. 317 was vacant, and no part-time flexible or reserve carriers were available to deliver the route as a regular eight-hour, straight-time assignment. Consequently, in order to have the route delivered that day, management had to assign it as overtime.

On 27 February, of the 12 carriers on the Overtime Desired list of the 03 section, one had bid out of the section, one was an acting supervisor, one was on sick leave, and one was on annual leave. Of the eight remaining, all were already scheduled for work, and three were scheduled to work until 5:00 or 5:15 p. m. on their own routes. Management thus had only two options: (1) it could "pivot" the vacant route among the remaining five carriers, or (2) it could call in an employee not on the Overtime Desired list to work the route on overtime.

"Pivoting" is defined in Section 617.2 of the Postal Operations Manual (JX-3) as follows:

> .11 Pivoting is a method of utilizing the undertime of one or several carriers to perform duties on a temporarily vacant route or to cover absences. Non-preferential mail may be curtailed within delivery time standards on the vacant route and/or on the routes of the carriers being pivoted.
> .12 Pivoting is not limited to periods when mail volume is light and when absences are high but can be utilized throughout the year for maintaining balanced carrier workloads.

Management followed the second course, calling in Ronald Summers, the carrier regularly assigned to Route No. 317, who had the day off. Summers worked eight hours. The Union promptly filed a class grievance (JX-2), which was denied at the first step. On 13 March 1981, the Union appealed to step 2, asking for eight hours of pay to be divided among five carriers on the 03 Overtime Desired list. Management's step 2 answer, dated 27 March, read in part:

> It would be a poor management practice to split up a route on overtime when a regular is available. Additionally it would be a disservice to our customers to have them receive their mail in the late afternoon by carrier working on overtime.

The Union then appealed to step 3. Management's response, dated 3 June, read in part:

> It is Management's position that all contractual provisions have been met where all Carriers on the Overtime Desired List have been called into work. Management is not obligated to split up a route to be carried by those employees on the Overtime Desired List already at work and assigned to other duties.
> In our judgment, the grievance involves an interpretive issue pertaining to the National Agreement or a supplement thereto which may be of general application, and thus may only be appealed to Step 4 in accordance with the provisions of Article XV of the National Agreement.

At the step 4 meeting, Howard R. Carter, for the Postal Service, and Halline Overby, for the Union, jointly executed a statement, dated 10 August, that no national interpretive issue was presented by the grievance and that it should therefore be remanded to step 3. On the remand, management again denied the grievance; its answer, dated 15 September, was identical with that given on 3 June. The case was then appealed to arbitration.

II

Both James Hurst, the Union's sole witness, and Donald G. Talbert, the Postal Service's sole witness, agreed that the common practice at the Torrance Post Office when there are not enough part-time flexible carriers to cover vacant routes on straight time has been, first, to assign carriers from the Overtime Desired list who are not scheduled on that particular day; second, to pivot the route among carriers on the Overtime Desired list who are already scheduled; and third, to assign carriers not on the Overtime Desired list. They also agreed that the rule of thumb has been that no carrier should be scheduled on the street "after dark," which in February would be 5:15 p. m. (Talbert) 5:30 p. m. (Hurst). Finally, they agreed that although Article VIII, Section 5-F provides that except in December, or in an emergency, no full-time regular carrier will be required to work more than 10 hours in a day, carriers frequently voluntarily work in excess of 10 hours per day.

During the processing of the instant grievance, the Union argued that the overtime in question could have been distributed as follows (JX-2):

J. Ryan - 2.50 hours preshift [i.e., call in early] to case route, has normal 10 am starting time.

D. Bowser - 1.50 hours carrying

D. Arvin - 1.50 hours carrying

A. Bowman - 1.50 hours carrying

L. Sipe - 1.00 hours carrying

As shown by the time cards this would have resulted in the entire route being completed by 5:30 pm, not an uncommon time for residential routes to be compled in this city.

Had these carriers been pivoted in the manner suggested by the Union, they would have worked the following total number of hours, respectively: Ryan - 10½ , Bowser-9½, Arvin-9½, Bowman - 10½, Sipe - 10.

The Union's position is that management's failure to pivot the vacant assignment on 27 February 1981 was a prima facie violation of Article VIII, section 5-C-2 and 5-D, and that none of the exceptions in 5-E applied. Recognizing that in some circumstances it may be "impracticable or unreasonable to pivot an overtime assignment," the Union offers as a "fair and workable standard" that articulated by Arbitrator Neil N. Bernstein in a regional award dated 30 December 1981, in a similar case. The language alluded to by the Union (Bernstein award, P. 8), reads as follows:

> The Service does have the right in the first instance to schedule working hours, but the scheduling that it does must be "reasonable". The concept of reasonableness necessarily includes some recognition and protection of the overtime allocation principles contained in Article VIII. The avoidance of compulsory overtime by maximum utilization of the service of the employees on the "Overtime Desired" list is a factor that must be considered in any appropriate scheduling decision. However, that is not to say that avoidance of compulsory overtime is an overriding consideration; there are many other factors that also are relevant, and they may sometimes dictate a work schedule that involves more compulsory overtime than is absolutely necessary. However, if the Service does adopt such a schedule, it must have "good cause" for doing so.

The Union argues that the Postal Service has failed to satisfy the "good cause" standard. It points out that under Article XV (Grievance-Arbitration Procedure) of the National Agreement, both parties must state all of the facts and contentions upon which they rely during the grievance procedure, and it cites an award by Arbitrator Richard Mittenthal, dated 21 September 1981, refusing to consider arguments of the Postal Service advanced for the first time at the arbitration hearing. It emphasizes that all of the specific circumstances relied upon by management to prove the reasonableness and just cause for assigning the overtime work to Summers were mentioned for the first time at the arbitration hearing, and urges that they should therefore be inadmissible.

In addition, the Union contends that even if those circumstances are considered, they do not sustain management's position. Specifically, the Union argues that Article VIII, Section 5-F does not impose a flat ban on working over 10 hours in one day, but only a ban on compulsory assignment of work in excess of 10 Hours. It also denies management's claim that it would have taken more time to pivot the overtime work among the five carriers than it took Summers to complete it. Finally, while admitting that pivoting the overtime would have delayed some mail deliveries, the Union insists that this was irrelevant. No business mail was involved, and there has always been a substantial variation in times of residential deliveries of mail in Torrance.

The position of the Postal Service is that under Article III (Management Rights) of the National Agreement, it has the right to resort to compulsory overtime for the purpose of minimizing overtime, using it in the most efficient manner, and avoiding delay in the mails. It points out, further, that management had no way of knowing, in advance, whether any or all of the five carriers on the Overtime Desired list who were already scheduled would be willing to work in excess of 10 hours or, if so, whether they would be able to finish before dark. Finally, it asserts that the assignment of the vacant route to Summers was reasonable because it was his regular route, it could be completed in less time than would have been required if it had been pivoted, and the assignment resulted in no delay in the mail delivery.

III

The Postal Service says that the thrust of the Union's argument is that management must exhaust the Overtime Desired list to the maximum extent possible (up to two hours overtime for each carrier on the list) prior to using a carrier not on the list. I do not agree. As I understand the Union's position, generalizing from its arguments in this case, it is that management must exhaust the Overtime Desired list before compelling someone not on the list to work overtime, provided that those on the list are willing to work up to or beyond 10 hours, as may be required, and provided that street deliveries can be completed before dark. I also infer that the Union would probably agree that in some circumstances it might be unreasonable to require that overtime be offered to a carrier on the Overtime List even if the time involved would not increase his total hours worked in the day to 10.

On the other hand, the position taken by the Postal Service throughout the four steps of the grievance procedure was that Article VIII, Section 5 does not require it to assign overtime work to carriers on the Overtime Desired list if they have already been called in to work, and that management has no obligation "to split up a route to be carried by those employees. . .already at work and assigned to other duties." This interpretation is predicated, mistakenly, on Article III, which is expressly made "subject to the provisions of this Agreement," including Article VIII.

The Postal Service advanced other, more credible arguments at the arbitration hearing to support the reasonableness of its decision to assign the disputed work to Summers, but none of these except the later delivery of mail had been raised during earlier steps of the grievance procedure. I am fully in agreement with Arbitrator Mittenthal that the provisions of Article XV requiring that all of the facts and arguments relied upon by both parties must be fully disclosed before the case is submitted to arbitration should be strictly enforced. In this case, therefore, I have given no consideration to any of the arguments advanced by the Postal Service other than those referred to specifically in this and the preceding paragraph. The interpretation of Article VIII, Section 5 relied upon by the Postal Service in its answers at steps 2 and 3 of the grievance procedure is plainly in error. The argument that by pivoting the vacant route assignment in the manner suggested by the Union would have delayed the delivery of some residential mail seems to me inconsequential, in the light of the evidence of past practice, and not amounting to good cause for not doing so.

Both parties seem to accept Arbitrator Bernstein's good cause standard. By its very nature, however, this standard must be applied on a case-by-case basis; it does not lend itself to embodiment in a per se rule. In this case the Postal Service relied almost entirely on its own per se rule during the grievance procedure, and I have concluded that this rule goes too far. The Union should not interpret this decision, however, as meaning that under any conceivable circumstances the Postal Service is forbidden to assign overtime work to a carrier not on the Overtime Desired list simply because another carrier or carriers on that list, who have already been scheduled for work, desire to perform some or all of the overtime involved.

Although there is some question in my mind that all of the overtime work in this case, if pivoted as the Union asserted it should have been done, could have been completed before dark, the Postal Service waived its right to dispute the Union's claim by failing to challenge it directly in the grievance procedure. Accordingly, I shall grant the remedy requested.

Dear Mr. Wilson:

On October 22, 1982, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.

The question in this grievance is whether the Postal Service must grant the Union's request for copies of the PS Forms 2608 and 2609 (Grievance Summaries - Step 1 and Step 2).

During our discussion, we agreed that the disclosure provisions set forth in Article 17 of the National Agreement intend that any and all information which the parties rely on to support their positions in a grievance is to be exchanged between the parties' representatives at the lowest possible step. This will include the PS 2608 when management's representative at Step 2 or above of the grievance procedure utilizes the form to support their decision. Also, this will include the PS 2609 when utilized by management's representative at Step 3 or above. Since the PS 2608's and 2609's are not prepared until after the Step 1 or Step 2 meetings, these documents cannot be supplied until the Step 2 or Step 3 meeting, respectively.

Mr. Kenneth D. Wilson

Please sign and return the attached copy of this decision as your acknowledgment of agreement to settle this grievance.

Class Action

Dear John:

Recently, I met with Richard Collins to discuss the above captioned case at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

Article 15.2, step 3 (d) requires the party whose representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretive issue shall provide the other party a written notice specifying in detail the precise interpretive issue(s) to be decided. After a detailed review of this appeal, the parties at Step 4 of the grievance arbitration procedure have agreed that no national interpretive issue was identified

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case consistent with the provisions of the Memorandum of Understanding, Step 4 procedures.

UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	Case No. NB-NAT-2705
and	Reading Time Dispute
NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, AFL-CIO	ISSUED: July 30, 1975

BACKGROUND

This national dispute between the above parties, concerning interpretation of the July 21, 1973 National Agreement, was initiated September 23, 1974 under Article XV, Section 2. A hearing was held in Washington, D. C., on January 29 and March 11, 1975. Thereafter both parties submitted their principal briefs as of May 9, 1975 and their reply briefs as of May 28, 1975. 1

The background facts presenting the interpretive issue are not seriously in dispute and relate to issuance of the new M-41 Handbook, which was transmitted on June 14, 1974 to become effective September 1, 1974. The NALC urges that under the National Agreement (and the Fair Labor Standards Act) all City Carriers should be compensated for time spent (either heretofore or hereafter) in the review and study of the new M-41 Handbook. 2

The earlier M-41 Handbook had been issued in 1966 and was titled "The City Carrier Instruction Book." Primarily this was an instructional tool for new employees, but it also 3 was a reference available for each Carrier to use in the normal course of his work. There were numerous operational changes and methods innovations after 1966 affecting the work of City Carriers which were introduced with appropriate training (when necessary) but the M-41 Handbook was not revised as these changes occurred. Largely for this reason a review to update the old M-41 Handbook was undertaken at the same time that revision of the M-39 Supervisor's Handbook was undertaken.

The first page of the new M-41 consists of a "Transmittal Letter" dated June 14, 1974 and signed by Frank M. Sommerkamp, Director, Delivery Services Department Operations Group. It includes the following: 4

"1 EXPLANATION

.1 The title of Methods Handbook M-41 has been changed to CITY DELIVERY CARRIERS DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES and has been updated. This publication instructs delivery employees on the day-to-day functions of the city delivery service, and covers office and street duties of letter routes, collection routes, parcel post and combination services routes, and special delivery service.

.2 A separate chapter is included on mail count and route inspection.

.3 In view of the numerous changes made, delivery service managers, regular and part-time city carriers, and special delivery messengers should review this handbook to become thoroughly familiar with the changes and arrangement of instructions.

"2 DISTRIBUTION

Postmasters will furnish one copy of the handbook to:

.1 Carrier branch or station superintendent.

.2 Delivery service manager.

.3 Regular city carrier.

.4 Part-time city carrier, excluding casuals.

.5 Regular special delivery messenger.

.6 Part-time special delivery messenger, excluding casuals.

"3 REVISIONS

Changes will be published as necessary and carriers and special delivery messengers are responsible for keeping their copies of the handbook current."

(Underscoring added.)

On the second page of the new M-41, the following "Preface" appears: 5

> "City carriers perform an important function in the United States Postal Service. They serve millions of families and business firms daily.
>
> "City carriers are highly respected by the American public. This respect has been earned by many years of dedicated service, especially during national and local emergencies, including prolonged periods of extreme weather conditions.
>
> "You are now a member of this group of faithful and dedicated employees. This handbook will help you give a high quality service that you will be proud of. Study this information carefully; ask your postmaster or manager to explain any points that are not clear to you.
>
> "We offer you our best wishes for a long and happy postal career."
>
> (Underscoring added.)

Since the new M-41 Handbook describes Carrier duties and responsibilities in detail, and provides a reference for duties typically performed by City Carriers, it is clear that a competent Carrier should be essentially familiar with the substance of those portions of the M-41 which bear upon his particular work assignment. (A Carrier may, of course, acquire such familiarity through on-the-job training and experience.) Thus the earlier M-41 had been used as an instructional reference in training new Carriers and regular Carriers used it as a reference when needed. Except during training no Carrier had been compensated, specifically, for reading or reviewing the earlier M-41 or the various other Handbooks applicable to a Carrier's work until the present dispute arose. 6

Some time late in August or early September of 1974 NALC President Rademacher suggested to Postal Service officials that all City Carriers be compensated for time required to study the new Handbook. This request was denied. Thereafter the present grievance was initiated by a September 23, 1974 letter of President Rademacher to Senior Assistant Postmaster General Brown, reading: 7

> "The purpose of this letter is to ascertain whether a dispute exists between the Union and the Employer as to interpretation of our National Agreement and, if so, to initiate and present a grievance pertaining thereto at the national level, pursuant to the concluding paragraph of Article XV, Section 2, of this Agreement.

"The question of interpretation is whether letter carriers are entitled to compensation at rates specified in the National Agreement for time spent in reading and study of the instructions relating to work standards and job performance contained in Management's new M-41. Thorough knowledge of the aforesaid instructions is, of course, essential to performance of carriers' duties, and carriers are held responsible by Management for such knowledge.

"The question arises out of approaches, inconsistent in part, which have been taken by various Postmasters in the field, which do not provide working time for reading and study of the new instructions. On the one hand, carriers in some offices have been told that the M-41 is to be kept at all times in the carrier's route book, which cannot leave the premises. This, of course, precludes reading and study of the M-41 at home. But no time during the work week is allotted the carriers to read and study the instructions on the premises. On the other hand, other carriers have been told that they may take the M-41 home and they are expected to read and study the instructions on their own time, outside working hours.

"It is the Union's position that reading and study of the new M-41 is a requirement imposed by Management in the exercise of its powers under Article III A, of the Agreement, and that, as a matter of fact and of law, it constitutes 'work' for which carriers must be compensated in accordance with Article VIII of the National Agreement. Our position is buttressed by Article IV, Section 3, which recognizes that it is the obligation of the employer to provide 'training' for the performance of new or changed jobs and explicitly provides that the employee 'will maintain his rate' during such training. Obviously, reading and study of the new instructions constitutes 'training' in the performance of the carrier's job as 'changed' by Management, and time 'on the job' must be provided therefore by Management.

"We believe that this position is so clearly correct that, upon having the matter brought to your attention, you will concur therein. It is immaterial to us whether carriers' regular assignments are reduced, for as long as necessary, so as to leave a portion of the regular work week available for reading and study of the M-41, or whether regular assignments are maintained and carriers are authorized and instructed to read and master the new M-41 at home or on the premises on overtime. Patently, the amount of time required to master the new instructions will vary from carrier to carrier. We are concerned only that as much working time as necessary be allotted each carrier for this purpose. We shall be glad to meet with you and discuss this aspect of the matter.

"In view of the immediacy of this issue, we invite your early attention and prompt response to this letter. If you find yourself in disagreement with our position as above stated, please consider this letter a request for arbitration of the question stated in the second paragraph hereof, within the meaning of the first paragraph of Section 3, Article XV, of the National Agreement, and a certification of the aforesaid case for referral to arbitration at the earliest possible date within the meaning of the second paragraph."

(Underscoring added.)

On September 30, 1974 Assistant Postmaster General Gildea replied to President Rademacher's letter, stating (in relevant part): 8

"The new M-41 Handbook is essentially similar to the old M-41, and we do not believe it appropriate to provide extra compensation for familiarization with the Handbook.

"As requested in your last paragraph, I am referring your letter to the Office of Arbitration Procedures in order to submit the issue to arbitration."

THE CONTRACTUAL PROVISIONS

"ARTICLE III--MANAGEMENT RIGHTS

"The Employer shall have the exclusive right, subject to the provisions of this Agreement and consistent with applicable laws and regulations:

A. To direct employees of the Employer in the performance of official duties;

. . . . . .

C. To maintain the efficiency of the operations entrusted to it;

D. To determine the methods, means, and personnel by which such operations are to be conducted;

. . . . . .

"ARTICLE XIX--HANDBOOKS AND MANUALS

"Copies of all handbooks, manuals, and regulations of the Postal Service that contain sections that relate to wages, hours, and working conditions of employees covered by this Agreement shall be furnished to the Unions on or before January 20, 1974. Nothing in any such handbook, manual, or regulation shall conflict with this Agreement. Those parts of any such handbook, manual, or regulation that directly relate to wages, hours, or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable.

. . . . . .

"ARTICLE XLI--LETTER CARRIER CRAFT

"Section 3. Miscellaneous Provisions

. . . . . .

K. Supervisors shall not require, nor permit, employees to work off the clock."

In addition to Article XLI, Section 3, K, the NALC relies upon those provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (29 USCA Sections 201-209) which require payment for all overtime work at time and one-half the regular rate of pay. The Fair Labor Standards Act was extended to cover Postal Service employees as of May 1, 1974 by P.L. 93-259 (29 USCA Sections 203-(e)-(2)-(B). 9

THE ISSUES

While the parties disagree in their respective views of the issues involved here, it is enough for present purposes to set forth the issues described in the Union's brief in the following passage: 10

> ". . . The questions thus posed are (1) whether the National Agreement, properly construed, and/or the Fair Labor Standards Act, entitle letter carriers to be paid at rates specified in the Agreement for time spent heretofore and hereafter in review and study of the manual, and (2) whether the National Agreement, properly construed, requires the Postal Service to provide compensated time sufficient for each carrier to learn the manual before it may rely in any way on M-41 methods or procedures as a basis for adversely affecting any carrier's conditions of employment."

While there are additional facts, beyond those already noted, which bear upon proper disposition of this case, they need not be detailed here but will be noted where appropriate in the balance of this Opinion. 11

CONTENTIONS

1. NALC

The principal NALC argument stresses language in the June 14, 1974 transmittal letter for the new M-41 Handbook insofar as it states that city carriers "should review this handbook to become thoroughly familiar with the changes and arrangement of instructions," as well as the sentence in the Preface which reads: "Study this information carefully; ask your postmaster or manager to explain any points that are not clear to you." Section 352.6 of the Postal Manual, it notes, declares that: "Employees will perform duties as outlined in the Methods Handbook, Series M-41 ...," and all Carriers are instructed to review Chapter 9 of the new M-41 before performing a "dry run" (which precedes the annual route count and inspection), which includes completion of a Form 1838. According to various Union witnesses, field management in some locations interpreted their instructions in connection with the new M-41 to mean that experienced Carriers should read the new M-41, but should do so on their own time. Even if field management in some locations instructed Carriers to study the new M-41 on under-time, the NALC claims that most routes are so overburdened that Carriers seldom return to their stations in less than 8 hours. 12

Stressing that the new M-41 Handbook contains numerous provisions which are new or revised when compared with the old M-41 and the old M-39, the NALC asserts that study of the new M-41, even by experienced Carriers, entails a substantial amount of work. 13

Given these facts, the NALC urges that familiarization with the new M-41 Handbook must be deemed part of a Carrier's official duties, and holds that the Postal Service either must authorize time "on the clock" for all Carriers to study the new M-41, or pay for any time spent reviewing and studying the new M-41 outside regular working hours. This conclusion should apply not only to Carriers who already may have reviewed the new M-41, but also to any Carrier who might review it in the future. Moreover, any Carrier who has not yet reviewed the new M-41 cannot be disciplined in any way, according to the NALC, for failure to perform duties in accordance with methods and procedures set forth in the new M-41. 14

The NALC also urges that negotiating history makes clear the intent of Article XLI, Section 3-K, to require the Postal Service to pay for any work performed off the clock, whether or not characterized by it as "required." This history, as described by Executive Vice President Vacca, and the express language of Article XLI, Section 3-K, require a conclusion that the Postal Service must pay for work which it permits Carriers to perform "off the clock." 15

Even if the language of Article XLI, Section 3-K were less clear, the NALC holds that the Fair Labor Standards Act plainly would require that time spent studying the new M-41 should be compensated as "work." Here it cites numerous judicial holdings deemed to establish that the FLSA requires compensation for all work performed for the benefit of the employer. Against the background of these precedents, and administrative criteria developed in administering the FLSA, the NALC has no doubt that any time devoted by Carriers to studying the new M-41 clearly is compensable. The Wage Hour Administrator, indeed, has ruled specifically that training, 16 outside working hours, is compensable if "designed to make the employee handle his job more effectively" (29 C.F.R. Sec. 785.27 and 785.29).

Under the "suffer or permit" standard defined in the FLSA, work is compensable where an employer "knows or has reason to believe" that an employee is continuing to work, and the NALC asserts that the Postal Service itself has recognized the applicability of this standard. Thus a Postal Bulletin dated November 14, 1974 recites: 17

> "A non-exempt employee is entitled under the FLSA to overtime pay if management suffers or permits him to work more than 40 hours ... This is true whether the work has been requested or not if the manager or supervisor knows or has reason to believe it is being performed."

According to the NALC three categories of relief are appropriate under the evidence here: (1) all Carriers who have studied, or hereafter study, the new M-41 should be paid for that work, (2) the Postal Service should be barred from disciplining any Carrier because of a failure to comply with procedures of standards set forth in the new M-41 until such Carrier receives sufficient compensated time to study the new M-41 and become familiar with changes contained therein, and (3) the Postal Service may not effectuate any route adjustment which depends on a Carrier's knowledge of the new M-41. The NALC also suggests that the Award should require overtime payments to be made on the basis of each Carrier's own statement as to time spent studying the new M-41, provided that such claim appears reasonable. 18

2. Postal Service

The Postal Service version of the origin, purpose and scope of the new M-41 largely appears in the following passages in its brief: 19

> "By 1973, although numerous operational changes and innovations had been introduced, with appropriate training where necessary, the M-41 had never been revised and management undertook such a review in connection with the revision of the M-39 supervisors' handbook. Although the title of the M-41 was slightly changed, its purpose was essentially the same; i.e., a training tool for new carriers and a reference manual for incumbent carriers. The object of the revision committee was merely to incorporate those new programs and changes in procedure which were innovated since 1966 such as Park and Loop, Centralized Markup and other programs which were the subject of training at each installation where they were introduced. The committee additionally sought to incorporate into the carrier handbook those items which have always been applicable to carriers and the subject of special training but which were contained in other manuals and handbooks. Among the latter category were various provisions relating to motor vehicle operations which, although referred to in different chapters of the old M-41, were not the subject of a separate chapter as in the new version. An additional change emphasized heavily by the Union at hearing was the addition of Chapter 9 relating to route inspections. This material was formerly contained in the M-39 supervisors' handbook but because of the carriers' zealous interest and in order to avoid the redistribution each year of the instructions relating to the dry run prior to inspections, much of this material was included in the new M-41.

"Consistent with its use as a training tool, the preface contained in the old M-41 was incorporated in the new in almost identical form. The new manual also contained a transmittal letter relating to its use by other carriers and supervisors which is discussed more fully below.

"Presumably under the provisions of Article XIX, the Union was furnished with a copy of the initial draft and a meeting was held between the parties in November of 1973, at which the contents of the M-41 were thoroughly discussed by the parties. Suggestions of changes were made by the Union, some of which were acted upon. A further meeting for the same purpose was held in June 1974. No question was raised at these meetings regarding training or on the clock review. Not until the book was already printed and distributed did the Union raise the question of on the clock time for review by carriers.

"It is undisputed that this request was unique, and in the past, time on the clock for review of reference manuals or instructional materials had never been granted or even requested. Of course, during the on the clock initial training program conducted for new carriers, the M-41 may be reviewed since it is used as a training tool but this is far different from what the Union requests herein."

The Postal Service does not view its issuance of a revised M-41 Handbook as in any way obliging it to provide on-the-job training or compensable time for study, since it is exclusively a Management function to determine what employee training is necessary. Where the parties intend to provide employees a familiarization period, they have spelled it out, as in Article XLI, Section 3-F, where Carriers assigned to new routes are allowed reasonable periods for familiarization. Nothing in Article XIX which deals specifically with Handbooks and Manuals suggests that Carriers should be provided with study time. Nor is there any practice to support the NALC position here. 20

The Postal Service characterizes the NALC request for paid time, on or off the clock, for all Carriers to study the M-41, and its request that all counts (and inspections) and disciplinary actions based on the new M-41 should be set aside, as constituting a "class action" grievance based on a claimed violation of the Agreement which allegedly occurred in August and September of 1974, when the new M-41 was distributed. In the Postal Service view such a class action cannot 21 properly be presented as a national "interpretive issue" under Article XV, Section 2, which states, insofar as relevant, "... in the event of a dispute between the Union and the Employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement, such dispute may be initiated as a grievance at the national level ..." If any individual employee has a grievance, it must be discussed within 14 days of the date on which the employee learns of its cause, according to Article XV, Section 2 (Step 1) and such discussion should be with the employee's "immediate supervisor." If any individual Carrier did not present a timely grievance in Step 1, there could be no proper basis for the NALC later to institute a class action grievance on such Carrier's behalf--the right to file national interpretive grievances was not intended to nullify the specific requirements concerning the filing of individual grievances.

The Postal Service stresses that in 1973 the NALC knew of the prospective distribution of the new M-41 and discussed drafts both in November of 1973 and again in the Spring of 1974. The NALC made no suggestion in these discussions that time on the clock be allotted Carriers for study of the new Manual. It was only after transmittal of the new M-41 that the NALC raised an issue as to whether Management was obligated to train employees. If this question had been raised in timely manner, the Postal Service could have drafted the transmittal letter more precisely to specify the Carriers' obligation in respect to study of the new Manual. 22

On this basis, the Postal Service urges that the only question properly before the Impartial Chairman now is whether or not Carriers were required or permitted to work off the clock because of the Postal Service written instructions regarding the new M-41. Even if this interpretive question were 23 decided in favor of the NALC, says the Service, the only affirmative relief should be to employees who had filed timely grievances and who could demonstrate in their individual grievances that they had acted in reliance upon Management instructions in this regard.

On the merits, the Postal Service deems the statement in the June 14, 1974 transmittal letter that each Carrier "should review this handbook" to be only a suggestion to become familiar with the changes in format. In view of the extensive index, glossary, and table of forms, and given the fact that every regular Carrier already was familiar with the essential duties of his position, it says, such a review could be completed in no more than 15 minutes. It emphasizes that the expanded glossary and introduction of an index of forms confirm that the Manual is intended essentially as a reference tool. 24

Any review of the new M-41, moreover, presumably, should take place during the regular workday as undertime occurs, even though the Service admittedly does not object if a Carrier wishes to take his copy home. The Postal Service stresses that none of the Union witnesses who were active Carriers indicated that he actually had studied the new M-41, and there is no evidence in the record to identify specific Carriers who did study it because of the instructions contained in the transmittal letter. On this state of the evidence, the Service urges, it would be impossible to find that the transmittal letter was intended to require study of the new M-41, or was so construed by the Carriers. 25

The Postal Service also asserts that it did not in any way "permit" Carriers to "work off the clock" when it transmitted the new M-41. While the Service does "permit" Carriers to study the new M-41 at home, it says that the negotiating history of Article XLI, Section 3-K, requires that the phrase "to work" be given a very narrow interpretation. No individual who voluntarily reviewed the new M-41 at home thus could be deemed to have acted within the meaning of the phrase "to work" under this provision. The Postal Service emphasizes that it made no requirement, and claims that it did not suggest, that Carriers take the new M-41 home for study. Indeed, it asserts that the question of whether the M-41 could be taken home was raised initially by the NALC. If individual Carriers asked permission to take the M-41 home, this was strictly for their own purposes. Here the Postal Service brief elaborates: 26

> "It certainly is reasonable to require payment for productive efforts an employee puts out with the permission and knowledge of an employer, even though not specifically directed, and this is essentially what Article XLI, Section 3k provides. However, it makes no sense whatsoever to allow payment for the purely voluntary performance of activities unconnected with primary job functions, especially when done primarily for the benefit of the employee, merely because the employer may derive some benefit by way of future improved job performance, and the contract cannot be so interpreted."

The Postal Service sees no possible application of the Fair Labor Standards Act here, since, under Article XV, Section 3, of the National Agreement, this case involves only "interpretation" of that Agreement. Another portion of Article XV, Section 3, declares that "All decisions of the arbitrator shall be limited to the terms and provisions of this Agreement." Even were the arbitrator to deal with interpretive problems under the Fair Labor Standards Act, this in no way could be a conclusive ruling as to proper application of the FLSA. Here the Service quotes from the Supreme Court Opinion in the Gardner-Denver case indicating that an arbitrator has no general authority to invoke public laws that conflict with the bargain between the parties. If the Service could be assured that decision in this case would resolve all FLSA issues effectively, it might be less objectionable for the arbitrator to pass upon such matters. But, the Service notes, the NALC itself may be unwilling and even powerless to give such an assurance. 27

Finally the Service suggests that under authoritative interpretations of the FLSA a one-time review of the new M-41, off the clock, presumably would be of a "postliminary" nature and not compensable. It also stresses that the minimal "study" of the new M-41 easily could be accomplished during Carriers' "undertime," since undertime arises whenever the work on a given day is below average to a significant degree. 28

1. Nature of the Case

This is a national level grievance. Under the last paragraph of Article XV, Section 2, such grievances include only disputes between "the Union and the employer as to the interpretation of this Agreement." Despite this limitation the NALC apparently deems the present proceeding as a sort of "class action," in which rights of individual employees under both the Agreement and the Fair Labor Standards Act may be finally adjudicated. The Postal Service rejoins that proper disposition of a national level grievance may result only in issuance of a "declaratory judgment," without relief to individual employees, and that no FLSA issues properly may be considered. 29

The efforts by counsel to define the proper scope of national level grievances in terms of concepts such as "class action" or "declaratory judgment" are understandable, and possibly even helpful in grappling with specific problems as to the scope of rulings which may be warranted under this unique provision in Article XV, Section 2. 30

Nonetheless the proper scope of national level disputes must be determined within the framework of the National Agreement alone, giving due regard to the nature of the issues and the facts in each such dispute. The initiation of a national level grievance in Step 4 bypasses the important first three Steps of the grievance procedure, where all basic facts and arguments normally should be developed and the great bulk of all grievances should be settled. There thus should be no doubt that this exception to the normal requirements of the grievance procedure is intended to apply only to disputes 31 concerning "interpretation" of the Agreement, where it is important to obtain an authoritative interpretation without awaiting the painstaking development of facts and arguments in a multitude of individual grievances.

This conclusion is reinforced by the contrast between 32 the narrow phrase "dispute ... as to the interpretation of this Agreement" and the broad definition of "grievance" in Article XV, Section 1, which includes any " ... dispute, difference of opinion or complaint between the parties related to wages, hours, and conditions of employment." The Impartial Chairman, therefore, rules that the national level dispute provision in Step 4 was not intended to provide a vehicle for considering a multitude of individual grievances as a sort of "class action." If any grievances actually have arisen on behalf of individuals under Step 1, advancing claims under Article XLI, Section 3-K, they should be processed through the normal Steps of the grievance procedure until settled. Nothing in the June 4, 1973 decision in Case No. NB-NAT-3233 is inconsistent with this result. That case involved failure by the Postal Service to observe an obligation under Article XXXIV owed directly to the NALC as representative of all the Carriers, and the remedial action there was essential to eliminate direct consequences of that failure.

It also seems clear that issues of compliance with 33
the Fair Labor Standards Act are not within the proper scope of a national level dispute. Indeed, when the national level dispute provision was written the FLSA did not apply at all to the Postal Service--it became applicable only in 1974. Even though FLSA issues may properly be raised on behalf of individual employees in Step 1 of the grievance procedure under the broad definition of "grievance" which applies there, therefore, they cannot be treated as a national level dispute.

2. Application of Article XLI, Section 3-K

Article XLI, Section 3-K states that "Supervisors shall not require, nor permit, employees to work off the clock." While each party provides a different version of the negotiating history to support its interpretation of this provision, no useful purpose can be served by seeking to ascertain the various motives, hopes, and expectations of the various negotiators on either side. This type of inquiry usually proves fruitless in the end, and assuredly is unwarranted where the controlling provisions of the Agreement are clear enough on their face. That is the situation here. 34

Application of Article XLI, Section 3-K, here requires consideration of (1) whether a Carrier's review of the new M-41 might constitute "work," and if so (2) whether Carriers may be instructed or permitted to perform such work "off the clock" without being compensated for time so spent. 35

When the new M-41 was circulated most Carriers already were trained adequately and reasonably familiar with the requirements, responsibilities, and procedures applicable to their normal work assignments. Normally, moreover, it is for Management alone to determine the nature and extent of training to be provided experienced employees under Article III, subject to application of the other provisions of the 1973 National Agreement. Thus the Service now urges that there was no real need for experienced Carriers to have any specific period of time at all to study the new M-41. This argument fails, however, to face the real problems in the present case, which arose only because the Postal Service appeared either to require or to permit 36 the Carriers to study the new M-41 in order to become familiar with changes and the arrangement of instructions therein.

Study of the M-41 Handbook undoubtedly is "work" when performed by new Carriers in training. Use of the M-41 as a reference tool in performing Carrier duties also is "work." And surely review and study of the new M-41 during a Carrier's "undertime" constitutes work compensable under the Agreement. 37

In these circumstances it should be obvious that review or study of the new M-41 by a Carrier at home also constitutes "work," for purposes of Article XLI, Section 3-K, if performed at the direction of Management or with its permission. 38

On this score, the NALC characterizes the June 14, 1974 Transmittal Letter as a specific direction to all Carriers to study the new M-41. Such an interpretation of the Transmittal Letter is unrealistic, not only because of the language involved but also because of the nature of the Letter itself. It surely would be unusual for a specific order--applicable over the indefinite future--to be given to all Carriers in such a broadcast letter from national headquarters. The sentence in question, moreover, is totally silent as to when or where any such review by individual Carriers "should" take place. Finally, the operative and critically important word in this sentence is "should," and not "must." 39

Given these circumstances it would not have been reasonable for individual Carriers to construe the Transmittal Letter as requiring that detailed study of the new M-41 should be undertaken promptly, without further clarification by his or her immediate supervisor. The need for such clarification, 40 indeed, would seem even more apparent in view of the vague nature of the exhortation to become "familiar" with the "changes" and "arrangement of instructions" in the new M-41.

Finally, there is no evidence in this record that any individual Carrier actually did construe this language as an order. None of the NALC witnesses who were active Carriers actually had studied the new M-41 as a result of reading the Transmittal Letter. Accordingly, the Transmittal Letter did not embody an order to individual Carriers requiring them to review or study the new M-41 at any particular time or place. 41

This is not the end of the matter, however, since the ambiguity of the Transmittal Letter imposed upon field Management the necessity to respond to inquiries by Carriers and NALC representatives as to what actually was intended. There is no suggestion that specific instructions were sent to the field by National Headquarters, and the following NALC evidence as to events in several Post Offices has not been challenged for purposes of this case. 42

In September of 1974 the President of Branch 176 unsuccessfully asked the Baltimore Superintendent of Delivery Services to authorize time "on the clock" for the Carriers to study the new M-41. Route inspections were scheduled to begin in a few days in some Offices in the Baltimore area. The same Branch President later was advised by several Postmasters in the Baltimore area that ... "This office has instructed City Carriers to study the Handbook when they had the time on a light day. Also the Carriers have been given permission to take the Handbook home to study" (underscoring added). 43

When the new M-41 was handed out in several Post Offices in the Baltimore area, all Carriers were told that they 44 could take it home to review. In one instance a copy was sent to the home of a Carrier who was absent because of illness.

Local NALC officials in Tampa informally discussed the situation with Postal Service representatives in September of 1974 and in a grievance meeting on October 10 the Postal Service stated that-- "No time will be allowed on the clock. The Carrier is authorized to take the M-41 home so he can become thoroughly familiar with it" (underscoring added). Minutes including this statement were posted by Management for information of the Carriers. In view of impending route inspections the Tampa Post Office instructed all Carriers on January 8, 1974 to "review" Chapter 9 of the new M-41 Handbook "for detailed instructions." 45

In Little Rock, Arkansas, Carriers who received the new M-41 late in 1974 were required to sign a statement including-- "I also understand that I am to study the information contained in this Handbook so that I will be knowledgeable in carrier duties and responsibilities." 46

On September 18, 1974 a grievance was filed in Clute, Texas, protesting that route inspections were being conducted before Carriers had adequate time to study the new M-41. Denial of this grievance was upheld by the Clute Postmaster on October 2, 1974. According to President Lloyd of Branch 4723, the Postmaster told him that Carriers "didn't need the time to read the M-41 because there was nothing different in it from the old one." 47

In a September 11, 1974 grievance from Almeda Station (Houston, Texas) Branch 283 protested that Management had instructed Carriers to take the new M-41 home, contrary to the 48 specific statement in the M-41 that it should be kept in the Carrier's route book. The Step 3 denial of this grievance asserted that-- "The carriers were not ordered to take their M-41 Manuals home with them to review them. There is no agreement or provision for carriers to review this manual on the clock or on overtime" (underscoring added).

These local instances are by no means exhaustive but serve to establish that field Management, in a significant number of instances, either instructed or permitted Carriers to review the new M-41 at home. In many such offices, of course, some Carriers may have had sufficient undertime to review the M-41 while "on the clock" in the office. But in other instances, particularly where route inspections were scheduled to begin at an early date, it seems reasonable to infer that many Carriers were able to review the new M-41, and particularly Chapter 9 (as required), only at home or otherwise "off the clock." 49

In any such situation the review or study of the M-41 at home or "off the clock" indubitably was work within the meaning of Article XLI, Section 3-K and should be compensated as such. This is not to suggest that any given Carrier necessarily now has a right to insist, for the future, that he or she should be given any particular amount of paid time--either in the office or at home--to become familiar with the M-41. Nothing in this Opinion can bar the Postal Service from now issuing clear instructions indicating that no Carrier should study the M-41 at home and that any necessary review of the M-41 should be performed only on undertime, except as directed by a supervisor on the basis of defined special circumstances applicable to individual Carriers or groups of Carriers. 50

3. Remedial Action

The NALC requests an Award which would require that (1) all Carriers who have studied the new M-41, or who hereafter may study it, should be compensated for time so spent; and that (2) the Postal Service refrain from holding any Carrier responsible for knowing the contents of the new M-41 until such Carrier in fact has devoted time to studying the Manual--with the consequence that the Postal Service could not make (or effectuate) any route adjustments or impose any disciplines which rested upon any given Carrier's ignorance of relevant contents of the new M-41. 51

Since Management can implement only such Manual changes as are "fair, reasonable and equitable" under Article XIX, the NALC also urges that the Postal Service now should be enjoined from in any way seeking to hold Carriers responsible "at their peril" for changes in the M-41 without providing time for review and study of such changes. 52

a. Payment to Individual Carriers

Since this is a national level grievance involving a dispute as to interpretation of the National Agreement, it is inappropriate for the present Award to require payment of compensation to specific individual employees. Whether any individual Carrier is entitled to overtime under the interpretation of Article XLI, Section 3-K set forth in this Opinion necessarily will depend upon the facts in each individual case. To be entitled to overtime compensation, for example, an individual Carrier must establish that in fact he or she did study 53

the Manual at home (or "off the clock") at the direction of, or with the permission of, supervision. It also would seem essential for each such Carrier to establish the nature of such review, when undertaken, and how much time actually was required. Such details concerning individual grievants cannot be developed in a national level grievance, without eviscerating the grievance procedure established in Article XV.

The present decision thus seeks only to establish criteria for determining the merits of any proper grievances involving individuals which are pending in the grievance procedure or which may be filed hereafter. This is not to suggest that only individuals who themselves have filed grievances can be entitled to compensation under the present interpretation of Article XLI, Section 3-K. Grievances on behalf of individual Carriers or groups of Carriers already have been filed by the NALC locally, as authorized in the Step 1 provisions of Article XV. The evidence also suggests a possibility that, either by express or implied local agreement, the filing of grievances on behalf of individual Carriers in some instances has been delayed pending decision of this national level dispute. 54

The parties' presentations indicate such a great difference of opinion concerning the nature of an appropriate "review" of the M-41, and the time required therefor, as to warrant comment here. 55

The time to be compensated should not in any case exceed that which is reasonable under the given circumstances. Moreover, the claim of some NALC representatives that every Carrier should be so familiar with the new M-41 as to be able to handle every detailed or complicated problem which might 56 arise in the course of a Carrier's work (without consulting a supervisor) is unrealistic and specifically rejected by the Impartial Chairman, for reasons indicated in discussion at the hearing.

Both parties have provided estimates of time reasonably required for an experienced Carrier to review the new M-41, with the Postal Service suggesting no more than 15 minutes, and the NALC claiming that 10 to 12 hours or more might be essential. Neither estimate seems reasonable to the Impartial Chairman, or even close to the mark. No doubt an experienced Carrier in most instances would not have needed more than a few hours to familiarize himself or herself in a general way with the basic information in the new M-41 and the arrangement of instructions therein, when the Handbook initially was circulated. Whether an experienced Carrier, today, would need as much time is doubtful since the Handbook now has been available for use as a reference tool by all Carriers for many months. 57

b. Route Adjustments

It is impossible in this record to find any tangible evidence that all or most Carriers were materially prejudiced in their route inspections by not having had prior opportunity to review the new M-41. Supervisors are instructed to familiarize Carriers with necessary detail (including Chapter 9 of the new M-41) prior to all route inspections, and there is no reason here to assume that this was not done in most instances. Even if some Carriers did not review the new M-41 or at least Chapter 9, this does not automatically establish that the inspection of their route necessarily produced an unfair result. Finally, the M-39 Handbook, in Section 271, requires a special 58 route inspection upon request by the Carrier whenever a route is so overloaded as to require consistent use of overtime or auxiliary assistance.

Likewise, any case of possible improper discipline based on a Carrier's lack of familiarity with the new M-41, as such, can be dealt with adequately in the grievance procedure. There must be proper cause for discipline in any case, so that where discipline in fact was imposed solely for lack of knowledge which could have been obtained only by studying the new M-41, a grievance would have merit. 59

c. Injunctive Relief

There is no apparent need for an order broadly directing the Postal Service to refrain from holding Carriers responsible "at their peril" for changes in the M-41. Where Management has held or seeks to hold a Carrier responsible for such knowledge and the Carrier has had no opportunity to become familiar with relevant portions of the new M-41, an individual grievance protesting any action adverse to the Carrier presumably would be meritorious. Thus no useful purpose could be served by a directive here which simply would reinforce protections provided under the National Agreement. 60

AWARD

1. No opinion can be expressed concerning application of the Fair Labor Standards Act, as urged by the NALC, since (1) this would not constitute a dispute as to the interpretation of the National Agreement within the meaning of 61

Article XV, Section 2-Step 4, and (2) Article XLI, Section 3-K provides adequate basis for decision here.

2. Article XLI, Section 3-K requires payment of a Carrier for time spent studying the new M-41 Handbook at the direction of the Postal Service or with the permission of the Postal Service, but only to the extent detailed in the Opinion in this case. 62

3. All issues as to whether individual Carriers are entitled to compensation under the present interpretation of Article XLI, Section 3-K, shall be handled through the grievance procedure established under Article XV, giving due consideration to the facts in each individual case. No Carrier in any event shall be compensated for more study time than reasonably required for the study undertaken by that individual Carrier. 63

APPEARANCES:

For the USPS - Wyneva Johnson, Esq.
Office of Labor Law

For the NALC - Cohen, Weiss and Simon
Keith E. Secular, Esq.

Pursuant to the provisions of the current collective bargaining agreement between the above-captioned parties, this case was duly proceesed through to and presented in arbitration before the Undersigned. The hearing was held at the offices of the Postal Service in Washington, DC, on January 23, 1981. Thereafter, post-hearing briefs were submitted and exchanged.

THE ISSUES:

1. Whether Management can properly refuse to hear Step 4 appeals in Cases No. S8N-3P-C-11599; S8N-3P-C-10877; S8N-3P-C-11769; S8N-3W-C-1171; S8N-3W-C-12007; S8N-3D-C-11576; S8N-3W-C-11752; and S8N-3P-C-11781. These cases being under consideration in this proceeding? If not, what shall the appropriate remedy be?

2. In the event it is found that these cases were not filed in a timely manner, pursuant to the Agreement, can Management refuse to discuss these grievances before so indicating to the Union its reason for rejecting same? If not, what shall the appropriate remedy be?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

The eight decisions enumerated above were denied in Step 3, and these denials were received by the NALC on February 29 and March 6, 1980. Prior to March 21, 1980, the Postal Service advised the NALC's National Office that it had not received the appeals to Step 4 on these decisions. The Postal Service, subsequently, did receive appeals to Step 4, marked duplicate, on April 7, 1980. The Southern Region did not receive copies of these eight appeals.

PROVISION OF THE CONTRACT UNDER REVIEW:

ARTICLE XV

****

Section 2. Grievance Procedure - Steps

****

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretative issue under the National Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (21) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Step 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the Regional Director of Employee and Labor Relations.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

The Union contended that the language of the Agreement only requires that the Union make its appeal within twenty one days. It does not require that the appeal be received within that time limit. By placing the appeal in the mail within twenty one days, the Union claimed it had met the time requirements to perfect its appeal. The Union also argued that its understanding had always been that the act of depositing the appeal in the mail within the time limits sufficed and that the USPS had never taken a contrary position. The Union pointed to a decision by Arbitrator Mittenthal, in Case No. N-C--4170D, wherein the date stamp on the envelope was considered determinative of the timeliness of an appeal. The Union also made reference to other arbitration decisions, not issued in Postal Service cases, where the date of mailing was regarded as the critical date and not the date that the appeal was actually received. Finally, the Union asserted that if date of receipt were considered critical then each region would have a different date when it had to mail its appeal depending upon its distance from National Headquarters of the Post Office. Obviously, the parties did intend to have a uniform time period apply wherever the appeal had to be made. The Union pointed out that when National Headquarters of the Postal Service notified the Postal Service that the appeals had not been received, a new set of appeal papers were mailed to the Postal Service within the 21 day period which still had not expired.

The Postal Service argued that it finally received these appeals on April 7, 1980. That was well beyond the 21 day period allowed under the contract. The Service also pointed out that at no time were copies received by the Southern Region although the agreement clearly and explicitly requires that this be done as well. The Service also asserted that in addition to not receiving the alleged original documents within the time limits, the second set of appeal papers was not received until April 7, 1980, about two weeks after it reasonably could have been anticipated that a duplicate set mailed within the 21 day time limit would have been received. The Postal Service also contended that the testimony of the NALC witnesses confirmed the understanding that appeals had to be received within twenty one days in order to be considered timely.

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

In Case No. N-C-4170D, decided by Arbitrator Mittenthal on February 13, 1974, and which the Union cited in support of its claim, Arbitrator Mittenthal specifically held that the date placed on an appeal could not be controlling because of the obvious possibility of back dating. He stated, "Perhaps, in appropriate circumstances, the date that the letter is placed in the mailbox could be controlling..." The Undersigned might, in appropriate circumstances, for the sake of uniformity and consistency, find that the cancelation date on an envelope could establish the timeliness of a filing. In the instant case, however, there is no postmark on which to base sucj a finding. The initial mailing was never received by either the National or Regional Office of the Postal Service.

As to the second mailing, the testimony of the Union office employee in Atlanta was that she believed that she had placed these documents in the mail on March 21, 1980. She had no evidence from her office records to confirm such a statement. In point of fact, the Union could not and did not seek to rebut the Postal Service conetntion, verified with a time stamp, that these second appeal forms were received in Washington some two weeks after March 21st on April 7, 1980. Once again, the Regional Office of the Post Office did not receive copies of the duplicate documents at any time. Oneof the Union witnesses conceded that if the duplicates had been placed in the mail on March 21, still within the time limits, they should have been in Washington on or about March 24th.

Under the facts and circumstances revealed by this record, it cannot be found that the Postal Service received timely notice of the appeal of these eight cases to Step 4, as such notice is required by the provisions of the Agreement. The failure to copy in the Regional Office cannot be regarded as a ministerial error. The language of the Agreement madates that the Regional Director of Employee and Labor Relations receive a copy of appeals to Step 4. The Postal Service is entitled to rely upon the knowledge that this regional official has been notified by the Union about appeals being taken from decisions made in his region.

The Union also raised the issue of whether, despite a failure to comply with the contractual time limit requirements, the Postal Service was obligated to meet with the Union and discuss these eight grievances. Article XV, Section 2, Step 4(a), requires that the parties meet at the national level promptly, "In any case properly appealed to this step..." That word "properly" cannot be regarded as surplusage. It has a meaning and that meaning must encompass the compliance with procedural requirements. That has not occurred in the instant cases.

Additionally, it should be noted, in the prior arbitration decision by Arbitrator Mittenthal cited above, he found that: "The parties expressly agreed that failure to appeal within the contractual time limits would serve 'as a waiver of the grievance.' The parties to that stipulation are the same parties involved in this proceeding. The Undersigned cannot conclude from either the language of the Agreement nor the stipulation of these parties that the Postal Service is obliged to meet and discuss the merits of these grievances at Step 4.

Therefore, after due deliberation, the Undersigned makes the following

A W A R D

1. Management can properly refuse to hear Step 4 appeals in the cases here under consideration.

2. Management can refuse to discuss the merits of these grievances at Step 4, but it must, as it has in this case, advise the Union why it regards the grievances as not having been filed in a timely fashion and thus considered as waived.

Dear Mr. Guffey:

On October 9, 1987, we met to discuss the above-captioned grievance at the fourth step of our contractual grievance procedure.

The issue in this grievance is whether the union must re-appeal to Step 3 a case which has been remanded from Step 4.

After reviewing this matter, we mutually agreed that no national interpretive issue is fairly presented in this case. No appeal to Step 3 is necessary when a case is remanded from Step 4.

Accordingly, we agreed to remand this case to the parties at Step 3 for further processing including arbitration if necessary.

Please sign and return the enclosed copy of this letter as your acknowledgment of agreement to remand this case.

Time limits were extended by mutual consent.

DECISION

This grievance arose under and is governed by the 1978-1981 National Agreement (JX-1) between the above-named parties. The undersigned having been jointly selected by the parties to serve as the sole arbitrator, a hearing was held on 12 May 1982, in Washington, D. C. Both parties appeared and presented evidence and argument on the following issues:

(1) Is the grievance arbitrable.

(2) If so, did management at the San Rafael, CA post office violate the 1978-1981 National Agreement by including heavy lifting and the possession of an SF-46 (government driver's license) as requirements on the Notice of Intent for the position of Maintenance Control and Stock Clerk.

It was agreed that the arbitrator should hear evidence on both issues, but should ultimately not rule upon the second unless he concluded that the grievance was arbitrable.

A verbatim transcript was made of the arbitration proceeding, and each side filed a post-hearing brief. The record was officially closed on 30 June 1982.

On the basis of the entire record in this case, the arbitrator makes the following

AWARD

(1) The grievance is arbitrable.

(2) Management at the San Rafael, CA post office did not violate the 1978-1981 National Agreement by including heavy lifting and the possession of an SF-46 (government driver's license) as requirements on the Notice of Intent for the positions of Maintenance Control and Stock Clerk.

OPINION

I. Arbitrability

A.

On 16 April 1980, the San Rafael, California MSC posted a Notice of Intent (Ex-1) for a newly-authorized duty assignment, Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk. The notice read in part as follows:

> MAINTENANCE CRAFT
>
> In accordance with Article XXXVIII, Section 2, (A), (1), (2) & (C), (1) of the National Agreement this Notice of Intent is posted for the following duty assignment to be filled by using the appropriate selection registers.
>
> > Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk, schedules & controls the maintenance activities at a postal installation & performs a variety of clerical work involved in the requisitioning, receiving, storing issuing, & accounting for a wide variety of parts, tools, and supplies used in the maintenance of building and postal equipment. Heavy lifting required, must be able to lift 70 lbs. Vehicle Operator's card, SF 46 required.

Several maintenance craft employees applied for this assignment, but none was deemed to be qualified. A second Notice of Intent (EX-2), therefore, was posted on 24 April; and this time it invited bids "from all full-time career employees in any craft within the San Rafael post office." The description of the job in the second notice was the same as in the first. A third Notice of Intent (EX-3) was posted on 30 April, because the previous two notices had inadvertently omitted the following words: "Typing required, must pass a typing test of 30 words a minute."

Meanwhile, on or about 10 May 1980, Owen Barnett, the Union's National Vice President for the Maintenance Craft in the Western Region, received a telephone call from David Swaney, an official of the San Rafael Local. Swaney said he thought that the posting of the new position violated the National Agreement, but that he needed more specific information. Barnett said that the necessary information could be found in Section 180 of the Personnel Handbook, Series P-12B (UX-2), but Swaney replied that he had no access to a copy of the handbook. Accordingly, Barnett agreed to send him a copy, and did so the next day. After receiving a copy of the handbook, Swaney telephoned Barnett on or about 17 May, and told the latter that in his (Swaney's) opinion, the posting had improperly included the requirements of a SF-46 and heavy lifting. Barnett then told Swaney to file a grievance.

On 29 May 1980, Swaney filed the instant grievance (JX-2, p. 9), in which he charged in part:

> Maintenance employees were denied the job because of the Vehicle Operator's Card SF 46 required. Also on the posting Heavy Lifting was required. . . .

Management's response at the first step was "Denied Grievance submitted untimely" (JX-2, p. 9).

The grievance was appealed to step two on 9 June 1980. Management's answer, dated 20 June (JX-2, p. 10), read in part:

> A. This grievance was submitted untimely, as the APWU had reason to know of the contents of the posting on April 16, 1980, at 11:30 a.m., and no later than April 24, 1980, 11:00 a.m. This grievance was filed on behalf of the Maintenance Craft at Step 1 on May 29, 1980, 1:25 p.m., over thirty (30) days after the fact.
>
> B. The posting of the position of Maintenance Control and Stock Clerk met the requirements of Article XXXVIII, Section 2 E and was in compliance with the P-1, P-11 and P-12 B.
> No violation has occurred, therefore, this grievance is denied. This grievance was extended by mutual consent.

The grievance was then appealed to step three, at which time it was discussed by Barnett and George E. Banks, Acting Regional Labor Relations Representative for the Postal Service. In a letter dated 17 July 1980, to Raydell Moore (JX-2, p. 6), the Union's Western Regional Coordinator, Banks stated in part:

> Providing lifting and driving requirements on the Notice of Intent does not establish a violation of the National Agreement. In fact, Article XXXVIII, Section 2, E 7, provides for such special or unusual requirements.
> In our judgment, the grievance does not involve any interpretive issue(s) pertaining to the National Agreement or any supplement thereto which may be of general application. Unless the union believes otherwise, the case may be appealed directly to regional arbitration in accordance with the provisions of Article XV of the National Agreement.

The grievance was then appealed to step four, where it was discussed by Richard I. Wevodau, the President of the Union's Maintenance Craft, and Margaret H. Oliver, Labor Relations Department. Oliver's answer (JX-2, p. 3), set forth in a letter to Wevodau dated 18 March 1981, read in part:

> The matters presented by you as well as the applicable contractual provisions have been reviewed and given careful consideration.
>
> The question in this grievance is whether or not management at the San Rafel, CA post office violated the National Agreement by including heavy lifting and the possession of an SF-46 as requirements on the Notice of Intent for the position of Maintenance Control and Stock Clerk.
>
> In our view, this grievance does not fairly present a nationally interpretive question; however, our response is required.
>
> The position in question is assigned to the maintenance craft. Article XXXVIII, Section 2E includes physical or other special requirements unusual to the specific assignment as suitable information for inclusion on a Notice of Intent.
>
> Accordingly, as we find no violation of the National Agreement, this grievance is denied.

B.

Article XV, section 2(a) of the National Agreement, provides that a grievance initiated at step one must be submitted "within 14 days of the date the employee or the Union first learned or may reasonably have been expected to have learned of its cause."

Article XV, section 3(b) provides in part:

> The failure of the employee or the Union in Step 1, or the Union thereafter to meet the prescribed time > limits of the Steps of this procedure, including arbitration, shall be considered as a waiver of the grievance. However, if the Employer fails to raise the issue of timeliness at Step 2, or at the step at which the employee or Union failed to meet the prescribed time limits, whichever is later, such objection to the processing of the grievance is waived.

It is the position of the Postal Service that Swaney learned, or may reasonably have been expected to have learned, on or about 16 April 1980, when the Notice of Intent regarding the duty assignment of Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk was first posted, that it included the requirements of a SF-46 and the ability to lift 70 pounds. Because the grievance was not filed until 29 May, well beyond the 14-day limit, the Postal Service maintains that it was untimely. Moreover, the Postal Service argues that by specifically stating in its step-two answer that the grievance was untimely filed, it preserved its objection and could properly reassert it at the arbitration stage.

The Union's position is that it had not fully checked on all the facts associated with the notice here involved until about 17 May, and that no decision whether to file a grievance could be made until then. On this theory, of course, the filing of the grievance on 29 May would be within the 14-day period. Moreover, Barnett testified that in his discussion of the grievance with Banks at step three, Banks agreed with him that the grievance was timely. The record, however, contains no written verification of any such oral understanding.

C.

The arguments of the Postal Service, if taken at face value, suggest that Union representatives who investigate the facts of situations before filing grievances do so at their peril if such investigations take longer than 14 days, and that the language of Article XV, section 3(b) means that once an objection to the arbitrability of a grievance, on grounds of untimeliness, is raised by the Postal Service at step two or later, it retains its vitality at all subsequent stages of the grievance-arbitration procedure, regardless of the positions taken by the Postal Service in steps three and four. I have difficulty with both arguments.

On the basis of the evidence submitted, it appears that Swaney was not sure whether or not the Notice of Intent here in dispute violated the National Agreement. Accordingly, he telephoned Barnett for advice. When, three or four days later, he received the P-12B Personnel Handbook Barnett had sent him, Swaney studied it and concluded that the notice violated the National Agreement. He then telephoned Barnett to confirm that conclusion, and received Barnett's approval to file the grievance. It may be true that Swaney knew on or about 16 April 1980 that the duty assignment called for a SF-46 license and the capacity to lift 70 pounds, but I am not persuaded that he knew, or reasonably should have known, more than 14 days prior to 29 May that the notice actually gave rise to a legitimate grievance.

Barnett's account of the alleged understanding he had with Banks at the step-three meeting was too sketchy to be accorded any weight. On the other hand, the Postal Service's third-step and fourth-step answers previously quoted indicated its willingness to consider the grievance on its merits. Rejection of the grievance on the ground that it was not timely filed was not mentioned, and the grievance was denied on the merits. Contrary to the Postal Service, I interpret Article XV, section 3(b), as applied to the facts of this case, to mean simply that if the Postal Service failed to raise the issue of timeliness at step 2, it could not raise it at any subsequent stage of the grievance-arbitration procedure. That is substantially different from the Postal Service's interpretation that, once raised at step two, the objection of untimeliness could be reasserted at any subsequent stage, regardless of inconsistent positions taken by the Postal Service in the interim. I am satisfied from my reading of the Postal Service's third-step and fourth-step answers that it did, in effect, waive its objection to alleged untimeliness asserted at the second step. Accordingly, I find that the grievance is arbitrable.

II. The Merits

A

Section 180 of Qualification Standards, Bargaining Unit Positions (Personnel Handbook, Series P-12B) (UX-1, p. 4) reads in its entirety:

180 USE OF QUALIFICATION STANDARDS IN POSTING VACANCIES

> Position vacancies to be filled by bid, promotion, transfer, or assignment are posted in accordance with the applicable collective bargaining agreement and Handbook P-11. The qualification standard appropriate for the particular position is included in the announcement. This handbook shall be the source of such qualification standards. No additions, deletions, or alterations will be allowed by any local, district, or regional office.

Article XIX (Handbooks and Manuals) of the National Agreement provides in part:

> Those parts of all handbooks, manuals and published regulations of the Postal Service, that directly relate to wages, hours or working conditions, as they apply to employees covered by this Agreement, shall contain nothing that conflicts with this Agreement, and shall be continued in effect except that the Employer shall have the right to make changes that are not inconsistent with this Agreement and that are fair, reasonable, and equitable.

Both the Postal Service Qualification Standard for Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk (UX-3, p. 1) and the Standard Position Description (UX-3, p. 2) set forth the basic function of that job as follows:

> Schedules and controls the maintenance activities at a postal installa tion and performs a variety of clerical work involved in the requisitioning, receiving, storing, issuing, and accounting for a wide variety of parts, tools, and supplies used in the maintenance of buildings and postal equipment.

The position description makes no reference to driving a motor vehicle, possessing a SF-46 license, heavy lifting, or typing; but paragraph N provides: "Occasionally performs other job related tasks in support of primary duties." The qualification standard also makes no reference to driving, holding a SF-46 license, or heavy lifting; it does, however, require the demonstrated ability to type 30 words per minute for five minutes with no more than two errors.

Section 524.4 (Best Qualified PS Positions) of Handbook P-11 (UX-6) states in part: "(If a qualification standard is published in Handbook P-12B, it must be used" [in the posting of such positions])." Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk is a "Best Qualified" position (Tr. 80-81).

Section 525.221 of the P-11 Handbook deals with evaluating the qualifications of job applicants. It states in part: "The qualifications consist of the qualification standard and any relevant selective factors that have been included in the posting."

Article XXXVIII of the National Agreement deals exclusively with the Maintenance Craft. Section 2 concerns posting of vacant duty assignments. Section 2-E (Information on Notice of Intent) includes the following item 7: "Physical or other special requirements unusual to the specific assignments."

Donald R. Noble, the maintenance superintendent at the San Rafael MSC, testified that the storeroom for that facility is located at Mission Rafael, about three miles away; most custodial supplies are stored there. He stated that the maintenance control and stock clerk must drive a half-ton pickup truck from the San Rafael MSC to the Mission Rafael storage facility about once a week to pick up supplies. The round trip takes about an hour. The supplies consist of toilet paper, towels, cleaning bleaches, and other custodial supplies. A box of toilet paper weighs approximately 64 pounds.

B.

The Union's basic position on the merits is that because neither the qualification standard nor the standard position description for Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk includes any reference to a SF-46 or a heavy lifting requirement, and because the language of Section 180 of Personnel Handbook P-12B states that no additions, deletions, or alterations of qualification standards will be allowed by any local, district, or regional office, the disputed Notice of Intent in this case violated the National Agreement. The Union points out that Article XIX of the National Agreement sets forth a procedure that must be followed when the Postal Service wishes to make changes in handbooks, manuals, or published regulations. It also notes that Personnel Handbook P-12B sets forth in Part 4 (UX-2, p. 25) the procedures that must be followed when management requests a waiver of qualification standards.

The basic position of the Postal Service on the merits is that it has the right to establish "selective standards" bearing a reasonable relation to the published requirements of a particular position. It argues that the parties never intended that each postal facility in the country would operate in an identical manner, or that the National Agreement would deal with the minute details of every job. In the case of the job in dispute, the Postal Service contends that the tasks of driving and heavy lifting are "incidental" to the primary function of the position and are "reasonably related" to it. It asserts that these tasks are covered by paragraph N of the job description, previously quoted, and that there has been no additions, deletions, or alterations of the "core elements" set forth in the qualification standard. In addition, the Postal Service claims that its Notice of Intent was covered by Article XXXVIII, section 2-E-7 of the National Agreement, previously quoted. Finally, the Postal Service relies upon the bargaining history of the 1978 National Agreement to support its contention that the Union previously attempted, unsuccessfully, to secure a provision that no maintenance employee would be required to possess an SF-46 license unless that requirement was embodied in Handbook P-12B as a condition of employment (EX-6). I do not find it necessary to consider that particular argument.

C.

On the basis of the evidence and arguments submitted, I conclude that the Postal Service had the right in this case to include the SF-46 and heavy-lifting requirements in the Notice of Intent for the duty assignment of Maintenance Control & Stock Clerk. The special circumstance involved--the physical separation of the San Rafael MSC and the storage facility at Mission Rafael--fully justified the requirement of the SF-46. Likewise, the heavy-lifting requirement was made necessary by the nature of the materials handled. Neither requirement affected the "core elements" of the qualification standard and the job description. Both were covered by Article XXXVIII, section 2-E-7 of the National Agreement, Section 525.221 of the P-11 Handbook, and paragraph N of the job description.

The Union contends, however, that regardless of any other considerations, the grievance in this case should be granted because of an oral understanding between Wevodau and Frank Dyer, a Postal Service representative, in connection with a pre-arbitration settlement of Case No. H8T-3D-C-11020 on 23 September 1981 (UX-7, p. 1), to the effect that the pre-arbitration settlement applied to every case involving the "same issue."

The pre-arbitration settlement, which involved a typing requirement for a Tool and Parts Clerk, was as follows:

1. A typing requirement is not presently a part of the qualification standard for the position of a tool and parts clerk, SP1-31. Until such time as a change is initiated the typing requirement will be deleted from the posting.

2. On the basis of the particulars surrounding this case, the two jobs in question in this grievance will be reposted without the typing requirement.

3. This decision is not intended to preclude management from requiring an employee to type.

The pre-arbitration settlement agreement was signed by William E. Henry, Jr., Director , Office of Grievance and Arbitration, Labor Relations Department, on behalf of the Postal Service. Henry signed the document after discussing it with Dyer. He testified that Dyer did not mention any oral understanding with Wevodau as to the future application of the settlement, and that Dyer had no authority to enter into any such understanding on behalf of the Postal Service.

Wevodau's version of his discussion with Dyer was as follows (Tr. 85):

> . . .Mr. Dyer brought this settlement directly to my office, and I questioned Mr. Dyer about it, and my questioning went along the line that, "Okay, this is a pre-arbitration settlement. Are you saying that this applies only to the instant grievance?", and the response was, "No, this was a grievance that was certified as an interpretive grievance, and this pre-arbitration settlement is an interpretive pre-arbitration settlement on that grievance and therefore applies to every case." And I said, "Well, do you mean that if I get other cases up here dealing with this same issue, that I'd have to certify each one of those for arbitration?", and he said, "No, this settlement will be applied to those."

Wevodau's account was generally corroborated by Thomas Freeman, Jr., Executive Vice President of the Maintenance Craft. On cross-examination, Freeman testified in part as follows (Tr. 128-29):

> Q. Did you state or did Mr. Wevodau state or any of the four individuals in the room state to Mr. Dyer or converse with Mr. Dyer to the effect that this settlement would hereafter preclude the Postal Service from including in a notice of vacancy, in a job posting, any duties not specifically contained in the position description or qualification standard?
>
> A. I don't think such a statement was made literally, a literal statement, no.
>
> Q. Was that in fact your understanding?
>
> A. No. My understanding, when this question was raised, was that requirements such as typing that dealt with this issue of placing a requirement on a posting or on a position that was not in the P-12 Handbook would not be done, and that was my understanding when I left the office.

Dyer was not called as a witness.

I do not doubt the Union witnesses' good faith in offering their version of the alleged oral understanding between Wevodau and Dyer. In my judgment, however, whatever that understanding may have been, it cannot be allowed to have the effect claimed for it by the Union in this case. The subject of the alleged understanding was a typing requirement in an unrelated job. It was, at best, ambiguous. The written settlement agreement was signed on behalf of the Postal Service by an authorized representative who was wholly unaware of any oral discussion concerning its possible future application in other circumstances. The alleged oral understanding would have substantially extended the scope of the written settlement agreement. Given these facts, I cannot allow the testimony of the Union witnesses to alter the plain meaning of the written settlement agreement by extending it to future cases involving "the same issue." In the event that understandings as to the subsequent application of pre-arbitration settlement agreements are reached in the future, the parties are advised to reduce them to writing.

For all the foregoing reasons, the grievance is denied.

Benjamin Aaron
Arbitrator

In the Matter of the Arbitration between NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF LETTER CARRIERS, AFL-CIO and UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE	Case No. N8-NA-0344 Timeliness of 8 Cases OPINION AND AWARD

APPEARANCES:

For the USPS - Wyneva Johnson, Esq.
Office of Labor Law

For the NALC - Cohen, Weiss and Simon
Keith E. Secular, Esq.

Pursuant to the provisions of the current collective bargaining agreement between the above-captioned parties, this case was duly processed through to and presented in arbitration before the Undersigned. The hearing was held at the offices of the Postal Service in Washington, DC, on January 23, 1981. Thereafter, post-hearing briefs were submitted and exchanged.

THE ISSUES:

1. Whether Management can properly refuse to hear Step 4 appeals in Cases No. S8N-3P-C-11599; S8N-3P-C-10977; S8N-3P-C-11769; S8N-3W-C-11771; S8N-3W-C-12007; S8N-3D-C-11576; S8N-3W-C-11752; and S8N-3P-C-11781. These cases being under consideration in this proceeding? If not, what shall the appropriate remedy be?

2. In the event it is found that these cases were not filed in a timely manner, pursuant to the Agreement, can Management refuse to discuss these grievances before so indicating to the Union its reason for rejecting same? If not what shall the appropriate remedy be?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE:

The eight decisions enumerated above were denied in Step 3, and these denials were received by the NALC on February 29 and March 6, 1980. Prior to March 21, 1980, the Postal Service advised the NALC's National Office that it had not received the appeals to Step 4 on these decisions. The Postal Service, subsequently, did receive appeals to Step 4, marked duplicate, on April 7, 1980. The Southern Region did not receive copies of these eight appeals.

PROVISION OF THE CONTRACT UNDER REVIEW:

ARTICLE XV

****

Section 2. Grievance Procedure - Steps

****

(e) If either party's representative maintains that the grievance involves an interpretative issue under the National Agreement, or some supplement thereto which may be of general application, the Union representative shall be entitled to appeal an adverse decision to Step 4 (National level) of the grievance procedure. Any such appeal must be made within twenty-one (21) days after receipt of the Employer's decision and include copies of the standard grievance form, the Step 2 and Step 3 decisions and, if filed, any Union corrections and additions filed at Step 2 or 3. The Union shall furnish a copy of the Union appeal to the Regional Director of Employee and Labor Relations.

CONTENTIONS OF THE PARTIES:

The Union contended that the language of the Agreement only requires that the Union make its appeal within twenty one days. It does not require that the appeal be received within that time limit. By placing the appeal in the mail within twenty one days, the Union claimed it had met the time requirements to perfect its appeal. The Union also argued that its understanding had always been that the act of depositing the appeal in the mail within the time limits sufficed and that the USPS had never taken a contrary position. The Union pointed to a decision by Arbitrator Mittenthal, in Case No. N-C--4170D, wherein the date stamp on the envelope was considered determinative of the timeliness of an appeal. The Union also made reference to other arbitration decisions, not issued in Postal Service cases, where the date of mailing was regarded as the critical date and not the date that the appeal was actually received. Finally, the Union asserted that if date of receipt were considered critical then each region would have a different date when it had to mail its appeal depending upon its distance from National Headquarters of the Post Office. Obviously, the parties did intend to have a uniform time period apply wherever the appeal had to be made. The Union pointed out that when National Headquarters of the Postal Service notified the Postal Service that the appeals had not been received, a new set of appeal papers were mailed to the Postal Service within the 21 day period which still had not expired.

The Postal Service argued that it finally received these appeals on April 7, 1980. That was well beyond the 21 day period allowed under the contract. The Service also pointed out that at no time were copies received by the Southern Region although the agreement clearly and explicitly requires that this be done as well. The Service also asserted that in addition to not receiving the alleged original documents within the time limits, the second set of appeal papers was not received until April 7, 1980, about two weeks after it reasonably could have been anticipated that a duplicate set mailed within the 21 day time limit would have been received. The Postal Service also contended that the testimony of the NALC witnesses confirmed the understanding that appeals had to be received within twenty one days in order to be considered timely.

OPINION OF THE ARBITRATOR:

In Case No. N-C-4170D, decided by Arbitrator Mittenthal on February 13, 1974, and which the Union cited in support of its claim, Arbitrator Mittenthal specifically held that the date placed on an appeal could not be controlling because of the obvious possibility of back dating. He stated, "Perhaps, in appropriate circumstances, the date that the letter is placed in the mailbox could be controlling..." The Undersigned might, in appropriate circumstances, for the sake of uniformity and consistency, find that the cancelation date on an envelope could establish the timeliness of a filing. In the instant case, however, there is no postmark on which to base such a finding. The initial mailing was never received by either the National or Regional Office of the Postal Service.

As to the second mailing, the testimony of the Union office employee in Atlanta was that she believed that she had placed these documents in the mail on March 21, 1980. She had no evidence from her office records to confirm such a statement. In point of fact, the Union could not and did not seek to rebut the Postal Service contention, verified with a time stamp, that these second appeal forms were received in Washington some two weeks after March 21st on April 7, 1980. Once again, the Regional Office of the Post Office did not receive copies of the duplicate documents at any time. Oneof the Union witnesses conceded that if the duplicates had been placed in the mail on March 21, still within the time limits, they should have been in Washington on or about March 24th.

Under the facts and circumstances revealed by this record, it cannot be found that the Postal Service received timely notice of the appeal of those eight cases to Step 4, as such notice is required by the provisions of the Agreement. The failure to copy in the Regional Office cannot be regarded as a ministerial error. The language of the Agreement madates that the Regional Director of Employee and Labor Relations receive a copy of appeals to Step 4. The Postal Service is entitled to rely upon the knowledge that this regional official has been notified by the Union about appeals being taken from decisions made in his region.

The Union also raised the issue of whether, despite a failure to comply with the contractual time limit requirements, the Postal Service was obligated to meet with the Union and discuss these eight grievances. Article XV, Section 2, Step 4(a), requires that the parties meet at the national level promptly, "In any case properly appealed to this step..." That word "properly" cannot be regarded as surplusage. It has a meaning and that meaning must encompass the compliance with procedural requirements. That has not occurred in the instant cases.

Additionally, it should be noted, in the prior arbitration decision by Arbitrator Mittenthal cited above, he found that: "The parties expressly agreed that failure to appeal within the contractual time limits would serve as a waiver of the grievance. The parties to that stipulation are the same parties involved in this proceeding. The Undersigned cannot conclude from either the language of the Agreement nor the stipulation of these parties that the Postal Service is obliged to meet and discuss the merits of these grievances at Step 4.

Therefore, after due deliberation, the Undersigned makes the following

A W A R D

1. Management can properly refuse to hear Step 4 appeals in the cases here under consideration.

2. Management can refuse to discuss the merits of these grievances at Step 4, but it must, as it has in this case, advise the Union why it regards the grievances as not having been filed in a timely fashion and thus considered as waived.

PROCEEDINGS

The United States Postal Service ("USPS", "Postal Service" or "Employer") and the National Postal Mail Handlers Union("NPMHU", "Mailhandlers" or "Union") designated me to arbitrate National-level disputes under Article 15. 5. D of their National Agreement. The terms of Article 15.3.C of that USPS/NPMHU National Agreement are dispositive of the matter in dispute but, in advancing their respective positions in this case, both the USPS and the NPMHU also cited and relied upon arbitration awards construing virtually identical language in Article 15.4.C of the National Agreement between USPS and the American Postal Workers Union, AFL-CIO ("APWU"). After being provided with third party notice of this arbitration proceeding, the APWU elected to participate as an Intervenor in this case by appearing and participating in the hearing and filing a post-hearing brief. [At the arbitration hearing on June 13, 2006, Counsel for the APWU stipulated as follows: "Since we have intervened in this case as a third party, then [the decision in this case] interpreting that language would bind the APWU"]. See Tr. p.81, lines 10-12.
